Sir Fra. Winn. Pray, Mr. Attorney, if we have an Objection to make, if the Court please we may be heard.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Certainly it was never known, that when Mr. Attorney exhibited an Information, to tell us how to prove it. Surely, Gentlemen, you will give us Leave to go on with our Proof, won't ye?

Mr. Malloy. Mr. Bancroft, How long have you been a Servant of the City? By whose Order was the Hall summoned?

Mr. Bancroft. By my Lord Mayor's.

Mr. — Who hath dissolved them?—Mr. Bancroft. My Lord Mayor.

Mr. — Did you ever know the Sheriffs give any Order for the dissolving of it?—Mr. Bancroft. No.

Mr. Thompson. Did you ever know it dissolved before the Business was done for which they were call'd? Did my Lord Mayor in your time either dissolve them, or send them going, till the Election was over?

Mr. Bancroft. I can say nothing to that.

Mr. Att. Gen. Mr. Bancroft, I would ask you this, Sir; Did the Sheriffs ever continue the Hall after my Lord Mayor had dissolved it?

Mr. Bancroft. No, I never knew that in my Life.

Sir Fra. Winn. Mr. Bancroft, I would ask you a Question; I don't ask you who calls them, or bids them go home; during the Time of the Election did my Lord Mayor ever meddle?

Mr. Bancroft. My Lord Mayor withdraws?

Sir Fra. Winn. Who are those among the Commons, that manage the Business when my Lord Mayor withdraws?

Mr. Bancroft. The Sheriffs, and the Common Serjeant, and the Common Cryer.

Sir Fra. Winn. Who manages the Election? Who declares the Election? Who declares who is chosen?

Vol. III.

Mr. Bancroft. When the Election is made below, then the Sheriffs come up, and the Common Serjeant, and the Common Cryer along with them, and acquaint my Lord Mayor, and he goes down, and there doth confirm the Election; and withal, when the Work is done he dissolves the Court.

Mr. Williams. Did you ever know a Poll for Sheriffs?

Mr. Thompson. Do you take the Common Serjeant to be an Officer of the Commons of London, or an Officer of my Lord Mayor's?

Mr. Bancroft. I cannot be certain what he is.

Mr. Thompson. If in case the Common Serjeant differ from them in declaring the Poll, is it not usual for the Common Hall to order him to put it up again?

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Who does make a Judgment of the Election, the Common Serjeant, or the Sheriffs?—Mr. Bancroft. The Sheriffs.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Does not the Common Serjeant make Observation as well as the Sheriffs?

Mr. Bancroft. The Sheriffs give their Opinions in it.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Now, my Lord, if your Lordship please, if they had done, we would desire to go on to our Fact; for otherwise, for ought I perceive, we shall be in here till this Time To-morrow, and they say, we must not adjourn till the Cause is over. Mr. Common Cryer; hark you, Mr. Common Cryer, were you present at Midsummer Day when this Business happened? Give my Lord and the Jury an Account of the Carriage then.

Mr. Com. Cryer. I was there at the Beginning of the Election; I did make Proclamation, and afterwards there was a Pell demanded, and the Poll was begun, and I went home with my Lord Mayor; afterwards my Lord Mayor came back again, and there was a Hubbub; but about five or six a Clock, my Lord Mayor came down upon the Hustings, and I adjourn'd the Court till another Day; I did adjourn it by his Order, according as I used to do, and then I went away with my Lord Mayor.

Mr. Att. Gen. But what Usage had you in going out?

Mr. Com. Cryer. I went before my Lord Mayor, I was not with him. Mr. Williams. Where was the Adjournment?

Mr. Com. Cryer. Upon the Hustings.

Mr. Williams. Were the Sheriffs polling the People then?

Mr. Com. Cryer. I don't know that, Sir.

Mr. Williams. Were the Sheriffs near the Hustings?

Mr. Com. Cryer. I don't know, I saw them not.

Sir Fra. Winn. Upon the Election of them, when my Lord Mayor came to adjourn the Court, were the Sheriffs acquainted with it? Where were the Sheriffs?

Mr. Com. Cryer. My Lord Mayor sent to them.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Mr. Weston, Pray will you tell my Lord and the Jury what Directions you had from my Lord Mayor, and how he was used when he came out of the Hall?

Mr. Weston. My Lord Mayor sent me, my Lord, to the Sheriffs under the Lumbar House twice to come up to the Council Chamber, and they told me: One told me he was upon the King's Business; and the other said he could not come; and about half an Hour after, my Lord, Sheriff Pilkington came up to my Lord Mayor into the Council Chamber, and then immediately came down to the Court of Hustings, and Mr. Common Cryer, by my Lord Mayor's Order, did adjourn the Court from Saturday till Tuesday following; and as we were coming out of the Hall, when Mr. Common Cryer had adjourn'd the Court, and said, God save the King, a great Part of the Hall his'd; and, but that there were so many honest Gentlemen about my Lord, I was afraid my Lord would have come to some Mischief; but coming to go into the Porch-yard, I saw his Hat off, and I went to catch his Hat, and caught one of his Officers by the Head, that was knocked down or fell down, that held up his Train. My Lord, the Sword was at that Distance, farther than it is between your Honour and where I stand, and crouded far away; and when my Lord came out into the Yard, Gentlemen, says he, I desire you would go home to your Lodgings, and commanded them in the King's Name to depart: And, says he to me, Pray go you back, and let the Sheriffs know, and tell them I have adjourn'd the Court till Tuesday. Upon my Lord's Command, I went back to let the Sheriffs know, that my Lord had adjourn'd the Court till Tuesday.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Both of them, both Shute and Pilkington?

Mr. Weston. No, Shute; t'other was by.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. It was in his hearing, was it not?

Mr. Weston. It was in his hearing.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Did you see my Lord Mayor down, and his Hat off?

Mr. Weston. I saw his Hat off, Sir George, but I can't tell how it came off.

Mr. Williams. You say, you saw my Lord's Hat off; can you tell whether my Lord was so courteous to take his Hat off or no?

Mr. Weston. I dare say, my Lord did not.

Mr. Williams. Did he, or no? I ask you upon your Oath?

Mr. Weston. I can't tell that, Sir.

L. C. J. I can't think that those Gentlemen were so extraordinary civil to my Lord Mayor, that when the Common Cryer made Proclamation God save the King, that there should be hissing; those that hissed were not extraordinary civil to my Lord Mayor, and I believe you don't think so neither.

Mr. Williams. I ask you a Question. My Lord Mayor's Hat was off—

L. C. J. Ay, and it must be supposed it was to compliment those fine Men that his'd at God save the King.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. My Lord, if your Lordship please, I would desire to know what Account any of them can give of the Opinion they had of the King, to be sure they had a great Opinion of his Representative: But my Lord Mayor, I find, was so extraordinary civil, that to this Rabble he must not only pull off his Hat, but fling his Hat to the Ground to them.

Mr. Thompson. I ask you whether you know that any of the Defendants in this Information did throw my Lord Mayor's Hat off, or no?

Mr. Weston. I can't say that.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. It is not a Farthing matter.

Sir Fra. Winn. Here is a mighty Riot upon the Hat.

Mr. Weston. Now I desired them to keep back; my Lord Mayor's Friends did press back as much as they could, to preserve my Lord Mayor; they press'd more forward, as the other kept back, and I desired them to forbear, nay, commanded them in the King's Name, and upon their Peril, and took my Cane to strike at some of them.

Mr. Williams. Did you?

Mr. Serj. Jeff. He served them well enough.

L. C. J. He did so. Do you think a Magistrate is to be crouded and press'd upon?

Mr. Weston. I struck at them, and said, Gentlemen, keep back, and intreated them and commanded them, and all would not do.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. I would only say this, Mr. Common Serjeant; What did you hear when Proclamation was made to depart?

Mr. Com. Serj. My Lord, I was not in the Hall when Proclamation was made; but I heard them cry out, No God bless the King; and I heard them cry out, Down with the Sword; No Lord Mayor, no King,

Mr. Williams. Can you name any Person that said this?

Mr. Com. Serj. My Lord, I laid hold on one Man that cried, No God save the King; No Lord Mayor, and the Rabble got him from me, one that I heard say so.

Mr. Williams. Mr. Common Serjeant, you say you heard this; can you name any Person?

Mr. Common Serj. I tell you I caught hold of him, and the Rabble got him from me.

Mr. Williams. Can you name any one?

Mr. Com. Serj. I tell you I cannot.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. My Lord, I hope that will not much prevail in this Place; but I hope it doth justify my Lord Mayor for endeavouring to disperse the Rabble that came together to that Height when the King was prayed for, to cry out, No King, No Lord Mayor. And we don't give this in Evidence against any one Person, for it was done in a tumultuous Manner; but they were so fond of this Man, as that they rescued him from him; and to fix it upon them, we will prove they were every one of them concerned in the Riot. Mr. Craddock, What Account can you give of this Matter?

Mr. Craddock. I was standing at the Place where they poll'd, and my Lord Mayor was coming towards it to protest against their Manner of Proceeding; and Sheriff Bethel came to me and said, Resist him (I think) he hath nothing to do here.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. That was Bethel, Slingsby Bethel?

Mr. Craddock. It was either oppose, or resist him.

Mr. Sol. Gen. He says he thinks he said, Resist him; but he is sure it was either oppose, or resist him.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Did you see Mr. Jenks there?

Mr. Craddock. I can't say I did: I saw Mr. Jenks just as my Lord Mayor came down, not after.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Did you see Mr. John Deagle there?

Mr. Craddock. I did not see Mr. Deagle.

Mr. Att. Gen. How did they use my Lord Mayor?

Mr. Craddock. I was not very near my Lord; my Lord, I stood at the Place where the Poll was taking.

Mr. Thompson. Mr. Craddock, We desire to ask you this Question, that you speak particularly to Mr. Bethel; Was it before my Lord Mayor had adjourn'd the Poll, or after?

Mr. Craddock. It was just as my Lord Mayor came to protest against the Manner of Polling.

Mr. Thompson. Was the Poll adjourn'd before or after?

Mr. Craddock. It was after.

Mr. Williams. Mr. Bethel, you say he said, Oppose, or Resist; did he say it was before the Poll was adjourn'd?

Mr. Craddock. Yes, Sir, it was before.

Mr. Williams. Can you say what the Words were?

Mr. Craddock. It was either Oppose, or Resist, he hath no Authority here.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Which is George Reeves? Mr. Reeves, Pray will you tell us what you did observe done at this Time by Mr. Pilkington, or Mr. Shute, or any Person else?

Mr. Reeves. I came about four or five o'Clock to the Polling-place where the Coaches use to stand, and I saw the Sword up; I suppose my Lord Mayor was there, and came to stop their Proceedings in Polling; and there was a great Contest among them; some saying, He hath nothing to do there: He hath no more to do than I, says one; another cried, Stop the Sword, Stop the Sword; and I laid hold of him, and got him a little way, and made account to have carried him to the Sheriffs, and the Lord Mayor, but somebody got him away.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. What did you observe Shute and Pilkington do?

Mr. Reeves. They encouraged the People to poll.

Mr. Jones. After my Lord Mayor was gone?—Mr. Reeves. Yes.

Mr. Jones. Pray you, Sir, did you observe either Mr. Shute or Mr. Pilkington encourage the People to Hollow or Shout, or those Things?

Mr. Reeves. No, Sir.

L. C. J. Hark you, Friend Reeves, hark you? How do you know that Pilkington or Shute were Polling? Are you sure they were Polling after my Lord was gone?

Mr. Reeves. They were at the Polling-places, and they did not go away a great while after that.

L. C. J. From the People that were about them?—Mr. Reeves. No.

Sir Fra. Winn. We agree it; in Fact it was so.

Mr. Att. Gen. Richard Fletcher, pray will you give the Court an Account of what they did?

Mr. Serj. Jeff. John Hill, What did you observe there?

Mr. Hill. About five o'Clock my Lord Mayor came to the Hall; there was with him then Sir James Edwards, and Sir William Pritchard, now Lord Mayor, to the best of my Memory, and he told them he disliked their Polling any more; and there came a tall black Man; says he, Mr. Sheriff, go on, it is your Business, we will stand by you: about a Quarter of an Hour after my Lord came out of the Hall to the great Crowd, some of the People Hissing, and some making a Noise; and one came to the Sheriffs, and, says he, Gentlemen, Why do not you make Proclamation with Oyes? And they continued there till towards eight o'Clock.

Mr. Serj. J. ff. Did you hear no Officer adjourn the Court?

Mr. Hill. My Lord Mayor went home, I saw him within Doors, and I came back again.

Mr. Att. Gen. Was there no Proclamation made afterwards?

Mr. Hill. By some of the Officers, but I did not take particular Notice.

Mr. Att. Gen. Who did you see here after you went home with my Lord Mayor, and came back again?

Mr. Hill. I saw here Mr. Robert Key for one; and I saw Mr. Goodenough come in between eight and nine here in the Hall; and my Lord Grey came in, and several other Gentlemen.

L. C. J. What did they do when they came?

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Hark you, Hill: Was my Lord Grey and Mr. Goodenough, and Mr. Key, were they among the People?

Mr. Hill. After the Sheriffs came up, they went into the Orphan's Court; Mr. Goodenough came in and out; and my Lord Grey went in to them.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Did they appear among the People up and down in the Hall?

Mr. Hill. They went thro' the Hall to and fro.

Sir Fra. Winn. What was the Christian Name of that Goodenough?

Mr. Hill. I know him; he that was Under-Sheriff last Year: I know him well enough, and he knows me; yes, that is Mr. Goodenough.

Lord Grey. I desire to ask this Witness a Question, my Lord.

L. C. J. Let your Counsel ask, my Lord.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. I desire to know another Question. Did you see Mr. Cornish?

Mr. Hill. I saw Mr. Alderman Cornish walk in the Hall; but I can't tell whether he went into the Room or no. After my Lord was gone, he did come up into the Mayor's Court, and came through among the People.

Mr. Thompson. Hill, you speak of my Lord Grey; upon your Oath did you see my Lord Grey walk to and fro in the Hall, or only came thorough?

Mr. Hill. My Lord Grey came in at that Gate, and went thorough the in Hall, and went in to the Sheriffs.

Mr. Williams. I would ask you this upon your Oath. Did you see him do any thing more?

Mr. Hill. No; I was there to discharge my Office.

Lord Grey. My Lord, I own my being there; but only desire to ask a Question that will clear this Matter.

Mr. Hill. I saw my Lord Grey come up to those Stairs, and he went into the Orphan's Court.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. How long might that be after the Poll?

Mr. Hill. After the Sheriffs came up, I believe it might be half an Hour, or a Quarter of an Hour, near an Hour.

Mr. Williams. Did you see my Lord Grey do any thing more than walk?

Mr. Hill. I saw him come to the Orphan's Court, and they would not open the Door at first; but they said it is my Lord Grey, and then they let him in.

L. C. J. Your own Counsel is asking, my Lord; I am willing you should ask a Question if your own Counsel will let you. Gentlemen, my Lord would ask a Question himself, and you won't let him.

Lord Grey. My Lord, though I do not know this Gentleman at all, yet I will venture to ask him a Question. Pray, Sir, did you see me speak to any one Man?

Mr. Hill. I have answered that already; I say not.

Lord Grey. Were the Books brought from the polling Place by the Sheriffs before I came, before that I went in there?—My Lord, I was there, and shall give you an Account of it.

L. C. J. It had been better, my Lord, if you had kept away.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Fletcher, pray will you tell my Lord and the Jury, what you observed that Day here, after my Lord Mayor was gone, and had adjourned the Court?

Mr. Fletcher. On the 24th of June I was here by Order of Sheriff Shute, after my Lord Mayor had adjourned the Court, and it was to call all Men that were to poll to come forward, for the Books were to be shut up, and I went away immediately; I was very hot, and went away to the Three-Tun Tavern.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Did you see Mr. Shute there?

Mr. Fletcher. Mr. Pilkington was there, and Mr. Shute too.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Can you name any Body else?

Mr. Fletcher. No; I can name nobody else.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. What did Mr. Shute say?

Mr. Fletcher. He ordered me to make Proclamation for all Men, them that had a Right to poll, to come and poll, for the Books were to be shut up.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Captain Clark, Pray will you give an Account of what you observed?

Capt. Clark. I came down into the Hall, and I did hear a Whispering, whereupon I went to guard my Lord Mayor; my Lord Mayor came down upon the Hustings, and Proclamation was made for the Adjournment of the Court; whereupon when Proclamation, God save the King, was made, an hundred, &c. I believe more, hift at that; I laid hold of one of them, No King's-man, no Sword's-man, cry'd they. Sirrah, you are a Rascal, and a Traitor in your Heart, said I, and laid fast hold of him; but there was a very great Croud; and says one or two, For God's sake, Captain Clark, do you guard my Lord; there was Mr. Weston and Major Kelsey; My Lord said they, is in Danger; said I, Gentlemen, keep by him, or go before, I will be in your Rear Guard. My Lord Mayor was down upon his Knee, I can't tell how he came down; Press on, press on. this was the Cry, and God save the Sheriffs. After coming down the Steps, I pressed as near as I could to my Lord Mayor, to keep them off; Now, said I, this is the Time to keep the Rabble off, now face about; I had my Sword in my Hand, and with the Pommel of my Sword kept them off; Before God, said I, will keep you off; and so I waited on my Lord home, and went and drank Glafs of Sack. About an Hour or two Hours afterwards, I came down to the Hall and found the People shouting, God save the Sheriffs, God save the Sheriffs: What nothing, said I, of my Lord Mayor? But, said I, this is a Place to quarrel in, let us not quarrel together. I saw the Sheriffs Pilkington and Shute were concerned in carrying on the Poll, and this they continued to do for some time; at last, I am weary of the Hall, said I, I will home; and this was between eight and nine o'Clock.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Can you remember any body else besides the Sheriffs?

Capt. Clark. No, Sir, I cannot.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Can you remember Sir Thomas Player?

Capt. Clark. No, I can't.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Captain Clark, did you know never-a-one of them that cried out so?

Capt. Clark. No, my Lord, I was before Sir Robert Clayton.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Major Kelsey, Pray will you give my Lord and the Jury an Account of what you saw on Midsummer-Day?

Major Kelsey. My Lord, when my Lord came out of the Court, I went after, and some cried, Stop him, stop him; but I got between them, and some of my Lord's Friends kept them off; but when we came just to the going-out, they gave a Shout, and I saw my Lord Mayor's Hat upon his Back, and I can't tell whether he touched the Ground with his Hand, but I was e'en almost down; said I, Gentlemen, do you intend to murder my Lord Mayor?

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Who did you see there?

Major Kelsey. Indeed, Sir, I was almost down, and did not see their Faces.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Mr. Trice Hammon, I would only ask you, Who did you see, who did you observe to be there?

Mr. Hammon. About nine a Clock at Night, or something before, I stood at the Door that leads to the * Common Pleas, and there came in Alderman Cornish and Goodenough, and old Key, an old white-hair'd Man; and by-and-by my Master Sheriff Shute came out and told me, I shall give you all Satisfaction by-and-by. God bless you, Mr. Sheriff, said I; and he went again, and there I staid till they came out, and then he went up on the Hustings; and I went along with him when he came out.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Who went with him out to go to the Hustings?

Mr. Hammon. Sir William Gulton, and several other Men; there is never a Name in the Indictment more.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. None of them that are in the Indictment? Name them.

Mr. Hammon. I have named them.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Prithce name them.

Mr. Hammon. Mr. Alderman Cornish, both the Sheriffs, my Lord Grey, Mr. Goodenough, and old Mr. Key.

Mr. Thompson. Which Goodenough?

Mr. Hammon. That Mr. Goodenough that stands there.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. There is such a Noise, that I did not very well hear that Word.

Mr. Hammon. Goodenough; not that Goodenough that looks upon me, but he that stands behind.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. He falls behind now, but he ran up-and-down then; and Alderman Cornish was there too.

Mr. Jones. You Witness, you have named all these Men; what did Shute do, or what did he say?

Mr. Hammon. When he came upon the Hustings, he made Proclamation himself, because one or two refused it, he did it himself; and after a while he adjourned the Court upon the Hustings; this was on Midsummer-Day.

Mr. Jones. What did he say?

Mr. Hammon. As the Common Crier usually says at such Times.

Mr. Thompson. You say you saw Mr. Goodenough, and you saw my Lord Grey; upon your Oath, can you say they did any thing, or was any thing done in Abuse to my Lord Mayor?

Mr. Hammon. They did not tell me, my Lord, what they did.

Mr. Thompson. I ask you what did they do?

L. C. J. Mighty busy they were.

Mr. Thompson. How long was it after my Lord Mayor adjourned the Court?—Mr. Hammon. About two Hours.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. So much the worse.

L. C. J. You must understand it was some time before Mr. Sheriff had made his Adjournment, they were busy till that Time.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. My Lord, if your Lordship please, I do agree with Mr. Thompson, that the Jury should remember that this was two Hours after my Lord Mayor had adjourned the Court.

Lord Grey. I desire, my Lord, I may ask him some Questions. You say you saw me go to the Council-chamber, at what time, and who went with me?—Mr. Hammon. A little before Candle-light.

Lord Grey. You say all the Company went out with the Sheriffs, and went away—Mr. Hammon. My Lord, I did not say you came out.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord was of the Upper House.

Mr. Thompson. Yes, and may be there again.

Lord Grey. I hope I shall be there, Mr. Attorney.

Mr. Att. Gen. It had better you had been so then, my Lord.

Lord Grey. It will be the worse for you; I shan't lie Perdue for you.

Mr. Att. Gen. If you threaten me, my Lord, I shall take notice of it. My Lord, I have done you a Kindness; but if you come under my Hands again I shall not do it.

L. C. J. They would not have it said, God save the King; and, my Lord, you were with some of those that abused him.

Lord Grey. After it was over, my Lord.

Mr. Att. Gen. You were not within your Duty here.

Lord Grey. My Lord, it was after the Poll was closed.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. My Lord, I desire, if you please, what is usual in all Causes, that we might go on without any Interruption. Let us go on for the King, and then make all the Defence you can. Don't think either to hiss or threaten us out of our Cause. Mr. Higgins, give my Lord and the Jury an Account of what you saw or heard.

Mr. Higgins. My Lord, I attended with several of our Company by my Lord Mayor's Coach to Guild-hall, and was in the Council-chamber, and he sent for the Sheriff; after that he went away; and when God save the King was said, said they God save the Protestant Sheriffs.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. I desire to know, Mr. Higgins, this, what they said?

Mr. Higgins. They cried, Down with the Sword.

Mr. Thompson. Mr. Attorney is making a Speech to us, I don't know what he hath said.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. I don't think Mr. Attorney thinks you worth a Speech.

Mr. Higgins. I desire to ask you a Question, I ask you this Question upon your Oath, after the Adjournment of the Court, and after this very insolent Behaviour of some of the Rabble that were there, for I can call them no better, who did you see there?

Mr. Higgins. After I went home, I went to see my Lord safe home, and came back again, I saw one Freeman, that they call the Protestant Cheese-monger, calling, To Poll, to Poll.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Pray who else did you see?

Mr. Higgins. I saw Mr. Alderman Cornish come up towards the Sheriffs: Gentlemen, said he, You are doing right.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Did you hear Mr. Alderman Cornish say so: What, this Gentleman? Do you know him?

Mr. Higgins. Says he to Sheriff Shute, You shall have all Right done to you.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Who else did you see there?

Mr. Higgins. I saw Mr. Swinock.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Did you see Mr. Key? Did you see Mr. Pilkington?

Mr. Higgins. I did not see Mr. Pilkington: I saw Shute.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Did you see Mr. Jekyl?—Mr. Higgins. Yes.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Which of them do you mean?

Mr. Higgins. The elder Man.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. There is John Jekyl the elder, Gentlemen; and John Jekyl the younger.

Mr. Higgins. I was disputing with a Fellow that his Toes came out of his Shoes, and had a green Apron; said I, Are you a Livery-Man? Yes, I am, said he, Surely, said I, they don't use to make such as you are Livery-Men. Says Mr. Jekyl, He may be as good a Man as you, for aught I know. That was about half an Hour after my Lord Mayor went home.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. What Time was the Adjournment?

Mr. Higgins. About five or six. I was speaking something, You are all in a Riot. This is no Riot, says Mr. Swinock to me; I can never meet you, but you are railing against the King's Evidence.

L. C. J. The King's Evidence, what was that?

Mr. Williams. What was done by Mr. Jekyl?

Mr. Higgins. He was talking among the People.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. He did encourage among the rest.

Mr. Williams. You are in a Passion now.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. No, Sir, I am not.

Mr. Higgins. He seconded Mr. Cornish when he said, Insist upon your Rights.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Who did so?

Mr. Higgins. Freeman, my Lord, that they call the Protestant Cheese-monger.

Mr. Williams. A very pretty Word indeed.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Aye, so it is; he is so called; you will give us Leave to hear what the Witnesses speak.

Mr. Williams. Another Epithet would do a great deal better.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. William Bell, what was done upon the Spot? Was there any Hurt?

Mr. Williams. Do you say, upon your Oath, that Gentleman was there?

Mr. Higgins. I have seen him in the Balcony.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. He says, he uses to be there upon publick Days in the Coffee-house.—Bell, I would desire to know of you, whether you are able to give an Account after my Lord Mayor's Adjournment, who was there? Name as many Persons as you can.

Mr. Bell. Mr. Bethel; and I saw Mr. Cornish go through the little Gate into the Yard.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Who else?

Mr. Bell. That is all, Sir; Sheriff Pilkington delivered two Poll-Books into my Hand.

Mr. Att. Gen. Mr. Vavasor, will you tell my Lord and the Jury what you saw?

Mr. Vavasor. It happen'd thus: Mr. Hammon had taken a Man upon Execution, who was Bail for a Client of mine who had paid the Moneys long before; upon that I came to know who employed him; and coming here, I found Mr. Hammon in that Place, and the Croud was so great, Don't go back again, said he, for you will go near to be abused. Whilst I staid there, I asked him what was the Meaning; says he, In this Room are the Sheriffs and some others casting up the Poll; and whilst I staid, there came in Mr. Goodenough to-and-fro from them, and before they would admit any, they would know their Names; there was Mr. Key, my Lord Grey, and and Sir William Gulton.

Mr. Att. Gen. What afterwards?

Mr. Vavasor. Yes, Mr. Cornish was there; he and Sheriff Shute came out together, and they went upon those Stairs under the Clock.

Mr. Att. Gen. Who came out with Sheriff Shute?—Mr. Vavasor. Cornish.

Mr. Williams. What Cornish?—Mr. Vavasor. Alderman Cornish?

Mr. Williams. Very mannerly.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. His Name was Cornish before he was an Alderman.

Mr. Vavasor. And Sheriff Shute told the People, If they would stay a little time, he would give them Satisfaction. Upon that, Mr. Cornish went through the Company; and when they came to the Hustings, Mr. Shute ordered Proclamation to be made, and told them, Whereas my Lord Mayor had taken upon him to adjourn at nine a Clock; We the Sheriffs of London and Middlesex, being the proper Officers, do adjourn it to Tuesday at nine of the Clock. Upon that, an ancient Gentleman desired they might proclaim the Election. Then says Shute, that I can't do it now, for we have taken very good Counsel for what we do. Had it not been for Mr. Hammon, I had been, I believe, trod under Foot sufficiently.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Mr. Denham, who did you see?

Mr. Denham. I saw Sir Thomas Player, and Mr. Jenks.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Where did you see them, pray?

Mr. Denham. In the Yard. I went home with my Lord Mayor, and then I saw them. I had a kind of a Glance, but I can't swear positively to Mr. Jenks.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Sir Thomas Player, and Mr. Jenks, what did you see them do?

Sir Fr. Winn. Hark you, Friend, where was it you saw them?

Mr. Denham. In the Yard.

Sir Fr. Winn. What did you see them do?—Mr. Denham. Nothing at all.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. How many People might be there then? Two or three hundred?—Mr. Denham. Above a thousand.

Mr. Williams. What did you hear Sir Thomas Player say?

Mr. Denham. Nothing.

Mr. Williams. How far was he from his own Door?

Mr. Denham. On t'other Side the Hall.

Mr. Williams. A mighty way indeed, a mighty thing. What said Mr. Jenks?

Mr. Denham. I can't say, Sir, that I heard him speak a Word, only in the Tumult.

Sir Fr. Winn. Friend, I ask you this; I think I heard you say, you saw Sir Thomas Player and Mr. Jenks in the Yard, but you did not see them do any thing at all?—Mr. Denham. No.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Pray, Mr. Farrington, will you tell my Lord and the Jury what you saw after my Lord Mayor had adjourned the Court?

Mr. Fa

Mr. Farrington. I saw there Sheriff Pilkington, Shute, Sir Thomas Player, Mr. Wickham the Scrivener in Lotburi, Mr. Jenks, Babington, one Jennings an Upholsterer.

L. C. J. Sir Thomas Player you say in the first Place?

Mr. Farrington. Yes, and Wickham, my Lord, a Scrivener in Lotburi.

L. C. J. Who then?

Mr. Farrington. Sheriff Pilkington and Shute, and Mr. Cornish, Alderman Cornish.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Did you see one Deagle there?—Mr. Farrington. No, Sir.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Wickham you saw there?

Mr. Farrington. Ay, Sir, I know him very well.

Mr. Thompson. What is Wickham's Christian Name?

Mr. Serj. Jeff. John Wickham, he goes by that Name, it may be he was not christen'd. Was Jenks there, do you know him?

Mr. Farrington. The Linen-draper.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Ay, very well, he goes by the Name of Francis Jenks. Did you see Jenks there?

Mr. Farrington. I don't know the Name; I saw a great many I knew by Sight, but not their Names.

Mr. Holt. What did these Gentlemen do?

Mr. Farrington. I'll tell you, Sir; there was Sheriff Pilkington and Sheriff Shute, I went in where they were taking the Poll; said I, Gentlemen, my Lord Mayor hath adjourned the Court, what do you here? I suppose it lies in my Lord Mayor's Power; if it lies in him to call, certainly he must dissolve.

Mr. Williams. You argued thus.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Pray give us Leave to go on.

Mr. Farrington. There was Mr. Wickham, and says he, My Lord Mayor hath nothing to do here, neither will we be ruled by any of your Tory Lord Mayors. This is not the first Asserption, said I, that you have cast upon a Gentleman that loves the Church and the Government established by Law; and they fell about me, and had it not been for Mr. Fletcher and Mr. Hill, I believe they had done me a Mischief; for they trod upon my Toes; who did it I can't tell.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. But you say Sir Thomas Player, and Pilkington, and Alderman Cornish, were amongst them?

Mr. Farrington. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. That's enough.—Pray Mr. Cartwright, will you tell my Lord and the Jury what you observed there, and who was there.

Mr. Cartwright. I know the Names of no Persons that were there; all that I can say was this: As soon as my Lord Mayor adjourned the Court upon the Hurlings, he came down, and going out of the Hall, he had like to have been thrown down, had it not been for Mr. Shaw; and going to save my Lord Mayor, I wrenched my Back, and I spit Blood for seven Days after.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Tell that, Mr. Cartwright over again.

Mr. Cartwright. My Back was wrenched in saving my Lord Mayor, and I spit Blood seven Days after.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Endeavouring to save my Lord Mayor his Back was so wrenched, that he spit Blood six or seven Days after. Hark you, Mr. Cartwright, ever since that Time have you found any Indisposition?

Mr. Cartwright. I have not been my own Man since.

Mr. Williams. He took a Surfeit.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. He took a Surfeit of ill Company I am sure.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Mr. Shaw, give my Lord and the Jury an Account of what you know.

Mr. Shaw. My Lord, my Lord Mayor sent to the Sheriffs, and ordered them to forbear polling, and come up to the Chamber, and sent two or three times; but they denied coming to him, and went on and ordered the Common Cryer to make Proclamation for them to depart; and if they staid, that he would look upon them as Rioters; and there was hissing and a great deal of Crowd; and there was Sir James Edwards in the Court, they hunched him with their Elbows; and as his Lordship came down, going down the Steps there was such a Crowd, that if I had not caught his Lordship in my Arms, he had fallen upon his Forehead, and his Hat was off.

L. C. J. Who did you see so misbehave themselves?

Mr. Shaw. My Lord, I can't tell.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. I think we have now proved it against every body we design, save only against Mr. Deagle; for we do not now proceed against Dorman, Newman and Benjamin Alsop. Now, my Lord, we will only prove against John Deagle, and then we shall have done. Mr. Kemp, will you tell my Lord and the Jury who you saw here? Did you observe any Particulars after the Court was adjourned?

Mr. Kemp. I don't remember I observed any one Man.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. You don't? Had you any Discourse with Mr. Deagle at any time?—Mr. Kemp. Yes, I had.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. What did he tell you?

Mr. Kemp. He did confes he was there about Seven a Clock at Night.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. He did own he was amongst them?

Mr. Kemp. Yes, with Alderman Cornish.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. What say you, Mr. Rigby?

Mr. Rigby. I saw him about Seven a Clock.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Was he in the Crowd?

Mr. Rigby. Yes, amongst the People.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Here is all now, Gentlemen, but Dorman, Newman and Benjamin Alsop, and we don't go against them now. After they had done this, and his'd at the King, and cried, No King, no Lord Mayor, what Acclamations went these People off with?

Mr. Hammon. When the Court was broke up by the Sheriffs, they cried, God save our true Protestant Sheriffs; and in that manner they hollowed us.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. What say you?

Mr. Hammon. They hollowed us home, Sir, as far as Fishmonger's-Hall.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. They began with a Hiss, and ended with a Hollow.

Mr. Williams. Gentlemen, I am Counsel for the Defendants; and, my Lord, the Question is, under Favour, Whether these Persons taken for Defendants, whether they be guilty of this Riot, as it is laid in the Information. We are now upon a special Case, and the Question is, Whether guilty, or not guilty? My Lord, in the first Place, for the Cries; what the Cry was hath been too often mentioned; for those Cries, there is nothing at all fix'd upon any Person that is Defendant; all that is charged upon us, is, that we were in the Hall it seems, and because there was this Noise heard, therefore we must be guilty. In this Crowd where we are, I hear hissing, especially at t'other End of the Hall; which of us are concerned in it, is a hard matter to judge; it is a hard matter, and it were very well, and it had been very happy, if some of those Persons had been apprehended for their hissing. I won't say, Gentlemen, that either one Party or t'other in the Contest made the Noise of hissing, but therein nothing of it fix'd upon any of us. Our Case is this, my Lord, with Favour; When we have stated our Case and proved it, we are very innocent, and not guilty of the Riot. In some measure it hath been stated on the other Side. They say in the Information, that the Lord Mayor called a Common Hall; we don't dispute that matter, we agree it, that the Lord Mayor of London is the King's Lieutenant; but to make such an Inference, That because the Lord Mayor is the King's Lieutenant in the City of London, that he must execute all the Offices in the City, is of no Credit in the World; so that they are mistaken in that. Men are bounded in their Offices. The Lord Mayor does not execute all the Offices in the City tho' he be Lord Mayor. The Question between us is this; Whether the Sheriffs, in this Case, did more than their Office as Sheriffs of the City of London. There is a Superiority due to the Lord Mayor. Another Thing we agree with them; we agree it is in the Lord Mayor only to call these Common Halls, and as Mr. Serjeant Jefferies, that hath been in a good Office in the City, he agrees it himself: and it is apparent, there are some fix'd Days for Election; but yet tho' there be fix'd Days for Election, yet there must be that Formality of a Summons from the Lord Mayor to the City, to meet in order to the Election of Sheriffs for the City of London and other Officers; that we do agree that my Lord Mayor hath the Power of calling Common Halls, and he is the proper Officer. We agree also, Gentlemen, that when the Business is done, for there is nothing in vain in Nature, and there is nothing in Government that should be in vain, when the Business is done, my Lord Mayor is to bid the Company, Fare them well, which you may call discharging the Common Hall; we agree That to be commonly and usually done by my Lord Mayor. But herein we differ, which we are to try, the Right of the Office of Sheriffs being the Question; it is a Question of Right, and I don't see the Government is concerned one way or other.

L. C. J. Upon my Word I do see it; and surely you must be blind, or else you would see it too: When a Company is got together, No God save the King, no King, no Lord Mayor.

Mr. Williams. My Lord, I thought I had opened it plainly, I speak before a great many People; I desire, my Lord, this may be very well heard. I thought I had said very well, from all these Noises and Cries we are all innocent, we justify nothing of it, only we would have been glad if they had apprehended any Man that made that Noise; it had been a very happy thing if one of them, or all of them had been Defendants to be tried. My Clients are Defendants, they are innocent and unconcern'd; it is a Crime committed by some where these Gentlemen were by, but they are innocent; we hear hissing at t'other End of the Room, it was an ill thing, and of a treasonable Complexion; but for these Gentlemen they are unconcern'd. The Question between the Lord Mayor and the Sheriffs of the City, is a Question of Right between the Mayor and Sheriffs, Whether it be the Prerogative of the Mayor, or the Right of the Sheriffs? And I say, under Correction again, this Question, Whether my Lord Mayor of London may adjourn the Common Hall to a certain Day, is a Question of Right; Whether he can do it, or the Sheriffs? and I don't see what Consequence it can have upon the Government. The Lord Mayor is the King's Deputy, the Sheriffs they are the King's Officers; and the Question is, Whether it be in the Lord Mayor or the Sheriffs of London to adjourn it? They are very good Subjects, I am sure this very Year they are so; therefore I wonder at these Gentlemen of the King's Counsel, that will meddle with the Government, and say the Government is concerned in this; I appeal to any Man if there be any more Concern in this; I say this, here was a Common Hall call'd, grounded upon Custom in the City of London, and here is a single Question, Whether these Sheriffs did any more than their Duty; whether they were guilty of a Riot in continuing this Poll? Gentlemen, this is the Method we shall take. First of all, it is not proved, that ever the Lord Mayor, before this Time, did ever attempt to adjourn a Common Hall to any certain time; all the Witnesses that were call'd, that pretend to be knowing in the Customs of London, the Common Serjeant himself, he does not pretend that it was adjourn'd to a Day.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. You mistake. Sir Robert Clayton did from Saturday to Monday.

L. C. J. What need if there had been no Precedent? If so be an Assembly of People are met about Business, and they can't make an End of it in a reasonable time, must they be kept all Night till they have? What Argument will you make of it? If a Man may call and dissolve, do you think if there be Occasion, but, by the Law itself, that he may adjourn to a convenient Hour?

Mr. Williams. That will be a Question between us. My Lord, what I say certainly of Fact carries something in it.

L. C. J. Not at all.

Mr. Williams. Then my Lord I have done.

L. C. J. Give us Leave to understand something, Sir.

Sir Fra. Winn. My Lord, by your Lordship's Favour—

L. C. J. I spake to Mr. Williams, and he takes it so heinously at my Hand that Facts signify nothing; I do again say it, the Fact signifies nothing. For I tell you again as Law, it is not denied the Lord Mayor may call, he may dissolve; then I say by Law without Fact, by Custom, he that can both call and dissolve, may adjourn to a convenient Time. Do not Judges of Assize of all the Counties of England do it, when a Cause is appointed to be tried in such a County such a Day, and it may be it is tried three Days after? And yet I pray find me the statute or Commission, or find me one thing or another, besides the very Law itself, that doth give them Leave to adjourn from time to time.

Mr. Williams. My Lord, there is a mighty Difference, but I am only upon Fact; these Gentlemen will agree it was never practised before Sir Robert Clayton's Time; what the Consequence in Law will be, that is in your Lordship's Breast; I am now speaking upon the Evidence that this hath not been practised. What the Law is, for that we are to have your Judgment, which I humbly crave, I will will be judged by Gentlemen that are my Seniors, and better read in this Matter; but, my Lord, a Man may have a Power of calling or dissolving, and not of adjourning; it may be so. But, my Lord, admitting it to be so for this Time; yet, my Lord, whether we are guilty of a Riot, take the Circumstances of our Case. Whether the Right of adjourning be in the Sheriffs, yea, or nay; it is a Question of Right, and I had rather apply myself to your Lordship, than to the Jury. If there were a Question of Right between the Lord Mayor and the Sheriffs, it may be admitted by our Counsel, that it was his Right to adjourn the Court, and probably the Sheriffs might be in the Wrong, and the Lord Mayor in the Right. The Lord Mayor adjourns the Court, and they continue it; they go on with the Poll, and go on with the Execution of their Office, as they apprehended; if they were still for their Right, I hope your Lordship will not make this a Riot. My Lord, for the Circumstances that followed, the Noise that was made, which I don't love to mention; if, I say, they were guilty of this, I am silent; but if they did no more, as I hear no more proved upon them than continuing the Poll, then, I say, it will be hard to make them guilty of the Riot. And another thing is this; my Lord, we all know, if there were a thousand Electors, any Man knows, that when there is a Question upon an Election, it is impossible such a thing shall be carried on but there will be Reviling, ill Language, and the like; and to turn all these things to a Riot, a thing so common from the Beginning of Elections to this Time, if there be a Division and Polling, there will be something you may turn to a Riot. But, I say this, they have not instanced in any one Defendant, that he was guilty of any one particular Act that amounted to a Riot in itself, they have not instanced in one. They say of Alderman Cornish, that he was of the same Opinion with the Sheriff, that they did insist upon the Rights of the City, he took it to be the Right of the Sheriffs; And, says one of them, I will stand upon it, Babel that had been Sheriff. Now we will call our Witnesses, we will prove what hath been the constant Practice in the City, we will prove the Methods of Adjournment; and, my Lord, this is to be said, which your Lordship will observe, That the Sheriffs adjourned the Court to the very same Time with my Lord Mayor; so that it was no more than to bring the Matter to an Issue in this Case.

Sir Fr. Winn. Spare me a Word in this Case, my Lord. There is no Evidence produced against Trenchard, nor against Jekyl the younger, nor against Bisfield, nor — Of these there is no Question, but they are as if they were out of the Information; I must beg Leave for a Word or two as to those Defendants, that they have offered some Evidence against. The Question is now before your Lordship, Whether they are guilty of a Riot or no? My Lord, for aught I see, it will stand upon a Nicety of Judgment; yet, if there be not Matter enough, Gentlemen, to make the Defendants guilty of a Riot, then it will clear the Defendants. My Lord, as to those Words, that really were Words that ought to be inquired into, who they were that spoke them in relation to his Majesty; I think it was a very ill Thing of those Men that saw them, that they would not neglect all manner of Business to seize them, I think it was a Duty to fix upon them; but, my Lord, there is no Evidence to put it upon any of the Defendants. My Lord, that being pared off, now the Question is, that the Meeting together was lawful, that is agreed; then when they came together, my Lord. I do think, that if we do rely upon the Evidence, it will be a mighty hard thing to make this a Riot; setting aside those villainous Words that were spoken, which cannot relate to the Defendants. Suppose, my Lord, that among the Electors the whole Common Hall of the City, there doth a Dispute arise, before the Election is over, concerning the Adjournment of the Sheriffs or the Lord Mayor; some Men are of one Opinion, some are of another; and their Evidence, Mr. Peter King and another, Attorneys, I asked the Question several times, Did the Lord Mayor of London ever interpose or concern himself in adjourning the Hall, till the Election was quite finished? And they said, No. Then, my Lord, I must say it as to these particular Defendants, in such a Concourse of People as were met there, it is as slender a Proof of a Riot as ever was, and intimates that the Citizens of London, they that happen not to be the greater Number, they that lose the Election, may be found guilty of a Riot in choosing other Officers, as well as in the Business of Sheriffs; which being so tender a Point, I think it will be a very severe Exposition, my Lord, to make this a Riot. But now for the Matter: we will call to your Lordship several Witnesses, Men that have been Magistrates in the City, that it was always looked upon, that my Lord Mayor, as he is the principal Magistrate, he gives Notice for Common Halls; and when the several Electors are met, and the Business is over, he directs them to go home, and dissolves them; but my Lord Mayor meddles not in every little Administration of the Election of Officers, but leaves them to inferior Officers, the Sheriffs and others; that is their Duty; my Lord, with Submission, they poll them, and send them home during the Election, therefore by Law they do this; for, my Lord, the Custom of a City, and the Custom of a Place, is the Law of the Place; and if the Custom of the Place had been, that the Sheriffs have been the Persons that have managed it, it is their Right; but their Common Serjeant he says he hath the sole Management of it; then if it be as Mr. Common Serjeant says, if that must go, upon my Word, Gentlemen, your Privileges are reduced to a little Compass.

L. C. J. They did confer one with another who they took to have the most Voices, and so reported it; not that he did claim any thing in his own Right, but as an Officer of the City. Now it is plain, and I think there is no Inconveniency falls upon it, if an Officer acquaints my Lord Mayor, according to the best of our Judgment, we think such a Man hath the most Voices; that does not give him a Right for him to make an Officer, not at all.

Sir Fr. Winn. I say what he said in his Evidence; but one of the Attorneys swears, that they have all equal Power; I wonder then who should make an End of the Business. My Lord, we will call to your Lordship ancient Citizens, that have been frequent at Elections, to give you an Account that the Sheriffs always had the Management; that my Lord Mayor never concerned himself, till he had Notice it was determined; and if that be so, and the Practice hath been so, then I don't see, under Favour, my Lord, how they will make this a Riot; that is the Case.

Mr. Thompson. Sir Robert Clayton, will you please to tell my Lord and the Jury in what manner the Election of Sheriffs hath been, and how the Mayors have usually left it to the Sheriffs in that Case?

Sir Robert Clayton. My Lord, I have never heard this Matter hath been in Question till of late; so I cannot declare much upon my own Knowledge, how the Truth of Fact is or should be; I can only say this, what the Practice hath been. When I came to the Chair, I did endeavour to know my Duty, and to do it. The first time I had Occasion to take Notice of this Matter was in the Year of my Mayoralty; I did then, according to Custom, summon a Common Hall; when I had summoned it, there was a Person presented to the Hall I had drank to; the Hall did refuse him, and there was a great Noise and Hubbub upon it, and we found a way to accommodate that Matter, and left them to chuse two Sheriffs for themselves. I retired into this Court together with my Brethren, and Mr. Recorder that was then: We sent for the Sheriffs up to examine the Matter; they told us, that they could not agree the Thing, there were four Persons in Nomination, but they had granted a Poll. After this we went down into the Hall; of that Mr. Common Serjeant hath given some Account, and Mr. Serjeant Jefferies; I shall to the best of my Memory give the best Account I can of it: I shall only tell you what I did understand to be my Duty: I do not determine what the Practice was, but what I understood to be my Duty. When we came down into the Common Hall, to declare how the Matter stood, and that a Poll was agreed upon and granted, we would have adjourned the Court to a longer Time; but the People cried out, to go to the Poll presently. I was, as you have been told by Mr. Common Serjeant, to go to the Trial of one Giles, upon the Assassination of Arnold, to the Old Baily. I did twice or thrice attempt to get down out of the Hall through the Crowd, and was repulsed, the Crowd was so great I could not get through, but was fain to retire back again to the Hustings, as I remember, two or three times. There might be some such Discourse as Mr. Common Serjeant hath said; but thus far I can remember, that I did both myself, and the Common Serjeant, signify to them the Business I was about, and so many Aldermen as made up a Bench, together with Mr. Recorder, to manage that Business, must go; and that I would leave the Sheriffs to manage the Poll, which I thought was their Duty.

Mr. Thompson. Did you take it to be their Right?

Sir R. Clayton. I did not apprehend it to be my Right then.

Mr. Thompson. And therefore you left it to the Sheriffs as their Right?

Sir R. Clayton. I left it to the Sheriffs to manage the same.

Mr. Williams. Sir Robert Clayton, I suppose when you were Lord Mayor, you were as much for the Honour of the Chair as any Man, you would not have quitted the Right of the Chair?

Sir R. Clayton. I did not; there was a Trial of me in that Case.

Mr. Williams. Now, Sir, for adjourning the Poll: Did you know any such Question, whether a Poll was to be adjourn'd upon the Election of any Sheriffs?

Sir R. Clayton. There hath been a great Noise about Adjournments of late. That Poll was the most litigious of any that I know we have had before or since; that was adjourn'd for several Days.

Mr. Williams. Who adjourn'd that Poll?

Sir R. Clayton. The Sheriffs did adjourn it, I think, Gentlemen; I do think the Sheriffs did adjourn it, I was not present.

Mr. Att. Gen. Sir Robert, don't serve the Court thus.

Mr. Williams. Don't brow-beat our Witnesses, Gentlemen; I know, Mr. Attorney, you are an Example of fair Practice: We are examining our Witnesses.

Sir R. Clayton. Pray, my Lord, let me explain myself; I shall let Mr. Attorney General understand me. I did never appear at Guild-hall, unless upon the Account of a Court of Aldermen; I did never appear at Guild-hall, but the first Day we had Consultations here in this Court about the Adjournment, and upon the Hustings about going about the Business we intended, and the Hall was very intent upon the Poll; I twice attempted to go out, and could not get out; whereupon we were fain to acquaint the Hall, as well as we could for the Noise, of the Business we were to go about, and they let me go. I left behind the Sheriffs and the Common Serjeant; how long they stay'd, I can't tell; I can upon my own Knowledge give no Account of them. I was not consulted, to the best of my Knowledge, afterwards, nor did give any particular Directions for Adjournment. I did not do it for this Reason; I did not look upon it to be in my Power: If I had such a Power, I did not understand it.

Mr. Williams. Sir Robert, how many Days do you think that Poll continued?—Sir R. Clayton. About six Days.

Mr. Williams. Of those six, how many Days were you present?

Sir R. Clayton. I did not understand it to be my Duty, and so did not look after it.

Mr. Thompson. Sir Robert Clayton, I desire to ask you a Question, as to this Matter you have given in Evidence: Do you give it to the best of your Remembrance, or positively?

Sir R. Clayton. I tell you, I speak to the best of my Remembrance every thing that I say.

Mr. Att. Gen. Sir Robert Clayton, I beg your Favour, To the best of your Remembrance is no Evidence, it is so lately; if you please, Sir Robert, you are to give Evidence of a Thing about three Years ago. I ask you, upon your Oath, Who were your Sheriffs?

Sir R. Clayton. Sir Jonathan Raymond, and Sir Simon Lewis.

Mr. Att. Gen. I would ask you then a plain Question, Sir Robert, because you come in with your Remembrance: Did you give express Direction to the Common Serjeant or the Sheriffs to adjourn, upon your Oath?

Sir R. Clayton. I must, Mr. Attorney General, by your Favour, take in my Remembrance.

Mr. Att. Gen. Then you are no Evidence. Sir Robert, Did you give Directions or not, upon your Oath?

Sir R. Clayton. I can't say it was given.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did you, or did you not?

Sir R. Clayton. My Lord, I hope I have spoke English in the Case: We did discourse of the Adjournment in this Court, I believe it was discoursed below; but, as I said, I was engaged to go to the Old Baily, and I would leave that Matter to the Sheriffs, whose proper Business I understood it to be.

Mr. Att. Gen. I asked you, Sir Robert, one of the plainest Questions that ever was asked; I ask you, whether you gave the Sheriffs of the Common Serjeant express Order to adjourn?

Sir R. Clayton. I believe I did not.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did the Sheriffs tell you they had a Right then?

Sir R. Clayton. There was no Dispute who had the Right.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Sir Robert Clayton, if you please, I would ask you a Question or two. Do you remember that the Court was adjourned while you were there or not? Do you understand the Question, Sir Robert? Do you remember the Common Hall was adjourned while you were there?

Sir R. Clayton. Yes, Sir, if you give me Leave to explain myself, I think the Common Hall was adjourn'd; it was declared; but there was such a Noise in the Hall, that the People could not hear it.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. But there was a sort of Declaration made by yourself, you did make an Adjournment; but the Noise was such, that the People did not hear: And if you remember, there was a Person affronted one of the Sheriffs, and I committed him to Custody upon it.

Sir R. Clayton. We desir'd to adjourn for an Hour or two, that we might go and refresh ourselves.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Then you remember there was an Adjournment: I ask you whether it was appointed to be made by you or the Sheriffs?

Sir R. Clayton. Truly I believe it was appointed by me.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Sir Robert, by asking a Question of two, Sir Robert, I know I shall bring some Things to your Remembrance.

Sir R. Clayton. My Lord, I don't know I have given any great Occasion of Laughter to my Brethren; these Adjournments have been very common with us, and I might agree to it, or order it, or direct it; but one of them I believe I did, or two of them.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Sir Robert, I would only have a Question or two asked, and I know by asking a Question or two, I shall bring Things to your Memory, which I am sure you cannot easily forget: Were there Directions given for Proclamation to be made for all Parties to depart in the King's Name?

Sir R. Clayton. I believe there might.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. The next Question is, Whether the Sheriffs ordered that Proclamation to be made for all Parties to depart?

Sir R. Clayton. If it were done while I was present, I make no Doubt in the Case but I did direct it, I make no Question of that.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Very well: Now, Sir Robert Clayton, we are got to an Adjournment to a Time by your Direction, and Proclamation by your Direction. Now I will ask another Question, upon your Oath: Was not you in the Common Hall, and gave order for an Adjournment till Monday following; for I remember that Day to be Saturday?

Sir R. Clayton. Truly I don't remember that.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. You do not! Sir Robert, you know very well that the Sheriffs of London, when the Lord Mayor and Aldermen come back to the Huggings, the Sheriffs sit remote, one on the Right-hand, and the other on the Left, furthest from the Lord Mayor; so that all the Aldermen sit nearer to the Lord Mayor than the Sheriffs do: Did you mind that the Sheriffs came to you to speak to you any thing of an Adjournment?

Sir R. Clayton. I never saw it.

Mr. Jones. I would ask you a Question or two: You know this Gentleman, don't you? [Pointing to the Common Serjeant.]

Sir R. Clayton. Yes.

Mr. Jones. Did he attend the Court at that Time?

Sir R. Clayton. Yes.

Mr. Jones. Sir Robert, I ask you a fair Question, Did you lay any Command on him to adjourn the Hall at that Time, from Saturday till Monday?—Sir R. Clayton. Pray, my Lord, give me Leave to answer Mr. Jones in my own way.

Mr. Jones. My Lord, I'm in your Judgment, it is a fair Question within his own Recognizancelately done, he ought to answer positively, Yes or No.

Sir R. Clayton. Am not I upon my Oath; can you tell me what I can say?

Mr. Jones. Ay or No. Any honest Man would do it.

Sir Fr. Winn. All Witnesses answer their own way, Don't they?

Mr. Jones. Let him answer then his own way.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, you know there is a Rule in Chancery, if it be a Matter within seven Years, if it be not answer'd positively, it is no Answer: If one asks a Witness a Question that lies within a little while, if he will not answer either affirmatively, or negatively, he is no Witness.

L. C. J. I can't tell, Mr. Attorney.

Mr. Jones. Will you answer or no, Sir Robert Clayton, whether you commanded the Common Serjeant to go and adjourn the Hall or no?

Sir R. Clayton. I don't remember that I did.

Mr. Jones. Then I only ask you this further Question, Whether Mr. Common Serjeant did not tell you, that it was not his proper Business to do it, and that unless you would lay express Commands upon him, and put the very Words in his Mouth, he did desire to be excused, and did he not stand there? [Pointing to the Bar.]

Sir R. Clayton. I have heard, Sir, what Mr. Common Serjeant did say, and I cannot charge my Memory with it; but I have that Charity for Mr. Common Serjeant, to believe there might be Discourse to that Purpose.

Sir Fr. Winn. Mr. Love, in all your Experience, what do you remember?

Mr. Williams. How long have you known Guild-hall and Elections?

Mr. Love. I suppose, my Lord, these Gentlemen don't expect I should say any thing that was done that Day; but, my Lord, all that I suppose you expect from me is, what I did observe to be the Practice of the City; to the best of my Remembrance, I shall give you an Account. My Lord, about 22 Years ago, I did observe the Practice to be this; when I was call'd into this Office of Sheriff, I took it as a thing for granted, that it was the Sheriff's Office to manage the Common Hall, that I did, as my Lord Mayor's was to have a Sword borne before him; I have received it by Tradition from all before me, and my own Experience. My Lord, I remember when we came to chuse Sheriffs upon Midsummer Day, after the Lord Mayor and Aldermen had been there, my Lord Mayor said to me and my Brother Sheriff; Gentlemen, look to your Office. We accordingly went to it, and chose two Sheriffs, one Gentleman that had been drunk to by my Lord Mayor, I think it was Alderman —; but notwithstanding that Drinking to him, we took no Notice of that as a Ceremony, he was put in Nomination among others, and being a Senior sitting Alderman, we returned him; otherwise, my Lord, I assure you I would not have returned him, notwithstanding the Drinking. After once that the Lord Mayor and Aldermen withdrew to go to the Council-Chamber, they said to us, Now, Gentlemen, look to your Office.

Mr. Thompson. What was your Office?

Mr. Love. To chuse Sheriffs.

Mr. Thompson. Did my Lord Mayor meddle with the Election, or left it to the Sheriffs?

Mr. Love. Left it to the Sheriffs.

Mr. Williams. What was your Opinion, Sir, was it in the Lord Mayor or to take the Poll, or the Sheriffs?

Mr. Love. Truly, Sir, I am not a competent Judge of whose Right it was; but if my Lord Mayor had gone about to meddle in it, I should have prayed my Lord Mayor to meddle in his own Office, and let me alone with mine.

Mr. Att. Gen. Yes, Mr. Love, you were then the Tribunes of the People.

Sir Fr. Winn. Here are some say the Common Serjeant and the Common Cryer have a Power, nay, the whole Power of ordering the Hall during the Election. What is the Office of the Common Serjeant there?

Mr. Love. Truly, Sir, I look upon the Common Serjeant and the Common Cryer as Persons left to assist us, because they could not put us to the Trouble of Crying Oyes ourselves; and if any Common Serjeant or Common Cryer had durst to put a Question without my Direction, I would have known whether he could or no.

Sir Fr. Winn. Mr. Love, Was it ever discours'd to you when you was Sheriff, or before, or since, that ever my Lord Mayor did interpose before the Election was over?

Mr. Love. Since I was discharged of being a Magistrate, I never was at a Common Hall since. I have spent my Money for the City's Service, but never got a Penny by them; I never heard, that ever the Lord Mayor, till these late Times, interposed, but that the Sheriffs managed the whole Business of chusing Sheriffs.

Mr. Att. Gen. Mr. Love, I desire to have a Word with you; you speak of the Time of your Reign; I would ask you a plain Question, Was it before the King came in?—Mr. Love. It was that Year the King came in.

Mr. Att. Gen. Was you chosen before?—Mr. Love. Yes, I was.

Mr. Att. Gen. Do you remember an Act of Parliament in 48, then in Force, of shutting out my Lord Mayor?

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. I would ask him a Question or two. Hark you, Mr. Love, Let me ask you a Question or two.

Mr. Love. Sir George, I would give Mr. Attorney an Answer.

L. C. J. What would you make of it? If you ask him of an Act of Parliament, it is something.

Mr. Att. Gen. You speak of a Time when my Lord Mayor had no more to do with it than I had. There was an Ordinance of Parliament, did you never see that?

Mr. Love. To the best of my Remembrance I never saw it in my Life.

Mr. Att. Gen. Nor heard of such a Thing?

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Hark you, Mr. Love, I perceive you would have disputed with my Lord Mayor; who was the Lord Mayor that you talk of?—Mr. Love. Sir Thomas Allen.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Now I would desire to know whether you remember the City before the King came in?—Mr. Love. For a little while.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Do you remember any thing of that Custom of the Lord Mayor's Drinking to Sheriffs; was not that used before the King came in?

Mr. Love. A long time.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. It is well enough; a long time.

Mr. Williams. My Lord, we have seven or eight more to the same Purpose, but we are satisfied with these, Gentlemen: We will prove, if there was any thing like a Riot, we will prove my Lord Mayor, and those that were with him, were the Authors of it.

L. C. J. When Multitudes of People are gather'd together upon a lawful Occasion, supposing that they had a Right to be there, I do say, that in that case it would be much a Mitigation of the Fine, so for this same Riot; but on the other Side you must know, that these Men that do it, it doth not excuse them, for ignorantia juris is not an Excuse. It is true, if they had had a lawful Occasion to continue to do it, but in truth they had not, that will excuse them à tanto, but non à toto.

Mr. Holt. My Lord, I beg to put in this Case; there is a great deal of Difference where a Person does claim a Right to himself, and does an extravagant Action. Now, my Lord, these Persons did claim a Right to themselves to continue the Common Hall, and that it was not in my Lord Mayor's Power to adjourn it without them: Now, my Lord, they claimed this Right, if they used no Violence that is excusable. If I should claim a Right to another Man's Estate, tho' I have no Title, and say I have a Right, and give it out in Speeches, no Action lies against me; but if I do an extravagant Action, and say another Man hath a Title, there lies an Action against me.

L. C. J. Now go to your Fact.

Sir Fr. Winn. My Lord, put a Point to us, and we need not call more Witnesses.

L. C. J. I don't speak to hinder you from calling your Witnesses.

Sir Fr. Winn. I put this Case, we undertake to prove, that it was always looked upon, that it was the Right of the Sheriffs: Suppose, my Lord, upon the Dispute it should be found, that the Opinion of the Jury should be otherwise; will this turn to an illegal Act?

L. C. J. Call your Witnesses.

Mr. Wallop. I beseech your Lordship I may put one Case in this Point in a Point of Right, if they have a probable Cause to insist upon it. Suppose I send forty Men to a Wood, and take a Car or a Team, if they be a competent Number to cut down Wood, if we are mistaken in the Title that is no Riot. Lambert puts the Case.

L. C. J. But what if I had sent a great many Men to cut down the whole Wood?

Mr. Williams. We will call some Witnesses that will take us off from the Riot thus, if so be we can excuse ourselves of the Disorder, and put upon my Lord Mayor, then we are innocent.

L. C. J.

L. C. J. Very well, if you do that.
 Mr. Sibley. Are you acquainted with the Manner of the Election of Sheriffs? How long have you known it?
 Mr. Sibley. I have been of the Livery ever since 39; in all my Time, I speak, Gentlemen, to the best of my Remembrance; it hath been the Custom in all my Time, except here of late, that the Sheriffs of London have had the Management of the Election.
 Mr. Sibley. Did my Lord Mayor ever interpose till the Election was over?
 Mr. Sibley. I never knew my Lord Mayor interpose till lately.
 Sir Fr. Winn. Did you ever hear my Lord Mayor pretend to it till of late?
 Mr. Sibley. No, my Lord.
 Sir Fr. Winn. Did the Mayor use to be present at any Election during the Election?
 Mr. Sibley. I have been most commonly there.
 Sir Fr. Winn. But the Mayor; would the Mayor be there?
 Mr. Sibley. The Mayor and Aldermen went off the Bench.
 Sir Fr. Winn. Who managed the Elections?
 Mr. Sibley. The Sheriffs.
 Sir Fr. Winn. Were the Common Serjeant and the Common Cryer there?

Mr. Sibley. The Common Serjeant and the Common Cryer are always there.
 L. C. J. I pray thus; you have known the City, it seems, a great while. I would ask you this: Pray who did call the Assembly that was to chuse the Sheriffs, did the Sheriffs, or the Lord Mayor?

Mr. Sibley. We commonly received the Tickets by the Officers of the Companies.

L. C. J. Did the Officers of the Companies summon the Assembly? Hark you, pray, Sir, recollect yourself; Do you take it, that the Officers, the Beadles it may be, of the several Companies, did they summon the Livery-men, and so a Common Hall was call'd together; was it so in your Time?

Mr. Sibley. It hath been commonly so; we have received Tickets from the Beadle of the Company.

L. C. J. And my Lord Mayor had nothing to do with it then?

Mr. Sibley. What Order the Masters and Wardens had from my Lord Mayor, I never inquired into that.

L. C. J. When the Hall was dissolved, who ordered Proclamation to be made, the Sheriffs or the Lord Mayor?

Mr. Sibley. My Lord Mayor hath not used to be there.

Mr. Thompson. When they had done, they went away. He won't trouble your Lordship.

L. C. J. Pray, had my Lord any hand in Summoning; did he direct the Summoning of them?
 Mr. Sibley. It is more than I know.

L. C. J. You bring a Witness that knows nothing of the Matter.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Mr. Deputy Sibley. Give me Leave to ask Mr. Sibley a Question or two: I shall set him to-rights presently. Mr. Sibley, if I be not mistaken, you are one of the Company of Tallow-Chandlers, and you have been Master of the Company, and you have been Warden of the Company. You very well know what Directions are given to the Beadle are generally by the Master or Wardens: Pray, upon your Oath, when you were Master or Warden, was there ever any Precept sent to you to summon a Common Hall?
 Mr. Sibley. Indeed I don't remember that, Sir.

Mr. Thompson. If your Lordship please, we have done with our Evidence; I would beg your Lordship's Opinion in it.

Sir Fr. Winn. We do admit my Lord Mayor summons the Court.

L. C. J. But you bring a Witness that knows nothing in the World of it, but yet you would have it taken for Gospel, that the Sheriffs had all the Management before that time forty Years together, till now very lately. But when he comes to be asked, how is this Assembly or Common Hall call'd together, alas! he knows no more of that than one in Utopia.

Mr. Thompson. My Lord, we have several other Witnesses, but we will call no more.

Mr. At. Gen. If you have no more, we will call two or three more.

Mr. Thompson. We have some to prove, that my Lord Grey came to speak with Sir William Gulston, and went away again; and we desire to call Sir Thomas Armstrong.

Sir Fr. Winn. My Lord, if your Lordship pleases, thus, there will be it seems some particular Defences made. Your Lordship hath heard their Evidence, and what we have said; we desire to call two or three Witnesses to another Head. Your Lordship hath heard there was some Rudeness by some of the People, but who they were it doth not appear. We will call two or three Witnesses of the Behaviour of those Men and Company that came with my Lord Mayor; that whatsoever Disturbance was made, they were the chief Men that made the Disturbance, and my Lord Mayor could not help it, nor we neither.

L. C. J. Sir Francis, I believe those Men that would not have God save the King, my Lord Mayor could not hinder them; but will you undertake to prove, that those that came with my Lord Mayor, that they were the Men?
 Sir Fr. Winn. They were with them, my Lord.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. They were with them that cry'd, God bless the Protestant Sheriffs.

Mr. Sibley. My Lord, I desire to explain myself to what I said; it is several Years ago since I was Master of the Company; I do not remember, but I believe the Summons was directed from my Lord Mayor.

Mr. Freak. Mr. Winstanley, what Account can you give to my Lord and the Jury?

Mr. Winstanley. I have lived near the Hall, and I often came in, but I was not a Livery-man upon that Poll that was between Mr Kiffen and Sir Robert Clayton; the Sheriffs managed it.

Mr. Freak. Who managed it?
 Mr. Winstanley. The Sheriffs.

Mr. Freak. Who declared?
 Mr. Winstanley. The Sheriffs.

Mr. Freak. Did the Mayor come down to declare the Election?

Mr. Winstanley. The Mayor came down after the Poll, but the Sheriffs took the Poll.

Mr. Freak. Who was then Mayor?

Mr. Winstanley. Sir James Edwards was Sheriff, and Sir John Smith.

Mr. Freak. Who was Mayor?

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. It was Sir Samuel Starling.

Mr. Freak. Who put the Question upon the Hustings?

Mr. Winstanley. I can't tell.

Mr. Freak. What did you hear the Sheriffs say, or see them do?
 Mr. Winstanley. The Sheriffs presently granted a Poll, and parted one to one Door, and the other to t'other.

Mr. Freak. And who took the Poll?

Mr. Winstanley. The Sheriffs took it.

Mr. Freak. Who declared the Election?
 Mr. Winstanley. The Sheriffs.

Mr. Freak. Who were Sheriffs then?

Mr. Winstanley. Sir James Edwards, and Sir John Smith.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Mr. Winstanley, I would ask you this Question: Do you take it upon your Oath, that the Sheriffs declared the Election?

Mr. Winstanley. I declare upon my Oath, that the Sheriffs took the Poll.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Mr. Winstanley, you may guess pretty well what I mean by this. First of all, I ask you, Did the Sheriffs put the Question?

Mr. Winstanley. The Sheriffs took the Poll, Sir.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Nay, answer my Question: Did the Sheriffs put the Question, or did any body else?

Mr. Winstanley. Truly, Sir, I have forgot; you were there.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. I know I was, Sir: I know very well: I ask you upon your Oath, who was it that declared the Election afterwards, upon your Oath?

Mr. Winstanley. Truly, Sir George, I don't remember.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Mr. Winstanley, one went out at one Door, you say; and t'other went out at t'other, you say; now I say; Who took Notice, and told the Names of those that went out at one Door and t'other?

Mr. Winstanley. The two Sheriffs.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Who else?
 Mr. Winstanley. I can't tell.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Do you remember me there at the great Door, when they poll'd and went out? Do you remember who told them?

Mr. Winstanley. No, truly.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Pray, do you remember when one Mr. Broome, a Wax-chandler, was chosen Ale-conner?
 Mr. Winstanley. I was in the Hall; but I do not charge my Memory with it.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Hark you, Mr. Winstanley, Who is it grants the Poll when it is demanded?

Mr. Winstanley. I do remember very well, Sir George Jefferies was in the Hall; they demanded a Poll, and so went out.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Who granted it?
 Mr. Winstanley. The two Sheriffs.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. I will put you a Case nearer home, Mr. Winstanley: You remember when Sir Thomas Player was chosen Chamberlain, when the Question was put, Who should be Chamberlain, between him and a Gentleman I see not far from me; Who, do you remember, managed the Poll then?
 Mr. Winstanley. There was no Need, Sir George.

L. C. J. What do you mean to do with these little Witnesses? You call Witnesses that know nothing of the Matter, or nothing to the Purpose.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. My Lord, let me ask him but one Question more: I know he hath been a very great Evidence in this Case; I remember when that Gentleman was in for Bridge-master: Who was the Poll demanded of at that Time?

Mr. Winstanley. Truly, Sir, I think it was demanded of the Court.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Of the Court?

Mr. Winstanley. Usually upon other Days, my Lord Mayor, and the Court come down; but upon Midsummer Day they go up.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. But I ask you, of whom the Poll was demanded at that Time?

Mr. Winstanley. I don't remember it, I'll assure you.

L. C. J. You told us that Point would be granted, and you would not stand upon it.

Mr. Williams. My Lord, where there are so many Men, there may be many Minds: I would have your Lordship and the Jury hear them.

Mr. Jones. The Government is concerned, Mr. Williams.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. This is not a Matter of Mirth I'll assure you; it reaches the Government.

Mr. Williams. My Lord Mayor hath the Power of adjourning the Hall, but not till the Business is done.

Mr. Thompson. My Lord, I would put you a Case *--- * Here Mr. Sure, Mr. Jones, I ought to be heard. If my Lord Mayor Jones offered to hath Power to call a Common Hall, he hath not to adjourn interrupt him. it before the Business is done.

L. C. J. If a Writ come to the Sheriffs to chuse Parliament-men, then the Sheriffs have it; but this is my Lord Mayor's Office, he hath Power to dissolve and adjourn.

Mr. Thompson. I speak to this Case, my Lord; I will shew your Lordship an Instance where it cannot be done. My Lord Mayor hath Power to call here, and he hath Power to dissolve, say they: My Lord; it cannot be, with Submission, in all Cases. He hath Power to call an Assembly when there is a Mayor to be chosen; and the Citizens have a Privilege to move their Mayor, or continue him: Now if it were in the Power of the Mayor, and there should happen a Question, Who they were? For, in a great Number of Electors, if it were in his Power to adjourn from time to time, he must continue Mayor.

L. C. J. It is plain he may do it for all your Objection. You know it was agreed by all Sides, that Sir Samuel Starling, the Lord Mayor, had well dissolved the Assembly, that is, in point of Law, and they could not say the Assembly was in Being; yet afterwards there was an Action brought against him; and there they laid, how that maliciously, and to the Intent that he who was chosen into the Place of Bridge-Master, to which he was duly elected, should be set aside, he goes and dissolves the Assembly, and denied to grant him a Poll, which they ought to have had; yet for all that the Assembly was well dissolved.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Conclude, Gentlemen, conclude.

Mr. Thompson. That which I have to say is a Point of Law.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Sir Fr. Winstanley, if you design to conclude, I tell you beforehand, I would not interrupt you; we will call a Witness or two.

Sir Fr. Winn. My Lord, because we would make an End, I will call two of those Men that came with my Lord Mayor, to shew that if there was any Rudeness, those very People that came with my Lord Mayor, were the Cause of it.

Mr. Sol. Gen. That they that came with my Lord Mayor caused them to stay after my Lord was gone?

Mr.

Mr. Thompson. Mr. Jackson, pray can you remember, whether any of the Defendants here were concern'd in any Affront to my Lord Mayor, or who it was that my Lord Mayor received an Affront from?

Mr. Jackson. I did observe, my Lord, as he went out of the Hall, I took my Back and set it against the Crowd, and had my Face towards my Lord Mayor; and I was crowded so, that I could scarce see myself one way or other, but got off the Steps at last, and went home with my Lord Mayor.

Mr. Thompson. Can you say who struck off the Hat?

Mr. Sol. Gen. Where do you live, pray?

Mr. Jackson. I live at Charing-cross.

Mr. Sol. Gen. With whom? Mr. Jackson. With myself, Sir.

Sir Fr. Winn. What is your Name?

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Don't you know the sword-bearer of Bristol, Sir Francis?

Mr. Thompson. Mr. Roe, were you here when my Lord Mayor was crowded? Who offered any Affront?

Mr. Williams. Pray will you give my Lord and the Jury an Account of what you heard, and where the Disorder began?

Mr. Roe. My Lord, I was in Cheapside, and I heard a great Noise of huzzaing, and a terrible Noise indeed; and I met with a Fellow running, my Lord, and I stopp'd the Fellow: What is the Matter? Nothing, said he, but an old Fellow riding Shrimington and Skeleton; and in the Street I saw a matter of a Hundred with their Hats upon Sticks, crying, Damn the Whigs; said I, Gentlemen, What's the Matter? said they, The Work is done to stop the Poll; and that is all.

L. C. J. Hark you, Were you in Guild-Hall?

Mr. Roe. I followed them a little Way down the Street.

L. C. J. Hark you, Did you see my Lord Mayor's Hat down upon the Ground; and was he like to be thrown down; did you see that?

Mr. Roe. No, I saw nothing of that; I heard such a Noise, I was glad I had got rid of them.

Mr. Williams. My Lord, we have no more to say in the general; all that I have to say now is for my Lord Grey. The Evidence against my Lord Grey, was, that he was here: Now, my Lord, we have Witnesses more particularly to defend my Lord Grey.

Mr. Att. Gen. We shall call a Witness or two to clear what that Gentleman said when Sir Robert Clayton was Mayor.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Pray, Gentlemen, let us have a little Patience. Pray, my Lord, if your Lordship please---Here is such a horrid Noise---Upon all the Matter, I don't perceive, but Sir Robert Clayton does himself believe Proclamation was made by him; he does believe the Adjournment was made by him; but as to the Adjournment to Monday, he is not certain of that. But if your Lordship please, we have here both the Sheriffs, Sir Jonathan Raymond, and Sir Simon Lewis, that will shew the Court whether there was any such thing.

Mr. Att. Gen. Before Bethel came out of the North, no Sheriff ever pretended to it.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Pray, Sir Simon Lewis. I desire you would satisfy my Lord and the Jury concerning the Adjournment when you went to the Sessions House in the Old Bailey: Did you order the Adjournment of the Poll, or my Lord Mayor?

Sir Simon Lewis. We came and waited upon my Lord Mayor here, and told him they demanded a Poll without; we took his Directions, and my Lord Mayor did adjourn the Court, by reason that the Assassins of Arnold were to be try'd; and by reason of that it was adjourn'd till Monday, and my Lord Mayor and the Aldermen went thither; but indeed we were left as Prisoners, and I receiv'd a Blow on my Breast.

Mr. Att. Gen. Sir Jonathan Raymond, Did you pretend to have the Power then of adjourning the Court?

Sir Jon. Raymond. My Lord did adjourn the Court because of that Trial, and then afterwards we went upon the Poll; we were several Days upon it: We only appointed from Day to Day till we had made an End; and when we had made an End, we declared it to my Lord Mayor and the Court of Aldermen; and my Lord Mayor and the Court of Aldermen came upon the Hustings, and declared who it fell upon.

Mr. Att. Gen. Sir James Smith, When you were Sheriff, did you pretend to have any such Power?

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Upon your Oath, Did you pretend to have a Power of adjourning Common Halls?

Sir J. Smith. No, Sir; we were Sheriffs immediately after Sir Robert Clayton; I never heard it questioned but my Lord Mayor had the Right of it.

Sir Fr. Winn. Sir Jonathan Raymond, I think you say the Sheriffs did adjourn from Day to Day at that Time?

Sir J. Raymond. We could not make an End of Polling; and we did appoint from Day to Day till we had made an End of Polling.

Mr. Com. Serj. My Lord, I will give your Lordship an Account of that whole Day's Proceedings: We came to the Hall, and after Mr. Recorder, Sir George Jefferies, had attempted to speak to the Hall, (for they were in such a Tumult they would not suffer him to speak) my Lord Mayor withdrew: There was a very great Clamour and Noise; but at last the Question was put; and I came up with the Sheriffs hither, and acquainted my Lord; that Mr. Bethel and Alderman Cornish had the most Hands, and that there was a Poll demanded between Mr. Box and Mr. Nicholson, and Mr. Bethel and Mr. Cornish; then the Dispute lay as between Box and Nicholson, and Alderman Cornish and Mr. Bethel: I acquainted my Lord Mayor that was, Sir Robert Clayton, that Mr. Recorder said he would not go down to make Declaration, they would not hear him: Upon that Sir Robert Clayton took a Paper and gave it to me, with these very Words: [It is the greatest Tumult I was ever in all my Life, and I have some Reason to remember it.] Pry'thee, says he, do you make Declaration to them; for if they will hear any body, they will hear thee: Sir, says I, because it is not the Duty of my Office, I desire your particular Direction: Then, says he, tell them I must adjourn it till Monday, because I must go to the Old Bailey, to try the Assassins of Arnold: Whereupon the Hall was adjourn'd, and in a great Tumult, and my Lord Mayor attempting to go out, he was beat back twice or three times; he spake something to them, and they went away, leaving me and the Sheriffs upon the Hustings, and there they kept us Prisoners till six or seven o'Clock at Night. On Monday, when we came to Poll again by his Direction, I went to his House, and he gave me Direction to go with the Sheriffs to adjourn it: afterwards there was a Court of Aldermen purposely called, and, upon their Direction, I took the Poll and kept it, and every Adjournment was made by his particular Direction to me.

Sir Robert Clayton. Gentlemen, I do desire I may explain myself, because I was imperfectly heard: Some Part of the Story that Mr. Common Serjeant does say, I do remember, and will tell you what I do remember of it. I remember the coming up, and I remember, that Mr. Recorder was not willing to go down, there was such a Hubbub; I remember that very well. The particular Words I said to him, I cannot charge my Memory with; we had discoursed. I remember the Adjournment, and we discours'd of the Adjournment below; we made Proclamation, but the Noise was so great they could not hear; and upon my attempting to go out, I was beaten back twice or thrice, and then we were fain to let them know the Business we went about as well as we could, and then they let me go, and I left the Sheriffs with them to agree of the Manner and Methods of Polling. There were several Adjournments made afterwards; I can't charge myself with it: I might be particularly consulted; but for the particular Times of Adjournment, I did not think myself concerned in point of Reputation; if I thought I had been blameable, I should have concerned myself to have given more particular Directions.

Mr. Thompson. If your Lordship please, I have but this; admitting the Right to be in the Lord Mayor---

L. C. J. Do you make a Doubt of it now?

Mr. Thompson. Admitting it, those Gentlemen that came to continue the Poll, it is a Question whether they can be guilty of the Riot or not.

Mr. W. There are some three or four of the Defendants that have a particular Case; that stands by themselves; and it rests upon this Point, Whether my Lord Mayor hath this Power or not? For so much of the Evidence as concerns any Noise or Hissing, or any thing of that, That relates to the Time of Adjournment; for it was done at the Time of the Adjournment. As for Mr. Cornish, Mr. Goodenough, my Lord Grey, and one or two more, they did not come till within some three Hours after that, so that they cannot be engaged in the Noise, or That.

L. C. J. It is no matter, they came time enough.

Mr. Williams. We have done, my Lord, with the general Evidence; we have something to say in Defence of my Lord Grey; all the Evidence against my Lord Grey is this, that he was here about Seven a Clock at Night. For that, Gentlemen, we say this; that my Lord Grey had some Business here, and my Lord's Business was this; my Lord Grey was here about the Sale of a Manor in Essex with Sir William Gulton; my Lord, they had appointed this very Day for that Business, it was my Lord's Interest mightily to pursue it, and Sir William happened to be at Sir Thomas Player's, and knowing this to be an Election-day, my Lord dined that Day at an Eating-house in the Hay-Market, and afterwards came to Peter's Coffee-House in Covent-Garden, and staid there till between Four and Five a Clock in the Afternoon, when he thought the Heat would be over; and then he came to make Inquiry after Sir William, and took up in Brun's Coffee-house about Five or Six a Clock; there he continued quiet in the House till all the Noise was over; then he sent to inquire for Sir William Gulton, and hearing he was at Sir Thomas Player's, he and Sir William went to a Tavern, and there they treated, and finished the Affair. My Lord, we will prove it; Call Mr. Ireton.

Mr. Ireton. My Lord, I know that at this very Time my Lord Grey was treating with Sir William Gulton about the Manor of Corsfield in Essex, and my Lord Grey and Sir William Gulton had appointed to meet that Night at t'other End of the Town, if the Poll were ended. In the Evening I met my Lord Grey, who told me he had been with Sir William Gulton in London, and had dispatch'd the Business.

L. C. J. Did my Lord tell you so?

Lord Grey. He treated for me, my Lord, with him.

L. C. J. Pray, for God's-sake, you must lay your Matter a little closer together; if he was to treat about the Purchase of a Manor, was there no convenient Place for Company to treat about it, but while they were casting up the Poll-books with the Sheriffs and Goodenough? Was that Place fit?

Mr. Holt. My Lord had appointed to speak with Sir William Gulton that Day in Covent-Garden, if the Poll had been over; but not finding him there, came into the City.

Lord Grey. That Gentleman went between Sir William Gulton and I.

L. C. J. Where were you to meet?

Lord Grey. At the Rose Tavern in Covent-Garden.

L. C. J. What made you here then?

Lord Grey. Not finding him there, I came hither, and spake with Sir William Gulton in that very Room. The Poll was over, and the Company gone.

Mr. Williams. Mr. Ireton, Do you know there was any Treaty between my Lord Grey and Sir William Gulton about the Sale of any Land?

Mr. Ireton. Yes, Sir, I do.

Mr. Williams. When was that Treaty?

Mr. Ireton. About a Twelve-month since.

Mr. Williams. Do you know they had any Discourse about it?

Mr. Ireton. Sir, they had; I think it was Midsummer-day, the Day the Election of Sheriffs was.

Mr. Williams. Were they about that Treaty that Day?

Mr. Ireton. That Day, my Lord.

Mr. Williams. Where was the Treaty?

Mr. Ireton. In Sir Thomas Player's House.

Mr. Williams. What Time of the Day?

Mr. Ireton. About Twelve a Clock.

Mr. Williams. Where went my Lord afterwards?

Mr. Ireton. My Lord went to Dinner, as he told me, in the Hay-Market.

Mr. Williams. Did you know of any Appointment to meet again?

Mr. Ireton. I was informed so, but cannot positively tell.

Mr. Williams. Sir Thomas Armstrong, Pray, Sir, will you give an Account where my Lord was that Day?

Sir Thomas Armstrong. I came up this Way about Six a Clock, and was in a Coffee-house by Guildhall.

Mr. Williams. Do you know any thing about that Treaty?

Sir Tho. Armstrong. I saw them together that Night: I saw them together at Sir Thomas Player's about Twelve o'Clock, and again at Eight.

Mr. Williams. Do you know any thing of treating about this Land in Essex?

Sir Tho. Armstrong. No, I do not.

Mr. Att. Gen. You did not see them in the Chamber?

Sir Tho. Armstrong. Does any body say I did?

Lord Grey. My Lord, I will give you an Account of it.

Mr. Williams. My Lord, Mr. Ireton tells you this; my Lord Grey and Sir William Gulton were in Treaty about buying these Lands that very Morning together; says Sir Thomas Armstrong, about Noon; afterwards my Lord went to the Hay-Market, and staid there till Evening, and my Lord and Sir William were together again at Night. My Lord, this Case will depend upon your Lordship's Directions. It is very plain, that my Lord Mayor of London hath the summoning the Common Hall, and when the Business is done he hath the discharging them. My Lord, if it be true what Mr. Love and others say, they tell you, that in all their Time, their Opinion is so, that it belongeth to the Sheriffs, and not to the Lord Mayor; what may be the Consequence, lies in your Lordship's Opinion. Now for the Consequence of it, if it were no more than a Matter of Opinion and Right, and the Sheriffs insist upon it: Are these Defendants and the Sheriffs guilty of these Outrages? For there is nothing proved upon them. This don't make them guilty of any thing more than a bare continuing the Poll. Therefore, my Lord, I must submit to your Direction, how far the Jury will find us, or any of us, guilty of a Riot in this Case.

Sir Fr. Winn. My Lord, we agree they did continue the Poll, and the Defendants did apprehend it was lawful for them so to do; if the Jury should think they did misapprehend what was the ancient Usage of the City; if your Lordship should be of Opinion, that by Law the Lord Mayor ought to do it; yet I do say, it being so probable a Case, their insisting upon it will not make it a Riot: Your Lordship will be pleased, I hope, to take notice of it, if they find the Mayor hath Power to adjourn it.

Mr. Wallop. I humbly conceive, that the Information does in truth destroy itself, for it is agreed on all Hands, as the Information sets forth, that they came together upon very lawful Occasions; and the Information sets forth, that by Colour of their Office they did as if they were lawfully assembled. Now, my Lord, they have overthrown the Definition of a Riot, for a Riot is, when three or more are come together to do an unlawful Act, and they do it. So that it is a very hard matter to make this a Riot.

L. C. J. Does not this Matter appear upon Record?

Mr. Holt. No, no, my Lord, it don't.

Mr. Wallop. If Men do lawfully meet together, if by chance they fall together by the Ears, and commit many Misdemeanours, this can never be a Riot. But, say they, here was an Adjournment, a Command by my Lord Mayor to adjourn the Court, and they continue after Adjournment: Now, my Lord, the Question is, Whether he had Power to adjourn it or no, the Citizens did insist upon it, that he had no Power. Now, Gentlemen of the Jury, if you find in your Conscience, that the Citizens had a probable Cause, and they insist upon it, this can never be a Riot.

Mr. Holt. It doth appear that they were lawfully assembled together. And for the throwing off my Lord Mayor's Hat, suppose that my Lord Mayor hath a Power for to adjourn the Court, yet, my Lord, it must be agreed, that those that come thither must have a convenient Time to depart; for my Lord Mayor, as soon as ever he had adjourn'd the Court, he went away, and all the Hall could not go of a sudden, but must have a convenient Time to go; some followed him immediately, and the other Gentlemen that staid behind, not at all consenting to that rude Action about my Lord Mayor, cannot be guilty, for there is no Proof of any Misdemeanour committed by any of these Defendants; it may be there was some Discourse concerning the Power of my Lord Mayor. I only mind your Lordship of Sir Robert Atkins's Case, a late Case in the King's Bench; there can be no Assembly to choose an Alderman, as in that Case, unless the Mayor was there; the Assembly was held, and yet, Gentlemen, because it was not done in a tumultuous manner, but with a good Intent, it was held, that Sir Robert Atkins was not guilty of a Riot. There must be an evil Intention to do some Mischief.

Mr. — Turner brought his Action against Sir Samuel Starling for dissolving the Hall: And, my Lord, that being the Case of the Election of a Bridge-master, surely there is a parallel Reason for the Sheriffs.

L. C. J. That Case is against them.

Mr. — No, my Lord.

L. C. J. There the Lord Mayor hath a Power by Law to dissolve the Assembly, tho' in truth he should not have done it.

Mr. Sol. Gen. The Action was brought for denying a Poll, my Lord.

Mr. Thompson. It is laid in that Declaration, that it is the Custom of the City, that my Lord Mayor cannot dissolve.

Mr. Att. Gen. May it please your Lordship, and you Gentlemen of the Jury, you have now heard all the Evidence.

L. C. J. Gentlemen, you shall not over-rule me so: Because I am willing to hear every body, therefore you impose upon me. You shall have Law, by the Grace of God, as far as I am able.

Mr. Att. Gen. We have now done with the Evidence on both Sides, and you do now see the Right of the Lord Mayor, notwithstanding all the vulgar and popular Discourses is asserted; it appears now upon full Evidence, they themselves do not contradict it, that my Lord Mayor is the supreme Magistrate of this City, both for calling all your Assemblies, and for dissolving them; they won't pretend against this; but indeed they make a Question whether my Lord Mayor can adjourn or no. Necessity of Affairs requires it sometimes, if there be such a Tumult, such an Interruption, that they cannot proceed orderly; or if the Matter be so long that they can't determine it in one Day, there is a Necessity that there must be an Adjournment to another Time; and they give you no Instances, Gentlemen, that ever the Sheriffs in any Age did attempt it, never any Sheriffs made an Ad-journalment of his own Accord. Mr. Love, he gives no Instance of an Adjournment, he only tells you of his Supremacy at that time when my Lord Mayor had nothing to do with it; and, Gentlemen, at that time you must remember when he was elected, the Law was otherwise when Mr. Love was elected; then the Sheriffs were the Tribunes of the People, and they had shut my Lord Mayor quite out of their Common Hall, and declared, that he had no Power to dissolve or adjourn them. The next Instance is that of Sir Robert Clayton's, and how do they make that out? Sir Robert Clayton swears only upon his own Memory, and what is that? He remembers just nothing. He does think the Common Serjeant does speak Truth in some Things, but he can't remember other Things. But we prove not only an Adjournment from Saturday to Monday, but other Adjournments by special Direction from Sir Robert Clayton. So that whatever Mr. Love did fancy of the Authority of Sheriffs, to tell my Lord Mayor he had nothing to do therewith; yet that my Lord Mayor is certainly the Chief Magistrate, we have proved all along to this present Time, till within these two or three Years, and whenever there was an Adjournment, we have proved it to you, that it was by my Lord Mayor. So that it is nothing like the Case put by the Gentlemen on the other Side; there was never any Shadow of Pretence for Right. Whoever knows London, must know the Sheriffs of London are not Officers of this Corporation as Sheriffs, but they are the King's Officers of the County, granted to be chosen by the Sheriffs: They are in their particular Cases Judges, for choosing Parliament-men, but in no Coporation Act whatsoever: So that, Gentlemen, you see there is no Pretence for that: But admit there were, what is it like the Case when a Man lays Claim to a wood, and he sends three or four Persons, or half a dozen Persons to cut it down? Yet, Mr. Wallop, notwithstanding your Authority, tho' that be not a Riot, it is a Rout, where you will send such a Number to raise Terror in the King's People, and they will continue together after they are commanded to depart by a Magistrate. But it is a different thing where Men will concern themselves in a Matter of publick Government, as if any Man should pretend he hath the King's Commission to take your Lordship off the Bench.

So that here is quite a different thing; this relates immediately to the Government; here the publick Peace of the City is in Danger, and if my Lord Mayor had been a Person of great Spirit, and had presently raised others to have suppress'd this Riot, then the City had been in a fine Condition, by these People that would have No God bless the King, but God bless the Sheriffs. There is no Pretence of Right can justify such a thing. Now, my Lord, for a Riot, this must be acknowledged to be; for many to meet together to do an unlawful thing, is a Riot.

Mr. Wallop. And do it.

Mr. Att. Gen. And do it, I put in that too, Sir. The Meeting here is unlawful, and it is as certain that my Lord Mayor hath Power to adjourn, that is a Consequence of Law, if the Adjournment be necessary, and he is the only Judge of Adjournment; and when he hath adjourn'd, I do say the continuing Persons together to do that, which if they had summon'd them to do had been unlawful, is as much an unlawful Thing, and a Riot, as that. I would fain know, if the Sheriffs had summon'd all the Citizens together to meet and choose Sheriffs, or any others, would any Man question but this is an unlawful Act, a Subversion of the ancient Government of the City, the usurping an Authority in the City contrary to the King's Grant and the Charter? And after they are adjourn'd, if they will make Proclamation, and order the People to stay, and go on with the Poll, is not that the same thing in point of Law? Surely no Man almost of common Sense but will say, it is the same thing. In the Case that Mr. Wallop puts, if there be any Disorders committed, precedent to the Magistrate's dissolving the Society; that will not amount to a Riot; but if the Magistrate comes and makes Proclamation for them to depart, and they stay after, it makes a Riot, if they continue still together, it is a Rout and an unlawful Assembly. But they say there is no Proof that these Gentlemen, that are in the Information, are guilty of the Riot; they are all Parties to the Riot, the very being there, and giving Countenance to it, is an unlawful thing. Pray, Gentlemen, if Ten Men should go to rob a House, and one stands off at a Distance, is not the Tenth Man guilty of the Burglary? If there be as many Persons together, and Three only do an unlawful Act, and the others give Protection, for Number is always a Protection, are not all these Gentlemen guilty? And therefore, Gentlemen, it is hoped you will settle the City by destroying this Pretence, which hath been fluttering in the Air, but hath no Ground for it.

L. C. J. Gentlemen of the Jury, this is an Information against several, for a Riot, and it sets forth, that there was a Common Hall that was call'd by the Lord Mayor for choosing several Officers, and that afterwards the Lord Mayor did dissolve that Assembly, and yet notwithstanding the Defendants (so many as by-and-by I shall name to you, that they have given Evidence against, they) kept together and committed a Riot; it is laid so particularly in the Information. For the Matter in Fact that hath been altercated between them, the Question is, whether the Lord Mayor for the Time being hath Power in himself to call an Assembly, and to dissolve it? And truly as to this Point, even the Counsel for the Defendants did one while grant it, but another while did bring Witnesses that did know nothing of the Matter, I must needs say. But for aught I see, even until this very time, the Lord Mayor did call the Assembly, and he did dissolve it, and that they did seem to grant even at the Beginning of the Cause: But then they make a Distinction, but he could not adjourn it to a certain Time. That was a very weak thing to say, that if the Lord Mayor may call and dissolve the Hall, that he cannot adjourn it to a convenient Hour. Suppose now the Business to be done was not dispatched sooner than this time a-night, so that upon the Matter they must be either adjourned till Tomorrow, or kept in the Hall all Night: Does any Man think, that that Magistrate that hath Power to call and dissolve, hath not Power to adjourn? There is no Man doubts of it in Fact or Law; and that it was so, Sir Robert Clayton did that very thing; if there had been no Precedent, it had been all one. But they make a great deal of Business of it, how that the Sheriffs were the Men, and that the Lord Mayor was nobody, and that shews it was somewhat of the Commonwealth's Seed, that was like to grow up among the good Corn.—* Pray, Gentlemen, that is * Here the People a very undecent Thing; you put an Indignity upon the King, for you ought not to do it, if you knew your rupted my Lord. Duty: Pray, Gentlemen, forbear it, it does not become a Court of Justice.

I will tell you, when Things were topsy-turvy, I can't tell what was done, and I would be loth to have it raked up now. They might as well (as I perceive they have at another time said) have said, that the Power of dissolving and adjourning might have been in the Livery-men, all People, every body; and so then if they had been together by the Ears, I don't know who must have parted them, that is the Truth of it. But I think their own Counsel are very well satisfied both in Fact and Law, that the Lord Mayor, for the Time being, hath this Power of calling, dissolving, and adjourning the Assembly. Then there is another thing that is to be considered, and that is this; the Defendants they say, We did mistake the Law, it was only a Mistake of the Law, and nothing else; and we did do all to a good Intent, and therefore it must not be a Riot. To give you some Satisfaction in that: First, I must tell you, that a Man must not excuse himself of a Crime, by saying he was ignorant of the Law; for if so be that turn to an Excuse, it is impossible to convict any Man; if so be he must be excused because he did not know the Law, then no Man would be found guilty. But if it appear, that the Defendants did verily believe that the Law was for them, that may be considered in another Place; if so be that they were really ignorant, the Fine, it may be, may be the less, but it won't excuse them from all. But truly, in the next Place, you must consider, whether or no these Gentlemen were ignorant, or whether or no they did not, in a tumultuary way, make a Riot to set up a Magistracy by the Power of the People. For I must tell you, I have not heard by the Defendants, and I will appeal to your Memory, I have not heard, before this Time, that ever the Sheriffs did quarrel with the Mayor, or continue a Common Hall after the Mayor had adjourned it. As for these Gentlemen, they could not be ignorant of it, because the daily Practice before their Eyes was for the Mayor to do it. But this was a new Notion got into their Heads, tho' it was otherwise before, it must be so now; and one said, they would have no Tory Mayor to be Mayor; thus the King should have something to do to support the Mayor by his Power, for aught I know.
 Now, Gentlemen, for the Parties that are accused to be in it, there is T.
 Pilkington, Samuel Shute, Henry Cornish, Lord Grey, Sir Thomas Player, Slingsby Bethel, Francis Jenks, John Deagle, Richard Freeman, Richard Goodenough, Robert Key, John Wickham, Samuel Swinock, and John Jekyl the elder; some Witnesses are to some, and others to others, but some of them have seven or eight Witnesses. There is Pilkington, and Shute, and Cornish, these had a great many Witnesses against them; others have two.
 First, for the Sheriffs, and Mr. Cornish, that had been Sheriff but two Years before, they kept them together after my Lord Mayor was gone; and to see what People they were, No, No God bless the King, no, no, but the Protestant Sheriffs; so that in truth the King must be put out of his Throne, to put these two Sheriffs in it. It is not proved, that either of these did say so, nor the others neither, but they were those that clung to them, and they would help them, and they would set them to rights, and I know not what; and there is no other way to know in this Case what they were, but by these they kept Company with; and it may be, (I would be loth to say ill, it may be) it was in order to dethrone the King as far as they could; for my Lord Mayor, when truly he had adjourn'd the Hall, and was going home, he had like to be trod under Foot himself, his Hat was down, and that was the great Respect they gave to his Majesty's Lieutenant in the City. It is true, it cannot be said who it was, but those were the People that would have No God save the King, and those the Mayor had nothing to do with. The Sheriffs they would go on to poll, and cast up their Books, and would make a Disquisition who had most Hands, and the like; three hours after my Lord Mayor was gone, there were so many that did countenance and foment this sort of Proceedings. There is a shrewd Act that was made since his Majesty came in, that the Villany of some Men might be stopp'd, thirteenth-fourteenth of the King, that for Words in some Cases makes High Treason; it is well his Majesty does not take any severe Prosecution, but I can tell you, I would not have Men presume upon it. It can't be said, You or you said so; yet they kept them together, they were they that kept all this Rabble three Hours together; the Lord Mayor does adjourn the Court, and they must have some time to be gone, and thereupon would persuade us they could not get away in three Hours; they ask for a Poll, and cast up the Scrutiny, and I know not what. There are some, and that is my Lord Grey and Mr. Goodenough, how these two should come there I know not, they had nothing to do here, and therefore I doubt it will be worse upon them than upon the rest, for they had nothing to do here, they must come to set the Citizens together by the Ears. My Lord Grey he says, and hath called some Witnesses, that he had Business with Sir William Gul-fston, about the Sale of Corsfield in Essex; but I do not see any of his Witnesses that do say he came to speak with Sir William Gulston here, he came here to see how the Poll went. But, look you, Gentlemen, he hath given some sort of Evidence, and the Counsel did open it very fairly, but the Evidence did not come fully. If you think he did only come upon real Occasions to Sir William Gulston, only to speak to him about that Business, and concern'd himself no otherwise, then you will do well to find him Not guilty; if you do not, you must find him likewise as well as the rest, for Goodenough he was here to promote the Matter. There is one, and truly he said, that for his part, as the rest would have No God bless the King, so truly he would have No Tory Mayor. And all this Flame, I must tell you, took Fire from this Spark, that the Sheriffs might do what they thought fit about choosing Officers. Gentlemen, it hath been a long Trial, and it may be I have not taken it well; my Memory is bad, and I am but weak: I don't question but your Memories are better than mine; consider your Verdict, and find so many as you shall think fit.

The Jury withdrew, and in some time returned.

Are you all agreed of your Verdict?

Jury. Yes.

Who shall speak for you?

Jury. The Foreman.

Do you find the Defendants Guilty of the Trespass and Riot? &c.

Foreman. We find them all Guilty in that Paper.

This is your Verdict?

Jury. Yes.

T. Pilkington, S. Shute, H. Cornish, Lord Grey, Sir Thomas Player, &
 Bethel, F. Jenks, J. Deagle, R. Freeman, R. Goodenough, R. Key, J.
 Wickham, S. Swinock, and John Jekyl the Elder, are Guilty.

You say they are all Guilty? &c.

Jury. Yes.

On the 15th of June following, Mr. Attorney-General moved in the Court of King's Bench at Westminster, that Judgment might be awarded against them upon their former Conviction, in order to their being fined for the Riot, &c. But the Lord Chief Justice Saunders, and Mr. Justice Raymond, by reason of their Indispositions, being neither of them on the Bench, Mr. Justice Jones, with the Consent of Mr. Attorney General, referred it to the 19th Instant, when Mr. Attorney again moved for Judgment, alledging the Heinousness of the Crime, viz. That it was an open Affront to Justice and Magistracy, and might prove an evil Precedent, if it should escape unpunish'd, which he prayed it might not do; but that since they had been fairly convicted, the Court, in pursuance thereof, would award such Fines as might deter others from the like Attempts, &c. Upon this Motion Mr. Williams, of Counsel for the Defendants, moved, That seeing there had first a Venire been directed to Mr. Pilkington and Mr. Shute, late Sheriffs of London, and afterward an Alias Venire to the present Sheriffs, and yet that in the Information all the Defendants were joined, tho', as he suggested, that at the time of the first Venire some of them were not made known, and that since Mr. Pilkington, Mr. Shute, &c. had appeared upon the first, and many of the others not till the second; he humbly prayed, that an Error might be thereon assigned.

To which the King's Counsel reply'd, That if any Prejudice was sustained in the Methods and Manner of Proceeding to the Trial of the Persons convicted of the Riot and Battery, it was sustained on the Part of the King; and seeing he was willing to dispense with it, that not in the least affected the Defendants, unless in redounding to their Advantage; for that they had a legal Trial, all of them pleading Not guilty, and putting themselves upon their Country, to try the Issue between the King and them, which Country had found them guilty of the Offences before-mentioned, and that now nothing remained but the Judgment of the Court in awarding their Fines, &c.

To this it was alledged, that seeing they were assembled in Guild-hall upon a lawful Occasion, they could not be guilty of a Riot, or the like Misdemeanour, the Legality of their first Assembling not admitting thereof: But this Allegation was over-ruled for these Reasons; That altho' an Assembly be never so legally convened, yet if they tumult or break the Peace, the Legality of the Assembly cannot bear them out: And moreover, that when the Lord Mayor had adjourned the Poll, the Assembly was no longer a lawful Assembly, but ought immediately to have departed to their respective Habitations, which the Defendants not only delayed to do, but in Contempt of Authority continued the Poll, and in a riotous manner assaulted the Person of the Mayor. And that for Inference, If a Congregation be assembled at a Church, to hear Divine Service, which in itself is lawful; yet if Blows happen, or a riotous or disorderly Tumult is made, the Legality of the Meeting shall in no wise excuse the Authors of such Disorders from the Penalties of the Law, &c. of which Opinion were not only the Counsel for the King, but the Judges likewise.

These, and such-like, being the Arguments of this Day, Mr. Justice
 Jones being indisposed, and Mr. Justice Raymond not coming upon the Bench, the passing Sentence was deferred till Friday the 22d Instant, and from thence till Monday the 25th Instant, at which time Mr. Justice Jones being indisposed, it was put off till Tuesday, the 26th of June; when Mr.
 Attorney moved for Judgment, requiring, that the Parties found guilty upon the Information, might be fined; and was seconded by Mr. Serjeant Jefferies; both of them praying, that they might have good Fines set on them, as an Example to deter others from the like Attempts; as also did
 Mr. Jones, of Counsel for the King; when, on the other Side, Sir Francis Warrington, Mr. Williams, Mr. Wallop, Mr. Pollexfen, Mr. Thompson, and Mr. Holt, of Counsel for the Defendants, urged many Arguments for the Extenuation of the Fines, seeing they were at the Mercy of the Court, alledging, That the Defendants, did that of which they were convicted rather out of Ignorance than Malice, or any Design they had to injure or affront the Government; as not being then capable to determine, whether the Right to adjourn the Common Hall lay in the Lord Mayor or Sheriffs.
 But after the Arguments on both Sides had been heard, Mr. Justice Jones proceeded to declare the Heinousness of the Fact, and what an evil Precedent it might prove if it should pass unpunished; and after some Conference with Mr. Justice Withens, he proceeded to award their Fines as followeth:

On Thomas Pilkington, Esq; by reason of his being a Prisoner, only 500*l.* S. Shute, Esq; 1000 Marks, Ford Lord Grey of Werk 1000 Marks, Sir Thomas Player, Kt. 500 Marks, Slingsby Bethel, Esq; 1000 Marks,
 H. Cornish 1000 Marks, Francis Jenks 300 Marks, R. Freeman 300 Marks,
 R. Goodenough 500 Marks. John Deagle 400 Marks, Robert Key 100
 Marks, John Wickham 100 Marks, S. Swinock 500 Marks, and on John Jekyl, senior, 200 Marks; all of them appearing in Court, except the Lord Grey, Mr. Key, and Mr. Goodenough, and according as they appeared to be of Ability, so were their Fines regulated.

This Judgment was afterwards reversed in Parliament, 1 Wil. and Mary; and the Defendants petition'd, that the Prosecutors and Judges might be excepted out of the then intended Act of Grace.

To

To the KING's most Excellent MAJESTY.

The humble Petition of Sir Thomas Pilkington, Knt. Lord Mayor of London, Slingsby Bethel, Esq; Samuel Swinock, John Deagle, Richard Freeman, John Jekyl, John Key, and John Wickham, in behalf of themselves, and of the respective Executors and Administrators of Sir Thomas Player, Kt. deceased, Henry Cornish, Esq; deceased, Samuel Shute, Esq; deceased, and of Francis Jenks, deceased.

SHewETH,

THAT your Petitioners, and the said deceased Persons, were, in the Year 1682, and 1683, by the Contrivance and Confederacy of Sir John Moore, Kt. Sir Dudley North, Kt. Sir Peter Rich, Kt. Sir Edmund Saunders, Kt. late Chief Justice of the King's-Bench, and some others, prosecuted and convicted for a Riot; the Fact objected against them being no other in truth, than the peaceable doing their Duties as Citizens of London and Englishmen, in Election of Sheriffs for the said City and County of Middlesex.

That in the Proceedings upon the said pretended Riot, many notorious Violations of the Law were committed, and your Petitioners denied common Justice by the Combination and Confederacy of the Persons last above-named, and others; inasmuch that your Petitioners, and the said deceased Defendants, were by Judgment of the Court of King's-Bench, in Trinity Term 1683, unreasonably fined 4100*l.* and were, by Imprisonment and otherwise, forced to pay the same; which Sum of 4100*l.* was long since paid into the Exchequer.

That at your Petitioners Prosecution, the said Judgment was reversed, the last Parliament, as erroneous; whereby your Majesty stands by Law liable to make Restitution of the said Sum of 4100*l.* as your Petitioners are advised.

Now forasmuch as your Majesty's generous Undertaking in coming into this Kingdom, tended only for the vindicating and establishing our Religion, Laws and Liberties, and for relieving the Oppressed; and for that it is agreeable to Equity, that such as did the Wrong should make the Restitution: And your Petitioners hoping the Parliament now assembled will take the whole Matter into their Consideration, and pass a Bill for Relief of your Petitioners out of the Confederates Estates, and not leave them to be satisfied by your Majesty:

Your Petitioners therefore humbly beseech your Majesty, That the said Confederates, the Prosecutors of your Petitioners, and the Judges, and Others concerned therein, may be Excepted in the Act of Grace, intended by your Majesty, as to All they did in relation to the Prosecution and Judgment upon the pretended Riot above specified.

And your Petitioners shall always pray, &c.

This Act of Grace is 2 Gul. & Mar. c. 10. but there is no such Exception in it, only of Sir Francis Withens, who was excepted upon other Accounts.

CXVI. *The Trial of Sir PATIENCE WARD, Kt. * at the King's-Bench, for Perjury at the Trial between the Duke of York Plaintiff, and Thomas Pilkington, Esq; Defendant, on an Action † upon the Statute de Scandalis Magnatum. 19 May 1683. Paschæ. 35 Car. II.*

The JURY were,

Sir Thomas Bridges, Kt.
Henry Reynell, Esq;
Thomas Herriott, Esq;
Thomas Airsby, Esq;
Richard Paget, Esq;
John Foster, Esq;

Thomas Eaglesfield, Esq;

AN Information had been preferred by the Attorney General against Sir Patience Ward, for that he had maliciously and wilfully perjured himself in the Court of King's-Bench, upon the Trial between the Duke of York, and Thomas Pilkington, Esq; to which the defendant pleaded Not Guilty, and was tried May 19.

Cryer. Oyez: If any Man will give Evidence on the Behalf of our Sovereign Lord the King, against the Defendant Sir Patience Ward, let him come forth, and he shall be heard.

Mr. Dolben. May it please your Lordship, and you Gentlemen that are sworn, This is an Information of Perjury preferred against Sir Patience Ward. Whereas the most illustrious James Duke of York brought an Action upon the Statute de Scandalis Magnatum against Thomas Pilkington, wherein was declared, that, whereas he was the only Brother to our Sovereign Lord the King, the said Pilkington did speak in the hearing of divers of his Majesty's liege Subjects, these false and Scandalous Words, He hath burnt the City, (meaning the City of London) and is (meaning the said Duke) come to cut our Throats. Gentlemen, the Information sets forth further, that the Defendant Pilkington pleaded he was Not guilty, and that upon the Trial of this Issue, Sir Patience Ward was produced as a Witness upon the Behalf of the Defendant Pilkington; and that the said Sir Patience Ward then and there was duly sworn to speak the Truth, the whole Truth, and nothing but the Truth, in the Premises; and that the said Sir Patience Ward did falsely and corruptly swear and give in Evidence to the Jurors empannelled to try the Issue aforesaid, That there was no mention at the Time of this Discourse aforesaid had between the said Thomas Pilkington and divers of his Majesty's Subjects, concerning the said James Duke of York, that there was no mention of cutting of Throats, and that before Mr. Pilkington (meaning the said Thomas Pilkington) came in, (meaning the Time when the Discourse aforesaid was had) the Discourse about the Duke of York was over; and further, that the Duke of York was not named, (meaning at that Time when the Discourse aforesaid was had) whereas in truth at the same time there was mention of cutting of Throats; and whereas, before Mr. Pilkington came in, the Discourse concerning the Duke of York was not ended; and whereas the said Duke of York was named at the Time when the Discourse aforesaid was had, so that the said Sir Patience Ward in the Case aforesaid did commit wilful and flat Perjury.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, and you Gentlemen of the Jury, Sir Patience Ward the Defendant stands accused for Perjury, committed in a Cause, that was between the Duke of York Plaintiff, and Mr. Pilkington Defendant, and in that Cause Mr. Pilkington was accused to have spoken false Words of the Duke of York, He hath burnt our City, and is come to cut our Throats; to excuse this, Sir Patience Ward he comes, and swears positively, first, That the Duke of York was not mentioned in the Discourse, and therefore those Words could not be meant of the Duke of York; this little Evasion we don't trouble you with; but they related to one Hubert, hanged many Years before; however we will lay that aside, and not trouble you with it. The next direct Matter, which proves it was maliciously done, that he was so ill a Man, and that he had spoken such Words, he swears, That all the Discourse relating to the Duke of York was over before Pilkington came into the Room. This Allegation is directly false, he swears positively, there was no mention made of cutting Throats. Gentlemen, we will first prove unto you the Words; then we will prove unto you that they were false, for Pilkington did speak these Words of the Duke of York. Gentlemen, we will leave it to you whether this Gentleman hath not forsworn himself.

Mr. S. Jeff. If it please your Lordship, and you Gentlemen of the Jury, I must needs say, that this is a Cause of very great Consequence of one Side and t'other; it concerns a very great Person, a Man that has been Lord Mayor of London, and I think is still an Alderman of London; it is in its own Nature of very great Consequence, it is no less than the charging him with the Crime of wilful Perjury; it comes to a publick Audience, as it was very requisite it should. The Crime we charge this Gentleman with was committed in this very Place, in the Face of this Court, and I think to the Admiration and Astonishment of all Persons, that heard this Gentleman swear at that very Time: And therefore, that the thing may be intelligible to these Gentlemen, I shall crave your Lordship's Patience, to give an Account how this Matter was: This Matter was attended with Circumstances of Malice, which shew it was not a Slip in Evidence, but a malicious perjurying himself, Gentlemen; and they are these. Upon his Royal Highness's Return out of Scotland, and coming to Newmarket to his Majesty, a very loyal Gentleman, then Lord Mayor of London, Sir John Moore by Name, with some other Persons, that I have in my Eye, had it in Prospect, as it became them to do, to so great a Prince as he was, to wait upon him. My Lord, there being this Design of the Aldermen and Lord Mayor to attend upon his Royal Highness, to congratulate his Arrival from Scotland; in order thereto, upon a special Court-day, there was an Order made, that the Lord Mayor and Aldermen should attend his Majesty, to desire his Leave, that they might come and attend likewise his Royal Highness, to congratulate his late Arrival. This I think was upon a special Court, before they went to Church, upon a Sunday. In order to this, there happen'd another Meeting of the Lord Mayor and Aldermen, to prosecute this Design of their's, to wait upon his Royal Highness, to congratulate his Arrival; and thereupon an Intimation was given to Sir Patience Ward, with one of the Sheriffs, Pilkington, of their Intentions. At which time, Sir William Hooker, and another worthy Gentleman, Sir Harry Tulse, happening to be together in a Place, which I presume some of you do well know, in the Long Gallery or Anti-chamber to the Council Room, where the Lord Mayor and Aldermen most usually sit, some Discourse arose touching the Occasion of their then Meeting; whereupon a Question was proposed, Whether they should wait upon his Royal Highness or not? One of these Gentlemen was pleased to say, at that Time, that it was too late now the Court had determined it, there being then present this Sir Patience Ward, and these two Gentlemen along with Mr. Pilkington then Sheriff, who, in Objection to the Proposal of waiting upon the Duke of York, (after this Discourse was over, and after they had mentioned the Duke of York's Name to him) said, He hath burnt the City, and is now come to cut the Throats of our Wives and Children. This, Gentlemen, was to deter and fright the others from going, and given as a Reason why he would not go to attend the Duke of York. My Lord, this thing happening thus, an Action was brought for this, and came to a Trial before your Lordship. It is very true, in that Trial we did only produce Sir Harry Tulse, that was present, and he swore to all the Words about burning the City, and likewise to the cutting of Throats. But Sir Patience Ward, without any manner of Hesitation; nay, and not only that, (I appeal to the Memory of those that heard him swear at that Time) but boasting himself, as having as good a Memory as any Man in England, (though he was cautioned at that time to have a Care what he swore) did positively say, The Duke of York was not named after Pilkington was there; that the Discourse of the Duke of York was done before he came in. He doubled his Evidence on purpose to make the thing more plain. But afterwards, when it came a little further to be discoursed of, I appeal to the Memory of the Court, and the Gentlemen at the Bar, whether he did not flutter about in St. James's Park, and out comes Hubert; the Duke of York was not named, but Hubert, Hubert, I clapped my Hand upon his Mouth, says I, you mean Hubert, and so we had got Hubert into the Cause on purpose to shuffle out the Business about the Duke of York. My Lord, after this (I do it to refresh the Memory of these Gentlemen) he was positive, and said, I do positively say, there was not a Word of cutting of Throats, even to the Surprise not only of all the Auditors, but even of all those People that were concerned in Affection for him, as well as they who were engaged in the Cause that they were to support. My Lord, in the first Place, we will give you an Account, that it was a designed and malicious Evidence, necessary for the bringing off that Man, for if there was not a Word spoken of the Duke of York, then our Action was no Action; if there was not a Word spoken of cutting of Throats, then, of consequence, the Verdict must have been against us; and therefore finding there was but one Evidence, which was Sir Harry Tulse against his Evidence, that made him swear so positively; but afterwards your Lordship may please to remember, we called Sir William Hooker a Gentleman of well known integrity to preserve the Credit of so great a Prince, maugre the Malice of all his Enemies. I speak this to shew it is fit, it is necessary to clear this Cause. In the first Place we will prove what is recited in this Record, and give you an Account what this Person did swear at the Time of the Trial. The Matters, that I have opened, I think they will sufficiently satisfy the Court and the Jury, as they did satisfy the Jury before, that what Sir Patience Ward swore then, is false now, and was false then.

* Burnet's History of his Own Times, Vol. I. p. 536.

† In this Action the Duke of York had recovered 100,000*l.* Damages

The Record of Pilkington's Trial read.

Mr. S. Jeff. Read the Information. The Record was Anno prædicto, but when it was recited in the Information, it was Anno ultimo supradicto.

Mr. Ward. It is necessary, when we come by way of Recital of the Record, to recite the very Words in the Record, now in the Record it is Anno prædicto.

Mr. Williams. My Lord, they are reciting the Record.

Sir Edmund L. C. J. They do not recite it in hæc verba, the Substance Saunders is true, the Words are varying from the Record, in the Record they are Anno prædicto, but in the Recital, Anno ultimo supradicto.

Mr. Williams. That is not the same in Substance as to say Anno prædicto, the Year before said, there are many Anni prædicti, and that may refer to any of them; if there had been but one, it might have been so, but when there are several Years mentioned before, Anno ultimo prædicto restrains it to the last Year prædicto.

Mr. Attor. Gen. You may spend as much Time as you will; in the first Record there was but one Year mentioned.

Mr. Recorder. That the City of London was burnt in the Year 66; that was one Year mentioned before, I am sure.

Mr. Attor. Gen. There are several Years mentioned in this Record; there we must say ultimo prædicto.

L. C. J. The Objection is, That whereas it was in the Record Anno prædicto, here you have more, and when you recite Anno prædicto, you add ultimo.

Mr. S. Jeff. We could not do it otherwise, my Lord.

L. C. J. As if a thing could not be well except it were in such precise Words: That was Anno prædicto; this, you say, is Anno ultimo prædicto. Now if the first had been Anno ultimo supradicto, and in this you had said Anno prædicto, when several were mentioned, then it might have been an Objection; now it is not.

Mr. S. Jeff. If Sir Patience had been as exact in swearing, as you are in observing, he had done well enough.

Call Mr. Hatch.

[Who was sworn.]

Mr. Williams. Pray let's know your Name, Sir?

Mr. Hatch. My Name is Hatch.

Mr. S. Jeff. Pray, Mr. Hatch, was you present at the Trial between his Royal Highness and Mr. Pilkington?

Mr. Hatch. Yes, my Lord, I was present.

Mr. S. Jeff. Was Sir Patience Ward produced as a Witness?

Mr. Hatch. Sir Patience Ward was sworn.

Mr. S. Jeff. What did he swear?

Mr. Hatch. He did swear, upon his Oath, That the Sheriffs were not present; that there were some Aldermen at the Table in the matted Gallery in Guild-hall smoking a Pipe of Tobacco, and that they had some Discourse about waiting upon the King and the Duke, pursuant to an Order from my Lord Mayor the Day before, and he said, the Sheriffs were not present.

Mr. S. Jeff. What Sheriffs?

Mr. Hatch. The Sheriff: And he did afterwards say, he did positively affirm, upon his Oath, that Pilkington did not come in till all the Discourse was over about the Duke.

Mr. S. Jeff. What did he say about cutting of Throats?

Mr. Williams. Good Mr. Serjeant.

Mr. Jones. You say he positively said, there was no Discourse about the Duke of York after Pilkington came in.

Mr. Hatch. But then after, my Lord, he said; I do positively affirm, upon my Oath, that Pilkington did not come in till all the Discourse was over concerning the Duke of York. And further, there was Discourse about burning the City by the Papists, faith Pilkington, he hath burnt the City; with that Sir Patience Ward took him by the Shoulder, saying, Explain yourself: What! you mean Hubert, I warrant you? Yes, said he. He being asked the Question, Whether any thing of the Duke was named, he said, No: And further, Whether there was not any mention of cutting of Throats, he did positively say, There was no mention made of cutting of Throats.

Mr. Williams. Mr. Hatch, Where were you placed at the Trial?

Mr. Hatch. At the Trial, Mr. Williams, I stood just there.

Mr. Williams. Had you a Pen and Ink about you?

Mr. Hatch. Yes, Sir, I write Characters.

Mr. Williams. Pray, Sir, did you take the Words in Writing then, or no, in the Court?—Mr. Hatch. I believe I might, I can't positively tell.

Mr. Thompson. Have you your Notes here?—Mr. Hatch. I think I have not.

Mr. Thompson. A Man of a good Memory.

Mr. S. Jeff. We have a matter of some thirty or forty Witnesses; don't make such a Rout.

Mr. Pollexfen. Mr. Hatch, you are repeating what Sir Patience Ward said; Did he, in that Evidence, mention the Duke of York, or not?

Mr. Hatch. He said, there was Discourse about going to the King at St. James's, but not to the Duke. Sir George Jefferies asked him that very Question.

Mr. Pollexfen. Let him now repeat the Evidence which he swore just before.

Mr. S. Jeff. I thought that would not have been such a mighty Question at this Time of Day.

Mr. Williams. I desire he may say again what was sworn by Sir Patience Ward.

Mr. S. Jeff. Begin and repeat, Sir, in what manner he swore, in the very same Form he spake then.

Mr. Hatch. Sir Patience Ward, being sworn and examined upon the Account of Mr. Pilkington, did say, That there were some Aldermen met at the Matted Gallery, the Matted Chamber in Guild-hall, and smoking a Pipe of Tobacco, and there was Discourse of waiting upon the King, and the Duke, pursuant to an Order of the Lord Mayor the Day before; and being asked, Whether Mr. Pilkington was not present; he said, The Sheriffs were not present, but at the Court of taking Licences in Guild-hall, and that there was a Discourse about burning the City by the Papists, and, says Mr. Pilkington, Hath he burnt the City? Hath he burnt the City? Upon that, Sir Patience Ward took him by the Shoulder, and bid him explain himself: You meant Hubert, I warrant you, faith he. Yes, faith Pilkington; and being asked, Whether there was any Discourse about the Duke of York, he said No; but positively said, that there was no mention made of cutting of Throats.

Then Mr. Buxton was sworn.

Mr. Williams. Your Name, Sir.

Mr. Buxton. My Name is Buxton.

Mr. S. Jeff. Mr. Buxton, will you tell my Lord and the Jury, whether you remember what was said by Sir Patience Ward?

Mr. Buxton. My Lord, I was present at his Trial, I happened to return the Jury.

Mr. S. Jeff. Pray will you tell my Lord and the Jury, what was said by Sir Patience Ward?

Mr. Buxton. My Lord, I was present at this Trial, having returned the Jury that was to try that Cause of his Royal Highness: I was above in the Gallery, and I could not so well understand it; but as that Gentleman said before, he was saying, he heard no mention made of cutting of Throats; I can't say the very Words, for I took no Notes.

Mr. Williams. You were in the Gallery then?

Mr. Buxton. Yes, Sir.

Mr. S. Jeff. Pray, Mr. Aston, I think you was present.

Mr. Aston. I was present in the Court that Day, and I do remember, that Sir Patience Ward did swear, I think positively, to the best of my Remembrance, that the Duke of York was not named while Mr. Pilkington was by. That is all I do remember.

Mr. S. Jeff. What do you mean by positively? that he used the Word positively?

Mr. Aston. I think I am pretty sure he did take it positively, or upon his Oath.

Mr. S. Jeff. What he did take positively?

Mr. Aston. That the Duke of York was not named while Mr. Pilkington was by.

Mr. S. Jeff. Do you remember any thing else?

Mr. Aston. As to cutting of Throats, I do not remember it. Several People have asked me, and I gave them that Relation, or else I believe, that had been out of my Mind.

Mr. Wood sworn.

Mr. S. Jeff. Mr. Wood, pray will you give my Lord and the Jury an Account of what you heard Sir Patience Ward swear, in the Cause between his Royal Highness and Mr. Pilkington.

Mr. Wood. My Lord, I was in Court when Sir Patience Ward gave Evidence for Mr. Pilkington, and I heard Sir Patience Ward say, that the Duke of York was not named; and that the Discourse concerning the Duke was over before Mr. Pilkington came in, and that there was no mention of cutting of Throats.

Mr. Jones. Did he swear these Things positively, or as he believed, or heard?

Mr. Wood. To the best of my Remembrance, I think he clapt his Hand upon his Breast, and said positively there was no mention of cutting of Throats.

Mr. Attor. Gen. Do you speak of your best Remembrance as to his Posture, or to the Word?

Mr. S. Jeff. Did he say that Word positively?

Mr. Wood. To the best of my Remembrance, he said positively, or upon my Oath; one of them he did say, I can't tell which.

Mr. S. Jeff. Either he said positively, or upon my Oath. Now, my Lord, if your Lordship pleases, we have given your Lordship and the Jury, a sufficient Account how positive this Gentleman was; but as positive as he was at that Time, we will give you an Account, that he did forswear himself.

Swear Sir James Smith (which was done).

Mr. Attor. Gen. Pray will you tell the Court what you can say?

Sir James Smith. I did little think to be called to give any Evidence upon the Account of Sir Patience Ward, considering the Relation that is between us, as Aldermen. I did not take particular Notice, but I do remember, that he used that kind of Posture as they say, and did positively, or upon his Oath, say, I can't be certain of the Words he used, that Mr. Pilkington was not there while they were discoursing concerning going to St. James's, for he did declare, the Duke of York was not talked of, and I do remember a very good Circumstance that he did swear so, for my Lord Chief Justice Pemberton was pleased to apply himself to Sir Harry Tulse upon it; and I remember Sir Harry Tulse made Answer, I am very sorry to say it, he was there all the while.

Mr.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did you hear any thing about cutting of Throats?

Sir James Smith. I don't remember that.

Sir William Rawsterne sworn.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. What say you, Sir William Rawsterne?

Sir Will. Rawsterne. My Lord, I was here, but I took no particular Notice, but I do remember, that Sir Patience Ward did say, that the Duke was not named when Pilkington was in the Room; I can say nothing else.

Mr. Jones. Did you hear him swear it?

Sir Will. Rawsterne. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Sir James Smith, did he swear it upon his Oath?

Sir Jas. Smith. My Lord, I said before, I cannot say the Word he expressed it in, but either positively, or upon his Oath, he was not there all the while that Discourse was.

Mr. Pollexfen. First he says, the Discourse was of going to St. James's.

Sir Jas. Smith. My Lord, as I said before, he did declare, that the Sheriff that then was, Mr. Pilkington, was not by while they were discoursing of going to St. James's; for he said they did not speak of the Duke of York; but the Discourse was about going to St. James's and that Discourse was at an End before Mr. Pilkington came in; and while they were talking about firing the City, upon that Mr. Pilkington saying, he hath fired the City, he desired him to explain himself, whether he did not mean Hubert.

Sir John Peake sworn.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Sir John Peake, I desire to know what you can say?

Sir John Peake. I was present at the Trial, and Sir Patience, I do remember this, laid his Hand upon his Breast, and either said positively, or upon his Oath, I cannot tell which, one of the two I am certain of, That Mr. Pilkington was not by when the Duke of York was mentioned.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. What about cutting of Throats?

Sir John Peake. There was something said of cutting of Throats, but I am not so positive.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Sir Thomas Field, I think you was one of the Jury that tried the Cause.

Sir Tho. Field. Yes, Sir, I was upon the Jury.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Pray do you remember that Sir Patience Ward was a Witness?

Sir Tho. Field. Yes, I do remember it.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Do you remember what he swore?

Sir Tho. Field. I do remember he swore the Duke was not named; that I can remember.

Mr. Att. Gen. Do you remember any thing else?

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Do you remember any thing about cutting of Throats?

Sir Tho. Field. There was something, I cannot positively say that.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Do you remember what other Words he said?

Sir Tho. Field. He did say likewise, that Mr. Pilkington was not in the Room when any thing was spoken relating to the Duke of York.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Sir Francis Butler, Pray will you please to give my Lord and the Jury an Account whether you were of the Jury, in the Cause between his Royal Highness and Mr. Pilkington?

Sir Fra. Butler. I was of that Jury.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. I think you were the Foreman, Sir.

Sir Fra. Butler. I was the Foreman.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Pray, do you remember Sir Patience Ward was produced as a Witness?

Sir Fra. Butler. He was produced.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Do you remember any thing he swore? and what?

Sir Fra. Butler. The Evidence he swore (which I thought we had reason to observe, for the great Question was, Whether the Words related to the Duke of York, or no?) was, that it did not relate to the Duke of York; and Sir Patience Ward was proving Alderman Pilkington was not in the Room while they discoursed of the Duke of York, and that the Duke of York was not named.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Did he swear that positively?

Sir Fra. Butler. To the best of my Remembrance, positively; I heard nothing of Qualification at all.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. This is a Gentleman of great Worth, and the Foreman of that Jury.

Sir Fra. Butler. We did debate it after we went out of the Court, among ourselves, before we brought in our Verdict, and I remember something more in it; for we should have laid a little more Weight upon his Evidence, if he had not said, that when Sir William Hooker took some Exceptions at his Words, and asked, What do you mean? Sir Patience Ward then laid one Hand upon Alderman Pilkington's Mouth, and, as I remember, t'other upon his Breast, and asked, What do you mean? And t'other answered, Hubert. That made us believe his Evidence was to be laid by.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Now, my Lord, if your Lordship please, I think we have sufficiently satisfied your Lordship, and the Jury, what Words he swore; now we will prove that they were false.

Mr. Att. Gen. Sir Harry Tulse, pray, will you acquaint my Lord, and the Jury—we will ask you first; Sir Harry Tulse, were you present when this Gentleman swore?

Sir H. Tulse. I was present; I sat down on a Fore-seat, and he gave his Evidence behind: I never saw him touch the Book, nor kiss it.

Mr. Att. Gen. What did you hear him say?

Sir H. Tulse. I was a little discomposed at what I had heard him say, and so I am not able to give an Account, and I thought I had some Reason for it.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Why, what Reason? Was it because he swore truly or falsely?

Mr. Thompson. Good Mr. Serjeant, don't lead so.

Mr. Williams. I think it is a Reflection upon an Alderman to be led by any.

Mr. Att. Gen. Mr. Williams, I can shew you, you have led Aldermen, and against Law too.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Will you please to give my Lord an Account whether Mr. Pilkington was by when there was any Discourse about the Duke of York?

Sir H. Tulse. Gentlemen, I don't know whether you expect the Account I formerly gave; that I think I have very perfect in my Memory.

Mr. Att. Gen. Give an Account of that Passage.

Sir H. Tulse. The Evidence I gave was this: Upon the Tenth Day of April, (I will not be positive, I think it was that Day) according to an Order of Court made the Day before, we met at Guild-hall; there was Sir William Hooker, Sir Patience Ward, Sheriff Pilkington, and myself, I remember no more; and Alderman Pilkington said, He burnt our City, and is come, or will come, one of these two Words, to cut our Throats. This was the Evidence that I gave, this was true. I was asked by the Court, what was the preceding Discourse, whether made by Alderman Pilkington, or Sir Patience Ward, I can't be positive; but it was concerning an Order of going to St. James's, or to the Duke of York, one of the two; he did complain of that Order, they were complaining of that Order, and seemed to me as if they would have it re-debated; I made Answer, it was too late, for the Court had agreed it.

Vol. III.

Mr. Att. Gen. Was there any Discourse concerning the Duke of York while Mr. Pilkington was by?

Sir H. Tulse. Alderman Pilkington was by all the while the Discourse was.

Mr. Att. Gen. And was there any Discourse about the Duke of York?

Sir H. Tulse. I did never hear the Duke of York named by Alderman Pilkington at all, as I remember; they complained of the Order made the Day before, that is, concerning going to St. James's, or to the Duke of York, seeming to me as though they would have it re-debated; upon which I made Answer it was too late now, for the Court had agreed it; and then came these Words, He hath burnt our City, and is come, or will come, to cut our Throats.

Mr. Att. Gen. Do you say Pilkington was there when the Discourse was?

Sir H. Tulse. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Sir Harry Tulse, I would ask you a Question, by your Favour, you say there was then mention of cutting of Throats, and you say Mr. Pilkington did not name the Duke of York himself, that you can't say; but you say he was there while there was a Discourse about going to congratulate the Duke.

Sir H. Tulse. I cannot be positive of that; we discoursed about the Order, that was the Order that was made before, to congratulate the Duke of York I cannot say that Alderman Pilkington did ever name the Duke of York, but he was present at that Discourse.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Sir Harry Tulse, you say there was mention made concerning debating the Order, was there mention made of the Order? Did they name what Order they would have re-debated?

Sir H. Tulse. Yes, Sir. The Order was this, an Order made the Day before, that we should go and congratulate the King's safe Return, and with the King's good Leave or Licence, we should then congratulate the Duke of York, that was the subject Matter.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Pilkington was present then?

Sir H. Tulse. He was present there.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. And upon that Discourse, pray, Sir Harry Tulse, did Pilkington say these Words, He hath burnt the City, and is come to cut our Throats?

Sir H. Tulse. No, Sir, that did not immediately follow.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Sir Harry Tulse, what Order did they say they would have re-debated?

Sir H. Tulse. I took it for the Order made the Day before.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did they name the Order?

Sir H. Tulse. I did make mention of the Order, that the Court had agreed it, and it was too late for that.

L. C. J. He says it was too late to be debated or spoke of in Court, I apprehend it so.

Mr. Just. Jones. Was the Duke named, or not?

Sir H. Tulse. At that Time, truly, Sir, I cannot positively say he was named; for the Debate was about the Order made to congratulate the Duke of York, or of going to St. James's; one of them, I am sure, was named, but I cannot be positive.

Jury-man. I desire to know whether this Gentleman was there all the while.

Sir H. Tulse. My Lord, I believe I was there all the Time that there was a Word spoke in this matter, the whole Time.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Sir Harry Tulse, I would ask you another Question: Who did you apprehend to be meant, when Pilkington said, He hath burnt the City? Who do you think he meant by that?

Sir H. Tulse. I will answer any thing that the Court thinks fit I should answer. I humbly pray my Lord and the Court would ask me Questions.

L. C. J. Sir Harry Tulse, it was said the City was burnt. Pray who did you apprehend was meant that burnt the City? Who did they mean?

Sir H. Tulse. Who did I apprehend, my Lord? Truly, my Lord, I think I was the Man that made Answer, that it was Hubert that burnt the City, because he was hang'd for it.

Mr. Just. Withins. Did you apprehend it was Hubert?

Sir H. Tulse. My Lord, there was a Talk of Hubert; and I remember Sir Patience Ward took hold of it, and bid him explain himself; Who do you mean? Hubert? And then there was a little Stop among us; and, as I remember, I made this Answer, I think, that Hubert burnt the City, for that he was hang'd for it.

L. C. J. Hark you; I would ask you one Question, if you please; You heard the Expression of cutting of Throats, he is, or will come to cut our Throats?

Sir H. Tulse. Yes, my Lord.

L. C. J. Pray who did you apprehend should be meant by that? He could not mean Hubert, surely, for that?

Sir H. Tulse. My Lord, I must give my Opinion, that it was the Duke of York.

Mr. Thompson. Did you understand that he meant so at that Time?

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Sir William Hooker, will you give an Account of it?

Sir W. Hooker. My Lord, I will, as near as I can, tell the very Words; I may lose some Words, but of the Matter of Fact, I am confident I shall miss nothing. We met in pursuance to an Order made the Day before; the Order was made to meet on the Monday following, to wait upon the King and the Duke of York. My Lord, accordingly, when I came into the Gallery, I found Sir George Waterman sitting on one Side, and I sat opposite to him, and Sir Henry Tulse at the End of the Table; not long after, came in Sir Patience Ward, my Lord, Sir Patience Ward sat down close by me, and Mr. Pilkington stood at the other End of the Table opposite to me. My Lord, to the best of my Remembrance and Belief, Sir Patience Ward did move, that we might consider this Business of waiting waiting on the Duke, and, my Lord, Answer was made, I do believe by Sir Henry Tulse, that it was now too late, for my Lord Mayor was come, and would be going; upon his saying it was too late in this manner, Pilkington standing at the End of the Table, said these Words; Hath he burnt the City, and is he come to cut our Throats? Upon this, my Lord, I reply'd; Brother Pilkington, said I, thou art infinitely mistaken in this Point; thou mayest as well charge it upon a Child unborn as upon him; for the Duke of York was as careful in the Fire to preserve the City at the same time, in a Yard in Coleman-street, as any who was by was; though the Ashes came upon our Heads; and I never knew a Man look more carefully than he did at the same Time. This, my Lord, is the Substance, but I can't say that Mr. Pilkington made a Reply either one Way or other, but I think there was something of Hubert spoke besides. Then Sir George Waterman went away, and I went away afterwards.

Mr. Att. Gen. So that you are positive that Pilkington did say, he is come to cut our Throats?

Sir W. Hooker. Hath he burnt the City? And is he come to cut our Throats?

Mr. Serj. Jeff. And did you immediately tell him this of the Duke of York?—Sir W. Hooker. Immediately.

Mr. Sol. Gen. I think you say it was pursuant to an Order about waiting on the Duke of York?

Mr. Att. Gen. Did you name the Duke of York?

Sir W. Hooker. I did name the Duke of York to Pilkington, after these Words were spoke.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Pilkington was there then before the Discourse of the Duke of York. Was Sir Patience Ward there while the Discourse was, concerning cutting of Throats?

Sir W. Hooker. I am not able to swear whether Sir Patience Ward did hear it or no; undoubtedly he was there.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Sir William, do you think that Sir Patience Ward did wink when he stopt his Mouth, or no?

Sir W. Hooker. Truly I did not see him stop his Mouth.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Sir William, was it plain to you that he meant the Duke of York?

Sir W. Hooker. I am not able to know other Men's Thoughts; but certainly nothing could appear more plain.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Was the Subject-matter of Discourse concerning the Duke of York?

Sir W. Hooker. About that, and nothing else.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. He named the Duke of York, did he?

Sir W. Hooker. He did not name the Duke of York; I don't say that.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. But you named him.—Sir W. Hooker. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Att. Gen. Was that all you discours'd of?

Sir W. Hooker. This is all.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Here is the Order.

Mr. Williams. We agree the Order.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. For the present we will rest here, and see what Account they will give.

Mr. Recorder. May it please your Lordship, and you Gentlemen of the Jury; I am of Counsel for Sir Patience Ward, the Defendant. My Lord, as the Counsel for the King say they will rest it here, so if we should rest here too, I think there is nothing proved that sticks upon us. My Lord, I observe first, that of all their Witnesses they produce concerning the Words in Court, there is not one of them all, but the first, pretends to be a Penman, and he says he believes he did write, he can't tell whether he writ or no, and he can't tell whether he hath his Notes about him, and this is all we can have of him. And the Truth is, they vary so much among themselves, that that is enough to make any one wonder, on the whole speaking of the Words. And we see these worthy Aldermen are very cautious; they did expect to be call'd upon their Oaths, I did take particular Notice of it. The Truth is, my Lord, for this Matter, it is certainly as great and heinous a Crime as any can be, and I believe these Gentlemen will think, that in this Case, they should have no less Evidence to convict this Gentleman of this foul Crime of Perjury, than to convict him of any Crime that concerns his Life. The Truth of it is, if such a foul Disreputation and Scandal should stick, yet the Jury must have plain Proof. If there were a rash Word, if there were a Mistake in a Person's Remembrance, it is not every Slip that will criminate a Man of Perjury, it must be a wilful and corrupt forswearing a Man's self against his own Knowledge, and nothing less than that is sufficient. My Lord, it is agreed on all Hands, the Record shews it, that the Duke hath recovered a Verdict. The Cause went for him. If the Duke would have had a Verdict, he hath it; if he would have had more Damages, for aught I know he might; he hath more than an 100,000*l.* for he hath all Coists, to the utmost Farthing. My Lord, in Cases of this Nature, a Man's Words must be taken together. Your Lordship will acquaint the Jury, that if there be any thing in any Part of his Evidence, that does explain, that does limit, that does qualify it, the whole Discourse must be taken as one entire Evidence, and that he shall have the Advantage of it in every Part. My Lord, the Use I would make of this is to this Purpose, that whatever these Witnesses fix upon him, they do it by culling and picking out Pieces of Words; they don't pretend upon their Memory, much less upon Writing, that they are able to repeat the whole Evidence. Your Lordship does very well remember the Lady Carr's Case, a greater and plainer Instance than this, if it were proved as it was pretended, in Chancery; she swears she never received Money of such a Man, and she made a second Answer, and there she says she received no Money after such a time, and it was resolved, that that should be taken together, and that that was no Perjury. My Lord, we shall insist upon the two Things: First of all, that the Words were not spoken as they are laid, that they were not sworn by Sir Patience Ward as they are laid and charged in the Information, for they are charged there positively and directly; but we say they were spoken with all the Caution that any Man can speak them with, as he believed, and to the best of his Memory, and as he apprehended; and this, I say, circumscribed with great Caution and great Tendernefs. If they had been spoken as they are laid, yet this could not be Perjury; that is the second Thing. So that if it fall out that he was mistaken in this, your Lordship will acquaint the Jury, that a rash Oath is not Perjury, if it were so. My Lord, as to the latter Part, Sir Harry Tulse does go a great way; for he says, that he can't take upon him to say that Sir Patience Ward ever saw Mr. Pilkington; if he did never see Mr. Pilkington, how can he be charged with Perjury then, for saying he was not there? Under Favour, if he did not see him there, he must swear according to his Senses, that he was not there, and you cannot charge Perjury upon that. It demonstrates the Uncertainty of these Words, that when they come to lay the Declaration, they are fain to lay these Words four several Ways, as they do. And yet these two worthy Aldermen say, they took down the Words that very Day. If these Words were so uncertain then, though they were writ down, what should make them otherwise now?

Mr. Att. Gen. There hath not been such a Word said yet.

Mr. Recorder. We will prove it, Sir. As to the third Point, we say this: It is charged there was no cutting of Throats, no mention of cutting of Throats; as to that, my Lord, I take it from one of their Witnesses Mouths, that is, Mr. Buxton; he says, that Sir Patience Ward swore, that he heard no mention of cutting of Throats; under Favour, Sir, to say that there was no mention of cutting of Throats, that is positive, that there was no such thing spoken; but their own Witness says, that there was no such thing heard. Can there be a greater Difference than for a Man to say, there was no such Word spoken, and to say, there was no such Word heard by me? This of cutting of Throats, if it were spoken at all, tho' I believe it was; for I have that good Opinion of these worthy Aldermen, I mean Sir William Hooker and Sir Henry Tulse, that I presume there was something about cutting of Throats; but I answer, that Sir Patience Ward might not hear it. And I think they have given a very good Ground for it: Says Sir Harry Tulse, Is he, or will he, come to cut our Throats? Whether it were is, or whether it were will, that he cannot tell. Sir William Hooker, says he, is come to cut our Throats: One speaks affirmatively, the other interrogatively. Sir Henry Tulse says it was our Throats; says Sir William Hooker, the Throats of our Wives and Children. Do not these two Aldermen differ as much between themselves, as either or both of them do with Sir Patience Ward, when Sir Harry Tulse shall say, there were no Wives and Children mentioned? It is no Reflection at all, and I hope there will be no Cause to reflect upon the other Alderman. The next Point is, that there was a Discourse concerning the Duke of York, and that it was before Mr. Pilkington came in. Here the Witnesses vary extremely; one says before he came in; another says, before he came to the Table; another says, while he was in the Room; all these Varieties we find in the Witnesses that swear the Words out of Sir Patience Ward's Mouth; and certainly Sir Patience Ward would never say these Words; it is impossible to say the Discourse concerning the Duke was ended, when in the very next Words he says, the Duke was not named at all: For, my Lord, Sir Henry Tulse says, he was never named. But, my Lord, besides this, if I say he was not there in the Sight and View of Sir Patience Ward, he is not guilty, be it true or false, that he was there before the Discourse ended; for it is a long Room, and no Man can say but a Man might be behind Sir Patience Ward as he sat at the Table. The second Thing, my Lord, is this, that the Duke was not named; that he is charged to have sworn. My Lord, the Evidence that he delivered was, that the Duke was not named in his Hearing. Now Sir Harry Tulse says the very same that Sir Patience Ward did, that there was a Discourse about an Order, he says, but nobody named the Duke, and Sir William Hooker says, the Duke was not named.

Mr. Just. Withins. He says he cannot say he was named.

Mr. Recorder. 'Till after the Words spoken; and, my Lord, it was so doubtful, that it seems there was need of Explication; for the Words, (under Favour) as proved, do not relate to cutting of Throats, but to the burning of the City; and what Sir William Hooker says afterwards, makes it more plain. If we prove these Things, that Sir Patience Ward carried himself thus, if he expressed himself with so much Caution, under Favour, that doth clearly avoid this Charge in the Information. But, my Lord, if there were Perjury, it was committed at the Trial of Mr. Pilkington, and at that Trial when it was committed, it was best understood; for here is no new Evidence as to the Words spoken in the Gallery; therefore, under Favour, the Perjury was as observable then, and more, because it was fresh then. Now it is said, that it was with great Astonishment; we shall give in Evidence, that there was no such Apprehension that the Court, that the Counsel, that every body did apprehend it as delivered with that Caution as I have opened it to your Lordship: First, Sir George Jefferies, in the very Conclusion, asked him, if there were nothing spoke of the Duke while Mr. Pilkington was by. No, saith he, not to the best of my Memory, saith Sir Patience Ward. Saith Sir George Jefferies, by Reply, Your Invention is better than your Memory. Surely that were the most impertinent Thing in the World, if it had been otherwise. And every body knows Sir George Jefferies is a Man that would not have said such a Thing, if he had not wholly referr'd to his Memory, and given him an Occasion for that Reply. And Mr. Solicitor, he says these Words, in repeating the Evidence to the Jury: Sir Patience Ward goes a great way to confirm that of the other Aldermen, and that shews, that they did observe it far enough from Perjury; and my Lord Chief Justice, my Lord, when he came to direct the Jury, he says, that Sir Patience Ward had said, that, as he conceived, there was no mention of cutting of Throats, and so on; and says he, it is easy to forget such Circumstances. If, in the Judgment of my Lord Chief Justice, it were an easy thing to forget, can it be wilful Perjury in any Man to testify that which was spoken as he conceiv'd? And truly, my Lord, it is the more for that my Lord Chief Justice was upon his Oath as well as the Witnesses: And your Lordships, that sat with him, would have rectified my Lord Chief Justice, if he had misapprehended him: And the Jury did apprehend it so, and looked upon Sir Patience Ward's Evidence as a Confirmation. My Lord, all these things are negative, and they do refer to the Memory, and that my Lord Chief Justice said a Man may easily forget, and that is enough to excuse him. Besides, my Lord, this was given in Evidence seven or eight Months after the Time that the Words were spoken; and if any Man were to repeat what was said at this Bar, no doubt but in seven or eight Months they would differ more than Sir Patience Ward did from these Gentlemen. Besides, my Lord, he is a Man of good Reputation and Credit, he hath born great Offices in the City, Mayor and Sheriff of London.

and this a Crime for mean Persons, and we think much less Evidence than this will satisfy your Lordship. We will prove what was said at the Trial, not by the imperfect Memories of People that did not write, or cannot tell whether they writ or not; but by some that did take very exact Notes, and especially by one that wrote the whole.

Mr. Williams. My Lord, the Question is, what was spoken by Sir Patience Ward. My Lord, if Sir Patience Ward did not swear as they have said in the Information, Sir Patience Ward is not guilty. They have said the Information thus: That as to the cutting of Throats it was sworn positively by Sir Patience Ward; but if Sir Patience Ward did only speak by Hearsay, as he heard, that there was no mention of cutting of Throats in his hearing, then we are not guilty. My Lord, how far then the Evidence doth touch us in this Matter, how far they have proved us guilty, is to be considered. I do not find, that any one Witness in this Trial says, that Sir Patience Ward did swear positively, that there was no mention of cutting of Throats. Every Man that speaks, speaks to the best of his Memory, and to the best of his Knowledge, and no otherwise; and I will appeal to your Lordship, upon what every Witness hath said, whether any Witness can be convicted of Perjury; for every Man hath appealed to his Memory. Observe every Witness, and not any of them do agree. The two Aldermen that were then sworn, one of them Sir Harry Tulse, tell you of the Discourse concerning coming to burn the City, and cutting of Throats: as I take it, Sir Harry Tulse said it by way of Question, Is he come, is he come to cut our Throats? Sir William Hooker tells it positively, he is come, he is come to cut our Throats. If Gentlemen do vary, as these two Witnesses, and have several Apprehensions of the same thing, it ought to have no Influence upon this. In this Case, we are here for wilful Perjury. If it be a Mistake of the Memory, that will never come up to Perjury. We will make it out, that it was spoken with great Caution and Restriction. And then for the other of the two Assignments, if this be true, that there was no Discourse of the Duke of York, then the second will naturally fall. The first thing is this, that he should swear there was no Discourse of the Duke of York; if this be true, that there was no Discourse of the Duke of York, then the second will fall. If the Discourse of the Duke of York was done before Mr. Pilkington came into the Room, if there were no Discourse of the Duke of York, it is impossible that should be the Meaning. And here I must observe, Sir Harry Tulse is a Thousand Witnesses in this Case; he tells you expressly, that there was no Discourse of the Duke of York, he hath told you plainly there was no Discourse of the Duke of York, nor any Discourse of the Duke's Name; and what says Sir Harry Tulse? He says very plainly, there was a Discourse of an Order made the Day before. We allow the Duke is mention'd in that Order, but the Question is, whether there was mention of the Duke's Name at this Time. If you believe Sir Harry Tulse, there was no mention of the Duke's Name.

Mr. Just. Jones. He did not remember that there was. He did not remember that the Duke of York was named.

Sir Fra. Winn. By any body.

Mr. Just. Jones. He does not say, that the Duke was not named.

Mr. Williams. Sir Harry Tulse is as much obliged to remember in this Case as any Man here. This will be a mighty Evidence to justify my Client, then the Perjury will certainly fall upon these, but we will clear this too. In this Matter Sir Patience Ward was a most cautious Evidence, so is he, he did not say positively, that there was no mention of the Duke's Name, but he says, to the best of his Remembrance. So that there is nothing proved against us. We will call Mr. Blaney, Mr. Blaney is a thousand Men in this Case.

Sir Geo. Jeff. Is he so?

Mr. Williams. He takes Notes exactly. We will tell you what was sworn by Sir Patience Ward.

Sir Geo. Jeff. I have known him out in a Verdict.

Mr. Pollexfen. That the Duke of York's Name was named in the Discourse is not proved; nobody says it was before the Words spoken.

Mr. Just. Jones. After the Words spoken; it was then he tells you; but it was not before the Time of the Discourse.

Mr. Pollexfen. There was a Discourse of going to St. James's, and upon this Discourse these Words were spoken, that Pilkington did speak; but the naming the Duke was after the speaking of the Words in the Declaration; therefore, there being nobody that does prove, that the Duke was named in any Discourse preceding the Words spoken by Pilkington, I think it is no Evidence at all.

L. C. J. You make things so intricate, that no Man shall be able to understand what another says, but must take it as you would have it. When it was said he had burnt the City, well, what says t'other? Sir William Hooker I think, makes Answer, says he, the Duke is as innocent as a Child, and he was one that endeavoured to save it. Must not we understand, now, that this was a Discourse of the Duke all this while?

Mr. Pollexfen. My Lord, the Question is, whether there were any such Discourse preceding the Words, or any thing in Question, but what happened after the Words?

Sir Geo. Treby. If the Duke were not named before the Words, can the Name of the Duke refer to the expounding of them?

Sir Geo. Jeff. No; but Hubert, ten Years after he was hang'd.

Sir Fra. Winn. My Lord, I see we are in Question for corrupt and wilful Perjury.

L. C. J. You had best call your Witnesses; for aught appears you are so yet.

Sir Fra. Winn. We will call our Witnesses, and shew what he did swear.—Mr. Blaney, will you acquaint my Lord and the Jury, whether you were by at that Trial; and give an Account of what you know Sir Patience Ward did swear, and whether you took any Notes?

Mr. Blaney. I was present at the Trial between his Royal Highness and Mr. Pilkington; I did sit upon one of those Stools there, and I did take Notes, to the best of my Skill.

Sir Geo. Jeff. Have you your Notes?—Mr. Blaney. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Williams. First of all, acquaint my Lord and the Jury, what was sworn by Sir Patience Ward.

Mr. Blaney. Having received a Subpœna from Sir Patience Ward about this Matter, I looked over my Notes, and turned down the Leaves in several Places.

Mr. Williams. Tell what Sir Patience Ward swore concerning cutting of Throats; and what that was; Recollect yourself about what was sworn by Sir Patience Ward concerning cutting of Throats.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray, Sir, don't look upon your Notes.

Sir Fra. Winn. Your Witness don't remember whether he writ Notes or no.

Mr. Blaney. I have read my Notes To-day, again, and looked upon them; I do find it is thus, and I do really believe to be true; for I don't know I never altered any Man's Evidence, either in Substance or Form. He did then say, Upon my Oath, if it were the last Word I was to speak, I did not hear one Word of cutting Throats.

Mr. Williams. Pray, Sir, say as he said.

Mr. Blaney. These were the Words: Upon the Oath I have taken, if were the last Word I was to speak, I did not hear one Word of cutting of Throats. Sir Fra. Winn. Was it writ so in your Notes at that Time.

Mr. Blaney. It is so in my Notes.

Sir Fra. Winn. Are your Notes alter'd since?—Mr. Blaney. No, Sir.

Sir Fra. Winn. There was no Thought of Perjury then?

Sir Geo. Jeff. Not by him, but by others.

Mr. Williams. Are these the Notes that were then taken?

Mr. Blaney. These are the Notes that were then taken.

Sir Fra. Winn. I ask you this; did you take them as he said them?

Mr. Blaney. I did, to the best of my Skill, neither added nor diminished; Sir Patience in the Beginning of his Evidence did say these Words: That there was nothing mentioned of the Duke, but of St. James's, in his Hearing.

Sir Fra. Winn. Are you sure the Words are there?

Mr. Blaney. They are here. Any Man that could read my Short-hand may see it.

Sir Fra. Winn. Were the Words then taken?

Mr. Blaney. They were then taken.

Sir Fra. Winn. Are they altered since?—Mr. Blaney. They are not, Sir.

Sir Fra. Winn. How are the Words?

Mr. Blaney. That there was nothing mentioned of the Duke's Name, but of St. James's in his Hearing.

Mr. Williams. If this be true, it shuts out the second Assignment; but however we will ask him concerning the other Assignment, whether there was any Discourse concerning the Duke after Pilkington came in.

Mr. Blaney. If you please, Mr. S. Jefferies was pleased to press it upon Sir Patience Ward. Sir, you were pleased to ask the Question, Was all the Discourse over concerning going to St. James's, or the Duke of York, before Mr. Pilkington came in? Was it all over before Mr. Pilkington came in? And Mr. S. Jefferies then said—

Sir Geo. Jeff. What did he answer to my Question? Was there nothing said of it while he was by?

Mr. Blaney. Sir Patience Ward said, Not one Syllable of it to my Memory; whereupon Sir George Jefferies said, Your Invention is better than your Memory. And he reply'd, my Lord, I thank God, I have a good Memory, though perhaps that Gentleman hath not.

Mr. Williams. Was this written down in your Book?

Mr. Blaney. It was then taken by me in Writing, in my Book.

Mr. Williams. Is any thing altered?—Mr. Blaney. Not one Word.

Mr. Williams. Did you write them sitting there as they were spoken?

Mr. Blaney. Just as he said them: There I sat where Mr. Owen sits now.

Mr. Att. Gen. Do you swear you remember any Part of it?

Mr. Blaney. Sir, this I do remember, as well as I can remember any thing in the World.

Mr. Att. Gen. Blaney, tell me positively what he said.

Mr. Blaney. He said, Not one Syllable of it to my Memory; I do remember it.

Mr. Att. Gen. Upon what Question?

Mr. Blaney. Sir, of the Duke's being not named, but St. James's, I do remember likewise; but I can't well say any thing of the Business of cutting of Throats; I find it in my Book unaltered, I do not know that I am mistaken.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Hark you, Mr. Blaney; I know his Notes have been mistaken sometimes; I remember once upon Raree-show Business, they were mistaken. Upon your Oath, Sir, did you hear Sir Patience Ward speak at that Time any Words concerning a Law-suit? Look upon your Notes.

Mr. Blaney. Sir, I will so.

Mr. Pollexfen. What have we to do with Raree-show? Are we trying that?

Mr. Just. Withins. Gentlemen, don't be angry, let the Cause be tried fairly.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. I may ask a Question, I hope. I ask a fair Question, I would fain meet with that among his Characters.

Mr. Blaney. Sir, I would not have looked it over, if I had met with any such thing in my Notes.

Mr. Att. Gen. Can you swear any thing positively upon your Notes?

Mr. Serj. Jeff. It is some Discourse near the Question.

Mr. Blaney. Then, Sir, indeed it is not in my Notes.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Did Sir Patience Ward use the Word positively at any time in your Notes; and tell us to what?

Mr. Att. Gen. Whether he was positive to any one Thing?

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Did he swear positively to any one Thing? And tell us to what? I desire to be satisfied by Mr. Blaney's Notes. Some Men can take Notes on the one Side, and forget Things on the other.

Mr. Williams. Come, Mr. Beaver.

Mr. Blaney. I don't see the Word positive.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. No, not at all.

Mr. Blaney. I don't pretend to say I have written every Word.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. But you do pretend to write more than he said.

Mr. Williams. What he writ is true.

Sir Fra. Winn. He does not undertake to say he writ every Word that pass'd, but whether or no he writ any Word that was not said. Is all that you writ true?

Mr. Blaney. I verily believe it is true.

L. C. J. Is that any manner of Satisfaction when he hath not taken all that was said, and so spoiled the Sense, by leaving out some of the Words?

Mr. Just. Withins. How is it possible for a Man to be a good Witness, that comes and swears in one Part, I know nothing of any such Words; and at another Time says he does not write all in his Notes?

Sir

Sir G. Treby. Let that pass for a Rule, and then no Witness they produce can be believed.

Sir Fr. Winn. They have given Evidence by Witnesses visu voce, without Notes, and make an Objection, because he does not remember every Passage; therefore he signifies nothing. We urge it in point of Evidence, my Lord; he is known to be a Man very dexterous in writing Short-hand; in a material Thing he swears to the best of his Remembrance. He took them from the Mouth of the Person that swore at that Time. My Lord, we asked him whether he writ any thing that was not said. We leave it in point of Evidence, my Lord, to encounter theirs.

Mr. Williams. We would give our Evidence in, if they would give us Leave.---Richard Beaver, Were you by, at Mr. Pilkington's Trial?

Mr. Beaver. My Lord, I was by all the while.

Mr. Just. Jones. Did you take Notes?

Mr. Williams. Were you present at the Trial of Mr. Pilkington?

Mr. Beaver. I was present.

Mr. Williams. Can you remember what was sworn by Sir Patience Ward upon that Trial?---Mr. Beaver. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Williams. Can you remember what Sir Patience Ward swore concerning cutting of Throats?

Mr. Beaver. My Lord, he did say, That to his best Remembrance the Discourse was over before Pilkington came into the Room. To the best of my Remembrance, my Lord, that Discourse concerning the Duke was over before Pilkington came into the Room.

Mr. Williams. How did he express it? Pray swear what Sir Patience Ward spake; tell how he expressed himself.

Mr. Beaver. Sir Patience Ward did say, to the best of his Remembrance, That the Discourse concerning his Highness the Duke of York was over before Sheriff Pilkington came into the Room, where they were smoking Tobacco.

Mr. Williams. He said these Words to the best of his Remembrance?

Mr. Beaver. He did so. Upon which Sir George Jefferies said again to him, that he had a good Memory, and he said he had, and my Lord Chief Justice said, You may thank God you have a good Memory; my Lord Chief Justice himself said so.

Mr. Williams. What did he say?

Mr. Beaver. To the best of his Knowledge, he did not hear any thing of cutting of Throats.

Sir Fr. Winn. Can you remember the Way of his Expression?

Mr. Beaver. The Way of his Expression was, as I remember, to the best of my Remembrance, he did strike his Hand upon his Breast, and said, When Sheriff Pilkington came in, he struck his Hand upon his Breast, and asked him if he meant Hubert, so he said, upon his Salvation, or to the best of his Knowledge.

Sir Fr. Winn. What did he say?---Mr. Beaver. He said-----

Sir Fr. Winn. What did he say concerning cutting of Throats?

Mr. Beaver. He said he did not hear any thing, as he believed.

Mr. Just. Jones. Of what?---Mr. Beaver. Of cutting of Throats.

Mr. Just. Jones. Is that all he said, he did not hear any thing of cutting of Throats?

L. C. J. You Friend; you said that Sir Patience Ward said he did not remember any thing of cutting of Throats; did you say so?

Mr. Beaver. Yes, my Lord.

L. C. J. And thereupon you say, My Lord Chief Justice did commend his Memory for it; pray thee, how came he to be praised for such a great Memory, when he said he did not remember any thing? Thou hast not laid the Plot well together.

Mr. Just. Withens. Was he commended because he said he did not remember?

Mr. Just. Jones. Where did you stand?

Mr. Beaver. I stood over-against Sir Patience Ward.

Mr. Just. Jones. Did you hear well?

Mr. Beaver. Yes, my Lord, I heard every Word. He said he got Honour by speaking Words against the Duke of York.

Mr. Just. Jones. What is that?

Mr. Beaver. That Pilkington had got Honour by speaking against his Highness the Duke of York.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. In the mean time look that Part out in your Notes, that he speaks of. Now I would ask you a Question, Friend.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray will you recollect yourself? Did you hear Sir Patience Ward say, to the best of his Remembrance, the Discourse concerning the Duke of York was ended before Pilkington came in? Pray what did he say, touching the Discourse of the Duke of York?

Mr. Beaver. Sir, he said to his best Remembrance, that Discourse was over.

Mr. Att. Gen. What Discourse?

Mr. Beaver. Concerning his Highness, that it was over.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Mr. Beaver, I would ask you a Question, because I know you will remember it presently. Do you remember any thing Sir Patience Ward swore, that he never had a Law-suit in his Life? Do you remember any thing of that?

Mr. Beaver. If you please, Sir, there was something said of that.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Then look that in your Notes too, Mr. Blaney---Pray, upon your Oath, do you remember he used the Word Positively?

Mr. Beaver. Nothing at all, positively.

L. C. J. Upon my Word your Memory must be commended.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Mr. Beaver, where do you live, Mr. Beaver?

Mr. Beaver. I live, Sir! You know well enough, Sir: What would you say to me?

Mr. Serj. Jeff. I only desire to know where you live, Sir.

Mr. Beaver. I live in Seaper-Lane, Sir.

Mr. Williams. He is an honest Man. He was commended when he was Church-warden.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Many a wife Man hath been in that Employ.

Mr. Williams. Mr. Crisp, you were present at the Trial between his Royal Highness and Mr. Pilkington.

Mr. Crisp. My Lord, I was present here.

Mr. Williams. Can you remember, Sir, what was sworn by Sir Patience Ward concerning cutting of Throats, and how he swore it?

Mr. Crisp. I cannot give any perfect Account: I was here, and a great many Expressions I did hear, a great many I did not hear. I heard Sir Henry Tulse give some Account, and Sir William Hooker, that Mr. Pilkington should say such Words about the Duke's being come---

Mr. Just. Withens. Go on, pray, Gentlemen.

Mr. Williams. Can you say any thing of what Sir Patience Ward swore about cutting of Throats?

Mr. Crisp. Sir Patience Ward was speaking whether or no such Words were spoken that were swore; he did say there was something said, that he was come to burn the City, that he did confess: but as to cutting of Throats, there was not a Word spoken in my Hearing, or to the best of my Remembrance, or something to that Purpose, I cannot be positive.

Mr. Williams. Can you be positive in this, Sir, that he said in his Hearing, or I cannot be positive?---Mr. Crisp. I took it in that Way, Sir.

Mr. Williams. Pray, Mr. Crisp, I would ask you this? Do you remember any thing he said, whether Mr. Pilkington was in the Room, when there was any Discourse of his Royal Highness, or the Duke of York?

Mr. Crisp. To the best of my Memory, he spake it thus: We were discoursing together about going to wait on his Majesty, and then to go to his Royal Highness; and we entered into some other Discourse; and when we were discoursing of that, Mr. Pilkington came to the Table to us: It was concerning the Work of the Day; and when we were about that Discourse, Mr. Pilkington came to us to the Table. Whether he said he was not in the Room, or came into the Room then, I can't tell; but I remember he said he came to the Table to us when we were about this Discourse.

Sir Fr. Winn. Do you remember any thing that my Lord Chief Justice said to Sir Patience Ward's Evidence?

Mr. Crisp. That I remember more than any other Particular, because Sir George Jefferies had made some Reflection upon Sir Patience Ward, and my Lord said, Sir Patience, that is usual with Counsel to speak so to Evidence; but do you go on with your Evidence for all that, says my Lord Chief Justice; Sir Patience, recollect yourself; it is supposed by your Evidence, that you leave out those Words, either about the Duke of York's being named, or about cutting of Throats; therefore, Sir Patience, recollect yourself. Says Sir Patience, I do speak it to the best of my Memory. Says Sir George Jefferies, upon that or some other Time, Your Invention is better than your Memory, which I took more Notice of than other Things.

Sir Fr. Winn. When my Lord Chief Justice bade him recollect himself, how did he express himself? Did he say, to the best of his Memory?

Mr. Crisp. That he did, positively.

Mr. Williams. Mr. Crisp, recollect yourself, as near as may be: When my Lord Chief Justice made that Answer, either to those Words of cutting of Throats, or the Duke of York's being mentioned; was it in the Conclusion of his Evidence?

Mr. Crisp. It was towards the Conclusion; for I went away, being very much sweltered.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Mr. Crisp, did you hear Sir Patience Ward say, in his Evidence, that he never had any Suit?

Mr. Crisp. He did speak something when you did reflect upon him, I don't remember that ever I had any thing to do with Courts; my Business is at Home.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. A further Question I ask.---Mr. Crisp, can you tell, upon your Oath, whether Sir Patience Ward swore any thing positively?

Mr. Crisp. I don't know, Sir; I took no Notes at all; I cannot swear, or declare those Words were not spoken; but still it was in his Hearing, or the best of his Memory.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Do you remember he ever used the Word positively, or was positive in any Part of that Trial?

Mr. Crisp. I do remember he spoke it very positively; but whether he said the Word positive, I can't say: But still it was with this Reservation.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Hark you, Mr. Crisp, I will ask you one Thing more. Do you take it upon your Oath positively, that he used either to the best of his Memory, or the best of his Belief, in any thing he said?

Mr. Crisp. In his Answer to my Lord Chief Justice he did.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. In any other Part, will you take it upon your Oath, positively, that he ever used the best of his Remembrance, or the best of his Belief?

Mr. Crisp. I said before, I did not fix it in my Memory.

Sir Fr. Winn. My Lord, he thinks it convenient to say to the best of his Memory too---Call Mr. Wright.

Here the King's Counsel attempted to remark on the Evidence.

Mr. Williams. Pray, my Lord, when we have given all our Evidence intire, if they have any Observation, we will submit to it; but to remark upon every Witness, would occasion too many Interruptions. We would give our Evidence intire.

L. C. J. You will agree, that they may ask a Question when you have done with them?

Mr. Holt (to Mr. Wright.) Was you present at the Trial between his Royal Highness and Mr. Pilkington?

Mr. Wright. Yes, Sir; and Sir Patience Ward, I remember, was asked this Question, Whether he heard any Words concerning killing, or cutting of Throats; and Sir Patience Ward said, For killing I heard that Discourse, but for cutting of Throats, he never mentioned.

Mr. Williams. You are a Gentleman that exercise your Memory; pray, Sir, did he say any thing of cutting of Throats?

Mr. Wright. It was to his Hearing, or the best of his Remembrance; he did it very cautiously.

Mr. Williams. Was it as he believed or remembered, Mr. Wright? Did he say positively there was no Discourse of cutting of Throats, positively, or with any Reference to his Hearing?

Mr. Wright. As far as I can remember, thus he said, There was a Discourse concerning firing the City, but not concerning cutting of Throats.

Mr. Williams. Did he say that positively, or to the best of his Understanding?

Mr. Wright. The Occasion of it was this, Sir, whether Mr. Pilkington was present when the Discourse was about waiting on his Majesty, to congratulate his coming to Town from Newmarket, and his Royal Highness; Sir Patience Ward did believe he was not then present when the Discourse was; he was in Guild-hall, with the Lord Mayor, licensing of Ale-houses.

Sir Fr. Winn. When he did mention that about cutting of Throats, how did he express himself?

Mr. Wright. I believe, or do think, there was no such Word spoken.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. I would ask your Parson one Question.

Mr. Wright. What you please, Sir George.

Mr. Att. Gen. Can you swear yourself positively what he said?

Mr. Wright. I swear thus far, according to my Remembrance.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. I would ask him a Question—

Mr. Att. Gen. All Issues must be tried by Belief or Memory; what new Practice is this? Can you swear this upon your Oath, or do you only say, I think or believe it?

Mr. Wright. I speak to the best of my Remembrance.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Mr. Wright, I would ask you a Question. If I take you right, at the Beginning, there was a Talk concerning killing and cutting of Throats; my Lord, I appeal to the Memory of the Court and the Jury, if he did not say it two or three times over. Mr. Wright, remember what I say.

Mr. Recorder. He did say it cautiously.

Mr. Just. Jones. He did not insist upon it.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Was there any Discourse, upon your Oath, when Sir Patience Ward gave his Testimony, that there was any Discourse concerning killing and cutting of Throats?

Mr. Wright. He believed that the Word killing was not spoken in Mr. Pilkington's hearing.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Now I ask you another Question. Now, Mr. Wright, pray do you remember that there was any Discourse concerning Sir Patience's having a Law-suit, or no Law-suit?

Mr. Wright. Sir Patience said this when you made a Reflection upon him. My Lord, I hope you will not suffer me to be abused; for I never remember I was in any Court upon any Occasion of Law before.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Now I would ask you another Question, Mr. Wright, because you have remembered more than other People have remembered; you have, by your Profession, an extraordinary Occasion to use your Memory; do you take it upon your Oath, that he did give any Evidence positively?—Mr. Wright. I do not remember he used the Word positively.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Did he swear any thing positively?

Mr. Wright. I do not know what you mean by positively.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Do you take it upon your Oath, that he did positively declare any thing in that Trial? Methinks a Man of your Profession should understand that.

L. C. J. Did he speak positively, or the best of his Remembrance? Do not you understand that Word?

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Or directly, or categorically, or any Word you use; I perceive you do not understand positively, therefore I put another Word.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did he swear any thing positively?

Mr. Wright. The most of his Evidence that I heard, was with cautionary Words, to the best of his Remembrance.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Do you remember he swore any thing positively?

Mr. Wright. I cannot remember, Sir, the whole Trial.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Did he swear any thing directly or positively?

Mr. Wright. Thus far he said, To the best of my Remembrance, to the best of my Knowledge, this Discourse was over.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Did he directly swear it?

Mr. Wright. My Lord, he spoke cautiously, those Words he spoke directly.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did he swear any thing indirectly?

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Where does my Parson live? Where do you live, Mr. Wright? Upon your Oath, where do you live, before you go?

Mr. Wright. If it be a material Question, I will answer it.

Mr. Just. Raymund. You must do it.

Mr. Wright. My Lord, I live in Essex at Walthamstow.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Are you the Minister of the Place?

Mr. Wright. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. He hath heard the Word killing, which nobody else heard before.

Mr. Williams. Pray call Col. Birch.

Mr. Holt. Come, Col. Birch, will you come over on this Side?

Mr. Williams. Thus, were you at the Trial between his Royal Highness and Mr. Pilkington?

Col. Birch. I was — My Lord, I am sworn to speak the Truth, and the whole Truth, and nothing but the Truth. As for speaking nothing but the Truth, I shall be sure to do; as to speak the whole Truth, I cannot. My Lord, I stood where those Gentlemen do. Sometimes I could hear, sometimes I fell back, and could not hear, so that indeed I cannot speak to any one Sentence as it was delivered. This is all I can say.

Mr. Williams. Then say what you can.

Mr. Holt. Colonel, please to go your own way.

Col. Birch. My Lord, that which I took Notice of was the Caution that I observed Sir Patience Ward to give his Evidence with, that was the principal Thing; I heard some Pieces of other Things, and then by-and-by I was put out of Hearing. But methought it was something strange, because I have not usually heard the like, and therefore I charged my Memory with it; that is, Some Things he said to the best of his Memory, other Things as he remembered, or to the best of his Knowledge; these were the Things that I charged my Memory withal, but to what Sentence he applied, I am not able to give your Lordship an Account, upon my Oath.

Mr. Williams. Colonel Birch, did you observe this in giving his Evidence, generally: Was it according to his Remembrance, or cautiously?

Col. Birch. That was the main Thing he spoke of; what he did in the general, was with Caution.

Mr. Att. Gen. Can you judge of that by what you heard?

Col. Birch. I am very ancient, Mr. Attorney; but I can judge of a Man's Caution by his speaking.

Mr. Att. Gen. Colonel, did you see him strike his Hand upon his Breast?

Col. Birch. I do not remember. I cannot apply it to any Sentence; but from henceforth I will never give Evidence, but what I can do directly.

Mr. Williams. Mr. Northey, were you at the Trial between his Royal Highness and Mr. Pilkington?

Mr. Northey. My Lord, I was there, and stood behind there, but I could not hear very perfectly, to know any Sentences fully.

Mr. Williams. What did you observe?

Mr. Northey. I do remember that Sir Patience Ward did several times say, to the best of his Memory, and to the best of his Knowledge, one Time particularly, Sir George Jefferies did particularly say, that his Invention was better than his Memory.

Vol. III.

Mr. Thompson. Was that towards the Conclusion of his Evidence?

Mr. Northey. He did it several Times.

Mr. Thompson. But that time, Sir?

Mr. Northey. He did swear very cautiously, to the best of his Remembrance; I cannot, my Lord, say what he swore.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. You heard my Question: When I said to him his Invention was better than his Memory, upon your Oath, upon what Occasion was it?

Mr. Northey. Really I cannot say, Sir George, what; but your Voice being much louder than other Men's I heard you plainly.

Mr. Holt. Mr. Nelson, were you at the Trial?

Mr. Nelson. My Lord, I was present at the Trial; and in some Cases Sir Patience Ward did rely upon his Memory, for Sir George told him, his Invention was better than his Memory.

Mr. Williams. Do you remember generally he did so?

Mr. Nelson. I had not remembered this, Mr. Williams, if it had not been for Sir George Jefferies's Reply.

Sir Fra. Winnington. Mr. Baker, pray will you tell my Lord what you know of Sir Patience Ward's giving Evidence?

Mr. Baker. My Lord, according to the best of my Remembrance, my Lord Chief Justice Pemberton did say, Sir Patience, Sir Patience, you speak to the best of your Memory, to the best of your Remembrance; I say, my Lord Chief Justice Pemberton did speak to Sir Patience Ward, Sir Patience, Sir Patience, you speak to the best of your Memory. My Lord, says he, I do it to the best of my Remembrance, my Lord, all that I can say.

Mr. Williams. Can you remember the Occasion of this, or the Time?

Mr. Baker. My Lord spoke to him once or twice; as I remember, he said once, Mind your Evidence, Sir Patience; Sir Patience was angry a little at somebody.

Mr. Williams. Can you say what was it?

Mr. Baker. Some Words, as I remember, passed between Sir George Jefferies and Sir Patience.

Mr. Williams. And what was the Occasion?

Mr. Baker. I cannot remember, indeed.

Mr. Williams. Did you observe upon the Trial, that Sir Patience Ward did swear generally positively, or to the best of his Remembrance?

Mr. Baker. I apprehended him to swear to his Hearing and Memory sometimes.

Mr. Just. Jones. Do you remember the particular Things he swore?

Mr. Baker. No, my Lord.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. I would ask Mr. Blaney this: I know you exactly take Notice of what he says; find out in your Book, Sir Patience, Sir Patience, you speak to your Memory.

Mr. Williams. Mr. Bennet, pray can you remember what was sworn by Sir Patience Ward?

Mr. Bennet. Sir, I was here, and I could hear very little; but then some time after, something towards the latter End, I got my Head in, and could hear a little, and that was that Mr. Pilkington was not at the Table, and the Discourse was ended before he came, of waiting upon his Royal Highness, about going to his Majesty, and after to St. James's.

Mr. Williams. How did he speak that, positively, or to his Remembrance?

Mr. Bennet. He was asked both by you and Sir George Jefferies. He did not answer you, but he answered Sir George; for Sir George asked him this Question, Was this Discourse quite over before Mr. Pilkington came in? He did declare—(I will tell you immediately, if you will give me Leave) He did declare not one Tittle was spoken, or to that Purpose. It was the latter Part, near it I am sure.

Sir Fra. Winnington. How did he express himself in that?

Mr. Bennet. He declared, as I have told you, that not one Syllable was spoken in his Hearing.

Sir Fra. Winnington. He says, my Lord, that not one Syllable was spoken in his Hearing.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. The Court hears what he says.

Sir Fra. Winnington. Sir, that agrees with the Notes of Mr. Blaney.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. The Word that he said was, to the best of his Memory. How was the Word, Sir Patience, Sir Patience?

Mr. Blaney. That was not in, Sir.

Sir Fra. Winnington. My Lord, now we will go to another Part of the Evidence; we will call Persons of Quality, that have long known Sir Patience Ward, that will give your Lordship an Account, whether he be a Man likely to forswear himself corruptly and wilfully.—Sir William Ruffel, are you sworn? Pray how long have you known Sir Patience Ward?

Sir Will. Ruffel. Near upon twenty Years.

Sir Fra. Winnington. Pray will you give an Account what you know of him?

Sir Will. Ruffel. I have had several Transactions with him for considerable Sums of Money, I never found but very fair, and honest, and reputable Dealing. I have known him almost twenty Years, I have dealt with him for several Sums of Money, and have found him very fair, just and reputable in all Transactions between him and me.

Mr. Williams. Do you think he would wilfully or corruptly forswear himself?

Sir Will. Ruffel. I never had that Opinion of him: I was impannelled upon the Jury, but the Court refused me, and I went away.

Mr. Williams. Sir, did you observe him to be a Man of Truth in his Trading?

Sir Will. Ruffel. Ever, Sir.

Mr. Williams. Was he given to tell Lyes, or prevaricate?

Sir Will. Ruffel. I always found him a Man of Truth and Justice in his Dealing, all the Time I dealt with him.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Sir William, I know you will speak the Truth; you are a civil Gentleman. Have you not taken him to be a factious seditious Man? Did you look upon him to be a Man well-affected to the King and Government?

Sir Will. Ruffel. I never did concern myself in those Affairs much, I never had any Converse with him about them.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. I know you were a Common-Council-man in his Mayoralty.

Sir Will. Ruffel. I was a Common Council-man in his Time.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray, upon your Oath, did you look upon him to be a Man well affected to the Government?

Sir Will. Ruffel. I do not understand, Mr. Attorney, that I ought to pass my Opinion upon Persons in that Point.

Mr. Att. Gen. Have you not observed in the City his Actions there?

Sir Will. Ruffel. I was concerned at that time when he was Mayor.

Mr. Att. Gen. How did you observe him?

Sir Will. Ruffel. I do not know that I have heard him speak in a Court of Aldermen.

Mr. Att. Gen. I ask you, Sir, would he strain a Point to serve a Party?

Sir Will. Ruffel. I do not know, Sir.

Mr. Williams. I think you have known Sir Patience a great while: Do you take him to be a good Subject to the King, or no?

Sir Will. Ruffel. I never knew otherwise by him.

Sir Fra. Winn. Mr. Johnson.

Mr. Just. Jones. This kind of Evidence doth weigh very little.

Mr. Recorder. It is a very improbable thing, that a Man that hath borne so many great Offices, that hath represented the King in that great Office of Lord Mayor, should be guilty of this.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, if they talk of Reputation at large, we will call all the Court here for the Reputation of our Witnesses.

Mr. Just. Jones. For a Man that hath been so eminent as Sir Patience hath been, there is very little more to be said for his Reputation.

Sir Fra. Winn. Mr. Johnson, do you know Sir Patience Ward?

Mr. Johnson. Yes, Sir.

Sir Fra. Winn. How long, Mr. Johnson, have you known him?

Mr. Johnson. Ten or twelve Years, Sir.

Sir Fra. Winn. Have you had Dealing with him?

Mr. Johnson. Yes, Sir, for considerable Sums, for Thousands of Pounds.

Sir Fra. Winn. Has he dealt with you as a just Man?

Mr. Johnson. A very honest just Man as ever I dealt with in my Life.

Sir Fra. Winn. Do you think he would forswear himself?

Mr. Johnson. I don't think he would tell a lie.

Mr. Att. Gen. No, not for a Party?

Mr. Johnson. No, not for a Party. Said I, Sir Patience Ward, you are looked upon to be a Person disaffected to the Government. Says he, It is my Misfortune; I am as loyal as any Man in England.

Mr. Just. Withins. Hark you, Sir, pray how came you to question whether he was or no?

Mr. Johnson. Being intimate with him, Sir.

Mr. Just. Withins. What made you doubt, to ask the Question?

Mr. Pollexfen. Do you apprehend him to be a Man that would forswear himself?—Mr. Johnson. No, truly, he was a Man of few Words.

Mr. Pollexfen. Was he cautious?

Mr. Johnson. Yes, Sir, as exact a Man as ever I dealt with in my Life.—I am very well known in the Court, I don't come to serve a Party. I can serve his Majesty as well as some in Court.

Sir Fra. Winn. Mr. Toriano, how long have you known Sir Patience Ward?

Mr. Toriano. Thirty Years.

Sir Fra. Winn. In all the Time have you looked upon him as fair in his Dealing?

Mr. Toriano. I have known him a Man of Truth, one that would not be false, to his Knowledge.

Sir Fra. Winn. Do you think he would forswear himself?

Mr. Toriano. I don't think he would tell a Lye to his Knowledge.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. You say how long you have known Sir Patience Ward: Have you not wondered within three or four Years?

Mr. Toriano. I have not meddled with Things. He hath by his Discourse been as loyal a Man as any.

Mr. Williams. Mr. Pickering, how long have you been acquainted with Sir Patience Ward?

Mr. Pickering. My Lord, I have been acquainted near forty Years. We have dealt together as long as he did follow a Trade.

Mr. Williams. Pray, in your Conversation and Dealing with him, did you observe him a Man given to Lying, or Falshness, or Deceitfulness, in his Conversation and Dealing?

Mr. Pickering. I never in all my Life did observe him guilty of any thing inclining that way, but of a fair Conversation, never given to many Words.

Mr. Williams. Do you think he would corruptly forswear himself upon any Account?

Mr. Pickering. Truly I believe not willingly do it, nor any thing that way.

Mr. Att. Gen. Mr. Pickering, you have observed him to be swerving of late?

Mr. Pickering. Truly I have been a Common Council-man in the Ward where he is Alderman, and all the Discourse I heard from him was very loyal truly.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. By his Actions you have looked upon him to be a Man very well affected to the Government?

Sir Geo. Treby. (To Capt. Griffith.) Do you know Sir Patience Ward?

Capt. Griffith. I have known him ever since he hath been Alderman of that Ward.

Sir Geo. Treby. How many Years, Sir?

Capt. Griffith. About thirteen or fourteen Years.

Sir Geo. Treby. In all that Time how have you looked upon him?

Capt. Griffith. I have looked upon him in that Repute he was in as an Alderman. I never had any Dealing with him.

Sir Geo. Treby. Did you think he would forswear himself?

Capt. Griffith. No truly, I think no Man of Honour would forswear himself.

Mr. Att. Gen. Captain Griffith, upon your Oath, how hath he carried himself towards the Government?

Mr. Williams. Sir Harry Tulse, in all your Time did you find him to be a Man given to tell Stories for Truth?

Sir Harry Tulse. Sir, I never had any Dealing with him in Matter of Trade.

Mr. Williams. How did you find him in his Conversation?

Sir Harry Tulse. Truly, Sir, I never heard any thing ill of him.

Mr. Williams. Did you find him a Man of Falshy or Truth in his Conversation?

Sir Harry Tulse. I never had any Dealing; so can speak little; I never heard any thing amiss of him; I have heard he is a very considerable Merchant, and I believe he is so, and accounted a very civil Gentleman. I have had the Honour to sit in the Court of Aldermen ten Years with him, and we have had sometimes some Difference in Judgment.

Sir Geo. Treby. Would he wilfully forswear himself, do you think?

Sir Harry Tulse. Truly, I believe not.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Do you believe every thing he swore at the last Trial was true? You are upon your Oath, Sir Harry Tulse.

Sir Harry Tulse. I believe they were not true.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Sir William Hooker, we would give you no more Trouble.

Mr. Williams. Because they called you, Sir William, I would ask you a Question, what do you think of Sir Patience Ward?

Sir William Hooker. Truly thus, according as it hath been said; but truly when I consider what a Condition Sir Patience Ward was in, when he delivered his Evidence; for to my Remembrance, he looked like a Man three quarters dead—

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Do you believe whatever he swore was true?

Sir William Hooker. I do not remember any thing he swore then.

Mr. Just. Jones. Have you done?

Mr. Williams. We have done, we leave it to the Court.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Sir Francis Lee—Sir Francis, were you at this Trial, and do you remember what Sir Patience Ward said at the Trial?

Sir Fra. Winn. Always you come with Drops at last.

Mr. Williams. This is a new way of going to Work.

Sir Fra. Lee. I was upon the Jury between his Royal Highness and Mr. Pilkington, and Sir Patience did swear, that Mr. Pilkington was not in the Room, when the Discourse concerning the Duke of York was mentioned; but afterwards did swear, when Mr. Pilkington said, he hath burnt the City, said he, I clapp'd my Hand upon his Mouth, and t'other upon his Breast, and bid him explain himself; who do you mean? Hubert? Sir Francis Butler, who was our Foreman, and stood next to me, jogg'd me, and bid me take Notice of that; and so I did: And after we had this Discourse together, he said, Sir Francis, I would have had you to take Notice: Did you take Notice of it? I told him I did. Truly, it seemed clear to me, That he should swear he was not present at the Discourse about the Duke of York, and afterwards he must infer he meant the Duke of York; or else what should he have stopp'd his Mouth for?

Mr. Williams. My Lord, here are Gentlemen that heard all the Trial, they might have been called certainly in Order. But, my Lord, to come in at last, when the thing is heard on both Sides, then to come in with Witnesses again, I don't understand.

L. C. J. They may call theirs, when you have done with yours.

Sir Fra. Winn. My Lord, I will but put this one Instance; in a civil Cause it hath been denied, much more in Perjury.

Mr. Williams. We will leave it to the Court; if Mr. Attorney says he will, we will.

Mr. Just. Withins. Take your Liberty on both Sides, I pray.

Mr. Att. Gen. If Sir Patience did not know it to be false, then it is no Perjury.

Sir Geo. Treby. I said no such Words.

Mr. Just. Withins. They resolve they will conclude; therefore, Gentlemen, take your Time.

Mr. Att. Gen. I remember what you propos'd t'other Day, you made a Speech after two or three o' th' Clock in the Afternoon.

Sir Geo. Treby. Who, did I?

Mr. Just. Withins. Nay, good Gentlemen, don't quarrel.

Sir Geo. Treby. I desire to say a Word or two. That your Evidence doth not at all encounter ours, it stands with it; let them have as much Reputation as they will. They say, Sir Patience Ward did say thus and thus, as concerning cutting of Throats, and as concerning the Discourse being ended, and as concerning the Duke's being not named; ours say the same too: but they say more; they say, he said with all the Caution in the World, from the Beginning to the End. My Lord Chief Justice bids him recollect himself; he says, he speaks to his Memory. Upon Sir George Jefferies's Question, he says, he speaks to the best of his Remembrance, and thereupon is that memorable Reply of Sir George, Your Invention is better than your Memory. One of their own Witnesses says it was so, and so says Mr. Blaney, and so says another Witness. While the Discourse continued, whether he was there or no, Sir Harry Tulse doth agree, that he cannot say he did see him. Now, under Favour, if he did not see him, he might say he was not there, for no Man can swear otherwise than according to his Senses; what a Man does not see, may be behind his Back, although he had not limited himself with that Caution, as he did limit himself with the greatest Caution, and said, as he did believe, he was not there. My Lord, none of their Witnesses will undertake to say he used the Word Positive: They don't deny the Thing, it is impossible any Man should; but that there were these Words of Limitation, they might be said, and not heard by them, they might be said, and not observed by them. None of them did pretend to write Notes, except the first; and from the Evidence of the first, I have all the Reason in the World to believe, that his Notes did contain all those Cautions, and all those Qualifications, that we speak of; why else should he be to seek to that written Short-hand? He did not know whether he had Notes here; he did know, whether he had consulted the Notes since. Would any Man in the World lay by Notes at this rate, that intended to give full Evidence? Though I will say that for him, he does not undertake to say positively, but according to the best of his Memory, and according to his Belief. Sir William Hooker says, he was in a great Confusion. Here are a great many Gentlemen beyond all Exception in the World, that do his Dealing was so fair, that he never told a Lye, that he was exact and most just in his Dealing. It is impossible that a Man should avoid such an Evil as this is, for so long a Time, and in so great Places and Offices, and should now at last be guilty of such a vile and base Sort of Crime as Perjury is, which no Man ought to presume another, unless there be the greatest and plainest proof to the contrary. But, my Lord, on our Side is the plainest Proof that can be, by Witnesses that remember the Words as well as the Qualifications; and one of our Witnesses is worth Abundance of their Witnesses that did not write, especially such a one as does not shew his Notes. But as I said before, they were testified by Sir Patience Ward, with all those Cautions; and we do think, that there is no Colour in the World that this should be Perjury.

Mr. Williams. Gentlemen, I am of Counsel for the Defendant, and the Question is, Gentlemen, Whether Sir Patience Ward be guilty of the wilful and malicious Perjury that is laid to his Charge in this Information? Gentlemen, it is agreed on all hands, and that will appear to you, there hath been no manner of Evidence given for the King against Sir Patience Ward, either as to his Honour, or Reputation, or Truth: There is nothing, Gentlemen, endeavoured to be charged upon him, but this particular Crime. The Gentlemen that prosecute him do not offer any one Thing against his Reputation or his Dealing; so that, Gentlemen, for aught appears to you yet, before this was laid to his Charge, he was a very clear Man. Gentlemen, he hath borne great Offices in the City of London; he hath been Lord Mayor of London; he is now in a considerable place of Magistracy; he is an Alderman. We have proved by several Gentlemen, he is a Man of great Value, a Man of great Reckoning and Dealing, a Man of Truth, a Man of Veracity, a Man, that they believe, would not forswear himself for a World: Gentlemen, the very Witnesses against us, they say it. Sir William Hooker tells you, he was under that Consternation, he was like a Man three Parts dead, so that there could be nothing of Malice in that Man; he was without Sense, without Passion; and if any thing was done, it was done as it were by a dead Man, a Man that was senseless. Sir Harry Tulse believes, he would not willingly have perjured himself; then he is not guilty of wilful Perjury, and that is the Question you are to try. Now I have said this, Gentlemen, as to the Condition of the Person. And now for the Imputations that are laid upon him. The second Observation that I make, is from the Nature of the Crime; we are accused of Perjury, first, that we have perjured ourselves. That in any one casual Thing done upon any Account whatsoever, to prove the Fact done, that a Man is perjured, it is an easy Matter. Men are subject to mistake; the Words spoken, Gentlemen, were spoken in a very few Moments. Consider what a Thing the Memory of Man is, how subject Men are to mistake Words. To say, that Men shall not differ, that there shall be no Variation between Man and Man, it is to put an End to all Conversation, there would be no bringing of Witnesses, if there might be no Variation. Nay, Gentlemen, to justify what I have observed to you, observe these two Gentlemen: Sir H. Tulse, he tells you, that the Words were by way of Question, Is the Duke come? That Pilkington should speak the Words by way of Question, Is he come? Is he come to cut our Throats? So that he tells you, Pilkington said these Words by way of Interrogation. This is the Evidence of Sir Harry Tulse; and both of them agree, Gentlemen, that they were spoken at one Time. What says Sir William Hooker? How does he apprehend these Words? He tells you they were positive in the present Tense: He is come, he is come to destroy our Wives and Children. So that if these Gentlemen mistake, one takes them by way of Question; t'other says, they were delivered positively, in the present Tense. Suppose this were brought against these Persons, no Man will say this is Perjury. As these Gentlemen have misremembered, so might Sir Patience Ward have misremembered; and if he had, it is his Infirmary, no Crime: For any Man is subject to mistake. We are now upon the Perjury, and it is not any thing that is Affirmative, but they are Negatives. The first Negative is this, that he should say there was no Mention of cutting of Throats. Say? The Question is, What was the Discourse about cutting of Throats? Say I there was no Discourse about cutting of Throats; it is natural to a Man to say, I heard no such Thing, and every Man must speak to his Hearing; it is that which must pierce your Ears; that Organ must be touched. There was no Discourse, I heard no Discourse; I could say no otherwise, nor any Man that goes by common Reason. It must be by Hearing, it is not natural: Won't you believe what they say, that Sir Patience Ward did say, and Mr. Blaney, and other Witnesses with him, there was no such Discourse? Is it not rational for a Man to believe there was no such Discourse? So that, I take it, was the Nature of the Thing. For the other Thing, there is not one Man that hath proved it to you, that he said there was no Discourse of cutting of Throats. Let them shew me that Witness that he did positively say it, and then I will give up the Cause, for my Share. I am sure Mr. Aston, a Clerk in the Court, he says it was, to the best of his Observation. Mr. Aston is a Man that uses to be here, and a vigilant Man in the Court; he does not take it upon him positively. These worthy Gentlemen, the Aldermen, don't take upon them positively. Their Witnesses were wary in it. Are there any two of them agree how the Words were spoken? So that, Gentlemen, there is no positive Proof against us. Now the Proof lies on our Part. We prove very plainly by Mr. Blaney; and can any Man do better in this Case? The same Evidence runs to the other two Instances, as to this; therefore I do not love to multiply Words. Now our Evidence is to justify this. Here is Mr. Blaney, he sat in a most proper Place, and the most likely to hear of any Man in the Court; he sat in the Middle, between the Court and the Jury, near the Witnesses, heard as much as any about the Court. He tells you directly, he did refer his Evidence to his Hearing; he tells you, he refer'd all the Parts of it either to his Memory or his Observation. He does not trust to a frail Memory; but he tells you he took it in Writing, and tells you that Writing is here; he produces it here. He is a Gentleman that uses to take Writing; so that if you give Credit to this Gentleman, certainly he is in the right. Mr. Blaney is not alone in this Matter; we have called several, and they agree with Mr. Blaney. Every Witness that speaks justifies Mr. Blaney. So that we have so many Witnesses that justify every thing, or most of the Things that we have said. Now, Gentlemen, when I have said all this to you, consider; for there are some Things remarkable in all Causes, and the Truth is, all the Witnesses give you one remarkable Instance, and that is, of Sir Geo. Jefferies, that he made a Comment upon the Word Memory; he admired his Invention, but lessened his Memory, as if the Gentleman had been troubled, that he had not remembered; for I remember it was a Reflection upon his Memory, that his Memory was not better; but commended his Invention mightily. So that this, Gentlemen, is a remarkable Thing. They give you that Instance to justify what was said by Mr. Blaney. Now, Gentlemen, I have said all this to you, we must rely upon these Things. They ask, Whether any thing that was said, was positive? It was a Trial lasted some Hours; and I think Sir Patience Ward was an Hour in examining. Did he say any Word positively? Can any Man answer such a Question? It is an impatient Question. Gentlemen, upon those three Matters that are assign'd, whereof he was accused; as for those three Things, they are answered particularly. Gentlemen, now we are in your Hands, and the Question is, What you will do in our Case? Here is a positive Proof for us; all the Presumptions that can be for us; here is the Proof of our Reputation; here is nothing against the Gentleman's Reputation; and a Man of Honour had rather be tried for his Head, than for his Ears. I know, Gentlemen, you are Men of Value, Men that value your own Reputation; I leave it to you, whether you can in Conscience say, upon your Oaths, that this Gentleman is guilty of wilful Perjury.

Sir Fr. Winn. My Lord, this is a Cause of great Importance, not only now, but in point of Example hereafter. My Lord, the Information is, that Sir Patience Ward, by his Consent, and out of a wicked Mind, did falsely, voluntarily, and corruptly swear so and so: So that if so be that he hath not sworn wilfully and corruptly, I know your Lordship and the Court will tell the Jury, he is not guilty of Perjury. Truly, my Lord, in this Case, I must observe to your Lordship and the Jury, that we are now contending what Witnesses have the best Memory; for the Thing is not in controversy for any Act done, but our Defence is, what Sir Patience Ward did swear at the Time when he was at the Trial. I must say, there are no Memorials in this Cause given on the other Side, of any Man that did undertake to write down at that instant Time for the King; but one Man says, he cannot very well tell whether he took Notes or no. So that I do say, my Lord, with your Lordship's Leave, that of all the Witnesses they have produced, there is not any one of them but does vary in Words; they are not consistent in Expression, even to any particular Questions that were asked; and can it be said to be wilful and corrupt Perjury, upon such an uncertain Evidence? I don't doubt, Gentlemen, but you will take great Care of it. My Lord, I will mention but two Particulars to your Lordship, that I think, go through the Case. My Lord, Mr. Blaney hath told you several Particulars that have been remembered; he writ it at that Time, without any Variation; it hath a great Advantage over the other Side, that have only retain'd it in their Memories, and their Memories might fail them, and differ from the Time of speaking; but here the Writing remains, that was writ at that very Instant; here it was fresh written out of his Mouth. The Question was asked, Can you swear, Mr. Blaney, you writ every Word, or no? It was asked the Witnesses, Can you swear, that he swore nothing positively? I must confess, my Lord, it is a Question that is strange for a Man to answer. Any thing positive! Does he know what a Man means? He must reduce it to Particulars. But, my Lord, I have asked Mr. Blaney, Did you take it as it came from his Mouth? He swears these Words he spoke, and there is no Variation, but written instantly at that very Time. My Lord, I do think this is a Thing goes a great way. My Lord, there is one thing more that I think goes through the Cause, and that is Mr. Crisp; for Crisp acquaints your Lordship, that when there was some Variation between the Assertion of Sir Harry Tulse and Sir Patience Ward, my Lord Chief Justice gave an Admonition to Sir Patience Ward, Sir Patience, Sir Patience, recollect yourself. My Lord saith he, what I deliver, I do according to the best of my Remembrance; and then this afterwards (for this was at the End of his Evidence) is a Qualification quite through the Cause. This being to weigh it with t'other Side. But I would say one Thing more; to what End should this be? Is any Man damnified by this Oath? Is there any Man can say this Oath hath prejudiced any Man in his Reputation or Estate? It was very strange, that a Man that hath brought so many Witnesses, and those very worthy Persons, that say they believe he would not forswear himself, should do this for nothing, that a Man should be the wickedest Man in the World at one Jump, that you can hear nothing of any Act of Falsity of him before. Now when there are such plain Evidences, undubitable Evidences, it is a Thing of great Consequence. And Colonel Birch says, generally, as he does remember and believe, he did cautiously speak. And Sir William Hooker says, he was under Consternation at this Time. So that it appears he had much Caution; and if so, it is of mighty Consequence, and concerns any Witnesses to come. Here is a Man perjured, and a great many Witnesses may. You are not to mind what is said by the Counsel of both Sides, but what is said in point of Proof. It will make all Men cautious, because they may infer Danger by a positive Assertion. My Lord, this is a Case of Perjury, in which I, and every honest Man, that values his Reputation, should be tender. If this Man be guilty, it is a great Crime; I must leave it to your Consciences.

Mr. Pollexfen. The Nature of the Case I do humbly pray your Lordship to take into Consideration, and the Jury. It must be wilful and corrupt; for so are the Words in this Information, and in all Indictments: It must be wilful and corrupt Perjury. My Lord, if so be that several Witnesses interfering one with another, one remembering one Parcel of Words that were spoken at the same time, any Man should be perjured in this Case, by remembering, and not remembering, no Man almost durst be a Witness. What discourse hath pass'd, let us but observe in this Matter. Here were three Aldermen present; one of them swears there was no Discourse of cutting of Throats; it is a Negative, not an Affirmation; and no Man that hears him, but must say of it, no Discourse that he heard. When I say there was no Discourse of such a Thing, any Man will understand, No such Discourse came to my Observation or Hearing. For the others that say there was such Discourse, they vary themselves; one says it was cutting our Throats; t'other, cutting the Throats of our Wives and Children. I only say this to shew the Weakness and Fallibility of Men's Memories, that carry Things so in an Uncertainty. Two or three Men swear a Man said so, t'other says he did not; no Man can understand it in any other Sense, but he did not hear him say so: For a Man can say no more of what another says, than what he heard. So, my Lord, considering the Circumstances of the Case, it is so that Men may perjure one another upon Omissions. One Man may bring one little Part of a Discourse, and another another; it will be a very unsafe Thing for a Man to be a Witness so. But my Lord, the next Thing is this of positive Evidence, and upon Remembrance. My Lord, if so be there must be positive Evidence to convict a Man of Perjury, I would leave it to your Lordship in the Cause, whether there be any among all their Witnesses, have proved it positively? Next, my Lord, if so be that we must have of t'other Side positive Evidence, we have more positive Evidence than they, under Favour, considering that Mr. Blaney hath his Notes. This I answer to that Objection of theirs, Did he say any thing positive? Did you write down this or that? That is not the Matter; there is no Man that writes all: But the Question is of that he did write, Whether that be true? If that be true, it is more certain, being written at that Time, being written here in Court, when there was no Thought of being made use of as an Evidence, is stronger than many Men's slippery Memories. But he in this is back'd with a great many other Witnesses that do speak it, though not so positively as he does, because he hath his Notes to help him; and he says particularly to one Thing, that he does particularly remember it. And, so, being they were written at that Time, that is, under Favour, a better Evidence than twenty slippery Men's Evidence can be. So that taking all this together, considering the Person accused, and the great Offices he hath borne, considering the great Shame and Scandal of the Crime, all Men that have known him for twenty Years together, saying he was not any false Man, better a Man had taken his Head from him, than taken away his Reputation. Unless, my Lord, there be plain and full Evidence, I hope it will not affect us, nor Witnesses that shall come afterwards.

Mr. Att. Gen. The Matter, Gentlemen, before you, is, Whether or no Sir Patience Ward, for swearing these Words, be guilty of wilful or corrupt Perjury? I shall admit that; but it is the first time I ever heard of, that we must go to prove the Intentions of this Gentleman, that if he did not intend to swear wilfully, or voluntarily false, that it will not be a corrupt or wilful Perjury. My Lord, therefore I must observe this to the Jury; if the Matter that he swears be false, the Law construes it to be corrupt and wilful: If the Matter, I say, does directly come in Issue, and he in that Issue swears that which is false, so that it hath an Influence upon that Issue, the Law construes it corrupt and wilful: For that is the Reason, my Lord, why that Regard is given to all Oaths in Causes, that they may be plain and direct; and a great Punishment is upon them, if they are not true; that is the only Reason for it, and no other. For without Doubt, we have nothing to prove the Case, but these two Things; for we cannot search into a Man's Intentions, that when he speaks of the Duke of York, he intends Hubert; but we must take Things as they are, whatever a Man intends. So the Jury are to inquire but of two Things; Whether or no these Words were spoken by him, as they are laid? The next is, Whether they are false? We have nothing more to do: But if we prove these two Things, that the Words that were spoken, were spoken by him as they are laid, in that Manner, not as these other Witnesses would have, with the Words, I believe, and, as I remember, but that they were plainly and positively spoken, my Lord, that we are to prove, and we have proved it. The next Thing we are to prove, is, that the Words are false; that they are false, they do admit by all the Witnesses; they don't go about to encounter that Proof at all; they have not at all endeavoured it, but that these Words, as they are laid, are absolutely false; and they were contrary to the Matter that was in Issue in that Case. That this Gentleman spake them, my Lord, the very Thing speaks; for he was heard by the Court as a Witness, and as their Evidence in the whole Cause; and the Court, after he was examined, put it upon this Gentleman, What do you swear? If it had been all, as I remember, and, as I believe, the Court would have declared it was no Evidence. My Lord, if a Matter be in Issue, and a Man comes and says, as I remember, and believe, this doth not encounter the Issue, nor the Proof that is for that Issue, when there were two positive Witnesses, that positively swore the Words, that the Court should then refer it upon the Testimony of Sir Patience Ward to the Jury, the Court would give Judgment he was no Evidence; it is plain he was no Evidence, if he swore to his Memory and Belief. That that is no Evidence, the Reason is plain; for there would be an End of all Trials, if ever that sort of Doctrine be admitted: No Man can be perjured upon his Remembrance, nor upon his Belief; who can tell he believes contrary to what he says? So that there is an End of that which ought to be the Cure of all the false Witnesses in England; for I take it in point of Law, the best of Remembrance in this Nature, or as I believe, is no Evidence at all; and therefore the insisting much upon that, is to charge the Court with Injustice to put that upon the Jury, and the Jury need not have given any Reason why they would not believe him; for there had been an End, if he had said, as I remember; the Jury might have said presently, there are two positive Witnesses against him. The two first Witnesses we have call'd, Hatch and Wood; they do swear as to those Words of cutting of Throats; they swear it positively, both of them. Whether he used the Word positively, or whether it was upon his Oath, that, indeed, they could not speak to, but they were positive, without any Reference to his Belief or his Memory. To the other Point of the Duke of York and Pilkington being there, that they speak positively to, and I think Sir James Smith doth speak as positively that he was sure his Words were, either I do positively say, or upon my Oath, one of them; but without any Words of Reference. Mr. Aston, who is a Clerk of this Court, and sat there in this Place, he speaks to that positively.

Sir Fra. Winnington. I think I am pretty sure, I think, these are the Words.

Mr. Att. Gen. The Foreman of the Jury he repeats the same positively, and gives a plain Reason; if it were not positive, it were an idle Thing.

Mr. Williams. Will you do us Injury in the Cause?

Mr. Aston. If he spake any Words of Mitigation, they were so low, I could not hear; and I think I could hear them all.

Mr. Just. Withins. Pray go on.

Mr. Att. Gen. I say, my Lord, several Witnesses we produced, and Sir William Hooker particularly; for we had never made use of him, if there had been only so idle an Evidence, for we did not call Sir William Hooker till after his Evidence was given, to encounter this positive Evidence. We then produced Sir William Hooker, after he had given positive Evidence; and Sir William Hooker did swear it positively upon him again; then the Court asked him, What do you swear? My Lord, after this, he might be shy in his Evidence, and say, I remember, and I believe. After this, we put it upon him again, and then we say the Words, were sworn positively; for by way of Hear-say and Belief is no Evidence. Now Mr. Blaney is all in all, and I think now Mr. Blaney will signify nothing. I say, my Lord, Mr. Blaney, what is his Evidence? He pulls out his Notes, and there he tells you, to such a Question there was such an Answer, and there indeed it is to the best of his Remembrance. But what does Mr. Blaney tell you? Mr. Blaney positively tells you, that these are but short Notes, many Things omitted, and I perceive whole Sentences omitted; a great deal of Discourse omitted; and that appears by that Passage of Sir George Jefferies's Interrogation: Then, my Lord, in one Place he comes and says, to the best of my Remembrance; afterwards he is press'd; for surely it was to no Purpose we would let such an Evidence pass, but when he is press'd; Mr. Alderman, is it so, or no? For Belief is no Evidence. There, my Lord, he answers positively, and that is omitted out of Mr. Blaney's Book: This was necessary, my Lord, we should do, and not let such a Thing pass, as that to the best of my Remembrance. My Lord, then to see what Mr. Blaney himself says, he took Notes, he did not answer one Thing positively throughout the Whole; for which he is to be rejected, I think, as no Witness in the Case, as a Person that comes and swears by Hear-say; and it was so remarkable a Thing, my Lord, that we who are of the King's Counsel, should take Notice of it to the Court. He is no Witness; he swears nothing positively: It is an Art, my Lord, was never invented till of late, and if it be allowed, it will make an End of all Trials; for you will have as much forswearing, as you have lying. Here is one gives Evidence he never told a Lye in his Life, and I care not whether the Jury believe that or no. Surely, my Lord, we should not let a Man go away with such an Answer as this, to his Remembrance. If they take upon them this Way of Swearing, I tell you plainly they are no Witnesses at all. My Lord, I must appeal to the Court, if such a Thing be allowed, what will become of all Trials? The Punishment of Perjuries does make Men cautious in Swearing; and so it was from the Beginning, ever since Swearing was allowed to decide Causes, Perjury was to be punished. By the Law of God it was severely punished. If there be a new way introduced of giving Evidence, to the best of my Remembrance, you have shut out the Punishment. Can you convict any Man of all their Witnesses, when none of them swear? Colonel Birch and others, they come and say to some Things, there were these qualifying Words; if it had been to material Things, my Lord, were we so senseless, or the Court so senseless, to let the best of my Remembrance pass for Evidence? So that, my Lord, they do not tell you plainly, they speak nothing at all express. When they are ask'd, Can you swear that he added these Words, to the best of my Remembrance? they say he did to some Things, but are not positive to what. So that your Lordship sees we have plain Testimony, they have no Proof. So you see what sort of Evidence this is. Now, my Lord, for his Crime. He hath been a fair Dealer, surely, in the World, or else he could never have gain'd such an Estate; but when Men are engaged in Parties, we see what a Man will do for a Party, and to help a sickly Brother, that was falling into the Pit, over the Hedge. But I say, my Lord, it is impossible, that their Evidence should encounter ours. And, indeed, if we had had Notice, that this would have been given as material Evidence, truly we could have given a great deal to shew the many Blots in this Gentleman; but, my Lord, I say this is not material, of what Reputation a Man hath been, but whether or no he spake these Words in this Manner; and whether they are false; that they are false is granted, and that he spake them as they are laid, that we have proved.

Mr. Sol. Gen. The Questions that we were to prove were, Whether Sir Patience Ward did give his Evidence at the Trial between the Duke of York and Pilkington? Whether or no he did swear positively, that Pilkington did not come in till the Discourse concerning the Duke of York was over? Whether he did swear positively, that there was no mention made of cutting of Throats? Sir Patience Ward, we say, did take upon him to swear this before positively, and not with that Restriction that they would have pass'd upon them. We call'd two Witnesses, and they are both very positive in it; for they swear, That Sir Patience Ward did swear, That all the Discourse concerning the Duke of York was over before Mr. Pilkington came in; that they swear positively, that he did it positively; both of them do swear, that Sir Patience Ward did take it upon his Oath, and to the Manner of it, positively; though he did not use the Word positively, yet they swear them without any such Restriction. These are the two Witnesses, Hatch and Wood. Then there is Sir Fra. Butler hath given you an Account of his Evidence, and they did debate it among themselves, and give you the Reason why they did not believe Sir Patience Ward. Now, first, they encounter us with the Evidence of Mr. Blaney, and his Notes must be the Measure of the Truth of his Case, and nothing must be taken for true but what he hath writ; he tells you at the same time he had not writ all. Mr. Attorney made a full Observation upon that: Suppose he did say he did not hear any mention of cutting of Throats, or did say to the best of his Remembrance, yet surely that doth not contradict our Witnesses, that take upon them to swear positively, that he swore it without any such Restriction; and it is reasonable to believe he might be press'd to say something to the Questions that were asked; for if he said he did hear it, it had been an immaterial Evidence. Sir Fra. Butler doth take upon him to say, that he did say it without Restriction; and their considering the Weight of it to reject it as untrue, doth make good what our Witnesses have said, that he did swear it without any Restriction. But after all this, they say he cannot be found guilty, for this might not be wilful and corrupt Perjury; nay, they go so far, that they are setting up a Doctrine, that I dare say no Man shall be guilty of Perjury for any Words he shall swear wilfully and corruptly. If a Man is conscious to himself, that the Truth is otherwise, or if he be uncertain whether it be so or no, yet if he take upon him to swear it, that is wilful Perjury in him, for he did not know it to be as he did affirm. Now, my Lord, I shall offer but one Circumstance more: Consider how this Discourse did rise; it was upon a Debate concerning waiting upon his Royal Highness upon his Return, they were all present in the Gallery at Guildhall; and it is reasonable to be presumed, that every one must hear the whole Discourse. And Sir Patience Ward, by the Action he did in this Case, must be presumed to hear every Particular of it. When Mr. Pilkington came to these Words, He hath burnt the City, and is come to cut our Throats, Sir Patience Ward catches him, and stops him immediately upon his saying this. Now he that was so near him as to lay Hands upon him, surely it cannot be presumed but he must hear what he said, and he check'd him for what he said, and would fain have fetch'd him off by an Invention that serves to little Purpose; but did verify this, that he had spoken Words of the Duke of York, and therefore did administer an Excuse to him; therefore I say it cannot be presumed but that he must hear it. But however, if he took upon him to swear a thing positively, that he was not certain of, it will be wilful and corrupt Perjury in him. But, they say, though he should say it positively, it must be understood he did not hear it; that he swears there was no such Discourse as he did hear. At this Rate, my Lord, no Man will be found guilty of Perjury, but there will be all the Mischief in the World introduced; for a Man that swears to the best of his Remembrance, there will be no Danger of that Man's being indicted of Perjury, that is no Evidence. But a Man that will take upon him to swear positively there was no such Discourse, he is an Evidence, and a material Evidence in the Case. Suppose, my Lord, there were Witnesses concerning the Publication of a Man's Last Will; that there were two Witnesses did sit upon the sick Man's Bed, one swears he did hear him publish it in that Form, and that this was his Last Will and Testament; the other comes and says positively, he said no such Words; certainly this is a very material Evidence. Shall that Man come off from a Conviction of Perjury in this Case, by saying he did not hear? What a dangerous Case are all Men's Inheritances in at that Rate? My Lord, I will not trouble your Lordship, only there is one Observation they have made, which I cannot let pass, that there is no Damage in the Case. If a Man should forge a Deed, and the Jury detect this Forgery, there is no great Damage, shall the Man be accused, because he is discovered? Shall no Perjury be punished, but what is successful?

Sir Geo. Jefferies. I should not have troubled you in this Cause, but that Mr. Solicitor was call'd into another Court. My Lord, I shall not offer any thing in this Cause, nor repeat any thing that hath been said. My Lord, I shall say of this Cause, what the Gentlemen of the other Side said; it is a Cause of very great Consequence, and it is a Cause of that Consequence, that I know it hath a very great Impression upon your Lordship, and likewise upon the Jury; and they are not now come to try whether or no Sir Patience Ward did deal very fairly between Man and Man in a Matter of Money, but whether or no Sir Patience Ward did swear what we have alledged in the Information he did swear, and what he did swear was true: And for that Matter, my Lord, I must needs agree with them; nay, I cannot believe the Gentlemen of the Jury will take any thing to be Evidence that is said by us that are Counsel at the Bar, but only so far forth as they have Evidence proved to them in Court; for in case we were to guide Juries, I confess Mr. Pollexfen hath determined it, by saying the Jury's Verdict must be false, if they find against Sir Patience Ward; which I think is a pretty strange Inference, and one of the sharpest Inferences for such a way of Reasoning, that I confess my poor Sense won't reach it. In the next Place, I say, the Gentlemen of the Jury ought not to take any Consideration in this of his Reputation, notwithstanding all his Dealings before this Cause; for certainly till such time as Sir Patience Ward came to be called upon his Oath, any Man of Conscience and Justice, and common Charity, had he been asked the Question, he must have said he did not believe, that Sir Patience Ward would wilfully forswear himself. God forbid any Man should have such a Thought of him, if he were a Man of less Quality than Sir Patience Ward! But I must conclude, that after Sir Harry Tulse was of that Opinion, so I must conclude with Sir Harry Tulse, if in our Case he be to be believed, at that Time he did believe he did forswear himself. Pray, good Sir, give me Leave, I will not, to the best of my Remembrance, do you any thing of Injustice. My Lord, I do say, in this Case, that though he hath been Lord Mayor of London, and borne the Office of Sheriff, and though he is now an Alderman, yet, I do say, Persons that have borne these great Offices, have been guilty of greater Crimes, that is, Crimes that have greater Punishments, than this Gentleman is now accused of; I mean that of Rebellion, and all that Mankind can be capable of: So that it is not the Dignity of Place excuses Men from Offence. But certainly upon his Evidence, Sir Patience Ward ought to be believed by the Jury guilty of wilful Perjury, rather than three or four Aldermen that swore against him. Gentlemen, the next Thing is, the Observation of Mr. Williams, of the Variance and Difference of Expression between these two worthy Aldermen, Sir Harry Tulse, and Sir William Hooker; one comes and says as though it were positive, t'other as though it were a Question. If it can be expressed, my Lord, either one way or t'other, or both, he would be guilty of Perjury; for your Lordship remembers the Record mentioned in this Record, and all the Words that were sworn by Sir Harry Tulse, were Part of the Action that Pilkington was charged with; all the Words Sir William Hooker swore, were likewise Words put in the Record; so that both of them were material to the Issue. Now what comes Sir Patience Ward to do? Does Sir Patience Ward come and testify it to make a Difference between these two Gentlemen? You see both of them agree there was a Talk of cutting of Throats. Says Sir Harry Tulse, Is he now come to cut our Throats? Says Sir William Hooker, Is he now come to cut the Throats of our Wives and Children? What says Sir Patience Ward as a third Man? He says there was no such Discourse of cutting of Throats, that is the thing these Gentlemen have a Mind to forget; one says he is come to burn the City. Is he come to burn the City, says t'other? That is not the main Question; these are little minute Differences. It is the Prudence of Mankind to take all Words in their Affirmations, rather than to make Contradictions between them. In this Case he finds there was a Necessity to serve a Turn, and he comes positively, and says, all the Discourse about the Duke of York was ended before such time as Pilkington came in; and there is an End of all, in case he swears true; for in this Oath he absolutely contradicts what both these Gentlemen swore; for this is not such a little Variance as these Gentlemen would have you to believe. But, Gentlemen, I shall apply myself to the Evidence they have offered, which is designed to overthrow ours. The first is, Mr. Blaney, and there is a great Value put upon Mr. Blaney; he sat in a convenient Place, just in the Middle, and there he took Notes, and believes he did not alter them. Now I appeal to your Lordship, and the Court, I appeal to the Jury, whether or no their own Witnesses did not hear Sir Patience Ward say, he had never been in a Trial; he never took notice of a Word of that. And another Man (Mr. Baker) says, that my Lord Chief Justice said, Sir Patience, Sir Patience, have a Care; you speak according to the best of your Remembrance. Now, my Lord, Mr. Blaney takes not the least Notice of that in his short Notes. The Question was asked Mr. Blaney, Can you take, upon your Oath, that he swore any thing positively, or that he did not? Truth, I can't tell; not in my Hearing, are his Words. Next comes Beaver; his Word was, In my Hearing. It was Mr. Blaney's Short-hand Remarks that Mr. Beaver prefaces all his Discourse with, to the best of my Remembrance. They have called Witnesses that could not be positive! I appeal to your Lordship, and the Memory of the Jury, whether ever any one of them was able to say, that the Words, to the best of my Remembrance, were annex'd to this, or that, or t'other Sentence! But, my Lord, on the other Side, I must say, that there are here Aldermen that have sat upon the Bench, and have behaved themselves with Loyalty and Integrity to the King and Government; these very Aldermen here do positively say, Sir James Smith, Sir John Peake, Sir William Rawsterne; it is true he cannot be positive as to the Business concerning cutting of Throats; but as to the first, does not Sir James Smith particularly say, I cannot say whether he did say positively, or whether he did say, upon my Oath; but he did undertake to say, that either the one or the other he was positive in, that he was very express that the Duke of York was not named after Pilkington came in. And for the saying, that Blaney took Notes at that very Time, therefore Mr. Blaney must be a Man of Ten thousand, as they call him; he is worth Ten thousand Witnesses, because he took Short-hand Notes: I would have you consider what Sir Francis Butler says, that was Foreman of the Jury at that Time, that bid Sir Francis Lee take notice of it at that Time; he did it positively: He says, Sir Francis took notice of that, and says he, we debated it immediately among ourselves. And I remember, particularly, Sir Francis Lee, Sir Francis Butler, and Sir Thomas Field, all three do agree together; this positive Oath they swear Sir Patience Ward did make. They did debate immediately after, among themselves, two Witnesses swearing against him was the Occasion of the Debate. But, my Lord, I must come to another Thing: Mr. Aston, a Clerk in the Court, a Man very well us'd both to Writing and Hearing; Mr. Aston, as well placed as Mr. Blaney, he gives this Account: I do positively say, That the Duke was not named after such time as Pilkington came there. But his being a frail Memory, as they would have it, and no Notes to refresh him, they put no great Value upon it: But I remember what Mr. Aston said; I have several Times asked the Question, and that makes me contain this Thing in my Memory. This does Mr. Aston positively speak to. So there, Gentlemen, all these five or six several Witnesses do positively swear to it: The two first Witnesses they are positive, Hatch and Wood; they do directly swear to every Particular. Gentlemen, you are not to mind the Flourishes that are made by the Gentlemen at the Bar; here is a Lord Mayor of London, here is an Alderman, can you believe him guilty? But do you think that these Gentlemen of Quality, that have acquitted themselves so dutifully, and so loyally, as they have done, and so faithfully, that no Man can lay a Blemish upon them, will you take it upon your Oaths, that these Gentlemen are forsworn? Will you take it upon your Oaths? That will be a strange Thing! The Laws and the Exercise of Justice are concern'd, and are to be maintain'd. I beg your Lordship's Pardon, that I have taken up so much Time. My Lord, I say, Justice is to be done; there is no Man so big as to be exempted from Punishment: The greater the Person is, the greater is his Crime. One that will come and tell an Untruth in a Court of Justice, the greater the Person, the more is the Crime. We have given your Lordship, and the Gentlemen of the Jury, an Account of the Matter before you, and we shall leave it to you.

L. C. J. Gentlemen of the Jury, this is an Information against Sir Patience Ward for Perjury; and the Information doth set forth, that there was an Action that was brought by his Royal Highness against Thomas Pilkington, and it was for speaking scandalous Words of his Highness, saying, he burnt the City, and that he was come to cut their Throats, and cut their Wives and Childrens Throats. These were the Words that were laid in that Action. That Action was in this Court in Michaelmas Term last. The Information that now is before you, is this: Sir Patience Ward he was sworn to give Evidence, and that he in his Evidence, upon his Oath, did positively swear, upon mentioning the Discourse concerning his Royal Highness, by Pilkington, and concerning his burning the City, and cutting of Throats, Sir Patience did say, that there was not any mention of cutting of Throats at all, and that before Mr. Pilkington came in the Discourse of the Duke of York was over. And upon this Mr. Attorney General hath assigned a Perjury, that this was false; whereupon the Defendant hath pleaded Not guilty. The Question is, whether Sir Patience Ward is guilty of this Perjury, or no. In the first Place, I must aver to you, that if so be this was false, then this must be what the Law calls a wilful and malicious Perjury. For it was the very Point in Question then, it was an Action brought against Pilkington; the Question, Whether he said these Words or not? And Sir Patience Ward he did come, and did swear, that there was no such thing. Plainly, that was to acquit the Defendant.

So that it was the principal Matter that was to be considered. Now for aught I do perceive plainly. Pray do not go with any Mistake, for I would be loth to do wrong in this; but as far as I do perceive, one Side and t'other upon the Matter do agree, that if Sir Patience Ward did swear it positively, it is agreed on both Sides that it was false; it is agreed; for aught I see, there is nothing at all said to the contrary. Here are three substantial Men; Men of very good Quality, that do all say there was a Discourse of his Royal Highness in Pilkington's Presence, and in the Presence of Sir Patience Ward; they do likewise all of them swear, that there were such Words. So that I say it is agreed, for aught that I see, that it is plain, that it was so in Fact, that there was a Discourse of the Duke, and that it was in Pilkington's Presence, and that there was likewise mention of cutting of Throats. Now the Matter that you are to consider; I will tell you, you are to consider, whether or no this was spoken by Sir Patience Ward positively, or, as the Defendants would have it, that it was not spoken in his Hearing, or as he remembered; for they would qualify it, and say that the Defendant did not say it positively, but with those Qualifications; and if with those Qualifications, then it is plain he cannot be convicted of Perjury; because no Man can be convicted for saying he did not remember. This I must observe to you, though, by the way, suppose now that Sir Patience Ward comes here, and says that it was not spoken in his Hearing, or in his Remembrance, take it that way, there is this considerable; Why Sir Patience Ward did hear it spoken, and so far heard it, that he took notice of it, and would restrain it, and put an Interpretation upon it? Would any Man, that had minded his Oath, would he have said, that nothing was said in his Hearing, when even he himself was present; nay, and so take away the Excuse of his not hearing, tho' he were by? He himself takes notice of it, and if I take it right, he puts an Interpretation upon it when he talk'd of burning the City; Oh, it is, Hubert. It is very hard for a Man to swear it was not in his Hearing.

Pray let me right, if I mistake; do not build upon that. Mr. Pollexfen. No Man denies but these Words were spoken, but the going to St. James's, and the Duke of York, whether that were not before he came in?

Sir Geo. Jefferies. It was one entire Sentence, my Lord.

L. C. J. I do take it, the Evidence was, that Pilkington did say, he had burnt the City, and he was, or would, come to cut their Childrens Throats; that was in one Sentence: For the burning the City, Sir Patience Ward being there at that Time when Pilkington said the Words, Ob, says he, you mean Hubert; ask'd the Question, Who he meant by it? he meant Hubert.

Mr. Williams. He did not hear t'other Part.

L. C. J. That I will leave to the Jury; that is to say, there were upon the Matter but two Clauses, burning the City, and coming to cut our Throats. And now it is, for aught I perceive, agreed, that Sir Patience Ward did hear one Part of the Sentence, and did not hear t'other. But this I will make an Observation on by-and-by. But surely he did not so well, if it were no more than that for a Man to say he did not hear any such thing, when it is plain he took notice of it at the same time. For that, Gentlemen, that they say here is no Man that hath any Harm; if a Man does commit wilful Perjury, though no Man is injured by it, hath not he committed a Crime? And though he had not injured any Man by his Perjury, it might have fallen out, that he might have done it; and if so be it hath not Success, it is the same Crime: For it is very plain, if so be the Jury had given a greater Credit to Sir Patience Ward, than they did to the other two Gentlemen, then it is very plain it had gone another way, and that had been an Injury. And therefore, Gentlemen, that is nothing at all. But that you must lay aside, and you must come to this Matter, that is the Principal Point. The Question is, Whether or no Sir Patience Ward did give his Evidence with Qualification, as he did believe, or as he had heard, or believed, or whatsoever it was, or whether he did give the Evidence positively. At the Trial there was two, I think three, but two that were at first examined, that did prove the Words spoken by him against the Duke of York, and swore they did reprove him for it. Sir Patience Ward was produced by the Defendant, for to defend the Issue on his Side, and to prove him to be not guilty in that Action, that he had not said the Words. Now it is plain, if so be Sir Patience Ward said only, I don't believe such a Thing, I don't remember it, or any such thing, that certainly had not been an Evidence that had been worth the Consideration of the Jury; for that was no more Evidence than any Men that they might take up; the next Man in the Court might have said, he did not believe it, or the like. Now for the King, in this Case, there are several, I think there are eight or nine; and they all of them do say, that they remember it very well; nay, and some of the Witnesses do say, they took special Notice of it then, for they were something astonish'd to hear such Evidence. It is true, all of them don't come to both Parts, but either to one Part, or to both; they all agree in this, that it was positive Evidence, and not as he believed, or heard. There was a Question about Mr. Allen, and he was asked himself; he says it was positive; if he did qualify it, it was so low, he could not hear it; and that he might do as he pleased. I think there is none of these Gentlemen, that any thing at all is to be alleged against. That eight or nine Gentlemen, and some of them of very good Quality, and all of them of very good Credit, that they should join together to perjure themselves, for a Revenge upon Sir Patience Ward, is strange. For aught appears, there is not any Man appears, but is sorry for him, and some of them have a Kindness and Respect for him. That is the Evidence the former give; I can't go to every one of the Evidences, to open what they say; that will make it very long; and I think there is no Occasion for it. You have heard it well, and I believe remember it better, possibly, than I do. On the other Side, for the Defendants: They do bring you, in the first place, Mr. Blaney; and he does say, That he hath taken Notes, and in his Notes it was by Qualifications that Sir Patience Ward did speak, that it was according to the best of his Knowledge, and that he was here, and sat here in a Place where he could very well hear all that was said, and that he took it from Sir Patience Ward's Mouth. This is said against him, that it is plain he did not take every thing; and whether or no this was taken truly, or not, is still a Question for you to consider on. They, when they did call him, did say he was as good as Ten thousand. They would have his Witnesses to be of more Value than Nine thousand that did swear upon their Memories, and they had some Reason to say so too, for to observe there is never a Man that does come positively; but he does say, as he takes it, and he was sure it was right, although in some other Parts it is plain he did miss. But he does say, it was true. But then for the next Witnesses, Mr. Baker and Mr. Crisp, they do come and say, how that the Defendant did interlard his Discourse, as he believed, and as he heard. But when he came to be pinched upon that Point, Do you swear this Thing positively, or according to the best of your Memory, then every one of them, (pray correct me, if I be mistaken) every one of these Witnesses did say, it was according to the best of Memory. And, Gentlemen, the nine Witnesses on t'other Side, every one of them did take it upon them.

Council. No, no.

L. C. J. Look you, look you, Gentlemen, one spake to one Part of the Words, another to another; but these Witnesses did swear positively to what they did swear.

Mr. Williams. They were upon their Memories still.

Mr. Just. Withins. Sir Francis Butler, Sir Henry Lee, was not, nor Sir Thomas Field; and Hatch and Wood was not.

L. C. J. But did take it upon them positively. For your Witnesses, there was Bewer, and Crisp, and Wright, these three they did say, that Sir Patience Ward did say, as he believed, or according to the best of his Memory; but they would not take it upon their Memories precisely, but according to the best of their Memories. And now for Colonel Birch, and Northey, and Nelson, and Baker, and Perry; they said, that he said, according to the best of his Memory, but they could not hear very well what was said; so that they could not say any one Sentence that was said, and that is, I think, the most of the Evidence, all your Evidence, as to Words. You have brought some Persons to testify for Credit; truly, I think, that of all the Aldermen, one that hath pass'd the Chair, should not have brought under an Alderman, at least, to have justified him. But 'tis plain there are others come and say, he was a fair Dealer, and they have known him for a great many Years. Nay, I must confess, here was one of his Brethren, Sir Harry Tulse, and truly he looked upon him as a fair Dealer, and did not look upon him as stain'd with any enormous Vice whatsoever. When he was asked by the King's Counsel, whether he did believe he had sworn true in this Particular, he could not say so there. But, Gentlemen, for all this, I do not see any thing whatsoever hath been said, that doth stick upon his Reputation, only this very Thing that he must be tried upon. And, Gentlemen, upon the Evidence you have heard, you are to consider the Merits of the Cause, and not the Person, one way or other, any otherwise than doth relate to it. If you believe the Witnesses that have sworn for the King, that he did swear this positively, then it is agreed, that it was false; if he did swear it positively, then you must find the Defendant Guilty. If so be you believe the Evidence that hath been given on the Defendant's Part, against the King's Evidence, if you do believe that, and not the King's Evidence, then you must acquit the Defendant. It is a great Crime, that is the Truth of it.

The Jury withdrew, and after some Time return'd, and brought the Defendant in Guilty; but before the Day for Sentence, he thought it best to go out of the Way, having had Intelligence they intended to set him in the Pillory.

CXVII. The Trial of Captain THOMAS WALCOT*, at the Old Bailey, for High Treason, July 12, 1683. 35 Car. II.

THURSDAY July 12. 1683. at the Sessions-House in the Old Bailey, London: The Court being met, and Proclamation made for Attendance, the Proceedings were as follow:

Thomas Walcot being set to the Bar, and after having held up his Hand, the Indictment was read as follows:

London. The Jurors for our Sovereign Lord the King, upon their Oaths, present, That Thomas Walcot, late of London, Gentleman, as a false Traitor against the most Illustrious and Excellent Prince, our Sovereign Lord Charles II. by the Grace of God, of England, Scotland, France and Ireland King, his natural Lord, not having the Fear of God in his Heart; nor weighing the Duty of his Allegiance, but being moved and seduced by the Instigation of the Devil; and the true Duty, and natural Obedience, which True and Faithful Subjects of our Sovereign Lord the King, towards him our said Lord the King, do bear, and of Right ought to bear, wholly withdrawing; and with his whole Strength intending the Peace and common Tranquillity of this Kingdom of England to disturb, and War and Rebellion against our said Lord the King to move and stir up, and the Government of our said Lord the King within this Kingdom of England to subvert, and our said Lord the King from his Title, Honour and Kingly Name of the Imperial Crown of this his Kingdom of England to put down and deprive, and our said Lord the King to Death and final Destruction to bring and put, the second Day of March, in the Year of the Reign of our Sovereign Lord Charles II. King of England, &c. the Five-and-thirtieth, and divers other Days and Times, as well before as after, at the Parish of St. Michael Bassishaw, in the Ward of Bassishaw, London, aforesaid, maliciously and traitorously, with divers other Traitors, to the Jurors aforesaid unknown, did conspire, compass, imagine and intend our said Lord the King, his Supreme Lord, not only of his Kingly State, Title, Power, and Government of this his Kingdom of England to deprive and throw down, but also our said Lord the King to kill and to Death to bring and put, and the ancient Government of this his Kingdom of England to change, alter, and wholly to subvert, and a miserable Slaughter amongst the Subjects of our said Lord the King, through his whole Kingdom of England, to cause and procure, and Insurrection and Rebellion against our said Lord the King to move, and stir up, within this Kingdom of England: And to fulfil and perfect the said most horrible Treasons, and traitorous Compassings, Imaginations and Purposes aforesaid, the said Thomas Walcot as a false Traitor, then and there, and divers other Days and Times, as well before as after, maliciously, traitorously and advisedly did assemble, meet together, and consult with the aforesaid other Traitors, to the Jurors aforesaid unknown, and with them did treat of and for the executing and perfecting their Treasons, Compassings, Imaginations and Purposes aforesaid; and that the said Thomas Walcot as a false Traitor, maliciously, traitorously, and advisedly, then and there, and divers other Days and Times, as well before as after, did take upon himself, and to the aforesaid other Traitors did promise to be aiding and assisting in the Execution of the Treasons, and traitorous Compassings, Imaginations and Purposes aforesaid; and in providing Armour and armed Men, to fulfil and perfect the said Treasons and traitorous Compassings, Imaginations and Purposes aforesaid. And the said most wicked Treasons, and traitorous Compassings, Imaginations and Purposes aforesaid to fulfil and bring to pass, he the said Thomas Walcot as a false Traitor, maliciously, traitorously and advisedly, then and there did procure and prepare Arms, to wit, Blunderbusses, Carbines, and Pistols, against the Duty of his Allegiance, against the Peace of our Sovereign Lord the King, his Crown and Dignity, and against the Form of the Statutes in that Case made and provided, &c.

Cl. of Cr. What sayst thou, Thomas Walcot? Art thou Guilty of this High Treason, whereof thou standest indicted, or Not guilty?

Capt. Walcot. Not guilty.

Cl. of Cr. Culprit, How wilt thou be tried?

Capt. Walcot. By God and my Country.

Cl. of Cr. God send thee a good Deliverance.

Then were William Hone, John Rouse, and William Blague arraigned, who pleaded Not guilty to their Indictments; and the Court adjourn'd till the Afternoon. When Thomas Walcot being again brought to the Bar, after some Exceptions, the following Jury was impannell'd.

Nicolas Charlton,
Christopher Pitts,
Robert Beddingfield,
John Pelling,
William Windbury,
Thomas Seaton,

Jur.
William Rutland;
Thomas Short,
Theophilus Man,
John Genew,
John Short;
Thomas Nicholas.

Crier. Oyes, If any one can inform my Lords the King's Justices, &c. L. C. J. Mr. Sheriffs, This is an extraordinary Case; it is reasonable the Evidence should be well heard: I require you both to keep the Court quiet. — Mr. Tanner, swear the King's Evidence one at a time.

Clerk. Thomas Walcot, Hold up thy Hand. You of the Jury, look upon the Prisoner, and hearken to his Charge: He stands indicted by the Name of Thomas Walcot, Gent. prout in the Indictment before, mutatis mutandis. Upon this Indictment he hath been arraigned, and therunto pleaded Not guilty, and for his Trial put himself upon his Country; which Country you are. Your Charge is to inquire, &c.

Mr. North. May it please your Lordship, and you that are sworn, the Prisoner stands charged, That he being a false Traitor to the King, and intending to raise War and Rebellion against the King, and to bring his Majesty to an untimely Death, did on the second of March, in the five-and-thirtieth Year of the King, at the Parish of St. Michael Bassishaw, meet with other Traitors like himself, and there conspired to bring these Treasons to Effect; and accordingly promised to be aiding and assisting to provide Arms for it; and did actually provide several Arms, as Carbines, Blunderbusses, and Pistols, for the perpetrating this Treason. This is the Charge, to which he says he is Not guilty. We will call our Witnesses and prove it, and then you are to find it.

Sir Robert Sawyer. Mr. Att. Gen. Gentlemen of the Jury, the Prisoner at the Bar is accused of the highest of Crimes, High Treason against his Sovereign Lord, in compassing the Murder of the King, in raising Rebellion within this Kingdom, to the overthrowing of the best constituted, and the most excellent Government in the World. Gentlemen, he does not stand alone; and therefore he is charged in the Indictment with a Conspiracy with many others; I am heartily sorry to say there are many. Indeed there is hardly any Kingdom or Nation, wherein there are not discontented Persons, whose narrow Fortunes, or malevolent Spirits, render them uneasy in that Condition God Almighty hath put them; but to find Men that pretend to be Christians, or to have any thing of Virtue, and under the best of Governments, that indeed is a matter of Wonder; and indeed it casts so great a Stain and Reproach upon the Protestant Name, that it is not to be wiped off, but by the severest Justice of the Kingdom. Gentlemen, this Design was for a general Rising, and at the same time to assassinate the King and the Duke of York: This is the Design which the whole Course of our Evidence will open to you, and lies so naked, that I hope no Englishman that lives, but will see through these Men, that have made such a Noise and Tumult in these latter Days. This Design to assassinate the King, and the Rising, was designed to be in October last, upon the King's Return from Newmarket; and at that time there was a Noble Lord, that is gone now to his own Place, as will appear by the Evidence, that furnished them with considerable Sums of Money, for the providing Men and Arms for the assassinating the King at that time; but the Assassins were not then ready, as God appointed they should not be ready; and so at that time they were disappointed. Then the general Rising was put off till Queen Elizabeth's Day, which will open your Eyes to see upon what Grounds the tumultuous Meetings were encouraged in the City, to the Terror of all honest Men: But that Rising was also disappointed because some of the Conspirators were not ready with their Men in the Country. And then, Gentlemen, though it was press'd on by the Person I mentioned, he then thought it high time to leave these Confederates to themselves. Gentlemen, after this we shall trace them in their several Meetings and Consultations; for there was a time, that they struggled with themselves, which should be effected first, whether they should first kill the King and the Duke; or whether they should first rise, and prosecute him in an open Rebellion, and destroy him that way. And the Course of our Evidence will shew, how ingenious these Men were; for it appears there were Men of great Ingenuity and Courage, as appears by the Prisoner at the Bar; and they would discourse of these Matters in Phrases, that common Persons should not understand them.

Capt. Walcot. I do not understand you.

Mr. Att. Gen. I speak as loud as I can. At their Meetings, for cutting off the King, that was the executing of a Bargain and Sale; and a short Conveyance, to come to their End. The raising of a War, that was under the Notion, and so to be discours'd of, of executing a Lease and Release, to work both upon the Possession and upon the Reversion: And under these mystical Terms they discours'd of all these Subjects, when they were in publick Places.

Capt. Walcot. I do not hear.

Mr. Att. Gen. You will hear the Witnesses, and that will concern you more. Then, Gentlemen, in these several Meetings they contrived to allot every Man in his Part; some were to provide Arms, others were to provide Men to do the Execution, which was last resolved upon to be at the Rye, upon the King's last Return from Newmarket. Gentlemen, in all these Parts, which I hope to prove, the Prisoner will appear to have a principal Part in them all: In all the Consultations and Advising for the raising Men, wherein he was to be a principal Commander, according to the Skill he hath; but for the Assassination at the Rye, Rumbold was to conduct the Men hired for that Purpose. Gentlemen, accordingly the Time was appointed for his Majesty to come, and the Assassins to meet him there: But it pleased God, that that was disappointed by a miraculous Fire; for so all Englishmen may call it: And whereas they were to go down on Friday to Rumbold's House, and the King to come up on Saturday, the Fire brought him to Town on Tuesday: But notwithstanding this great Providence to divert them, Rumbold and others of the Confederates resolv'd to go on with it still; and several Places were appointed, and several Officers were appointed to view those Places, either between Hampton-Court and Windsor, or else to do it at the Play-houses, or upon the King's Passage from the Play-house, by Bedford-wall at Covent-Garden; but if these should fail, they were resolv'd to do it at the Bull-fest. Gentlemen, they went further; they provided Arms; which very Arms opportunely fell into our Hands: We seized those very Arms that were bought for that Purpose to kill the King and the Duke. We shall go through with it; I will name you the material Places of their Meetings, that so you may understand the Witnesses; the Green-Dragon Tavern on Snow-hill, the Salutation Tavern in Lombard-street, the Angel Tavern near the Exchange, and Mr. Wells's Chamber in the Middle-Temple; these were some of the principal Places; tho' they had several other Places, wherein all these Matters were consulted und transacted. They had prepared a new Model of Government; and they were for overturning all, as all these Politicians do; tho' they had a most excellent Government, yet they had a better in their own Brains; or, at least, their Share would be greater in it, as all Rebels have a Prospect of. Gentlemen, for the other Parts, we shall have less Occasion to give Evidence of now; for every one had their particular Part; some for the great Design of the Rising, some for the Killing of the King, whereof that Gentleman, the Prisoner, was one; and there were other Parts assign'd to others, for taking and surprising the Tower. We will call our Witnesses, and prove all that we have opened, and make it as clear to you as the Sun shines: Such a prodigious Villainy nothing but a Firebrand from Hell could kindle in Men's Minds, to kill the best of Kings, and to destroy the best Frame of Government. Gentlemen, I do not question your Justice, but that this Man shall pay what is due to the Justice of the Kingdom.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. My Lord, I only desire to give an Account of the Method of our Evidence.

Capt. Walcot. My Lord, I desire I may have the Favour of Pen and Ink.

L. C. J. That you shall have.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. My Lord, and you, Gentlemen of the Jury, Mr. Attorney hath already given you an Account of the Design that was to be put in Execution by a Parcel of evil Men, whereof the Prisoner at the Bar we charge to be one. We shall not detain you longer with opening the Matter, but beg the Favour of the Court, that we may acquaint you a little with the Method we intend to follow in calling our Evidence for the King against the Prisoner at the Bar. In the first place, my Lord, we will call our Witnesses, to give your Lordship and the Jury Satisfaction, That there was a Design in general, and that that Design was first intended to be a general Rising over all the Kingdom; in which Design the Prisoner at the Bar had a very considerable Share; and was look'd upon to be a very proper and fit Person for the Managery of that Part of the Design: For other Meetings, and at what Places, Mr. Attorney hath already opened to you. We will then come to more particular Agreements that were between them, in order to the carrying on this admirable good Work, as it hath been truly stated, for the Destruction of the best and most merciful of Kings, and for the Destruction of the best of Religions, the Religion of the Church of England. I take Notice of it, because all Men may know, The most of these Persons, nay all of them, concerned in this hellish Conspiracy, were Dissenters from the Church of England.

And the better to effect this horrid Villainy, (I am sure I want Words, and so does any Man else, to express the Baseness of these Crimes, the better to effect this Thing) the way it was to be done, was by taking off the King, and by taking off his Brother too. At length after several Debates, and some Proposals made between these Persons, they came to a Determination, and an actual Resolution, to take off the King, and his Royal Brother. My Lord, we will prove generally, that this was the Intent of the Design, or the Plot in general. My Lord, we will then give you an Account, That they entered into several Consultations for a new Model Model and Frame of Government; for they intended to set up the People, and they had even fix'd a certain Superiority, and resolved, as all People of their Principles have a mind, according to their several Inclinations, to fix the Power in the People; Gentlemen, an old Tenet, that brought the King's Father to that untimely and horrid End, by fixing the Power in the People. These Gentlemen had a mind to insinuate and engage the People, by fixing the Power in them, and saying, that publick Proclamations were to be made. And after this horrid and barbarous Murder intended upon the King and the Duke, there were Declarations to be made in the Names of such and such Lords, and the Associating Members of the last House of Commons; these were the Persons thought fit, in whose Hands the Power of the whole Kingdom should be lodged. Gentlemen, after we have given you an Account of the several Meetings, then we will come to the Prisoner at the Bar, and prove against him, That he had not only an Hand in the first Part of the Plot, about the Raising, but he was also to be one of those Villains that were to murder the King: I cannot express myself in more moderate Terms, and I am sure no Man can blame me that hears the Proof. Gentlemen, when we have thus given you this Evidence, I hope we shall satisfy the Court, and all Mankind, That Persons that have been thus guilty, under Pretence of Religion, or under any other Pretence whatsoever, are fit Objects of the Severity of human Laws. If we prove against the Prisoner at the Bar, That he had an Hand in this horrid Conspiracy, I make no Doubt but you will shew yourselves to be Englishmen, loyal Men, and overtake all Men that thirst after the King's Blood.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Gentlemen, we will call our Witnesses; Mrs. Finch, and as no Man can doubt, but the Murder of the King, that vile design, would have been seconded by a Power to back that horrid Villany; so we shall shew you, That this Gentleman was concerned in both Parts, in the immediate Assassination of the King, and the raising of Arms. We need not go about to give you an History of the Thing any other way than in applying it to this Person, for there is no Part of this Conspiracy he can clear himself from, and all the Evidence that speak of this Design, speak of this Man as a chief Actor in it.

Mr. Att. Gen. Call Col. Rumsey. [Who was sworn.]

Mr. Sol. Gen. Col. Rumsey, Pray, give my Lord and the Jury an Account of what you know of the Prisoner at the Bar, whether he were concerned, either in relation to the Murder of the King, or the raising Arms.

L. C. J. Mr. Rumsey, raise your Voice so audibly, that you may be heard.

Col. Rumsey. The first Meeting I had with this Gentleman was at Mr. West's Chamber.

Mr. Att. Gen. Before you begin to tell of your Meeting, give an Account of any Raising that you heard of.

Col. Rumsey. Sir, about the latter End of October, or the Beginning of November, I was with my Lord Shaftesbury late at Night, and he told me, That the Duke of Monmouth, my Lord Russell, my Lord Grey, and Sir Thomas Armstrong, were at one Mr. Shepherd's House, near Lombard-street. He desired me to go to know what they had done about the raising Arms at Taunton. I did go, and Mr. Shepherd carried me up to them, and they told me, That Mr. Trenchard had failed them about the Men, and they could proceed no further at that time.

L. C. J. What Shepherd was this?

Col. Rumsey. Mr. Shepherd, the Merchant, near Lombard-street, one Mr. Thomas Shepherd. And so I came to my Lord the next Day, and told him of it; and then he made his Preparation to be gone for Holland.

L. C. J. What Discourse had you with my Lord Shaftesbury thereupon? What did he say? What made you believe he made Preparation to be gone?

Col. Rumsey. My Lord, he said there was no Dependence upon those Gentlemen that met, and he would leave England. After that, a Fortnight or three Weeks, there was a Meeting one Day at Mr. West's Chamber, and there was Mr. West, and Mr. Goodenough, and Mr. Wade, and somebody else there was, but I cannot remember his Name. Captain Walcot was in Holland then. There it was proposed nothing was to be done by a general Raising; but there was no surer way than to take off the King and the Duke; and that to that Intent and Purpose they could not carry it on without Mr. Ferguson; and so he was writ for into Holland; and he came out of Holland upon that Letter, and Captain Walcot with him. After Mr. Ferguson's coming back from Holland, there was very suddenly a Meeting again, and then it was concluded, that nothing was to be effected without taking off the King and the Duke, or to that Purpose. Mr. Ferguson was not at that Meeting. There were two or three Meetings before Captain Walcot was there, to find out Men, and they could not find out a Number of Men, without which Mr. Rumbold would not undertake it. So, about three or four Meetings after, Captain Walcot came; and he was resolved at last to join in the Matter; but he would not have any hand in attacking the Coach, but he would command a Party that should charge the Guards.

L. C. J. What did he say?

Col. Rumsey. He would not meddle with the King in the Coach, but he would command a Party that should charge the Guards that came along with him.

Mr. Att. Gen. After what manner was it settled that it should be done?

Col. Rumsey. There were several Parties; one small Party was to have killed the Postilion, another to kill the Horses, and Mr. Rumbold with a certain Number to seize the Coach, and Capt. Walcot the Guards.

Mr. Att. Gen. Where was it to be done?

Col. Rumsey. At Mr. Rumbold's House.

L. C. J. Where is that?

Col. Rumsey. Near Hodsdon.

L. C. J. For what Purpose was Mr. Rumbold and those other Men to attack the Coach?

Col. Rumsey. To murder the King and the Duke.

L. C. J. How was it design'd to be done, by Pistol, or how?

Col. Rumsey. By Blunderbusses, and if they missed, then Swords.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did they give any Directions about preparing Arms?

Col. Rumsey. When that time fail'd, after the Fire fell out at Newmarket—

L. C. J. When was this to be done?

Col. Rumsey. When the King returned from Newmarket.

L. C. J. About what time?—Col. Rumsey. The Saturday before Easter.

L. C. J. I don't ask you the Day; but was it when the King was last at Newmarket, or before?—Col. Rumsey. Last at Newmarket.

L. C. J. When he was last at Newmarket, in his Return from thence?

Col. Rumsey. In his Return from thence.

L. C. J. Whereabouts?

Col. Rumsey. At Rumbold's House, which is near Hodsdon.

L. C. J. In Hertfordshire?

Col. Rumsey. In Hertfordshire.

L. C. J. And you say, those Methods were chalked out by them, that Rumbold and some others were to attack the Coach, others to kill the Postilion, others to kill the Horses; and this Gentleman, with a commanded Party, was to fall upon the Guards? You say this?

Col. Rumsey. Yes, my Lord.

Capt. Walcot. I would beg Leave, my Lord—

L. C. J. Stay, Captain Walcot, you shall have Leave to ask him any thing by and-by; but you must first let the King's Counsel have done with him.

Mr. Att. Gen. I would ask you what you know of a Design at any other time?—Col. Rumsey. I do know nothing, I heard by Mr. West, but I knew nothing before.

L. C. J. Mr. Rumsey, About what time was this Resolution taken up, as near as you can? I ask neither the Day nor the Week, but about what Month?

Col. Rumsey. The Beginning of it was in February.

L. C. J. Last February?

Col. Rumsey. Last February. Mr. Ferguson, and Captain Walcot, came to this Town upon Ash-Wednesday.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. What other Meetings were you at, Sir?

Col. Rumsey. This was the first, when the Prisoner at the Bar came in. The first Time was at Mr. West's Chamber, where he came: There it was considered and debated.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Very well, you say that was the first Time Capt. Walcot came in?

Col. Rumsey. It was at Mr. West's Chamber: This was before the King came from Newmarket that they were to do this, and the Number of Men could not be got ready; so there were several Meetings afterward at Mr. West's Chamber, to consult whether they could raise the Number they resolved upon; and there were Notes brought by Mr. Goodenough, and Mr. Rumbold, of many Names, I cannot say who else brought Notes of the Men's Names, to see that they might not be deceived in the Number; and that Time Captain Walcot was there, and did undertake to go to Mr. Rumbold's House; and I think did go down to the very Place.

L. C. J. Look you, Sir, Was there any Number of Men insisted upon for doing this Villainy?

Col. Rumsey. Capt. Rumbold did insist upon 50 Men.

L. C. J. But Capt. Walcot, How many was he to have?

Col. Rumsey. It was not divided to a perfect Number.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. What other Meetings were you at with Captain Walcot?

Col. Rumsey. I was at the Salutation with him, and the Green-Dragon with him.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Where is that?

Col. Rumsey. The Green-Dragon is upon Snow-hill.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Where is the Salutation?

Col. Rumsey. In Lombard-street.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Now tell what Discourses you had there?

Col. Rumsey. That was about dividing the City into 20 Parts, to see how many Men could be raised out of every Part, and they were to be divided into Fifteenths, and every Man to lead a Fifteenth, that they might not be at a Loss.

Mr. Att. Gen. Who was intrusted with this to do it?

Col. Rumsey. Mr. Goodenough, Mr. West, and Mr. Wade.

Mr. Att. Gen. What Account did they give of what they had done?

Col. Rumsey. Mr. Goodenough gave an Account of 7 Parts of the 20, and said out of them would be raised 2900 Men, and made an Estimate, that the other 13 would not raise above as many more; for those were the most considerable Parts, as Wapping and Southwark.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Mr. Rumsey, Pray what Consultation had you afterward, and what was done after?

L. C. J. Pray let us go on a little gradatim. What was the Reason, that this was not effected when the King returned from Newmarket?

Col. Rumsey. The Fire happened, and brought the King sooner from Newmarket than the Men could be got ready.

L. C. J. Was there a Day appointed for the doing this? Had you a Prospect when the King would return?

Col. Rumsey. Yes, it was commonly talked that it would be the Saturday before Easter, but he came on the Tuesday before.

L. C. J. Then give us an Account how that Design was disappointed at that time.

Col. Rumsey. The Fire happened in Newmarket, and they were all in Confusion, and could not get their Men ready by Tuesday; the News came upon Friday to Town.

L. C. J. Of the Fire?

Col. Rumsey. Of the Fire, and there was a Meeting. Mr. Ferguson lodged then in Covent-Garden, and sent to several to come to him, to see if Men could be got together against Tuesday, when the King was to come in; and it could not be done, and it was laid aside for that time.

Mr. Att. Gen. Upon that, what Resolution was taken?

Col. Rumsey. Then they had a Meeting, and Ferguson was not there, there was Capt. Walcot, Mr. West, and Mr. Goodenough; this was immediately after this Disappointment: I am not certain whether it was in Mr. West's Chamber; and that there might no Accident happen afterwards to hinder it, it was resolved, that Money should be raised for the buying of Arms; and Mr. Ferguson undertook to raise Money to buy Arms, and Mr. West did undertake to provide them.

Mr. Att. Gen. Who undertook to provide Men?
 Col. Rumsey. Mr. Goodenough and Mr. Rumbold.
 L. C. J. Look you, Colonel Rumsey, after this Disappointment, when this next Meeting was, had you any further Design upon the King then?
 Col. Rumsey. Yes, my Lord.
 L. C. J. Give us some Account of that.
 Col. Rumsey. It was to be done a coming from Windsor to London, or from Windsor to Hampton-Court, or the Play-house; and therefore that Arms should be ready against any Opportunity that should happen, let it be what it would. And Mr. West did undertake to provide Arms, and he told me he bought them, and did not get his Money in six or seven Weeks after. A Day or two after, going to Ferguson, he told him now he might have his Money, if he would send a Note to Major Wildman; but after, he was told, that Major Wildman would not pay it by Note, but he must send Mr. Rumbold to him for it; for he would trust nobody else but him. And so Mr. West did send Mr. Rumbold, and he was there at his House by six o'Clock in the Morning, but he was gone out of Town an Hour before; so Mr. West went to Mr. Ferguson, and he then told him, that he should have Money in two or three Days, if he would come to him; and Mr. West did go to him, and he paid him an hundred Pounds.
 Mr. Att. Gen. Was there any Provision made for a Rising now again?
 Col. Rumsey. Yes, this general Rising, by this Division of the City, was intended to be ready against the first Opportunity that happened.
 Mr. Att. Gen. Before this Discovery, did you keep up these Meetings?
 Mr. Sol. Gen. When was your last Time?
 Col. Rumsey. My Lord, I think it was the very Thursday before the Discovery; but then on Friday or Saturday we had Inklings that this was discovered, and did meet at the George upon Ludgate-Hill.
 L. C. J. Who met then?
 Col. Rumsey. I think it was the very Thursday before; I am not very certain; we met at the Salutation in Lombard-street, and there was Captain Walcot, Mr. West, Mr. Wade, the two Goodenoughs, and Mr. Nelthrop, and myself.
 Mr. Att. Gen. What did it come to, pray, what was your Discourse then and Resolution?
 Col. Rumsey. The Resolution was still to carry it on. We went thither to know of Mr. Goodenough what was done about the other thirteen Parts; he told us he had no Account, but he said, he thought he should have a Meeting on Saturday in the Afternoon at Ludgate-Hill, at the George, to have his Answer; but the Discovery coming, there did only meet Mr. Norton, Mr. Bourn;—there was another, I don't know who the other was; there was a fourth.
 Mr. Att. Gen. Mr. Rumsey, Pray, after the Discovery, What did you resolve upon? What Meetings had you upon your Flight?
 Col. Rumsey. We met at Capt. Tracy's.
 Mr. Att. Gen. What Day was that?
 Col. Rumsey. That was upon the Monday after the Discovery.
 Mr. Serj. Jeff. Who was there?
 Col. Rumsey. There was Capt. Walcot, Mr. West, Mr. Wade, Mr. Nelthrop, the two Goodenoughs, and Mr. Ferguson.
 Mr. Att. Gen. What did you Discourse of there?
 Col. Rumsey. There was exclaiming against Mr. Keeling, and taking Resolutions to be gone.
 L. C. J. Mr. Keeling! What was Keeling?
 Col. Rumsey. Mr. Keeling was he that made the Discovery.
 Mr. Serj. Jeff. Have you ever been in Keeling's Company?
 Col. Rumsey. I was that time we met at the Salutation; he came in there for a quarter of an Hour.
 L. C. J. Look you, Sir, Do you know Capt. Walcot? Are you sure it is that Gentleman at the Bar?
 Col. Rumsey. Yes, my Lord.
 L. C. J. Hath he owned always the Name of Walcot?
 Col. Rumsey. Yes, my Lord.
 L. C. J. What did he say to Mr. Keeling, when he came to the Salutation?
 Col. Rumsey. There was in that very Day's Gazette a Report of the Rising at Cologne, and one Gulick that headed them; and said Mr. West to Keeling, he should be our Gulick.
 Mr. Att. Gen. Pray, how did he interpret it at that time?
 Col. Rumsey. Mr. West said, that Gulick was Keeling, Gu was Keel, and Lik was ing.
 Mr. Serj. Jeff. A Quirk upon his Name.
 Mr. Att. Gen. When you resolved to fly, had you any Discourse of making a Stand, and fighting the Government then?
 Col. Rumsey. Not that I know of, I was not all the time with them.
 L. C. J. Look you, Colonel Rumsey, let me ask you this: What was Keeling to do? Was there any Post assigned to Keeling in this?
 Col. Rumsey. I never saw him before.
 L. C. J. How long was it before the Discovery that you did see him?
 Col. Rumsey. The Thursday before.
 L. C. J. At the Salutation Tavern?
 Col. Rumsey. Yes: He was there call'd Gulick.
 Mr. Serj. Jeff. If Capt. Walcot will ask him any Questions, he may.
 L. C. J. Look you, Mr. Walcot, Now you may ask Col. Rumsey; tell me what Questions you would have asked, and I will ask him.
 Capt. Walcot. I desire Colonel Rumsey may be asked, Whether I ever met at Mr. West's Chamber, till after his Majesty's Return from Newmarket?
 L. C. J. Look you, Sir, you hear the Question; it is, Whether ever Mr. Walcot met with Mr. West, till after the King's Return from Newmarket?
 Col. Rumsey. Till after?
 L. C. J. Till after the King's Return.—Col. Rumsey. Yes, Sir.
 Capt. Walcot. My Lord, I have sufficient Evidence against that.
 Mr. Serj. Jeff. I think that he was to undertake the Guards; that was before the King came from Newmarket.
 L. C. J. He hath given this Evidence, He was there, and he would not attack the Coach; he would not meddle with the King, but he would fall upon the Guards.

Capt. Walcot. Shall I speak a Word, my Lord?
 L. C. J. Look you, I will tell you, you shall have your Answers to these things; you have Pen, Ink, and Paper.
 Capt. Walcot. But I have a bad Memory, and I am afraid I shall forget this very Thing.
 Mr. Serj. Jeff. I hope the Jury will not forget it.
 L. C. J. Look you, Mr. Walcot, we must not admit you to break in upon the King's Evidence. When that is heard, you shall have your Liberty to make your Answer to any thing, and call any Witness.
 Col. Rumsey. My Lord, I will give one Instance more: There was one Meeting at the Five Bells in the Strand, where there was only Ferguson, Captain Rumbold, Mr. West, Goodenough, and myself: And Mr. Ferguson told us that Night, that Captain Walcot would come the next Meeting we had at Mr. West's Chamber.
 L. C. J. Then Captain Walcot was not with you at the Five Bells?
 Col. Rumsey. Mr. Ferguson told us he would come in the next time at Mr. West's Chamber, and there he did come.
 L. C. J. And that was before the King went to Newmarket. Pray, Sir, answer this, Was this before the King went to Newmarket, or not?
 Col. Rumsey. No, my Lord, this was when he was at Newmarket; for the King was at Newmarket when he and Mr. Ferguson came from Holland, the King was then at Newmarket.
 Mr. Serj. Jeff. Now we will call Mr. Keeling. [Who was sworn.
 Mr. Att. Gen. Pray, will you acquaint my Lord, and the Jury, what you know of these Conspiracies touching this Man.
 Mr. Keeling. Some time, my Lord, before the King went to Newmarket, I was at the Sun-Tavern, and in company with Richard Rumbold, Richard Goodenough, and some others. Goodenough calls me forth of the Room, and asked me, what Men I could procure? I asked him, For what Purpose? He said, To go down towards Newmarket. I asked, for what End? He said, To kill the King, and the Duke of York. I told him, I thought none. Before the King came from Newmarket he renewed his Question to me again several times: I had in the Interim some Discourse with Burton and Thompson. Burton told me, That Barber would be concern'd; and he also told me, Thompson would. The Saturday after the Fire happened at Newmarket, Rumbold came down to my House on the Friday, the Day that the News was of the Fire, the Day that he commonly came to Town, he came to my House; it was on the Friday, to see those Men I could procure, and he desired to see them on the Morrow, which was the Saturday before the King returned. The Saturday after the Fire I went into London, and met Mr. Rumbold that Day at the Exchange, and he then put me in Mind of the Matter again. I did go to Burton and Thompson, and Barber; the Place appointed on Saturday was the Mitre-Tavern, at the Corner of Duke's-place within Aldgate. He did meet there, where there was some Discourse happened tending to that Matter by Rumbold; the Substance of which was, Whether they were willing to go down? I think he called the Place by the Name of The Rye, that is his House; there being, says he, no greater Conveniency than in that, I believe scarce in England, for the executing such a Design, being an House very intire to itself, and very remote from Neighbours, besides the Advantage that belongs to it of a Court or Wall. And, among other Discourse, this was an Argument to prevail with those Persons: For, saith he, it will be a keeping one of the Commandments, to kill the King and the Duke of York; for, says he, if that be not done, there will be otherwise a great deal of Bloodshed committed. He also told us the way that he design'd to effect this at his House; That he had a Conveniency for our Horses; and that there would be so many to shoot at the Postilion and the Horses; and there would be so many appointed at the Coach, and so many Men to attack the Guards: and if there was a Failure in shooting the Coach-horses, that then there should be Men in the Habit of Country-men, with a Cart in the Lane, and they should run this Cart athwart the Lane, and so stop the Coach. I believe there might be some other Particulars, which, at present, I do not remember. From thence we went to the Exchange, and there we met in the Afternoon at the Dolphin-Tavern in Bartholomew-Lane; there was Rumbold, West, Goodenough, and Hone the Joyner. And after we had been there a little, West asked Rumbold, Whether he heard the King would come home that Night? He said, Yes, he heard so; but said West, I believe he won't come till Monday, and I hope he won't come till Saturday; for that was the Day appointed to go down to the Rye, to meet the King and the Duke of York. Said Rumbold, I hope they will not come till then: But, said West, if they do come, How many Swan-quills must you have? How many Goose-quills? And how many Crow-quills, with Sand and Ink, must you have? Said they, Six Swan-quills, Twenty Goose-quills, and Twenty or Thirty Crow-quills.
 L. C. J. Explain that.
 Mr. Keeling. I am coming to it. I asked West or Rumbold, or both of them, what they intended by it? They told me Swan-quills were Blunderbusses, Goose-quills Muskets, and Crow-quills were Pistols, Sand and Ink, Powder and Bullet. This is all, my Lord, as I remember in general as to the Design.
 L. C. J. What can you say concerning the Prisoner at the Bar?
 Mr. Keeling. I was at the Salutation-Tavern, and Captain Walcot was there; and when I came in, there was some Person called me Culing, and I a little stranged at it, not knowing the Meaning. Says I, Gentlemen, What do you design by it? Says one, Here's a good Health to our English Culing. Says West, Culing in Dutch is Keeling in English. And says Mr. West, I hope to see Mr. Keeling at the Head of as good an Army in Wapping, as Culing is at Collen. I suppose Captain Walcot remembers it very well. I can say no more, Sir, to the Prisoner at the Bar; I remember not to have seen him any other time upon this Design.
 Mr. Serj. Jeff. Would the Prisoner at the Bar ask him any Questions?
 Capt. Walcot. My Lord, I don't remember any such thing. If you please, my Lord, to ask him, whether I call'd him Culing, or said any thing more or less to him.
 Mr. Keeling. I don't say you did, but you were by, that I say.
 Mr. Serj. Jeff. I think, Mr. Keeling, you were the Person that made the Discovery; give an Account of it for the Satisfaction of the World.
 L. C. J. Upon what Occasion did you reveal this?

Mr. Keeling. If your Lordship please, I will give you an Account. There was something happened before that time. Some time before this thing was discovered, Goodenough came down to my House, and I went with him to drink a Dish of Coffee, and there was in Company with him Richard Rumbold, and his Brother William, that I believe Mr. Walcot knows; and when we were by ourselves, he pulls out some Papers out of his Pocket, and gave me one. I asked him what he meant. He told me he had divided the City and Suburbs into twenty Parts, and there were three Divisions: And, says he, you know the Persons better than I, and who you can trust with it. One is for yourself, and I would have you take to your Assistance nine or ten Men, more or less, that you may communicate it safely to; and they were to go to several Persons, and ask them, Supposing that the Papists should rise, or that there should be a general Insurrection, or a French Invasion, are you in a Posture of Defence? This was all we were to communicate of the Matter to them, and this was to feel them, and see how many Men they could raise. And he told me there was a Design to kill the King, and the Duke, which was designed to be done at the Bull-feast; for Mr. West had told me it was to be done between Windsor and Hampton-Court. I asked him, If that Design went on; and he said No; for the Duke of York seldom came with the King from Windsor to Hampton-Court, but it was to be at the Bull-feast. And says he, these Men are to be in a Readiness, and it's design'd, that the thing should be laid upon the Papists as a Branch of the Popish-plot. He also told me, there was one drawing a Declaration which would relieve poor People of that which seemed most burdensome to them, which was the Chimney-money: and then the common People would fall in with them more readily.

Mr. Att. Gen. How came you to discover it?

Mr. Keeling. I will tell you, Sir: I was troubled in my Mind about it, and do declare that was the only Reason. I thought I did very ill in not discovering it, and I had no Peace, nor Satisfaction, nor Content, nor did I mind my Business, nor could I take the Rest that at other Times I did, and that was the moving Cause, and no other. I thought, if it were a Sin in David to cut off the Hem of Saul's Garment, it was a Sin in me much more to kill my King.

L. C. J. Was there any Post in this Case assign'd to you? Was it requir'd of you to do any thing yourself, more than to raise those Men, and know whether they were in Readiness? Were you design'd to go down to Rumbold's House? Tell what Part you were to act.

Mr. Keeling. In the first place, I was to raise some Men; but I thought they looked upon me for one to go down myself with some Men I raised; but I remember not that I was ask'd the Question.

L. C. J. Were any of those Men to go down?

Mr. Keeling. Those three I named were to go down, Burton, Thompson, and Barber.

Mr. Att. Gen. Call Mr. Bourn.

L. C. J. Tell us the Manner of your revealing and discovering this, who you discovered it to?—Mr. Keeling. I revealed it to one Mr. Peckham.

L. C. J. Who did he bring you to?

Mr. Keeling. To my Lord Dartmouth.

L. C. J. And so you did discover the whole Business to him?

Mr. Keeling. I had offered to discover it to another Man before, but I thought he was careless; so I did not tell him positively what I thought to tell him, because I saw he slighted the Matter. He was a Minister of the Church of England. Then I went to Mr. Peckham, knowing he was intimate at Court, and from thence to my Lord Dartmouth, and then I was carried to Mr. Secretary Jenkins.

Mr. Att. Gen. Was there no Design to take off the Mayor or the Sheriffs in particular?

Mr. Keeling. I will tell you: Goodenough did tell me, That the Design was to secure the Lord Mayor, and the Sheriffs; and he told me, they had a Design to secure the Tower.

Mr. Att. Gen. Were you employ'd to arrest my Lord Mayor?

Mr. Keeling. I did arrest my Lord Mayor.

L. C. J. What are you? How come you to arrest my Lord Mayor? What are you by Profession?

Mr. Keeling. A White Salter, or Oyl-man.

L. C. J. How came you to arrest my Lord Mayor?

Mr. Keeling. I was put upon it by Goodenough and those Men.

L. C. J. As a special Bailiff?

Mr. Att. Gen. He was a special Bailiff.

Mr. Keeling. Under the Coroner?

Mr. Serj. Jeff. A special Bailiff under a Special Coroner.

Mr. Bar. Street. Was this Coroner at any time of your Meetings?

Mr. Keeling. No, my Lord.

Mr. Bar. Street. I am glad he was not.

L. C. J. What say you, Capt. Walcot?

Capt. Walcot. My Lord, I have nothing to say.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Call Zachary Bourn. [Who was sworn.]

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray will you recollect yourself, and tell what Knowledge you have of the Prisoner, what Meetings you had, and what was agreed?

L. C. J. Raise your Voice a little.

Mr. Bourn. The Occasion of my knowing Capt. Walcot, was Mr. Ferguson's lodging at my House. Capt. Walcot used to come thither, but it was some time before I changed any Words with him.

Mr. Att. Gen. Speak aloud, Mr. Bourn.

Mr. Bourn. Mr. Wade came presently after I came to Town from the Wells, and said I must needs meet in such a Place, it was at the Dragon upon Snow-hill, where we met several others besides Capt. Walcot: The Business was a Design to raise Men, and divide the City into twenty Divisions, in order to the securing of his Majesty, and the Duke of York, and setting up the Duke of Monmouth.

L. C. J. Was it securing, or killing?

Mr. Bourn. It was not killing, I think; we never expressed it killing at those Meetings. I think, every time I met them, Capt. Walcot was there. Once I was at the Salutation in Lombard-street.

L. C. J. What was the Result of your Meetings?

Mr. Bourn. To make all Expedition imaginable.

L. C. J. Was it discours'd how, or in what manner, those Persons were to be raised? Don't refer yourself to the Evidence that went before, but tell it yourself.

Mr. Bourn. The City was to be divided into twenty Divisions, and to raise as many Men as they could out of them; but they were not to tell the direct Business, but if there should be Occasion, or the Papists should rise, they might know their Strength, and what they were able to do.

Mr. Att. Gen. This was their Pretence, because it should not be told those Men.

L. C. J. Did Mr. Goodenough bring any Account of it?

Mr. Bourn. Mr. Goodenough brought an Account of about four thousand; three, I think it was, or very near, out of those Divisions he had an Account of.

L. C. J. Was Capt. Walcot there at that Time?

Mr. Bourn. Yes.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. When the Discourse was about securing the King, and the Duke, was Captain Walcot there?

Mr. Bourn. Yes.

L. C. J. Did you hear what Parties were design'd to be in this Act?

Mr. Bourn. They were not come to that.

L. C. J. Did you break off from them before that?

Mr. Bourn. No, the Discovery prevented it.

L. C. J. When was your first Meeting? About what Time?

Mr. Bourn. About ten Days before the Discovery was made.

L. C. J. Was Mr. West at any of your Consults?

Mr. Bourn. Yes, at some of them, and Captain Walcot was at three of them, if not at all, I think.

L. C. J. What was to be done?

Mr. Bourn. They were to have seized my Lord Mayor, and the two Sheriffs, and some of the Aldermen, and the chief Ministers of State about Town.

Mr. Bar. Street. Was there any body designed for that particular Business?

Mr. Bourn. No, not then, it was not come to that.

Mr. Att. Gen. Was there any thing about my Lord Keeper?

Mr. Bourn. Yes, Mr. West did say to me, it should be my Business to secure my Lord Keeper. I told him, I did not care to meddle with any of my Neighbours. He said he would call him to Account with all his Heart, he would put him in mind of Colledge.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray were you employed to speak with any of the Non-conformist Ministers about it?

Mr. Bourn. I would have spoke to two of them, and Mr. West was unwilling; for he said, the Ministers had destroyed all Designs, ever since Constantine's time, and he would have nothing to do with them now.

Mr. Att. Gen. When was your last Meeting, before the Discovery, that you were at?

Mr. Bourn. The Saturday before the Discovery we met at Captain Tracy's, and that Evening we had some Intimation that there was a Discovery made. And I went again on Monday Morning.

Mr. Att. Gen. Who was there?

Mr. Bourn. Captain Walcot, Mr. Ferguson, Mr. Goodenough, Mr. West, Mr. Norton, and myself; one Captain Kettle came in, but he did not stay.

Mr. Att. Gen. Colonel Rumsey was there too, was not he?

Mr. Bourn. Yes, Sir.

L. C. J. And what did you resolve upon then?

Mr. Bourn. Truly they resolved upon nothing; I left them upon the Debate of killing Mr. Keeling.

Mr. Att. Gen. Why would they kill him? Was that debated among them?

Mr. Bourn. Yes; because he made the Discovery.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did you hear them talk of standing to it with Swords in their Hands?

Mr. Bourn. Yes, rather than be hang'd, they thought that was the better way, and to have Keeling dispatched out of the World.

L. C. J. Look you, Sir, did any of them talk of securing themselves?

Mr. Bourn. The next Morning I went again, and they were all gone but Mr. West, they had all secured themselves.

L. C. J. Was the Prisoner at the Bar there at that time, when they consulted about killing Mr. Keeling? Was he there at that Meeting on Monday Morning?

Mr. Bourn. He was there at Captain Tracy's; he was there, I think, all the while, while I was there; for I was not there all the time.

L. C. J. (To Walcot.) Now, Sir, what Question would you have?

Capt. Walcot. My Lord, if you please, I would ask whether he ever heard me say any thing, more or less, of assassinating the King?

L. C. J. In the first place, did you hear any thing in general of assassinating the King?

Mr. Bourn. I did hear of it, my Lord, when the thing was over. And as to his Question, I did never hear him discourse of that Matter. I understood the Design was prevented.

L. C. J. Who did you understand that from?

Mr. Bourn. From one Mr. Row, and Mr. Ferguson.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray, in all your Meetings, was there no Discourse of killing the King and the Duke?

Mr. Bourn. Very little.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. The Discourse was about securing the King, while Walcot was there?

Mr. Bourn. There was such Discourse in several Meetings. It was said, it would be well if they were off, and the Discourse was about Lopping.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray tell my Lord, what Discourse you had of Lopping, and the general Point.

Mr. Bourn. They said, there was no way like Lopping them.

Mr. Att. Gen. What was understood by that?

Mr. Bourn. The taking off the King, and the Duke of York.

L. C. J. Was that the usual Phrase among you to signify that?

Mr. Bourn. Yes, my Lord.

L. C. J. Was he there?

Mr. Bourn. I have heard it several times, and I suppose he was at the hearing of it.

L. C. J.

L. C. J. (To Walcot.) Look you Sir, he speaks of the time of Discourse of securing the King, and says you were there then.

Capt. Walcot. I had no hand in it.

Mr. Att. Gen. We will nail it home upon you; we will call Mr. West.
[Who was sworn.]
Mr. Serj. Jeff. Come, Mr. West, do you tell my Lord and the Jury the whole Story.

Mr. West. My Lord, I came acquainted with the Prisoner at the Bar last Summer Vacation, by the Knowledge of one Wilcocks, who, I suppose, return'd his Money out of Ireland. I heard a very fair Character of him, and he, I suppose, met with such an one of me; which did incline us both to an Intimacy, and to talk freely with one another. About the Middle of October, I observ'd a general Discontent in the City, and was afraid there was some Design in hand, and was very inquisitive to know it: I was unwilling to be involved and surpris'd into a sudden Ruin, and so thought fit to inquire of them that were most likely to be concerned. I took Capt. Walcot for one, being inform'd that my Lord Shaftesbury had sent for him out of Ireland; and Capt. Walcot told me, that my Lord was also sending for some Scottish Gentlemen, on occasion of Carolina; but that he was very cool in Carolina Business, and that that was but a Pretence. My Lord, one Morning Capt. Walcot came to my Chamber, and we discours'd concerning the Election of Sheriffs carried on in the City, contrary, as we thought, to the Justice of it: Says he, Will the People do nothing to secure themselves? With that he told me a Secret, and said there was a Design of an Insurrection to be made within three Weeks or a Month, that would make us free, or worse. I told him, I thought it was a certain way to bring us in a worse Condition, and that it was very full of Hazards. He told me then, he did not know whether he should be concerned: But a little while after he told me, my Lord Shaftesbury was engag'd in such a Design, and he had engag'd him in it, and he told me, he had an Expectation of being a Colonel of Horse, and ask'd me, If I would have any Command under him? I told him, I knew some Gentlemen of the Temple that I might engage in it; but told him, I had not a Constitution to bear the Toils of War. My Lord, he told me then, That my Lord Shaftesbury, to the best of my Remembrance, had another Design upon the King and the Duke, as they came from Newmarket in October last; but he told me he abhor'd any such thing, it was ungenerous, and he would not be concern'd in it; but only in a general Insurrection. But this he did tell me, I think, before the thing was to be executed. I imparted it to nobody, till after the Time of both was past: But in the Discourse of the Insurrection, he told me, I should lend him a Suit of Silk Armour, which I bought about four or five Years ago, when the Popish Plot broke out; and he would have had me kept that, and used it myself, which I did decline. Then he told me he had very good Swords in Ireland, but he wanted them here. Says he, I am a Man that am observ'd, because I have a Correspondence with my Lord Shaftesbury; and ask'd me, If I would provide him a good stiff Tuck. I told him I would, and I did bespeak one; but before it was done, the Design was laid aside, and the Tuck was left upon my Hands. I came to understand, that the Design was put off by means of Mr. Trenchard, who had discours'd about a Fortnight before of great Forces he could raise in the West; and the Duke of Monmouth sent for him, but his Heart fail'd him, and he could not raise any Men; upon which, my Lord Grey called him Coxcomb. This was about the 19th of November.

Mr. Att. Gen. What Time of November?—Mr. West. The 19th.

Mr. Att. Gen. But upon what Day?

Mr. West. Queen Elizabeth's Day.

Mr. Att. Gen. No, Sir, that is the 17th.

Mr. West. Now after this I understood by Capt. Walcot, that Mr. Ferguson had the Management and Conduct of the Assassination in October, and that he likewise was acquainted with the Insurrection, and was a great Man in it. I met with Mr. Ferguson, and fell into Discourse with him, and he treated me, as he always did, with a long Story of the Miseries of Scotland, and that the People were all in Slavery and Bondage, and would be so here, if they did not free themselves: And, says he, there are two ways thought upon for it; one is by a general Insurrection, and that is gone off; the other is a much more compendious way, by killing the King, and the Duke of York. My Lord, I told him, I thought the first way was a very dangerous way, that the People were in no sort of Capacity to carry it on, that the Government had the Navy and the Militia, and this would at the best entail a long War. He told me he thought the other was the best way, and we went to a Tavern, where Col. Rumsey, and one Row, and he and I, went divers times. They propos'd to meet at my Chamber as a Place of Privacy, and little Observation. My Lord, when they came to my Chamber, Mr. Ferguson propos'd several ways of doing it. One way was, as the King and Duke had their private Visits in St. James's, where it was an easy thing for Sword-men to kill them. There is one thing I have omitted, and that was after the Design of October had miscarried, I think, to the best of my Remembrance, Capt. Walcot told me, there was another Design of attacking the King and the Duke at my Lord Mayor's Feast in the Hall, or in their Return home, in Paul's Church-yard, or at Ludgate; and Mr. Ferguson did likewise tell me the same thing, but the King not dining there, the thing was wholly disappointed. Another way that he propos'd was, that they should do it as the King and the Duke went down the River, they should lie behind some small Ships within a Hey, or some such thing, and so over-run their Barge; and if that fail'd, they should break a Plank with their Blunderbusses, and so sink them. Another way was at the Play-house, and that was to be done in this manner; there should be 40 or 50 Men got into the Pit with Pocket-blunderbusses, or Hand-blunderbusses, and Pistols and Swords; and when the Music struck up between the Acts, they should be upon the Box; but this they thought was hazardous, and therefore they thought it better to do it as he came back, and pitched upon Covent-Garden under Bedford-Garden Wall, because there was a Conveniency for great many Men to walk in the Piazza, and there might be another Parcel of Men planted at Covent-Garden Church-Porch, and within the Walls, where Horses could not come; and while the Men within the Rails fired, the Men in the Piazza might engage the Guards, and they in the Church-porch to come down, and secure them from escaping.

Mr. Sol. Gen. When was this Time?

Mr. West. I think it was before Mr. Ferguson went for Holland. And, my Lord, there was another thing propos'd: I think it was Colonel Rumsey did say, He wonder'd that the Lords and great Men, that were so fond of the thing, did not raise a Purse, and buy somebody an Office, who should rail against the Duke of Monmouth, and the Whigs, and by that means get himself an Opportunity of Access to the King's Person. My Lord, after these Discourses, when my Lord Shaftesbury retir'd to Holland, Mr. Ferguson thought fit to do so too: He was afraid of a Book that he had printed, and away he went, and Captain Walcot with him. In the mean time I met Col. Rumsey several times, and several things were offer'd but nothing resolv'd upon. A little after Christmas we met at the Salutation Tavern in Lombard-street, and there it was agreed we should send for Mr. Ferguson; and there I writ a canting Letter, that he would come over for his Health; for he was the only Man that could manage the Affair. When he came over, there was one Meeting at the Five-Bells, but I came just as they were coming away, and cannot say what pass'd there. After that, they came several times to my Chamber; and there Mr. Ferguson, Mr. Goodenough, and Mr. Rumbold, undertook to provide the Men.

L. C. J. The Men, for what?

Mr. West. The Men for the Assassination: That I was not concern'd in, either in Person or Purse, or to procure any body for it. And they did agree to do it in the going to or from Newmarket, and thereupon were several Debates, whether it should be done at their going, or coming back. Against doing it going down, it was objected, That the Guards were left here and there, and they went together; but very often they returned apart, and therefore it was not the safest way going down; and nothing also being prepared, so it was resolv'd to be done coming back. Then it was consider'd what Arms should be provided: Mr. Rumbold was the Man to manage that Matter, and was to procure some Blunderbusses, some Carbines, and some Pistols; but there was nothing to be prepared, as I know of, by other Persons, but every Man was to provide himself. Several Meetings there were, they brought their Notes, and conferr'd together about the Men; but I remember no Names, but Keeling, and Burton; and Mr. Goodenough said, he had spoke to one Hone a Joyner; and, I think, he spoke of one Manning, and these are all the Names I can remember. After they had conferr'd their Notes, I ask'd Mr. Ferguson, what Provisions of Money he had made. Says he, I shall have Money when the Men are provided, but not till then: For, said he, the last time there was some Money rais'd, and put into a Man's Hand, who never returned it; but since I understand it was paid to Mr. Goodenough. And Mr. Ferguson said, Mr. Goodenough call'd him Fool, for returning some Money he had, and not keeping it for his own Use; and my Lord Shaftesbury had often complain'd of that Injustice done him: The Colonel said, Mr. Charlton should pay the Money. There was a further Debate, how these Arms would be got down to Mr. Rumbold's: It was propos'd, to send them down by Smithfield Carts in Chests: Others, to send them down by trusty Watermen, who were to cover them with Oysters: Others, that the Men should carry them; but no Resolution taken: Then it was consider'd, how they should get off. The next thing was, how they should execute this; and it was propos'd, That one Party was to fall upon the Coach-horses, a second upon the Coach, a third upon the Guards: Captain Walcot would not undertake any thing but the Guards.

Capt. Walcot. What do you say, Sir?

Mr. West. Sir, I do say, you were at my Chamber, and did say, you were to command that Party of Horse that were to attack the Guards. It was to be done at Rumbold's House; they were to lie there Perdue, till the King just came down upon them.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. At the Time of the Assassination?

Mr. West. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Att. Gen. Where were these Arms to be carried?

Mr. West. To Rumbold's House. I did not see it: But he said he could keep them all private, where nobody could see them till the Time of the Execution; and that there was a Gate they were to pass through, that he could shut upon the Horse-Guards, that they should not be able to come in for their Relief. Mr. Rumbold said, he would bring them off; and said, he thought it dangerous for them to go the Road-way; but he would bring them over the Meadows, and come in by Hackney-marsh: But the way which the Prisoner did most approve of, was, That they should retire within his Wall, there keep till Night, being a Place they could defend against any Force for a Day's time.

Mr. Att. Gen. Where was this Resolution taken?

Mr. West. This Resolution was taken at my Chamber: My Lord, as to the Attempt, when they design'd to make it upon the King's coming from the Play-house, one Mr. Row said, he had discours'd with one Gibbons, that was the Duke of Monmouth's Servant, about it, and ask'd him, If any of their Family knew of it? Yes, says he, they all know of it, but they will not be seen in't; and said, that he shew'd him the Place. My Lord, in one of the Discourses I had before Mr. Ferguson went for Holland, I had a mind to be rid of the thing, but I did not know how; so I created Difficulties, and said, I suppose the Duke of Monmouth is to get most by it: What Security will you have, you shall not be hang'd when the thing is done? He is bound, said I, in Honour to hang us all, and make Inquisition for this Blood, otherwise they will say he is a Party. Says he, What if I get it under his Hand? But, said I, Engage his Servants, and that will stick upon him. There is one thing I have omitted, which was in the first Discourse with Captain Walcot about the Insurrection of November; he told me, that my Lord Shaftesbury was preparing a Declaration to be published, in case of an Assassination or Insurrection; and he ask'd me, if I would undertake to do one too? For, says he, I would have several People draw it, to pick one good one out of all. And he told me he had made some Collections towards it, and shew'd me a Paper, which was a Collection of all the Passages in the Three King's Reigns, King James, Charles I. and this King's, that he call'd Attempts to introduce roduce arbitrary Government and Popery; and concluded, taxing them with some personal Vices, and that the Government was dissolved, and they were free to settle another Government: These I perceiv'd, were the Topicks my Lord Shaftesbury laid Weight upon. I told him that this did require an exact knowledge of the history of those times, and I would not undertake a thing to which I was not competent; and so he desired me to burn the Paper, which I did; But for any other Declaration, my Lord Shaftesbury kept his Paper to himself; and I never did see it, tho' I desir'd it.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Can you remember in whose Name the Declaration was to run?

Mr. West. No, I do not remember that.

Mr. Att. Gen. After the Disappointment, what Meetings had you?

Mr. West. Sir, I will tell you: When the News of the Fire came, they adjourn'd to my Chamber, and there consider'd what they should do: they were in no Readiness, nor had any Horfes; nay, I believe the thing could not have been effected, if the Fire had not happened; and I was very glad it could not; but for that, I am in the Charity of the Court. They did endeavour to put Things in a Posture, to see if it could be done another Day; I think they met on Thursday Night, and Friday Night; but they said, the King would be at home the next Day, and the thing was laid aside. My Lord, a Day, I think, or two after, I went into the City, and went to the Dolphin Tavern, where I met with Colonel Rumsey, and this Mr. Keeling came in, he was there talking of Blunderbusses and Pistols in downright English: I told him, it was a foolish thing to talk so before Drawers, and that was the Occasion of calling them by the Names of Swan-quills, Goose-quills, and Crow-quills. After this thing we met the next Week, not at my Chamber, Colonel Rumsey was mistaken in that, but at the George and Vultur. There was Capt. Walcot, Mr. Goodenough, Mr. Ferguson, one Norton, and one Ayliff: They discours'd of the late Disappointment; and that one Reason was, they had not Arms in Readiness. Then they agreed, that Arms should be bought, and the Number was ten Blunderbusses, that should be twenty or two-and-twenty Inches in the Barrel: Thirty Carbines, eighteen Inches: And thirty Cases of Pistols, to be fourteen Inches. My Lord, it was put upon me to provide them, for this Reason, because I was serviceable to them no other way, and could have a Pretence for buying them, because I had a Plantation in America; but Mr. Ferguson was to pay the Money. My Lord, I did bespeak the Arms, and paid for them with my own Money, and was not paid again a great while; Mr. Ferguson disappointed me; but at last told me, if I would send to Major Wildman, he would pay me. But he told me before that, one Mr. Charlton, when he came to Town, would pay me, but I had none of him. So I told him, I bought those Arms upon a Pretence I intended to use them, and had spoke to a Sea-Captain to carry them off to a Plantation where I had a Concern myself. After that, Mr. Ferguson sent to me to take my Money: So I came to him; and found with him Mr. Charlton, and another Gentleman, whom I could not distinguish, because it was duskish. Mr. Charlton went down, and then says Mr. Ferguson, I have your Money for you; and he paid me in fourscore and thirteen Guineas, which was something more than the Arms cost; and said, He had not the Money above half an Hour in his Hands; by which I did guess, it was Mr. Charlton's Money. Another thing was, at last meeting with Mr. Ferguson, he did say, There was a Man employ'd to see what Convenience there would be for an Assassination between Windsor and Hampton-Court; but that was never reported, and so laid aside. This is all I can say concerning the Assassination; but I believe they did intend to carry it on; for Colonel Rumsey did tell me, He saw the Hearts of all the great Men were upon it; and it would be convenient to have an Army to back it. But in case this Assassination had gone on, these things were to be done. It was design'd, the Lord Mayor and the Sheriffs should be kill'd, and as many of the Lieutenantcy as they could get; and the principal Ministers of State, my Lord Halifax, and my Lord Rocheester that now is, and my Lord Keeper; for which they gave this Reason, because he had the Great Seal; and my Lord Rocheester, as like to stand by the Duke's Interest; and my Lord Halifax, as being one that had profess'd himself of the Party before, and turn'd from the right Side, and had put the Court upon that which otherwise they never would have acted, nor had the Courage to have done. As for my Lord Keeper, They said they would hang him for the Murder of Colledge, and upon the same Post Colledge had hung. Sir John Moore was to be kill'd, and to be hung up in Guild-hall, as a Traytor of the Rights and Liberties of the City: And your Lordships to be slay'd and stuff'd, and hung up in Westminster-hall, and a great many of the Pensional Parliament hang'd up, as Traytors of the Rights of the People.

L. C. J. How was this to be done? to slay them and stuff them?

Mr. West. Yes, I understood it so.

Mr. Att. Gen. At these Discourses was this Gentleman present?

Mr. West. He was not at my Chamber so often as the rest; he came not there till towards the latter End; but he was there sometimes when these things were discours'd of.

L. C. J. But you say he did at last undertake to fight the Guards?

Mr. West. Yes; Upon the News of the Fire, says he, I believe God shews his Disapprobation of the thing. Says Mr. Ferguson, I believe he reserves them for worse Punishment. Mr. Walcot said, He desired to have his Name conceal'd. Why, says Ferguson, why should you be ashamed? It is a glorious Action, and such an Action as I hope to see publicly gratified by the Parliament; and question not, but you will be famed for it, and Statues erected for you, with the Title of Liberatores Patrie.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. What was this Ferguson?

Mr. West. He is an Independent Parson.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. He preached excellent Gospel.

Mr. West. Says he, I have told some Nonconformists, and they desired me to forbear; but says he, they are silly People, that do not know how to distinguish between killing a Prince for Difference in Opinion about Religion, and destroying a Tyrant, for Preservation of the Rights and Liberties of the People. He said, it was an Action that would make all the Princes in the World tremble, and teach them to use their Subjects kindly. My Lord, they did design, at the same time when the Mayor and the Sheriffs were to be kill'd, that Mr. Papillon and Mr. Dubou, should be forced to take the Office of Sheriffs upon them; and if they would not take it, they would use them as they did the other: And that Sir Thomas Gold, or Sir John Shorter, or Alderman Cornish, should be set up for Lord Mayor; but rather Alderman Cornish, as the fitter Person. I asked them further, What they would do with the King's Natural Sons? Says he, They are good lusty Lads; I think we had as good keep them for Porters and Watermen; and for my Lady Anne, they had as good marry her to some Country Gentleman for a Breed to keep out Foreign Pretences.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. I perceive they left nothing unconsidered.

Mr. Att. Gen. Mr. West. To repeat all their Passages would fill a Volume; but as to the Continuation of the Rising, and whether it was continued?

Mr. West. I have a great many Particulars, but have them not in Method.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Answer Questions then.

Mr. West. When Mr. Rumbold came to Town, he said, he saw the King come by but with six Guards, and believed he could have done it with six Men, if he had been provided with Arms. This is all I can say, except some little Discourse, which I have not time to reduce into Method. About Christmas, Colonel Rumsey told me, there was a Design carrying on among the Lords, and great Men, by whom I always understood the Duke of Monmouth, my Lord Russel, my Lord Grey, Lord Howard, Colonel Sidney, Major Wildman, Mr. Hambden, for an Insurrection; and that this was designed to be done about March. Colonel Rumsey and I were discoursing of it; and Colonel Rumsey thought it fit to draw up some things, that we should require of them to do for the People; and a Paper was drawn up, but my Lord Russel said, they were rejected, and all should be left to the Parliament. And Colonel Rumsey said, The Duke was inclin'd to gratify the Parliament; but the Lords about him were for great Places, and they would suffer him to do nothing.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Now tell us about Culing.

Mr. West. I dined at a Tavern with Colonel Rumsey, Mr. Wade, Mr. Nelthrop, Mr. Goodenough, Capt. Walcot, and Mr. Norton.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. What was your Discourse there about?

Mr. West. There was no Discourse that had any particular Point.

Mr. Solicitor. Was there nothing of Division of the City?

Mr. West. Sir, Goodenough gave some general Account, but nothing was done upon it. While we were there, in came Mr. Keeling, to speak with Mr. Goodenough, and Mr. Nelthrop; and in the Gazette that Day was an Account of the Insurrection at Collen; and Mr. Nelthrop, when he came in, called this Man, Culing. What is that? what do you mean? says he. I was then writing a Letter, and told him, Culing in Dutch was the same as Keeling in English. Mr. Nelthrop took me aside, says he, What will you say, if I, and some Friends of mine, deliver the City, and save the Charter, and nobody shall know of it till it be done? But, says he, shall not I be hang'd for it? Said I, Take heed what you do; nobody will be hang'd for any good thing. As to the Delivering of the City, there was a Treaty between the Scots, and our Persons of Quality here; and Col. Sidney and Major Wildman had the Management of it, as I understood. At last, they came down to some Terms: They would have had 10,000*l.* to buy Arms, and came down at last to 5000*l.* and the Earl of Argyle was to head them: But when Mr. Ferguson paid me for the Arms, he told me, The Scots Business was quite off, and Wildman and Sidney had done ill with the Scots; for after they had kept them, and treated with them two or three Months, they broke off, because the Scots would not declare for a Common-wealth the first Hour, and extirpating of Monarchy, and the Family of the Stuarts: and that the Scots Answer was, That would be to destroy all their Interest among the Lords, and Providence might order it so, as to bring it to a Common-wealth: but that was a Business of Time. When this broke off, Mr. Ferguson told me, That the Duke of Monmouth was willing to speak with me, and Goodenough, and some others. I told him, I never had, nor was willing to speak with him. Then he said, Sir Thomas Armstrong would. I told him, I was not willing to speak with him neither. Mr. Goodenough, I believe, did speak with Sir Thomas Armstrong. We met at Richard's Coffee-House, and adjourn'd to the Young Devil-Tavern; there was Capt. Walcot, Col. Rumsey, Mr. Wade, Mr. Goodenough, and myself, and one Holloway a Merchant at Bristol. Mr. Holloway did propose, since the Scotch Business was broke off, that they should try what Forces they could raise here. And Mr. Ferguson did say, if three thousand Men could be had, he believed the Duke of Monmouth, and my Lord Russel, would appear at the Head of them. They were to divide the City into 20 Parts, each 20th Part into 14ths and 15ths, and to divide it into Streets and Lanes; one principal Man was to have a 20th Part, and to have Men under him; and that they should not interfere one with another, they bought a great Map of the City of London. My Lord, I did not read one Line in it, but Mr. Goodenough, being a Man of publick Acquaintance, by reason of his Office did undertake it. I think he did propose Mr. Bourn for one, and one Mr. Grains for another, and said he would speak with Mr. Keeling. We had several Meetings after this, and Mr. Goodenough did report, that there were 1300 Men out of two of the Hamlets. My Lord, I stood here while Mr. Bourn gave his Evidence; but I suppose he hath a little forgot himself; for he told me he had spoken to one Parson Lobb, and he said to him, he would try what his Congregation could do; that he had two in New-prison, and he would set them out to see what they could do; that they were poor Men, but zealous in their way. I think Mr. Bourn hath forgot himself; for he did mention, that he had spoken to Parson Lobb.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Then Parson Lobb was in; there was another Parson in.

Mr. West. Yes, and he mentioned Lobb's Pound.

Mr. Att. Gen. The Prisoner was at those several Meetings, was he not?

Mr. West. Yes, and did shew himself ready to act his Part. About a Fortnight before the Discovery brake out, Mr. Rumbold told me they had a great Jealousy Mr. Keeling would discover all the Business; that Mr. Keeling's Wife and Mother cried mightily, and charged him for neglecting his Business, and said they were afraid he would do a great deal of Mischief to honest People; for he had replied to them, he would not want Money, and he would be hang'd for nobody. Upon which Rumbold told me, If I were sure of this, says he, I would dispatch him; I would get him into the Country, and kill him; but, says he, I will not kill an innocent Man: If I thought the thing was not so, I would not kill him for all the World. Mr. Keeling told him he had an Overture from one Shoot, of fourscore Pounds a Year.

Mr. Att. Gen. After you had notice of the Discovery, did you meet?

Mr. West. The Saturday before the Discovery I dined with Mr. Rumbold, and he took Mr. Keeling along with him. Says he, We won't discourage him too much; it may be, 'tis not so. Mr. Keeling told him he never wanted Money so much in his Life. Mr. Rumbold, and one Gale, that was to be one of the Assassins, contrived to help Keeling to Money, and lent him 100l. Upon the Sunday I had notice the Thing was discovered, and that Keeling had accused me, and Mr. Goodenough, and Mr. Nelthorp. On the Monday Morning early I thought fit to retire; but we did agree to meet at Captain Walcot's Lodging. My Lord, I came thither pretty early, and all the People came afterwards, that had agreed to come thither, but they designed to go beyond Sea. I had no mind to go. They had hired a Boat, and gave 5l. in Earnest; but the next Morning it was said the Messengers were abroad, and that it was believed the River was beset, and there was no getting away. Then every Man shifted for himself, and I shifted by the means of Mr. Bourn, who, I thank him, helped me to a Convenience for two or three Days. When we were all retired, they got Mr. Keeling in the City, and Rumbold discoursed him in the Presence of several People, where he wished a great many Imprecations upon himself, if he had discovered. I told them I did not understand him; for if he had made a Discovery, it was a fine way to catch People in. Then there was a Discourse of killing him. They proposed to him to go out of Town. He refused them, but said, he would go in a few Days. That Night they followed him, and upon tracing of him they found he had called out his Brother, and that he and his Brother were gone to the Secretary's; and then it was taken for granted, that Discovery was made, and every Man must shift for himself. Had not Keeling deceived them at that Meeting at the Tavern, by the Protestations he made, somebody had killed him there. Then Mr. Wade said, If the Duke of Monmouth would go into the West, we might try a push for it; and the Prisoner at the Bar said, I am satisfied God will deliver the Nation, though he does not approve of the present Instruments.

L. C. J. Have you done as to this Gentleman at the Bar?

Capt. Walcot. When was it that I should say these Words? Then I desire your Lordship would ask him, how many Months ago it was he says I gave him the Paper?

Mr. West. It was in October.

Capt. Walcot. Then whether I did not then lie ill of the Gout?

Mr. West. Not at that time, my Lord. This that I say of the Paper, was given me at my Chamber, and then I think he was pretty well.

Capt. Walcot. My Lord, I am not so natural a Fool to think, for me to charge the Guards, when another Man kills the King, but I am as guilty as he that kills him.

L. C. J. No doubt of it.

Mr. West. Capt. Walcot, I would not take away your Life to save my own; but I do take it upon me, that you did agree to command, or be one of those that were to fight the Guards.

L. C. J. What was the Reason he would not kill the King?

Mr. West. He said it was a base thing that way, being a naked Person, and he would not do it.

L. C. J. So the Point is the same; but only you distinguished in the Point of your mistaken Honour, and thought to kill the King was not so honourable a Point as to fight his Guards.

Capt. Walcot. There is no Difference between the one and the other; to do one and the other is the same thing.

L. C. J. Your Judgment is now rectified; but what say you to the Matter? For now you hear what is fastened upon you, that is, several Consults about the securing or killing the King; and your Advice was to kill him, and you did go down to Rumbold's House, to view the Place where it might be done the more securely; and you did undertake, as several Witnesses say, not only Mr. West, but Col. Rumsey, and another of them, (Bourn I think it was) That you would fight the Guards, if you might have a considerable Number of Men.

Capt. Walcot. My Lord, if ever I was at Mr. Rumbold's House, unless it was when I travelled from York by Norwich, and came to London; if ever I was there since, then I am guilty of all the Roguery imaginable.

Mr. West. I never heard, my Lord, Mr. Rumbold say he was there, but Col. Rumsey told me so.

Col. Rumsey. My Lord, he bought an Horse, and he said, he did intend to go down; and indeed, to the best of my Remembrance, he did say he was down; but I am not certain: But he did buy an Horse that cost him, I think, Twenty Pounds.

L. C. J. For that Purpose?

Col. Rumsey. Yes.

L. C. J. Now you hear, this is a little more particular than the other; Colonel Rumsey did say before, that you did agree to go down, and, as he believes, you did go down.

Col. Rumsey. I believe Mr. West may remember he bought an Horse for that Purpose.

Mr. West. I remember he bought an Horse for Service, but I can't say it was to go down thither.

L. C. J. It does import you tell us upon what Account you met so often, and what was your Meaning in hearing these Things, and consulting of them, and what your raising of Men was for, and the Declaration written for the People, to please the People when this Assassination was over?

Capt. Walcot. The Declaration, Mr. West says, was in October last.

Mr. West. I take it to be so, my Lord, to the best of my Remembrance; there was this Passage: Says he, I believe in a Month or three Weeks you will be better or worse; so that I measure it by that.

VOL. III.

Capt. Walcot. My Lord, Mr. West does tell your Lordship a very long Story, and sometimes he names one Gentleman, and sometimes another. I am very fearful the Jury will be very apt to apply all to me, who was the Man least concerned; for I had the Gout for several Weeks together, and Mr. West came several times to my own Lodging to see me: And for that of assassinating the King, it never entered into my Thoughts more or less; but here are four Gentlemen, who, by their own Confession, are sufficiently culpable; they, to wipe off their own Stains, are resolved to swear me out of Life.

L. C. J. What made you among them?

Mr. West. I do take it upon me, he was there three or four times.

Capt. Walcot. I did not stir for three Weeks or a Month. I came to Town on Ash-Wednesday, and then fell ill of the Gout, and that continued for divers Weeks. For a Month's Time that the King was at Newmarket, I am confident, I was not out of my Chamber, unless I made a Shift to scramble to Stepney, and dipped my Foot in every Well of Water I came by.

Mr. West. My Lord, I do remember this Passage, That he was afraid he should not be able to draw on his Boot, because he had the Gout.

Capt. Walcot. I desire to know, my Lord, When is the Time Mr. West speaks of, that I gave an Account of killing the King at my Lord Mayor's Feast.

Mr. West. I do not charge you positively with it: but I had it from you or Mr. Ferguson; but I must do the Prisoner Justice, he said, he would be no way concerned in it.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray swear Mr. Blaithwait.

[Which was done.]

Mr. Blaithwait, Pray tell my Lord, and the Jury, whether Captain Walcot owned that to be his Hand.

A Letter being then produced from Capt. Walcot to Mr. Secretary Jenkins.

Mr. Blaithwait. My Lord, I remember, when Captain Walcot was examined before the King, he did own this to be his Hand.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Give it in.

Cl. of the Cr. Honoured Sir, July 5th. 83.—

L. C. J. Who is it directed to?

Cl. of the Cr. There is no Direction.

Mr. Blaithwait. It was directed to Mr. Secretary Jenkins, as I find by the Minutes I then took of it.

L. C. J. Here is the Cover, it seems.

Cl. of the Cr. To the Right Honourable Sir Leoline Jenkins, &c.

Honoured Sir,

I BEING in the Country, and to my great Trouble seeing myself in his Majesty's Proclamation, I came last Night to Town, resolving to lay myself at his Majesty's Feet, let him do with me what he pleaseth: This is the first Crime I have been guilty of since his Majesty's Restoration, and too soon by much now. If his Majesty thinks my Death will do him more good than my Life, God's Will and his be done. Until I sent your Honour this Letter, my Life was in my own Power, but now it is in the King's, to whom I do most humbly propose, That, if his Majesty desires it, I will discover to him all that I know relating to England, Scotland or Ireland, which I suppose may be something more than the original Discoverer was able to acquaint his Majesty with, especially as to Ireland: There is not any thing his Majesty shall think fit to ask me but I will answer him the Truth as pertinently and as fully as I can. My Intimacy with a Scotch Minister, through whose Hands much of the Business went, I judge occasion'd my knowing very much. And I do further humbly propose, That if his Majesty thinks it advisable, I will follow those Lords and Gentlemen that are fled into Holland, as if I had fled thither, and had made my Escape also; and will acquaint the King, if I can find it out, what Measures they resolve of taking next: I do assure his Majesty, the Business is laid very broad, or I am misinform'd. And I am sure as to that Particular, if my being with his Majesty and your Honour be not discovered, I shall be ten times abler to serve him than either Mr. Freeman or Mr. Carr, for they will trust neither of them. There's scarce any thing done at Court, but is immediately talk'd all the Town over: Therefore if his Majesty thinks what I have presumed to propose advisable, I do then further most humbly propose, That my waiting upon his Majesty may be some time within Night; that your Honour will acquaint me the Time and Place where I may wait upon you, in order to it, that it may be within Night also, and that nobody may be by, but his Majesty and your Honour: And if his Majesty pleaseth to pardon my Offences for the Time past, he shall find I will approve myself very loyal for the future; if not, I resolve to give his Majesty no further Trouble, but to lye at his Mercy, let him do with me what he pleaseth. I purpose to spend much of the Day in Westminster-Hall, at least from Two of the Clock to Four. I beg your Pardon I send your Honour this by a Porter: I assure your Honour, it was for no other Reason, but because I would not have a third Person privy to it; and that I might have the better Opportunity to make good my Word to his Majesty, and to approve myself.

Your Honour's most humble Servant,

THOMAS WALCOT.

Mr. Att. Gen. Swear Captain Richardson.

[Which was done.]

Capt. Richardson. My Lord, On Sunday at Night Mr. Walcot desired to speak with me, and he seemed very desirous to wait upon his Majesty, and unboast himself to the King: Mr. Attorney said, I should give him Notice to prepare for his Trial, which I did, and told him, he should want nothing to prepare himself for his Trial. Yesterday Morning his Son came, and I sent my Clerk to stand between them, and he had prepared this little Paper tied close with a Thread, which my Man told me he did intend to give his Son; and he desired me, since I had discovered it, I would make no Use of it. The Letter was to Capt. Tracey, that was his Landlord, to speak to Col. Rumsey, that he would be tender of him, and tell him, he had Ground enough to serve the King upon other Men; and also to speak to Mrs. West, to desire the same thing of her Husband. The last Words in the Note were, If you cannot be private, leave the Issue to God.

L. C. J. Mr. Walcot, have you any thing to say for yourself, against this plain Evidence?

Capt. Walcot. My Lord, They have taken a great deal of Pains, and made long Speeches, tho' very little of them relating to me, tho' too much. Col. Rumsey tells your Lordship of a Design they had to assassinate the King, and carry on a War, or something like it, when I was out of the Kingdom: That at Mr. Shepherd's House they drew up a Declaration; and that upon Mr. Trenchard's saying, Things were not ready. This was before I came into England, and he says this was agreed at Mr. West's Chamber before I came out of Holland, that Mr. Rumbold undertook it. Then he says, that after I came over, I undertook to charge the Guards while the King was killing. My Lord, that was a very improbable thing; for I look upon it, there is no Difference between killing the King, and securing his Guards. These Gentlemen, by what they have said, do sufficiently convince the Court, and all that hear them, that they are sufficiently dipp'd themselves. Here they combine to take away my Life to save their own. Then they tell you, that Mr. Goodenough and Mr. Rumbold brought Notes about Men that were to assassinate the King; but they do not tell your Lordship I was privy to any of these Notes, nor that I knew any of them. 'Tis in itself very improbable, that I would engage in so desperate an Undertaking with Men I never saw nor heard of in my Life. Then he tells you, that Mr. Ferguson had been at a Place where I was, and there inquired what Mr. Goodenough had done; and withal, they told you, they met at my Lodging: Now that their meeting at my Lodging was by Col. Rumsey's Appointment, I knew nothing of it. Most of these Meetings were by Col. Rumsey's Appointment, or Mr. West's: I accidentally came amongst them sometimes, but all my Business was only to hear News; nothing was agitated concerning killing the King, or levying of War, more or less, as I know of. I must confess, I did hear that there was a Design by a great many Lords and Gentlemen, and others, for asserting of their Liberties and Properties; but I was never in any Consultation with them, or any Message to them, nor I never saw one of these Lords, that I know of, that are said to be concerned. Therefore, I say, 'tis very improbable I should be so far concerned as they seem to represent it. They met at the Five-Bells; they allow themselves I was not at that Meeting. For Mr. Keeling, he does not at all charge me. What I said to Mr. West relating to the Business he talks of in October last, that, my Lord, is out of Doors, in point of Time. I pray God forgive him for what he has said. I can't say more than I have.

L. C. J. Pray where do you live? Where is your Habitation?

Capt. Walcot. My Habitation is in Ireland, my Lord.

L. C. J. Pray what do you do here?

Capt. Walcot. I was invited by my Lord Shaftesbury to go Governor to Carolina.

L. C. J. That Design was a great while ago frustrated.

Capt. Walcot. My Lord, it was some while before I came over, and so my Lord gave his Commission to another. But being in England, my Lord Shaftesbury invited me to go to Holland with him, which I did; and when he died, I came to London; I had not been here a Fortnight but I fell ill of the Gout, and that continued three Months: Another thing was, my Son was here, and I design'd to marry him, and make Provision for my younger Children: My Lord, I have a competent Estate; I hope it is no great Crime for a Man of an Estate to be here.

L. C. J. You confess, you heard some Discourse of these things; what made you to frequent their Company, when you heard these things?

Capt. Walcot. It was my Folly to do it.

L. C. J. Ay, but you are to understand, that Folly in these Cases is Treason.

Capt. Walcot. I conceive, my Lord, 'tis only Misprision of Treason. I did hear of a great deal that these Gentlemen have said, and that there would be an Insurrection; but I had no Hand, directly or indirectly, in it; nor did it enter into my Thoughts, either directly or indirectly, the Death of the King. When some Gentlemen have talked to me about it, I abominated it, and told them, it was a scandalous thing, a Reproach to the Protestant Religion: For my Part, I had Children would bear the Reproach of it, and I would have no hand in it.

L. C. J. Look you, Captain Walcot, that you did deny to do the Fact, to assassinate the King, that is very true; they say so, that you did always deny it; for you stood upon this Point of Gallantry, a naked Man you would not assassinate. And then you talk of Misprision of Treason: For a Man to hear of Treason accidentally, or occasionally, and conceal it, is but Misprision; but if a Man will be at a Consult where Treason is hatched, and will then conceal it, he is guilty of Treason therein; therefore do not mistake your Case. So that your Point of Law fails you, and every thing fails you in this Case. It appears plainly by them, that you were not only privy to the Consult as an Auditor, but as an Actor; you chose your Post, and upon this Point of Gallantry you would venture yourself, not upon a naked Man, but upon Persons that would oppose you.

Capt. Walcot. Certainly no Man that knows me, would take me for such a very Fool, that I would kill the King's Guards; as if I were not sensible, that was equal Treason with the other.

Mr. Att. Gen. Ill Men are always Fools.

Capt. Walcot. 'Tis clear they have laid their Heads together, they have contrived to take away my Life, to save their own; 'tis plain enough.

L. C. J. There is nothing more reasonable, nothing more just in the World, than to make use of some Traitors to discover and convict the others, else would Treason be hatched securely. There's nobody capable (where Treason does not take Effect) of making an Evidence in such a Case, but some of you that are Conspirators. You do not publish it at the Market-Cross. And if you could gain but this Point, that none that are concerned with you in the Conspiracy should be Witnesses, it would be the securest thing in the World to hatch Treason. For you would be upon this Point; either it shall take Effect, and then 'tis too late, or if it do not, and the Conspirators are not to be believed, then I am secure, nobody in the World can convict me.

Juror. We desire he may be asked what he says to the Letter.

L. C. J. Well, what say you to it? You have made Proposals you will discover others, and you will give Intimation to the King of the Measures the rest of the Conspirators were taking in Ireland, and other Places, upon what Design did you write that? And what induced you to it?

Capt. Walcot. My Lord, I have told your Lordship, that I have heard a great many Discourses relating to that thing, and heard it mostly by Mr. Ferguson, with whom I had a very great Intimacy, and I did according to my Promise give that Account of it; but if his Majesty would not believe me, I can't help it; but the King was not pleased with me, because I could not descend to particulars; and I could not, because I never had been in their Company, nor knew nothing but what I had once by a private Hand. I dealt ingenuously and truly with the King, and told him what I knew.

L. C. J. Pray observe the Contents of your Letter. You made this Proposal, That you being in the Proclamation, you were one of the fittest Men to understand and smell out the Measures of the other Persons. By this it is plain, you took yourself to have an Intimacy, and some Intrigue, with the other Persons that you thought were impeached: Your Letter does import, that you had such an Interest with those Persons, that they would have communicated their Counsels to you.

Capt. Walcot. My Lord, I never spake but with Mr. Ferguson, who was a Man they did much confide in; and I knew very well, that by my Interest in Mr. Ferguson, I should have an Interest in the rest. But truly, whether the Duke of Monmouth be there, or not, I know not. I do not know him if I meet him. I was never at any Consult, never at any of these Debates.

L. C. J. What did you mean by this, that this was your first Crime? You knew what you was charged with; it was for High Treason.

Capt. Walcot. My Lord, 'Tis my first Crime. My Lord, I have heard there was an Insurrection intended, I have heard of the Persons that were to carry it on; I did look upon this as a Misprision of Treason; but that I ever acted in it, or intended it, I utterly deny.

L. C. J. The last Question is, Whether you have any Witnesses?

Capt. Walcot. I have only a young Man or two, if he be here, to prove the Time that I was ill of the Gout, and therefore 'tis improbable I should be so far concerned.

L. C. J. I must tell you before-hand, that an Argument from the Topic of Probability, will do you but little Service, when there is positive Evidence against you. This it will import you to make a little Answer to, if you can, What you meant by your Application to Colonel Rumsey, desiring Captain Tracey to speak to him and Mr. West; what do you mean by that?

Capt. Walcot. My Lord, would not any Man in my Circumstances desire a Man to deal tenderly with him?

L. C. J. Well, is this young Man come in? Come, Sir, what have you to say on the Behalf of the Prisoner at the Bar? Or will you ask him any Questions?

Capt. Walcot. Only about what Time I fell ill of the Gout, and how long I continued so?

L. C. J. Do you know about what Time he fell ill of the Gout, and how long it continued?

Wit. My Lord, I can't remember certainly the Time, but I believe it was about three Months; I can't tell certainly when it began.

Capt. Walcot. My Lord, it is very improbable, that when I was not able to put a Shoe on, nor wear a Boot, I should engage in so hazardous and desperate an Undertaking.

L. C. J. Have you done, Sir?

Capt. Walcot. Yes, my Lord.

Mr. Sol. Gen. May it please your Lordship—

Capt. Walcot. The Jury will take notice, here are four Men, to save their own Lives, swear me out of mine.

Mr. Sol. Gen. May it please your Lordship, and you, Gentlemen of the Jury, the Evidence you have heard has been very long, and I observe that Capt. Walcot has complained of it; it has been delivered mostly in general Terms; and is afraid you should not apprehend it aright, to see those Parts wherein he is concerned, but mistake what is said in general to be spoken against him. I will therefore do him the Justice as to recapitulate that Part of the Evidence that does immediately concern himself. It has been very full, and given by every one of the four Witnesses that have been produced against him, besides the Letter under his own Hand, which is twice as many more.

The first Witness I shall remind you of is Mr. West, tho' not produced first, yet because his Evidence goes further backward; his Acquaintance began with him in last Summer Vacation, he became soon intimate with him, and Captain Walcot did unbosom himself, and tell him, that there was a Design to make an Insurrection; that it was my Lord Shaftesbury's Design that he was to be an Officer, I think he said a Colonel of Horse; he invited Mr. West to partake with him in that Design, and did propose to him the Advantage of a Command in the Army; but he not being qualified declined it. He tells you further, that he did acquaint him there was a Design to assassinate the King; and 'tis easy enough to be believed, if there was one designed, the other was too. And you see all along the only Dispute was, whether the Assassination should be first, or follow; for to raise Arms against the King is directly to assassinate the King; for it cannot end any other way with Security to those that raised it. He told Mr. West he would not be concerned directly in the Assassination, but in the Insurrection he would; he was persuaded to come in. This was, last October, discoursed with Mr. West; they were to rise in November. Then Col. Rumsey comes in, and he tells you, that there was a Design to rise in November. The Lord Shaftesbury sent him to Persons concerned in the Conspiracy, to know in what Readiness it was; but they being disappointed of Men, whom they expected to rise in the Country, they did defer it at that Time; at which my Lord Shaftesbury being concerned, went into Holland, and I think the Prisoner himself hath told you he went with him. The Design was not then laid aside, but still carried on; the most material Man, Mr. Ferguson, being in Holland, there was some little Stop put to it, that is, to the swift Progress of it; and therefore he was sent for over to manage it, as being the only Man in whom all Persons had Confidence. When he comes over, he brings

Captain

Captain Walcot along with him. Mr. Ferguson meets at Mr. West's Chamber; this Mr. West and Col. Rumsey give an Account of, they both swear it. Several Meetings there were in which Capt. Walcot was not, and possibly at those times he might be sick of the Gout, and that might occasion his not being there. But afterwards both tell you, that Capt. Walcot did meet at Mr. West's Chamber, and there was debated particularly the Assassination of the King; and it was agreed to be at Rumbold's House called the Rye, looking upon it as a very convenient Place, as those that know it say; there being a narrow Passage that it was easy to assault, and hard for Persons to escape; and with 40 or 50 Men, thereabouts, it was a Design very likely to have succeeded. Capt. Walcot's Share in this was not directly the Assassination of the King, that he would not be concerned in, being a Soldier, it was beneath him to do that; but his Part was to fight the Guards, he looked upon that as the more honourable Employment; Men that were armed to engage them. This is proved both by Mr. West and Col. Rumsey.

In the next Place, Gentlemen, when this did not succeed, but was prevented by the great Providence of God Almighty, as you have heard, they carry on the Design still, and take it into their Councils, and resolved to carry it on, either at Windsor, or in his Passage from Windsor to Hampton-Court; but no Place was certainly fixed upon; and I think the latter Resolution was, that it should be done at the Bull-Feast, an Entertainment that was designed here in the Fields. Now, Gentlemen, while this was carrying on, it was necessary to carry on the other Part too, that is, the Insurrection; and that Capt. Walcot is all along concerned in. He is present at the Meetings in the Taverns, where they discoursed concerning Men to secure the King. This is Mr. Bourn's Evidence, That at the Dragon-Tavern on Snow-hill, there they met to consult to secure the King and the Duke. That he was present at the Meeting in London, this is sworn by all, by Col. Rumsey, Mr. West and Mr. Bourn, where Goodenough was to give an Account what Success he had in the List made of dividing the City in several Parts, and raising Men out of every Division, and Capt. Walcot met for to know what Progress they had made in it. Gentlemen, every one of these are overt Acts, to declare his Intention to kill the King, and are all High Treason.

The Gentleman at the Bar cannot attempt to mitigate his Offence, by saying he would not directly assassinate the King, but would be the Man to assist in raising Arms; this makes him equally guilty. To conspire to raise Arms against the King, certainly that is as great a Declaration of his Imagination of his Heart to kill the King, as any thing in the World: And this being proved upon him, there is no room for any Objections for him to make; some he hath made, not worth the Mention; but because they are those he thinks to put his Life upon, I will take notice of them to you.

He says, the Witnesses are not to be credited, because they have been concerned in the same Conspiracy.

Gentlemen, because they have been concerned, therefore they are to be believed; for who should know this but those that were so concerned? I think, Gentlemen, there is no good Man, no honest Man, would desire a better Evidence; for better Evidence could not have been had, unless the thing had taken Success; and I am sure that is far from the Heart of any Man, that has the Heart of a Christian, to wish. Does he pretend to intrap these Witnesses in any Contradictions? Does he pretend to say these Witnesses have consulted together to make up this Story to accuse him for his Life? There is nothing pretended of it, but on the contrary he owns he met these Men; but the End of his going there was only to hear News. I thought that had not been the proper Place to hear News in; certainly no Man that comes there would have been admitted merely for Curiosity; certainly he must bring a Mind to accompany them in all their Villainy: but his own Confession you have for that. I think he hath hardly Confidence to deny, but he was at several Consults for raising Arms at Mr. West's Chamber. You were, when Goodenough gave an Account, at the Green-Dragon Tavern. You were where Discourses were of raising Arms to secure the King; and nothing he has said, Gentlemen, to clear himself.

Gentlemen, here is that above all Evidence; here is almost the Confession of the Prisoner, the Letter of his own Hand. That Letter (when he sees his Name in the Proclamation) acknowledges it is his first Crime, he says: What was that Crime? He was proclaimed as a Traitor. He says in his Letter, that his Life was at the King's Mercy; that if his Death would do the King more Service than his Life, God's Will be done; that if his Majesty would admit him to come in, and use Mercy, he would tell all he knew concerning England, Scotland and Ireland, which he thought would be more material than any thing that another Discoverer could tell. This shews he hath a deeper Hand than any of these Men that have given this Evidence. You see they accuse themselves; they confess this, and 'tis a great Mercy they have so done; for all your Lives and Liberties in the Person of the King are preserved; and God be thanked, that you are here this Day to sit in Judgment upon him that would have deprived you of them.

L. C. J. Look you, Gentlemen of the Jury, here is the Prisoner at the Bar indicted of High Treason, and 'tis for conspiring the Death of the King, and for endeavouring to raise Arms within his Kingdom against him. You hear he denies himself to be guilty; you have heard the Evidence, and this does plainly appear upon what you have heard, that there was a dangerous and desperate Plot upon the King, to have destroyed him, that is most certainly plain, the Prisoner himself confessed it; that there were several Consults and Meetings concerning it; and that this had a great Progress from time to time, for near half a Year, is very plain; that he was at many Consults, is very certain; that there was a Design to raise an Insurrection and War within this Nation, is as plain by them all; it was design'd the last Winter to have done it. The Witnesses (who are certainly the Persons most capable of giving Evidence) tell you there were several times appointed, and still they were by one Providence or another disappointed. All of them tell you, there was a Design to kill the King and Duke at the Rye in Hertfordshire, as they came from Newmarket: This is very plain too, that this Gentleman at the Bar knew of this; this he himself confesses, that he was at several of the Consults; and this he excuses it by, that that was Misprision of Treason, if he did not undertake to do any thing. As to that, Gentlemen, we do tell you, the Law is, that those that are at a Consult for the killing the King, or doing of a traitorous Act, that is in them High Treason, his being at the consulting of it. 'Tis true, it would excuse and mitigate the Fact, if they should come afterwards and discover it, it might intitle them to the King's Mercy; but to be at a Consult upon a treasonable Design, to meet for that Purpose to hear the Plot laid, and a Design to take away the King's Life, or to raise Arms against him, and to say nothing of this, this is downright Treason, and 'tis not Misprision of Treason; his Law that he relies upon, fails him there. 'Tis very plain by his own Words, he heard of this Conspiracy, and he kept it secret, and says nothing of it; and this he says is his Crime that he mentioned to the King; so he would mitigate it by saying, 'tis but Misprision of Treason. But without doubt, the Meeting at several Times upon this Design, if he had promised and undertaken nothing in it, his keeping of it private, as he has done, makes him guilty of High Treason; so that out of his own Words 'tis plain that he is Guilty.

But then, consider what two Witnesses positively prove upon him: They prove, that he did there deny to be any of them that should assassinate the King; thus says Col. Rumsey, and thus says Mr. West; but he would be one of them that should fight the Guards, and he did undertake to fight the Guards, as both of them positively swear. This is done with Circumstances of overt Acts too, as the providing of Horses, and a Tuck was to be prepared in order to it, and a Tuck he did prepare: Whether he did go down, that is a little dark, but he did agree to go down.

Gentlemen, 'Tis plain by what Mr. West said of him, that he had a Design formerly in my Lord Shaftesbury's Time to have raised War; he had undertaken to be a Colonel of Horse under my Lord Shaftesbury, and he offered Mr. West to be one of his Officers under him. This is a Design to raise War against the King, and declares it sufficiently. That which makes the Evidence further plainly and greatly clear, is a Letter whereby he does submit to the King's Mercy, but proposes that himself is abler to instruct the King in these Matters, than any of those that had made former Discoveries; and therefore if his Majesty should think fit, he would make him a full Discovery, not only of things in this Kingdom, but of the Transactions with other Kingdoms, that is, Scotland and Ireland, in which he takes himself to be more capable of discovering to the King than any body else, because he was concerned with the Agents there; which shews this Plot hath gone a great Way: This Design hath gone into other of the King's Dominions, and it is to be feared 'tis larger than the King knows. 'Tis Time to nip these Treasons when they are gone so far; certainly a more barbarous Design was never thought of by Mankind. We have had certainly as many Engagements to the King, as any Subjects ever had to any Prince whatsoever; he has done as many Acts of Grace; we have lived as peaceably as any People under a Prince can ever expect to do; he hath shewed himself with as much Kindness, with as much Lenity, even to his very Enemies, as any Prince that ever we read of; the Preservation of our Religion, and the Laws of the Kingdom; our Laws and Liberties, and all our Happiness, depend as much upon his Life, as they ever did upon the Life of any Prince, or ever can do; so that we ought all to be concerned, even to the last Drop of our Blood, to preserve him: But how this mischievous Design should enter into the Hearts of Men, to undertake to kill him in such villainous and barbarous a Manner as this, may justly make us astonished.

Gentlemen, You hear your Evidence, you have a very strong Evidence in this Case, and stronger, I think, than could be expected in the Case of Treason.

The Jury went out for about Half a Quarter of an Hour, and returned, and brought the Prisoner in Guilty.

CXVIII. The Trial of WILLIAM HONE *, at the Old Bailey, for High Treason, July 12. 1683. 35 Car. II.

WILLIAM HONE being brought to the Bar, and having held up his Hand, the Indictment was read, as follows:

London. The Jurors for our Sovereign Lord the King, upon their Oaths, present, that William Hone, late of London, Labourer, with other false Traitors, as a false Traitor against the most Illustrious and Excellent Prince, our Sovereign Lord Charles II. by the Grace of God, of England, Scotland, France and Ireland King, his natural Lord; not having the Fear of God in his Heart; nor weighing the Duty of his Allegiance, but being moved and seduced by the Instigation of the Devil; and the true Duty, and natural Obedience, which true and faithful Subjects of our Sovereign Lord the King, towards him our said Lord the King do bear, and of Right ought to bear, wholly withdrawing; and with his whole Strength intending the Peace and common Tranquillity of this Kingdom of England to disturb, and War and Rebellion against our said Lord the King to move and stir up, and the Government of our said Lord the King within this Kingdom of England to subvert, and our said Lord the King from his Title, Honour and Kingly Name of the Imperial Crown of this his Kingdom of England to put down and deprive, and our said Lord the King to Death and final Destruction to bring and put, the second Day of March, in the Year of the Reign of our Sovereign Lord Charles II. King of England, &c. the Five-and-thirtieth, and divers other Days and Times, as well before as after, at the Parish of St. Michael Bassishaw, in the Ward of Bassishaw, London, aforesaid, maliciously and traitorously, with divers other Traitors, to the Jurors aforesaid unknown, he did conspire, compass, imagine and intend our said Lord the King, his Supreme Lord, not only of his Kingly State, Title, Power and Government of this his Kingdom of England to deprive and throw down; but also our said Lord the King to kill, and to Death to bring and put; and the ancient Government of this his Kingdom of England to change, alter and wholly to subvert, and a miserable Slaughter amongst the Subjects of our said Lord the King through the whole Kingdom of England to cause and procure, and Insurrection and Rebellion against our said Lord the King to move, and stir up, within this Kingdom of England; and to fulfil and perfect the said most horrible Treasons, and traitorous Compassings, Imaginations, and Purposes aforesaid, he the said William Hone, and many other Traitors, as a false Traitor, then and there, and divers other Days and Times, as well before as after, maliciously, traitorously and advisedly, he did assemble, meet together, and consult with divers other evil-disposed and discontented Subjects of our said Lord the King, to the Jurors as yet unknown, and had Discourse, and did treat, of and for the executing and fulfilling their Treasons, and traitorous Compassings, Imaginations and Purposes aforesaid; and that the said William Hone, (together with many other Traitors) as a false Traitor, maliciously, traitorously, and advisedly, then and there, and divers other Days and Times, as well before as after, did take upon himself, and promise to be aiding and assisting in the executing of the Treasons, and traitorous Compassings, Imaginations and Purposes aforesaid; and in providing of Arms, and men armed, to fulfil and perfect the said Treasons, traitorous Compassings, Imaginations and Purposes aforesaid. And to fulfil, and bring to pass, the said most horrid Treasons, and traitorous Compassings, Imaginations and Purposes aforesaid, he the said William Hone (with many other false Traitors) as a false Traitor, maliciously, traitorously and advisedly, then and there, did procure and prepare Arms, to wit, Blunderbusses, Carbines, and Pistols, against the Duty of his Allegiance, against the Peace of our Sovereign Lord the King, &c. and against the Form of the Statutes, &c.

Cl. of the Cr. How sayest thou, William Hone? Art thou Guilty of this High Treason, whereof thou standest indicted, or Not guilty?

Hone. In some measure I am guilty.

Capt. Richardson. You must say, Guilty, or Not guilty.

Sir Francis Pemberton.

confess all, or deny all.

Hone. I know nothing of the Arms.

L. C. J. Are you guilty of the Treason, in conspiring the Death of the King, and providing Arms for that Purpose?

Hone. I never provided Arms; I am guilty of the Conspiracy.

L. C. J. We can take notice of none of these odd kind of Words you talk of, but either plainly Guilty, or Not guilty.

Hone. My Lord, I can truly say, I am Not guilty, for I know nothing of it.

L. C. J. If you say so, you say as much as is required of you at present.

Hone. In that understanding of it, I am Not guilty.

L. C. J. Well, he says he is Not guilty.

Cl. of Cr. Culprit, How wilt thou be tried?

Hone. By God and my Country.

Cl. of Cr. God send thee a good Deliverance.

Friday, July the 13th in the Morning, the Court being set, and Proclamation made.

Sir Robert Sayer.

Mr. Att. Gen. Set William Hone to the Bar.

Cl. of Cr. You the Prisoner at the Bar, hold up your Hand.

Hone. I desire I may retract my Plea: I would plead Guilty.

L. C. J. Do you confess the Indictment?—Hone. Yes, my Lord.

L. C. J. That is, That you did conspire the Death of the King, and in order to that, that you did provide yourself with Arms to do this wicked Act.

Hone. I never did that, my Lord, I never provided any Arms.

L. C. J. What were you to have done?

Hone. That Deposition I gave before Sir William Turner is true.

L. C. J. Tell us what you were to have done in this bloody Matter.

Hone. I was asked by one Mr. Richard Goodenough to go along with him, and I asked him whither, and he would not tell me; but I understood it was to kill the King and Duke of York, but he did not tell me the Place.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. He does not confess fully; we desire to try him.

L. C. J. Look you, you have pleaded Not guilty to this Indictment: The King is willing, that if you be Not guilty, you shall not be condemned; and therefore he does desire and command the Evidence against you should be publicly given, that all Persons may see, that you are not without Cause brought to Trial. Therefore swear the Jury.

The Prisoner challenged none; but the Jury that were sworn were,

Nicolas Charlton,
Christopher Pitts,
Robert Beddingfield,
John Pelling,

William Windbury,
Thomas Seaton,
William Rutland,
Thomas Short,

Theophilus Man,
John Genew,
John Short,
Thomas Nicholas.

Then Proclamation for Information, and for those that were bound by Recognizance to appear, was made.

Cl. of Cr. William Hone, hold up thy Hand. (Which he did.) You Gentlemen of the Jury that are sworn, look upon the Prisoner, and hearken to his Cause; he stands indicted by the Name of William Hone, &c. antea, in the Indictment, mutatis mutandis; upon this Indictment he hath been arraigned, and hath thereunto pleaded Not guilty; and for his Trial, &c.

Mr. Jones. May it please your Lordship, and you, Gentlemen of the Jury, the Prisoner stands indicted for the most horrid Treason that ever was endeavoured to be committed in this Kingdom, for traitorously conspiring to kill the King, and consulting how and in what Manner it should be done, and for preparing Arms for the doing of it. We shall prove this to you, and then I hope you will find him Guilty.

Mr. Att. Gen. May it please your Lordship, and you, Gentlemen of the Jury, the Part the Prisoner at the Bar was to act in this Treason, was the killing of the King; he was one of the Persons that were to be assisting in assassinating the King's Person. We will not trouble you with the large Evidence of the Riling, as we did Yesterday; but we will prove these things upon him, that he undertook to do it, that he was concerned with the rest of the Confederates: We shall shew you this is not a new Thing, but he hath been an old Rebel; for this hath not been a new Project, but hath been acting several Years. Five Years ago, when the King attended my Lord Mayor's Show, he undertook to kill him off of Bow Church. We shall call our Witnesses, and prove it fully upon him. Mr. Keeling, and Mr. West.

Mr. Josias Keeling sworn.

Mr. Att. Gen. Do you tell my Lord and the Jury, what you know of this Prisoner at the Bar.

Mr. Keeling. The first Time I saw him was at the Dolphin Tavern, when the Arms were agreed upon, he was there then.

Mr. Att. Gen. Who was there then?

Mr. Keeling. Mr. West, Mr. Goodenough, and him I remember particularly, and some others, whom I do not at present remember, and since that he hath taken notice of me.

Mr. Att. Gen. Was Mr. Rumbold there at that Time?—Mr. Keeling. Yes.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray at that Meeting tell the Jury what Discourse you had; for many of these Gentlemen are not the same that were on the Jury Yesterday.

Mr. Keeling. It was discoursed then of the King's coming home from New-market the Saturday after the Fire. Mr. West told Mr. Rumbold, he heard the King would come home that Day; But, says he, I don't believe it. Says Rumbold, I hear he will come home on Monday. Says Mr. West to Mr. Rumbold, then, How many Swan-quills, Goose-quills and Crow-quills, and how much Sand and Ink, must we have? I think the Prisoner at the Bar must needs remember it as well as I. It was agreed by Mr. Rumbold. I think I am exact in the Number, and he was by and heard all the Discourse.

Mr. Att. Gen. What did they mean by this?

Mr. Keeling. By Swan-quills they meant Blunderbusses; by Goose-quills, Muskets; and by Crow-quills, Pistols; and by Sand and Ink, Powder and Bullet. He took Acquaintance with me after that Meeting, (for I never saw him, as I know of, before) and after some time he told me, he was one of them that was to go down to the Rye to assassinate the King. And since that, at a Coffee-house in Switwin's-Alley, he told me, it would never be well till the Blackbird and the Goldfinch were knocked on the Head. They being Terms I did not understand, I asked him what he meant; he said the King and Duke of York.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. You are sure that is the Man?

Mr. Keeling. I am sure that is the Man, William Hone.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. What, is that the Man that talked of the Blackbird and Goldfinch?

Mr. Keeling. I am sure that is the Man.

Mr. Att. Gen. Now swear Mr. West.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. If Mr. Hone has a mind to ask him any Questions, he may.

Hone. My Lord, this I deny: As to the Blackbird, I own it; as to the Goldfinch, I never heard a Word of it till this time.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. You had only a Design upon the Blackbird then? Mr. West sworn.

Mr. Att. Gen. Tell the Court what you know of the Meeting at the Dolphin Tavern.

Mr. West. I was there, and Mr. Keeling came in. There were several things said of Swan-quills, Goose-quills, and Crow-quills, but this Man did not come in till this Discourse was over, and I am sure I did not speak of any thing of this Nature before this Man in my Life. But Mr. Goodenough did undertake to provide the Men, and Mr. Goodenough said, he would try him, if he would make an Attempt upon the Duke without the King. And I asked him, whether he had seen Mr. Goodenough. He told me he had. Says he, he spoke to me about a little Jobb for the Duke. Mr. Goodenough said, he had spoke to him fully about the thing. And I saw him often in the Company of Mannius, that was design'd to be another of the Assassins. He was at my Chamber once; says he, Master, shall we do nothing? I think he used these Words, That if the Duke of Monmouth would be true, and appear, he could bring fifty or sixty honest Men of the other Side the Water, to do the Business. I asked him, What Business? Says he, Either a brisk Push (that I took for an Insurrection) for the two Brothers: Says I, what Brothers do you mean? Says he, the Captain and Lieutenant; those were the two Terms they used since the Van-berry was printed. I think he was a pretty honest Fellow before this Time; he was deluded by Goodenough, I think, in the thing.

L. C. J. (to Mr. West.) Do you come to justify these things?

Mr. West. My Lord, he hath been deluded basely, and I am sorry for the poor Fellow.

L. C. J. It is a very unusual thing, for one in your Condition to use such Expressions in such a Case.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Mr. West, You have been deluded.

Mr. Att. Gen. Captain Richardson and Sir Nicolas Butler.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. I find he is not worthy of the Mercy the King hath shewed him.

Mr. West. It was a Word I put from me unawares.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. My Lord, we will give you an Account of a Design this Man had long ago to kill the King.

Sir Nicolas Butler sworn.

Sir Nicolas Butler. My Lord, I know the Prisoner at the Bar very well. I have known him many Years: I have always known him guilty of Plotting and Contriving, and ready upon all Occasions to embrace any thing for these Purposes laid to his Charge; particularly, when Sir Francis Chaplain was Lord Mayor, his Majesty and the Duke stood at Mr. Waldoe's House, by reason of the Angel House being shaken: And he came to my House, and told me, he would discourse me upon some private Matter; I called him into a Closet, and he told me, they had a fair Opportunity to take off the King and the Duke at once: I told him, that would do very well, but how will you do it? Says he, We will do it with Cross-bows; we are to be half a Dozen, and we will go into the Steeple, where there is a Window just opposite to the Balcony: And a great deal of Discourse we had to this Purpose. My Intent was to divert them from this Design, and told him how impossible it was they should escape the Foot Guards and Horse Guards, and Multitude of People: And if he did not do the Business effectually, he would be undone, and all the Party. I rested satisfied he would have desisted upon this. But I knew the Principles of these Fifth-Monarchy-Men, and their Associates, and thought it not safe to trust to his bare Say-so, that he would desist; but I went to the King and the Duke of York, into my Lord Chamberlain's Chamber, where they came to me, and I gave them this Account, and desired them to set some to watch the Place, and to search if any were got into the Steeple before they came; and there was one Horsfall appointed, that did accordingly watch them, but none came: Upon which some Good-willers to it have reported, that it was a Sham-business; but I think that was not well done. But the thing was real, and when he was examined before the King in the Secretary's Office, he did confess all these things that I charged him with.

Mr. Att. Gen. Sir Nicolas Butler, Had you any Discourse of killing the King at this time?

Sir Nicolas Butler. No: At last they did understand I kept a Correspondence at Court, and then they would tell me no more.

Mr. Att. Gen. Since he was taken, what did he say about this Matter?

Sir Nicolas Butler. About this Matter he did acquaint divers; he was one that was to kill the King and the Duke.

Captain Richardson sworn.

Capt. Richardson. Sir Nicolas Butler asked him in my Presence (I went along with Sir Nicolas when he examined him) as to this thing, how he was concerned? He said, Mr. Goodenough came to him, and told him he wanted Labourers; he asked him, for what? At last he did confess, that Mr. Goodenough did tell him, it was to kill the King, and the Duke of York; he did confess, that he did agree to it, and that he would be one of them. He did likewise say, that after, at another Meeting, he was for killing the King and saving the Duke; but Goodenough was for both.

Sir Nicolas Butler. He said he was to have 20 l.

Capt. Richardson. He said, he did not desire to stir, and Goodenough told him he should have 20 l. to buy him Horse and Armour: And told us the Business of the Rye, the Place he did not know, but said, it was the Place where the King was to be murdered. This is the Substance of the Examination taken.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Tho' the Prisoner at the Bar did partly make a Confession; yet for the Satisfaction of the World, my Lord gave us leave to call our Witnesses.

Capt. Richardson. That which Sir Nicolas says about the Cross-bows he did own, but —

L. C. J. What say you to this treasonable Design of your's, in undertaking to kill the King, in hiring yourself out to be one of the Persons that should have executed this traitorous Design, this horrid Murder, to have killed the King at the Rye?

Hone. I say, I did not know the Place where, nor when, at the time it was proposed about the Rye.

L. C. J. But what do you say as to the undertaking to kill the King? The other is but a Circumstance, this is the material Point.

Hone. My Lord, I was drawn into it by Mr. Richard Goodenough.

L. C. J. You hear what Sir Nicolas Butler says of the Cross-bows you designed to kill the King with, what say you to that?

Hone. I say, there was a Person told me of such a thing; and I told Sir Nicolas immediately of it. The Person that told me was a Shop-keeper, and I don't know him.

Sir Nicolas Butler. You named three Persons to the King that were Confederates with you, but you came to me of yourself.

L. C. J. Look you, yourself was one of the wicked Undertakers in that traitorous Design.

Hone. No, I did never design it, but I was told it.

L. C. J. Ay, that yourself and some other good Fellows were engaged in the Design.

Hone. I was not engaged, only as I was told by a Fellow, that there was a Shop-keeper lived hard by that would do such a thing, and I immediately told Sir Nicolas Butler.

L. C. J. Come, 'tis in vain for you to mince the Matter, for here is a full Evidence against you: The best you can do for your Advantage now, is to consider well with yourself, and repent of this wicked Design. What Religion do you profess?

Hone. Religion, my Lord?

L. C. J. Ay, any or none?

Hone. My Lord, I hear several sort of Men, sometimes Baptists, sometimes Independents, and sometimes the Presbyterians.

L. C. J. But regard none. Look you, Gentlemen of the Jury, you hear a plain Case of a barbarous Murder designed upon the King, one of the horridest Treasons that hath been heard of in the World, to have shot the King and the Duke of York in their Coaches, as they were coming upon the Road. You have had full Evidence of this Man's being one of them; and therefore I am of Opinion, that you must find him guilty.

So the Jury brought the Prisoner in Guilty, without going out of Court.

CXIX. The Trial of Lord WILLIAM RUSSEL*, at the Old Bailey, for High Treason, July 13. 1683. 35 Car. II.

THE Lord Ruffel was set to the Bar, and placed within the Bar.

Cl. of Cr. William Ruffel†, hold up thy Hand (Which he did): Then the Indictment was read, as followeth:

London. The Jurors of our Sovereign Lord the King, upon their Oaths, present, That William Ruffel, late of London, Esq; together with other false Traitors, as a false Traitor against the most Illustrious and Excellent Prince, our Sovereign Lord Charles II. by the Grace of God, of England, Scotland, France and Ireland King, his natural Lord; not having the Fear of God in his Heart, nor weighing the Duty of his Allegiance, but being moved and seduced by the Intigation of the Devil; and the true Duty, and natural Obedience, which true and faithful Subjects of our Sovereign Lord the King, towards him our said Lord the King do bear, and of Right ought to bear, wholly withdrawing; and with his whole Strength intending the Peace and common Tranquillity of this Kingdom of England to disturb, and War and Rebellion against our said Lord the King to move and stir up, and the Government of our said Lord the King within this Kingdom of England to subvert, and our said Lord the King from his Title, Honour and Kingly Name of the Imperial Crown of this his Kingdom of England to put down and deprive, and our said Lord the King to Death and final Destruction to bring and put, the second Day of November, in the Year of the Reign of our Sovereign Lord Charles II. King of England, &c. the Four-and-thirtieth, and divers other Days and Times, as well before as after, at the Parish of St. Michael Bassishaw, in the Ward of Bassishaw, London, aforesaid, maliciously and traitorously, with divers other Traitors, to the Jurors aforesaid unknown, he did conspire, compass, imagine and intend our said Lord the King, his Supreme Lord, not only of his Kingly State, Title, Power and Government of this his Kingdom of England to deprive and throw down; but also our said Lord the King to kill, and to Death to bring and put; and the ancient Government of this his Kingdom of England to change, alter and wholly to subvert, and a miserable Slaughter amongst the Subjects of our said Lord the King through his whole Kingdom of England to cause and procure, and Insurrection and Rebellion against our said Lord the King to move, procure and stir up, within this Kingdom of England; and to fulfil and perfect the said most horrible Treasons, and traitorous Compassings, Imaginations and Purposes aforesaid, he the said William Ruffel, together with other false Traitors, as a false Traitor, then and there, and divers other Days and Times, as well before as after, maliciously, traitorously and advisedly, between themselves, and with divers other Traitors, to the Jurors aforesaid unknown, they did meet together, consult, agree and conclude, and every of them, then and there, did consult agree, and conclude, Insurrection and Rebellion against our Sovereign Lord the King, within this Kingdom of England, to move and stir up, and the Guards for the Preservation of the Person of our said Lord the King, to seize and destroy, against the Duty of his Allegiance, against the Peace &c. and also against the Form of the Statutes, &c.

Cl. of Cr. How sayest thou? Art thou Guilty, or Not guilty?

Lord Ruffel. My Lord, May I not have a Copy of the Matter of Fact laid against me, that I may know what to answer to it?

L. C. J. My Lord, we can grant you nothing till you have pleaded. Therefore that which is put to you now is, Pemberton.

Whether you say you are Guilty, or Not guilty?

L. Ruffel. My Lord, I am Not guilty.

Cl. of Cr. Culprit, how wilt thou be tried?

L. Ruffel. By God and my Country.

Cl. of Cr. God send thee a good Deliverance.

L. Ruffel. My Lord, I thought a Prisoner had never been arraigned and tried at the same time. I have been a close Prisoner.

L. C. J. For Crimes of this Nature, my Lord, we do it continually.

L. Ruffel. It is hard, my Lord.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord hath no Reason to complain for want of Notice; for since Monday seven-night he had Notice of his Trial, and the Matters alledged against him he had Notice of; for Questions were put to him about this Matter: He hath been very fairly dealt with, he hath had the Liberty of Counsel to advise him; there hath been no sort of Liberty denied him, which becomes any Subject to have in this Condition.

L. C. J. My Lord, I do not know whether you hear Mr. Attorney: He says, your Lordship hath had a great deal of Favour shewn you already, in that you have been acquainted with the Crimes for which you are now indicted, that you have had a great deal of Warning given you, that you have had the Liberty of Counsel, which hath not been known granted to any under your Lordship's Circumstances. He says, he doubts not but your Lordship is prepared for your Defence, because you have had so much

† He was Lord only by Courtsey, being eldest Son to the Earl of Bedford.

Knowledge, and Warning of the Time and Matter for which you were to be called in Question.

L. Ruffel. My Lord, I am much to seek; I only heard some general Questions, and I have Witnesses that I believe are not yet in Town, nor will be, I believe, till Night. I think it very hard I can't have one Day more.

Mr. Att. Gen. Monday se'nnight your Lordship had Notice.

L. Ruffel. I did not know the Matter I was charged with.

Mr. Att. Gen. Yes, certainly; for I was with you myself, my Lord; and those Questions you were examined upon, were a Favour to you, that you might know what the Matter was you were accused of.

L. C. J. My Lord, without the King's Consent, we can't put off the Trial: If the King's Counsel think not fit to put it off, we can't grant your Lordship's Request in this Case.

L. Ruffel. I would desire a Copy of the Panel of the Jury, that I might consider of it; for how else can I make any just Challenge? I thought the Law had been very favourable to Men upon their Lives; and therefore it had allowed People to have some little Notice.

L. C. J. Hath not your Lordship had a Copy of the Panel? I think your Lordship was allowed one. We gave Order your Lordship should have a Copy of the Panel.

Mr. Att. Gen. We did indulge him so far, that he might have a Note of all the Men returned.

L. Ruffel. I never had a Copy of the Panel.

L. C. J. It was the Fault of your Lordship's Servants then; for I gave Order for it myself. 'Tis such a Favour, that in regard a Man's Life lies at Stake, we never did deny it*, to my Knowledge. And therefore in this Case I gave Order to the Secondary to deliver a Copy. I know the King did not design to be hard upon my Lord in his Trial, but that he should have as fair a Trial as ever any noble Person had.

L. Ruffel. I pray I may have a Copy then.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. If my Lord had sent his Agents, and it had been refused, there had been something in it.

Mr. Att. Gen. Secondary Normanfel was with me, and I gave him my Allowance, tho' it was not his Right.

L. C. J. That my Lord may not be surpris'd, what think you of giving my Lord Time till the Afternoon, and try some of the rest in the mean time?

Mr. Att. Gen. Truly, my Lord, if I could imagine it were possible for my Lord to have any Witnesses, I should not be against it.

L. Ruffel. 'Tis very hard.

Mr. Att. Gen. Do not say so; the King does not deal hardly with you; but I am afraid it will appear you would have dealt more hardly with the King: You would not have given the King an Hour's Notice for saving his Life.

Secondary Trotman. I gave my Brother Normanfel a Copy of the Panel on my Side, and hear that my Brother Normanfel hath said that he delivered a Copy.

Then Secondary Normanfel was sent for, and the Court staid for him some time.

Mr. Atwood. My Lord, a Gentleman told me, he did not know whether it was fit, till he had consulted the Attorney General; afterwards I had a Copy as it stood then, not as it is now.

Mr. Att. Gen. I desire my Lord may be asked, who he sent for it?

L. Ruffel. I did not send for it; I inquired, and they said it would be refused.

Mr. Atwood. No, the Gentleman had it with the fair Periwig.

L. C. J. It was delivered to your Servant or Agent. What did you do with it?—L. Ruffel's Gent. Sir, The Gentleman gave me out of a Book some Names.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. What did you do with them?—L. Ruffel's Gent. I writ them down; they were not perfect; I did not know what they were.

L. C. J. Sir, you were to blame not to deliver it to my Lord.

L. Ruffel's Gent. I was not bound to deliver an imperfect thing to my Lord.

L. C. J. Sir, you should have consulted your Lord's Advantage, so as to have delivered any thing for his Good.

L. Ruffel's Gent. My Lord was in the Tower, I was not admitted to my Lord.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did you give it to my Lady?

L. Ruffel's Gent. Yes, those Names I had, my Lady had.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. How long ago was it?

Mr. Atwood. Tuesday or Wednesday last.

L. C. J. (to Lord Ruffel's Servant.) Look you, Sir, when had you this?

L. Ruffel. I had no Panel, I will assure you, delivered me; I had some Names of People that they said were usually on Juries.

L. C. J. They were the Names of the Jury.

L. Ruffel. They were only the Names of them that were like to be of the Jury; no other Panel came to me.

L. C. J. My Lord, there can be no other Copy given, but the same that was delivered; for your Lordship does know in this Case, any Person accused, as your Lordship is, may challenge Thirty five; and therefore there is a Return generally of Three or Four score, and these are returned in case of your Lordship's Challenge. When you have challenged so many as you please, then the twelve Men that stand after your Challenge are to be of the Jury. And therefore this is not like a Panel made up by the Sheriff, in ordinary Causes, between Man and Man; there they make a formal Panel, from which they cannot depart, when that is once returned; but here in criminal Cases, because of the Challenge, they return either Sixty or Eighty: And I presume your Lordship was attended with the Names delivered.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. How many Names were delivered?

Mr. Atwood. Above a Hundred.

L. Ruffel. I had nothing of a Panel delivered to me, but some Names.

L. C. J. There was never any formal Panel delivered to any Person accused: The Copy of it is in Paper always.

L. Ruffel. How can I know who to challenge?

* But it had been deny'd in Colledge's Case; and was afterwards deny'd to Mr. Cornish, till the Time of his Trial, when it could be of no Service to him.

† But the Resolution of the Court extended to all Trials, even in a County at large, and was so cited and followed in Colonel Sidney's Case, p. 736.

L. C. J. My Lord, the Copy of it is in your Hands; your Lordship hath been deceived in this, by not understanding the true Nature of these Things. If we were to give you a new one, we could give you but such an one.

L. Ruffel. I had no Paper from the true Officer.

L. C. J. No, but from your Servant.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, you will have Cause to complain, if they are not the same Men we now shall call.

L. C. J. My Lord, that Paper will guide your Lordship in your Challenges.

L. Ruffel. My Lord, I did not mind it: I put it away. My Lord, with your Favour, I must needs insist upon having a Panel, and that you will put it off till the Afternoon; I have a Witness that is not in Town. My Counsel told me it was never done, or very seldom, arraigning and trying at the same Time, except in case of common Malefactors.

L. C. J. Mr. Attorney, Why may not this Trial be respited till the Afternoon?

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray call the Jury.

L. C. J. My Lord, the King's Counsel think it not reasonable to put off the Trial longer, and we can't put it off without their Consent in this Case.

L. Ruffel. My Lord, 'tis hard: I thought the Law had allowed a pretty deal of Favour to a Man when he came upon his Life. How can I know to except against Men that I never heard or saw one of them?

Cl. of Cr. You the Prisoner at the Bar, Those good Men that have been now called, and here appear, are to pass between you and our Sovereign Lord the King, upon your Life or Death; if you challenge any of them, you must speak as they come to the Book to be sworn, before they are sworn.

L. Ruffel. My Lord, May I not have the Use of Pen, Ink and Paper?

Court. Yes, my Lord.

L. Ruffel. My Lord, may I not make use of any Papers I have?

L. C. J. Yes, by all means.

L. Ruffel. May I have somebody write to help my Memory?

Mr. Att. Gen. Yes, a Servant.

L. C. J. Any of your Servants shall assist you in writing any thing you please for you.

L. Ruffel. My Wife is here, my Lord, to do it.

L. C. J. If my Lady please to give herself the Trouble.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, you may have two Persons to write for you, if you please.

L. Ruffel. My Lord, here hath been a Name read, that I never saw in the List of the Jury I had: I heard Sir Andrew Foster called.

L. C. J. He is not called to be of the Jury.

Cl. of Cr. Call John Martin.

L. Ruffel. Are you a Freeholder of 40s. a Year? I hope none are allowed in the Panel, but those that have Freeholds.

L. C. J. There is no Panel made in London by Freeholders; we have very few Freeholders capable of being impannell'd, because the Estates of the City belong much to the Nobility and Gentlemen that live abroad, and to Corporations: Therefore in the City of London† the Challenge of Freeholders is excepted.

L. Ruffel. My Lord, I thought it had been always so, and the Law had been clear in that Case throughout England, that no Man ought to be tried for his Life, but by those that have Freeholds. My Lord, I remember I read a Statute of 2 H. 5. where 'tis positive, that no Persons shall be judged in case of Life and Death, but by those that have 40s. a Year.

L. C. J. My Lord, that Statute extends not to this Case. Read the Statute.

Cl. of Cr. Whereas Perjury is much used in the City of London, upon Perjures, &c.

L. C. J. Is this the Statute your Lordship has read?

L. Ruffel. This is not in the Case of Life and Death.

L. C. J. It is not, my Lord.

L. Ruffel. That that I read is positive. And if your Lordship will not allow of it, I desire my Counsel may come and argue it; for 'tis a Matter of Law, and I can't argue it, Whether the Jury are not to be Freeholders?

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. There is nothing mentioned in that Statute with relation to the City of London indeed; but the Necessity of the Thing requires it.

Mr. Att. Gen. It will not be material; 'tis a collateral Point; for most of the Jury have Freeholds.

L. C. J. Do you allow the Exception?

Mr. Att. Gen. No, my Lord.

L. C. J. Therefore we must, if my Lord stand upon it, hear his Counsel. My Lord, we will hear your Counsel: What Counsel do you desire, my Lord?—L. Ruffel. The Counsel that were allotted me.

L. C. J. No, you must have Counsel assign'd by us. The Counsel that was assign'd elsewhere signifies nothing.

L. Ruffel. Mr. Pollexfen, Mr. Holt, and Mr. Ward.

The said Persons were called, and came into Court.

L. C. J. (To the Counsel.) Gentlemen, my Lord here desires Counsel: you are here assigned as Counsel for my Lord Ruffel that is at the Bar, concerning a thing wherein he doubts the Law; he would except to the Jury upon this account, to the Poll, because they have not Freehold within the City of London; and he desires you may be assign'd his Counsel to make it out, that this is a Cause of Challenge.

Mr. Att. Gen. 'Tis a Case of Treason, Mr. Pollexfen.

Mr. Ward. We take it so.

Mr. Pollex. My Lord, perhaps if we had more Consideration of it, we should speak more; but if your Lordship pleases to hear us what we can say: First, we take it, with Submission, at Common Law, a Freehold was necessary to make a Man a Jury-man. But that which falls out in this Case, is the Statute of 2 H. 5. c. 3. which Statute, I suppose, is here in Court. That Statute says this, (if you please, I will quote the Substance of it) That none shall be admitted to pass upon any Inquest upon the Trial of the Death of a Man, except he have Lands and Tenements of the yearly Value of 40s. Now we are here, I think, within the Words of the Statute, and I take it to be no Question at all, were we not in a City and County. I think this would be no Question upon any Trial in any County at large. The Statute does not make any Exception or Distinction between Cities and Counties at large; but the Words are general, as I have opened them. My Lord, the Statute does also provide in Cases of Freehold or Forty Marks. Now, my Lord, to prove this Statute extends to London, tho' a City and County, there are other Statutes that have been made subsequent, make it plain that it does so extend. But before I speak to them, there is 1. Inst. Fe. 157. that takes Notice of this Statute, and speaks it generally, that the Freehold ought to be in the same County, nor do I remember to have seen any Book that distinguishes between Counties at large, and Cities and Counties. But Statutes that have been made concerning Cities and Counties are a plain Declaration, that this is meant of Juries both in Cities and Counties. I will mention the Statute 7. H. 7. c. 5. The Substance of the Statute is this: It takes Notice, that there were Challenges in London, for that they had not 40 s. per Ann. and that this Challenge was to be made in the Wards, which are the same with Hundreds in the Counties; so this Statute is made to take away the Challenge of 40 s. Freehold. This Statute of 7 H. 7. that takes away the Challenge in London, for not having 40 s. is, with Submission, a strong Evidence and Authority that it was before that Time a good Challenge; for otherwise to what End should they make a Statute to take away the Challenge, unless it were before a good Cause of Challenge? In the next place, 4 H. 8. c. 3. that extends to Civil Causes in London, and says, That the London Jurors shall (but provides only for London in Civil Causes) be admitted in Civil Causes, that have Goods to the Value of 100 Marks. My Lord, if that first Statute, or the Common Law, had not extended to require Freeholds in London, then there would have been no need of this Statute that was made to enable Men to be Jurors that had Goods to the Value of 100 Marks. So that we take it to be good Authority, that by the Common Law Freehold was required in all Civil Causes. Then there is another Statute 23 H. 8. c. 13. and that will be a strong Evidence to shew what the Law is: For the Statute says, in Cities and Boroughs, in Trials of Murder and Felony, if a Freeman of the City of London is to be tried, the Freeman shall be upon the Jury, though they have not Freehold; and then there is a Proviso, that for Knights and Esquires that are out of the Borough, though they are arraigned in the Borough, that extends not to them, though in Cases of Murder and Felony. As for this Statute, we take this Sense of it, first, That it does not extend to Treasons; for when it only names Murders and Felonies, that makes no Alteration as to Treason, therefore that stands as before: But if there be any Alteration, that extends only to Freemen and Burgesses that are to be tried, but not to Knights and Esquires; so that if we were in a Case of Felony and Murder, I think we are not concerned in this Statute; for we are no Freeman nor Burgesses, but we are an Esquire, and therefore ought to be tried by Freeholders: So that for the Law we rely upon these Statutes, that we have looked upon as strong Evidence, that there ought to be in the Trial of the Life of a Man, especially for Treason, Freeholders. First, If it were in Civil Causes, if this Qualification be not in Jury-men, then an Attaint would lie. The Penalty in an Attaint is, that their Houses should be pulled down, &c. This is provided by the Law, to the Intent the Jury may be careful to go according to their Evidence. 'Tis true, no Attaint does lie in Criminal Causes; but if so be in Civil Causes there be required Freeholders, and an Attaint lies, if there be not, 'tis not reasonable to think but there should be as great Regard to the Life of a Man as to his Estate. Next, my Lord, I do not know any Law that sets any kind of Qualification but this of Freehold; so that be the Persons of what Condition or Nature soever, (supposing they be not outlawed) yet these Persons, if this Law be not in Effect, may then serve and be put upon the Life of a Man. These are the Reasons, my Lord, for which we apprehend they ought to be Freeholders.

Mr. Holt. My Lord, I would desire one Word of the same Side: We insist in this Case upon these two Things: First, We conceive by the Common Law, every Jury-man ought to have a Freehold; we have good Authority for it, Coke's First Institutes; but if that were not so, I think the Statute Mr. Pollexfen hath first mentioned, 2 H. 5. c. 3. to be express in this Point. My Lord, the Statute in the Preamble does recite all the Mischiefs; it says, great Mischiefs ensued by Juries that were made up of Persons that had not Estates sufficient. In what? As well in the Case of the Death of a Man, as in the Case of Freehold between Party and Party: The Statute reciting this Mischief does in express Words provide two Remedies for the same in these Cases: First on the Life and Death of a Man, the Jury or Inquest to be taken, shall have 40 s. per Ann. and so between Party and Party 40 Marks; so that this being the Trial of the Death of a Man, it is interpreted by Stamford, 162 a. that is, in all Cases where a Man is arraigned for his Life, that is within the express Words of the Statute. Besides this Exposition that hath been put upon the Statute, my Lord, it does seem, that the Judgment of several Parliaments hath been accordingly in several Times and Ages. My Lord, to instance in one Statute that hath not been mentioned, and that is the 33 of H. 8. c. 23. that does give the King Power to award Commissions of Oyer and Terminer, for Trials in any County of England: And that (says the Statute) in such Cases no Challenge to the Shire or Hundred shall be allowed; that is, you shall not challenge the Jury in such a Case, because they have not Freehold, are not of the County where the Treason was committed; but that, upon the Trial, Challenge, for lack of Freehold of 40 s. a Year, shall be allowed, though it alters the manner of trying Treason by the Common Law: So that, my Lord, here is the Opinion of every Parliament, that though it took away the usual Method of Trials, yet it saves the Prisoner's Challenge for want of Freehold. Now, indeed, that Statute is repealed; but I mention it as to the Proviso, that it shews the Judgment of that Parliament at that Time. My Lord, those other Statutes that have been made to regulate Cities and Towns Corporate, why were they made? 33 H. 8. That no Freehold should be allowed, that shews that 2 H. 5. did extend to these Cases. But, my Lord, these Statutes that shew the Judgment of the Parliament sufficient for our Purpose, do not extend to this Case; the Statute goes only to Murders and Felonies, but not to Treasons: And we are in the Case of a Penal Statute, and concerning the Life and Death of a Man, which ought to be taken strictly, it ousts the Prisoner of a Benefit; and by Parity of Reason, if Treason be not mentioned, your Lordship can't by Equity extend it to it, when it only mentions inferior Offences, and takes away the Benefit in lower Cases: Like the Case of the Bishop of Winchester, where the Statute set down Dean and Chapters, and other Ecclesiastical Persons, it shall not extend to Bishops, because it begins with Persons of an inferior Nature: No more shall Murder and Felony extend to Treason. But further, the Statute only concerns Freemen; for there is an express Proviso in the Case: For in case any Knight or Esquire come to be tried in the Place, he has his Benefit as before. My Lord, we are in this Case, as in the Case not mentioned in the Statute, we are not a Freeman of London. My Lord, there is another thing, 7 H. 7. c. 5. why there was not only requisite at the Common Law, that the Jurors had sufficient Freehold, but it was required it should be in the Hundred; and Freehold in the Wards in the City is the same with Freehold in the Hundreds in the Country: So that the Want of Freehold in the Hundred was a good Cause of Challenge. So that I think it will hardly be denied, but that a Jury that passes upon the Life of a Man ought, by the Law, by the Statute, and by the Judgment of the Parliament, to have Freehold. Where is there then any Statute whatsoever that makes a Difference in this Case, between London and other Counties? We are in the Case of Treason, we have taken our Exceptions, and on Behalf of the Prisoner at the Bar we pray the Challenge may be allowed.

Mr. Ward. My Lord, I shall be short, because Mr. Pollexfen has observed these things so particularly already. I observe the Statute of H. 5. is a general Statute, and extends throughout the Realm: Now when the thing is thus general, there is no room to except Particulars. And in this Case 'tis within the very Words of the Law; if the Words be so generally penned in the Negative, then we conceive there is no Construction to be made upon them, unless some subsequent Parliament alter it. Coke's Institutes, 157. where 'tis said in Treason as well as any thing else, upon H. 5. there shall be Freeholds; if they have provided in Civil and other Criminal Causes, it were strange that this should be Causus omisus; but there is no Construction against a Negative Law: For the Parliament taking care of the City of London, (as the subsequent Statutes say) that he that hath a hundred Marks shall pass in Civil Causes, and then it says in Murders and Felonies, and that only confined to the Freemen of the Place, does sufficiently explain the Law, where 'tis not altered by any subsequent Act; therefore I desire the Challenge may be admitted.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, These Gentlemen's Foundation is not good; for they prove it not by any Books, that at Common Law it was requisite for a Jury-man to have Freehold. My Lord, I deny their Foundation; there is no such Law; and at this Day, in all Criminal Cases, where the Statute does not direct it, as for Riots and other Informations for Misdemeanour, there is no Law restrains them, and they may be tried by any Man they have no Exception against. Then 2 H. 5. says, None shall be admitted to pass upon the Death of a Man, (I take it to extend to all Capital Matters, though it is pretty oddly expressed; for when a Man is accused of other Felonies and High Treasons, 'tis of the Death of a Man) unless he have Lands or Tenements of the yearly Value of 40 s. But I will take it as these Gentlemen do at this Time, it not being so at Common Law, nor in other Criminal Cases, but what are provided for by the Statute: As to other Matters of Felony and Murder, no doubt there these Challenges are to be taken upon the Statute, but not for Treason, because the Statute of Queen Mary does expressly repeal that Statute; and no Statute since takes away the Force of that of Queen Mary; that all Trials for Treason shall be as at the Common Law; and according to this the constant Practice, in all Cities (not only London) where Persons have been indicted for High Treason, hath been. There was never any such thing pretended: Most of these Gentlemen have Freeholds, but we would not have this Point lost to the City of London; so that the Statute they speak of, and the Interpretations of the several other Statutes too, are to no Purpose; for we say by Common Law, all Causes might be tried by any Persons, against whom there is not sufficient Cause of Challenge; and the Common Law is by that Statute restored in this Point.

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lord, I have little to say; Mr. Attorney hath given a true Answer to it; the Foundation Mr. Finch does fail them. It was not necessary at Common Law for a Jury-man to have Freehold: But then they must shew you, my Lord, it is altered and made necessary. The Statute of H. 5. does not seem to extend to Treason; but if it did, 'tis now out of Doors, by that of Queen Mary, whereby all Trials of Treasons are reduced to the Common Law. This is that we answer, they fail in their Foundation, they do not make it out, that it was necessary for a Jury-man at Common Law to have Freehold.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. My Lord, I confess they have cited several Acts of Parliament, and upon them lay their Foundation, and draw Inferences from them: But they will find, that in several Acts of Parliament, which they have quoted, there is a particular Regard had for the Preservation of the constant Usage and Customs for Trials within the City of London. That notwithstanding several Acts of Parliament have in other Places ascertained the Value of Jurors; yet they had still an Eye, that the City of London should continue in its Usages. I think it will be necessary to put you in mind of the Case of the City of Worcester. It would be very hard, say they, because an Attaint does not lie in Criminal Matters; if you intend by that to have People of Ability, 'tis well known, that the ablest People in the City of London have scarce any Freehold in it; for that most of the Inheritances of the City of London remain in the Nobility and in Corporations. Now, in the Case of my Lord Ruffel, he hath a peremptory Challenge to 35; and I think I may adventure to say, there can scarce be 35 more that can call themselves Freeholders in London: Consider the Consequence then; Treason should be committed in the City of London, and there would not be enow in the

City

City of London to try it. In the Case of the Quo Warranto brought against the City of Worcester, to know by what Warrant several took upon them the Offices of Aldermen, the Gentlemen at the Bar objected, that it was reasonable, that no Freehold should be determined but by Freeholders. But the Judges of the King's Bench (the Court being full) for the Necessity of the thing, left there might not be sufficient Freeholders in that City, having sent one of the Judges of that Court to your Lordships of the Common Pleas, for that Reason did agree the Challenge was not good. I know these Gentlemen will please to remember the Case; so that I say, as in one Case we ought to be tender of the Life of the Prisoner, so we ought surely to be tender of the Life of the King; otherwise it may so happen, that the King's Life may be encompassed, and Treason committed in the City, and there would be no way in the World to try it: Therefore we pray for the King the Challenge may be over-ruled.

Mr. North. My Lord, It is the Practice to make the Venire facias, without mentioning Freehold; for it does not command, that they return so many Men that have Freehold, but probos & legales homines de vicineto; therefore at the Common Law, those were good Inquests to try any Man, that were not excommunicated, nor under any Out-law. 'Tis true, there are Statutes that say, all Jurymen shall have Freehold; but we say, these Statutes do not extend to the City of London, but that it is governed by its own Customs; and we say it is the Custom, that Citizens of Ability have been returned that have no Freehold. But granting what we do not, by way of Supposal, my Lord, it does not extend to this Case, because Trials are to be according to the Use at Common Law, by the Statute of Queen Mary, which does set them at large again; and that is the Reason the Prisoner, in this Case, hath his Challenge for 35, and is in other Cases restrained to 20; so that we say, these Men of Ability are good, and there is no Statute affects them.

L. C. J. Mr. Pollexfen, Do you find any Judgment that in Cases of Treason, by Common Law, they might except for want of Freehold? Have you any Resolution in the Case?

Mr. Pollexfen. I think there are Books that say, at Common Law there must be Freehold.

L. C. J. What, in Treason?

Mr. Pollexfen. No, my Lord.

L. C. J. Unless you speak of Treason, you do not speak ad idem: For I do take it, that in Cases of Treason, or in Cases of Felony, at the Common Law, they had no Liberty to except to Jurors, that they had not any Freehold; but that at the Common Law any good and lawful Men might pass. Then take as introductory of a new Law the Statute of H. 5. I am of the mind, that this Statute of H. 5. peradventure, may extend to Treasons and Felonies; but when the Statute of Queen Mary comes and says, all Trials shall be by such Evidence, and in such Manner, as by Common Law they ought to have been, I do not see how it is possible to make an Objection afterwards of this Nature. For, admitting this Act of Parliament of H. 5. had altered the Common Law, and given a Challenge, why then when the Statute of Queen Mary comes and sets all Trials at large in the Case of Treasons, then certainly the Challenge is gone again; and I doubt you will not find one Exception in this Case, ever since that Statute concerning the Jury's Freehold in Cases of Treason, but it hath generally passed otherwise, and there hath not been any ever excepted. I doubt it will be a very hard thing to maintain such a Challenge now. Here my Lords and Brothers will be pleased to deliver their Opinions. It is a Business of great Consequence, not only for this noble Person at the Bar, but for all other Persons.

L. C. Bar. I agree with your Lordship perfectly; but if the Counsel had laid a right Foundation, that it had been so at Common Law, there had been much said; but I take it at Common Law there was no Challenge for want of Freehold, and I am induced to think so; for otherwise what needed the Statute of H. 5. been made? But whether it extend to Treason or no, I am not so clear. And if it did, 'tis wiped off again by that of Queen Mary, which reduces all to the Common Law Trial.

Mr. J. Windham. I am of the same Opinion: I conceive at Common Law, lack of Freehold no good Cause of Challenge. 'Tis true, that Challenge is given in some Cases by Act of Parliament, yet I doubt whether it extend to a thing of so high a Nature as Treason; for other Statutes have not mentioned any thing of Treason. But suppose 2 H. 5. did extend to it, yet it is very plain, the Statute of 1 and 2 Queen Mary hath set all at large again, they are to be good and lawful Men; and I do not find that any thing of the Lawfulness must be the Freehold. And therefore I conceive this is no just Exception in this Case.

Mr. J. Jones. My Lord, I am of the same Opinion. I am of Opinion, that the Common Law did not require Freehold to be a good Cause of Challenge in the Case of Treason, and the rather, because at the Common Law, a Man that was indicted of High Treason had Liberty to challenge, preemptorily, to the Number of 35 Persons. My Lord, if the Common Law be altered by the Statute of H. 5. yet I take it, that the Statute of 1 and 2 Ph. and M. does restore the Common Law in this particular Point. For whereas there was a Statute H. 8. to restrain the Prisoner to the Number of 20 for his Challenge, now the Statute restoring it to Common Law, the Prisoner hath his Challenge to 35, as he had before that Statute of H. 8. So I take it the King shall have his Privilege also to try a Prisoner for Treason, by Persons that have not Freehold.

Mr. J. Charlton. I am of the same Opinion: And truly the rather, because no Precedent hath been offered of any such Challenge before, and many Men have suffered, and sure, if it could have been, many would have made use of it.

Mr. J. Levins. I am of Opinion, 'tis not to be allowed. I do not think myself driven to the Necessity to determine now, whether Freehold was a good Challenge at Common Law in point of Treason. I think the Statute of Ph. and M. hath restored the Trials to the Common Law. What was the Common Law? The Common Law is the Custom of England, which is other in Cities than in Counties, and the Custom of London is Part of that Common Law. So, tho' it be a Cause of Challenge in a County at large, yet it is not a Cause of Challenge in Cities, where Freeholders are not to be found. Now that which satisfies me is, That this Custom is restored by the Statute of Ph. and Mary; because never such a Challenge hath been. And it is known when 20 were tried for Treason together in this very Place, and one of them a notable cunning Lawyer, and if such a Challenge were to have been allowed, no doubt he would have made use of it; but the Challenge was not taken, and if he had made such a Challenge, and it had been allowed, perhaps he could not have been tried: That was Cook. I have heard several Persons tried for Treason myself, and never heard it taken. Therefore I am of Opinion, that before any Statute was made in this Case, it was the Custom in London to try without Freeholds, and since by the Statute of Queen Mary 'tis restored.

Mr. Bar. Street. I think there was no such Challenge at Common Law. The Jury were only to be probos & legales homines, and no more, till the Statute made it so; but there is a particular Reservation to Corporations. And certainly, if this should be admitted to be a good Challenge, tho' it were between Party and Party, there would be in some Corporations a perfect Failure of Justice. So that, without doubt, at Common Law there was no such Challenge. As for the Statute of H. 5. 'tis gone by that of Queen Mary. If this were admitted within London, nothing would be more mischievous to this Corporation. Methinks we have been very nice in this Matter, when the Life of the King is at Stake, and all the Customs and Privileges of the City of London seem to be levelled at in this Point. I am of the Opinion with the rest of the Judges, that this Challenge ought to be over-ruled.

J. Withins. I am of the same Opinion.

L. C. J. My Lord, The Court is of Opinion, upon hearing your Counsel, and the King's, that it is no good Challenge to a Jury in a Case of Treason, that he has not Freehold within the City: But I must tell your Lordship withal, that your Lordship has nothing of Hardship in this Case; for, notwithstanding that, I must tell you, you will have as good a Jury, and better than you should have had in a County, of 41. or 40s. a Year Freeholders. The Reason of the Law for Freeholds is, That no slight Persons should be put upon a Jury, where the Life of a Man, or his Estate, comes in Question; but in the City, the Persons that are impanelled are Men of Quality and Substance, Men that have a great deal to lose. And therefore your Lordship hath the same in Substance, as if a Challenge was allowed of Freehold. It will be no kind of Prejudice to your Lordship in this Case. Therefore, if you please, apply yourself as the Jury is called, and make your Exceptions, if you shall make any.

L. C. J. Mr. Pollexfen, You shall have Liberty to stay any-where here, if you please.

Counsel. Here is such a great Croud, my Lord, we have no Room. Then the Jurymen were called, and after the Lord Ruffel had challenged One, and thirty of them, the Jury sworn were as follows:

John Martin,	Thomas Short,	Thomas Jee,
William Rouse,	George Torriano.	Hugh Noden,
Jervas Seaton,	William Butler,	Robert Brough,
William Fashion,	James Pickering,	Thomas Oneby.

Then was made Proclamation for Information.

Cl. of Cr. William Ruffel, Esq; hold up thy Hand. (Which he did). You of the Jury, look upon the Prisoner, and hearken to his Cause: He stands indicted by the Name of ———— prout before in the Indictment. Upon this Indictment he hath been arraigned, and thereunto pleaded Not guilty, and for his Trial hath put himself upon his Country, which Country you are: Your Charge is to inquire whether he be Guilty of this High Treason whereof he stands indicted, or Not guilty: If you find him Guilty, you shall inquire, &c.

Mr. North. May it please your Lordship, and you that are sworn, The Prisoner at the Bar stands charged in this Indictment with no less than the conspiring the Death of the King's Majesty; and that, in order to the same, he did, with other Traitors named in the Indictment, and others not known, November 2. in the 34th Year of this King, in the Parish of Bassishaw, within the City of London, meet and conspire together to bring our Sovereign Lord the King to Death, to raise War and Rebellion against him, and to massacre his Subjects: And in order to compass these wicked Designs, there being assembled, did conclude to seize the King's Guards, and his Majesty's Person. This is the Charge: The Defendant says he is not Guilty; if we prove it upon him, it will be your Duty to find it.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, and you, Gentlemen of the Jury, Most of our Evidence against this Honourable Person at the Bar is to this Purpose: This Person, the Duke of Monmouth, my Lord Grey, Sir Thomas Armstrong, and Mr. Ferguson, they were the Council of State, as I may call them, to give forth Directions for the general Raising that hath appeared was to have been within this Kingdom. The Raising was of great Concern and Expence, and must be managed by Persons of Interest, Prudence, and great Secrecy. These Gentlemen had frequent Meetings in October and November last, (for then, you may refresh your Memories again, was the general Raising to be) and there they did consult how to manage the Raising they consulted how to seize the King's Guards; and this Noble Person being mixed with these others, especially with Ferguson, who with others of an inferior Rank was also engaged in a Cabal for managing worse Things, (tho' this is bad enough) at several Meetings they receive Messages from my Lord Shaftesbury touching the Raising; they being looked upon as the Persons that were to conclude and settle the Time, and all Circumstances about it.

We shall make it appear to you in the Course of our Evidence, that those Underlings (for this was the great Consult, and moved all the other Wheels) who managed the Assassination, did take Notice, that these Lords and Gentlemen of Quality were to manage and clear the whole Business of the Raising. It seems these Gentlemen could not give the Earl of Shaftesbury Satisfaction to his Mind; for he pressed them to keep their Day, which was the 17th of November last; but the Honourable Person at the Bar, and the rest, made him this Answer, That Mr. Trenchard had failed them; for that he had promised to have 1000 Foot, and 2 or 300 Horse, at four Hours Warning; but now it was come to pass, he could not perform it; that some Persons in the would not join with them, and therefore at this Time they could not proceed; and therefore they must defer the Day. And at a Council, they sent my Lord Shaftesbury Word, he must be contented, they had otherwise resolved, and thereupon my Lord Shaftesbury went away, and Mr. Ferguson with him.

To carry on this Practice, they took others into their Council, Sir Thomas Armstrong was left out, and there falling that scandalous Report upon my Lord Grey, he was to be left out, and then there was to be a new Council of Six, whereas the inferior Council to manage the Assassination was Seven. At this Council there was this honourable Person at the Bar, the Duke of Monmouth, my Lord Howard, and another Honourable Person, who I am sorry to name upon this Account, who hath, this Morning, prevented the Hand of Justice upon himself, my Lord of Essex and Col. Sidney, and Mr. Hambden: These six had their frequent Consults at this Honourable Person's House; for they had excluded Sir Thomas Armstrong, and my Lord Grey; for these Gentlemen would have the Face of Religion; and my Lord Grey was in their Esteem so scandalous, that they thought that would not prevail with the People, if he was of the Council. There they debated how they should make this Rising; after several Consultations they came to this Resolution: That before they did fall upon this Rising, they should have an exact Account both of the Time and Method of the Scotch Rising, and thereupon a Messenger was sent on purpose by Colonel Sidney, viz. Aaron Smith, to invite Scotch Commissioners to treat with these Noble Lords. Pursuant to this, just before the Plot brake out, several from Scotland came to treat with them how to manage the Work; 30,000 l. was demanded by the Scots, in order that they should be ready in Scotland; then they fell to 10,000; and at last, (for the Scots love Money) they fell to 5000, which they would take and run all Hazards; but they not coming to their Terms, that broke off that Week the Plot was discovered.

Gentlemen, if we prove all these Instances, besides, we shall call some to shew you, that all the inferior Party still looked upon these to be the Heads; and tho' they kept it secret, God hath suffered it to come to Light, with as plain an Evidence as ever was heard.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. I will not take up any of your Lordship's Time; we will call our Witnesses to prove the Fact Mr. Attorney hath opened. Swear Col. Rumsey (which was done). Pray, Colonel Rumsey, will you give my Lord and the Jury an Account, from the Beginning to the End, of the several Meetings that were, and what were the Debates of those Meetings?

Col. Rumsey. My Lord, I was at my Lord Shaftesbury's Lodging, where he lay, down by Wapping, about the latter End of October, or the Beginning of November; and he told me, there was met at one Mr. Sheppard's House, the Duke of Monmouth, my Lord Russell, my Lord Grey, Sir Thomas Armstrong, and Mr. Ferguson; and he desired me to speak to them, to know what Resolution they were come to about the Rising of Taunton: I did go there accordingly, and call for Mr. Sheppard, and he carried me up where they were, and the Answer that was there made me was, that Mr. Trenchard had failed them, and there would no more be done in the Matter at that Time.

Mr. Att. Gen. Tell the whole Passage.

Col. Rumsey. I did say my Lord Shaftesbury had sent me to know what Resolution they had taken about the Rising of Taunton: They made me this Answer, That Mr. Trenchard had failed them, that he had promised 1000 Foot and 300 Horse; but when he came to perform it, he could not. He thought the People would not meddle, unless they had some Time to make Provision for their Families.

L. C. J. Who had you this Message from?

Col. Rumsey. Mr. Ferguson did speak most of it.

L. C. J. Who sent this Message back?

Col. Rumsey. Mr. Ferguson made the Answer, my Lord Russell and the Duke of Monmouth were present, and I think my Lord Grey did say something to the same Purpose.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray, how often were you with them at that House?

Col. Rumsey. I do not know: I was there more than once, I was there either another Time, or else I heard Mr. Ferguson make a Report of another Meeting to my Lord Shaftesbury.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Was my Lord Russell in the Room when this Debate was?

Col. Rumsey. Yes, my Lord.

Mr. Att. Gen. What did they say further?

Col. Rumsey. That was all at that Time, that I remember.

Mr. Att. Gen. Was there nothing of my Lord Shaftesbury to be contented?

Col. Rumsey. Yes, that my Lord Shaftesbury must be contented; and upon that he took his Resolution to be gone.

L. C. J. Did you hear any such Resolution from him?

Col. Rumsey. Yes, my Lord.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did you know of their meeting there, or was it by my Lord Shaftesbury's Direction?

Col. Rumsey. No, but my Lord told me, I should find such Persons, and accordingly I found them; and this Answer was given.

Mr. Att. Gen. What Time did you stay?

Col. Rumsey. I think I was not there above a quarter of an Hour.

Mr. Att. Gen. Was there any Discourse happened while you were there about a Declaration?

Col. Rumsey. I am not certain whether I did hear something about a Declaration there, or that Mr. Ferguson did report it to my Lord Shaftesbury, that they had debated it.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. To what Purpose was the Declaration?

L. C. J. We must do the Prisoner that Right; he says he can't tell whether he had it from him or Mr. Ferguson.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did you hear no Discourse to what it tended?

Col. Rumsey. My Lord, there was some Discourse about seeing what Posture the Guards were in.

One of the Jury. By whom, Sir?

Col. Rumsey. By all the Company that was there.

L. C. J. What was that Discourse?

Col. Rumsey. To see what Posture they were in, that they might know who to surprise them.

L. C. J. The Guards?

Vol. III.

Col. Rumsey. Yes, that were at the Savoy and the Mews.

L. C. J. Whose were the Words? Tell the Words as near as you can.

Col. Rumsey. My Lord the Discourse was, that some should—

L. C. J. Who made that Discourse?

Col. Rumsey. My Lord, I think Sir Thomas Armstrong began it, and Mr. Ferguson.

Mr. Att. Gen. Was it discoursed among all the Company?

Col. Rumsey. All the Company did debate it. Afterwards they thought it necessary to see with what Care and Vigilance they did guard themselves at the Savoy and Mews, whether they might be surpris'd or not.

Mr. Att. Gen. Were there any undertook to go and see there?

Col. Rumsey. There were some Persons.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Name them.

Col. Rumsey. I think the Duke of Monmouth, my Lord Grey, and Sir Thomas Armstrong.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Was my Lord Russell, the Prisoner, there, when they undertook to take the View?

Col. Rumsey. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Att. Gen. To what Purpose was the View?

Col. Rumsey. To surpris'e them, if the Rising had gone on.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Did you observe by the Debates that happened, that they did take Notice there was a Rising intended?

Col. Rumsey. Yes.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. And that Direction was given to take a View of the Guards, if the Rising had gone on?

Col. Rumsey. Yes.

L. C. J. Pray, Sir, declare justly the Discourse.

Col. Rumsey. I went to them from my Lord Shaftesbury: And I did tell them, that my Lord did pray they would come to some Resolution; and they told me, Mr. Trenchard they depended upon for Taunton had failed them, who when he came up to Town first at the Term, had assured them, that in three or four Hours Time he could have One Thousand Foot, and Three hundred Horse: But now it came to be tried, he answered, it was not possible for him to undertake it; for People would not rush into it of a sudden, but have some Time to prepare for their Families.

Mr. Att. Gen. Was it pretended there should be a Rising at that Time?

Col. Rumsey. Yes, the 19th of November was appointed for the Rising.

L. C. J. Was it before that Time you went to press them from my Lord Shaftesbury?

Col. Rumsey. Yes, I think it was a matter of a Fortnight before, or something more. For I think it was concluded Sunday Fortnight, after my Lord Grey met.

Mr. Att. Gen. But you say, besides what you heard there, you understood there was to be a Rising at that Time: Was you to be engaged in this?

Col. Rumsey. Yes, I was.

L. C. J. You must speak so, that what you deliver may be sensible; for if you speak, I apprehend so and so, that will be doubtful.

Col. Rumsey. No, my Lord, the Rising was determined, and I was to have gone to Bristol.

Mr. Att. Gen. In what Capacity, as Colonel, or Captain?

Col. Rumsey. There was no Determination of that, no Quality.

L. C. J. By whose Appointment was that?

Col. Rumsey. My Lord Shaftesbury spake that to me.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. But pray, Col. Rumsey, this you are very able to know, what the Debates were; and need not be pumped with so many Questions: Pray, was there any Debate when you came with the Message from my Lord Shaftesbury's, was there a Debate about the Rising?

Col. Rumsey. There was no Debate of it, because they made Answer, Mr. Trenchard had failed them.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. But did not they take Notice of the Rising? Give an Account of it.

Col. Rumsey. I have done it twice.

Jury. We desire to know the Message from the Lord Shaftesbury.

L. C. J. Direct yourself to the Court: Some of the Gentlemen have not heard it, they desire you would, with a little more loud Voice, repeat the Message you were sent of from my Lord Shaftesbury.

Col. Rumsey. I was sent by my Lord, to know the Resolution of the Rising in Taunton; they answered Mr. Trenchard, whom they depended upon for the Men, had failed them, and that it must fall at that time, and my Lord must be contented.

Mr. Att. Gen. Was the Prisoner at the Bar present at that Debate?

Col. Rumsey. Yes.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Did you find him averse to it, or agreeing to it?

Col. Rumsey. Agreeing to it.

Baron Street. What said my Lord Shaftesbury?

Col. Rumsey. Upon my Return he said, he would be gone, and accordingly did go.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. If my Lord Russell pleases to ask him any Questions, he may.

L. Russell. Must I ask him now?

L. C. J. Yes, my Lord, propose your Questions to me.

L. Russell. I have very few Questions to ask him, for I know little of the Matter; for it was the greatest Accident in the World I was there, and when I saw that Company was there, I would have been gone again. I came there accidentally to speak with Mr. Sheppard; I was just come to Town, but there was no Discourse of surpris'ing the Guards, nor no undertaking of raising an Army.

L. C. J. We will hear you to any thing by-and-by, but that which we now desire of your Lordship is, as the Witnesses come, to know if you would have any particular Questions asked of them.

L. Russell. I desire to know, if I gave any Answer to any Message about the Rising: I was up and down; I do not know what they might say when I was in the Room; I was tasting of Wine.

L. C. J. Did you observe, that my Lord Russell said any thing there, and what?

Col. Rumsey. Yes, my Lord Russell did speak.

L. C. J. About what?

Col. Rumsey. About the Rising of Taunton.

L. Russell. It was Sir Tho. Armstrong that conversed with Mr. Trenchard.

L. C. J. What did you observe my Lord Russell to say?

Col. Rumsey. My Lord Russell did discourse of the Rising.

L. Russell. How should I discourse of the Rising at Taunton, that knew not the Place, nor had Knowledge of Trenchard?

Mr. Att. Gen. Now, my Lord, we will give you an Account, that my Lord Russell appointed this Place, and came in the dark without his Coach.

L. Russell. My Lord, I think the Witness was asked, if I gave my Consent.

L. C. J. What say you, did my Lord give any Consent to the Rising?

Col. Rumsey. Yes, my Lord, he did.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray, swear Mr. Sheppard.

[Which was done.]

Pray, will you speak aloud, and give an Account to my Lord and the Jury, of the Meetings at your House, and what was done?

Mr. Sheppard. In the Month of October last, as I remember, Mr. Ferguson came to me in the Duke of Monmouth's Name, and desired the Convenience of my House, for him and some other Persons of Quality to meet there. And as soon as I had granted it, in the Evening the Duke of Monmouth, my Lord Grey, my Lord Russell, Sir Thomas Armstrong, Col. Rumsey, and Mr. Ferguson came. Sir Thomas Armstrong desired me, that none of my Servants might come up, but they might be private; so what they wanted I went down for, a Bottle of Wine or so. The Substance of their Discourse was, how to surprise the King's Guards: And in order to that, the Duke of Monmouth, my Lord Grey, and Sir Thomas Armstrong, as I remember, went one Night to the Mews, or thereabout, to see the King's Guards: And the next time they came to my House, I heard Sir Thomas Armstrong say, The Guards were very remiss in their Places, and not like Soldiers, and the thing was feasible, if they had Strength to do it.

Mr. Att. Gen. How many Meetings had you there?

Mr. Sheppard. I remember but twice, Sir.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did they meet by Chance, or had you Notice they would be there that Night?—Mr. Sheppard. Yes, I did hear it before.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Who had you Notice would be there?

Mr. Sheppard. The Duke of Monmouth, my Lord Grey, my Lord Russell, Sir Thomas Armstrong, Col. Rumsey, and Mr. Ferguson.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did they come with their Coaches, or a-foot, in the Night-time, and in the dark?

Mr. Sheppard. I cannot tell; it was in the Evening, I did not let them in.

Mr. Att. Gen. Were there any Coaches at the Door?

Mr. Sheppard. None that I heard, or saw, they came not altogether, but immediately one after another.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Had they any Debate before they went into the Room?

Mr. Sheppard. No, they went readily into the Room.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Was my Lord Russell both times there?

Mr. Sheppard. Yes, Sir, as I remember.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Had you any particular Business with my Lord Russell, or he with you?

Mr. Sheppard. No, not at that time, but since I have had, about the Affairs of my Lord Shaftesbury.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Do you remember Col. Rumsey, at the first Time, had any Discourse about any private Business relating to my Lord Russell?

Mr. Sheppard. No, I do not remember it.

Mr. Att. Gen. Besides the seizing of the Guards, did they discourse about Rising?

Mr. Sheppard. I do not remember any further Discourse, for I went several times down to fetch Wine, and Sugar, and Nutmeg, and I do not know what was said in my Absence.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Do you remember any Writings or Papers read at that time?—Mr. Sheppard. None that I saw.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Or that you heard of?

Mr. Sheppard. Yes, now I recollect myself, I do remember one Paper was read.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. To what Purpose was it?

Mr. Sheppard. It was somewhat in the nature of a Declaration; it was read by Mr. Ferguson; who was present at the Reading, I cannot say, whether they were all present or not. The Purport of it was setting forth the Grievances of the Nation, but truly what Particulars I can't tell: It was a pretty large Paper.

Mr. Att. Gen. But can you tell the Effect of it, When was that to be set out?

Mr. Sheppard. It was not discoursed, it was shewn only, I suppose, for Approbation.

Mr. Att. Gen. Who was it shew'd to?

Mr. Sheppard. Sir Thomas Armstrong.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Who else?

Mr. Sheppard. As I remember, the Duke was present, and I think Col. Rumsey.

Col. Rumsey. No, I was not; it was done before I came.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. What was the Design of that Paper? Recollect yourself, What was the Design?

Mr. Sheppard. The Design of that Paper was in the Nature of a Declaration, setting forth the Grievances of the Nation, in order to a Rising, I suppose for the Purport of the Paper; but cannot remember the particular Words of it.

Foreman of the Jury. Can you say my Lord Russell was there, when that Declaration was read, as you call it?

Mr. Sheppard. I can't say that.

Mr. Att. Gen. But he was there, when he talked of seizing the Guards?

Mr. Sheppard. Yes, my Lord was there then.

L. Russell. Pray, Mr. Sheppard, do you remember the time when these Meetings were?

Mr. Sheppard. I can't be positive as to the Time. I remember it was at the Time my Lord Shaftesbury was absent from his own House, and he absented himself from his own House about Michaelmas-day; but I cannot be positive as to the Time.

L. Russell. I never was but once at your House, and there was no such Design as I heard of. I desire that Mr. Sheppard may recollect himself.

Mr. Sheppard. Indeed, my Lord, I can't be positive in the Times. My Lord, I am sure, was at one Meeting.

L. C. J. But was he at both?

Mr. Sheppard. I think so; but it was eight or nine Months ago, and I can't be positive.

L. Russell. I can prove I was then in the Country. Col. Rumsey said there was but one Meeting.

Col. Rumsey. I do not remember I was at two; if I was not, I heard Mr. Ferguson relate the Debates of the other Meeting to my Lord Shaftesbury.

L. Russell. Is it usual for the Witnesses to hear one another?

L. C. J. I think your Lordship need not concern yourself about that; for I see the Witnesses are brought in one after another.

L. Russell. There was no Design.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. He hath sworn it.

Mr. Att. Gen. Swear my Lord Howard.

[Which was done.]

Pray, will your Lordship give an Account to the Court, what you know of a Rising designed before my Lord Shaftesbury went away, and afterwards how it was continued on?

L. Howard. My Lord, I appear with some Confusion. Let no Man wonder, that it is troublesome to me. My Lord, as to the Question Mr. Attorney puts to me, this is the Account I have to give: 'Tis very well known to every one, how great a Ferment was made in the City, upon occasion of the long Dispute about the Election of Sheriffs: And this soon produced a greater Freedom and Liberty of Speech one with another, than perhaps had been used formerly, though not without some previous Preparations and Dispositions made to the same thing. Upon this Occasion, among others, I was acquainted with Captain Walcot, a Person that had been some Months in England, being returned out of Ireland, and who indeed I had not seen for Eleven Years before. But he came to me as soon as he came out of Ireland, and when these unhappy Divisions came, he made very frequent Applications to me; and tho' he was unknown himself, yet being brought by me, he soon gained a Confidence with my Lord Shaftesbury, and from him derived it to others. When this unhappy Rent and Division of Mind was, he having before got himself acquainted with many Persons of the City, had entered into such Counsels with them, as afterwards had the Effect, which in the ensuing Narrative I shall relate to your Lordship. He came to me, and told me, that they were now sensible all they had was going, that this Force put upon them—

L. C. J. Pray, my Lord, raise your Voice, else your Evidence will pass for nothing.

One of the Jury. We cannot hear, my Lord.

L. Howard. There is an unhappy Accident happen'd that hath sunk my Voice: I was but just now acquainted with the Fate of my Lord of Essex.—My Lord, I say, he came to me, and did acquaint me, that the People were now so sensible that all their Interest was going, by that Violence offer'd to the City in their Elections, that they were resolved to take some Course to put a Stop to it, if it were possible: He told me there were several Consults and Meetings of Persons about it, and several Persons had begun to put themselves into a Disposition and Preparation to act; that some had furnished themselves with very good Horses, and kept them in the most secret and blind Stables they could; That divers had intended it, and for his own part, he was resolved to embark himself in it. And having an Estate in Ireland, he thought to dispatch his Son thither (for he had a good real Estate, and a great Stock, how he disposed of his real Estate I know not); but he ordered his Son to turn his Stock into Money to furnish him for the Occasion: This I take to be about August, His Son was sent away. Soon after this, the Son not being yet returned, and I having several Accounts from him, wherein I found the Fermentation grew higher and higher, and every Day a nearer Approach to Action, I told him I had a Necessity to go into Essex to attend the Concerns of my own Estate; but told him, how he might by another Name convey Letters to me, and gave him a little Cant, by which he might blind and disguise the Matter he wrote about, when I was in the Country. I received two or three Letters from him, that gave me an Account in that disguised Style, but such as I understood, that the Negotiation which he had with my Correspondents was going on, and in good Condition; and it was earnestly desired I would come to Town; this was the Middle of September. I, notwithstanding, was willing to see the Result of that great Affair, upon which all Men's Eyes were fixed, which was the Determination of the Shrivality about that time. So I ordered it to fall into Town, and went to my own House on Saturday Night, which was Michaelmas-day. On Sunday he came to me, and dined with me, and told me, (after a general Account given me of the Affairs of the Times) that my Lord Shaftesbury was secreted and withdrawn from his own House in Aldersgate-street; and that though he had a Family settled, and had absconded himself from them, and divers others of his Friends and Confidants; yet he did desire to speak with me, and for that Purpose sent him to shew me the Way to his Lodging: He brought me to a House at the lower End of Wood-street, one Watson's House, and there my Lord was alone. He told me he could not but be sensible, how innocent soever he was, both he and all honest Men were unsafe, so long as the Administration of Justice was in such Hands as would accommodate all Things to the Humour of the Court: That in the Sense of this he thought it but reasonable to provide for his own Safety, by withdrawing himself from his own House into that Retirement: That now he had ripen'd Affairs to that Head, and had Things in that Preparation, that he did not doubt but he should be able, by those Men that would be in Readiness in London, to turn the Tide, and put a Stop to the Torrent that was ready to overflow. But he did complain to me, that his Design, and the Design of the Publick, was very much obstructed by the unhandsome Deportment of the Duke of Monmouth, and my Lord Russell, who had withdrawn themselves not only from his Assistance, but from their own Engagements and Appointments: For when he had got such a formed Force as he had in London, and expected to have it answered by them in the Country, they did recede from it, and told him they were not in a Condition or Preparation, in the Country, to be concurrent with him at that Time. This he looked upon but as an artificial Excuse, and as an Instance of their Intentions wholly to desert him; but notwithstanding there was such Preparation made in London, that if they were willing to lose the Honour of being concurrent with him, he was able to do it himself, and did intend speedily to put it into Execution. I asked him, What Forces he had? He said he had enough. Says I, What are you assured of? Says he, There is above Ten thousand brisk Boys are ready to follow me, whenever I hold up my Finger. Says I, How

How have you methoded this, that they should not be crushed? for there will be a great Force to oppose you. Yes, he answered, but they would possess themselves of the Gates; and these Ten thousand Men, in twenty-four Hours, would be multiplied into five times the Number, and be able to make a Sally out, and possess themselves of Whitehall, by beating the Guards. I told him, this was a fair Story, and I had Reason to think, a Man of his Figure would not undertake a thing that might prove so fatal, unless it were laid on a Foundation that might give a prudent Man Ground to hope it would be successful. He said he was certain of it, but confessed it was a great Disappointment that these Lords had failed him. I told him, I was not provided with an Answer at that time; that he well knew me, and knew the general Frame and Bent of my Spirit. But I told him, I looked upon it as dangerous, and ought to be laid deep, and to be very well weighed and consider'd of; and did not think it a thing fit to be enter'd upon, without the Concurrence of those Lords: And therefore desired, before I discover'd my own Inclination, to discourse with those Lords. He did consent, with much ado; but, says he, you will find they will waive it, and give doubtful and deferring Answers, but you will find this a Truth. I went to Moor-Park the next Day, where the Duke of Monmouth was, and told him the great Complaint my Lord Shaftesbury had made, that he failed him. Says he, I think he is mad: I was so far from giving him any Encouragement, that I did tell him from the Beginning, and so did my Lord Russel, there was nothing to be done by us in the Country at that time. I did not then own I had seen my Lord, but spake as if this were brought me by a third Person, because he had not given me Liberty to tell them where his Lodging was. Says I, my Lord, I shall be able to give a better Account of this in a Day or two: Shall I convey it to my Lord, that you are willing to give a Meeting? Yes, says he, with all my Heart. This was the second, third or fourth of October. I came to Town on Saturday, and was carried to him on Monday; and I suppose this was Tuesday the second of October: On Wednesday, I think, I went to him again, (but 'tis not very material) and told him I had been with the Duke of Monmouth, and given him a punctual Account of what I had from him; and the Duke did absolutely disown any such thing; and told me, he never did give him any Encouragement to proceed that way, because the Countries were not in a Disposition for Action, nor could be put in Readiness at that Time. Says my Lord Shaftesbury, 'Tis false; they are afraid to own it. And, says he, I have Reason to believe, there is some artificial Bargain between his Father and him, to save one another: For when I have brought him to Action, I could never get him to put on, and therefore I suspect him: And, says he, several honest Men in the City have puzzled me, in asking how the Duke of Monmouth lived: Says he, They puzzled me, and I could not answer the Question; for I know he must have his Living from the King; and, says he, we have different Prospects: We are for a Commonwealth, and he hath no other Design but his own personal Interest, and that will not go down with my People now, so he called them) they are all for a Commonwealth: And then, says he, 'Tis to no purpose for me to see him; it will but widen the Breach, and I dare not trust him to come hither. Says I, my Lord, that's a good one indeed! Dare not you trust him, and yet do you send me to him on this Errand? Nay, says he, 'tis because we have had some Misunderstanding of late; but I believe he is true enough to the Interest. Says I, 'Tis a great Unhappiness to take this Time to fall out; and I think 'tis so great a Design, that it ought to be undertaken with the greatest Strength and Coalition in the Kingdom. Says he, My Friends are now gone so far, that they can't pull their Foot back again without going further; for, says he, it hath been communicated to so many, that 'tis impossible to keep it from taking Air, and it must go on. Says he, We are not so unprovided as you think for; there are so many Men, that you will find as brisk Men as any in England. Besides, we are to have 1000 or 1500 Horse, that are to be drawn by insensible Parties into Town, that when the Insurrection is, shall be able to scour the Streets, and hinder them from forming their Forces against us. My Lord, after great Inlargement upon this Head, and Heads of the like Nature, I told him I would not leave him thus, and that nothing should satisfy me, but an Interview between him and the Lords. No, I could not obtain it: But if I would go and tell them what a forwardness he was in, and that, if they would do themselves Right, by putting themselves upon correspondent Action in their respective Places, and where their Interest lay, well; otherwise he would go away without them. So I went again to the Duke of Monmouth, I spake to him only (I never spake to my Lord Russel then, only we were together, but I had never come to any close Conjunction of Counsels in my Life with him at that time). Says I, to the Duke, This Man is mad, and his Madness will prove fatal to us all; he hath been in a Fright by being in the Tower, and carries those Fears about him that cloud his Understanding; I think his Judgment hath deserted him, when he goes about with those strange sanguine Hopes, that I can't see what should support him in the Ground of them. Therefore, says I, Pray will you give him a Meeting. God-so, says the Duke, with all my Heart, and I desire nothing more. Now, I told him, I had been with my Lord Shaftesbury, with other Inlargements that I need not trouble your Lordship with: Well, says he, Pray go to him, and try if it be possible to get a Meeting: So I went to him, and told him. Says I, This is a great Unhappiness, and it seems to be a great Absurdity, that you are so forward to act alone in such a thing as this. Pray, says I, without any more to do, since you have this Confidence to send for me, let me prevail with you to meet them, and give them an Interview, or else you and I must break. I will no longer hold any Correspondence, unless it be so. Says he, I tell you they will betray me. In short, he did with much Importunity yield, that he would come out the next Night in a Disguise. By this time it was Saturday, I take it to be the sixth of October; an Almanack will settle that: So the next Night being Sunday, and the Shops shut, he would come out in a Concealment, be carried in a Coach, and brought to his own House, which he thought then was safest. I came and gave the Duke of Monmouth an Account of it; the Duke, I suppose, conveyed the same Understanding to my Lord Russel; and, I suppose, both would have been there accordingly, to have given the Meeting; but next Morning I found Colonel Rumsey had left a Note at my House, that the Meeting could not be that Day. Then I went to the Duke of Monmouth, and he had had the Account before, that my Lord Shaftesbury did apprehend himself to be in some Danger in that House, and that the Apprehension had occasioned him to remove; but we should be sure to hear from him in two or three Days. We took it as a Waiver, and thought he did from thence intend to abscond himself from us, and it proved so to me, for from that time I never saw him. But Captain Walcot came to me, and told me, that he was withdrawn, but it was for fear his Lodging might be discovered, but he did not doubt but in a Week he would let me know where his Lodging was: But told me within such a time, which I think was eight or ten Days, there would be a Rising; and I told the Duke of Monmouth, and I believe he told my Lord Russel; and we believed his Frenzy was now grown to that Height, that he would rise immediately, and put his Design in Execution; so we endeavour'd to prevent it. Upon which my Lord Russel (I was told) and the Duke of Monmouth, did force their way to my Lord Shaftesbury's, and did persuade him to put off the Day of his Rendezvous. I had not this from my Lord Russel, for I had not spoke a Word to him; but the Duke told me, my Lord Russel had been with him (I had indeed an Intimation, that he had been with him); but the Duke told me, says he, I have not been with him, but my Lord Russel was, having been convey'd by Colonel Rumsey. After this Day was put off, it seems it was put off with this Condition, That those Lords, and divers others, should be in a Readiness to raise the Country about that Day Fortnight, or thereabouts; for there was not above a Fortnight's time given: And, says the Duke of Monmouth, we have put it off, but now we must be in Action, for there's no holding it off any longer. And says he, I have been at Wapping all Night, and I never saw a Company of bolder and brisker Fellows in my Life: And, says he, I have been round the Tower, and seen the Avenues of it; and I do not think it will be hard, in a little time, to possess ourselves of it: But, says he, they are in the wrong way, yet we are engaged to be ready for them in a Fortnight, and therefore, says he, now we must apply ourselves to it as well as we can. And thereupon I believe they did send into the Country; and the Duke of Monmouth told me, he spake to Mr. Trenchard, who was to take particular Care of Somersetshire, with this Circumstance: Says he, I thought Mr. Trenchard had been a brisker Fellow; for when I told him of it, he looked so pale, I thought he would have swooned, when I brought him to the Brink of Action; and said, I pray go and do what you can among your Acquaintance; and truly, I thought it would have come then to Action. But I went the next Day to him, and he said it was impossible; they could not get the Gentlemen of the Country to stir yet.

L. Russel. My Lord, I think I have very hard Measure, here is a great deal of Evidence by Hear-say.

L. C. J. This is nothing against you, I declare it to the Jury.

Mr. Att. Gen. If you please, my Lord, go on in the Method of Time. This is nothing against you, but it's coming to you, if your Lordship will have Patience, I assure you.

L. Howard. This is just in the Order it was done. When this was put off, then they were in a great Hurry; and Captain Walcot had been several times with me, and discoursed of it. But upon this Disappointment they said, it should be the Dishonour of the Lords, that they were backward to perform their Parts; but still they were resolved to go on. And this had carried it to the latter end of October. About the 17th or 18th Captain Walcot came to me, and told me, now they were resolv'd positively to rise, and did believe, that a smart Party might perhaps meet with some great Men. Thereupon I told the Duke of it; I met him in the Street, and went out of my own Coach into his, and told him, That there was some dark Intimation, as if there might be some Attempt upon the King's Person; with that he struck his Breast with a great Emotion of Spirit, and said, God-so, kill the King! I will never suffer that. Then he went to the Play-house to find Sir Thomas Armstrong, and send him up and down the City to put it off, as they did formerly; and it was done with that Success, that we were all quieted in our Minds, that at that time nothing would be done: But upon the Day the King came from Newmarket, we din'd together; the Duke of Monmouth was one, and there we had a Notion conveyed among us, that some bold Action should be done that Day; which comparing it with the King's coming, we concluded it was design'd upon the King. And I remember my Lord Grey, says he, By God, if they do attempt any such thing, it can't fail. We were in great Anxiety of Mind, till we heard the King's Coach was come in, and Sir Thomas Armstrong not being there, we apprehended that he was to be one of the Party (for he was not there). This failing, (it was then next determined which was the last Alarm and News I had of it) to be done upon the 17th of November, the Anniversary of Queen Elizabeth; and I remember it by this Remark I made myself, that I fear'd it had been discovered, because I saw a Proclamation a little before, forbidding publick Bonfires without leave of my Lord Mayor. It made some Impressions upon me, that I thought they had got an Intimation of our Intention, and had therefore forbid that Meeting. This therefore of the 17th of November being also disappointed, and my Lord Shaftesbury, being told things were not ripe in the Country, took Shipping and got away; and from that time I heard no more of him till I heard he was dead. Now, Sir, after this we all began to lie under the same Sense and Apprehensions that my Lord Shaftesbury did, that we had gone so far, and communicated it to so many, that it was unsafe to make a Retreat; and this being considered, it was also considered, that so great an Affair as that was, consisting of such infinite Particulars, to be managed with so much Fineness, and to have so many Parts, it would be necessary, that there should be some general Council, that should take upon them the Care of the Whole. Upon these Thoughts we resolved to erect a little Cabal among ourselves, which did consist of six Persons; and the Persons were, The Duke of Monmouth, my Lord of Effex, my Lord Russel, Mr. Humbden, Jun. Algernone Sidney, and myself.

Mr. Att. Gen. About what time was this, when you settled this Council?

L. Howard.

L. Howard. It would have been proper for me in the next Place to tell you that, and I was coming to it. This was about the Middle of Jan. last (as near as I can remember); for about that time we did meet at Mr. Hambden's House.

Mr. Att. Gen. Name those that met.

L. Howard. All the Persons I named before; that was the Duke of Monmouth, my Lord of Essex, my Lord Ruffel, Col. Sidney, Mr. Hambden, jun. and myself. When we met there, it was presently agreed what their proper Province was, which was to have a care of the whole: And therefore it was necessary some general Things should fall under our Care and Conduct, which could not possibly be conducted by individual Persons. The Things that did principally challenge this Care, we thought were these: Whether the Insurrection was most proper to be begun in London, or in the Country, or both at one Instant. This stood upon several different Reasons: It was said in the Country; and I remember the Duke of Monmouth insisted upon it, that it was impossible to oppose a formed, well-methodiz'd, and govern'd Force, with a Rabble hastily got together; and therefore whatever Numbers could be gathered in the City, would be suppressed quickly, before they could form themselves: Therefore it would be better to begin it at such a Distance from the Town, where they might have an Opportunity of forming themselves, and would not be subject to the like panick Fear, as in the Town, where half an Hour would convey the News to those Forces that in another half Hour would be ready to suppress them.

Mr. Att. Gen. Was this determined among you all?

L. Howard. In this Manner that I tell you, why it was necessary to be done at some reasonable Distance from the Town. And from thence it was likewise considered, that the being so remote from the Town, it would put the King upon this Dilemma, that either the King would send his Forces to subdue them; or not; if he did, he must leave the City naked, who being Proxim' Dispositioni to Action, it would give them Occasion to rise, and come upon the Back of the King's Forces; if he did not send, it would give them Time to form their Number, and be better ordered.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, we do not desire all your Discourse and Debates: What was your other general Thing?

L. Howard. The other was, What Countries and Towns were the fittest and most disposed to Action: And the Third, what Arms were necessary to be got, and how to be disposed: And a Fourth, (which should have been indeed first in Consideration) propounded by the Duke of Monmouth, That it would be absolutely necessary to have some common Bank of 25 or 30,000*l.* to answer the Occasions of such an Undertaking. Nothing was done, but these Things were offered then to our Consideration, and we were to bring in our united Advice concerning them. But the last and greatest was, how he might so order it, as to draw Scotland into a Consent with us; for we thought it necessary that all the Division should be given. This was the last.

Mr. Att. Gen. Had you any other Meetings?

L. Howard. We had, about ten Days after this, at my Lord Ruffel's.

Mr. Att. Gen. The same Persons?

L. Howard. Every one of the same Persons then meeting.

Mr. Att. Gen. What Debate had you there?

L. Howard. Then it was so far, as we came to a Resolution, That some Persons should be sent to my Lord Argyle, to settle an Understanding with him; and that some Messengers should be dispatched into Scotland, that should invite some Persons hither, that were judged most able to understand the Estate of Scotland, and give an Account of it. The Persons agreed on were Sir John Cockram, my Lord Melville, and another whose Name I have since been told upon my Description, Sir — Cambel. For this Purpose we did order a Person should be thought on that was fit —

Mr. Att. Gen. Do you know who was sent, and what was done upon this Resolution?

L. Howard. I have heard (I never saw him in six Months before) that Aaron Smith was sent.

Mr. Att. Gen. Who was intrusted to take Care of that Business?

L. Howard. Col. Sidney. We in Discourse did agree to refer it to Colonel Sidney to have the Care of sending a Person.

Mr. Att. Gen. Who acquainted you Aaron Smith was sent?

L. Howard. Col. Sidney told me he had sent him, and given him sixty Guineas for his Journey.

Mr. Att. Gen. What more Meetings had you?

L. Howard. We did then consider that these Meetings might have occasioned some Observation upon us, and agreed not to meet again till the Return of that Messenger. He was gone, I believe, near a Month before we heard any thing of him, which we wonder'd at and fear'd some Miscarriage; but if his Letter had miscarried, it could have done no great Hurt, for it carried only a kind of Cant in it; it was under the Disguise of a Plantation in Carolina.

Mr. Att. Gen. You are sure my Lord Ruffel was there?

L. Howard. Yes, Sir: I wish I could say he was not.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did he sit there as a Cypher? What did my Lord say?

L. Howard. Every one knows my Lord Ruffel is a Person of great Judgment, and not very lavish in Discourse.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. But he did consent?

L. Howard. We did not put it to the Vote, but it went without Contradiction, and I took it, that all there gave their Consent.

Mr. Sol. Gen. The raising of Money you speak of, was that put into any way?

L. Howard. No, but every Man was to put themselves upon thinking of such a way, that Money might be collected without administering Jealousy.

Mr. Att. Gen. Were there no Persons to undertake for a Fund?

L. Howard. No, I think not. However, it was but Opinion, the thing that was said was jocosely, rather than any thing else, that my Lord of Essex had dealing in Money, and therefore he was thought the most proper Person to take care of those things; but this was said rather by way of Mirth, than otherwise.

Mr. Att. Gen. What do you know else, my Lord?

L. Howard. I was going to tell you, I am now at a full Stop. For it was six Weeks or more before Smith's Return, and then drew on the Time, that it was necessary for me to go into Essex, where I had a small Concern; there I staid about three Weeks; when I came back, I was informed that he was returned, and Sir John Cockram was also come to Town.

L. C. J. Did you meet after this?

L. Howard. No, my Lord, I tell you, that I was forced to go three Weeks upon the Account of my Estate, and afterwards I was necessitated to go to the Bath, where I spent five Weeks; and the time of coming from the Bath to this time, is five Weeks more; so that all this time hath been a perfect Parenthesis to me, and more than this I know not.

L. C. J. My Lord Ruffel, Now, if your Lordship pleases, is the time for you to ask him any Questions.

L. Ruffel. The most he hath said of me, my Lord, is only Hear-say; the two times we met, it was upon no formed Design, only to talk of News, and talk of things in general.

L. C. J. But I will tell you what it is he testifies, that comes nearest your Lordship, that so you may consider of it, if you will ask any Questions. He says, after my Lord Shaftesbury went off (all before is but Inducement, as to any thing that concerns your Lordship, and does not particularly touch you; after his going away, he says) the Party concerned with my Lord Shaftesbury did think fit to make Choice of six Persons to carry on the Design of an Insurrection or Rising, as he calls it, in the Kingdom; and that to that Purpose, Choice was made of the Duke of Monmouth, my Lord of Essex, your Lordship, my Lord Howard, Colonel Sidney, and Mr. Hambden.

L. Ruffel. Pray, my Lord, not to interrupt you, by what Party (I know no Party) were they chosen?

L. Howard. 'Tis very true, we were not chosen by Community, but did erect ourselves by mutual Agreement, one with another, into this Society.

L. Ruffel. We were People that did meet very often.

L. C. J. Will your Lordship please to have any other Questions asked of my Lord Howard?

L. Ruffel. He says, it was a formed Design, when we met about no such thing.

L. C. J. He says, that you did consult among yourselves, about the Raising of Men, and where the Rising should be first, whether in the City of London, or in more foreign Parts, that you had several Debates concerning it; he does make mention of some of the Duke of Monmouth's Arguments for its being formed in Places from the City; he says, you did all agree, not to do any thing further in it, till you had consider'd how to raise Money and Arms: And to engage the Kingdom of Scotland in this Business with you, that it was agreed among you that a Messenger should be sent into the Kingdom of Scotland. Thus far he goes upon his own Knowledge, as he saith; what he says after, of sending a Messenger, is by Report only.

Mr. Att. Gen. I beg your Pardon, my Lord.

L. C. J. 'Tis so, that which he heard concerning the sending of Aaron Smith.

Mr. Att. Gen. Will you ask him any Questions?

L. Ruffel. We met, but there was no Debate of any such thing, nor putting any thing in Method. But my Lord Howard is a Man hath a voluble Tongue, talks very well, and is full of Discourse, and we were delighted to hear him.

Mr. Att. Gen. I think your Lordship did mention the Cambells?

L. Howard. I did flammer it out, but not without a Parenthesis, it was a Person of the Alliance, and I thought of the Name of the Argyles.

L. Ruffel. I desire your Lordship to take notice, that none of these Men I ever saw; my Lord Melville I have seen, but not upon this Account.

Mr. Atterbury sworn.

Mr. Att. Gen. Aaron Smith did go, and Cambell he went for, is here taken. This is the Messenger. Pray, what do you know of the Apprehending of the Cambells?

Mr. Atterbury. If it please your Lordship, I did not apprehend Sir Hugh Cambell myself, but he is now in my Custody; he was making his Escape out of a Woodmonger's House, both he and his Son.

Mr. Att. Gen. How long did he own he had been at London?

Mr. Atterbury. Four Days, and that in that Time he had been at their Lodgings; and that he and his Son, and one Bailey, came to Town together.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, we shall besides this (now we have fixed this upon my Lord) give you an Account, that these Persons, that were to rise, always took them as their Pay-masters, and expected their Assistance. Mr. West, Mr. Keeling, and Mr. Leigh.

Mr. West sworn.

Mr. Att. Gen. That which I call you to, is to know whether or no, in your Managery of this Plot, you understood any of the Lords were concerned, and which?

Mr. West. My Lord, as to my Lord Ruffel, I never had any Conversation with him at all, but that I have heard this, That in the Insurrection in November, Mr. Ferguson, and Colonel Rumsey, did tell me, that my Lord Ruffel intended to go down and take his Post in the West, when Mr. Trenchard had failed them.

L. C. J. What is this?

Mr. Att. Gen. We have proved my Lord privy to the Consults; now we go about to prove the Under-actors did know it.

Mr. West. They always said, my Lord Ruffel was the Man they most depended upon, because he was a Person looked upon as of great Sobriety.

L. Ruffel. Can I hinder People from making use of my Name? To have this brought to influence the Gentlemen of the Jury, and inflame them against me, is hard.

L. C. J. As to this, the giving Evidence by Hear-say, will not be Evidence; what Colonel Rumsey or Mr. Ferguson told Mr. West, is no Evidence.

Mr.

Mr. Att. Gen. 'Tis not Evidence to convict a Man, if there were not plain Evidence before; but it plainly confirms what the other swears: But think we need no more.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. We have Evidence without it, and will not use any thing of Garniture; we will leave it as 'tis, we won't trouble your Lordship any further. I think, Mr. Attorney, we have done with our Evidence.

L. C. J. My Lord Ruffel, the King's Counsel do think to rest upon this Evidence that they have given against your Lordship. I would put your Lordship in mind of those things that are material in this Case, and proved against your Lordship. Here is Colonel Rumsey does prove against your Lordship this, That he was sent upon an Errand, which in Truth was traitorous; it was a traitorous Errand sent from my Lord Shaftesbury to him to that Meeting. He does swear your Lordship was at that Meeting; and he delivered his Errand to them, which was to know, what Account could be given concerning the Design of the Insurrection at Taunton; and he says, your Lordship being there, this Return was made, that Mr. Trencard had failed them in his Undertaking in the Business, and therefore my Lord Shaftesbury must be contented, and sit down satisfied as to that time. Mr. Sheppard does likewise speak of the same Time, that your Lordship was there with the rest of the Persons, the Duke and others; that there was a Discourse concerning an Insurrection to have been made (though he is not so particular, as to the very Notion of it, as Colonel Rumsey is); as to the Time they do agree.

L. Ruffel. Col. Rumsey is not positive that I said or heard any thing.

L. C. J. My Lord, if you will have a little Patience to hear me, I will tell you what it is presses you; there is this which I have mentioned; and Mr. Sheppard does say, there was a Paper purporting a Declaration then read among the Company there, which was to be printed upon the Rising, setting forth the Oppressions and Grievances of the Nation; and then my Lord Howard (after a great Discourse concerning the many Designs of my Lord Shaftesbury) comes particularly to your Lordship, and says, that Six of you, as a chosen Council among yourselves, (not that you were actually chosen, but as a chosen Council among yourselves) did undertake to manage the great Matter of the Insurrection, and raising of Men, in order to surprise the King's Guards, and for to rise (which is a Rebellion in the Nation). He says, that you had several Consults concerning it. I told you the several Particulars of those Consults he mentioned: Now it is fit for your Lordship, and 'tis your Time, to give some Answer to these things.

L. Ruffel. My Lord, I cannot but think myself mighty unfortunate, to stand here charged with so high and heinous a Crime, and that intricate and intermixed with the Treasons and horrid Practices and Speeches of other People, the King's Counsel taking all Advantages, and improving and heightening things against me. I am no Lawyer, a very unready Speaker, and altogether a Stranger to things of this Nature, and alone, and without Counsel. Truly, my Lord, I am very sensible, I am not so provided to make my just Defence, as otherwise I should do. But, my Lord, you are equal, and the Gentlemen of the Jury, I think, are Men of Consciences; they are Strangers to me, and I hope they value innocent Blood, and will consider the Witnesses that swear against me, swear to save their own Lives; for howsoever legal Witnesses they may be accounted, they can't be credible. And for Col. Rumsey, who 'tis notoriously known hath been so highly obliged by the King, and the Duke, for him to be capable of such a Design of murdering the King, I think nobody will wonder, if to save his own Life, he will endeavour to take away mine; neither does he swear enough to do it; and then if he did, the Time, by the 1st of this King, is elapsed, it must be, as I understand by the Law, prosecuted within six Months; and by the 25 E. 3. a Design of levying War is no Treason, unless by some Overt-Act it appear. And, my Lord, I desire to know, what Statute I am to be tried upon; for Generals, I think, are not to be gone upon in these Cases.

L. C. J. (To the Attorney General.) Mr. Attorney, you hear what it is my Lord objects to this Evidence; he says, that as to those Witnesses that testify any thing concerning him, above six Months before he was prosecuted, he conceives the Act of Parliament, upon which he takes himself to be indicted, does not extend to it; for that says, that within six Months there ought to have been a Prosecution; and my Lord tells you, that he is advised, that a Design of levying War, without actual levying of War, was not Treason before that Statute.

Mr. Att. Gen. To satisfy my Lord he is not indicted upon that Statute, we go upon the 25 E. 3. But then for the next Objection, surely my Lord is informed wrong. To raise a Rebellion, or a Conspiracy, within the Kingdom, is not that which is called levying of War in that Statute, but to raise a Number of Men, to break Prisons, &c. which is not so directly tending against the Life of the King. To prepare Forces to fight against the King, that is a Design, within that Statute, to kill the King; and to design to depose the King, to imprison the King, to raise the Subjects against the King, these have been settled by several Resolutions to be within that Statute, and Evidences of a Design of killing the King.

L. Ruffel. My Lord, this is a Matter of Law; neither was there but one Meeting at Mr. Sheppard's House.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, if you admit the Fact, and will rest upon the Point of Law, I am ready to argue it with any of your Counsel. I will acquaint your Lordship how the Evidence stands. There is one Evidence since Christmas last.

L. Ruffel. That's not to the Business of Sheppard's House. My Lord, one Witness will not convict a Man of Treason.

Mr. Att. Gen. If there be one Witness of one Act of Treason, and another of a second, another of a third, that manifest the same Treason to depose or destroy the King, that will be sufficient.

L. C. J. My Lord, that has been resolved: The two Witnesses the Statute requires are not to the same individual Act, but to the same Treason; if they be several Acts declaring the same Treason, and one Witness to each of them, they have been reckoned two Witnesses within the Statute of Edw. 3.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. If my Lord will call his Witnesses—

L. Ruffel. This is tacking of two Treasons together; here is one in November by one Witness, and then you bring on another with a Discourse of my Lord Howard, and he says the Discourse passed for Pleasure.

L. C. J. If your Lordship do doubt whether the Fact proved against your Lordship be Treason or not within the Statute of E. 3. and you are contented that the Fact be taken as proved against your Lordship, and so desire Counsel barely upon that, that is Matter of Law, you shall have it granted.

L. Ruffel. I am not knowing in the Law. I think 'tis not proved; and if it was, I think it's not punishable by that Act. I desire Counsel may be admitted upon so nice a Point. My Life lies at Stake; here's but one Witness that speaks of a Message.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. The Fact must be left to the Jury; therefore if my Lord Ruffel hath any Witnesses to call in Opposition to these Matters, let him.

L. C. J. My Lord, there can be no Matter of Law, but upon a Fact admitted and stated.

L. Ruffel. My Lord, I do not think it proved; I hope you will be of Counsel for me; it's very hard for me, that my Counsel may not speak for me in a Point of Law.

L. C. J. My Lord, to hear your Counsel concerning this Fact, that we cannot do, it was never done, nor will be done. If your Lordship doubts whether this Fact is Treason or not, and desires your Counsel may be heard to that, I will do it.

L. Ruffel. I doubt in Law, and do not see the Fact is proved upon me.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Will your Lordship please to call any Witness to the Matter of Fact?

L. Ruffel. 'Tis very hard a Man must lose his Life upon Hear-say. Colonel Rumsey says he brought a Message, which I will swear I never heard nor knew of. He does not say he spake to me, or I gave him any Answer. Mr. Sheppard remembers no such thing: He was gone to and again. Here is but one Witness, and seven Months ago.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, if there be any thing that is Law, you shall have it.

L. Ruffel. My Lord, Colonel Rumsey, the other Day before the King, could not say, that I heard it, I was in the Room, but I came in late, they had been there a good while; I did not stay above a Quarter of an Hour talking Sherry with Mr. Sheppard.

L. C. J. Read the Statute of 25 E. 3. c. 2. My Brothers desire to have it read.

Cl. of Cr. Whereas divers Opinions have been before this Time, in what Case Treason shall be said, and in what not: The King, at the Request of the Lords, and of the Commons, hath made a Declaration in the manner as hereafter followeth; that is to say, When a Man doth compass or imagine the Death of our Lord the King, or of our Lady his Queen, or of their eldest Son and Heir; or if a Man do violate the King's Companion, or the King's eldest Daughter unmarried, or the Wife of the King's eldest Son and Heir; or if a Man do levy War against our Lord the King, in his Realm, or be adherent to the King's Enemies in his Realm, giving to them Aid and Comfort in the Realm, or elsewhere, and thereof be provable attainted of open Deed by People of their Condition: And if a Man counterfeit the King's Great or Privy Seal, or his Money: And if a Man bring false Money into this Realm, counterfeit to the Money of England, as the Money called Luthburgh, or other like to the said Money of England, knowing the Money to be false, to Merchandise, or make Payment in default of our said Lord the King, and of his People: And if a Man flee the Chancellor, Treasurer, or the King's Justices of the one Bench or the other, Justices in Eyre, or Justices of Assize, and all other Justices designed to hear and determine, being in their Places during their Offices. And it is to be understood, that in the Cases above rehearsed, that ought to be judged Treason, which extends to our Lord the King, and his Royal Majesty.

L. C. J. My Lord, that which is urged against you by the King's Counsel, is this, You are accused by the Indictment of compassing and designing the King's Death, and of endeavouring to raise an Insurrection in order to it; that that they do say is, that these Counsels that your Lordship hath taken, are Evidences of your compassing the King's Death, and are Overt-acts declaring the same; and upon that it is they insist your Lordship to be guilty within that Statute.

L. Ruffel. It is in a Point of Law, and I desire Counsel.

Mr. Att. Gen. Admit your Consultations, and we will hear them.

L. C. J. I would set your Lordship right, for probably you may not apprehend the Law in this Case; if your Counsel be heard, they must be heard to this, That taking it, that my Lord Ruffel has consulted in this Manner, for the raising of Forces within this Kingdom, and making an Insurrection within this Kingdom, as Colonel Rumsey and my Lord Howard have deposed, whether then this be Treason, we can hear your Counsel to nothing else.

L. Ruffel. I do not know how to answer to it. The Point methinks must be quite otherwise, that there should be two Witnesses to one Thing at the same Time.

Mr. Att. Gen. Your Lordship remembers, in my Lord Stafford's Case, there was but one Witness to one Act in England, and another to another in France.

L. Ruffel. It was to the same Point.

Mr. Att. Gen. To the general Point, the lopping Point.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. There was not so much Evidence against him, as there is against your Lordship.

L. C. J. My Lord, if your Lordship will say any thing, or call any Witnesses to disprove what either of these Gentlemen have said, we will hear your Lordship what they say: But if you can't contradict them by Testimony, it will be taken to be a Proof. And the Way you have to disprove them, is to call Witnesses, or by asking Questions, whereby it may appear to be untrue.

Mr. Sol. Gen. If you have any Witnesses, call them, my Lord.

L. Ruffel. I do not think they have proved it. But then it appears by the Statute, that levying War is Treason, but a Conspiracy to levy War is no Treason; if nothing be done, 'tis not levying War within the Statute. There must be manifest Proof of the Matter of Fact, not by Inference.

Mr. At. Gen. I see that is taken out of my Lord Coke. Levying War is a distinct Branch of the Statute; and my Lord Coke explains himself afterwards, and says, 'tis an Assuming of Royal Power, to Raise for particular Purposes.

Just. Withins. Unless Matter of Fact be agreed, we can never come to argue the Law.

L. Ruffel. I came in late.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray, my Lord, has your Lordship any Witnesses to call as to this Matter of Fact?

L. Ruffel. I can prove I was out of Town when one of the Meetings was; but Mr. Sheppard can't recollect the Day, for I was out of Town all that Time. I never was but once at Mr. Sheppard's, and there was nothing undertaken of viewing the Guards while I was there. Colonel Rumsey, can you swear positively, that I heard the Message, and gave any Answer to it?

L. C. J. (To Colonel Rumsey) Sir, did my Lord Ruffel hear you when you deliver'd the Message to the Company? Were they at the Table, or where were they?

Col. Rumsey. When I came in they were standing at the Fire-side; but they all came from the Fire-side to hear what I said.

L. Ruffel. Colonel Rumsey was there when I came in.

Col. Rumsey. No, my Lord. The Duke of Monmouth, and my Lord Ruffel, went away together; and my Lord Grey, and Sir Thomas Armstrong.

L. Ruffel. The Duke of Monmouth and I came together, and you were standing at the Chimney when I came in; you were there before me. My Lord Howard hath made a long Narrative here of what he knew. I do not know when he made it, or when he did recollect any thing; 'tis but very lately, that he did declare and protest to several People, that he knew nothing against me, nor of any Plot I could in the least be questioned for.

L. C. J. If you will have any Witnesses called to that, you shall, my Lord.

L. Ruffel. My Lord Anglesey, and Mr. Edward Howard.

My Lord Anglesey stood up.

L. C. J. My Lord Ruffel, What do you ask my Lord Anglesey?

L. Ruffel. To declare what my Lord Howard told him about me, since I was confined.

L. Anglesey. My Lord, I chanced to be in Town the last Week; and hearing my Lord of Bedford was in some Distress and Trouble concerning the Affliction of his Son, I went to give him a Visit, being my old Acquaintance, of some 53 Years standing, I believe; for my Lord and I were bred together at Mandlin-College in Oxon; I had not been there but a very little while, and was ready to go away again, after I had done the good Office I came about; but my Lord Howard came in, I don't know whether he be here.

L. Howard. Yes, here I am to serve your Lordship.

L. Anglesey. And sat down on the other Side of my Lord of Bedford, and he began to comfort my Lord; and the Arguments he used for his Comfort, were, My Lord, you are happy in having a wife Son, and a worthy Person, one that can never sure be in such a Plot as this, or suspected for it, and that may give your Lordship Reason to expect a very good Issue concerning him. I know nothing against him, or any body else, of such a barbarous Design, and therefore your Lordship may be comforted in it. I did not hear this only from my Lord Howard's Mouth, but at my own Home upon the Monday after, for I use to go to Totteridge for fresh Air; I went down on Saturday, this happen'd to be on Friday (my Lord being here, I am glad, for he can't forget this Discourse); and when I came to Town on Monday, I understood that my Lord Howard upon that very Sunday had been at Church with my Lady Chaworth. My Lady has a Chaplain, it seems, that preaches there, and does the Offices of the Church; but my Lady came to me in the Evening. This I have from my Lady—

L. C. J. My Lord, what you have from my Lady is no kind of Evidence at all.

L. Anglesey. I don't know what my Lord is, I am acquainted with none of the Evidence, nor what hath been done: But my Lady Chaworth came to me, and acquainted me, there was some Suspicion—

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. I don't think it fit for me to interrupt a Person of your Honour, my Lord, but your Lordship knows in what Place we stand here: What you can say of any thing you heard of my Lord Howard we are willing to hear, but the other is not Evidence. As the Court will not let us offer Hearfays, so neither must we that are for the King permit it*.

L. Anglesey. I have told you what happened in my Hearing.

Then Mr. Howard stood up.

L. C. J. Come, Mr. Howard, what do you know?

Mr. Howard. I must desire to say something of myself and my Family first: My Lord and I have been very intimate, not only as Relations, but as dear Friends. My Lord, I have been of a Family known to have great Respect and Duty for the King; and I think there is no Family in the Nation so numerous, that hath expressed greater Loyalty; upon which Account I improved my Interest in my Lord Howard; I endeavoured, upon the great Misunderstanding of the Nation, (if he be here, he knows it) to persuade him to apply himself to the King, to serve him in that great Difficulty of State, which is known to all the World. I sometimes found my Lord very forward, and sometimes I soften'd him; upon which Parly, and upon his Permission, and more upon my own Inclination of Duty, I made several Applications to Ministers of State, (and I can name them) that my Lord Howard had a great Desire of serving the King in the best way of Satisfaction, and particularly in the great Business of his Brother. I wonder'd there should be so much Sharpness for a Matter of Opinion, and I told my Lord so, and we had several Disputes about it. My Lord,

* But the Court did let them offer Hearfays; for Lord Howard went on with Hearfay Evidence, even after Lord Ruffel complained of it. p. 718.

I do say this before I come to the thing. After this I did partly by his Permission, and partly by my own Inclination to serve the King, because I thought my Lord Howard to be a Man of Parts, and saw him a Man that had Interest in the Nation, tell my Lord Feverham, that I had prevailed with a Relation of mine, that may be he might think opposite, that perhaps might serve the King in this great Difficulty that is emergent, and particularly that of his Brother. My Lord Feverham did receive it very kindly, and I wrote a Letter to him to let him know how I had soften'd my Lord, and that it was my Desire he should speak with my Lord at Oxon. My Lord Feverham gave me a very kind Account when he came again, but he told me—

L. C. J. Pray apply yourself to the Matter you are called for.

Mr. Howard. This it may be is to the Matter, when you have heard me; for I think I know where I am, and what I am to say.

L. C. J. We must desire you not to go on thus.

Mr. Howard. I must satisfy the World, as well as I can, as to myself, and my Family, and pray do not interrupt me. After this, my Lord, there never passed a Day for almost—

L. C. J. Pray speak to this Matter.

Mr. Howard. Sir, I am coming to it.

L. C. J. Pray, Sir, be directed by the Court.

Mr. Howard. Then now, Sir, I will come to the Thing. Upon this ground I had of my Lord's Kindness, I applied myself to my Lord in this present Issue, on the breaking out of this Plot. My Lord, I thought certainly, as near as I could discern him, (for he took it upon his Honour, his Faith, and as much as if he had taken an Oath before a Magistrate) that he knew nothing of any Man concerned in this Business, and particularly of my Lord Ruffel, whom he vindicated with all the Honour in the World. My Lord, it is true, was afraid of his own Person, and as a Friend and a Relation, I concealed him in my House, and I did not think it was for such a Conspiracy, but I thought he was unwilling to go to the Tower for nothing again: So that if my Lord Howard has the same Soul on Monday, that he had on Sunday, this can't be true; that he swears against my Lord Ruffel. This I say upon my Reputation, and Honour; and something I could say more, he added, he thought my Lord Ruffel did not only unjustly suffer, but he took God and Men to witness, he thought him the worthiest Person in the World. I am very sorry to hear any Man of my Name should be guilty of these things.

L. Ruffel. Call Dr. Burnet. Pray, Dr. Burnet, did you hear any thing from my Lord Howard, since the Plot was discover'd, concerning me?

Dr. Burnet. My Lord Howard was with me the Night after the Plot broke out, and he did then, as he had done before, with Hands and Eyes lifted up to Heaven, say he knew nothing of any Plot, nor believed any, and treated it with Scorn and Contempt.

L. Howard. My Lord, may I speak for myself?

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. No, no, my Lord, we don't call you.

L. C. J. Will you please to have any other Witnesses called?

L. Ruffel. There are some Persons of Quality, that I have been very well acquainted and conversed with, I desire to know of them, if there was any thing in my former Carriage, to make them think me like to be guilty of this? My Lord Cavendish.

L. Cavendish. I had the Honour to be acquainted with my Lord Ruffel a long Time. I always thought him a Man of great Honour, and too prudent and wary a Man to be concerned in so vile and desperate a Design as this, and from which he would receive so little Advantage: I can say nothing more, but that two or three Days since the Discovery of this Plot, upon Discourse about Colonel Rumsey, my Lord Ruffel did express something, as if he had a very ill Opinion of the Man, and therefore it is not likely he would entrust him with such a Secret.

L. Ruffel. Dr. Tillotson.

L. C. J. What Questions would you ask him, my Lord?

L. Ruffel. He and I happened to be very conversant. To know whether he did ever find any thing tending to this in my Discourse.

L. C. J. My Lord calls you as to his Life, and Conversation, and Reputation.

Dr. Tillotson. My Lord, I have been many Years last past acquainted with my Lord Ruffel, I always judg'd him a Person of great Virtue and Integrity, and by all the Conversation and Discourse I ever had with him, I always took him to be a Person very far from any such wicked Design he stands charged with.

L. Ruffel. Dr. Burnet, if you please to give some Account of my Conversation.

Dr. Burnet. My Lord, I have had the Honour to be known to my Lord Ruffel several Years, and he hath declared himself with much Confidence to me, and he always upon all Occasions expressed himself against all Risings; and when he spoke of some People that would provoke to it, he expressed himself so determined against that Matter, I think no Man could do more.

L. C. J. Will your Lordship call any other Witnesses?

Dr. Cox. My Lord, I did not expect to have been spoken to upon this Account. Having been very much with my Lord of late, that is, for a Month or six Weeks before this Plot came out, I have had Occasion to speak with my Lord in private, about these publick Matters: But I have always found that my Lord was against all kind of Risings, and thought it the greatest Folly and Madness, till things should come in a parliamentary Way. I have had Occasion often to speak with my Lord Ruffel in private, and having myself been against all kind of Risings, or any thing that tended to the Disorder of the Publick, I have heard him profess solemnly, he thought it would ruin the best Cause in the World to take any of these irregular ways for the preserving of it; and particularly my Lord hath expressed himself occasionally of these two Persons, my Lord Howard and Colonel Rumsey: One of them, Colonel Rumsey, I saw once at my Lord's House, and he offered to speak a little privately. But my Lord told me he knew him but a little: I told him he was a valiant Man, and acted his Part valiantly in Portugal. He said he knew him little, and that he had nothing to do with him, but in my Lord Shaftesbury's Business: He said, for my Lord Howard, he was a Man of excellent Parts, of luxuriant Parts, but he had the Luck not to be much trusted by any Party. And I never heard him say one Word of Indecency or Immodesty towards the King.

L. Ruffel. I would pray the Duke of Somerset to speak what he knows of me.

D. of Som. I have known my Lord Ruffel for about two Years, and have had much Conversation with him, and been often in his Company, and never heard any thing from him, but what was very honourable, loyal, and just.

L. C. J. My Lord does say, that he has known my Lord Ruffel for about two Years, and hath had much Conversation with him, and been much in his Company, and never heard any thing from him, but what was honourable, and loyal, and just in his Life.

Foreman of the Jury. The Gentlemen of the Jury desire to ask my Lord Howard something upon the Point my Lord Anglesey testified, and to know what Answer he makes to my Lord Anglesey.

L. C. Bar. My Lord, what say you to it, that you told his Father he was a discreet Man, and he needed not to fear his Engagement in any such thing?

L. Howard. My Lord, if I took it right, my Lord Anglesey's Testimony did branch itself into two Parts, one of his own Knowledge, and the other by Hearsay; as to what he said of his own Knowledge, when I waited upon my Lord of Bedford, and endeavoured to comfort him, concerning his Son, I believe I said the Words my Lord Anglesey has given an Account of, as near as I can remember, that I looked upon his Lordship, as a Man of that Honour, that I hoped he might be secure, that he had not entangled himself in any thing of that Nature. My Lord, I can hardly be provoked to make my own Defence, lest this noble Lord should suffer, so willing I am to serve my Lord, who knows I can't want Affection for him. My Lord, I do confess I did say it; for your Lordship well knows under what Circumstances we were: I was at that Time to outface the thing, both for myself and my Party, and I did not intend to come into this Place, and act this Part. God knows how it is brought upon me, and with what Unwillingness I do sustain it; but my Duty to God, the King, and my Country, requires it; but I must confess I am very sorry to carry it on thus far. My Lord, I do confess I did say so; and if I had been to visit my Lord Pemberton, I should have said so. There is none of those that know my Lord Ruffel, but would speak of my Lord Ruffel, from those Topicks of Honour, Modesty, and Integrity, his whole Life deserves it. And I must confess, I did frequently say, there was nothing of Truth in this, and I wish this may be for my Lord's Advantage. My Lord, will you spare me one thing more, because that leans hard upon my Reputation? and if the Jury believe that I ought not to be believed, for I do think the Religion of an Oath is not tied to a Place, but receives its Obligation from the Appeal we therein make to God, and, I think, if I called God and Angels to witness to a Falshood, I ought not to be believed now: But I will tell you as to that; your Lordship knows, that very Man that was committed, was committed for a Design of murdering the King; now I did lay hold on that Part, for I was to carry my Knife close between the Paring and the Apple; and I did say, that if I were an Enemy to my Lord Ruffel, and to the Duke of Monmouth, and were called to be a Witness, I must have declared in the Presence of God and Man, that I did not believe either of them had any Design to murder the King. I have said this, because I would not walk under the Character of a Person, that would be perjured at the Expence of so noble a Person's Life, and my own Soul.

L. Ruffel. My Lord Clifford.

L. C. J. What do you please to ask my Lord Clifford?

L. Ruffel. He hath known my Conversation for many Years.

L. Clifford. I always took my Lord to be a very worthy honest Man; I never saw any thing in his Conversation to make me believe otherwise.

L. Ruffel. Mr. Gore.

Mr. Luton Gore. I have been acquainted with my Lord several Years, and conversed much with him; in all the Discourse I had with him, I never heard him let any thing fall, that tended in the least to any Rising, or any thing like it: I took him to be one of the best Sons, one of the best Fathers, and one of the best Masters, one of the best Husbands, one of the best Friends, and one of the best Christians we had. I know of no Discourse concerning this Matter.

L. Ruffel. Mr. Spencer, and Dr. Fitz-Williams.

Mr. Spencer. My Lord, I have known my Lord Ruffel many Years, I have been many Months with him in his House; I never saw any thing by him, but that he was a most virtuous and prudent Gentleman, and he had Prayers constantly twice a Day in his House.

L. C. J. What, as to the general Conversation of his Life? My Lord asks you, whether it hath been sober?

Mr. Spencer. I never saw any thing but very good, very prudent, and very virtuous.

L. Ruffel. What Company did you see used to come to me?

Mr. Spencer. I never saw any but his near Relations, or his own Family. I have the Honour to be related to the Family.

Then Dr. Fitz-Williams stood up.

L. Ruffel. If it please you, Doctor, you have been at my House several Times, give an Account of what you know of me.

Dr. Fitz-Williams. I have had the Knowledge of my Lord these fourteen Years, from the Time he was married to his present Lady, to whose Father, eminent for Loyalty, I had a Relation by Service; I have had Acquaintance with him both at Stratton, and Southampton-Buildings; and by all the Conversation I had with him, I esteemed him a Man of that Virtue, that he could not be guilty of such a Crime as the Conspiracy he stands charged with.

L. C. J. My Lord, does your Lordship call any more Witnesses?

L. Ruffel. No, my Lord, I will be very short. I shall declare to your Lordship, that I am one that have always had a Heart sincerely loyal and affectionate to the King, and the Government, the best Government in the World. I pray as sincerely for the King's happy and long Life as any Man alive; and for me to go about to raise a Rebellion, which I looked upon as so wicked and unpracticable, is unlikely. Besides, if I had been inclined to it, by all the Observation I made in the Country, there was no Tendency to it. What some hot-headed People have done there, is another thing. A Rebellion can't be made now as it has been in former Times; we have few great Men. I was always for the Government, I never desired any thing to be redressed, but in a parliamentary and legal Way. I have been always against Innovations, and all Irregularities whatsoever; and shall be as long as I live, whether it be sooner or later. Gentlemen, I am now in your Hands eternally, my Honour, my Life, and all; and I hope the Heats and Animosities that are amongst you will not so bias you, as to make you in the least inclined to find an innocent Man guilty. I call to witness Heaven and Earth, I never had a Design against the King's Life in my Life, nor never shall have. I think there is nothing proved against me at all. I am in your Hands. God direct you.

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lord, and you Gentlemen of the Jury, the Prisoner at the Bar stands indicted for High Treason, in conspiring the Death of the King. The Overt-act that is laid to prove that Conspiracy and Imagination by, is the assembling in Council to raise Arms against the King, and raise a Rebellion here. We have proved that to you by three Witnesses. I shall endeavour as clearly as I can, to state the Substance of the Evidence to you, of every one of them, as they have delivered it.

The first Witness, Colonel Rumsey, comes, and he tells you of a Message he was sent of to Mr. Sheppard's House to my Lord Ruffel, with several other Persons, who he was told would be there assembled together: And the Message was to know what Readiness they were in, what Resolutions they were come to concerning the Rising at Taunton? By this you do perceive, that this Conspiracy had made some Progress, and was ripe to be put in Action. My Lord Shaftesbury, that had been a great Contriver in it, he had pursued it so far, as to be ready to rise. This occasioned the Message from my Lord Shaftesbury to my Lord Ruffel, and those noble Persons that were met at Mr. Sheppard's House, to know what the Resolution was concerning the Business of Taunton, which you have heard explained by an Undertaking of Mr. Trenchard's: That the Answer was, they were disappointed there, and they could not then be ready, and that my Lord Shaftesbury must be content. This Message was delivered in Presence of my Lord Ruffel; the Messenger had notice my Lord Ruffel was there; the Answer was given as from them all, That at present they could not be ready, because of that Disappointment. Colonel Rumsey went farther, and he swears there was a Discourse concerning the surprising of the Guards; and the Duke of Monmouth, my Lord Grey, and Sir Thomas Armstrong, went to see what Posture they were in, whether it were feasible to surprise them, and they found them very remiss; and that Account they brought back, as is proved to you by Mr. Sheppard, the other Witness, that it was a thing very feasible. But to conclude with the Substance of Colonel Rumsey's Evidence, he says, my Lord was privy to it, that he had Discourse among the rest of it, though my Lord was not a Man of so great Discourse as the rest, and did talk of a Rising. He told you there was a Rising determined to be on the 19th of November last, which is the Substance of Colonel Rumsey's Evidence.

Gentlemen, the next Witness is Mr. Sheppard, and his Evidence was this: He swears that about October last, Mr. Ferguson came to him of a Message from the Duke of Monmouth, to let him know, that he and some other Persons of Quality would be there that Night; that accordingly they did meet, and my Lord Ruffel was there likewise; that they did desire to be private, and his Servants were sent away; and that he was the Man that did attend them. He swears there was a Discourse concerning the Way and Method to seize the Guards; he goes so far, as to give an Account of the Return of the Errand the Duke of Monmouth, my Lord Grey, and Sir Thomas Armstrong, went upon, that it was feasible, if they had Strength to do it. Then he went a little farther, and he told you there was a Paper read, that in his Evidence does not come up to my Lord Ruffel; for he did not say my Lord Ruffel was by, and I would willingly repeat nothing but what concerns the Prisoner. This therefore Colonel Rumsey, and Mr. Sheppard, agree in, that there was a Debate among them how to surprise the Guards, and whether that was feasible; and Mr. Sheppard is positive as to the Return made upon the View.

The next Witness was my Lord Howard: He gives you an Account of many things, and many things that he tells you are by Hearsay. But I cannot but observe to you, that all this Hearsay is confirmed by these two positive Witnesses, and their Oaths agree with him in it; for my Lord Shaftesbury told him of the Disappointment he had met with from these noble Persons that would not join with him; and then he went from my Lord Shaftesbury to the Duke of Monmouth, to expostulate with him about it, (for my Lord Shaftesbury then was ready to be in Action) and that the Duke said he always told him he would not engage at that Time: This thing is confirmed to you by these two Witnesses. Colonel Rumsey says, when he brought the Message from my Lord Shaftesbury, the Answer was, They were not ready, my Lord must be contented.

Next he goes on with a Discourse concerning my Lord Shaftesbury, (that does not immediately come up to the Prisoner at the Bar, but it manifests there was a Design at that Time) he had 10,000 brisk Boys (as he called them) ready to follow him upon the holding up his Finger: But it was thought not so prudent to begin it, unless they could join all their Forces: So you hear in this they were disappointed; and partly by another Accident too, my Lord Howard had an Apprehension it might be discovered; that was upon the Proclamation that came out forbidding Bonfires, to prevent the ordinary Tumults that used to be upon those Occasions. Then my Lord Howard goes on, and comes particularly to my Lord

Lord Ruffel; for upon this Disappointment, you find, my Lord Shaftesbury thought fit to be gone. But after that, the Design was not laid aside; for you hear, they only told him all along, they could not be ready at that Time, but the Design went on still to raise Arms, and then they took upon themselves to consult of the Methods of it; and for the carrying it on with the greater Secrecy, they chose a select Council of Six, which were the Duke of Monmouth, my Lord of Essex, my Lord Howard, my Lord Ruffel, Mr. Hambden, and Colonel Sidney. That accordingly they met at Mr. Hambden's, (there was their first Meeting) and their Consultation there was, how the Insurrection should be made, whether first in London, or whether first in the Country, or whether both in London and in the Country at one Time. They had some Debates among themselves, that it was fittest first to be in the Country; for if the King should send his Guards down to suppress them, then the City, that was then as well disposed to rise, would be without a Guard, and easily effect their Designs here.

Their next Meeting was at my Lord Ruffel's own House, and there their Debates were still about the same Matter, how to get in Scotland to their Assistance; and in order to that, they did intrust Col. Sidney, one of their Council, to send a Messenger into Scotland for some Persons to come hither, my Lord Melville, Sir Hugh Cambell, and Sir John Cockram. Accordingly Col. Sidney sends Aaron Smith (but this is only what Col. Sidney told my Lord afterwards, that he had done it); but you see the Fruit of it. Accordingly they are come to Town, and Sir Hugh Cambell is taken by a Messenger upon his Arrival; and he had been but four Days in Town, and he had changed his Lodging three times.

Now, Gentlemen, this is the Substance of the Evidence that hath been produced against my Lord Ruffel. My Lord Ruffel hath made several Objections, That he was accidentally at this Meeting at Mr. Sheppard's House, and came about other Business; but I must observe to you, that my Lord Ruffel owned, that he came along with the Duke of Monmouth, and, I think, he said, he went away with him too. You observe what Mr. Sheppard's Evidence was: Mr. Ferguson came to tell him the Duke of Monmouth would come; and accordingly the Duke of Monmouth did come, and brought his Companion along with him, which was my Lord Ruffel; and certainly they that met upon so secret an Affair, would never have brought one that had not been concerned. Gentlemen, there are other Objections my Lord hath made, and those are in Point of Law; but before I come to them, I would observe what he says to the second Meeting. My Lord does not deny, but that he did meet both at Mr. Hambden's House, and my Lord's own: I think my Lord said they did meet only to discourse of News; and my Lord Howard being a Man of excellent Discourse, they met for his Conversation. Gentlemen, you can't believe that this designed Meeting was for nothing; in this close secret Meeting, that they had no Contrivance among them. You have heard the Witness, he swears positively what the Conversation was, and you see the Fruit of it, Sir Hugh Cambell's coming to Town, and absconding when it is discovered. Now my Lord Ruffel insists upon it, that admitting these Facts be proved upon him, they amount to no more than to a Conspiracy to levy War, and that that is not Treason within the Statute of 25 E. 3. and if it be only within the Statute of the 13. of this King, then 'tis out of Time, that directs the Prosecution to be within six Months: The Law is plainly otherwise. The Statute of the 13th of this King I will not now insist upon, though I believe if that be strictly looked into, the Clause that says the Prosecution shall be within six Months, does not refer to Treason, but only to the other Offences that are highly punishable by that Statute. For the Proviso runs thus:

13 Car. 2. Provided always, that no Person be prosecuted for any of the Offences in this Act mentioned, other than such as are made and declared to be High Treason, unless it be by Order of the King's Majesty, his Heirs or Successors, under his or their Sign Manual, or by Order of the Council Table of his Majesty, his Heirs or Successors, directed unto the Attorney General for the Time being, or some other Council learned to his Majesty, his Heirs or Successors, for the Time being: Nor shall any Person or Persons, by virtue of this present Act, incur any the Penalties herein before mentioned, unless he or they be prosecuted within six Months next after the Offence committed, and indicted thereupon within three Months after such Prosecution; any thing herein contained to the contrary notwithstanding.

This Word (Nor) is a Continuation of the former Sentence, and the Exception of High Treason will go through all, and except that out of the temporary Limitation of Treason: But this is High Treason within 25 E. 3. To conspire to levy War, is an Overt-act to testify the Design of the Death of the King. And the Error of my Lord Coke hath possibly led my Lord into this Mistake. But this, Gentlemen, hath been determined; it was resolved by all the Judges in the Case of my Lord Cobham, 1 Jac. A Conspiracy to levy War against the King's Person, (as this was a Conspiracy to seize the Guards) what does that tend to but to seize the King? And that always hath been taken to be High Treason. But there are some things called levying of War in Law, that are not so directly against the King, as if a Number of Men go about to levy Men to overthrow all Inclosures, this by the generality of the Intent, and because of the Consequences, is accounted levying War against the King. A Conspiracy therefore to levy such a War, which by Construction only is against the King, perhaps that may not be such an Overt-act, as to testify the Imagination of the Death of the King; but other Conspiracies to raise War against the King have always so been taken. 'Tis the Resolution of all the Judges in my Lord Dyer's Reports, the Case of Dr. Story: A Conspiracy to invite a foreign Prince to make an Invasion, tho' no Invasion follow, is an Overt-act to prove the conspiring the Death of the King; and as it has been so taken, so it hath been practised but of late Days. In the King's Bench I take it the Indictment against Plunket that was hanged, he was indicted for conspiring against the Life of the King, and his Charge went no farther than for raising of Arms, and inviting the French King in, and he suffered: This is acknowledged by my Lord Coke; for he himself said in the Paragraph before that out of which this Advice to my Lord Ruffel is extracted, that a Conspiracy to invite a foreign Prince to invade the Kingdom, is a Conspiracy against the Life of the King. And in the next Paragraph, he says an Overt-Act of one Treason cannot be an Overt-Act of another Treason. But constant Practice is against him in that: For what is more common than to indict a Man for imagining the Death of the King, and to assign the Overt-Act in a Conspiracy to raise Arms against the King? And sometimes they go on and say, Did levy War against the King. Now by my Lord Coke's Rule, levying War, unless the Indictment be particular for that, is not an Overt-Act for the compassing the Death of the King; but the contrary hath been resolved by all the Judges, in the Case of Sir Henry Vane, and it is the constant Practice to lay it so in Indictments. It would be a strange Construction, if this should not be High Treason. 'Tis agreed by every body, to take the King Prisoner, to seize the King, that is a compassing of the Death of the King; and to sit in Council to conspire to effect that, that is an Overt-Act of the Imagination of the Death of the King: Now no Man can distinguish this Case from that: And this Consultation amounted to all this, for plainly thither it tended. The Consultation was to seize upon the King's Guards; that could have no other Stop but to seize upon the King's Person, and bring him into their Power. As to the killing of the King, I am apt to think that was below the Honour of the Prisoner at the Bar; but this is equal Treason: If they designed only to bring the King into their Power, till he had consented to such things as should be moved in Parliament, 'tis equally Treason as if they had agreed directly to assassinate him. Therefore I think there is nothing for you to consider, but to see that the Fact be fully proved; and I see nothing that hath been said by my Lord Ruffel, that does invalidate our Evidence. He hath produced several Witnesses, Persons of Honour; my Lord Anglesey he tells you of a Discourse my Lord Howard had with my Lord of Bedford; that he told my Lord of Bedford that he needed not to fear, for he had a wife and understanding Son, and could not think he should be guilty of any such thing as was laid to his Charge. This is brought to invalidate my Lord Howard's Testimony. Gentlemen, do but observe, my Lord Howard was as deep in as any of them, and was not then discovered: Is it likely, that my Lord Howard, that lay hid, should discover to my Lord of Bedford, that there was a Conspiracy to raise Arms, and that he was in it? This would have been an Aspersions upon my Lord of Bedford, that any such thing should have been said.

Mr. Edward Howard is the next, and he proves, That my Lord Howard used solemn Protestations, that he knew nothing of this Conspiracy. I did observe that worthy Gentleman in the Beginning of his Discourse (for it was pretty long) said first, that he had been several times tempting my Lord Howard to come over and be serviceable to the King; and if he knew any thing, that he would come and confess it. Why, Gentlemen, Mr. Howard, that had come to him upon these Errands formerly, and had thought he had gained him, I conceive you do not wonder if my Lord Howard did not reveal himself to him, who presently would have discovered it, for for that Errand he came. But if my Lord had had a Design to have come in and saved his Life, he would have made his Submission voluntarily, and made his Discovery: But my Lord tells nothing till he is pinched in his Conscience, and confounded with the Guilt, (being then in Custody) and then he tells the whole Truth, that which you have heard this Day.

Gentlemen, this hath been all that hath been objected against the Witnesses, except what is said by Dr. Burnet; and, he says, that my Lord Howard declared to him, that he believed there was no Plot, and laughed at it. Why, Gentlemen, the Dr. would take it ill to be thought a Person fit to be intrusted with the Discovery of this; therefore what he said to him signifies nothing, for 'tis no more than this, that he did not discover it to the Doctor.

But the last Objection (which I see there has been a great many Persons of Honour and Quality called to) is, that 'tis not likely my Lord Ruffel should be guilty of any thing of this kind, being a Man of that Honour, Virtue, and so little blameable in his whole Conversation. I do confess, Gentlemen, this is a thing that hath Weight in it. But consider, on the other hand, my Lord Ruffel is but a Man, and hath his human Frailties about him. Men fall by several Temptations; some out of Revenge, some by Malice, fall into such Offences as these are: My Lord Ruffel is not of that Temper, and therefore may-be these are not the Ingredients here. But, Gentlemen, there is another great and dangerous Temptation that attends People in his Circumstances, whether it be Pride or Ambition, or the cruel Snare of Popularity, being cried up as a Patron of Liberty. This hath been a dangerous Temptation to many, and many Persons of Virtue have fallen into it, and 'tis the only way to tempt Persons of Virtue, and the Devil knew it; for he that tempted the Pattern of Virtue, shewed him all the Kingdoms of the World, and said, All these will I give thee, if thou wilt fall down, and worship me. Tho' he be a Person of Virtue, yet it does not follow, but his Virtue may have some weak Part in him; and I am afraid, these Temptations have prevailed upon my Lord: For I cannot give myself any Colour of Objection, to disbelieve all these Witnesses who give in their Testimony. I see no Contradiction, no Correspondence, no Contrivance at all between them. You have plain Oaths before you, and I hope you will consider the Weight of them, and the great Consequence that did attend this Case, the Overthrow of the best Government in the World, and the best and most unspotted Religion, which must needs have suffered; the greatest Liberty, and the greatest Security for Property, that ever was in any Nation, bounded every way by the Rules of Law, and those kept sacred. I hope you will consider the Weight of this Evidence, and consider the Consequences such a Conspiracy, if it had taken Effect, might have had. And so I leave it to your Consideration upon the Evidence you have heard.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. My Lord, and you Gentlemen of the Jury, This Cause hath detained your Lordship a long time, by reason of so many Witnesses being called, and the Length of the Defence made by the Prisoner at the Bar; and if it had not been for the Length, I would not have injured your Patience by saying any thing, Mr Solicitor having taken so much Pains in it. It is a Duty incumbent upon me, under the Circumstances I now stand, to see if any thing hath been omitted, that hath not been observed to you; and I shall detain you with very few Words.

Gentlemen, you must give me Leave to tell you, 'tis a Case of great Consequence, of great Consequence to that noble Person, that now is at the Bar, as well as to the King; for it is not desired by the King, nor by his Counsel, to have you influenced in this Matter by any thing but by the Truth, and what Evidence you have received. You are not to be moved by Compassion or Pity; the Oath you have taken is to go according to your Evidence; and you are not to be moved by any Insinuations that are offered by us for the King, nor by any Insinuations by the Prisoner at the Bar; but the Truth, according to the Testimony given, must be your Guide. How far the Law will affect this Question, that we are not to apply to you; for that we are to apply ourselves to the Court, (they are the Judges in point of Law) who will take so much Care in their Directions to you, that you may be very well satisfied you will not easily be led into Error. For the Instances that have been put, I could put several others; but I will take Notice only of one thing, that that noble Person at the Bar seems to object. Gentlemen, it is not necessary there should be two Witnesses to the self-same Fact at the self-same Time; but if there be two Witnesses tending to the self-same Fact, tho' it was at several Times, and upon several Occasions, they will be in point of Law two Witnesses, which are necessary to convict a Man for High-Treason. Gentlemen, I make no Doubt this thing is known to you all, not only by the Judgment of all the Judges in England, but the Judgment of the Lords in Parliament; when I doubt not the Prisoner at the Bar did attend in the Case of my Lord Stafford, wherein one Witness gave an Account of a Conspiracy in England, Turberville of another in France; and by the Opinion of all my Lords the Judges approved in Parliament, that was enough, and he was convicted.

The Question is, Whether we have sufficiently proved this Matter? Gentlemen, I must tell you, we rake no Gaols, nor bring any profligate Persons, Persons that wanted Faith or Credit before this Time: I must tell you, that notwithstanding the fair Notice that hath been given to the Prisoner at the Bar, (that you see he hath taken an Advantage of it, he hath given an Account of a private Conversation, which my Lord Howard had before that noble Person that was Witness, since he was taken) he has not given you in any Proof hitherto; nay, I say, he has not pretended any thing in the World: Wherefore you, Gentlemen, that are upon your Oaths, should take it upon your Consciences, that two Men, against whom there is no Objection, should come to damn their own Souls to take away the Life of this Gentleman, when there is no Quarrel, no Temptation, wherefore these Gentlemen should come in the Face of a Court of Justice, in the Face of such an Auditory, without Respect to that infinite Being, to whom they appeal for Confirmation of the Truth of their Testimony: And if they had the Faith of Men or Christians, they must necessarily conclude, that if they did swear to take away a Man's Life that was innocent, God would sink them down presently into Hell.

Gentlemen, in the next Place, I must acquaint you, that the first Witness, Colonel Rumsey, it is apparent, that he was taken Notice of by the Prisoner as a Man fit to be trusted; he was engaged by my Lord Shaftesbury: But, says he, would any Man believe, that that Man that had received so many Marks of the King's Favour, both in Advantage to his Estate, his Honour, and Person, could be ever contriving such an hellish Design as this? Gentlemen, if you will argue from such uncertain Conjectures, then all Criminals will come off. Who should think that my Lord of Essex, who had been advanced so much in his Estate and Honour, should be guilty of such desperate Things! which had he not been conscious of, he would scarcely have brought himself to that untimely End, to avoid the Methods of publick Justice. Colonel Rumsey tells you, my Lord Shaftesbury was concerned in this Conspiracy. I am sorry to find, that there have been so many of the Nobility of this Land, that have lived so happily under the benign Influence of a gracious Prince, should make so ill Returns. Gentlemen, I must appeal to you, Whether in your Observation you found Colonel Rumsey to be over-hasty, and an over-zealous Witness? He did not come as if he came in Spite to the Prisoner at the Bar; you found how we were forced to pump out every thing; but after he had been pressed over and over again, then he came to it: So that I observe to you, that he was an unwilling Witness.

Gentlemen, give me Leave to observe to you, the Prisoner at the Bar, before such time as Mr. Sheppard came up and gave Evidence against him, says he, I came only by Accident, only to taste a Parcel of Wine. Mr. Sheppard, when he comes up, he tells you, there was no such Design. Ferguson, that was the Person he kept Company with; the Reverend Dean, and the rest of the Clergy of the Church of England, they were not fit to be trusted with it; but this Independent Parson, Ferguson, he gives Notice of the Coming of these Persons; and in pursuance of this Notice, they all come, they come late in the Evening, not in the Posture and Quality they used to go; for you find they had not so much as a Coach. Is it probable they came to taste Wine? Wherefore did they go up into a Room? Wherefore did they order Mr. Sheppard, that none of the Boys should come up, but that the Master must fetch the Sugar and Wine himself? Wherefore you may perceive the Action they were upon; there were only to be such Persons as had an Affection for such a Cause. You find, pursuant to what Colonel Rumsey says, that there was a Direction to take a View of the Guards, that Sir Thomas Armstrong comes back, and makes this Report: Says he, I have taken Notice, they are in such an idle careless Posture, that it is not impossible to surprize them. This Mr. Sheppard he does not come, nor does he appear to you to come here out of any vindictive Humour, to do the Prisoner at the Bar any Hurt.

In the next place, we have my Lord Howard; he comes and positively tells you, after he had given an Account, (for you observe there were two Parts to be acted in this horrid Tragedy; there was first the scoundrel Sort of People were to be concerned to take away the Life of the King and the Duke, the great Persons were to head the party in the Rising) they put themselves in proper Postures, each of them consenting to something of the Surprize, inasmuch as you observe, that Sir Thomas Armstrong, and some other Persons, might not be trusted. They come and resolve themselves out of a general Council, and they meet in a particular Council of six, looking upon themselves as the Heads of the Party: And I must tell you, many of them, (we live not in an Age of such Obscurity, but we know them) how fond have they been of the Applause of the People! As that Person encouraged himself Yesterday, they were Liberatores Patriæ, that could murder the King and the Duke.

My Lord, I must take Notice, that this noble Lord is known to have an Intimacy with him; you observe with how much Tenderness he is pleased to deliver himself, how carefully he reports the Debates of the particular Consults of the Persons to be intrusted in the Management; he tells you, that noble Lord, the Prisoner at the Bar, was pitched upon, and Algernon Sidney, a Man famous about the Town; for what? To call in Parties from some of his Majesty's other Dominions, Persons we know ripe enough for Rebellion, to assist. Pursuant to this, you find Persons sent of a Message for some to come over, whereof some are in hold: So that for all dark and obscure sort of Matters, nothing can be brought better to Light, than this, of taking all Matters together, with the concurring Circumstances of Time and Place.

Gentlemen, I must confess this noble Lord hath given an Account by several honourable Persons of his Conversation, which is a very easy Matter. Do you think, if any Man had a Design to raise a Rebellion against the Crown, that he would talk of it to the Reverend Divines, and the noble Lords, that are known to be of Integrity to the Crown? Do you think the Gentleman at the Bar would have so little Concern for his own Life, to make this Discourse his ordinary Conversation? No, it must be a particular Consult of six, that must be entrusted with this. I tell you, 'tis not the Divines of the Church of England, but an Independent Divine, that is to be concerned in this; they must be Persons of their own Complexion and Humour: For Men will apply themselves to proper Instruments.

Gentlemen, I would not labour in this Case; for far be it from any Man to endeavour to take away the Life of the Innocent! And whereas that noble Lord says, he hath a virtuous good Lady, he hath many Children, he hath Virtue and Honour he puts into the Scale; Gentlemen, I must tell you, on the other Side, you have Consciences, Religion; you have a Prince, and a merciful one too; consider the Life of your Prince, the Life of his Posterity, the Consequences that would have attended, if this Villainy had taken Effect. What would have become of your Lives and Religion? What would have become of that Religion we have been so fond of preserving? Gentlemen, I must put these things home upon your Consciences. I know you will remember the horrid Murder of the most pious Prince the Martyr, King Charles the First. How far the Practices of those Persons have influenced the several Punishments since, is too great a Secret for me to examine. But now I say, you have the Life of a merciful King, you have a Religion, that every honest Man ought to stand by, and I am sure every loyal Man will venture his Life and Fortune for. You have your Wives and Children. Let not the Greatness of any Man corrupt you; but discharge your Consciences both to God and the King, and to your Posterity.

L. C. J. Gentlemen of the Jury, the Prisoner at the Bar stands indicted before you of High-Treason, in compassing and designing the Death of the King, and in declaring of it by Overt-acts, endeavouring to raise Insurrections, and popular Commotions, in the Kingdom here. To this he hath pleaded, Not guilty. You have heard the Evidence, that hath been against him; it hath been at large repeated by the King's Counsel, which will take off a great deal of my Trouble in repeating it to you again. I know you cannot but take Notice of it, and remember it, it having been stated twice by two of the King's Counsel to you; 'tis long, and you see what the Parties here have proved. There is first of all Colonel Rumsey, he does attest a Meeting at Mr. Sheppard's House, and you hear to what Purpose he says it was; the Message that he brought, and the Return he had; it was to enquire concerning a Rising at Taunton; and that he had in Return to my Lord Shaftesbury was, that Mr. Trenchard had failed them, and my Lord must be contented; for it could not be that time. You hear, that he does say, that they did design a Rising; he saith there was a Rising designed in November, I think he saith the seventeenth, upon the Day of Queen Elizabeth's Birth. You hear he does say, there was at that Meeting some Discourse concerning inspecting the King's Guards, and seeing how they kept themselves, and whether they might be surprized; and this, he says, was all in order to a Rising. He says, that at this my Lord Russell was present. Mr. Sheppard does say, that my Lord Russell was there; that he came into this Meeting with the Duke of Monmouth, and he did go away with the Duke of Monmouth as he believes. He says, there was some Discourse of a Rising or Insurrection, that was to be procured within the Kingdom; but he does not tell you the Particulars of any thing, he himself does not. My Lord Howard afterwards does come and tell you of a great Discourse he had with my Lord Shaftesbury, in order to a Rising in the City of London; and my Lord Shaftesbury did value himself mightily upon 10,000 Men he hoped to raise; and a great deal of Discourse he had with my Lord Shaftesbury. This he does, by way of Inducement, to what he says concerning my Lord Russell. The Evidence against him is some Consults, that there were by six of them, who took upon them, as he says, to be a Council for the Management of the Insurrection, that was to be procured in this Kingdom. He instances in two, that were for this Purpose, the one of them at Mr. Hambden's House, the other at my Lord Russell's House. And he tells you at these Meetings, there was some Discourse of providing Treasure, and of providing Arms; but they came to no Result in these Things. He tells you, that there was a Design to send for some of the Kingdom of Scotland, that might join with them in this thing. And this is, upon the Matter, the Substance of the Evidence, that hath been at large declared to you by the King's Counsel, and what you have heard. Now, Gentlemen, I must tell you, some things it lies upon us to direct you in.

My Lord excepts to these Witnesses, because they are concerned, by their own shewing, in this Design: If there were any, I did direct (some of you might hear me) Yesterday, that that was no sufficient Exception against a Man's being an Evidence in the Case of Treason, that he himself was concerned in it; they are the most proper Persons to be Evidence, none being able to detect such Counsels but them. You have heard my Lord Ruffel's Witnesses, that he hath brought concerning them, and concerning his own Integrity and Course of Life, how it has been sober and civil, with a great Respect to Religion, as these Gentlemen do all testify. Now the Question before you will be, Whether upon this whole Matter you do believe my Lord Ruffel had any Design upon the King's life, to destroy the King, or take away his Life; for that is the material Part here. 'Tis used and given you (by the King's Counsel) as an Evidence of this, that he did conspire to raise an Insurrection, and to cause a Rising of the People, to make as it were a Rebellion within the Nation, and to surprise the King's Guards, which, say they, can have no other End, but to seize and destroy the King; and 'tis a great Evidence (if my Lord Ruffel did design to seize the King's Guards, and make an Insurrection in the Kingdom) of a Design to surprise the King's Person. It must be left to you upon the whole Matter: You have not Evidence in this Case as there was in the other Matter, that was tried in the Morning, or Yesterday, against the Conspirators to kill the King at the Rye. There was a direct Evidence of a Consult to kill the King; that is not given you in this Case: This is an Act of contriving Rebellion, and an Insurrection within the Kingdom, and to seize his Guards, which is urged an Evidence, and surely is in itself an Evidence, to seize and destroy the King.

Upon this whole Matter, this is left to you. If you believe the Prisoner at the Bar to have conspired the Death of the King, and in order to that, to have had these Consults, that these Witnesses speak of, then you must find him Guilty of this Treason that is laid to his Charge.

Then the Court adjourned till Four o'Clock in the Afternoon, when the Jury brought the said Lord Ruffel in Guilty of the said High Treason.

CXX. The Trial of JOHN ROUSE*, at the Old Baily, for High Treason, July 13. 1683.

JOHN ROUSE, and William Blague, being set to the Bar, and having held up their Hands, the Indictment was read, as follows:

London. The Jurors for our Sovereign Lord the King, upon their Oaths, present, That John Rouse, late of London, Gent. and William Blague, late of London, Gent. as false Traitors, against the most Illustrious and Excellent Prince, our Sovereign Lord Charles II. by the Grace of God, of England, Scotland, France and Ireland King, their natural Lord; not having the Fear of God in their Hearts, nor weighing the Duty of their Allegiance, but being moved and seduced by the Intigation of the Devil; and the true Duty, and natural Obedience, which true and faithful Subjects of our Sovereign Lord the King, towards him our said Lord the King, do bear, and of Right ought to bear, wholly withdrawing; and with their whole Strength intending the Peace and common Tranquillity of this Kingdom of England to disturb, and War and Rebellion against our said Lord the King to move and stir up, and the Government of our said Lord the King within this Kingdom of England to subvert, and our said Lord the King from his Title, Honour and Kingly Name of the Imperial Crown of this his Kingdom of England to put down and deprive, and our said Lord the King to Death and final Destruction to bring and put, the second Day of March, in the Year of the Reign of our Sovereign Lord Charles II. King of England, &c. the Five-and-thirtieth, and divers other Days and Times, as well before as after, at the Parish of St. Michael Bassishaw, in the Ward of Bassishaw, London, maliciously and traitorously, with divers other Traitors, to the Jurors aforesaid unknown, did conspire, compass, imagine and intend our said Lord the King their Supreme Lord, not only of his Kingly State, Title, Power and Government of this his Kingdom of England to deprive and throw down; but also our said Lord the King to kill, and to Death to bring and put; and the ancient Government of this his Kingdom of England to change, alter, and wholly to subvert, and a miserable Slaughter amongst the Subjects of our said Lord the King through his whole Kingdom of England to cause and procure, and Insurrection and Rebellion against our said Lord the King to move, and stir up within this Kingdom of England; and to fulfil and perfect the said most horrible Treasons, and traitorous Conspiracies, Imaginations and Purposes aforesaid, the said John Rouse, and William Blague, then and there, and divers other Days and Times, as well before as after, as false Traitors, maliciously, traitorously and advisedly, they did assemble, meet together, and consult between themselves, and with the said other Traitors, to the Jurors aforesaid unknown, and with them did treat of the taking and seizing the Tower of London, and of and for the executing and perfecting their Treasons, and traitorous Compassings, Imaginations and Purposes aforesaid: And that they the said John Rouse, and William Blague, as false Traitors, maliciously traitorously and advisedly, then and there, and divers other Days and Times, as well before as after, they and either of them did undertake, and to the said other Traitors did promise for themselves to be aiding and assisting in the Execution of the Treasons and traitorous Compassings, Imaginations and Purposes aforesaid; and in providing Arms and armed Men to fulfil and perfect the said Treasons, and traitorous Compassings, Imaginations and Purposes aforesaid. And the said most wicked Treasons and traitorous Compassings, Imaginations and Purposes aforesaid, to fulfil and bring to pass, they the said John Rouse, and William Blague, as false Traitors, maliciously, traitorously and advisedly, then and there did procure and prepare Arms, to wit, Blunderbusses, Carbines and Pistols, against the Duty of their Allegiance, against the Peace of our Sovereign Lord the King, his Crown and Dignity, and against the Form of the Statutes in that Case made and provided, &c.

Cl. of Cr. What sayest thou, John Rouse? Art thou guilty of this High Treason, whereof thou standest indicted, or Not guilty?

Rouse. Not guilty.

Cl. of Cr. Culprit, How wilt thou be tried?

Rouse. By God and my Country.

Cl. of Cr. God send thee a good Deliverance. What sayest thou, William Blague? Art thou guilty of this High Treason, whereof thou standest indicted, or Not guilty?

Capt. Blague. Not guilty.

Cl. of Cr. Culprit, How wilt thou be tried?

Capt. Blague. By God and my Country.

Cl. of Cr. God send thee a good Deliverance.

Friday, July 13. in the Afternoon, the Court being met, and Proclamation made, Cl. of Cr. Set John Rouse, and William Blague, to the Bar. You the Prisoners at the Bar, these good Men, that you hear called, are to pass between our Sovereign Lord the King upon Trial of your several Lives and Deaths; if you will challenge them, or any of them, your Time is, as they come to the Book to be sworn, before they are sworn. Nicolas Charlton.

Capt. Blague. I hope I shall only speak for myself.

L. C. J. Yes, you shall be heard.

Rouse. My Lord, I have had no Liberty so much as sending for my Wife. Monday Morning they gave me Notice of Trial; but I have had no Advantage of that Notice: I presumed it meant we should have the Liberty of Subjects: But though Notice was then given, yet I had not the Liberty of sending for any body till Wednesday: It was eight or nine of the Clock on Wednesday Night, that one came and told me, I should have no Liberty of Counsel, unless I had it from the Court; and Yesterday Morning I found, that Captain Blague and I were joined in one Indictment, which alters the Case, with Submission to the Court. What Time I have had for Trial has been so short, I have not been able to get my Witnesses ready. I desire nothing but as an Englishman.

L. C. J. As an Englishman! You can demand no Time to prepare for Trial; for those that will commit Crimes, they must be ready to answer for them, and defend themselves. 'Tis Matter of Fact you are charged with; you knew long ago what you were to be tried for; for you were taken up, and charged with High Treason. You might then reasonably consider what kind of Evidence would be against you: If you be an innocent Person, you may defend yourself without Question: But if you have done an ill thing, the Law does not design to give you Time to shelter yourself under any Subterfuge, or make any Excuse, or to prepare any Witnesses to testify an untrue thing for you.

Rouse. My Lord, I only beg a little Time, I don't design to make any Evasion. That I am innocent, I thank God I am.

L. C. J. We can't give you any farther Time, unless the King pleases; we are bound to try those he brings before us.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Because Captain Blague does not desire to be joined to the other; we that are for the King are contented, that Rouse be tried first.

Then Captain Blague was taken away, and after several Persons challenged by Rouse, the Jury that were sworn, were,

Jurors.

Robert Beddingfield,
John Pelling,
William Windbury,
Theophilus Man,

John Short, senior,
Thomas Nicholas,
Richard Hoare,
Thomas Barnes,

Henry Robbins,
Henry Kempe,
Edward Raddish,
Edward Kempe.

Cl. of Cr. John Rouse, Hold up thy Hand. You of the Jury, look upon the Prisoner, and hearken to his Cause; he stands indicted, — Procurator antea to his Indictment Mutatis mutandis; upon this Indictment, he hath been arraigned, and thereunto pleaded Not guilty; and for his Trial, put himself upon his Country, which Country you are; your Charge is to inquire, &c.

Mr. Jones. May it please your Lordship, and you Gentlemen of the Jury, the Prisoner at the Bar stands indicted for High Treason, in conspiring the Death of the King; and in order thereunto, consulting how to seize the Tower; and in providing of Arms, in order to destroy the King, and subvert the Government: If we prove it upon him, you are to find him guilty.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. The Prisoner at the Bar was (as you have been acquainted) in that horrid Conspiracy, whereof several of the Conspirators have been brought to Trial, and received a Verdict surely according to Evidence. The Prisoner at the Bar did bear a Proportion among the rest. It does occur to your Memories, there were several Undertakers, that undertook several Stations; some whereof were to undertake the blackest Part of this horrid Villainy, by the taking off the King and his Royal Highness his Brother; others (in order to the same Design) were to seize upon the King's Guards, and so to deprive him of all manner of Defence whatsoever; and to prevent all Persons to make any Defence against them, as you heard, there was another Part to be acted; therefore the Town was to be divided into several Divisions; I think * Burnet's Hist. of his Own Times, Vol. I. p. 539.

there were twenty; but the most numerous and beneficial Parts were thought to be about Wapping. A particular Part of the Evidence was, That the Tower was to be seized, and the King's Arms there; I know you observed, that they took Notice of a particular Place of the Tower, that was most capable of Access. This Rouse is a Gentleman very well known, 'tis not the first time he hath been at this Bar: He was here at a time when the common Justice of the Nation could not be obtained in this Place, inasmuch that the Judges who came to execute Justice, had more Reason to fear being executed upon the Bench, than the Prisoner at the Bar. It may easily appear how far Mr. Rouse was concerned, (I don't love to aggravate Matters, he has Crimes enough) he was reckoned Paymaster to this Rabble, he was to take care to manage those Persons that were to seize upon the Tower. He is a Man of great Skill in that Subject, a Doctrine wherein he was well tutored under a Lord you heard mentioned this Morning; but he is in his Grave, and so I shall say no more of him. We shall give you an Account of a Design he had how to compass this Business. Black-heath was looked upon as a very convenient Place; where there was to be a Golden Ball; for which the Seamen were to play in great Numbers, and he that won the Prize was to have the Golden Ball; but his Eye was upon the Tower all this while. He thought to allure these silly Seamen by the Advantage of the honourable winning of this Ball; and when they were freighted with the Success of this Meeting, then it was proper to attack the Tower. We shall prove the other Prisoner, that was at the Bar, engaged with this Prisoner at the Bar. We shall not only prove this, but that Mr. Rouse hath been always of an Inclination against the Government. We shall call you Witnesses, that he hath undertaken to dispute by what Authority the King comes to govern in England; that he hath said, he had forfeited his Government; that he told an ordinary Miscreant, one of his Levellers, that he had as much Right to the Crown as he had. My Lord, if we prove this Matter to your Lordship, and the Gentlemen of the Jury, it will be high time for us to endeavour to preserve the Crown upon that Royal Head, upon which all loyal Men desire it should flourish as long as the Sun and Moon endure.

Mr. Burton. Call Thomas Leigh.

[Who was sworn.

Mr. Jones. Pray give us an Account what you know concerning Mr. Rouse.

Mr. North. Of any Design against the King, and providing Arms.

Rouse. If you please, my Lord, one Word before he speaks; I have an Exception against him. I wonder with what Confidence you can look in my Face at this time?

King's Counsel. Nay, nay, speak to the Court.

Rouse. My Lord, he is a Person, that before he was taken up, was sworn by two Persons to have a Hand in the Plot; one was Mr. Keeling, the other Mr. Hew of Old-street; and then being taken up, and conscious to himself, that he was guilty of such notorious Crimes, and knowing I was pretty well acquainted with him, he was deadly afraid I should come and swear against him, and thereupon he took the Boldness to swear against me first.

Mr. North. My Lord, he hath offered nothing of Objection.

Rouse. I suppose, with Submission to the Court, without he have his Pardon, he is no Evidence in this Case.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Come, tell us all you know.

Mr. Leigh. If it please you, my Lord, I have been concerned in this Conspiracy, I know something of it; but I believe Mr. Rouse knows a great deal more. Mr. Rouse takes me to the King's-head Tavern in Swinton's Alley, where after some time, Mr. Goodenough came, where there was a Club of Men that were in the Conspiracy. I had seen Mr. Goodenough before; he acquainted me, that there was an Apprehension our Rights and Privileges were invaded, and it was time to look to ourselves; for Popery was designed, and Arbitrary Power; and therefore he desired to know, Whether I would engage in that Affair to prevent it? And withal he told me, the City of London and Middlesex was divided in twenty Parts; and he asked me to engage in one Part. I told him, my Acquaintance did not lie where I lived; but I would get a Part where my Acquaintance was. I acquainted Mr. Rouse and Mr. Goodenough what Men I had spoke to. Mr. Goodenough told me, the Design was to set up the Duke of Monmouth, and kill the King and the Duke of York; but that all Parties must not know of it: But that we must tell some People, here was like to be a foreign Invasion, and ask them, What Readiness they were in? And if we found they were like to be compliant in that, then we might discourse with them about the other Matter. I discoursed with several Men about this Affair: And he told me, the Lord Mayor and Aldermen were to be killed immediately, (especially the present Lord Mayor, Sir John Moore) and their Houses plundered, and there would be Riches enough, and that would help to maintain the Army; and we went on further in this Discourse. Then I acquainted Mr. Rouse with this Business, but he knew of it before; and he did tell me, he could provide Arms for an hundred Men, and said, Nothing was to be done unless the King was seized; saying, We remember since Forty-One the King went and set up his Standard; therefore (says he) we will seize them, that they shall not set up their Standard. But (says he) I am for seizing them, but not for shedding their Blood. Mr. Rouse went off with that Discourse; says he, I must speak with Mr. Goodenough, and some of those that are principally concerned. Mr. Rouse acquainted me, that it was a very convenient thing to have a Ball played upon Black-Heath, and to that End we must speak to some Sea Captains; and (says he) I will engage Ten, and they shall manage that Affair, and he that wins the Ball take it. But when they have so done, every Captain shall take his Party, and tell them, they have other Work; and then go with Long-boats and Arms, and seize the Tower. I acquainted Mr. Goodenough with this, and Mr. Goodenough asked me the Charge of the Golden Ball. Mr. Rouse had told me, it would be Ten or a Dozen Pounds. Mr. Goodenough said, if it was Forty Pounds he would be at the Charge of it all. Several such Discourses Mr. Rouse hath, in my Hearing, spoke to several Men at the King's-Head Tavern. I understood I was sworn against; I heard of it at the King's-Head Tavern, in his Company and Mr. Good- enough's. Mr. Rouse directed me to go to the Sun Tavern near Moregate, and he would come to me; and there Mr. Rouse and Mr. Goodenough came to me; and Mr. Rouse told me, I should lie at his House. Mr. Rouse cut off my Hair, and went to Mr. Bateman's and fetch'd me a Perriwig; Mr. Rouse and I went several times to view the Tower, and took Mate Lee along with us. So Mate Lee directed us to Traitor's-Bridge; and he said, that was an easy Place, and he would undertake to do it with an hundred Men, so they had but Hand-granadoes. We had, some time before that, appointed to meet at Wapping to speak with the Sea Captains. Mr. Rouse met the first Day in order to this Business at the Amsterdam Coffee-house, and there Mr. Rouse met with two Sea Captains (as he told me) that were to officiate in this Business, and the two Captains he took to the Angel and Crown in Threadneedle-street. A small time after, about an Hour and a Half, or thereabouts, Mr. Rouse came, (I am not positive whether Mr. Goodenough was there or no) and told me, he had spoke to both the Sea Captains, and they were willing; but one was going to New Jersey, and therefore the Work must be done before he went, or he could not assist. Another time he appointed Mate Lee to meet at the Anchor in Wapping. I did speak to Mr. Goodenough, but he did not meet us, so that we could not go down that Day; but Mr. Rouse always undertook that Business to get ten Sea Captains, and get Arms for an hundred Men. After I was sworn against, and went to Mr. Rouse's House, the next Day Mr. Nelthrop and Mr. Goodenough came to me to Mr. Rouse's; says Mr. Rouse, Be not discouraged, let the Business go on. I was directed by Mr. Nelthrop and Mr. Goodenough, whenever I was taken into Custody, I should deny all, and it could not touch my Life. I thank him for his Kindness; I lay well, and eat well, at his House, my Lord; but however I will tell the Truth. We met afterwards several times, and went to Captain Blague's, and the rest of the Company, but at different Places. We had an Account, that Mr. Goodenough was in the North raising Men, and that the Duke of Monmouth was thereabouts, and that a Deliverance should be wrought for all this.

L. C. J. About what time was this?

Mr. Leigh. In last June. The Design was so laid, that I was told it was to be done in a Fortnight. They never agreed on a Way or Method of killing the King; but they told me, they had a thousand Horse ready in the Country, and that there was five hundred Horse, or thereabouts, ready in the Town; and that the King should be killed coming from Windfor. Now they were contriving how to send Arms, that they might not be suspected, to some private Place; they were to be sent in Trunks to some private House, and there they were to arm themselves in the Night; and some Brickmen were to go to Windfor to know when the King came, and give Information; and so they were set upon to him in some convenient Place, and both were to be taken off together, the King and the Duke; and Mr. Rouse said, Take them off, and then no Man can have Commis-sion to fight for them.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. He is a Politician every Inch of him.

Mr. Jones. What did he employ you to do?

Mr. Leigh. I was employ'd by Mr. Goodenough to make all the Friends I could in this Engagement. I went into Spital-fields, and engaged some Weavers and other People. They promised me a Gratuity, but I never had any thing.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. If Mr. Rouse has a mind to ask him any Questions.

Rouse. I will, my Lord.

L. C. J. Propose your Questions to the Court.

Rouse. I ask him, by the Oath he has taken, Whether ever I spake with him of any Design against the King and Government? I ask you, Whether you did not begin with me?

L. C. J. You hear his Question; answer it.

Mr. Leigh. For that I answer, That Mr. Rouse was the first Man that ever I heard propose, that the King and the Duke should be secured; and there is another thing come into my Mind; Mr. Rouse hath been a Traveller, he did presume to say, and has said to me, and in Company, that the King was sworn in France and Spain to bring in Popery and Arbitrary Power in so many Years, and therefore it was no Sin to take him off; and he told me, he had it under his own Hand.

Rouse. It was impossible, my Lord.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. I do believe it. I do not believe he thought thee fit to be a Secretary.

L. C. J. Look you, If you would have any thing asked him, propose it to me.

Rouse. What Place was it I began to speak of any thing of this Design?

Mr. Leigh. The King's-Head.

Rouse. Who was with us?

Mr. Leigh. Mr. Goodenough and several others.

Rouse. Was it discoursed of before them?

Mr. Leigh. No, You never discoursed of it before them?

Rouse. You discoursed of going an Hay-making in the Country; says you, I will trust them one alone; but says you, I am under an Oath of Secrecy, not to communicate it but to one at a time, but I make bold to acquaint you with it: I give you an Account what I heard from his own Mouth.

L. C. J. Look you, what you heard from him will signify nothing, unless you are able to make Proof of it by other Witnesses: If you will ask him any Questions, you shall. We will hear what you can say for yourself at last: But you must not evade the King's Evidence with any Discourse at random.

Rouse. Did I ever put you upon any thing of this Nature? Did you not tell me there was a Design to overturn the Government, but you would not shed Blood?

Mr. Leigh. I will answer: I can't be positive, whether I came to Mr. Rouse, or he to me. I had been in his Company several times before, and whether he discoursed it first to me, or I to him, I cannot tell; but when that Point was discoursed, he was very zealous to get ten Captains, and that the Ball might be play'd, and the Tower taken.

Rouse. Did ever Mr. Goodenough, and you and I, meet upon such an Account?

Mr,

Mr. Leigh. Yes, at the King's-head Tavern.

Rouse. I can take my Oath, I never saw Mr. Goodenough but twice in your Company, and I never knew you till May last.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. You came to a very strict Alliance by that time it came to June.

Mate Lee sworn.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Tell my Lord and the Jury what you know, the whole Truth and nothing but the Truth.

Lee. The whole Truth I will tell. About a Week before Midsummer, or thereabouts, I met Mr. Rouse, I think it was in Pope's-head Alley, going to look after Captain Blague: Says Mr. Rouse, I have something to say to you, but he did forbear speaking it then; so I went to the King's-Head Tavern by the Exchange; we went into a little Room. Says he, There is something I would have you do. What's that? says I. Says he, Can't you get some Seamen fitting to make Commanders of Ships? I did not understand Mr. Rouse's Meaning in it; but I thought Mr. Rouse being in Employment, might put me in, being destitute of Employment, as well as other Men. So after we did appoint to meet at Wapping, at the Sign of the Blue Anchor in Wapping Dock. Says Mr. Rouse, If I come not at Ten of the Clock, do not look for me. Says he, Can you get no Men that are fit to make Commanders of Ships? Says I, I have no Acquaintance with any; I do not know but two or three: But, says I, I will see what I can do. I waited for Mr. Rouse and Mr. Leigh next Day (both were to come). The next Day I asked him, What he intended by the Commanders of the Ships? Where would he have those Ships? He answered, some of the King's Men of War, that lay at Deptford and Woolwich to make Guard-ships. Says I, What will you do, if you have no Powder and Shot? If you could take the Tower, then you might provide them with every thing fitting. Says Mr. Rouse, We must secure the Tower and Whitehall both, or we can do nothing. Says I, Mr. Rouse, where is your Oath of Allegiance then, that is to the King? Says he, We will secure the King, that he shall come to no Damage, and he shall remain King still. If Mr. Rouse hath any thing to object against what I say, I desire to hear it: I speak nothing but the Truth.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Did you meet with him at any other time?

Lee. This was the first time he put out any such thing to me, concerning any such Contrivance.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Did you meet with him afterwards?

Lee. Yes, we had some Discourse, it was to the same Effect; but it signifies nothing; and my Memory being shallow, I do not exactly remember it. I know I must give an Account of this, before a greater Court than this.

Mr. Burton. Mr. Corbin.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. I did acquaint you, my Lord, that there was Occasion to make use of Evidence against the Prisoner at the Bar; I gave you an Account how that Evidence was not received. Now I desire to give you Proof, that the continual Inclination of this Man's Heart was the Killing of the King, and Destruction of the Government.

Mr. Thomas Corbin sworn.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Pray, Sir, tell my Lord, and the Gentlemen of the Jury, what Meetings you had heretofore with the Prisoner about the Year Eighty-one or thereabouts. See whether you know him.

Mr. Corbin. What I have to say against Mr. Rouse, is only what I gave in Evidence to the Court before.

Rouse. When was that?

Mr. Corbin. In Eighty-one.

L. C. J. Pray, what do you know of him? Don't tell us what you gave in Evidence; but you are on your Oath to speak Truth, not what you said then.

Mr. Corbin. My Lord, some few Days before the Members for the City of London went for Oxford, I happened to appoint a Gentleman (one Mr. Wyat) to meet me at Mr. Leech's in Cornhill. Mr. Rouse came by, I knew him very well; he was concerned in the Commission for disbanding the Army as well as I. He came in, and saluted not only me, but the Master of the Shop, with, How do you do? He enter'd into Discourse, and said, he intended to go for Oxford, and that he had agreed with the Coffee-men about Town, to furnish them with News: Says he, There are several Gentlemen resorting to your Shop; it would do well, if you had it. Says Mr. Leech, What shall I give you? Says he, If you will go to the Tavern, we will agree it over a Glass of Wine. But Mr. Rouse told me he had a Kindness to beg of me; and (says he) I would have you engage some of your Friends to deliver them speedily to such a Person I shall appoint, de die in diem; for, says he, if they be delivered by the ordinary Letter-carrier, they won't turn to Account, nor give Satisfaction. By-and-by Mr. Wyat came in (that I was to meet at the Stationers): Mr. Wyat asked me, What I thought of the Sessions? Mr. Rouse made Answer, he did foresee it would be a very short Sessions. Says he, These frequent Prorogations and Dissolutions of the Parliament won't avail him; for whatever the King has, the Parliament gave him, and they may take it away when they please. One bid him have a care what he said; and he reply'd, The King had forfeited his Crown, and had no more Right to it than he had.

L. C. J. Mr. Rouse, if you would ask him any Questions, pray direct yourself to us, and we will ask them.

Rouse. I desire he may be asked, What was said before and after?

L. C. J. Can you tell him? Do you know there was any previous or subsequent Discourse to this, that might any way alter it?

Rouse. It was the same Question propounded in Eighty-one.

Mr. Just. Withins. Pray, did he say the King had forfeited his Crown?

Mr. Corbin. Yes, and when he was rebuked for it, he reiterated it.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. We will trouble your Lordship but with one Piece of Evidence more; only to give you an Account Mr. Rouse is a Man very well known in the City of London; yet when there were Officers came to seize him, he had forgot his Name of Rouse, and did not remember it. Swear William Richardson, (which was done). Pray, tell my Lord and the Jury, Whether you were at the taking of this Mr. Rouse, and what Name he went by?

Mr. Richardson. I was upon the Fourth of July Instant, to search for one Armiger, and coming to Widow Hay's Coffee-house, (I think they call it) the Widow told me, there was no Man in the House: I went down the Street, and came back again, and one said, he saw a Man go into the Garden: Says he, do you stay here, and I will go and see: He saw this Gentleman: Says he, What is your Name? He said, Johnson: I asked him, and he said, Johnson. I told him, We must have an Account of him. Some said, they did not know him. We went to the Half-Moon Tavern, in Aldersgate-street; he sent for other Men; they said, they did know him; but they could say nothing in his Behalf.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Is that the Man, Johnson?

Mr. Richardson. That is the Man, that said his Name was Johnson.

L. C. J. Look you now, Mr. Rouse, this is your Time to speak for yourself: What have you to say to this that is charged upon you? You hear the first Witness does say, That you would have engaged him in a Design of raising of Men; and you told him, you designed to surprise the Tower; and to that Purpose he survey'd it with you; and you told him what your Design was you met Mr. Goodenough about; it was to raise Men. Goodenough was for killing the King; you, it seems, at first, was but for securing the King, and making him do what you please; but afterwards, it was come to an higher Matter; and then you had found out a way to engage some Captains to seize the Tower, and others were to seize Whitehall; both were to be done at once. What say you to this, (here are three Witnesses that testify very strongly against you) and the Device you had to get Men to Blackheath to secure the Tower?

Rouse. My Lord, I stand here for my Life; it never enter'd into my Heart, nor came out of my Mouth; but he came to me several times about it, and I opposed it. At last he dogg'd me so often, that he gave me Occasion to ask him the Meaning of it. The first Place I saw him in, was the King's-Head (as he saith truly) in Swithin's-Alley. There were several Persons, (as they met there every Day upon their private Occasions) that is true. He asked me a strange Question, (that was the first Time that I heard of it) Whether I was willing to oppose a foreign Invasion, that was like to be made speedily? And, Whether I would engage in the Defence of it? And this he did two or three times afterwards. To which I replied, Sir, I and every honest Man are bound (as we are Subjects, and have taken the Oaths of Supremacy and Allegiance) to engage in such a Thing you put me upon, that was, to engage against a foreign Invasion. The next time, he asked me, How far I would assist, if such a thing should fall out as a foreign Invasion. I wonder'd to hear it so often repeated; I answer'd, I never had but one Sword for several Years, tho' I have had Occasion for many in other Countries; but I make no Question but by the Assistance of my Friends, to raise an hundred Arms, that was my very Expression: But withal I demanded, What he meant by Invasion? And that I insisted upon several times: For, says I, I know of none, and I hope there is none like to be. I took an Account of this in Characters, and have acquainted his Majesty and the Council with it. He replied to me: Says he, I wonder you are a Stranger to such a Thing. 'Tis true, says he, that is the Word goes up and down: But, says he, there is another Kind of Invasion meant by some Men. I asked him, What other Invasion do you mean? He answered presently, Don't you know? Are you a Stranger in England? In Israel? Says he, there is an Invasion upon our Rights and Liberties, and all we have: Whereupon I was a little startled. This was at the King's-Head Tavern. Another time I desired him to explain his Meaning, being a Stranger to it, when I express'd my Readiness to serve the King upon such an Occasion, in those Words. They that know me, know that I am not in the Capacity of raising an hundred Arms; but I intended it, as God knows, in Opposition to a foreign Invasion: But, I thank God, I took Characters Day by Day, and with a Resolution Day by Day to discover it: But he has got the Start of me, for fear I should swear against him. He insisted still upon it, That our Rights and Liberties were invaded; and that was the Invasion all along intended; and that was the way to hook in Persons, only upon that Pretence of a foreign Invasion. I asked him, In what Manner he meant Invasion? Says he, What with their Doctrines on one hand, and Oppression on the other, they lie so heavy, that we can't bear it no longer. Says I, What do you mean by this? What Course do you think of? What can you propound to yourself to extricate yourself out of these Troubles you so much complain of? To which he answered, You are a Stranger to what is a-foot, and hath been a-foot, a great while. Do you not know the Persons that are engaged in the Design? (I was a little inquisitive to know what was meant by the Persons). No, (says I) positively, I know not what you mean; I am a perfect Stranger to these Persons, and this Design; and I wished him, and all others, (as they were Men and Christians) that they would take care of opposing the Government they lived under, that was my very Words. Says he, that we have considered very well, and how to secure the Two Things; and, says he, you shall see we will do it dexterously, without shedding a drop of Blood: Nay, says he, not the Blood of the Duke of York, though he be the veriest Dog in England. I desired him to explain himself. He answered, The Mischief of it is, we can't agree among ourselves; for it was Us and We at every Word; so I concluded he was of the Cabal and Club, that met together on this Design (that hath come before your Lordship); and I am pretty confident there was such a hellish Design, though I thank God, I had no Hand in it. Said I, who are the Persons? Pray declare the Bottom of this Story you come to me about, one Day after another. With much ado, he told me, Mr. Goodenough was one. After this Discourse, I never saw Mr. Goodenough but twice; once was at the King's-Head Tavern, where I believe was twenty; the second time, was a Day or two after I saw the Proclamation, and his Name in it. So much I speak of Mr. Goodenough. I asked him the Names of the other Persons, that were engaged in this Design; and says he, I must conceal them, for I am under an Obligation: But the first time I saw the Proclamation against Colonel Rumsey and the others, says he, I was deadly afraid I was in the Proclamation; but (says he) all these Persons are concerned, and several several others. Thereupon he told me, that when they met they came to this Resolution of seizing the Tower, the Aldermen, and taking of London. Says I, Pray what Money have you to carry on this? Money? Oh, says he, we don't want Money; says he, Mr. Goodenough hath assured me there is 40,000*l*.

L. C. J. Look you, you invert all his Discourse: He hath sworn it against you. Have you any Evidence in the World? You are not in a Capacity to swear against him.

Rouse. My Lord, he hath turned it upon me, he spake to me always in private.

L. C. J. Look you, you have fixed but upon one Person, here was Mate Lee, that gives a very shrewd Evidence against you; Did he come and teach you? Did he use these Words?

Rouse. My Lord, I have nothing to say against Mate Lee, I hope he is an honest Man. But I having a Design to discover this whole Thing, and having so much out of Leigh the Dyer—

L. C. J. What did you use these Words to him for then?

Rouse. To satisfy the Gentlemen that put me upon it, that I might come to the Bottom of the Design.

Mr. Just. With. You say you know a great deal more: How came it to pass you never told the King one Word of this till after you was taken?

Rouse. I have told it since I was taken.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray, when you had got to the Bottom of all this (as you call it) why did you deny your Name?

Rouse. I did not deny my Name.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. He hath as many Names as he has Designs, and they are abundance.

Rouse. I did not know they were Officers. I did not think there was any Obligation upon me to tell every Man my Name.

L. C. J. You hear what Evidence is given against you concerning your Discourse in Eighty-one; which tho' it be not the Thing for which you are directly called in Question, yet if you could clear yourself of it, it would import you much, for that does shew your Spirit, and that you have had a long while a Design against the King's Life, if that be true; therefore it would be very fitting that you purged yourself of it, and that you could some way or other give an Answer to what you said, That the King had forfeited his Crown, and had no more Right to it, than one of those jerry Persons you spoke to: And to say the Parliament might take away the King's Authority. These are strange Treasonable Expressions.

Rouse. My Lord, tho' this Thing be revived, which was out of Doors two Years since, and I suppose it is well known to your Lordship, who was then upon the Bench. As I was told, there was a Word in the Indictment called Colloquium: He was asked what Discourse passed before: But if Mr. Corbin would remember himself, I do confess I did say these Words; but the Words that followed before.

Mr. Just. With. What do you mean, the Cart before the Horse?

Rouse. Mr. Wyat was urging of several Discourses, the Popish Grandeur in deposing Kings; and I gave this Answer in these Words: Sir, (says I) if it were in the Power of any Pope to depose the King, then he might as well take away the Crown off the King's Head; but he hath no such Power; if he had that Power, says I, then the Crown of England is your's as much as his.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What was the Colloquium, when you said the Parliament might take it away?—Rouse. I never said that.

L. C. J. I have heard a great deal of your Discourse: If you think you can make any of it good by Witnesses to your Advantage, call them.

Rouse. My Lord, I have not had Time to collect my Witnesses. How can it be supposed I should call Witnesses? I don't know whether they are here. Here are Witnesses called to prove a Matter, whereof upon a Trial two Years past I was acquitted.

Mr. Just. With. Pray do not go away with that, here are two Witnesses since.

L. C. J. You were told, that was not the Thing laid to your Charge now, that does only shew the Temper of your Spirit, and how your Inclinations have been all along. Look you, this you are now charged with, is a Design to Seize and Kill the King, and to that Purpose to have enter'd into a Conspiracy with Goodenough and others, for the raising of Men, and the making of a Rebellion and Insurrection here in the Kingdom; whereby you might have seized not only the King, but his Fort here, the Tower, and made yourselves Masters of his Ships, and so enter'd into a perfect War with him in his own Kingdom, to the Destruction of himself and the Government. You hear what the Witnesses say against you.

Rouse. I do declare, in the Presence of God Almighty, before whom I must stand, it never enter'd into my Heart.

Mr. Jones. If that would do, we should have none hanged.

Rouse. I appeal to your Lordship, and this Honourable Court, whether 'tis likely for me, who am such a silly Person, to engage in such a devilish Design, especially being concerned with no Person in the World about it; for I declare, if I was upon ten thousand Oaths, I never had any Discourse with any Person in the World about it. In the next Place, I never was in any Meeting, though I have heard of several darkly that they met in London, and in several Clubs, but I could never find out the Places. I desire to ask him, whether he knows with whom I did concern myself.

L. C. J. Look you, did you never meet him with any Company concerning any of these Treasonable Designs that you have spoken of?

Mr. Leigh. I will give your Lordship and the Jury an Account. Mr. Rouse acquainted me he could make ten Sea-Captains; I acquainted Mr. Goodenough with it. He told me he would have a Golden Ball, and told me the Charge. We went to the Angel and Crown Tavern, from thence he came to meet Mr. Goodenough, to tell him what he had said to these Captains. The next Day he met Mr. Goodenough; and Mr. Goodenough, Mr. Rouse, Mr. Pachin, and I, went from Joseph's Coffee-house in Exchange-Alley, and he discoursed about getting of these Captains.

Rouse. Who was present?

Mr. Leigh. We never discoursed the Matter jointly, but singly with one Man. Mr. Rouse and Mr. Goodenough went into a Room apart above Stairs, and discoursed this Matter (as I believe) half an Hour.

Vol. III.

Rouse. How do you know what Discourse I had with Mr. Goodenough when you was not present?

Mr. Leigh. Mr. Goodenough thanked me for bringing him acquainted with you.

L. C. J. How do you know what Discourse they had?

Mr. Leigh. I know only what Mr. Rouse told me; Mr. Rouse told me, that he would engage ten Sea-Captains, that a Ball should be play'd, and every Man take his Dividend.

L. C. J. Did he tell you he had discoursed this with Mr. Goodenough?

Rouse. Did I tell you so?—Mr. Leigh. Yes, Sir.

L. C. J. You speak of several in Company, one Pachin and others.

Mr. Leigh. We went from the King's-head Tavern, for there was Company we did not like, tho' we discoursed there but of Hay-making, and getting Men to help the Country People.

L. C. J. What did you mean by that?

Mr. Leigh. That was to get Men for this Business.

L. C. J. What did he say the Intention was of raising these Men?

Mr. Leigh. Mr. Rouse hath frequently and often acquainted me, that the King had taken an Oath in France and Spain to bring in Popery and Arbitrary Power in so many Years, and that he had not done it, made the Popish Party angry, but that he would do it.

L. C. J. Well, what Design was there in raising of Men, and seizing the Tower?

Mr. Leigh. He told me all things must be done together. The King and the Duke must be seized, for that was the principal Work.

Rouse. It never enter'd into my Heart. Be pleas'd to ask him if he was not arrested by one Keeling, and what was the Account of it?

Mr. Leigh. No.

Rouse. I mean sworn against.

Mr. Leigh. I will give your Lordship an Account of it. Mr. Goodenough, Mr. Rouse, Mr. Pachin, and I, had been at the King's-head Tavern; a Man came and told me, a Man had been at my House, and that one swore against me, and it would be dangerous to go home. A while after comes one Armiger, and he told me, Mr. Bateman was gone one Way, and he another, to seek for me, and desir'd me to have a Care of myself. With that Mr. Rouse, Mr. Goodenough, and Mr. Pachin, came out to me. Mr. Rouse directed me to go to the Sun Tavern at Moorgate, and I went; Mr. Rouse, Mr. Goodenough, and Mr. Pachin came to me. I told them I would meet my Wife, but they would not let me go on by any means, but sent one Mr. Thomas, a Coffee-man, for my Wife. She came and told me, Mr. Goodenough had sworn against several People, or he was sworn against. I went to Mr. Rouse's House, where Mr. Goodenough came to me. Mr. Rouse would have had Mr. Goodenough staid there all Night: Mr. Goodenough sent for his Wife, to know if his Brother had sworn; she acquainted him, he had not sworn: Mr. Rouse invited him to lie with me. He shew'd me, behind the Bed, a Window to go into another Man's Room, to make my Escape, if any Man should come to search the House. I lay there on Saturday. Mr. Goodenough and Mr. Nelthrop came to me; Mr. Goodenough told me, he had lain at Mr. Nelthrop's all Night, but he had seen his Brother, and he had not sworn against me: I heard that Mr. Keeling had sworn against me, and did say, in Discourse, if I did light of Keeling, I would kill him.

Rouse. I desire to ask him another Question: When he was told he was sworn against, what did he say?

L. C. J. He tells you before-hand, that he said he would kill Keeling, if he could meet him.

Rouse. He says Mr. Goodenough and Nelthrop came to my House; ask him if I was in the House, or saw Mr. Goodenough?

Mr. Leigh. I am not positive whether he saw them together, but that he saw Mr. Goodenough there the Friday Night, for he invited him to lie with me.

L. C. J. Pray, what was your Reason in putting Mate Lee upon the inquiring out Men to make Masters of Ships?

Rouse. To satisfy the Gentleman, because he told me, there was such a Design in hand, to get to the Bottom of that Design, that so his Majesty might come to no Damage. Pray, my Lord, How could I acquaint the King, or any Justice of Peace, what he meant by it, unless I understood it?

L. C. J. Have you any thing more to ask? Or would you have any Witnesses called?

Rouse. My Lord, 'tis my Unhappiness I have no Witnesses.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. He hath confessed the Treason enough.

L. C. J. Look you, Gentlemen of the Jury. You hear that this Person at the Bar is indicted for High Treason, in conspiring the King's Death, and declaring this by Overt-acts, that is, endeavouring to raise Men here for to seize the Tower, and to make an Insurrection here, and a Rebellion within the Kingdom: You hear two positive Witnesses of what they have heard from him: He did endeavour, says Lee, to bring him into it, and he told him the whole Design, he did declare to him the Manner how they intended to seize the King, and the Duke of York: Mr. Goodenough was one of the Persons that confederated with him, one of them, but several others they had. They had covert Terms to disguise this, by getting the Country People in their Harvest. He told them of a Design he had to get the Seamen, a Thousand of them together, to seize the Tower and Whitehall, both at a Time. And you hear that Mate Lee had the same Discourse in Substance with him, of endeavouring to seize the Tower, and get Arms for to seize the King's Ships, to raise a thousand Persons for the effecting of this. All these things you have heard proved against him; he gives no Answer to any of them, but only tells you, that in Truth he did not say these Things to them; but they, that is the first, Lee, said these Things to him. He hath no Evidence at all of it. You hear likewise (which does agree with this Case) the Testimony by the other Person concerning his Discourse in Eighty-one: How he said, The King had forfeited his Crown, and had no Right to it; but the Parliament gave him his Authority, and might take it away. All these Discourses they favour of a wicked Spirit as can be in the whole World. I must leave it to you, whether you believe him guilty.

The Jury presently gave their Verdict that he was guilty.

CXXI. The Trial of WILLIAM BLAGUE, at the Old Bailey, for High Treason, July 13, 1683. 35 Car. II.

WILLIAM BLAGUE having been arraigned on Thursday, July 12. pleaded Not guilty, and put himself upon his Country, was brought to the Bar again, Friday July 13. He made no Challenges, and the former Jury was sworn.

JURORS.

Robert Beddingfield,	John Short, Sen.	Henry Robbins,
John Pelling,	Thomas Nicholas,	Henry Kempe,
William Windbury,	Richard Hoare,	Edward Raddish,
Theophilus Man,	Thomas Barnes,	Edward Kempe.

Clerk. Gentlemen of the Jury, look upon the Prisoner, and hearken to his Charge. He stands indicted by the Name of William Blague, late of London, Gent. that he, together with John Rouse, &c.

Mr. North. Gentlemen, you that are sworn; the Prisoner at the Bar is charged with compassing the Death of the King, and conspiring to raise War and Rebellion, to destroy the Government, and take Possession of it; that he did conspire with on Rouse, and several others not yet known, to bring these Things to pass, and being join'd together, to seize the Tower, and to provide several Arms: To this he hath pleaded Not guilty, &c.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. My Lord, and you Gentlemen of the Jury, we shall not need to trouble you much with the Prisoner at the Bar, for this Prisoner, with him that went before, were to undertake that Part of this horrid Conspiracy relating to the seizing the Tower, because the same Witnesses that were against the former, are against the Prisoner at the Bar. We shall not need to trouble you with the History, we will cause our Witnesses to prove it.—Do you hear, Leigh? You must tell my Lord and the Jury what the Prisoner at the Bar was concerned in.

L. C. J. What do you know of any treasonable Practices of his?

Mr. Leigh. I will acquaint your Lordship, and the Gentlemen of the Jury, that Capt. Blague and Mr. Rouse were frequently at the Tavern. I presume many times they came in about Business, and sometimes there were Discourses to carry on this Conspiracy. Mr. Rouse told me, he had acquainted Capt. Blague with it, about getting ten Sea Captains; Captain Blague told him, they had better engage one or two Ships to shoot Mortar-pieces into the Tower, which would presently destroy it; and discoursing with Captain Blague about the Affair, he told me he would be ready in a Fortnight or three Weeks.

Capt. Blague. My Lord, Will you please to ask what Time that was?

L. C. J. You shall have any Question asked by-and-by.

Capt. Blague. Very well.

Mr. Leigh. Capt. Blague told me, he would be ready in a Fortnight or something more, and he had an Intention to lay in about fourteen Guns in his own Ship that he had bought, he would have twenty-four in it, and lay it on Southwark Side, against the Tower. He would venture his Ship, but they must see they were provided with Money for the Seamen. I acquainted Mr. Goodenough with this, and Mr. Goodenough desired to speak with Capt. Blague; I told Capt. Blague of it, and we took Coach at Stocks-market, and went to the King's-head in Chancery-Lane, where we met with Mr. Richard Goodenough, and Mr. Francis Goodenough. Capt. Blague asked, what Money they had provided; they said, about 40,000*l.* says Capt. Blague, the Seamen will swallow that up immediately.

L. C. J. What did Capt. Blague say?

Mr. Leigh. Mr. Goodenough and Capt. Blague discours'd about the Matter at the King's-head Tavern at Chancery-Lane End, and the Discourse about the Matter was, how to seize the Tower; he then told them again, the only Way was to do it with Mortar-pieces, that he would venture his own Ship, and provide two hundred Men.

L. C. J. What did he say about Money?

Mr. Leigh. He asked what Money was provided, he said, there was about 40,000*l.* then he said, that would be easily swallowed. Mr. Goodenough said, that there would be more provided at any time. Captain Blague and Mr. Goodenough, both of them, drank a Glass or two of Wine together, and so at that time we parted. I met with Captain Blague again, and he bid me, for God's sake, don't discourse before my Mate such a one, but my Mate Lee is a very honest Fellow: Said he, I will undertake, once in twenty times, to dismount them six Guns that face towards Surry Side, which I understood to be about Traitor's-Bridge, he would undertake to dismount them. What Discourse Captain Blague and Mr. Goodenough had apart I can't tell, but Mr. Goodenough told me, he would get some other Captains to engage in that Affair. That Business was left to him and I, and I was desired to be frequently with Captain Blague, for the managing this Affair of the Tower; and, says he, I have had a Commission, tho' not in England, by Land as well as by Sea.

L. C. J. Will you ask him any thing, Sir? Now he shall be asked any thing that you will propose. First, you do propose to him, about what Time this Meeting was. What say you to that?

Mr. Leigh. If it please your Lordship, I believe it was towards the latter End of May, or the Beginning of June.

Capt. Blague. If you please, my Lord, I will give you a Journal or Narrative of all my Proceedings.

L. C. J. Will you ask him any more than that?

Capt. Blague. No, my Lord.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. We will call Mate Lee. This Mate Lee was the Man that might not be trusted.—Mate Lee, Tell my Lord, and the Gentlemen of the Jury, what Discourse you have had with the Prisoner at the Bar, Captain Blague, about seizing the Tower.

Mate Lee. I shall, Sir. The first Discourse that ever I understood, was one Time he and I was riding in a Coach, says Capt. Blague, One of these Days we shall have a Ball to toss. I did not know the Meaning of this Ball, till afterwards Mr. Rouse, and Mr. Leigh and I came together, and he told me of tossing a Ball upon Black-beath. Then I began to understand it. And after this, I can't tell whether it was before that Captain Blague and I walked before the Tower, and discoursing of this, my Way was to scale the Tower, and take it that way; says Captain Blague, the best Way is to shoot Mortar-pieces on Southwark Side; this was all the Discourse.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Can you say any thing about the Ship?

Mate Lee. Nothing about the Ship, but about Mortar-pieces on Southwark Side.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. What Time was that?

Mate Lee. I cannot be positive, about six Weeks ago, or less.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. The first Time was in the Coach?

Mate Lee. That was about the Ball, I did not understand it, only tossing up a Ball; I did not understand the Meaning of it, till afterwards Mr. Rouse and Mr. Leigh and I came together.

L. C. J. How came you to discourse with him concerning the best Way of taking the Tower?

Mate Lee. Mr. Rouse and Mr. Leigh and I, and Captain Blague had been together. We discours'd about taking the Tower. And we had this Discourse among ourselves, which was the best Way to take the Tower? My Approbation was Scaling-ladders, and Hand-granadoes, that was the best Way; Captain Blague's Way was with Mortar-pieces on Southwark Side.

L. C. J. To what Intent was this Discourse, had you had any former Discourse with any Persons?

Mate Lee. Not at all, if it please your Lordship. The first Discourse I had was with Mr. Rouse and Mr. Leigh.

L. C. J. And was that about taking the Tower?

Mate Lee. To surprise the Tower, and Mr. Leigh and Mr. Rouse and I went down to view the Tower.

L. C. J. Then afterwards Captain Blague came in about the Way to take it?

Mate Lee. This Discourse with Captain Blague, about the Tower, was between him and I. I don't remember it in any other Company.

L. C. J. What was your Business with Captain Blague?

Mate Lee. My Business was with Capt. Blague, to be his Mate, and I was conversant with him at the Exchange, the Coffee-house, and the King's-head Tavern. And we had Discourse about these Things.

L. C. J. Come, Captain Blague, would you have him asked any Question?

Capt. Blague. My Lord, otherwise I had gone to Sea soon after I came home; but so it was, that I had an Occasion for Pennsylvania and New-York, and coming one Day to the Exchange, I met Mr. Rouse, whom I had not seen in sixteen or seventeen Years before, for Mr. Rouse made a Voyage to Virginia with me about twenty Years ago. Now, my Lord, meeting with Mr. Rouse, I had an Occasion then to take up two or three hundred Pounds, and knowing Mr. Rouse was a Broker, I did employ him to procure it me, but he did not; however, daily I came to him to dispatch that Affair; and Mr. Rouse being a Man for a Tavern, I went to the King's-head Tavern, and the Sun Tavern, if he was not at one Place I found him at another, in order to perfect this Business. So, my Lord, when I came into his Company, several People used to be with him that I never saw in my Life, and Mr. Rouse would say, Sit down a little, and I will go with you presently; so I would sit down, and drink a Glass of Wine, and go to the Places where the Affair was to be managed; after I had done thus several Days, and to no Purpose, I did it myself. Now, my Lord, Mr. Rouse in that Time brought me acquainted with Goodenough, because Goodenough was in his Company, and Mr. Leigh, not that I ever saw Mr. Goodenough in my Life before, and not as Mr. Leigh says, that I ever was with him at the Dragon.

Mr. Leigh. The King's Head Tavern in Chancery-Lane.

Capt. Blague. I was just coming home when Mr. Leigh was going to meet with Mr. Goodenough, and I went in there, and took a Glass of Wine, and bid him farewell, and so went home. When I was with Mr. Rouse, I was asking, what People they were that were in his Company, he said, very honest Men, drank a Glass of Wine and went away, and still I found them together. I was saying to this Mr. Leigh here, if you will go along with me, you shall give me as much for your Passage as any of the rest of the Passengers do. Now, at this Time, my Ship was not in my Possession; this very Day three Weeks I had it in my Possession, and now at this very Day she is in the Carpenter's Hands, who is here now, I suppose.

L. C. J. Well, go on.

Capt. Blague. Now, Sir, whereas Mr. Leigh reports, that I discours'd with Mr. Goodenough concerning any publick Affairs, or any thing tending to the Disturbance of the Peace, then am I not a Christian. Besides, Sir, I did not speak twenty Words, or ten Words at the Time, but Your Servant, Sir, or Here's to you, in a Glass of Wine; and this I do speak in the Presence of God Almighty. And when I came into a Room, I never staid longer than Mr. Rouse, for my Business was with him, and so went about my own Affairs. As for Mr. Goodenough, I believe, I was three times in his Company before I could remember his Name; I would ask Rouse several times, What do you call that Man? But in reference to the Tower, that Mr. Leigh speaks of, that must be touched at. I do remember very well, I shall by no means palliate it, if I were presently to die; coming up from the Ship, we were coming by Water, indeed I should have had Possession of the Ship a Fortnight before, if they had done me Justice; I had two or three hundred Pounds for them before, but coming from the Ship, we were coming up by Water by the Tower. I don't know how it was, I spake it to the Waterman, This Place is not well fortified, and if any Occasion should happen, this Place lies in more Peril and Jeopardy than any Place of the Tower, and so it does. It is an easy Matter for any to give their Sentiments whether they be accepted.

accepted of or no. This is the very Thing I said, and then they were talking of a French War, and the like. Then I said, You silly Fools, if they should take it, it is but going over a t'other Side, and throwing half a dozen Bombo's to them, and set them out again. But, however, Mate Lee, if he remember, I told him the same Thing at that same Time; and I told Mr. Leigh, it was a Pity, a thousand times, that Place was not better fortified. But as to what Mr. Leigh says, to have two hundred Men in a poor Pink, I have refused several in that very Ship, because I could not stow an hundred Men, Women and Children, and that I should press two hundred Men in that Ship, that will not hold. And besides, it is a Pink, let any one look upon her, and see whether that Ship be fit or no to take in two hundred Men. But whereas they say I had Arms, and such Things, I bought the Ship and Arms together, I had four Blunderbusses, two Javelins, and Half-pikes, that is all.

L. C. J. You forget to answer several things; you had Discourse about a Bank of Money.

Capt. Blague. A Bank of Money, my Lord, I never discours'd of. And as to the Ball that my Mate speaks of, my Lord, I know no more what it means to this very Day, than one that never saw a Ball.

L. C. J. Look you, Sir, you were with Mr. Leigh, this Mr. Leigh has sworn; he says, you told him, that you would undertake to get two hundred Men, and you had bought fourteen Pieces of Ordnance already, and that you would within a Fortnight's Time, do you remember, bring your Ship to Southwark, and be ready to beat down that Part of the Tower.

Capt. Blague. My Lord, I have told you already, the Ship was not mine to bring till this Day three Weeks.

L. C. J. That was within Compass, for they tell you this Discourse was about a Month ago.

Capt. Blague. It was in May, my Lord, they talk of.

L. C. J. No, they speak of about a Month ago, you were to have them in a Fortnight's Time—What says the first Leigh, what Time does he speak of?

Mr. Leigh. If it please your Lordship, he said, his Ship would be ready in a Fortnight's Time, or thereabouts.

L. C. J. How long was that ago?

Mr. Leigh. About a Month or five Weeks.

L. C. J. To what Purpose did you meet Mr. Goodenough so often, to discourse about this Matter of the Tower?

Capt. Blague. My Lord, I never met with him at all, but when I came to Mr. Rouse about this Business of the two hundred Pounds.

L. C. J. Mr. Leigh, what say you concerning his Inquiry for Money?

Mr. Leigh. If it please your Lordship, Mr. Goodenough and the Captain met at the King's-head Tavern, they met several times apart, out of Company, and discours'd of the Business apart. Mr. Goodenough asked me for the Captain many times; I told him what the Captain said to me. Mr. Goodenough took the Captain out, and discours'd him about this Affair. Mr. Goodenough hath told me several times, the Captain would be very serviceable. The Captain asked, what Money there was; I told him about 40,000*l.* and he said, that would be quickly gone. I enquired of Mr. Goodenough again, and Mr. Goodenough told me, there was more Money in Holland.

L. C. J. What Money was he to have?

Mr. Leigh. Two hundred Men—The Captain says, I named him before the King and Council to be at a Meeting at the Green-Dragon Tavern. It is true, I did acquaint the King and Council, that Mr. Rouse had Business at the Green-Dragon Tavern. But this was at the Time of my absconding, I could not tell where to meet him again.

L. C. J. What Guns did he say he had provided?

Mr. Leigh. If it please your Lordship, he said, he had fourteen Guns in the Ship, and would make them up twenty-four: He would undertake in twenty Shot, to dismount them Guns.

L. C. J. Where was this Discourse you had with him about this two hundred Pounds?

Mr. Leigh. If it please your Lordship, it was at several times, one was with Mr. Goodenough at the King's-head at the Corner of Chancery-Lane.

L. C. J. Look you, Sir, by the Oath you have taken, did he undertake to raise Men, and to assist with his Ship in taking the Tower?

Mr. Leigh. If it please your Lordship, he told me he would so do it. He told me, he would have twenty-four Guns.

Jury. Did the Captain tell you so?

Mr. Leigh. Captain Blague that is here.

Capt. Blague. My Lord, in reference to the two hundred Men, this is the Thing that I would answer, I could not stow one hundred Men, Women and Children.

L. C. J. Two hundred Men, he says, for this Service.

Capt. Blague. Yes, my Lord, I mean so. Who can you have to say so besides yourself?

Mr. Leigh. If it please your Lordship, this Discourse was only with Mr. Rouse, Mr. Goodenough, Capt. Blague and I.

Capt. Blague. My Lord, Mr. Leigh said before the King and Council, that he was never along with me but once, and of what I said then, he could tell only he was there when I went to look for Mr. Rouse. How can these nly Expressions go together?

Mr. Leigh. My Lord, as to that before the King and Council, I did say, I was not apart with Capt. Blague and Mr. Goodenough, at the King's-head Tavern, but Capt. Blague and Mr. Goodenough were there several times, and they were apart by themselves; and that I had Discourse with Capt. Blague and Mr. Goodenough, and came with them once to the King's-head Tavern.

L. C. J. What did Captain Blague tell you of what Discourse he had with Mr. Goodenough?

Mr. Leigh. Capt. Blague did tell me, that we must have a great Care, or else we should be all ruined, and that his Ship should be ready, and always encouraged me. And, says he, when I have done the Business, I have been a Captain ashore in another Country, I have been in Commission in another Country ashore, and can tell how to manage Men ashore as well as aboard. Another Thing was, after all this, some time, when I understood I was sworn against, I was indeed, the Captain says right, to have gone with him a Passenger, and was with him several times, I gave him a Report how the Tower might be taken by Ladders and Granadoes, and he told me, that Nelbrop's Brother came to see him, and did inform me, that neither Mr. Goodenough nor his Brother was taken, and that the Duke of Monmouth was in the Country, and quickly would come.

L. C. J. Who told you this?—Mr. Leigh. Captain Blague.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. This is a pretty Matter to smirk at, Captain.

Capt. Blague. I will assure you, Sir, there is no Truth in it.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Would you smile the Witnesses out of their Oaths?

L. C. J. Look you, Mate Lee, What say you to this? In your Judgment and your Thoughts, was the Discourse concerning taking the Tower in a jesting way?

Mate Lee. No, an't shall please your Lordship, I was in earnest in discoursing of it; my Way was, as I told your Lordship before, Scaling-ladders and Hand-granadoes.

L. C. J. Had you any Talk before of surprizing the Tower?

Mate Lee. No, my Lord, by nobody but Mr. Rouse and Leigh.

L. C. J. What had they spoken to you concerning surprizing the Tower?

Mate Lee. Mr. Rouse spoke to me of getting some Seamen, that might be fit to make Masters of Ships; and I asked him, what he would do with those Seamen to make Commanders of Ships? He said, to put them aboard the King's Men of War, and make Guard-Ships of them: I said, what can you do with them to make Guard-ships, when there is neither Powder, Shot, nor Ammunition? But, said I, if you can take the Tower, you may do well enough: So that our Discourse was about taking the Tower.

L. C. J. Was Capt. Blague with you then?

Mate Lee. What Discourse we had about taking the Tower was between ourselves.

L. C. J. How came you to discourse concerning this?

Mate Lee. This was our common Discourse. I suppose the Instigation might be by Mr. Rouse. I was acquainted with Mr. Rouse, by going with Captain Blague; this was my first Discourse with Mr. Rouse and Mr. Leigh together.

L. C. J. Who was with you when you discours'd it first?

Mate Lee. There was only Mr. Rouse and Mr. Leigh; I can be positive that Captain Blague was not: But this Captain Blague did say, when I gave my way of taking the Tower by Scaling-ladders, and Hand-granadoes; No, says Captain Blague, it is a better Way to have Mortar-pieces over the Water, and shoot into the Tower.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Hark you, Friend, did Leigh or Rouse tell you, that Blague was made privy to it?

Mate Lee. I understood nothing of it, but what we discours'd together; for I was acquainted with none of the Cabal, but Mr. Rouse and Mr. Leigh.

L. C. J. What did you discourse about?

Mate Lee. About taking the Tower. I won't mince it, I am upon my Oath.

L. C. J. Therefore we would have the Truth out of you.

Mate Lee. I did gather from Mr. Rouse and Mr. Leigh, that the Intention was to take the Tower.

L. C. J. Give some Account how you and Blague came to discourse of such a thing as this is, and in order to what Design.

Mate Lee. The Design was to take the Tower.

L. C. J. Did Blague and you discourse it to this Purpose?

Mate Lee. Captain Blague and I discours'd it to that Purpose of taking the Tower.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did you discourse of it as a thing that might be done, or that was intended to be done?

Mate Lee. We did discourse of it as a thing that might be done, or was intended to be done.

L. C. J. Now Captain Blague, if you have any thing to ask him, you may.

Capt. Blague. Ask him, whether there were any Projections or Provisions made for the taking of it; and whether or no there was any Resolution taken that the Tower should be taken.

Mate Lee. An't shall please your Lordship, the King's Majesty asked me, when I said what Captain Blague said, about taking the Tower with Mortar-pieces; If it please your Majesty, said I, I don't know whether there was any such thing discours'd, that I did not hear.

L. C. J. Well, was there any thing provided or designed in order to it?

Mate Lee. An't please your Lordship, there was nothing of Men or Guns provided, that I did know or hear of.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. How many times did you talk with Captain Blague about this?

Mate Lee. Several times.

L. C. J. Had you any Order from any other Persons for to discourse Captain Blague in order to this?

Mate Lee. No, an't shall please your Lordship, to the best of my Knowledge I had no Order; for they were commonly together, Captain Blague, Mr. Rouse, and Mr. Leigh, and I came to them when I had Business with Captain Blague.

L. C. J. Did you ever discourse this thing with Captain Blague before them?

Mate Lee. I cannot be positive in that.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did those other Persons, that you said you discours'd with, engage you?

Mate Lee. Mr. Rouse, and Mr. Leigh, and I went out to view the Tower, how it might be taken.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did they engage you?

Mate Lee. Yes, they did engage me.

Jury. My Lord, we desire to have the Witness asked, Whether the Captain knew he went to view the Tower?

L. C. J. Had he any Intimation you went to view the Tower?

Mate Lee. My Lord, I can't be positive in that: Some time after we met the Captain, and did tell the Captain, we had view'd the Tower; but I don't remember what Observations we made.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. Nor what he said to you?

Mate Lee. No, nor what he said to me upon it.

L. C. J. Look you, Mr. Lee, Mate Lee, the Captain told you of this Ball that was to be thrown upon Blackheath: How long ago was it?

Mate Lee. An't please your Lordship, I cannot be positive, it was five or six Weeks ago, I think it was the last time I rid along with him to the King's-head Tavern. I went to Chancery-Lane, and you gave me Coach-hire for nothing, and then you spoke of tossing up the Ball.

L. C. J. What was it he said?

Mate

Mate Lee. This was all. I did not know his Meaning, neither did he express his Meaning. He was saying, to the best of my Remembrance, We shall see a Ball tofs'd up. I don't remember he said upon Blackbeath; the Confirmation of it was by Mr. Rouse and Mr. Leigh; then I came to understand what the Ball did mean.

Sir James Butler. With his Lordship's Leave, did you speak first to the Captain about the Tower, or did he speak to you? Was it your Motion to him, or his to you?

Mate Lee. I don't know but it might be my Motion to him.

Sir James Butler. Then, my Lord, give me Leave to ask another. How were these Mortar-pieces to be brought up, to be planted on Southwark Side, to play upon the Wall of the Tower?

Mr. Serj. Jeff. That was t'other Man, Sir James.

L. C. J. Is there any thing more that you would have asked of any of these Witnesses? or have you any Witnesses of your own?

Capt. Blague. My Lord, the Witnesses that I have, in reference to the Number of Men, are here. I desire, my Lord, you will be pleased to order them to come in, to know upon what Account I shipped them.

Jury. My Lord, pray let us ask t'other Leigh one Question.

L. C. J. The first Leigh.

Jury. We desire to know, whether he heard any thing of the Ball, or tossing it?

L. C. J. He hath told you a long Story of it.

Mr. Leigh. The Story of Blackbeath I acquainted you with it, about Mr. Rouse. There was a golden Ball to be play'd upon Blackbeath, a thousand Sea-men to be at the playing of this Ball, ten Sea Captains to manage these thousand Sea-men, and after the Play was over, every Captain to take his Division apart, and treat them with Punch, and after that was done, to tell them they had other Work to do, and to have Long-boats and Arms ready, to go and seize the Tower.

Jury. Did Captain Blague acquaint you with this?

Mr. Leigh. Mr. Rouse told me, Captain Blague was acquainted with it; I never discoursed with Captain Blague about it. Captain Blague told me, the best way was to set a Ship on t'other Side, and shoot Mortar-pieces into the Tower.

L. C. J. What would you have Mr. Wright asked?

Capt. Blague. My Lord, please to ask him upon what Account he was shipped.

L. C. J. Was you shipped upon the Captain's Ship, and upon what Account?

Mr. Wright. An't shall please your Honour, I was shipped upon him almost four Months and three Weeks ago.

L. C. J. Upon what Account?

Mr. Wright. I was shipped upon him upon the Account of New York, England and Holland.

L. C. J. Well, what Use do you make of this Evidence?

Capt. Blague. Only, my Lord, if you please to ask the rest, whether I have shipped any more men, or spoke with any more than these are?

Mr. Wright. An't like your Honour, I have waited upon the Captain ever since I have been shipped: I have waited upon him in London, at the Coffee-house, about Business: Since I have belonged to him, I was in Pay, altho' we had not a Ship in Possession: Sometimes at the Mayor's Court Office, Mr. Briggs, sometimes with Mr. Rouse, who had something to do for Captain Blague. I kept at the Coffee-house commonly every Day from eight or nine a-Clock in the Morning. Sufficient Persons know me in London. I have kept at the Coffee-house from nine or ten a-Clock in the Morning till four or five in the Afternoon, and so I have satisfied him about what People have inquired after him.

Capt. Blague. Call Robert Chappel.

L. C. J. Captain Blague, What would you have him asked?

Capt. Blague. Carpenter, declare to my Lord how long you have been with me, and upon what Account I shipped you?

Chappel. Four Months and an half.

L. C. J. What besides?

Chappel. We were to go to New-York. I have been shipped four Months and an half to go to New York. We came to the Coffee-house in Birchin-Lane.

L. C. J. Well.

Chappel. We have had the Ship a Month in our Hands next Monday.

L. C. J. Is she fitted?—Chappel. No, she is not fitted.

L. C. J. Was she in a Condition to have done any Service upon the Water?

Capt. Blague. Carpenter, do you hear what my Lord says?

Chappel. The Ship is a small Vessel, about an hundred and fifty Tun, between that and an hundred.

Capt. Blague. My Lord asks you, if she be in a Condition to do Service.

L. C. J. Was she capable to do any Service upon the Water?

Chappel. No Service at all upon the Water she could do three Weeks ago.

Mr. Serj. Jeff. A Ship of one hundred and fifty or two hundred Tun, would hold a great many People; she was to lie still, that was the Mischief.

Chappel. We haled her down to the Carpenter's Yard; she is now in a Condition to work.

L. C. J. Have you any more Men?

Capt. Blague. Doctor, upon what Account were you shipped?

Bellinger. For New York, England and Holland.

Capt. Blague. When were you shipped?—Bellinger. Seven Weeks ago.

L. C. J. When were you to begin your Voyage?

Bellinger. I belonged to the Captain before he had a Ship.

L. C. J. But when did you reckon to begin your Voyage?

Bellinger. That I cannot tell.

Capt. Blague. My Bill upon the Exchange doth specify it, Sir.

Jury. Pray, my Lord, will you ask if he have any Guns aboard, and how many?

L. C. J. What say you? What Guns are there about the Ship?

Bellinger. Fourteen, Sir, and four wooden ones.

L. C. J. What are they?

Bellinger. Six above Deck, four in the Hold.

Capt. Blague. They are Saker Guns.

L. C. J. Saker?

Capt. Blague. Yes, Sir—Richard Clarke, What Voyage had we?

Clarke. New York.

L. C. J. Surely it doth appear, that these Men were shipped a great while ago.

Capt. Blague. Some of them have had a Dependence upon me a great while, one hath depended upon me I believe seven Months.

L. C. J. Have you any thing more to say?

Capt. Blague. No, my Lord.

L. C. J. Look you, Gentlemen, you that are of this Jury; this Gentleman is indicted for conspiring the Death of the King, and doing some Acts in order to it, that is, endeavouring to surprise the Tower, and raising of Men, and preparing of Shipping and Guns, and this on purpose to surprise the Tower. That there was an evil Design, a very wicked notorious Design of seizing the King's Person, and killing the King, that is most certain, you have heard it by a great many Witnesses, and it is a thing, I think, not to be doubted of by any. The Question is, Whether this Man be guilty of it, and hath undertaken any thing in relation to it? Look you, you ought to have in such Cases of High Treason, as you have been told, you ought to have two Witnesses against a Person. Here are two Witnesses produced, one of them does speak very shrewdly to the Case, and tells you, he had it from this Person himself; that he had spoken with Goodenough about this Matter, about surprising the Tower, and that he told him it was an easy thing to surprise the Tower, and that he could do it; that he had a Ship ready, and he would undertake that 200 Men should be ready with Mortar-pieces from Southwark Side, to throw them and beat down the Tower, so that it might have presently been down. First, Mr. Leigh doth say, that the Captain there at the Bar, that he was oftentimes with Mr. Goodenough, and Mr. Rouse, and others, who it is plain were in that Design, both Rouse and Goodenough was, and that he heard Goodenough say, that the Captain had undertaken it; and he says that the Captain had Discourse with Goodenough about it. He says, the Captain asked him, in order to this, what Money could be raised, and he told him there was 40,000*l.* and the Captain told him, that was but a small Matter, the Sea-men would eat up that; and Goodenough told him, there was a greater Bank in Holland, that would be brought over. So that this Evidence goes a great way. But then, Gentlemen, you must consider whether you have another Evidence or not. There is a Person that you call Mate; the Mate doth give a dark kind of an Evidence: He does say here, that he and the Captain had Discourse about the Way of taking the Tower, and he believes it was in order to take the Tower; but he does say, when he heard it, nobody was present but himself, and he was of one Opinion how the Tower might be taken, that is, by Scaling-ladders and Hand-granadoes; and that the Captain was of another Opinion, whether it might be the better taken by Mortar-pieces, thrown from Southwark Side; but whether the Captain had any Notice of this Design of taking it, he cannot tell, or whether he had any Acquaintance concerning it. So that this Evidence does seem to be somewhat dark. Whether this were sportive, or a Trial of their Skill, or whether it was a Design to have Counsel and Advice one of another, which way to take it, I must leave it to you; whether it was done with an Intent and Design, for to find out the best way in order to the taking of it. But if it were only a Discourse at large between them, and Endeavour to try their Judgments one with another, and speaking their Minds one with another in that Case, then this Evidence doth not come home to make him guilty of the Plot of taking the Tower, or taking away the King's Life. He tells you, he did speak of a Ball to be thrown up; but whether he ever heard of the other Design that Leigh speaks of, the first Leigh, Thomas Leigh, of throwing up a Ball by Sea-men, in order to the taking of the Tower, he knows not. Leigh says, the first Witness, he does not know any thing whether this Man at the Bar was ever acquainted with the Ball or not. If upon what you have heard, you believe there are two Witnesses to prove this Gentleman at the Bar guilty of this Design of surprising the Tower, and killing the King, and taking the Tower in order to it in this manner; then you ought to find him guilty: But if you have not two Witnesses, that do testify the thing, then, Gentlemen, under two Witnesses a Man cannot be guilty.

After which the Jury withdrawing to consider of their Verdict, in a short Time returned, and brought him in Not Guilty.

Saturday 14th July, Lord Ruffel was brought to the Bar.

Cl. of Cr. William Ruffel, Esq; hold up thy Hand (which he did). Thou hast been indicted for High Treason against our Sovereign Lord the King, and thereupon hast pleaded Not Guilty, and for thy Trial hast put thyself upon the Country, which Country has found thee guilty. What canst thou say for thyself why Judgment of Death should not pass upon thee according to Law?

L. Ruffel. Mr. Recorder, I should be very glad to hear the Indictment read.—Mr. Att. Gen. You may read it.

Cl. of Cr. Will you have it read in Latin or in English?

L. Ruffel. In English.

The Clerk read to the Words, Of Conspiring the Death of the King.

L. Ruffel. Hold, I thought I had not been charged in the Indictment as it is, of compassing and conspiring the Death of the King.

Mr. Att. Gen. Yes, my Lord.

L. Ruffel. But Mr. Recorder, if all that the Witnesses swore against me be true, I appeal to you and to the Court, I appeal to you, whether I am guilty within the Statute of 25 E. 3. they having sworn a Conspiracy to levy War, but no Intention of killing the King: And therefore I think truly Judgment ought not to pass upon me for Conspiring the Death of the King, of which there was no Proof by any one Witness.

Mr. Att. Gen. That is no Exception.

Mr. Recorder. My Lord, that was an Exception proper (and as I think you did make it) before the Verdict; whether the Evidence does amount to prove the Charge, that is proper to be observed to the Jury; for if the Evidence come short of the Indictment, they can't find it it to be a true Charge : But when the Jury has found it, their Verdict does pass for Truth. We are bound by the Verdict as well as your Lordship, we are to go by what the Jury have found, not their Evidence.

L. Russell. Without any Proof ?

Mr. Recorder. The Jury must be governed by their Evidence.

L. Russell. I think it very hard I must be condemned upon a Point that there was not one thing of it sworn ; and therefore I think I may very legally demand Arrest of Judgment.

Mr. Recorder. I hope your Lordship will consider, 'tis not the Court can give a Verdict, it must be the Jury. I believe there is nobody in the Court does delight in giving such Judgments, especially against your Lordship. The Verdict is found, and the King's Attorney General on Behalf of the King does demand it.

Mr. Att. Gen. I do demand Judgment of the Court against the Prisoner. Proclamation made for Silence, whilst Judgment was given.

Mr. Recorder, My Lord Russell, your Lordship hath been indicted, and tried, and found guilty of High Treason, the greatest of Crimes : Your Quality is great, and your Crime is great : And I hope and expect, that your Behaviour and Preparation in this Condition will be proportionable. My Lord, it is the Duty of the Witnesses to give Evidence according to Truth ; it is the Duty of the Jury to proceed according to Evidence ; and it is the Duty of the Court to give Judgment according to the Verdict. It is the King's Pleasure signified by his Attorney General, to demand Judgment against your Lordship according to this Verdict, and therefore, my Lord, I shall not delay it with any farther Circumlocution. The Judgment the Law hath provided, and is the Duty of the Court to give, is,

That you be carried back again to the Place from whence you came, and from thence be drawn upon an Hurdle to the Place of Execution, where you shall be hang'd up by the Neck, but cut down alive, your Entrails and Privy Members cut off from your Body, and burnt in your Sight, your Head to be severed from your Body, and your Body divided into four Parts, and disposed at the King's Pleasure. And the Lord have Mercy upon your Soul.

Mr. Att. Gen. Set up the other now.

Cl. of Cr. Set Captain Walcot to the Bar, Rouse and Hone.

Which was done, and they bid severally to hold up their Hands, which they did ; and Captain Walcot being asked, What he could say why Judgment of Death should not be passed upon him, said,

Capt. Walcot. I have nothing to say ; only I have one Favour to beg of the Court ; whether it be proper to beg it now or no, I can't tell.

Mr. Recorder. What is it ?

Capt. Walcot. I would beg the Favour, that the Youth my Son might come and see me, and some of my Friends.

Mr. Recorder. Capt. Richardson does not deny it to any Man after he is condemned. That is a Piece of Humanity you need not ask : I never knew it denied.

Then Hone was asked what he could say against Judgment.

Hone. I beg the same Favour.

Mr. Recorder. Ay, ay, God forbid ! You had best ask for some Divine to come to you.

Then Rouse was asked the same Question.

Rouse. I would speak of the Disadvantages I had when I came upon my Trial. When I was put upon my Trial, you know very well, I begged the Favour of some things : One was a Copy of the Indictment, when I saw a Person come before me, who in his own Conscience knew was the Author of all these Things. I have nothing to say against the Judgment or Verdict. I always had a great Veneration for the Constitutions of the Kingdom. I pray God forgive them that came against me. I wish I had no more Weight upon my Legs, than I have in my own Conscience. I prayed a Copy of my Indictment. These Things unexpectedly came upon my Trial, that I had not Opportunity to speak what I should.

Mr. Recorder. We are content to hear you. But observe, you are to answer the Question that is asked, Why Judgment should not pass upon you ? You say you won't speak against the Jury, we must not hear you, nor against the Verdict.

Rouse. I have one Word more, and that is, the vast Difference between the Indictment and their Oaths. The Indictment was, That such and such Words and Discourses passed the second of March. The Oaths sworn were, That the Words were not spoken then, but the last of June, which was three Months Difference ; but however the Jury have pleased to find it. I must throw myself at his Majesty's Feet : I have nothing more to say.

Then Silence was proclaim'd, and Judgment given against Walcot, Hone, and Rouse, in like manner as upon the Lord Russell.

The Execution of Captain WALCOT, JOHN ROUSE, and WILLIAM HONE, on Friday July 20. 1683.

Captain Thomas Walcot being drawn to Tyburn in one Hurdle, John Rouse and William Hone in another, and there put into a Cart, the Reverend Dr. Thomas Cartwright, Dean of Rippon, and one of his Majesty's Chaplains in Ordinary, with Mr. Smith, the Ordinary of Newgate, acquainted Captain Walcot, That this was the last Time he had to spend in the World, and therefore desired him to make a good Use of it, telling him, That as Death leaves him, so Judgment will find him ; and earnestly exhorted him to make an ingenuous Discovery and Confession of what he knew touching the Conspiracy and Treasons, of which he had been found guilty, and received Sentence to die.

To this Capt. Walcot replied, That he had some Papers in his Pocket, of what he had prepared to say, in Writing, because his Memory was bad ; therefore he desired they might be pulled out, and he would read them.

Then Dr. Cartwright and the Ordinary spake to Hone and Rouse to the Effect before-mentioned, earnestly desiring them to confess the Whole of what they knew ; instancing some Places of Scripture to them, as Joshua's Advice to Achan, &c. My Son, confess, and give Glory to God, whom you have dishonoured, &c. telling them, they would have imbrued their Hands in the Blood of a merciful and good Prince, who had often pardoned, and gave many Acts of Oblivion and indemnity to his Subjects ; and whose Reign hath preserved the Purity of the Protestant Religion amongst us : That we cannot enjoy more than we do enjoy : With other good Admonitions for them to make clear Discoveries of the Truth of what they knew.

Captain Walcot, in the mean while, was preparing to read his Speech. Dr. Cartwright ask'd him, if he could discover any more than he had done already ?

Walcot. I've not in the General. I told the King the thing was laid very deep : There was a Gentleman with me last Night. I told him what I told the King, and that was all : I told him, I thought an Act of Indulgence would be very necessary, because he had a great many Men to take Judgment of. I know not the Particulars of the Design ; but the King hath the Lord Howard, Mr. West, and others, that know more than I. I was never in Council with them, nor never with them above four, five, or half a dozen times.

Then looking upon his Paper, he began his Speech as follows :

This great Concourse of People do not only come here to see me die, but also to hear what I shall say ; but because I would not be reproached, and thought to be an Atheist when I am gone, I have two or three Words to speak for my Religion. I do believe in Three Persons, and One God, and I expect and hope to be saved by the Merits and Righteousness of his Son Christ Jesus, without the Hope of an Advantage by any Merits or Righteousness of my own. And I believe, that the Scriptures of the Old and New Testament are the Word of God ; that they were not written according to the Will of Man, but holy Men of God writ them as they were inspired by the Holy Ghost.

I believe that these Scriptures ought to be the Rule of our Faith, and the Method of our worshipping of God : I believe that as Christ is the Head of his Church, so he is their Lawgiver ; that it is not in the Power of any Council or Conclave of Cardinals, or Power upon Earth whatsoever, to set up the Precepts and Traditions of Men, and to make them of equal Validity with the Word of God. I believe it was not because the Jews rejected and crucified Christ, that he rejected them, but because they rejected his Word ; which appears by the Three thousand that God by one Sermon of Peter's converted ; they being pricked in their Hearts, and touched in their Consciences, cried out, Men and Brethren, what shall we do ? And they were that Day added to the Church. It was certainly because the Jews rejected the Word and Gospel of Christ, that the Things were hid from their Eyes which belonged to their Peace. It is a dreadful thing to reject the Word of God ; and it is a dreadful thing to live in a sinful Course of Life, till God withdraws his Spirit from us : For it is said, It shall not always strive with Man. Death is the Wages of Sin. I believe, had not Adam sinned, he and we, his Posterity, had not died. Death is said to be the King of Terrors ; but it is only so to those that are terrified with a terrifying Conscience, that have the Arrows of the Almighty sticking in them, from Convictions of great Guilt, and see no Hopes of Mercy, have no Assurance of Pardon ; but those that are Christ's, he takes away the Terror, and Horror, and Sting of Death ; he enables them to say with Paul, To me to live is Christ, and to die is Gain : He enables not only to get unto Christ, but into Christ, and so they have Communion and Fellowship with the Father and the Son. It is no hard matter to get the Notions of the Promises of the Gospel into our Heads ; but unless the Lord is pleased to apply them to our Hearts, we cannot believe ; except we be in Christ as Branches in the Vine, we are not Christians indeed. It was the Case of poor Francis Spira : He was certainly a knowing Man, but notwithstanding he had not Faith to apply the Promises. Christ hath said, That he that believes in him, tho' he were dead, yet shall he live ; and he that lives and believes in him shall never die. So if we be able to apply the Promises by the Spirit of God, we may have Comfort thro' Faith : But then Faith is the Gift of God, and Faith comes by hearing the Word of God, and receiving it in the Love of God.

I shall not be tedious, Mr. Sheriff ; I shall be very short.

Mr. Sheriff. Take your own Time.

Walcot. As to the present Occasion of my Death, I do neither blame the Judges, nor the Jury, nor the King's Council ; I only blame some Men, that in Reality and in Truth were deeper concern'd, and more engag'd than I, that came in as Witnesses against me, who swore me out of my Life to save their own ; and who, for fear they should not do it effectually, contriv'd that, which I will appeal to you all, whether there be a Probability in it or not ; for they said, that I made it a Scruple of Conscience to have a Hand in killing the King, or to embroil my Hands in his Blood, but was so generous as to undertake the charging his Guards whilst others did it, and to the end another might do it. Truly I will appeal to all that know me, whether they believe me so much an Idiot, that I should not understand it was the same thing to engage the King's Guards, whilst another kill'd him, as to kill him with my own Hands. But, however, by their swearing against me, they have secur'd their own Lives and Estates, and made my Blood the Price of theirs. I confess I was so unfortunate and unhappy, as to be invited by Colonel Rumsey (one of the Witnesses against me) to some Meetings, where some Things were discours'd of, in order to the asserting our Liberties and Properties, which we looked upon to be violated and invaded. But it was he, and Mr. West, and some Gentlemen that are fled, who were the great Promoters of those Meetings. I was near a Quarter of a Year ill of the Gout, and, during that time, Mr. West often visited me, and still his Discourse would be concerning Lopping the two Sparks ; that was the Word he us'd, meaning the King and the Duke ; and propos'd it might be done at a Play. This was his frequent Discourse; for he said, then they would die in their Calling; it was his very Expression. He bought Arms to do it with, without any Direction of mine; I never saw the Arms, nor I never saw the Men that were to do it; though they said they had Fifty employed to that End. I told several of them, that the killing the King would carry such a Blemish and Stain with it, as would descend to Posterity; that I had eight Children, that I was loth should be blemish'd with it; and withal I was confident the Duke of Monmouth would revenge his Father's Blood, if it were but to vindicate himself from having any Hand in it. Mr. West presently told me, that the Duke of Monmouth did not refuse to give an Engagement, that he would not punish those that should kill the King.

And now I desire to forgive all the World from the very Bottom of my Heart; and I pray God of his Mercy from my Heart to forgive them, even Mr. Sheppard, who delivered me up, who promised to carry me into Holland; but instead of that, he brought me into the Condition wherein I now am. I do desire with all my Heart to forgive the Witnesses, and withal, do earnestly beg, that they may be observ'd, that some Remarks may be set upon them, whether their End be Peace, and that they die the common Death of all Men. Certainly, though it be the Law of the Land I ought to die; and the King may justly and reasonably put me to Death for being in those Meetings where a War was debated; yet I think these Men are guilty of my Blood, that were as deep in as I, and have betray'd me, and taken it away. Then in the next Place, I beg Leave, Mr. Sheriff, to speak one short Word of Advice to my Friends, that hath been often given to me, though I was not so fortunate and so happy as to take it; and that is, that they would neither hear any Man speak, nor speak themselves, that which they would not have repeated; for there is no such thing as Faith in Man to Man, whatever there is in Man to God: Either the Tears of a Wife, or a Family of little helpless Children, something or other, will tempt and provoke Men to betray one another. When God hath a Work to do, he will not want Instruments, for he can make them; nor will he want a way to do it, for he can contrive it, and bring it to pass. And I do most heartily desire, and my earnest Prayer to the Almighty is, That this may be the last Blood spilt upon this Account. I know, Acts of Indulgence and Mercy in the King would make him much easier in his Government, and would make his People sit much easier under it; and that the Lord may incline his Heart to Mercy, ought to be the Prayer of every good Man. What hath happen'd, and what hath been the present Occasion of our Calamity, I suppose every Man knows; what Provocations have been on the one Hand, Fears and Necessities, Jealousies and Sufferings of the other, I will not intermeddle with, resolving to use my utmost Endeavour to make that Peace and Reconciliation with my God, which is impossible for me to make with Man; and to make it my hearty Prayer to the great God, before whom I am in a little Time to appear, that he would staunch this Issue of Blood, and find out some other way to preserve these Kingdoms in Unity and Peace, to the Honour and Glory of his great Name, and the eternal Comfort of his People.

One Word, Mr. Sheriff, I desire Leave to speak as to Ireland, because the King press'd it hard upon me, and several People have been with me about Ireland, how far Ireland was concern'd in this Matter. I am very inclinable to believe, could I have charg'd any body there, with being engag'd in the Matter for which I suffer, I might have had my Life; but by the Blessing of God I will charge no Man wrongfully, no not to save my own Life; and these being some of the last Words I am to speak, I do aver here, as in the Presence of God, before whom I am now going to appear, that I do not know an Englishman nor Protestant in Ireland engag'd in it. What I did know, was only of one Scotch Gentleman in the North; and the King knows it, but he says he does not believe it. For they that were concerned, I was never in any of their Councils: I never saw any of those Lords but the Duke of Monmouth, and that was, I believe, above six Months ago. I never saw nor spoke with one Lord, only my Lord Howard. I heard my Lord Howard say, That they did not value Ireland; for it must follow England.

I have no more to say, Mr. Sheriff; but truly you will do an Act of a great deal of Charity if you will prevail with the King for an Act of Indulgence and Liberty to his People: I think so: And so the Lord have Mercy upon me.

Dr. Cartwright. You blame them for that which is their Virtue, and not their Crime; that they have been Witnesses for the King.

Walcot. I was not for contriving the Death of the King, if you'll believe me.

Dr. Cartwright. You blame them for betraying of you in contriving the War, upon which the Death of the King must have follow'd, if your Treason had gone forward, for else you could not have defended yourself from that Justice to which he hath brought you; and therefore for you to lay that as a Crime upon your Witnesses, is indeed very strange.

Walcot. Sir, I think it was but reasonable, that I should suffer that is due from Justice, and reasonable by the Law; but these Men, they did not come in against me, till they did it to save themselves.

Dr. Cartwright. Better late than never: A Man had better save his Soul and Body too, than die, as now you do, for Crimes that ought to make every good Man's Heart relent; and therefore for your blaming them, it was for that which was their Duty to do; they have not committed a Crime in that, but a very meritorious Act.

Walcot. They have reveal'd it with that aggravating Circumstance, which I think no rational Man will be guilty of.

Dr. Cartwright. That Circumstance which you call aggravating, is no Aggravation at all; that is rather a Mitigation of your Crime, to make them believe that you were tenderer of the King's Person, than to shoot him when he was not armed. But you confess you were consulting this Crime.

Walcot. I was not to have a Hand in the King's Death.

Dr. Cartwright. But it was propos'd when you were there.

Walcot. It was so.

Dr. Cartwright. And it was agreed to be done.

Walcot. Truly I do not know how far it was agreed; I was there many Meetings.

Dr. Cartwright. These many Meetings you could not but be sensible of,

Walcot. There were several Meetings, wherein the Business of the King's Life was never spoke of.

Dr. Cartwright. That was agreed in those Meetings; but you had a tenderer Conscience.

Walcot. I say, they were for asserting our Liberties and Properties.

Dr. Cartwright. I would fain have you explain that.

Walcot. Truly, Sir, since you press me to speak, we were under general Apprehensions, and so were those Lords that are likely to suffer, as I have heard; they were under general Apprehensions of Popery and Slavery coming in.

Dr. Cartwright. What Sign was there of it? You had no Persecution at all; you were allowed by Law to meet five in a House, besides those of the Family. It is true, the Conventicles have been disturb'd of late, and I would have you look upon it as a Judgment of God to bring you to this for forsaking the Church of England: You have forsaken Communion with that Church in that Way you were instructed from your Youth.

Walcot. I do not come here to dispute of Religion, but I come here to die religiously, if it please God to enable me.

Dr. Cartwright. I pray God enable you: But I would not have you charge that as a Crime upon the Witnesses, which was their Duty.

Walcot. I can't tell how to excuse my Witnesses for aggravating things against me, and making them worse than really they were.

Dr. Cartwright going to reply.

Walcot. Pray Sir, give me Leave; for a Man to invite a Man to a Meeting, to importune him to this Meeting, to be perpetually soliciting him, and then deliver him up to be hang'd, as they have done me—

Dr. Cartwright. It was a Crime to solicit you to those Meetings; but when you were in, it was a Duty in you and in them to reveal it: If God had given you the Grace to reveal them, the Turn had been theirs, which now is yours. And whereas you say you cannot excuse them, that is uncharitable.

Walcot. I do forgive them, and I desire with all my Heart God would forgive them.

Dr. Cartwright. You confess you were guilty enough to take away your Life?

Walcot. I was so. The same Measure we mete to another, that Measure God will mete to us: Then, Sir, I do leave it to God.

Dr. Cartwright. Then you pray this may be the last Blood spilt upon this Account?—Walcot. I do so.

Dr. Cartwright. Would you not have Traitors brought to their End? You talk of spilling Blood, as if it were innocent Blood now spilt, when you do confess and own the Guilt. But I will give you no further Disturbance, but my Prayers to Almighty God for you, that God would give you Mercy. And then turning to Hone,

Dr. Cartwright. Mr. Hone, give Glory to God, and unburden your Conscience; for you have but a short time to stay here.

Hone. I have nothing further to say, but that I have been guilty of the Crime.

Dr. Cartwright. You are so.

Hone. Yes, I am guilty of this Crime according to the Law of the Land.

Dr. Cartwright. Ay, and according to the Law of God.—Hone. Yes.

Dr. Cartwright. You say, according to the Law of the Land, a Man may be sworn out of his Life by false Witnesses; but you were guilty of conspiring the Death of the King, and raising an Insurrection.

Hone. Truly I must say, as the Captain well minded, I was drawn in. Thou sawest a Thief, and thou consentedst with him: So I say, that I was drawn in: I saw the Thief, and consented; I have looked upon myself since to be the more guilty of Blood, and my Circumstance was to be drawn in, and ensnared; for I never was at any of their Meetings, none of their Cabals, but in a public Coffee-house or Tavern, where they discours'd the Matter of Fact; and I was to meet the King and the Duke of York, but I did not know at that time when, or where, nor what was my Business.

Dr. Cartwright. But you were to assist?

Hone. Yes, I promised that, to assist.

Dr. Cartwright. Do you beg God and the King's Forgiveness for it from the Bottom of your Heart, that you have been guilty of this? For if the Blind lead the Blind, both shall fall into the Ditch; as well he that leads, as he that is led, altho' he that leads may fall deeper. There are Circumstances make one Man's Crime greater than another; the Greatness of theirs does not lessen yours.

Hone. I believ'd that then I was very near another Snare: I was resolv'd to go down into the Country, and not meddle in the Thing at all; and had been in the Country, but meeting with Keeling, (I freely forgive him for whatsoever is done) he call'd me; and discoursing with him, I did say I was for killing the King, and saving the Duke of York.

Dr. Cartwright. Why was you for saving the Duke of York?

Hone. I do not know what to say as to that: There was no Reason.

Dr. Cartwright. What was your own private Reason for killing the King, and saving the Duke of York?

Hone. As to that, I think this: That the Duke of York did openly profess himself to be a Roman Catholic, and I did say, I had rather dispose of the King than the Duke of York.

Dr. Cartwright. Had you rather a Papist should reign over us, as you take him to be, than the King?

Hone. I do not know what to say to that.

Dr. Cartwright. That does deserve a Reason, Mr. Hone; you ought to give some Reason of that; you cannot but have some Reason. If you had a Design to kill the Duke, and save the King, then it might be to prevent Popery; but you say the quite contrary. God in Heaven forgive you for your murderous Design!

Hone. I know as little of this as any poor silly Man in the World; I was fain to gather it; I had it not so downright; I was drawn into it; however, I am now to die: As for the Witnesses, I desire the Lord to forgive them.

Dr. Cartwright. They have not wrong'd you, they have done their Duty.

Dr. Cartwright. Rouse. What say you?

Rouse.

Reply. As a Man, and a Christian, in the first Place, as God hath made me a Christian through his Grace, that the World may understand, that I do not die, as Captain Walcot says, an Atheist; I do here declare, in the Presence of God, and this vast Number of People, what Faith I die in: In that very Faith which was once deliver'd, and in the Belief of that Doctrine which the Church of England makes Profession of, and is agreeable to the Word of God, being founded upon the Doctrine of the Prophets and Apostles, whereof Jesus Christ is the Corner-Stone. There have been very various Opinions concerning me, upon the Account of the various Employments that I have been exercis'd in, both here and beyond Sea: It has been my Lot to fall under such Circumstances, and to fall under such Misrepresentations and Centures, upon the Account of some publick Employments that I have been in for the King, and after I return'd from Flanders, upon the Account of Disbanding; it was almost morally impossible for such a one in my Capacity to stand right in the Affections and Opinions of all People. When I was employ'd in Flanders in the Payment of that Army, I was then between two Rocks; I will leave it to the Judgment of all Sorts of People. You know the Country, I need not particularize, nor reflect upon Opinions, and the like. But I having been bred up in England, and had that Education it pleas'd God to give me, I was not fond of, nor carried off with, that Debauchery in those Times; and sometimes, more than once or twice, it was my Lot, that I was like to have been murder'd for pleading for, and justifying the Actions of the King of England. Since my Return, and being employ'd under Sir Thomas Player, and some others, about disbanding, there it came to my Lot, because I could not humour some Gentlemen, who neither fear'd God, nor honour'd the King, (I will not say so of all; for I know some were very worthy Gentlemen, that scorn'd any of those Actions, which some would attempt. There is one worthy Gentleman I can speak very honourably of) that so they might have their Pockets full of Money, did not value how the Accounts were stated; and at the very same Time I was under many Temptations of Handfuls of Guineas in my Hand to do so and so, to cheat the King; and because I would not do that, I was look'd upon as a Jesuit. I did waive all these Things under those Circumstances. It hath been my Lot likewise, being employ'd by Sir T. P. and the rest of the Commissioners, to fall into those Companies and Places, where my Lord Shaftesbury and others have been; and have had some kind of Discourse, which was not Treason, but rather a thing that I ever abhor'd and declar'd a Detestation of. Since these Hurly-burries, concerning Parliaments going off and coming on, did discontent the People upon one Account or another, I confess I have been a Hearer, and have understood too much of some kind of Meetings, which I pray God forgive them for, and especially those that call themselves Protestants, being ten thousand times worse than any others. That there have been such kind of Designs, and Meetings, and Clubs, I have not been ignorant of; God forgive me that I have not been as careful and as diligent, and as ready and forward, to discover it a great while since! That I ever had a Hand in it, or the least Thought, or Resolution, or Intention, to appear in it; but rather, on the contrary, have declar'd my Opinion against it, both in the Sight of God and Man, as a Breach of the Laws of God, and the Laws of the Land, and contrary to our Duty, who are bound to pray for the King, and all that are in Authority; I do declare, in the Presence of God, I am a perfect Stranger, and I thank God my Conscience is clear. I have acquainted his Majesty in Counsel, and I have had the Honour to be admitted into his Majesty's Presence in private almost half an Hour, on Saturday was seven night, where I was as clear and above-board, and as faithful to his Majesty, as I could be, in a humble manner, according to my Duty; where I offered to have some Time and Place allotted, that I might give him a whole Scheme of the Business; for there were a great many Gentlemen that had a Respect for me. It was their Opinions, that I had a general Knowledge of all the Clubs, and all the Designs, that ever were since the King came in; but they were under a Mistake. I gave his Majesty an Account to the best of my Knowledge; and when I had done, his Majesty seem'd to be pleas'd, and to thank me for it; but before I had Power to put it in Writing, and wait upon his Majesty, the Providence of God did so order it, the Council thought it fit, that I should be committed to Prison, where I was some Days. I have had more Kindness among Heathens and Indians. I pray God to forgive them for it: I had not Liberty to send to my Wife, big with Child, in two Days, where I was.

Sir, I shall not hold you in Suspense, and multiply Words, but what is most proper to this Occasion. What I have given to his Majesty in Counsel, and what I have spoken to his Majesty in private, is nothing but the naked Truth to clear my own Conscience, that I may not go out of the World with any thing upon me: I wish those that call themselves Protestants would discharge their Duty better to God and the King, than either I or the best Subject ever did. I have look'd upon it as an Obligation, ever since I knew what it was to be a Man, to carry myself obedient to those that God has set over me, especially the King, and those that are in Authority; and I have made it my Practice to pray for the King, as for my own Soul. That it has been my Lot to be acquainted with those Vanities of Clubs, and Persons, no rational Man will wonder, considering the Circumstances and Places I was call'd to. There is one particular Gentleman, Mr. Sheriff, I must desire the Favour to clear myself by something that I took Occasion to speak of Yesterday. I did acquaint you, Mr. Sheriff, with what I had spoken to the King, how I was interrupted in the further Discovery of what I had a Mind to say. What was further said Yesterday, it was nothing but the naked Truth: In the first Place, as to what was afterwards discours'd of, as to some particular Persons, namely and particularly Sir Thomas Player, I must do Justice to all the World. That he hath been acquainted with the Lord Shaftesbury none here will wonder; but that he hath been very shy of his Company since he came out of the Tower: For he told me many times he never was in his Company but once; for he did not like some Things, and saw some Designs, that he was afraid were going on; and thereupon Sir Thomas Player was so ingenuous and honest to the King, as to break off. I always look'd upon him as a very loyal Subject, and I must declare in the Presence of God, and all these People, I never heard him speak one dishonourable Word of the King; what he may have had with others, is best known to himself. I have been in several Clubs eating and drinking, where it has been discours'd to accommodate the King's Son, the Duke of Monmouth. That there was a Design to set up the Duke of Monmouth, I will not say, while the King reigns; tho' some extravagant hot-headed Men have taken upon 'em to discourse these Things, but not any worthy Man; I know those that were worthy to be call'd by that Name, have declar'd in my Hearing, that in Opposition to the Duke of York, if the King be seiz'd, they should stand by the Duke of Monmouth. There are others, (I will not give Nick-names to any; you are wise Men, and know what I mean by speaking in the general) that were for a Commonwealth; and some there were, two or three Persons, (I shall be as plain as I can, and I hope you will bear with me, since it came to my Lot to come to the Knowledge of it; some were) for the Duke of Monmouth, some for a Commonwealth, and some, but very few, not worth naming, were for the Duke of Bucks: But that I think fell at last between these two, being the greater Part, as far as I did apprehend by discoursing here and there in the City, which I did very frequently do. But the way of these Gentlemen's discoursing these Things was only one at a time, especially a very industrious Gentleman, that hath made it his Practice a long time, (for it hath been my Lot to be acquainted but two Months, and that too long) which is the Witness that comes against me; and I pray God to forgive him, and I blame him not for discovering me, but for the Words he spake himself, by way of instigating me to enter into a Design against the King; they were his own Words, and not mine. I blame him not for discovering any thing whereby the King may be served. He did tell me several times there were Clubs in London, but I could never get out of him the Places where the Clubs were. Yet I endeavour'd what possibly I could to come to the Bottom of that Design; for my Intent was to make a faithful and true Discovery, that I might not go to Whitehall, or a Justice of Peace, with an idle Story, or a Sham; But at last I got out of him, that Rich. Goodenough was chiefly instrumental: This was a very few Days before Notice was given, that this certain Person, Thomas Leigh the Dyer, was sworn against by one How: I ask'd him the Meaning: He told me, that How was a very Rascal. I asked Leigh, Sir, What Course shall be taken? For, what by the Doctors-Commons of the one Hand, and what by the Persecutions of the other, we must think of a Way how to relieve it. There is some Design in Hand, says Leigh; don't you know? No, said I, I would be glad to hear, there is an Invasion, said he, going on, a Design against the King and the Government; but that was only a Fallacy; but he discover'd afterwards to me, that there was a Resolution, and a certain Number of People about the City and the Nation, to make an Attack upon the Tower of London, upon the City of London, upon Whitehall, and upon St. James's: I said, What do you design then? Have a Care that you don't shed more innocent Blood; for the Land is stained with Blood too much already. No, said he, the Resolution, as Mr. Goodenough saith, is not to spill a Drop of Blood, but only to secure the King's Person, that the Papists do not kill him; and then, saith he, we will deal with the Duke of York as we please. They were his own Words, to the best of my Remembrance. Afterwards this Gentleman was sworn against by one Mr. Keeling in East-Smithfield; saith he, He's a Rogue and a Dog, and I have seen him but once these nine Months, and I had no Discourse, but only drank a Glass of Drink; which proves since to the contrary. Being then in Company at the King's-head Tavern, in Switthins-Alley, near the Exchange, News was brought, he was sworn against; he did not know what to do, but found out a Place near London-Wall, and desired me to go to one or two about the Matter; he knew not how to obscure himself, this House was beset, Messengers after him, and likewise a kind of Judgment or Execution; how to put both Ends together, he knew not. I told him, if he would, I had a Bed; he might go to my House. I never heard a Word from Rich. Goodenough, one way nor another, of any Design against the King and the Government, whom I have known this seven Years; only this Lee told me, his Hand was as deep as any other. It's true, this Gentleman comes and swears against me, that I should be the only Person to engage in taking the Tower of London, Sir John—you know very well in what Capacity I have been, and how very incapable I was in my Person to take the Tower of London. I speak in the Presence of God, before whom I am to appear in a few Minutes, I never had any such Thought, never had any such Desire, never consulted with any Persons of Quality, never discours'd of any Arms in order to it; but only this I was saying. This Fellow being set on, (and I think a more proper Person than any Man in the World) for that he was a little low in the World, he was under a Temptation of being thrown out by an Anabaptistical Church, for some kind of Failings; he was under a Temptation to make himself Somebody; therefore he did close with Mr. Goodenough, and some others; and when the first Proclamation came forth, he himself told me, (I never knew it before) that Rumsey, Capt. Walcot, Nelthrop, and Goodenough, and West, were concerned in this Design; he was the Man told me: And when the second Proclamation came out, then he could tell me of those too; I told him he was a Wretch he had not discover'd it betimes. As to his swearing against me, for which God forgive him, that I had a Hand in taking the Tower of London; the Thing is this: He knew I was intimately acquainted with a certain Captain, one Blague, who was my Servant twenty-one Years ago in Virginia; he hath been a very faithful and honest Servant, I believe, to his Majesty for these fifteen Years, and particularly five Years, in three of his Majesty's Men of War. I know very well the Man is of such a Principle, that he abhors to engage in any wicked Design. But only Leigh discoursing at random about taking the Tower, Captain Blague gave this Answer (for he is a very jocular Man: ) If I were of a Mind to take it, were it for the Service of the King, if there were an Enemy coming in, saith he, I would with six Ships well mann'd, and arm'd with Guns, undertake to take the Tower. Upon what Account he said it, I don't know; but I believe in my Conscience he had no more Design to put such a thing in Practice, than I have to cut my own Throat at present. Captain Blague had heard these Discourses pro and con, saith saith he, two or three hundred Men would do it: It's weak in such a Place; I wonder his Majesty does not make it stronger. Now, when he came to swear, as soon as he was taken up, he took Occasion to swear against me, all the Discourse he used in pressing me to undertake this Design.

Mr. Sheriff Rich. Pray, if you have any thing that was not told in Court, discover it, but you need not go over that which was in Court.

Rouse. Mr. Sheriff, I have nothing at all to say, either to blame the Judges, or the Jury, or the Witnesses themselves, the greatest of all. I thank God, I was not any way to have had any Hand in it: But the very Words themselves, that came out of his Mouth, he makes me the Author of; But I freely forgive him, as I desire God would forgive me: Though he did tell me positively there were five hundred Arms to be brought out of the Country. I heard of such a thing, I confess, here and there; but could never know the Authors of it, nor the Clubs where it was discoursed: It was lately that he told me, Goodenough told him, that the King was to be taken off as he came from Windsor; that there were several things to be done in order to it; that they wanted a Place of Meeting; and some thought of Salisbury-Plain, and some of Black-beath, but the most convenient Place pitch'd upon was Black-beath. They were discoursing how to gather the People together; some were for communicating it privately, others for a Ball. They asked my Thoughts: Said I, The best Way will be, if you throw up a Silver Ball, to get the People together: For my Design was to get what I could out of them. Thereupon he went to Mr. Goodenough, and discours'd him, and told him, That my Opinion was, to throw up a Silver Ball, and declare, All those that will come and drink a Bowl of Punch shall be welcome; and that by this means they would have gathered thirty or forty thousand Men in two or three Days Time, which otherwise would have been a Fortnight a-doing: But for himself, I will not blame him, nor lay any thing to his Charge of which he is not guilty. I must needs give him his Due. I do not remember, that ever he insisted upon shedding of Blood; but that he hath discoursed in very opprobrious Terms, and base Language, of the Duke of York, by calling him Rogue and Dog, and such Things. And that We will do his Work: That is true. And, that after the King's Decease, the Duke of Monmouth, having a Vogue with the People, must of Necessity succeed. I cannot tell what I can say more as to that; that is the chief Thing I have to say, if I have not forgot any Thing.

Mr. Sheriff Rich. Mr. Rouse, you would do well to name those Persons that were with you in that Consultation.

Rouse. There was no Consultation at all, Sir. That I had was from this Thomas Lee's Mouth himself, That there were five hundred Arms to be brought in: That he had it from Richard Goodenough, and Nelthrop, and Mr. West; and that Mr. West particularly knew from whom these Arms were to come; for he gave me a Hint, that Part of the Arms were bought by Mr. West.

Mr. Sheriff Rich. Who propos'd the Way of the Ball?

Rouse. Sir, he was saying, there were several Propositions made in the Club where Goodenough was, and some thought of one Way, and some another; but they could not find out a proper Way. Saith he, What do you think? Said I, If the People meet together, they may throw up a Ball; just in that careless way I said so. So he came to me afterwards, and said, that he had discoursed with Mr. Goodenough, and Mr. Goodenough told him, that there were forty thousand Pounds in Bank, and if such a Ball cost thirty or forty Pounds, it mattered not, to carry on such a Design as that was.

Here Captain Walcot spake.

Capt. Walcot. Sir, I desire you to take Notice of this, among other things, that so far as I ever heard of this Business, it is of no longer a Date than August or September last: I would not have this Consequence of it, so as to stir the Popish Plot.

Mr. Sheriff. Do you know any thing of the Popish Plot, that hath not yet been discovered?

Capt. Walcot. No, Sir.

Hone. I had but the Knowledge in March last of this Business.

Capt. Walcot. I do not know, nor ever heard, that it was older than August or September last.

Mr. Sheriff. Ordinary, do your Office.

Ordinary to Walcot. Have you fully discharged your Conscience?

Capt. Walcot. I have.

But it being said, that Rouse was interrupted.

Mr. Sheriff North. If you have any thing to say, Mr. Rouse, go on, but do not make Repetitions.

Who pull'd his Paper out of his Pocket, and look'd on it.

Rouse. He declar'd further, Mr. Sheriff, that when once the thing came so far, that the Tower and City were taken, and so many Men gathered together, they would quickly increase; and the Method was to go to Whitehall with Swords in their Hands, and to demand Privileges and Liberties, not to take away the King's Life, but only let the Duke of York look to it; for he was resolv'd upon it, that he should not succeed the King. Then he delivers another Paper, being his Petition to the King, and some more Notes in Short-hand.

Ordinary. Have you fully satisfied your Conscience?

Rouse. I have, Sir, a Word or two to speak to the People. I have discharged my Conscience, as to any thing as to what I was acquainted with. It had been happy for me, if I had not heard of it; but that I had a Hand in it, I thank God, I am free.

Dr. C. You had a Hand in the concealing?

Rouse. That I had.

Dr. C. And in maintaining the Correspondency without discovering it, and you do diminish your Crime.

Rouse. No, Sir, I don't desire it. Mr. Sheriff, I do freely acknowledge and confess, that it is just in God in the first Place, and righteous and just in the King, that I die; and that I die justly for concealing it. I would lay no Blame upon the King, nor any other Person in the World. I did not conceal it upon any Account to his Majesty's Prejudice, nor any Man in the Nation; and I hope God will give more Grace to those Persons that do succeed. I beg a Word or two; I had almost forgot, as a Man, and as a Christian, That it is a thing of such evil Consequence, I have found it by bitter Experience now, for such and such publick Places to be visited, especially by those that are Professors of the Protestant Religion, and particularly Coffee-houses, where it is very well known too much Time is spent, and Families, and Wives, and Children, suffer too much. I pray God the People may take Notice of it, and lay it to Heart, that spend their Time so, thinking it is but a Penny and a Penny, and so discourse of State Affairs, as if so be they were God's Counsellors in the Government of the World, running from the Coffee-house to the Tavern, and from the Tavern to the Coffee-house, which hath been the Debauchery of this Age; and so bring them into this Dilemma, to discourse of those Things neither pleasing to God, nor the King, nor themselves, but their Prejudice. The Profanation of the Sabbath-day is commonly discours'd of in this Place. God forgive me for not observing it as I should! I pray God those that follow me may be more careful of their Duty to God and Man, for the Good of themselves, their Souls, and their Families; those that are young especially, and coming up, that they may chiefly mind their Concerns for Eternity, and that they would pay their Duty and Homage to the King, and those that God has set over them; and not neglect that great Command, to pray for the King, and all that are in Authority.

Being ask'd if they had any thing more to say, they said, No. Mr. Ordinary then pray'd with them, and sung a Psalm, and then they desir'd to pray themselves; which was granted.

Having ended their respective Speeches and Prayers, the Executioner did his Office.

The Attainder of Captain Walcot was afterwards in Trin. 7 Will. 3. reversed in the King's-Bench for Error in the Entry of the Judgment. Judgment was, Quod interiora extra ventrem capiantur, & in ignem ponantur, & ibidem comburantur; the Words ipso vivente, or in ejus conspectu, being omitted, which Words were held to be a necessary Part of the Sentence. 2 Salk. 632. 4 Modern Reports, 395.

A Writ of Error was afterwards brought in Parliament upon this Reversal, and the Reversal was affirmed. Show. Cases in Parl. 127--137.

The next Day was appointed for the Execution of Lord Ruffel.

About Nine in the Morning the Sheriffs went to Newgate, to see if my Lord Ruffel was ready; and in a little time his Lordship came out, and went into his Coach, taking his Farewell of his Lady, the Lord Cavendish, and several other of his Friends at Newgate. In the Coach were Dr. Tillotson and Doctor Burnet, who accompanied him to the Scaffold built in Lincoln's-Inn-Fields, which was cover'd all over with Mourning. Being come upon the Scaffold, his Lordship bow'd to the Persons present, and turning to the Sheriff, made this following Speech:

Mr. Sheriff,

I expected the Noise would be such, that I should not be very well heard. I was never fond of much speaking, much less now; therefore I have set down in this Paper all that I think fit to leave behind me. God knows how far I was always from Designs against the King's Person, or of altering the Government. And I still Pray for the Preservation of both, and of the Protestant Religion. Mr. Sheriff, I am told, that Capt. Walcot yesterday said some Things concerning my Knowledge of the Plot: I know not whether the Report is true or not.

Mr. Sheriff. I did not hear him name your Lordship.

Writer. No, my Lord, your Lordship was not nam'd by any of them.

L. Ruffel. I hope it is not; for, to my Knowledge, I never saw him, nor spake with him in my whole Life; and in the Words of a dying Man, I profess I know of no Plot, either against the King's Life, or the Government. But I have now done with this World, and am going to a better: I forgive all the World heartily, and I thank God I die in Charity with all Men; and I wish all sincere Protestants may love one another, and not make way for Popery by their Animosities. I pray God forgive them, and continue the Protestant Religion amongst them, that it may flourish so long as the Sun and Moon endure. I am now more satisfied to die than ever I have been.

Then kneeling down, his Lordship pray'd to himself; after which Dr. Tillotson kneel'd down and pray'd with him; which being done, his Lordship kneel'd down, and pray'd a second time to himself; then pull'd off his Peruke, put on his Cap, took off his Cravat and Coat, and bidding the Executioner, after he had laid down a small Moment, do his Office without a Sign, he gave him some Gold; then embracing Dr. Tillotson and Dr. Burnet, he laid him down with his Neck upon the Block, and it was cut off at two Strokes.

The Executioner held up the Head to the People, as is usual in Cases of Treason, &c. which being done, Mr. Sheriff order'd his Lordship's Friends or Servants to take the Body, and dispose of it as they pleased, being given them by his Majesty's Favour.

The Paper deliver'd to the Sheriff by my Lord Ruffel.

I thank God I find myself so compos'd and prepared for Death, and my Thoughts so fixed on another World, that I hope in God I am now quite wean'd from setting my Heart on this. Yet I cannot forbear spending some time now, in setting down in Writing a fuller Account of my Condition to be left behind me, than I'll venture to say at the Place of Execution, in the Noise and clutter that is like to be there. I bless God heartily for those many Blessings, which he in his infinite Mercy hath bestow'd upon me through the whole Course of my Life; that I was born of worthy good Parents, and had the Advantage of a religious Education, which I have often thank'd God very heartily for, and look'd upon as an invaluable Blessing; for even when I minded it least, it still hung about me, and gave me Checks; and hath now for many Years so influenced and possess'd me, that I feel the happy Effects of it in this my Extremity, in which I have been so wonderfully (I thank God) supported, that neither my Imprisonment, nor the Fear of Death, have been able to discompose me to any Degree; but, on the contrary, I have found the Assurances of the Love and Mercy of God, in and through my blessed Redeemer, in whom only I trust; and I do not question, but that I am going to partake of that Fulness of Joy which is in his Presence; the Hope whereof does so wonderfully delight me, that I reckon this as the happiest Time of my Life, though others may look upon it as the saddest.

I have

I have liv'd, and now die, of the Reform'd Religion, a true and sincere Protestant, and in the Communion of the Church of England, though I could never yet comply with, or rise up to, all the Heights of some People. I wish, with all my Soul, all our unhappy Differences were remov'd, and that all sincere Protestants would so far consider the Danger of Popery, as to lay aside their Heats, and agree against the common Enemy; and that the Churchmen would be less severe, and the Dissenters less scrupulous; for I think Bitterness and Persecution are at all times bad, but much more now.

For Popery, I look on it as an idolatrous and bloody Religion, and therefore thought myself bound, in my Station, to do all I could against it. And by that I foresaw I should procure such great Enemies to myself, and so powerful ones, that I have been now for some time expecting the worst. And, blessed be God, I fall by the Ax, and not by the fiery Trial. Yet, whatever Apprehensions I had of Popery, and of my own severe and heavy Share I was like to have under it, when it should prevail, I never had a Thought of doing any thing against it basely or inhumanly, but what could well consist with the Christian Religion, and the Laws and Liberties of this Kingdom. And, I thank God, I have examined all my Actions in that Matter with so great Care, that I can appeal to God Almighty, who knows my Heart, that I went on sincerely, without being moved, either by Passion, By-end, or ill Design. I have always loved my Country much more than my Life, and never had any Design of changing the Government, which I value, and look upon as one of the best Governments in the World, and would always have been ready to venture my Life for the preserving of it, and would have suffered any Extremity, rather than have consented to any Design to take away the King's Life: Neither ever had Man the Impudence to propose so base and barbarous a thing to me. And I look upon it as a very unhappy and uneasy Part of my present Condition, that in my Indictment there should be so much as Mention of so vile a Fact; tho' nothing in the least was said to prove any such Matter; but the contrary, by the Lord Howard. Neither does any body, I am confident, believe the least of it. So that I need not, I think, say more.

For the King, I do sincerely pray for him, and wish well to him, and to the Nation, that they may be happy in one another; that he may be, indeed, the Defender of the Faith: that the Protestant Religion, and the Peace and Safety of the Kingdom, may be preserved, and flourish under his Government; and that he in his Person may be happy, both here and hereafter.

As for the Share I had in the Prosecution of the Popish Plot, I take God to Witness, that I proceeded in it in the Sincerity of my Heart, being then really convinced (as I am still) that there was a Conspiracy against the King, the Nation, and the Protestant Religion: And I likewise profess, that I never knew any thing, either directly or indirectly, of any Practice with the Witnesses, which I looked upon as so horrid a thing, that I could never have endur'd it. For, I thank God, Falseness and Cruelty were never in my Nature, but always the farthest from it imaginable. I did believe, and do still, that Popery is breaking in upon the Nation; and that those who advance it will stop at nothing, to carry on their Design: I am heartily sorry, that so many Protestants give their helping Hand to it. But I hope God will preserve the Protestant Religion, and this Nation: Though I am afraid it will fall under very great Trials, and very sharp Sufferings. And indeed the Impiety and Profaneness that abounds and appears so scandalously barefaced every-where, gives too just Reason to fear the worst Things which can befall a People. I pray God prevent it, and give those who have shew'd Concern for the publick Good, and who have appear'd hearty for the true Interest of the Nation, and the Protestant Religion, Grace to live so, that they may not cast a Reproach on that which they endeavour to advance; which (God knows) hath often given me many sad Thoughts. And I hope such of my Friends as may think they are touch'd by this, will not take what I say in ill part, but endeavour to amend their Ways, and live suitable to the Rules of the true Reform'd Religion; which is the only thing can administer true Comfort at the latter End, and revive a Man when he comes to die.

As for my present Condition, I bless God, I have no Repining in my Heart at it. I know for my Sins, I have deserved much worse at the Hands of God: So that I cheerfully submit to so small a Punishment, as the being taken off a few Years sooner, and the being made a Spectacle to the World. I do freely forgive all the World, particularly those concerned in taking away my Life: And I desire and conjure my Friends to think of no Revenge, but to submit to the holy Will of God, into whose Hands I resign myself intirely.

But to look back a little; I cannot but give some Touch about the Bill of Exclusion, and shew the Reason of my appearing in that Business; which in short is this: That I thought the Nation was in such Danger of Popery, and that the Expectation of a Popish Successor (as I have said in Parliament) put the King's Life likewise in such Danger, that I saw no way so effectual to secure both as such a Bill. As to the Limitations which were propos'd, if they were sincerely offer'd, and had pass'd into a Law, the Duke then would have been excluded from the Power of a King, and the Government quite alter'd, and little more than the Name of a King left. So I could not see either Sin or Fault in the one, when all People were willing to admit of t'other; but thought it better to have a King with his Prerogative, and the Nation easy and safe under him, than a King without it; which must have bred perpetual Jealousies, and a continual Struggle. All this I say, only to justify myself, and not to inflame others: Tho' I cannot but think my Earnestness in that Matter has had no small Influence in my present Sufferings. But I have now done with this World, and am going to a Kingdom that cannot be mov'd.

And to the conspiring to seize the Guards, which is the Crime for which I am condemned, and which was made a constructive Treason for taking away the King's Life, to bring it within the Statute of Edward III. I shall give this true and clear Account: I never was at Mr. Sheppard's with that Company but once, and there was no undertaking then of securing or seizing the Guards, nor none appointed to view or examine them: Some Discourse there was about the Feasibleness of it; and several times, by Accident, in general Discourse elsewhere, I have heard it mention'd, as a thing might easily be done, but never consented to as fit to be done. And I remember particularly at my Lord Shaftesbury's, there being some general Discourse of this Kind, I immediately flew out, and exclaim'd against it, and ask'd, If the thing succeeded, what must be done next, but massacring the Guards, and killing them in cold Blood? Which I looked upon as so detestable a Thing, and so like a Popish Practice, that I could not but abhor it. And at the same time the Duke of Monmouth took me by the Hand, and told me very kindly; My Lord, I see you and I are of a Temper; did you ever hear so horrid a Thing? and I must needs do him that Justice to declare, that I never observ'd in him but an Abhorrence to all base Things.

As to my going to Mr. Sheppard's, I went with an Intention to taste Sherry; for he had promis'd me to reserve for me the next very good Piece he met with, when I went out of Town; and if he recollects, he may remember I ask'd him about it, and he went and fetch'd a Bottle; but when I tasted it, I said it was hot in the Mouth; and desir'd that whenever he met with a choice Piece, he would keep it for me. Which he promis'd. I enlarge the more upon this, because Sir George Jefferies insinuated to the Jury, as if I had made a Story about going thither; but I never said that was the only Reason; And I will now truly and plainly add the rest.

I was, the Day before this Meeting, come to Town for two or three Days, as I had done once or twice before; having a very near and dear Relation lying in a very languishing and desperate Condition; and the Duke of Monmouth came to me, and told me, he was extremely glad I was come to Town; for my Lord Shaftesbury and some hot Men would undo us all, if great Care be not taken; and therefore for God's sake use your Endeavours with your Friends, to prevent any thing of this Kind. He told me, there would be Company at Mr. Sheppard's that Night, and desir'd me to be at Home in the Evening, and he would call me; which he did: And when I came into the Room, I saw Mr. Rumsey by the Chimney, altho' he swears he came in after; and there were things said by some with much more Heat than Judgment, which I did sufficiently disapprove, and yet for these things I stand condemn'd: But I thank God, my Part was sincere, and well meant. It is, I know, inferred from hence, and was press'd to me, that I was acquainted with these Heats and ill Designs, and did not discover them; but this is but Misprision of Treason at most. So I die innocent of the Crime I stand condemn'd for, and I hope nobody will imagine, that so mean a Thought could enter into me, as to go about to save myself by accusing others; the Part that some have acted lately of that kind has not been such as to invite me to love Life at such a Rate.

As for the Sentence of Death pass'd upon me, I cannot but think it a very hard one; for nothing was sworn against me (whether true or false, I will not now examine) but some Discourses about making some Stirs. And this is not levying War against the King, which is Treason by the Statute of Edward III. and not the consulting and discoursing about it, which was all that was witness'd against me. But, by a strange Fetch, the Design of seizing the Guards was construed a Design of killing the King, and so I was in that cast.

And now I have truly and sincerely told what my Part was in that, which cannot be more than a bare Misprision; and yet I am condemn'd as guilty of a Design of killing the King. I pray God lay not this to the Charge, neither of the King's Council, nor Judges, nor Sheriffs, nor Jury: And for the Witnesses, I pity them, and wish them well. I shall not reckon up the Particulars wherein they did me Wrong; I had rather their own Consciences should do that, to which, and the Mercies of God, I leave them. Only I still aver, that what I said of my not hearing Colonel Rumsey deliver his Message from my Lord Shaftesbury, was true; for I always detect'd Lying, tho' never so much to my Advantage. And I hope none will be so unjust and uncharitable, as to think I would venture on it in these my last Words, for which I am so soon to give an Account to the Great God, the Searcher of Hearts, and Judge of all Things.

From the time of chusing Sheriffs I concluded the Heat in that Matter would produce something of this kind; and I am not much surpris'd to find it fall upon me. And I wish what is done to me may put a Stop, and satiate some People's Revenge, and that no more innocent Blood may be shed; for I must and do still look upon mine as such, since I know I was guilty of no Treason; and therefore I would not betray my Innocence by Flight, of which I do not (I thank God) yet repent, (though much press'd to it) how fatal soever it may have seem'd to have proved to me; for I look upon my Death in this manner (I thank God) with other Eyes than the World does. I know I said but little at the Trial, and I suppose it looks more like Innocence than Guilt. I was also advis'd not to confess Matter of Fact plainly, since that must certainly have brought me within the Guilt of Misprision. And being thus restrain'd from dealing frankly and openly, I chose rather to say little, than to depart from Ingenuity, that by the Grace of God I had carried along with me in the former Parts of my Life; and so could easier be silent, and leave the whole Matter to the Conscience of the Jury, than to make the last and solemnest Part of my Life so different from the Course of it, as the using little Tricks and Evasions must have been. Nor did I ever pretend to a great Readiness in speaking: I wish those Gentlemen of the Law who have it, would make more Conscience in the Use of it, and not run Men down by Strains and Fetches, impose on easy and willing Juries, to the Ruin of innocent Men: For to kill by Forms and Subtilties of Law, is the worst Sort of Murder: But I wish the Rage of hot Men, and the Partialities of Juries, may be stop't with my Blood, which I would offer up with so much the more Joy, if I thought I should be the last were to suffer in such a Way.

Since my Sentence, I have had few Thoughts but preparatory ones for Death; yet the Importunity of my Friends, and particularly of the best and dearest Wife in the World, prevail'd with me to sign Petitions, and make Addresses for my Life: To which I was very averse: For (I thank God) tho' in all respects I have liv'd one of the happiest and contented'st Men in the World, (for now near fourteen Years) yet I am so willing to leave all, that it was not without Difficulty that I did any thing for the saving my Life that was begging. But I was willing to let my Friends see what Power they had over me, and that I was not obstinate nor sullen, but would do any thing that an honest Man could do for their Satisfaction, which was the only Motive that sway'd, or had any Weight with me.

And now, to sum up all, as I never had any Design against the King's Life, or the Life of any Man whatsoever; so I never was in any Contrivance of altering the Government. What the Heats, Wickednesses, Passions, and Vanities of other Men have occasion'd, I ought not to be answerable for; nor could I repress them, tho' I now suffer for them. But the Will of the Lord be done, into whose Hands I commend my Spirit; and trust that thou, O merciful Father! hast forgiven me all my Transgressions, the Sins of my Youth, and all the Errors of my past Life, and that thou wilt not lay my secret Sins to my Charge; but wilt graciously support me, during that small Part of my Life now before me, and assist me in my last Moments, and not leave me then to be disorder'd by Fear, or any other Temptation; but make the Light of thy Countenance to shine upon me; for thou art my Sun and my Shield: And as Thou supported me by thy Grace, so I hope thou wilt hereafter crown me with Glory, and receive me into the Fellowship of Angels and Saints, in that blessed Inheritance, purchased for me by my most merciful Redeemer, who is, I trust, at thy Right-hand, preparing a Place for me; into whose Hands I commend my Spirit.

Signed, WILLIAM RUSSEL.

A Defence of the late Lord RUSSEL's Innocency. To which are prefix'd two Letters upon the Subject of his Lordship's Trial. By Sir ROBERT ATKYNS, Knight of the Bath.

First LETTER concerning my Lord RUSSEL's TRIAL.

S I R,

I AM not without the Apprehensions of Danger that may arise by advising in, or so much as discoursing of publick Affairs; yet no Fear of Danger shall hinder me from performing that Duty we owe to one another, to counsel those that need our Advice, how to make their just Defence when they are called in Question for their Lives; especially if they are Persons that have by their general Carriage and Conversation appear'd to be Men of Worth, and Lovers of their King and Country, and of the Religion establish'd among us. I will follow the Method you use, and answer what you ask, in the Order I find in your own Letters.

I cannot see any Disadvantage or Hazard by pleading the general Plea of Not guilty: If it fall out upon the Proofs that the Crime is only Misprision of Treason, and not the very Crime of Treason, the Jury must then find the Prisoner not guilty of Treason, and cannot upon an Indictment of Treason find the Party guilty of Misprision, because he is not indicted for the Offence of Misprision, and Treason and Misprision of Treason are Offences that the Law hath distinguish'd the one from the other, and the one is not included in the other; and therefore if the Proofs reach no farther than to prove a Misprision, and amount not to Treason, the Prisoner may urge it for himself, and say, that the Proofs do not reach to the Crime charged in the Indictment: And if the Truth be so, the Court ought so to direct the Jury, not to find it.

Now, being present in Company with others, where those others do consult and conspire to do some treasonable Act, does not make a Man guilty of Treason, unless by some Words and Actions he signifies his Consent to it, and Approbation of it: But his being privy to it, and not discovering it, makes him guilty of Misprision of Treason, which consists in the concealing it, but it makes him not guilty of Treason. And if the same Person be present a second time, or oftener, this neither does not make him guilty of Treason; only it raises a strong Suspicion, that he likes it, and consents to it, and approves of it, or else he would have forborn after his having been once amongst them. But the strongest Suspicion does not sufficiently prove a Guilt in Treason, nor can it go for any Evidence; and that upon two Accounts:

First, The Proofs in case of Treason must be plain, and clear and positive, and not by Inference, or Argument, or the strongest Suspicion imaginable: Thus says Sir Edward Coke in many Places in his Third Institutes, in the Chapter of High Treason.

Secondly, In an Indictment of High Treason, there must not only be a general Charge of Treason, nor is it enough to set forth of what Sort or Species the Treason is, as killing the King, or levying War against him, or coining Money, or the like; but the Law requires that in the Indictment there must be also set forth some Overt or Open Act, as the Statute of the 25th of Edw. the 3d calls it, or some Instance given by the Party or Offender, whereby it may appear he did consent to it, and consult it, and approve of it. And if the bare being present should be taken and construed to be a sufficient Overt or Open Act, or Instance, then there is no Difference between Treason and Misprision of Treason; for the being present without consenting makes no more than Misprision; therefore there must be something more than being barely present, to make a Man guilty of Treason, especially since the Law requires an Overt or Open Act to be proved against the Prisoner accused. See Sir Edward Coke's Third Institutes, fol. 12. upon those Words of the Statute, (per overt fact) and that there ought to be direct and manifest Proofs, and not bare Suspicions and Presumptions, be they never so strong and violent: See the same folio, in the upper Part of it, upon the Word (Proveablement). And the Statute of the 5th of Edw. 6. cap. 11. requires that there should be but two Witnesses to prove the Crime: So that if there be but one Witness, let him be never so credible a Person, and never so positive; yet if there be no other Proof, the Party ought to be found Not guilty: And those two Witnesses must prove the Person guilty of the same Sort or Species of Treason. As for Example, if the Indictment be for that Species of Treason of conspiring the King's Death, both Witnesses must prove some Fact or Words tending to that very Sort of Treason: But if there be two Witnesses, and one proves the Prisoner conspired the Death of the King, and the other Witness proves the conspiring to do some other sort of Treason, this comes not home to prove the Prisoner guilty upon that Indictment: For the Law will not take away a Man's Life in Treason upon the Testimony and Credit of one Witness, it is so tender of a Man's Life, the Crime and the Forfeitures are so great and heavy.

And as there must be two Witnesses, so by the Statute made in the 13th Year of his now Majesty, chap. the 1st, (intituled, For the Safety of his Majesty's Person) those two Witnesses must not only be lawful, but also credible Persons: See that Statute in the 5th Paragraph. And the Prisoner must be allowed to object against the Credit of all, or any of the Witnesses; and if there be but one Witness of clear and good Credit, and the rest not credible, then the Testimony of those that are not credible must go for nothing, by the Words and Meaning of this Statute; See the Statute. Now were I a Jury-man, I should think no such Witness a credible Witness, as should appear either by his own Testimony, or upon Proofs made by others against him, to have been Particeps Criminis; for that proves him to be a bad, and consequently not so credible a Man; especially if it can appear the Witness has trepann'd the Prisoner into the committing of the Crime: Then the Witness will appear to be guilty of a far higher Crime than the Prisoner, and therefore ought not to be believed as a credible Witness against the Prisoner; for he is a credible Witness that had the Credit of being a good and honest Man, which a Trepanner cannot have; and this Trepanning proves withal, that the Trepanner did bear a Spite and Malice against the Person trepanned, and intended to do him a Mischief, and designed to take away his Life. Shall such a one be a credible Witness, and be believed against him? God forbid!

Then again; it cannot but be believed, that such Persons as have been guilty of the same Crime, will out of a natural Self-love be very forward and willing to swear heartily and to the Purpose, in order to the convicting of others, that they may by this Service merit their Pardon, and save their own Lives: And for this Reason are not so credible Witnesses, such as the Statute of the 13th of Car. 2. does require. Read over the whole Chapters of Sir Edward Coke of High Treason, and of Petty Treason; for in this latter of Petty Treason there is much Matter that concerns High Treason.

I wish with all my Soul, and I humbly and heartily pray to Almighty God, that these Gentlemen that have given so great Proof of their Love to the true Religion, and of the just Rights and Liberties of their Country, and of their Zeal against Popery, may upon their Trial appear innocent. I am so satisfied of their great Worth, that I cannot easily believe them guilty of so horrid a Crime. I pray God to stand by them in the Time of their Distress.

I wish I might have the Liberty fairly to give them the best Assistance I could, in that wherein I might be any way capable of doing it. I beseech Almighty God to heal our Divisions, and establish us upon the sure Foundations of Peace and Righteousness, I thank you for the Favour you have done me, by imparting some publick Affairs, which might perhaps have been unknown to me, or not known till after a long time, for I keep no Correspondence.

When there is an Occasion, pray oblige me by a farther Account, especially what concerns these Gentlemen: And tho' I have written nothing here but what is innocent and justifiable, yet that I may be the surer against any Disadvantage or Misconstruction, pray take the Pains to transcribe what Notes you think fit out of this large Paper; but send me this Paper back again inclosed in another, by the same Hand that brings it.

There is, nor ought to be, no such thing as constructive Treason; this defeats the very Scope and Design of the Statute of the 25th of Edw. 3. which is to make a plain Declaration, what shall be adjudged Treason by the ordinary Courts of Justice: The conspiring any thing against the King's Person is most justly taken to be to conspire against his Life. But conspiring to levy War, or to seize the Guards, is not conspiring against the King's Life. For these are Treasons of a different Species.

Your faithful Friend and Servant,

R. A.

The Second LETTER.

S I R,

I Thank you for the unexpected Account you gave me by your last Letter; but this exact Narrative you have now sent me of the Trial of that Honourable Excellent Person, my Lord Russel, hath exceedingly obliged me. It was a thing I much desired, but I knew not from what Hand to gain it; for I was a little impatient to hear what could be prov'd of so foul a Nature as High Treason against a Person of whom I had ever entertain'd a very high Esteem. And tho' I had a very small and short Acquaintance with him, yet no Man that has known any thing of the public Affairs, or of our late Transactions, could be a mere Stranger to his great Worth. He had as great a Name for a true and honest English Gentleman, and for good Temper, and Prudence, and Moderation, as ever I knew any Man have, and was generally beloved by all that love our Religion and Country. I presume your Relation of the Proofs at his Trial is certainly true in every Part, and in the very Words; and it is a thing that might be had by many Hands, the Proceedings being so public, and I suppose deliberate: Presuming to be true, this I will affirm, that upon this Evidence, both that against him, and for him, (might I have been permitted to have made his Defence for him at his Trial after the Evidence given) I could easily have satisfied any equal and understanding judicious Man, that my Lord ought to have been acquitted; and had I been one of the Jury that tried him, I make no Doubt I could clearly have convinced all my Fellows, (if they were honest and indifferent) that they ought not to have found him Guilty. This Species, or Sort of High Treason that the Witnesses inclin'd to prove against him, was a Conspiracy with others to levy War against the King.

The two first Witnesses, viz. Rumsley and Sheppard, tho' what they say may raise a strong Suspicion upon my Lord, and make it probable that he was guilty, yet neither of them do come home and close to the Person of my Lord Russel; as they do (I confess) against the Earl of Shaftesbury, Sir Thomas Armstrong, and Ferguson.

The first does not affirm, that the Lord Russel did join in the Discourse, or agree to any thing in the Consult; but only says, he was present; which extends no farther than to make a Misprision of Treason, and this too not directly and positively, as legal Proof ought to be to convict a Man of Treason; The latter, (Sheppard) when he applies what he swore to the Person of the Lord Russel, only says, He believes the Lord Russel was there at that Time when the Discourse he speaks of was used; which is a very imperfect uncertain Proof, and not positive enough: so that neither of these were full Witnesses. As to the Evidence given by the Lord Howard against my Lord Russel, it is strange to me, (as the Evidence is stated) that any Credit should be given to it; that he should be believ'd against those Execrations, that (it seems) he had so solemnly, and so lately, used to the contrary of his Evidence; especially when by giving this Evidence he must merit his own Pardon, and save his own Life, which extremely takes off from the Credit and Weight of his Evidence.

What Mr. West says in reference to my Lord Russel, was but bare Opinion and Hearsay, and is no Proof at all in Law; so that instead of two plain, direct, manifest and positive, and two credible Witnesses, as the Law requires in Treason, here is not, in my Opinion, so much as one positive credible Witness. The Lord Howard (as your Case and Narrative states it) is not credible, tho' direct and positive; none of the other three are positive, tho' more credible. In the Statue of the 25th of Edward the Third, of Treasons, the Word Proveablement, (as Sir Edward Coke observes upon it, in his Third Institutes, fol. 12) imports direct and manifest Proofs, not Presumptions and Conjectures, and (as may be added) not Probabilities: And so the Words (per Overt Fact) do (as he observes) strengthen that Sense of the Word Proveablement; and the Act of Treasons made since this King's Time, requires there should be two credible Witnesses. Now, tho' the Lord Howard was not, by the Evidence offer'd against him by the Lord Russel, utterly disabled from being a Witness; yet I will be bold to say, it made him no credible Witness in this Case. That the Lord Russel made no use of these Things in his Defence, tho' a Man of Parts, is no wonder to me; the ablest Man under that Terror, and upon so speedy a Proceeding, and where it is impossible to be so compos'd and free from Distraction, may easily pass by many just Advantages, which a Stander-by, with less Abilities, might quickly have apprehended. I am far from reflecting upon the Court that try'd him; this Matter that I observed, rested principally upon the Jury. And he is found guilty and condemn'd, and it may be before this comes to your Hand, put to Death too: If it hath so happen'd, (as possibly it may) that the Earl of Bedford, and his other great Relations, have prevail'd with the King for a Respite of the Execution, I wish, and heartily beg of Almighty God, that these Considerations may yet be made use of to the King, (with whom it then rests) as Tabula post Naufragium, to save the Life of this Noble Lord. Much more than this may be said, were there such an Opportunity, before the King (and I so intend it, and no otherwise); and if I might be any ways serviceable in it, I would come up to London barefoot, rather than neglect so good an Office. And I ever thought it a Severity in our Law, that a Prisoner for his Life is not allow'd the Assistance of a grave and prudent Lawyer, or some other Friend, to make his Defence for him, even as to Matter of Fact, as well as to Law. I know, 'tis said, the Court is of Counsel for the Prisoner; but for my part I should never desire to depend upon that only. I know what this is by Experience. If the Case be in any Part of it mistaken, I have lost all my Observations, and beg your Pardon for all this Trouble; it is out of the great Honour and Zeal I have for that good Lord; But the Narrative you give is very ably and well compos'd, and in very good Method; and, I think, could not have been better done, which inclines me to think it very true also. I could be contented the Earl of Bedford (to whom I am known) might have the View of this Letter, if it come not too late, and may be thought of any Use. I heartily thank you for your Favour, which obliges me to be

Your faithful Friend and Servant,

A Defence of the late Lord RUSSEL's Innocency: By way of Answer or Confutation of a Libellous Pamphlet, intituled, An Antidote against Poison*.

THE Pamphlet styles itself, An Antidote against Poison; but it is so far from deserving that Title, that it may be truly said, That the Antidote itself, is the rankest Poison.

We read in History that the noble Emperor called Henry of Luxemburg, was poisoned in the Sacrament; and Pope Victor was poisoned in receiving the Chalice. Who could have suspected such horrid Villainy in the Administration of such sacred and solemn Rites? Who could with Horror and Amazement contrive the mingling of a deadly Poison with the Bread and Water of Life? To make those consecrated Elements (which ought to be the Savour of Life unto Life) to be the dreadful Messengers of sudden Death? Surely had those outward Signs been changed into the very Body and Blood of the Lord of Life, (as they that acted in those execrable Villainies profess'd to believe) there must needs have been a Miracle wrought in altering likewise the Substance and malignant Nature of those Poisons, that they should not have wrought those direful Effects; which yet they did. There appears the like wicked Policy in the Author of this Pamphlet; who, under Pretence of prescribing an Antidote against Poison, under the Visard and Disguise of preventing Mischief, does most deceitfully infuse the worst of Poisons, and labours to intoxicate a whole Nation. This Author would have the World believe, that the noble Lord, in the composing of his Speech, was wholly govern'd by his Confessor; and that the Compiler of it was infected with those Doctrines, that the Northern Climate has of late furnish'd us with. The very Language and Spirit of Coleman! Sure the Soul of Coleman is by Transmigration enter'd into this Author: It is easy to guess at his Religion. He supposes all that were present at my Lord's Trial, must needs be surpris'd to find the Truth of the Case so truly and unfaithfully set down in my Lord's Speech.

But whoever will take the Pains to read the Trials, publish'd by Authority, (which no Man will suspect of Partiality toward the Person tried) will receive abundant Satisfaction in the Truth of what was said by the Lord Russel, and discover the shameless Impudence of this malicious Author.

The Indictment (as we find it printed at large in the Trial, fol. 706.) charges the Prisoner, That he, intending to disturb the Peace of the Kingdom, and to move War and Rebellion against the King, and to subvert the Government, and to depose, or put down, and deprive the King from his Title and Kingly Name of the Imperial Crown of his Kingdom of England, and so bring and put the King to Death and Destruction, 2 Nov. 34 Car. 2. and at other Times, maliciously and traitorously, with divers others, did conspire, compass, imagine and intend;

1. To deprive the King of his Title and Government.
2. And to kill the King, and to subvert the Government.
3. And to move insurrection and Rebellion against the King.
And fulfil and perfect these Treasons and traitorous Compassings and Imaginations, the said William Russel did meet, together with divers other Traitors, and consult, agree and conclude,

1. To move and stir up Insurrection and Rebellion. And,
2. To seize and destroy the King's Guards.
The operative and emphatical Words of this Indictment, are the intending, conspiring, and concluding.

The Things intended and conspired were,
1. To move and stir up War and Rebellion against the King.
2. To depose the King.

3. To kill the King. And in order to the accomplishing of these horrid Crimes,

The Things concluded on were,

1. To move and stir up Insurrection and Rebellion.

2. To seize and destroy the Guards. This is the very Sum and true Method of the Indictment, if it be truly printed in the Trials.

Note, Here is no Open Act or Deed charged to be done by the Lord Russel, unless his meeting together with others be meant to be an Open Act or Deed: But then again, that Act of Meeting terminates merely in consulting, agreeing, and concluding. They met only to consult, agree, and conclude; but they acted nothing in pursuance of that consulting, agreeing and concluding, for any thing that appears in the Indictment: So that the Meeting properly hath not the Nature of an Acting or Action, or of a Thing done. But the Effect of the Indictment is, that the Lord Russel and others did consult, agree, and conclude to do something, but the Indictment stops there, and goes no farther, for it sets not forth any thing done at all. So that here is no Overt-Act or Deed, and the Indictment is void; for there is no Act charged but Meeting, and that was merely in order to consult and agree: And they did agree upon a Thing to be done, but it is not said they did it, or did any thing towards it. I repeat this the oftner, that it may be the better understood and minded, being very material. Read the Indictment.

The Indictment is grounded upon the Stat. of 25 Edw. 3. cap. 2. (the old Statute of Treasons) So the Attorney General declares himself, fol. 721, of the Trial.

Now let us see how far this Charge in the Indictment will make my Lord guilty of any Treason within that Statute.

The Body of that Stat. of 25 Ed. 3. of Treasons, is printed together with the Trial, (See the Trial, fol. 722.) so that it need not be repeated here, tho' there are some other Clauses in that Statute not printed in the Trial.

The Occasion of making that Statute appears to be the Variety of Opinions that then were, what should be accounted Treason, and what not; which was very mischievous to the Subjects, and gave too great a Liberty to the Judges of the ordinary Courts.

To cure this mighty Mischief, and to prevent that arbitrary Power of Judges, this excellent Statute makes a Declaration what shall be adjudged Treason by the ordinary Courts of Justice. Not but that there might be like Cases, or other Facts amounting to Treason, besides those there enumerated; but those other Facts or Treasons must not be adjudged by those ordinary standing Courts (such as the Gaol-Delivery of Newgate, and the Court of the King's Bench at Westminster itself are): But in such Cases those Courts must forbear proceeding, and the Case must be reserved for the Determination of the King and Parliament. See that Statute in the printed Statutes at Large.

So that the Court of Gaol-Delivery at Newgate must judge only and proceed upon no other Treasons but what are there enumerated and specified.

Now the Treasons in that Statute enumerated and specified (for the Word Specified is the very Word used by that Statute) are these:

1. Compassing or imagining the Death of the King, Queen, or Prince.
2. Violating, or carnally knowing, the Queen, King's eldest Daughter unmarried, Prince's Wife.

3. Levying

* See The Antidote against Poison, in State Trials, Vol. VIII. p. 443.

3. Levying War against the King. Not a compassing or imagining to levy War, but an actual levying War; it must be a War begun. And several other Sorts of Treasons are there specified, not to our Purpose to be recited.

The Statute further requires, That the Person indicted be probably attainted of some one of these Treasons by Overt Deed, that is, some open manifest Act or Deed done, which must of Necessity also be expressly set down in the Indictment, and fully and clearly proved at the Trial by two Witnesses.

See Sir Edward Coke's Third Institutes, in his Chapter of High Treason, fol. 12. in his Exposition of the Words of that Statute, (per Overt Fact) and there, fol. 5. upon the Words (Fait Compasser) he tells you the Nature of that Open Deed that the Statute intends. It must be a Deed, and not mere Words: It must be a Deed tending to the Execution of the Treason imagined. That Deed must be an Open Deed, that is, it must be fully proved, and made open and manifest at the Trial by clear Proof.

So that if the Indictment fail of setting forth one of those Treasons that are there enumerated, it is not a good Indictment upon that Statute.

If it do set forth one of those Treasons, yet if it do not set forth some Open Deed done by the Party indicted, that is, such a Deed as does properly and naturally tend to Execution of that sort of Treason set forth in that Indictment; in such Case also the Indictment is not good.

If both these, viz. the Treason intended, and a proper, suitable open Deed, be well set forth in the Indictment, (which make a good Indictment) yet if that very sort of Treason intended, and that open Deed or Fact, so set forth in the Indictment, be not also fully, clearly, and manifestly proved upon the Trial against the Prisoner, he ought to be acquitted.

It will not suffice either to prove it by one Witness, or to prove any other sort of Treason, (not charged in the Indictment, nor any other Overt Deed) other than what is so set forth in that Indictment, though it be by never so full a Proof; but upon that Indictment the Prisoner ought to be acquitted, if that special Treason, and that special Overt or Open Deed, set forth and expressed in that very Indictment, be not fully proved.

Now let us examine the Indictment in this Case against the Lord Russell, and the Proofs against him, as they are publish'd by Authority, and observe how they agree with the Statute, and how the Indictment and Proofs agree the one with the other.

It may be admitted, that here is in the Indictment against the Lord Russell, a Treason sufficiently charged and set forth, viz. one of the Treasons specified in that Stat. of 25 Edw. 3. namely, that the Lord Russell did compass and imagine the Death of the King. This is not denied, but it is duly charged in the Indictment. For those other Charges in the Indictment, viz. his intending to depose the King, and his intending to move or levy War and Rebellion against the King; these are inserted into the Indictment as Aggravations of that horrid Crime of intending to kill the King, or as open Acts of the other; but of themselves alone, they are no distinct substantial Charges, nor are they any of the Treasons specified in this Act, upon which Act this Indictment is solely grounded. For tho' by the Act of 13 of this King that now is, cap. 1. intituled, An Act for the Safety and Preservation of the King's Person, it is made High Treason (during the now King's Life only) to compass or imagine to depose the King, or to compass or imagine to levy War against the King, if such Compassing or Imagination be expressed by Speaking or Writing, (altho' without any open Deed) yet the Lord Russell was not indicted upon that Statute, (as the Attorney-General himself acknowledged openly at the Trial) but only upon the old Statute of 25 Edw. 3. so that those late-made Treasons are not to our Purpose.

So that the only Treason charged in the Indictment, as a substantial Charge, is that of imagining to kill the King. And so the Lord Chief Justice agrees in his Direction to the Jury. See the Trial, fol. 61.

But where is that other Requisite, that other most material Part of the Indictment, of the Open Act or Deed? without which the rest serves for nothing: For it is not enough by this Statute to make a Man guilty of conspiring or imagining the Death of the King, unless the Party indicted have expressed that Imagination by some Open Deed; and that must be plainly set down in the Indictment too, or else the Indictment (as was said before) is no good Indictment. And it must appear to the Court upon the Indictment not only to be an Open Deed, but such a Deed as has a natural Aptitude and Tendency to the Execution of that very Treason so imagined. And there is no such set forth in this Indictment, and therefore the Indictment itself was insufficient and void.

And that which seems to have a Colour of an Overt Fact, or Open Deed, set forth in this Indictment, was not fully and sufficiently proved neither: And then, though the Indictment had been sufficient, yet for want of due Proof, the Party indicted ought to have been acquitted.

To these two Points or Matters shall the ensuing Discourse confine itself, And if this Undertaking be made good, the Antidote will appear to be a rank Poison, the Lord Russell's Speech justified, and his Innocency and Loyalty cleared, and his Honour vindicated.

The Overt Fact, or Open Deed, set forth in the Indictment, (if there be any) are the Things said to be consulted of, agreed and concluded on, viz. 1. To move and stir up Insurrection and Rebellion. 2. To seize and destroy the Guards. (Peruse the Indictment carefully).

Now neither of these are Open Deeds, in the Nature of them.

The first, which is to stir up Insurrection and Rebellion: This is a distinct Species of Treason itself: it is the same with a levying of War (specified in this Stat. of 25 Edw. 3. which is the only Statute we have to do with in this Case of my Lord Russell); and if it had been set forth in the Indictment as a Deed done, or Thing acted, that is, if it had been laid in the Indictment that the War was actually levied, or the Insurrection or Rebellion actually raised or stirred up, (as it is not, for it is only mentioned as a Thing agreed and concluded on, and not done) yet it had not been a sufficient proper Overt Fact, or Open Act, to make it a good Indictment: Because (as is said before) levying of War is a distinct Species from that of compassing to kill the King; and therefore cannot be made an Overt Fact, or Open Deed, to manifest an Imagination of killing the King: For that one Species of Treason cannot be a proper open Act to another Species of Treason, as will be proved hereafter.

Sir Edward Coke in his Third Institutes, fol. 14. in the third Clause or Paragraph of that Folio, tells us, that the Connexion of the Words is to be observ'd, viz. [thereof be attained by Overt or Open Deed.] This, says Sir Edward Coke, relateth to the several and distinct Treasons before expressed; whereof that of imagining to kill the King, and that of levying War against the King, are two distinct Species of High Treason. And therefore, says Sir Edward Coke, the one of them cannot be an Overt Act for another, that is, levying of War cannot be an Overt Act for that sort of Treason in imagining to kill the King, much less when the Indictment does not charge it as a War actually levied, but only an Agreement or Conclusion for levying a War. Such Agreement can be no open Deed to manifest an Intent or Imagination of killing the King. This is the main Question between us.

The other only Colour or Pretence to an Overt Fact, or Open Deed, must be that of seizing or destroying the King's Guard: For no other but these two are set forth in the Indictment, or look any thing like Overt or Open Acts.

And this latter is nothing like to an Overt Fact, or Open Deed, in the Nature of it; for it is not said to be done, but only agreed on, and concluded on to be done. If it had been but alledged in the Indictment, That in pursuance of this Agreement or Conclusion of the Conspirators, a View was accordingly taken of those Guards, and reported to the rest, (whereof the Lord Russell was one) that it was feasible, (whereof there is some Colour or Proof against some of them) this had been more to the Purpose: But being laid so imperfectly as it is, the Indictment itself must needs be insufficient, for the Reasons before given.

But, alas! the noble Lord is gone; and he is gone from whence he would not be recalled, a Place of infinite Bliss and Glory, out of a spiteful malicious World: It is we, it is the King and Kingdom, it is the whole Protestant Part of the World, that suffers the inestimable Loss of him: Not to speak of the unspeakable Grief of his dear and disconsolate Widow, and other noble Relations. Factum infectum fieri nequit. So that we may seem to labour in vain, and it comes too late. But something may be done for the Benefit of his hopeful Posterity, and some small Satisfaction may be made to his noble Family, by a Writ of Error for reversing of this Attainder, and the avoiding of the Record; for the Stat. of 29 Eliz. cap. 2. extends only to such Attainders for High Treason as then had been before the making of that Statute, and does not hinder a Writ of Error in this Case, if the King will sign a Petition for it.

But to examine this last Overt Fact, or Open Deed, a little farther;

Viz. To seize and destroy the King's Guards.

The Guards! What Guards? What or whom does the Law understand or allow to be the King's Guards, for the Preservation of his Person? Whom shall the Court that tried this noble Lord, whom shall the Judges of the Law that were then present, and upon their Oaths, whom shall they judge or legally understand by these Guards? They never read of them in all their Law-Books: There is not any Statute-Law that makes the least Mention of any Guards. The Law of England takes no Notice of any such Guards; and therefore the Indictment is uncertain and void.

The King is guarded by the special Protection of Almighty God, by whom he reigns, and whose Vicegerent he is: He has an invisible Guard, a Guard of glorious Angels.

*Non eget Mauri jaculis nec arcu;
Nec venenatis gravisda sagittis,
Crede, pharetra.*

The King is guarded by the Love of his Subjects:

The next under God, and the surest Guard.

He is guarded by the Law and Courts of Justice.

The Militia and the Trained Bands are his legal Guard, and the whole Kingdom's Guard.

The very Judges that tried this noble Lord were the King's Guards, and the Kingdom's Guard, and this Lord Russell's Guard against all erroneous and imperfect Indictments, from all false Evidence and Proof, from all Strains of Wit and Oratory misapplied and abused by Counsel.

What other Guards are there? We know of no Law for more. King Henry VII. of this Kingdom (as History tells us) was the first that set up the Band of Pensioners. Since this the Yeomen of the Guard; since them certain arm'd Bands, commonly now-a-days (after the French Mode) called the King's Life-guard, ride about and appear with naked Swords, to the Terror of the Nation: But where is the Law? Where is the Authority for them?

It had been fit for the Court that tried this noble Lord on this Indictment to have satisfy'd themselves, from the King's Council, what was meant by these Guards; for the alledging and setting forth an Overt Fact, or Open Deed, in an Indictment of Treason, must be of something that is intelligible by Law, whereof Judges may take notice by Law. And herein too the Indictment fails, and is imperfect.

But admit the seizing and destroying of those who are now called the King's Life-guard, had been the Guard intended within this Overt Fact, or Open Deed; yet the Indictment should have set forth, that de facto the King had chosen a certain Number of Men to attend upon and guard his Person, and set forth where they did attend, as at Whitehall, or the Mans, or the Savoy, &c. and that these were the Guards intended, by the Indictment, to be seized and destroyed: That by this setting forth the Court might have taken notice judicially what and who were meant. But to seize and destroy the King's Guards, and not shew who and what is meant, makes the Indictment very insufficient.

So much as to the Indictment itself.

In the next place, let us look into the Proofs, as they are at large set forth and owned in the printed Trial; and let us consider how far those Proofs do make out the Charge of the Indictment, viz. the compassing and imagining the Death of the King; and how far they make out that Overt Fact, or Open Deed, (such as it is) of seizing or destroying the King's Guards, in order to the effecting of that compassing and imagining the Death of the King. And it must appear by proof to be in Truth, so intended intended by the Conspirators, and levelled to that End; for if it were done, yet if it were done quite to another Intent and Purpose, and not to that of compassing the King's Death, it does not come home to this Indictment.

There are but three Witnesses that can be thought to bring the Matter home, and to fix any thing upon the Lord Ruffel; Colonel Rumsey, Mr. Sheppard, and the Lord Howard.

It is true, two of the three, that is Col. Rumsey, and the Lord Howard, positively prove a traitorous Design, or Discourse at least, by some of the Company, of making an Insurrection or Rebellion, or (to speak it in the Language and Phrase of this Stat. of 25 Edw. 3.) of levying War against the King, (for all these signify one and the same thing) and they prove the Lord Ruffel was sometimes present at those Meetings: But is that enough? Admit he were present, and heard the Debate of it, (which yet is not fully and directly proved) yet if he did not join in the Debate, and express, and some way signify his Approbation of it, and consent to it, it makes him not at all criminous. It is true, his after-concealing of it might have made him guilty of Misprision of Treason; but that is a Crime of another Nature, and is another distinct Genus of Crimes, of which he was not indicted.

Col. Rumsey, as to the Overt-fact, (as they would make it) says, There was some Discourse about seeing what Posture the Guards were in: And being asked by one of the Jury, by whom the Discourse was? he answers, By all the Company that was there (whereof, as he said before, the Lord Ruffel was one). So that my Lord Ruffel may (I agree) be understood to be one that discoursed about seeing what Posture the Guards were in: Nay, the Colonel says, All the Company did debate it: And he says further, The Lord Ruffel was there when some of the Company undertook to take the View of those Guards. And being asked by the Attorney General, to what Purpose the View was to be? The Colonel answers, It was to surprise our Guards, if the Rising had gone on.

The Chief Justice observing to the Witness that he ought not to deliver a doubtful Evidence, and to speak it with Limitations, that made it not so positive; as by saying, I apprehend so and so: then the Colonel grows more positive, and says further, That a Rising was intended; but afterwards he says, There was no Debate of the Rising. At last the Witness being asked by Sir George Jeffries, whether the Prisoner were present at the Debate concerning the Message from the Lord Shaftesbury to the Company then met, and the Answer return'd to it; he flatly says, The Prisoner was present at that Debate (which Debate did indeed concern the Rising). Being asked by the same Person, whether my Lord was averse to it, or agreeing to it; he answers like an Echo, Agreeing to it. Nay, then he says, my Lord Ruffel did speak, and that about the Rising at Taunton, and that he did discourse of the Rising: But what were his Words? Being question'd again by the Chief Justice, whether my Lord did give any Consent to the Rising, he answers still like an Echo, My Lord, he did. And this last Answer is the weighty Part of his Evidence, if there be any Weight at all.

Now mind the Defect of the Witness's Memory in some other most material Passages. He thinks the Lord Grey did say something to the same Purpose, with the Answer deliver'd by Ferguson to Lord Shaftesbury's Message.

He does not know (says he) how often he himself (the Witness) was at Mr. Sheppard's House where this Debate was. He says he was there more than once, or else I heard, says he, Mr. Ferguson make a Report of another Meeting to the Lord Shaftesbury. And then he says, That this was all at that Time that he remember'd; and before this he had said no more against the Lord Ruffel, but that he was present; and after this, upon much interrogating of him, he proceeds to tell a great deal more, indeed all the rest that has been before observed to proceed from him. And after all, he says, he thinks he was not there above a Quarter of an Hour. He says, he was not certain whether he did hear something about a Declaration there, or whether Mr. Ferguson did report it to my Lord Shaftesbury, that they had debated it. And the Witness speaking of a View to be taken of the Guards, to surprise them; the Lord Chief Justice seems to be surpris'd at that Word: The Guards! he never met it in all his Books. What Guards? Why you know it is mention'd in the Indictment; but he might yet very well ask what Guards? And the Colonel answers, the Guards at the Savoy and the Meuse.

The Colonel says, He thinks the Duke of Monmouth, and the Lord Grey, and Sir Thomas Armstrong, were the Persons that undertook to view the Guards. And he thinks, Sir Thomas Armstrong began it, and Mr. Ferguson. And he says, further Direction was given to take a View of the Guards, if the Rising had gone on (as it never did); and then he mentions the very Day that had been appointed for the Rising, viz. the 19th of November; and that the Message from the Lord Shaftesbury was, he thinks, a matter of a Fortnight before that Day, or something more; for he thinks it was concluded Sunday Fortnight after my Lord Grey met. The Mention of my Lord Ruffel's Consent to this Rising, comes in at the last, and after many Questions ask'd him, and not till that very particular Question was put to him; and he answers in the very same Words as the Question was ask'd. The Chief Justice ask'd him in these Words: Did my Lord give any Consent to the Rising? The Colonel's Answer was, Yes, my Lord, he did. But how did my Lord Ruffel signify that Consent? What Words did he use that may clearly express it? For this is the pinching Proof. If it had been certain and clear'd by remembering the Manner of his consenting, or how it did appear; why was not this put home to the Witness? This is the material Part of his Evidence, without which the rest had not come home to the Prisoner: And why did not the Witness deliver this of himself? And before his giving this home Evidence, he had said, That was all at that Time that he remember'd: And this was at the same Time with that of the Message, and of the Discourse about viewing the Guards. He afterwards doubts whether he was any more than once there with that Company, or whether he heard Mr. Ferguson report things to the Lord Shaftesbury; which shews a wild kind of Memory in a Witness, and the Colonel is no Fool, nor Baby; so that there is but one Time positively spoken of by this Witness. How strangely uncertain is he in the Matter of the Declaration, to which he was examined! A most noted thing! And he cannot tell whether he heard any thing of it there, Vol. III.

or whether Mr. Ferguson told him of it. It is to be suspected too, that what he has delivered positively at last so late in his Evidence, and after so much interrogating of him, was but mere Hearsay too, and then it would not have been any Evidence. He has not, it seems, a good distinguishing Head or Memory, as a Witness ought to have in case of Life, and a Life of so high a Value as this of that noble Lord.

And many other material Passages this Witness delivers under that Limitation, as he thinks.

The Rising was intended, but never took Effect; and the View was no more than appointed and undertaken; but the seizing of the Guards, as this Witness says, was not to be unless the Rising had gone on, which it never did. He speaks nothing of any View made of the Guards, or any Report upon it: But he swears my Lord Ruffel consented to the Rising. That is his stabbing Evidence; but by what Words, or how he signified his Consent, not a Word, though mighty material.

But what is this Conspiracy for a Rising? And a Conspiracy to seize the Guards? (in case the Rising had gone on) What are these to the Crime charged in the Indictment against the Lord Ruffel, for conspiring the Death of the King?

Here is not a Word of any such Matter, nor of seizing the Guards in order to it, no not one Word.

And that is the only material Part of the Indictment (as shall appear more plainly hereafter.)

The second Witness, Mr. Sheppard, mentions the meeting (at his House) of the Duke of Monmouth, and among the rest, the Lord Ruffel, and they discours'd of surprising the Guards; and that the Duke, the Lord Grey, and Sir Thomas Armstrong (as he remembers) went one Night to view the Guards; and the next Day at his House they said it was very feasible, if they had Strength to do it: And then he says, there was two Meetings there, and, as he remembers, my Lord Ruffel was both times there. Being ask'd by the Attorney General, besides the seizing of the Guards, if there were any Discourse of Rising; he answers, He did not remember any further Discourse, for he was often gone out of the Room: And this is the Effect of that he says.

If any thing of this comes near my Lord Ruffel, it is those Words, first giving an Account of who they were that were met, and that my Lord Ruffel was one of them; he says the Substance of their Discourse was how to surprise the King's Guards: This may be true, if one or two of the Company only discourses it; for it does not necessarily affirm, that every one did speak in that Discourse, he does not mention one Word spoken by my Lord Ruffel, nor that he approv'd of, or consented to any thing. At the worst, for any thing that he says, it can be but Misprision: He can say nothing as to the intended Rising. Now Colonel Rumsey's Evidence is altogether of that Rising, and the seizing of the Guards was to have been, if the Rising had gone on; and this was at the same Time that Mr. Sheppard speaks to: And yet Mr. Sheppard being asked if there was any Discourse of Rising, he answers, he did not remember any further Discourse.

Nor does Colonel Rumsey certainly remember any thing of a Declaration read amongst them, whether he heard it there, or whether by Mr. Ferguson's Report of it to my Lord Shaftesbury; which is one of the principal things that Mr. Sheppard speaks to (besides that of seizing the Guards). And as to the Declaration, Mr. Sheppard says, he cannot say my Lord Ruffel was there when that Declaration was read.

So they agree in nothing but in the Discourse of seizing the Guards, and that my Lord Ruffel was then present.

So that as yet the Sum of the Proof by Colonel Rumsey is, that my Lord Ruffel consented to the Rising, which is too general; and the Sum of the Proof by Mr. Sheppard is, that my Lord Ruffel was present in Company when the Company discours'd of seizing the Guards, but he knows nothing of the Rising.

The third Witness (the Lord Howard) discourses much about a Conspiracy to rise, but he speaks most (of what he says) by Report from the Earl of Shaftesbury, and from the Duke; so it goes for no Evidence against my Lord Ruffel; and the Chief Justice did the Prisoner that Right, as to declare as much to the Jury: And the Lord Howard clears the Duke from any such horrid Act as the killing the King, the Duke said he would not suffer it; and if the Duke be innocent in that, it is probable that my Lord Ruffel, and the rest of the Company that met, had no Discourse about killing the King, nor any Thought that way; which yet is the great and only substantial Charge of this Indictment, which must still be minded and observ'd.

My Lord Howard does indeed prove two several Consults, one at Mr. Hambden the younger's, the other at my Lord Ruffel's about the Middle of January last, and after, and that my Lord Ruffel was at both; and these Consults were of an Insurrection, and where to begin it, and of providing Arms and Money, and of sending into Scotland to settle an Understanding with the Lord of Argyle. And being asked what my Lord did say, he answers thus, viz. Every one (says he) knows my Lord Ruffel is a Person of great Judgment, and not very lavish in Discourse. But did he consent? was a Question ask'd by Sir George Jeffries. The Lord Howard answered, We did not put it to the Vote, but it went without Contradiction, and I took it that all there gave their Consent: That Lord Ruffel join'd in the Council of Six, that he approv'd of his being chosen for one, that he said one Word in these two Consults, there is not any Proof by the Lord Howard; only he says, He took it that all there consented. Is that enough? O strange Evidence!

I will not here take notice, or examine, how far the Lord Howard is a credible Witness in this Case, but refer the Reader to the Testimony of my Lord of Anglesey, Mr. Howard, and Dr. Burnet; or how far any of the three Witnesses are to be believed, having all three upon their own Testimony been Participes Criminis, and it is suppos'd have their Pardons, or are promis'd Pardons: Not that this is offer'd to disable them quite from being Witnesses, but surely, all things considered, it much lessens their Credit in this Case; nor does it make them the more credible, because no other Witnesses can be had. But then consider that most excellent Character given of the Prisoner by Persons of Honour, and of the highest Esteem for Ability and Integrity, and such as contradicts, and is inconsistent with the Charge of the Indictment, and whatever is of Weight in the Evidence Evidence against him; and especially if you give any Credit to the Lord Howard himself, who upon his Oath does declare, as in the Presence of God and Man, that he did not believe that either the Duke of Monmouth, or my Lord Russell, had any Design to murder the King; which is the only effectual Charge of this Indictment. These things consider'd, it seems very strange to me, how the Lord Russell could be found guilty of a compassing and imagining the Death of the King, for so is the Verdict.

This answers most of the Observations made by the Author of the Antidote upon my Lord Russell's Speech, restraining the Expression, as he says, of his Innocency to the Design upon the King's Life, and to killing of the King, and of his omitting to mention the general Raising; which, as this Author boldly affirms, was fully proved upon him; and that my Lord's Professions of his Innocency, as to any Plot upon the King's Life, or to kill the King, or his knowing any thing thereof, these (says the Author) are no plain Declarations of his Innocency, as to the Crime charged and proved upon him, of conspiring and consulting to raise an Insurrection. Nor was there any Need of my Lord's answering that, for it was little material.

How uncertain, how disagreeing, how unapplicable to the Charge of the Indictment those Proofs are, has been fully observ'd already; and the Author grossly mistakes in his Judgment, when he takes the conspiring and consulting to raise an Insurrection to be the Crime charged in the Indictment; for (as was observ'd before) the Charge of the Indictment is, the compassing and imagining to kill the King; and that of a Conspiracy to raise an Insurrection, or to levy War, is none of the Crimes or Treasons enumerated or specified in the Act of 25 Edw. 3. and therefore could not be the Crime charged in the Indictment, which is grounded only upon that Act of 25 Edw. 3. (as the Attorney General acknowledges) for it is an actual levying of War, and not a conspiring only to levy War, or raise an Insurrection, that is the Treason specified in that Act of 25 Edw. 3. And therefore the Mention of other things are but by way of Aggravation, for the more ample setting forth of the Crime charged, which is of compassing the King's Death: And that the conspiring to make an Insurrection, cannot be an open Deed to prove a compassing the King's Death, has been already spoken to, and shall yet be more fully.

Nor is the Author more mistaken in his Observations upon the Matter of Fact, and his unwarranted Conclusions and Inferences raised from thence, than he is in his Determinations of Matters in Law arising from that Fact.

The Death of the King (says the Author) in that Law of 25 Edw. 3. is not restrained to killing of his natural Person, but extends as well to his civil Death as natural: As to conspire to depose the King, to imprison him, or laying any Force or Restraint upon him; these (says the Author) are all High Treason, for compassing his Death, natural or civil: If so, why then we are at never the more Certainty for this excellent Law of 25 Ed. 3.

I agree, that conspiring to depose the King, to imprison him, are Treasons; but it is not so plain that they are Treasons within this Law of 25 E. 3. upon which this Indictment is grounded. It is true, they are made Treason by the late Act of 13 of the now King, and have by several temporary Acts (such as this of 13 Car. 2. is) been made Treason: But this proves, that they were not judged by those Parliaments, that pass'd those temporary Acts, to be Treasons within the Statute of 25 Edw. 3. For why then were these temporary Acts made? What need was there of them? Sir Edward Coke, 3 Instit. fol. 9. in the last Paragraph but one of that fol. says, A Conspiracy to levy War is no Treason; he means within the Act of 25 Edw. 3. But it has been made Treason since Sir Edward Coke's time, viz. by 13 Car. 2. And let it be remembered, that the great End of making this excellent Law of 25 Edw. 3. (as appears by the Preamble) was to avoid Uncertainty, and Variety of Opinions, and to prevent the Arbitrariness of Judges, in the ordinary Courts; and the Act takes care, that doubtful Cases, such as are not plainly within the Enumeration of the Act, are to be reserv'd for the Judgment of the King and Parliament. And herein consists the Excellency of this Law: Quod fieri possit, quam plurima Legibus ipsis definiantur: Quam paucissima Judicis arbitrio relinquuntur. And as the learned Lord Bacon, in his Advancement of Learning, fol. 447. says, That is the best Law, which gives least Liberty to the Judge; he the best Judge, that takes least Liberty to himself: Misera est servitus, ubi Jus est vagum. And this Law is a Declaration of Law, and therefore ought not to be extended to like Cases in the Construction of it: And it is made in the Punishment of the greatest Offences, and is as penal as a Law can be; and therefore ought not to be expounded by Equity, that is, to be extended to like Cases.

It is true, the Opinion of the Judges hath been, That conspiring to depose or imprison the King, is a compassing or imagining the Death of the King. And if a Man declares by Overt act, that he will depose or imprison the King; this, says Sir Edward Coke, 3 Instit. fol. 6. upon the Word (Mort) is a sufficient Overt-act, for the Intent of killing the King. Mind him well; he does not say, that conspiring to depose or to imprison the King is an Overt-act, to prove the conspiring the King's Death; which is the Opinion the Antidoter maintains, and for which he cites all his Cases afterwards cited. But Sir Edward Coke says, That conspiring to depose or imprison the King being declared by Overt-act, this Overt-act is also a sufficient Overt-act for the Intent of killing the King.

It is one thing to conspire to depose the King, and another thing to declare that conspiring by some open Act: They differ as much as thinking does from acting. Now in this Case of the Lord Russell, the Author of this Antidote, and some others, (as appears by the printed Trials) would have us believe that very conspiring to levy War is an Overt-act to prove the compassing and imagining the King's Death: For which there is not the least Ground from Sir Edward Coke. First they are different Species, as Sir Edward Coke observes in his third Institute, fol. 14. the third Paragraph; and therefore (says he) the one of them cannot be an Overt-act for another; that is, conspiring to levy War, nay the actual Levying of War too, which is one Species of Treason, cannot be an Overt-act for the compassing the Death of the King, which is another Species of Treason. But this is that the Antidoter labours; only, says Sir Edward Coke, the Overt-act of the one, may be an Overt-act for another sort or Species of Treason.

And I agree it, if the Overt-act in the one sort of Treason, may as fitly and as properly in its own Nature, and as equally, be also an Overt-act in the other sort, and had a Tendency to the Execution of that other sort. And it also does appear by the Proofs, to be so intended by the Conspirators. As for Example: Actual seizing of the King's Guards (not a Conspiring to seize the King's Guards, and such Guards as are not plainly set forth in the Indictment what they are) may in its Nature be an Overt-act, to make manifest the compassing of the King's Death, and is an Act proper enough, and has in its Nature a Tendency towards the Execution of the Conspiracy to kill the King: But then it must be proved to be so intended and designed, that is, in order to the killing of the King. But if it appear otherwise upon the Proof, (as here it did) that it was not so intended, but design'd merely in order to a Rebellion, and levying of War, (for which also it is as apt and proper in its Nature, and has as great a Tendency that way) then it cannot be applied nor made use of as an Overt-act, to prove the compassing the King's Death (as in this Case of my Lord Russell it was): For this (as Sir Edward Coke well says, fol. 14. the latter Part of the third Paragraph of that Folio) would be to confound the several Classes or Species of Treason: And the Confusion of Species is abominable in Nature.

And where Sir Edward Coke seems to comply with the Opinion and Practice of some Judges, that the Overt-act of deposing may be a good Overt-act of killing, (which, with the Distinction that I have offered, is just enough) yet he has some Hesitation; for he concludes that Opinion of his with these Words, fol. 6. in his third Institute, upon the Word [Mort]. But, says he, peruse advisedly the Statutes of 13 Eliz. cap. 1. And why those Statutes? Because by those Statutes, conspiring to depose the Queen is made Treason; which needed not (as has been observed already) if it was Treason within that Clause of compassing the King's Death, within the Statute of 25 Ed. 3. The like may be observed in many other such temporary Laws, as that of 25 H. 8. cap. 22. 26 H. 8. cap. 13. 28 H. 8. cap. 7. 1 Ed. 6. cap. 12. and 5 & 6 Ed. 6. cap. 11.

And it is worthy Observation, tho' by way of a short Digression, that in many, if not in every one of these temporary Laws of Treason, there is an express Clause and Provision still, that Concealment, or keeping secret of any High Treason, should be adjudged Misprision of Treason: As if there were great Need of that Caution, lest the Judges might judge concealing of Treason for High Treason.

Now to shew the Tenderness that the Judges heretofore shewed in the expounding of this Statute of Treasons of 25 Edw. 3. and how cautious they were in extending it beyond the strict Sense and Letter of the Statute, read the Case in Mich. 19 Hen. 6. fol. 47. Case 102. A Man was indicted in the King's Bench of Petty Treason (which is declared too by the same Statute of 25 Edw. 3. cap. 2.) for killing his Mistress, whom he served. And because the Words of this Stat. of 25 Edw. 3. declare it Petty Treason where the Servant kills the Master, they were in doubt whether it ought to be extended to the Mistress, or not. And there the Judges of the King's Bench (before whom the Case was) sent to the Judges of the Court of Common-Pleas then sitting, and to the Serjeants there, to know their Opinion of the Case. And by Advice of all the Judges of both Courts, it was adjudged Petty Treason for the Servant to kill the Mistress, not only within the Meaning, but within the very Words of that Statute; for Master and Mistress are in Effect but one and the same Word, they differing only in Gender.

Sir Edward Coke says, 3 Instit. fol. 20 & 22. The Judges shall not judge à simili, or by Equity, by Argument, or by Inference of any Treason; but new or like Cases were to have been referred to the Determination of the next Parliament: Ubi terminatæ sunt dubitationes Judiciorum, says Bracton.

Let us in the next Place examine the Authorities in Law, and Book-cases, cited by this Author of the Antidote, and see how far they make good his Opinion, that meeting and consulting to make an Insurrection against the King, or raise a Rebellion, (which is the same with levying War, within the Words of 25 Edw. 3.) tho' the Rebellion be not actually raised, is High Treason within this Law of 25 Edw. 3. For so he proposes the Question, fol. 5. of his Book. And if he does not confine his Argument to that Statute, he says nothing to the Lord Russell's Case.

To prove the meeting and consulting to make an Insurrection against the King, or raise a Rebellion within the Kingdom, (tho' the Rebellion is not actually raised) is High Treason within the Statute of 25 Edw. 3. cap. 2. (which, put all together, is the Position the Antidote maintains): He cites the Case of Constable, mentioned in Calvin's Case, Sir Edward Coke's 7th Rep. fol. 10. b. and thence infers, that whatsoever tended to the deposing of Queen Mary was adjudged Treason for compassing her Death.

And this no Man denies; and it agrees with the Judgment of Sir Edward Coke, in this Chapter of Treason, fol. 6. upon the Word [Mort], where he says, He that declareth by Overt-act to depose the King, does an Overt-act of compassing and imagining the Death of the King: And so says Sir Matthew Hale's Pleas of the Crown, fol. 11. towards the latter End. But what is this to the Point in Hand, which merely concerns a Meeting and Consulting to make an Insurrection, or raising a Rebellion, which is the same Thing with conspiring to levy War? Conspiring to depose the King, and conspiring to levy War, are different things; as conspiring to levy War is clearly held to be a distinct Treason from conspiring the Death of the King. And therefore the former of these (as hath been before observed) cannot by Law be an Overt-act of the latter, as appears by the said Treatise of the Pleas of the Crown, fol. 13. towards the latter End. Nor was conspiring to levy War, without an actual levying of it, any Treason within the Statute of 25 Ed. 3. upon which Statute only the Indictment of the Lord Russell is grounded, as is acknowledged by the Attorney-General. And therefore to supply that Defect, the Statute of 13 Car. 2. does expressly make it to be Treason. But the Lord Russell was not indicted upon that Statute of 13 Car. 2. and for this Reason he ought to have been acquitted upon this Indictment grounded only upon the Statute of 25 Edw. 3.

And if practising with a foreign Prince to make an Invasion, (when no Invasion followed, as the Case of Dr. Story was) Dyer 298. be all one with conspiring to levy War, when indeed no war is raised; it is out of all Dispute, pute, that such Practising, and such Conspiring, cannot be Treason within the Statute of 25 Edw. 3. though it be Treason within the Statute of 13 Car. 2.

In the Case of the Lord Cobham, 1 Jacobi, there was more in the Case than conspiring to make an Insurrection (which is all that the Author of the Antidote takes notice of): There was also an actual Rebellion raised, as appears by the said little Treatise, styled, The Pleas of the Crown, fol. 13. for the People were there assembled to take the King into their Power, as that Book puts the Case of the Lord Cobham.

And so it is in the Case of the Lord Grey: For there they had not only conspired to make an Insurrection, but farther, to seize the King; and get him into their Power; which is a direct conspiring against his Person, which naturally tends to the Destruction of his Person, and is the same with conspiring his Death, as hath been usually expounded: But 'tis otherwise merely to conspire to make an Insurrection, which can be no more than conspiring to levy War. The Case of Sir Henry Vane, and Plunket, had many other Ingredients to mount them up to Treason, which differentiates them from my Lord Russell's Case.

As to the Point of Misprision of Treason, with which the Author of the Antidote concludes, I have fully declared my Opinion already in the former Part of this Discourse; and, I think, plainly evinced, that tho' the noble Lord might be present while others might between themselves privately debate Matters, and conclude upon them, yet it did not clearly appear by any Proofs, that this noble Lord ever gave the least Consent to what was so concluded; without which Consent it could not amount to Treason, but at the most be a Misprision only. Nor must any Man's Life be taken from him upon Presumption or probable Arguments, but by plain, direct, and manifest downright Proofs. But a more strong, and indeed a violent Presumption lay quite the other way, that this noble, prudent; and pious Lord could never be guilty of such a Crime, as to conspire the Death of King Charles the Second: It was extremely against his Interest so to do; for the Life of that King, so long as it continued, by the Blessing of God, was the great Security, both he and all good Protestants had against the greater Danger that might happen by the Change arising by the Death of that King, of losing our Religion, and all our Civil and Religious Rights, as the Experience we have lately had, hath sadly taught us: And if any thing were consulted between this excellent Lord and those with whom he met, as is more than probable, it was how to secure themselves against those Dangers they saw so near approaching, if the Life of King Charles the Second should fail; there was so great a Cause to fear them, considering who was like to succeed in the Throne.

The Magistracy and Government of England Vindicated. In Three Parts: Containing, I. A Justification of the English Method of Proceedings against Criminals, &c. II. An Answer to several Replies, &c. III. Several Reasons for a general Act of Indemnity. By Sir Bartholomew Shower.

IN the present Age, when the Variety and Multiplicity of new Prints is such, that the Money and Time required for their Purchase and Perusal, is more than an ordinary Gentleman can reasonably allow; it may deservedly be thought a Nuisance to the Publick to have their Numbers increased; especially since the Complaint of the ingenious Author of the Trimmer's Character, that for this very Cause, he could almost have wished himself unable to read; but yet the Support of Magistracy and Government is a noble Theme, so useful to the Publick, and so generally agreeable to the Humour of Mankind, that the mere Subject will (I presume) be an Excuse for this Publication, if any thing can be so.

At this time of Day none would have thought that a Necessity should happen of writing upon such a Topick, when every English Protestant was entertaining himself with the pleasing Prospect of impartial, due, and indifferent Administrations, when Authority was becoming amiable and easy to the People, when the People were inclining to a Zeal and Affection for the Honour of Magistrates; in short, when the Law was recovering its clouded Credit: In this Conjunction none expected to see all the Pillars and Posts in the Town daubed with plentiful Title-pages, (like so many Histriomastixes of William Prynne's) directing their Spectators to Books of Obloquy and Reproach, not only on the Persons and Opinions, but the Authority of Judges; when neither of the three are corrigible, or so much as censurable any otherwise than in and by a Parliament: much less was it expected, that Gentlemen of the long Robe would appear in Print to ridicule their own Profession, and expose our Law even to the Scorn of Foreigners. It would not have been so very strange to have seen a Doctor of the Commons exercising his Wit and Railery on the Common Law Proceedings, when he saw his dearest Diana, I mean his Excommunication Process, in Danger of becoming useless, and a fair Occasion given him for such an Essay from the Disgust of the People against Westminster-Hall.

But none imagin'd, that Satires and Invectives upon past Proceedings should be writ by Lawyers, who expect a farther Benefit from their Profession by the Grace and Favour of the Government; which if they happen to acquire, according to their Expectations, I would only remember them, that Mocking is Catching in the Proverb. There was once upon a Time a certain Master of Arts, who, whilst at Cambridge, did ridicule and expose the Clergy of the English Church, by writing the pretended Causes of their Contempt; but the Templars said, that he, whilst at London, did give an Occasion for a third Part to the same Tune, or at least a new Edition of the Book, with Additions by the Author himself, even of his own dull—as proper for the like Use. In petty Corporations they who have most complained of other Hardships have frequently outdone their Predecessors, when once they have got their Places. A whining, complaining Servant doth often prove a peevish, imperious Master; and I am sure in the Inns of Court, the most noisy, troublesome and mutinous Students and Barristers make the stiffest and most magisterial Benchers. I make no Application, but I leave the Reader to what he pleaseth. Better things are to be hoped of all concerned in publick Government.

Since the Press seems open, and Lawyers Books are published without a Licence, another may assume the same Liberty with equal Authority, and with more Reason, when his Province is only to correct the Misrepresentations of Things, Actions and Persons, tho' made by Authors of Age, Experience, Figure, and Learning, (I will not say Candour or Honesty) especially since they are private Men, and having vented their own Thoughts in Print, they remain no longer theirs, but are equally exposed to the Censure or Applause of every Reader. Besides, 'tis generally presumed, that an Author expects a publick Animadversion, or otherwise he would never have become such. He presumes his Arguments irrefragable, and then an Answer does him no Mischief; and if they are otherwise, he deserves it. And surely he stands as liable to be corrected by others, as others were to be censured by him. And it is more warrantable certainly to write and print for the Vindication of former Proceedings, that it can be either candid or genteel to arraign or expose them; especially, since to do so, is, and must needs be, mischievous to past, present, and future Governments, as Experience will unquestionably teach us; but the other is, and will be, of Service to future Administrations, by maintaining the Reputation and Credit of judiciary Proceedings.

It is well known, that the Lord Russell being so unfortunate as to fall under the Accusation of Treason, was the most pitied of any under those Circumstances, by all who knew either his Family or personal Character; great Expectations were then had of the Issue of that Trial, the Event gave great Occasion for Discourse afterwards, and almost ever since; the printing of his last Speech, with the several Answers to it, did much augment the Talk. It cannot but be remember'd how various and different the Sentiments of most were upon that Subject; the Debates concerning it generally concluded in a Pity to his Person and Relations, as a great Misfortune upon both, and in Truth upon the Nation, that a Gentleman of such Qualifications should be guilty of so much Inadvertency, (to say no worse) as to engage so frequently in such Consults as he unhappily did. Some blamed the Jury, most censured the Witnesses, but very few arraigned either Counsel or Court; and in Truth, the Fairness and Indifference of that Trial was such, that his own Relations were pleased, and his Enemies angry, with those that then sat upon the Bench; and thus it continued till the present Revolution.

Then the Memory of that unfortunate Gentleman was revived by the Publication of a Defence of his Innocency. The Name subscribed to the Title-page is so great, that I should be afraid to proceed, but that I am resolved not to be known; and therefore if any thing falls from my Pen indecent or disrespectful, he must excuse it, as a Privilege claimed by Authors, especially of Books that have no Name to them.

To begin at the End; For what Purpose was that Pamphlet printed?

It could not be for the Good of the Nation, as a Means for Consumption of Paper; for, as I have been told, that's a French Commodity.

It could not be for the Bookseller's Profit, only, for a Reason to be guessed at.

It could not be for the sake of that Lord's Memory, or any of his surviving Relatives; for no Man will think it a Service to them, to renew the Thoughts of that unhappy Accident in so noble, antient, and worthy a Family. In Truth, the whole Treatise is nothing but a painting to the Life the too deep Concern of that Branch on't in a weak as well as criminal Enterprize; for what else doth signify the Expression, pag. 4. that being present at a Consult of Traitors a second Time, or oftener, raises a strong Suspicion, that the Party who does so, likes it, consents to it, and approves it; or else he would have forborn after his having been once amongst them? And many other such Expressions there are with the like Reflections, as pag. 7. that Rumsey and Sheppard, the two first Witnesses, &c. raise a strong Suspicion upon my Lord, and make it probable that he was guilty. And in the same Page the Author seems to agree him guilty of Misprision. And pag. 17. he republishes the Evidence of Rumsey, that there was a Consent, and this the Author agrees to be High Treason; but he then endeavours to invalidate the Credibility of that Evidence, by shewing the Wildness of his own Memory. Now how this could serve the Reputation of the Deceased, or cure the Resentment of his Relations upon that Account, I confess myself utterly unable to imagine. Nor can any Reader suppose the Title verified by the Book, viz. A Defence of Innocence, when there's not one Word to be read of it but in the Frontispiece. Surely there's no Thanks due to the Author from that Family, no more than was an extraordinary Fee due to that Lawyer who pleaded for a Defendant to this Effect: My Client, I must confess, is a Wag, but not so great a Wag as the Counsel of the other Side would represent him; their Proof is very strong, but not so strong as they would boast it to be; our Defence is but dark and weak, but not so weak as they would argue it. So that the Book could not be writ for a Service to that Family, unless a Concession of Guilt can be called a Vindication of Innocence.

It could not be for the sake of the Government: For it can never be deemed a politick Service to rake into old Sores, when lenifying and moderate Methods are more advisable; and if every thing should be republished which hath given Disgust to the People, few would escape the Lash, the Righteous themselves would scarcely be saved; for Abundance of them have tript either in their publick or private Conversation, and some in both, and that notoriously too: I name nobody. Besides, the Government must of Necessity never allow the Doctrines divulged in this Pamphlet, unless 'tis intended that its Being and Continuance shall be as precarious as a Beneficito Judgeship, and as dependent upon the People's Humour, Humour, as that is upon the King's: Nor can any Government countenance and encourage the Arraignment of a considerable Number of wealthy worthy Citizens, with the printed Censure and Insinuation of their being a Parcel of corrupt, ignorant, injudicious, dishonest, and partial Fellows; and this is done to the full, when said, that the contrary would have sworn to a Not Guilty, or at leastwise they should, if the Author had been there. But most of his Readers are of another Opinion, notwithstanding the second Letter, pag. 7.

It could not be for the sake of popular Applause; for it's thought, that the Treatise will never deserve or procure it, especially if you take it in Pieces, and consider them apart, and with sober Reflections. So that no Man can tell what it was writ for.

When the Title of the Book, and the Name of the Author was first published, Mankind was full with a pregnant Expectation of some rare, abstruse, uncommon Learning upon the Point of Treasons, with which the World was before unacquainted. No Man looked for a Preachment concerning the Body and Blood of our Saviour, the World to come, and the Guards of Heaven, as Topicks proper for an Animadversion upon that Trial, especially from such an Author. But there's nothing strange under the Sun.

The Preface is an Encomium upon the Author himself, declaratory of his Readings for publick Services, and seems to be calculated for a Cooler, or a Defence against the Heats and Rigours of an harsh and oppressive Government, for an Help to such as may possibly hereafter fall into the like Danger and Trouble: And to teach the People the Fear and Jealousy of a Possibility of such Occurrences again, can never be thought a publick Service. As to part of the Preface, it is so dark, that a slender Understanding can never reach the Sense of it, I mean that long Paragraph, The Copies of, &c.

The first Letter begins with a seeming Shew of a bold Resolution in the Author to perform the Duty of a friendly Counsel, maugre all the Inconveniences that might happen to himself thereby. But it concludes with an extraordinary Caution and Care to prevent all Danger, even to such a Degree as much diminishes the Credit of that invincible and heroick Resolution at first boasted of. And if his Courage had been so strong, why were not these Letters published formerly, and in Times, when, in the Author's Judgment, there was more Occasion for their Use, than the present can possibly afford? But rather it may be again asked, why they are printed at all, the Observations contained in them having been printed not above 500 Times already, and perhaps with as much Advantage? Was it a Secret to the World, that a Variance between the Indictment and the Evidence might be alledged on the general Issue? Did no Man in Town know that Treason and the Misprision of it are different Crimes? Is the Distinction between them such a new Invention, and so very useful, as to be an Equivalent for the want of Counsel in capital Trials, as the Preface and Letter do insinuate, if they do any thing? Who ever doubted, but that Proofs of Treason must not be by Hearsay or Argument only? Was it ever a Question, for this hundred Years, but that every Indictment of Treason must contain an Overt-act? Or that less than two Witnesses was allowable for Proof of that Crime? Or did any Man ever scruple but that Keeble's Statute-book contains a true Copy of the 13 Car. 2. cap. 1. which requires Witnesses credible? Now if these Questions must be answered in the Negative, how can the Advice of these Letters be assistant to a better Defence than was known long since?

The Book itself begins with Stories of Transubstantiation of Bodies, and Transmigration of Souls, as much to the Purpose, as the Parson's Text was to his Doctrine, who preach'd upon the Certainty of the Day of Judgment from that Verse in Genesis, And Adam knew Eve, and she conceived, &c. But perhaps the Author intended all that first Page for a Flourish, and to entice his Reader into a patient Perusal of what follows, and prejudice him against the Sheet he pretends to answer. He is very frank in styling it a libellous Pamphlet, and the Author some rank bigotted Papist; but to what Purpose no Man can divine, unless it were to expose him to the Rage of the Mob; but his Name was never posted, and so he is safe from that Danger.

The Assertions are two, that there was neither Charge nor Proof; that the Indictment and Evidence were both insufficient.

I must confess, that it would be a mighty Addition to the Liberty of the Subject, to have the Law established and declared to be what the late Judge doth argue it is; for then there would be a Freedom for Malecontents to endeavour their own Satisfaction by Conspiracies and Consults, and that with Impunity. But as the Law was, and always hath been taken to be, an English Subject hath very little Colour for his Pretence to such a Privilege as that Doctrine gives.

The Indictment is, That at such a Place and Time he did compass and imagine not only to deprive the King of his Government and Royal State, but to kill and put him to Death, and to procure a miserable Slaughter amongst the King's Subjects; and to subvert the Government of England, and to raise a Rebellion against the King. Then follows, That to fulfil and perfect these Treasons and traitorous Imaginations, he, together with other Traitors, did then and there with them traitorously consult, conspire, conclude and agree to raise a Rebellion, and to seize and destroy the Guards of the King's Person, contra, &c. Now whether these last Acts be not a natural and genuine Evidence of the former, let any rational Man judge. But I will particularly prove, that this Indictment was sufficient to warrant the Judgment which the Court gave, and pronounced upon a Verdict, that the Accused was guilty of that Fact in the Indictment, and then answer the Objections started against it.

First, There's a sufficient Treason alledged. And secondly, Here's a sufficient Overt-act. Both these I'll agree are necessary; and if either were wanting, the Indictment was naught. Now it must be agreed to me, that the first is clear and plain; for by the Law, to compass or imagine the Death of the King, Queen, or their eldest Son, is High Treason. It is true, by the same Law, some open Act of which human Justice can take a Consuance, is requisite to be proved; the very Words of the Statute do expressly require it; and in Truth it is no more than what must have been, had no such Words been used: For Thoughts are secret, and can never be arraigned, proved, or censured, any otherwise than as they are discovered by some Overt-act; so that the Clause requiring an Appearance of the Compassing and Imagination by some Overt-act or open Deed, is no more than would have been impliedly requisite, had the Clause been omitted. 'Tis the Imagination and Compassing which is the Treason, that alone is the Crimen læsæ Majestatis, which is prohibited and condemned; the Overt-act is not the Treason, that's only a necessary Circumstance, without which no Court can ever take Consuance of the other. And it is necessary to alledge some such Deed, a necessitate rei, without respect to the Words of that Statute. I insist the longer upon this, because it is used as an Objection, that the Clause of proveably attain'd by, &c. is restrictive, whereas it is not so; for it is only to make that first specified Treason of Imagination and Compassing to be a thing intelligible and triable: And farther to prove this, it is considerable, that this Requisite of the Overt-act is of Use and Necessity barely, and only in the Case of that which is first mentioned, viz. Compassing. For the other sorts of Treason are Acts themselves whereof Notice may be had, as levying of War, violating the Queen's Bed, and the like; and in an Indictment you need only alledge the Facts themselves, as that there was a War levied, there was a carnal Knowledge had, and the like. And this farther appears from the very Form of Indictments used ever since that Statute; for there never was an Indictment (and if there were, it could never be good) barely averring an Overt-act without an express Allegation of the Compassing.

Then the Matter results solely into this Question, Whether the Fact here laid be naturally and necessarily declaratory of the Party's Imagination to destroy the King; for if so, the Indictment is undoubtedly good; and it can never be called a constructive Treason, or a thing devised by the Judges Interpretation of the Statute; for they adjudge no more Treason, than what the Statute declares, and that is an Imagination of the King's Death. Now whatsoever is significative of a Man's Intention or Imagination, is a sufficient Overt-deed to demonstrate, that that Man had such Intention or Imagination; and whatsoever is expressive or significative of a Man's intending, compassing, or imagining of the King's Death, is a sufficient Overt-act to prove and make such a Man a Traitor within this Law. Now that a Consult about, and an Agreement and Conclusion actually to seize the King's Guards, and raise a Rebellion, are a natural and genuine Declaration, that the Person who did so consult, agree, and conclude, did compass and imagine the Death of the King, is surely plain enough: For a Rebellion, if successful, can determine in nothing else but the King's Death, either natural or civil, which is all one within this Law. Now he that designs and intends the necessary Means naturally conducing to a particular End, that Man may certainly be said to intend and design that End, Causa Causæ est Causa Causati. If the Deed tend and conclude to the Execution of the Treason, that's a sufficient Overt-act, says Coke, 3 Inst. 12. And in the same Book, fol. 6. he hath these Words, That he who declareth by Overt-act to depose the King, is a sufficient Overt-act to prove, that he compasseth and imagineth the Death of the King; and so it is to imprison the King, to get him into his Power; and to manifest the same by some Overt-act, this is also a sufficient Overt-act for the Intent aforeaid.

In 3 Inst. p. 12. 'tis held, That a Preparation by some Overt-act to depose the King, or take the King by Force and strong Hand, or to imprison him till he hath yielded to certain Demands, that is a sufficient Overt-act to prove the Compassing and Imagination of the King's Death; for that this, upon the Matter, is to make the King a Subject, and to depose him of his Regal Office; and so he says it was resolved by all the Judges of England, Hil. 1. Jac. 1. in the Case of the Lord Cobham, Lord Grey, Watson and Clark, Seminary Priests; and so he tells us in the same Place, that it had been resolved by the Justices in the Case of the Earls E. and S. Now if we consider the Reason why these were Overt-acts of Treason, it will appear to be only because of their natural Tendency to the Accomplishment of that particular Treason of Compassing, which holds the same in the Author's Case, as well as in those there mentioned.

A Conspiracy with a foreign Prince is agreed by my Lord Coke, ib. 14. to be Treason, if it be to invade the Realm; and an Overt-act of such Practice to be a sufficient Overt-act of a compassing the King's Death; and the Reason is, because such Actions cannot be thought to be intended for any other Purpose; and yet that particular Act may be accomplished; and it may so happen as that the King's Death may not follow, and yet they are Overt-acts of that treasonable Imagination, because of their Conduciveness and Tendency thereto. The Case of Cardinal Pole was, writing a Book of the Pope's Supremacy, in which were contained Incitements of Charles the Emperor to an Invasion of this Realm; and that was held an Overt-act of imagining the King's Death. In the Lord Cobham's and Sir Walter Raleigh's Case, a Conspiracy, Consult and Agreement to promote an Insurrection, and procure an Invasion, was held an Overt-act, 1 Jac. 1. and their meeting, consulting and agreeing, was laid as an Overt-act, though discovered before the Thing took Effect. Dr. Story's Case, which is mentioned by the Lords Dyer and Coke, was no more than a Practice or Persuasion to promote an Insurrection and Invasion; and the Overt-act that was alledged, was the writing of Letters for that Purpose, which is no more influential towards it, not so much as frequently meeting, consulting and conspiring, and at last concluding and agreeing to make an Insurrection. The Case of Mr. Coleman was no other; for whatsoever the Indictment laid, the Evidence was only of Letters to the like Effect (as to this Point) with those of Dr. Story; and the Case of Dr. Story was before the 13 Eliz. which made a new Treason during her Life; for the Trial was in Hilary Term, and the Parliament did not begin till April following. A Machination or Agreement to raise a Rebellion naturally tends to the Destruction both of King and People, and an Advice to it hath been adjudged so. As in the Reign of Hen. 4. one Balsbal going from London, found one Bernard at Plough in the Parish of Osley in the County of Hertford; Balsbal told him, that King Rich. 2. was alive in Scotland, (which was false, for he was then dead) and advised him to get Men, and go to King Richard; in Mich. 3. Hen. 4. Rot. 4. you'll find this adjudged Treason. Throgmorton's Case is as plain, for for his was only a Conspiracy to levy War within this Realm; he did not join in the Execution, and the Conspiracy alone was declared to be a sufficient overt Act by the Judges. 'Tis no Answer to it to say, that a War was afterwards levied, for quoad him 'twas a bare Consult; his Offence was no more than that. In Sir Henry Vane's Case, Meeting and Consulting were alledged and held to be overt Acts. The Case of Constable, mention'd in Calvin's Case, was only an Act tending to deposing the Queen, as dispersing Bills in the Night, that Ed. 6. was alive and in France, and held an overt Act declarative of his compassing her Death, and he was executed for it. And in the Report of Calvin's Case you have several other Cases mentioned, where Endeavours to draw Subjects from their Allegiance have been adjudged overt Acts of this Species of Treason, the Compassing, &c.

The Word Compass in the Statute is of a larger Extent than only to mean an actual Assault on the King's Person, and an Endeavour to cut his Throat; it most certainly implies any Consult or Practice of another thing directly which may produce that Effect, as the dissuading People from their Fidelity: Such was Owen's Case in K. Ja. I. his Time, in the 13th Year of that Reign. This Advice was to this Effect: That King James, being excommunicated by the Pope, might be killed by any Man, and that so to do was no Murder; for being convicted by the Pope's Sentence, he might be slaughter'd without a Fault, as an Executioner hangs a Criminal condemned by Law; and for this he was hang'd as a Traitor. He that denies the Title to the Crown, and endeavours to set it upon another's Head, may do this without a direct and immediate desiring the Death of him that wears it (so said Saint John in his Argument against the Earl of Strafford); and yet this is Treason, as was adjudged in the Case of Burton, and in the Duke of Norfolk's Case, 13 Eliz. This denying of the Title, with Motives, tho' but impliedly, of Action against it, hath been adjudged an overt Act of compassing the King's Death, as it was in John Sparhawk's Case, Pafch. 3 Hen. 4. Rot. 12. The like was the Case of John Awater, who was indicted for a Treason of that Nature in Kent, and the Indictment removed into B. R. Trin. 18 Edw. 4. see Rot. 17. and he was thereupon afterwards outlawed as a Traitor; and so was Tho. Heber at the same time; and Words significative of an actual Intention have been held so, as are the Opinions of Yelver. 107. 197. Arthur Crobagan's Case, Cro. Car. 332. and abundance of others might be named as they are reported in our Law-Books, but I do not particularly mention them; for that their Authority in some of them is very slender, and may be ill used, to the straining of rash unadvised Words into a Signification of a Man's compassing, when perhaps the Man never thought as he spoke: However all of them do evince, that advised and deliberate Preparations moving to a Danger to the King's Person, have all along been held overt Acts of a compassing his Death: and some of them prove, that Preparatives and Motives to the levying of a War have been held Treason, as was Sir William Ashton of Suffolk, 31 Hen. 6. mentioned in Cro. Car. 119. for making Ballads reflecting upon the King, and writing Letters to the Men of Kent, exciting them to rise to aid the then Duke of York, &c. ad guerram levandum, and no mention of any War actually levied. Germain and Taylor's Indictment hath very little more in it mentioned, than the like Preparations and Incitements to a Rebellion; and yet the Treason there laid was a compassing of the King's Death, anno 2 Ed. 4. The Case of Thomas Burdett, in 17 Ed. 4. as at large it appears in the same Report of Cro. Car. amounts to no more than the Indictment in Question, viz. that he compassed the King's Death; and to accomplish that Intention, he did disperse diverse Writings, &c. ad intentionem that the People should rise and levy War, &c. the Judgment in that Case, Drawing, Hanging and Quartering. The like in Collingbourne's Case, 2 Rich. 3. in the same Rep. 122. where he is indicted in like manner, for exciting and moving the People to an Insurrection and War, and he incurred the like Judgment; which Cases are infinitely short of this in question: And it cannot but be wonder'd, that any Man, who has read them, should question, whether a consulting and conspiring about Rising, and an actual Agreement and Determination to rise, be an overt Act of compassing the King's Death. In the very Trial of the Lord Stafford it is affirmed by Sir William Jones, (who was certainly of great Authority with the Author) that the meeting and consulting together is an overt Act, tho' the Thing agreed on be never put in Execution; and 'tis there resolved by the Judges, that the same Treason may be proved by two Witnesses to several overt Acts, tho' one speak of Words or Actions that were spoken or done at one Time and Place, and another speak of Words and Actions at another Time and Place, which argues, that Words, much more a Consult and Agreement, may make an overt Act. Even in the Case of Stephen Colledge, in which though the Trial had been censured, yet the Indictment never was, and in that Indictment the Treason is laid as in this Case, that he traitorously imagined and compassed the King to depose, kill and destroy; the overt Acts are, that he armed himself, and advised others to arm, and spoke several Words, &c. Here was no War levied, only a Preparation, and yet that was allowed an overt Act: And as for the Words, if they are allowed to be one, with much more Reason may meeting, consulting, concluding, and agreeing to do.

As to the Objection, surely there is no Weight in the first, which is Page 10. that criticizes upon the Word sait Act, and that 'tis only a Meeting to agree, and an Agreement to do, but 'twas not done. Suppose they had concluded and agreed to poison or stab, &c. according to the Opinion in that Page, this was no Treason; for 'tis only agreeing and concluding upon a thing to be done, but it is not done. He doth in Page 13. argue, that this can never be an overt Act of compassing the King's Death, because levying War is a distinct Species of Treason, and a conspiring to levy War is not a levying War; and even levying War itself cannot be assign'd as an overt Act of Compassing, unless the Indictment were particularly for that; but surely another sort of Act that favours of another Species of Treason, if it naturally conduce to the accomplishing of the first Species, viz. that of Compassing, it may be assigned as an overt Act of it; and Sir Henry Vane's Case is quite otherwise; for there a levying War was the overt Act alledged of the Compassing, and allowed by all the Judges; and all the Indictments in the West upon Mon- mouth's Rebellion were so; and yet drawn by very good Advice; Besides, what Answer can be given to the Cases which I have cited, where Consults, Conspiracies, Practices, Advices, Letters, Persuasions, and other Motives and Preparatives to an Insurrection, have been held overt Acts of an Imagination of the King's Death, tho' no War was levied, tho' no Insurrection was made?

'Tis apparent from what was said before, that to take the King Prisoner, or to seize his Person, is a compassing of his Death; and if so, then to sit in Council to conspire the effecting of that, is an overt Act of compassing the King's Death; and this Case amounts to that: Here was a Consultation to seize upon the King's Guards, which could tend to nothing but the seizing of his Person; and then the Consequence is plain. The Author says, Page 14. If it had but been alledged in the Indictment, that in pursuance of the Consult and Agreement, there had been a View of the Guards, and a Report made, that the thing was feasible, this would have been more to the Purpose. How much more, no Man can tell; for every Objection in the Book would have been as good against that as this. The great Objection he seems to rely on, is, That the Law takes no Notice of them: For once I will suppose that it doth not, and then let us observe if any Argument can be drawn from thence: Perhaps the thing was not used or known when the 25 Ed. 3. was made. Can nothing be Treason, if the Plot laid to accomplish it be concerning a thing not in esse at the Time of the Statute? Certainly it may. If several Malcontents should consult, and agree, and prepare (in order to an Insurrection) to seize the Tower, Portsmouth, Hull, and Plymouth Fort, would not this be an overt Act of Treason? And yet our Law takes no Notice of any Garisons there or any where else; they have no relation to the Militia, nor were there any Arms in those Places in Ed. 3. his Time, that we read of in our Law-Books: If this be otherwise, why did not the Author find Fault with Rouffe's Indictment, which was tried much at the same time with this in question? Suppose all the Gentlemen Pensioners, Grooms of the Stole, Gentlemen of the Bed-chamber, and the like, killed in the Night, and the Doors in Whitehall broken up, and all the Swords, Muskets and Pistols were taken away, and yet it happen'd that the King's Person was left untouch'd; would this be an Act of Burglary and Murder only? We have no Law-Books that take notice of Arms at Whitehall, or such Names as those Servants go by; and suppose, at the same time, upon the Consult, that the Conspirators did move, discourse, debate, and conclude of an Insurrection, would it not then be Treason? If not, nothing can be so, unless the King's Person be murdered or seized; and the Statute should not have said Compass or Imagine, but Seize or Kill, &c. It suffices then, that the Guards are in common Understanding known to be used and employed for the Attendance upon, and Preservation of his Person. If common Sense and Reason be Judge, no Man can think but that he who intended to move an Insurrection, and seize the Guards, had a further Design upon the King's Person: and then this is Treason; if otherwise, the King of England is in a worse Condition than the worst and meanest of his Subjects; for a King must not, cannot, in or by our Law, assault, strike, seize, attack, or imprison in Person, and consequently cannot defend himself; and shall not his Servants, Guards and Attendants, (which are all of the same Nature) wear a Sword, or carry a Musket, before him? If they do so, is it not then known that they do it? If it be commonly known to be so, doth not he that seizes and destroys those Attendants, endanger the King's Person? And if that be so, the Inference is easy. It can never be, it will never be allowed for Law, that a Seizing all the King's Guards is only a Breach of the Peace, unless we renounce the Law, and will judge more by Inclinations and Partyships than by Reason and Precedents. As to the Distinctions between an actual seizing them, and a Consult and Agreement to seize them, what I have urged before overthrows it, and what the Author says doth not maintain it; for both have a Tendency to the Execution of the Treason intended.

I will not take the Pains to remark upon all the Inconsistencies of the Concessions and Denials in the Book; they are obvious to the Readers. As to his Quarrel at the King's Guards as an illegal thing, and terrible to the People, somewhat of the French Growth, I hope the King will always preserve them for his own personal Preservation, notwithstanding the Author's Opinion. As to his temporary Laws, which declare Words Treason, most Part of them were affirmative of the old Law, and were made only in Compliment to a new-crown'd Head, when they prohibited nothing but what was before so; and for the rest, no Conclusion could be made from them for the Maintainance of his Assertion, if he had repeated them; which since he does not, nor will I.

As to the Cases cited by the Author of the Antidote, (which I have mentioned) he agrees to Constable's Case, but does not distinguish it in its Reason from that in Dispute. He denies the Authority and Law of Dr. Story's Case, which nobody ever denied before him. He says, that in the Lord Cobham's Case there were People assembled, but gives not any Answer to what the Antidote affirmed, viz. That the overt Act taken notice of in the little Book, called, The Pleas of the Crown, was only the conspiring to make an Insurrection. He doth confess, that in the Lord Grey's Case there was only a Conspiracy: He says, that in Sir Henry Vane's and Plunket's Case, there were several other Ingredients to mount them to Treason; but what they were, nobody must learn, at least not from the Author, for he names none of them.

He consumes half a Page in an Encomium upon the Judiciousness of that Court, which made a conscientious legal Scruple, Whether the Murder of a Mistress by her Servant were Petit Treason, by reason of the Difference of her Gender? But at last he tells us, that the Judges of the Common Pleas did upon much Deliberation satisfy those of the King's Bench, that Master and Mistress were in Effect but one.

In the Conclusion of the first Letter, he says, that conspiring against the King's Person, is most justly taken to be to conspire against the King's Life; but in the Book he will not allow a conspiring and agreeing to seize (i. e. beat and destroy) the Guards, which are ordinarily and commonly known to attend the King's Person, to be a conspiring against his Person; which whether it be or not, the next Trial of this Nature will determine. Now, after all, what can be a greater Reflection upon the Learning, Judgment and Integrity of the King's Counsel, Judges and Recorder, than to declare and publish in Print, that the first prosecuted, the second tried, and the last condemned, a Gentleman as a Traitor, when the Charge had nothing in't of that Nature: If true, the bare printing it is unbecoming the—But as for their Reputations, let them justify themselves. The Reason of my undertaking to explode such a Reflection, was my own and every Man's Duty to the present Government, (the King and Queen's Majesties being both concerned, and eminently too, in the Consequence of such Doctrines) and a Love to my Countrymen, that they may not presume upon the Authority of such a Defence; for if they do, they may find their Mistake, when noosed through the Power of Truth, the contrary Opinion.

As to the Proof, I will not rake into it, since the Author hath represented too much of its Strength, and De mortuis nil nisi bonum; it can never be thought a grateful Province to debate or convince of Guilt; but yet I may say so much, that there was Evidence enough to justify all concerned in the Prosecution and Trial, though for several Reasons the Attainder is fit to be reversed; but hardly for those which this Author mentions.

Since the Writing of this Sheet, there came to my Hands a Treatise, calling itself, The Lord Russel's Case, which favours more of Policy than Law, and his Topicks are the Rights of the People and Power of Parliaments; they argue the Author to be a greater Statesman than Lawyer, and therefore much too great for me to encounter; and a Debate concerning the Heads he insists on is neither safe nor allowable without Doors. I shall make but three Remarks on what he says: First, He may assure himself, that that Power from which he argues his Law, is now apparently lodged in the Commonalty, not in the Nobility. Secondly, The King's Solicitor (whom he reflects on) twitted more Reason and Law than yet hath been or ever will be answered: And thirdly, The Indictment contained no new constructive Treason, but only that which was plainly and directly declared in and by the 25 Edw. 3. if the Letters of it make Words, and the Words Sense, and one Man may be allowed able to read them as well as another.

Since the writing of the last Paragraph, there came to my Hands another Pamphlet, written by a new Observer; but I suppose the Judges that shall be, will correct that sort of Licentiousness which he assumes in his Remarks; which if they do not, they'll have fine easy Places on't, as well as their Predecessors, and much good may it do them!

A Second Vindication of the Magistracy and Government of England, by way of Answer to the several Replies, &c.

IT is very observable, that since the late Revolution, nothing hath more disturbed our Peace than the Liberty of the Press; and amongst all our new Prints, the most malignant and mischievous Libels on the present Government have been written by those Lawyers who pretend themselves the greatest Zealots for its Honour and Service; which may be suspected as false, unless it be withal considered, that some modern Royalists have nothing recommendatory of themselves, but the Miscarriages of others; and others of them have such great ones of their own, that an Extenuation or Excuse is impossible; and therefore to cloud their own Deformities, they would blacken other Men's Reputations; and, in order to it, they have censured Innocence, and arraigned Laws; and where a Slip or Fault hath been, though so small as scarcely to deserve the Name of one, they have magnified it into an execrable Villainy: And for a Colour of such their Calumny and Slander, they have vented new Gospel and Law both; nay they have broached such Notions to the World, as are directly fatal to that Crown of which they boast themselves the Makers and Supporters; and yet, in doing so, they pretend to merit—

It is strange, but true; for the Fact is plain, and the Consequence too: Upon the present Change, the Republicans of both Gowns did deem it their Policy and Interest to bespatter and reproach other Men's Actions, and, like base and mean Spirits, gave ill Names and Words to every thing in which themselves had not been concerned, and made Reviling so customary, that it is become the modish Sin of the Age. It is most certain, the old English Honour, Frankness, Ingenuity and Good-nature is quite abandoned from some Companies and Places in the Town, and instead of Folly, we have assumed Vice in our common Conversation; instead of Drollery and Banter, the new-fashioned Wit at ----'s allows nothing as acceptable but Lying and Slander; nay, the very Spark of a Courtier hath changed his Note; whereas fustian, gross and false Flattery was wont to be his Talent, he is now got to the other Extreme, i. e. revengeful, weak and false Characters, both of Persons and Actions: Which is the worst is difficult to determine, but Falshood is the most predominant Humour in both; and that Age is surely unhappy, which is plagued with a Surfeit of either, especially when the Excess is so great as now, that no Gentleman can be thought a good Companion, no Clergyman a true Protestant, no Lawyer an honest Englishman, no Courtier a faithful Servant, unless he can and do rail, and snarl, and scold, and that at Things that were justly used in former Times, and must necessarily be used in these Times, and will be so in all Times whatsoever, even in Secula Seculorum: These little stinging Animals do value themselves upon their Honesty, because they find Faults, but it is in Cases where no Eye can spy them but their own; they value themselves upon their Wit, because their Censures are sharp and biting; but that is so easy, so very easy a Province, that Nature teaches even the rudest of her Breed to be satirical, and the Natural oftentimes outdoes the pretended Scholar in Ribaldry, and hath perhaps a better Faculty that way, than Fancy for Picquancy of Reflection.

Now as the Fact is thus criminal and ridiculous both, so must the Consequence prove fatal to the Government, which they would be thought (but intend not) to support; for when once resolved to arraign all past Proceedings, they are forced, for the Maintenance of such their Reflections, to vent those Opinions, Doctrines, and Rules in Divinity and Law, which have in every Age (save one) been justly exploded, as destructive to the Honour and Being of the then Possessors of the Crown; and can conduce to no other End than the utter Subversion of this, and every other Government, that doth but smell of a Monarchy.

It cannot be denied, but in most Reigns there have been some Occasions given for Disgust to the People, that Kings have borne too hard upon their Subjects, that the Subjects have worthily complained of some Warps from the Law; but no Man ever with Sense pretended, that this is a Reason to induce a Belief, that every Act of State, and every Judgment of Law in former times, was arbitrary and unwarrantable: No surely, the Publishers of such Reflections are of another Thought themselves; and some Folks imagine, they who formerly were engaged in seditious Practices against the Crown, would now, upon the present Occasion, explode that Law, which doth condemn such Practices, that they may with Impunity repeat them, whensoever the King or his Ministers shall chance to disoblige them, and that this is the true Reason of half the new Libels and Invectives upon past Proceedings.

It is now apparent to all Mankind, that every Line, or at least Page, of some Men's Works, are designed only as a Courtship to the Mob, by bridling the Sovereignty, and clipping the Prerogative, even to such a Degree, as doth absolutely deprive it of those Rights, Powers, and Authorities, which the ancient Law, continued Usage, and our present Representatives, consent to allow it.

To check this growing Itch of pamphletting the Nation into another Change, and to vindicate the Rights of the Crown, and justify the Magistracy of England, from the Obloquy which was industriously thrown on it in one Particular, there was, three Months since, a Sheet printed and published, at which some Men took Offence; but others were of Opinion, that its Publication was seasonable and well-timed; that its Reflections on the trifling Defence, which it assumed to answer, were just and smooth, and very soft, considering the Occasion given for a more satirical Style, from the Fondness and Incoherence of the Defender's Expressions and Inferences; and that the Mode of managing his Argument was modest and tender, with a decent and due Regard to the Memory of the unfortunate Deceased, which had suffered more than enough of Injury by that pretended Justification.

A cholerick and sedulous Inquiry hath been made after the Author's Name; but the Inquisitor is still at a Loss, notwithstanding his Confidence of a certain Knowledge who it was, that came behind and struck him, &c. But to give him some Satisfaction, after all his Fatigue in searching, I will ascertain who it was not; he may assure himself, that none concerned in that Trial were concerned or privy to its Vindication; and when it was composed and writ, the Party intended it chiefly for his own and the World's Diversion, from the ungrateful Necessity of reading always on one Side, by the Interposul of a few Lines on the other; that our Humours might not be quite soured, and our Genius turn too peevish, through the Influence of Satire and Libel, with which the World hath too much abounded of late Years; nor had there been one Word more published upon that Subject, but that the Authority of the Defender doth challenge a Vindication, and the Word of a Priest says, that it needs one; both shall have an Answer presently.

But, first, it is remarkable, that this new Reply hath got a Licence, when none of his other elaborate Works could procure one; however, it is possible, that the Licenser may hereafter renounce or retract his Allowance in this Case, as he hath done in several others already, when his Superiors are acquainted with the Contents and Tendencies of that to which he hath given his Imprimatur; for it is not to be supposed, that Ministers of State will ever be so incurious of their Master's Honour, and the Rights of his Crown, as to approve their Diminution, when once they perceive it.

The single Point which the Advocate for Magistracy assumed to maintain, was, that the Indictment in question was legal and good, sufficient both for Matter and Form, and did warrant the Judgment which was pronounced upon the Verdict, that affirmed its Truth; this seems the principal Assertion in that Paper, which, whether his Precedents and Authorities, Arguments and Reasons, are sufficient to prove, the Reader must judge; that the Cases he cites, are truly reported for so much as he uses them, none can deny; and that the Law is with them upon the whole Matter, shall be farther evinced.

But since that Sheet hath made some Noise amongst angry Men, (which was little expected by him that wrote it) it will not, I hope, be thought impertinent to spend a few Paragraphs upon the boisterous and blustering Invectives and Remarks made against its Author, in a pretended Reply. In his Vindication, therefore, I shall observe the Temper, the Wit, the Guess, the Reason, the Religion, and lastly, the Law, of that Replication.

As to the Temper, it seems to be writ under some Disappointment; for the Author doth in every Sentence declare his Passion, and plainly tells us, that he was then discomposed; but whether his Displeasure were conceived at a past or present Chief, is not so easy to determine: To expose his Fury, it is enough to repeat his Epithets of Daring, Bold, Impudent, Presumptuous, Base, Ingenuous, Insolent, &c. and all this despised by his reputed Author, and smiled at by the real one. He is pleased to call the Sentence and Execution a plain Murder; which if so, sure I am, that he is bound in Conscience to prosecute an Indictment against the Judges, the Recorder, the Grand and Petit Jury, the Witnesses, the Clerks, the Solicitors, the Gaoler, the Sheriffs, and the Executioner; for they were all concerned either as Accessories, or Principals, and demerit a Halter, if the Repliant's Opinion be Law: But it is observed amongst Honest Men, that none of these Parties shew any Fear on't; and the Reason they give for it is, because the Indictment was as good as their Jurisdiction, and the Concurrence of those two makes them as safe as an Act of Indemnity can do; but all this was Passion.

As to the Wit on't, most of his Readers are at a Loss where to find it, unless it be in his English Verses, which do so hit the Sense of the Original, and contain such strong and pregnant Flights of English Poetry, that some of his Readers have compared them even with Sternhold and Hopkins; and others are of Opinion, that they do not come short of the Essays of the two Gray's-Inn Poets, one of which translated Grætius, de Veritate Christianæ Religionis, and the other Coke upon Littleton, into Rhyme; but the Generality do declare, that for Height of Fancy, Propriety of English, and Exactness of Rhyme, he hath much out-done all those: But for my part, I believe, that last Rhapsody was added, not so much for the Ingenuity sake, as to menace the Answerer with a Design to sacrifice him whenever an Occasion should offer itself, and consequently to do what the whole Book complains of; but that Advocate is not so much a Coward as to be afraid on't.

As for the Guess, it is very cunning, and argues more Figure-knowledge than true Judgment in Styles, Modes, Dialects, or Peculiarities of Speech or Writing; for he will have the Author of that Sheet to be the Author of the Antidote, tho' he never saw it till he had the Misfortune to have read the Defence; and his particular Idioms are as different from those of the Antidote, as they are from those of the Defence; but this is all Guess. He will have it one of the Counsel of that Trial, because he hath put Counsel before Court: A cunning Man would have guessed the contrary, as supposing it done fallendi gratia, for the sake of Disguise; but he may be assured it was mere Accident, that occasioned that Fault. He will have it to be the then Solicitor, because of his Reputation, which is supposed to be touched in that Defence: But his Readers think, that that Gentleman's Figure for Learning, Honour, and Virtue, is so far above the Reach of a little Pamphlet, that all the virulent Reproaches of the Reply cannot fully it, nor is it in the Power of his Tongue or Pen to prejudice his Character in the World; but however, it is prudent to suppose to myself an eminent Adversary, that if a Foil be my Fortune, it may be the easier.

But since we are at guessing; the World guesses, that he who wrote the Reply, did write the Half-sheet called the Justification; and it is really sportive to read the Justifier commending the Defender for a learned worthy Person; and the Repliant doing the same good Office for the Justifier, and almost in the same Words commended him: Nay, he spends a whole Page in the fulsome Praises upon that Small Bulk Author, and rejoices that the Work was done this Hands, which is a very pretty Jest. However, it is at most but R. for A. and A. for R. and R. A. still, which is much better than the contrary Practice, of which some Authors have been guilty.

As to the reasoning Part, the Reader must excuse my Brevity; for in Truth there is very little in it of that Nature; however, a few Remarks may quicken and revive that Faculty against the next Turn. The Advocate owns it to be writ in Answer to his Defence, ergo it reflects upon the Nation's Wisdom. He expresses a Resentment at my Lord Ruffel's engaging in such a weak and criminal Enterprize, ergo he reflects upon the Nation's Justice. He names the Lord Ruffel, (though with the most tender Appellations that could be used) ergo he reflects on that Lord's Memory. He vindicates the Indictment as good, ergo he justifies all the Proceedings in that Case. He argues, that the Sentence was legal upon such a Verdict, ergo is against the Reversal. He puts a Case, offers a Point, and makes a Proof on't, ergo he is transcendently impudent. These and such-like, are the Infatuations, and do demerit a Laugh.

As to Religion, I see none in it, unless it be in the Mention of the devilish Powder Plot, which is still as much to the Purpose of his Reply, as the Story of Transmigration of Souls was to that of his Defence; only Meekness is transparent in his Style, Humility in the Title-Page, and true Christian Charity in his Menaces of an Exception out of the Act of Indemnity, which he repeats three or four times at least, as if his whole Interest were designed to promote it. The Gentleman's Danger is from publick and scandalous Actings in the Eye of the World; which were (says he) labouring to support the Government, every Man knows what Sort; lashing the Innocent with a bitter and sharp Tongue, and inveigling of Juries with rhetorical Flourishes. Now to examine a little these three monstrous Transgressions, let us go backwards. As to the last, a Duty can never be a Crime; every Servant owes Truth to his Master, while such; Every Advocate is to do his utmost, and a Failure in it had deserved both the worst of Names and Punishment, which the Repliant could invent, or his Interest procure. For all Mankind must agree, that the now Servants of the present Crown are obliged to do the like upon the like Occasion; if otherwise the Jacobite's Side will be the safest. I will not reflect on the Weakness of the Juries that were thus inveigled, if any such there were; but rather suppose, that the Oaths of Witnesses, not the Pleading of Counsel, did govern their Consciences. As to the second, that is false, and needs no other Answer. As to the first, that Gentleman's Honour and Merit afterwards is as remarkable as his Fault at first, if it were any; but however he is likely to have abundance of Company, in Desert at least, if not in Censure; for a Duke of York's Creature is certainly as culpable as a King James's Servant. And Andrew Marvel's Characters in his Growth of Popery, will be as true a Directory to decypher Criminals, as the Four Volumes of noted Trials. And perhaps, if the Ordinance of May 10, 1650, should chance to be revived, Danger and Fear may seize other Men, as well as those that served past Governments; it is therefore thought advisable for all to sit down quiet, and forgive and forget what is past, but serve God and their Majesties for the future, and not belabour the excepting one another; for if any should be such Fools, the Knaves will get the better of it, and the Righteous scarcely be saved. So much for Religion.

Now for the Law, if we can find it: But because the Defender seems somewhat displeased at the Repetition of that unhappy Lord's Name, whose Case gives Occasion for the present Question; let us therefore put it like Mooters: John a Styles was indicted, for that he, at such a Time and Place, did compass to deprive his natural Lord and King, that then was, of his Regal State, and to destroy his Life, and to subvert the Government, and raise a Rebellion; and to fulfil that Imagination, he, together with others, did then and there consult and agree to raise a Rebellion against the said King, and to seize and destroy the Guards of the said King's Person, contrary to, &c. The Question was not, Whether J. S. was Not guilty, nor if the Witnesses swore false, whether his Attainder were fit to be reversed; but the Dispute was, Whether that Indictment was legal; whether, supposing J. S. to be found Guilty, the Court that pronounced the Sentence of Treason against him ought to have arrested such Judgment on the Motion of J. S. that the Indictment was insufficient. The Sheet argues, that the Indictment was good, and consequently the Sentence pursuant thereto was warrantable by the Laws of this Land. The Argument seems founded both upon the Reason of Things, and the Authority of Precedents.

First, The Reason alledged was, That the last Part, which in Lawyers Terms is called an Overt Act, was a natural and genuine Sense or Declaration, or overt Signification of the first Part, which is an internal secret Thought, i. e. the Imagination and Compassing, which is the Treason prohibited and condemned. That the latter directly and consequentially tending and conducing, in the common Sense and Reason of all Mankind; (excepting the Defender, and two or three more) to the Accomplishment of the former, makes a good and sufficient Charge within the Statute Edw. 3. A Repetition is tedious, and an Abridgment is scarcely possible, the whole Sheet being but a Breviate; I shall therefore refer you thereto.

Secondly, The Authorities there urged, are either the Opinions of Judges and other Lawyers, or Precedents of Indictments of the like, or the same Nature, from which the Legality of this may be justly concluded: The substance of them on the whole Matter is, That overt Acts to depose the King, or depose him of his Regal Office, or take him by Force or strong Hand, or to imprison his Person till he yields to the Demands of those who practise such Endeavours, are sufficient overt Acts to prove the Compassing and Imagination of his Death: That levying War, causing an Insurrection, promoting an Invasion, nay, that Consults, Conspiracies, Practices, Advices, Letters, Persuasions, and other Motions and Preparations to an Insurrection or Invasion, tho' none succeed, have been held overt Acts of imagining the King's Death. I will not repeat the Cases, but as Occasion offers from the other Side.

The Objections there mentioned and answered from the Penning of the Statute are too trivial to deserve a Remembrance, nor would they have ever been thought otherwise, but that J. S. was a noble Person, and the Defender a great Man, and the Prefacer thought so too, either by himself or others. These and such-like Ingredients, have made some Semblance of Difficulty: And in truth, had there been a real Doubt in the Case, the Author of the Remarks on that Trial, who wanted neither Sense nor Will to censure it, had his Opinion so inclined, I say, he would certainly have fallen foul on it in those invidious Observations of his upon the late Times. He quarrels with the Legality of the Jurors, the Defender with that of the Indictment, and both with the Evidence. The Author of the Sheet differs from them in the two first, but agrees with them in the last, that Testimony delivered for Fear of Life, or Hopes of Pardon, or other Reward, is hardly creditable; but that is not the Point; Let us see if the Replication doth overthrow the Charge as insufficient, and for my Part I cannot find a Line of Argument in it, but only It is naught, because it is naught. The consulting and concluding to make an Insurrection and Rebellion, and seize the King's Guards, is not a Declaration of the Party's compassing the King's Deposal or Death; and why? Because conspiring to levy War is not a levying War, and levying War is a distinct Treason; that is the Substance of the tenth Page, if I can read: The Sheet said truly, That levying War itself might be alledged as an overt Act of Compassing, and hath been so frequently, and meeting and agreeing to rebel and seize the Guards, hath a direct Tendency to promote a Demise of the King either Natural or Civil, and therefore might as well be alledged an overt Act as most Things whatsoever.

I had almost forgot one Clause, and that is the Unnecessariness of making 13 Car. 2. if it should be as the Advocate argues; I suppose he means the first Paragraph, for the second is agreed to be introductive of a new Law, &c. but the first is only a Paraphrase upon the 25 Edw. 3. It is thus, That if any person or persons whatsoever shall, with intent to depose, compass, imagine, invent, devise, or intend Death or Destruction, or any bodily harm, tending to Death or Destruction, or any Imprisonment, or Restraining of the Person of our Sovereign Lord the King, or to deprive or depose him from the Style, Honour or kingly Name of the Imperial Crown of this Realm, or of any other his Majesty's Dominions or Countries, or to levy War against his Majesty, within this Realm or without, or to move or stir any Foreigner or Stranger with Force to invade this Realm, or any other his Majesty's Dominions and Countries being under his Obedience; and such compassings, Imaginations, Intentions, Devices or Intentions, or any of them, shall express, utter or declare by any Writing, Uttering, Preaching, or malicious abused Speeches, being legally convicted thereof by the Oaths of two lawful and credible Witnesses upon Trial, or otherwise convicted or attainted by due Course of Law; then every such &c. Now what is this but a Confirmation of the old Statute in Words at Length; which was agreed to be so in the House of Commons, 1 Jac. 2? When a Motion was made to renew that Law, the Lawyers Answer was, That the 25 Edw. 3. did the same Thing; and a Man may boldly say it, that here's nothing declared Treason, but what had been adjudg'd so before, and Attainders and Executions had pursuant to it: The Sheet mentions Cases enough, and to the Purpose, though some think otherwise; but I'll not repeat them.

In the eleventh Page the Reader is refer'd to the Justification in the Half-sheet; and therefore let's examine that a little: A third Part of it is spent upon the Evidence, but that is not within my Province, which is only to vindicate the Vindication. As to the rest, the Force of it, if any, seems only to be founded on his first Assertion, The Conspiring to do a Thing is not the doing a Thing; and he quotes two great Men's Names for for it: for I would agree that, tho' he had spared the Authority to justify it; but this is sufficiently answered in the Sheet: He offers an Argument from the late Statutes declaring Treasons, because they were temporary; but I answer, as the Sheet doth, they were in Affirmance of the old Law, and I can shew him three or four temporary, and an hundred other Acts of Parliament that are so, and therefore that is no Argument at all; but I am, as the Party I justify was, confin'd to a Sheet, and therefore cannot enlarge.

He lays down a Rule for Construction of Statutes, that a Thing particularized in one Part is not to be construed within the general Words of another Part; but that Rule hath near fourscore Exceptions in the Books; besides it comes not to this Case; for here's compassing the King's Death made Treason, and declar'd by overt Act; then levying War is made Treason: Now, says the Repliant, nothing can be an overt Act of, and conduce to promote and accomplish the first, that doth any ways concern the latter: I say it is a non sequitur; for there are several Instances mentioned in the Sheet, which respect the levying War, and yet are a genuine Evidence of the Intention and Compassing; and if so, the Judges who have ruled such Indictments to be good, did neither assume an arbitrary Power, nor transgress any Rule of Law, as the Half Sheet insinuates.

Then the Lord Cobham's Case is endeavoured to be answered, by a Wonder, that Sir Edward Coke, late Lord Chief Justice, and then Sheriff, should differ from Mr. Attorney Cook; for we know his Thoughts in Sir Walter Raleigh's Time, and his Speeches in Car. 1. his Time; they are as different each from other as the Times were, and in this Particular that Gentleman hath had more Followers than Precedents; but the Query is, What is Law?

Then Sir Henry Vane's Case is endeavoured to be answered by this, that Sydesfin mentions not the overt Act in the Indictment, but he doth say, the Treason alledged was a Compassing the King's Death; and every Man knows what Sir Henry Vane did to accomplish that: He neither sign'd the Warrant to execute that Murder, nor was he actually concerned in it. The Justifier says, he does not remember it printed any-where but in Sydesfin's Report: For the Refreshment of his Memory, I'll tell him of another Book where it is, and that is Keble's first Volume of Reports, 304. and there the Indictment is said to be for Compassing the King's Death, and endeavouring to accomplish the Treason, by changing and usurping the Government, and levying War; which Case doth directly overthrow all the Defender's, Justifier's, and Repliant's Arguments, from the Distinctness or Difference of the Sort of Treason.

Then for Dr. Story's Case, he says, 'tis hard to justify it for Law; whereas there are above forty Places in our printed Law-Books, where 'tis cited and agreed to be Law: Now, 'tis pretty odd, that a Case so resolved, and so ratified, should one hundred and eighteen Years after be arraigned in Print; for 'twas Hil. 13 Eliz. If any thing be Law, that is so, and not distinguishable from this Case in question, but that the Evidence was different, which the Justifier would make a Reason to invalidate this Indictment; the Logick of it passeth all Understanding: Besides, 'tis observable, that the Benches were filled both with Learning and Integrity in 1571 and 1662; neither of those Times were Tory or Popish; and in Dyer, 208. the Reason given was, that it could not tend but to the great Peril of the King's Person, and therefore an Attempt to promote such Invasion, tho' none followed, was adjudged as aforesaid. In 2 Anderson, pl. 2. fol. 5. Grant's Case, 'twas held, That when any Person intendeth or contriveth to levy War, for a Thing which the Queen by her Law or Justice ought or may do in Government as Queen, 'tis not material whether they intend any Hurt to her Person; but if they intend to levy War against the Office and Authority of the Queen, that's enough; and that Resolution overthrows the Justifier's Notion, that J. S. his Design was only to defend the Laws, though the 13 Eliz. also was then in Force; 'tis a good Argument to answer that Pretence.

Now I have repeated and observed all the Replication or Justification offers in Answer to my Friend's Sheet, the Reader may perhaps expect some new Matter, not so much for Confirmation, as to give Occasion for a farther Defence. In Sir Fr. Moor's Rep. fol. 621. pl. 840. on the Trials of the Earls of Essex and Southampton, before the then High Steward, the Justices did there resolve, that when the Queen sent to the Earl of Essex the Keeper of her Great Seal, and others, with a Command to him to disperse the Persons armed which he had in his House, and to come to her, and he did refuse to do so, and continued the Armour and armed Persons in his House, that this was Treason; and they did also resolve, that when he went with a Troop of Captains and others, from his House to the City of London, and there prayed Aid of the Citizens to assist him in Defence of his Life, and to go with him to Court, that he might get into the Queen's Presence, that he might be sufficiently powerful to remove from her his Enemies, who were then attendant, that this was High Treason, because it tended to a Force on the Queen, &c. I make no Inference; let the Reader do that; 'tis plain, that an actual mental Intention of Hurt is not material in the one Case or other. As the Duke of Norfolk's Case is related by Camden in his History of Q. Elizabeth, 163. the Treason which the Duke confessed, was a Plot to seize upon the Tower of London, and deliver the Queen of Scots, and that's all.

There's nothing remains in doubt, but the Legality or Illegality of the King's keeping Guards for the Preservation of his Person; they say the Law takes care of him, and therefore he is to take none of himself; and that the Judges are his Guards, and therefore he needs no other; that Henry VII. was the first that had any other. But let us reason a little: Can it be supposed, that he should be so sacred in his Person, so great in his Power, and of such Authority as to make War or Peace abroad, and raise Forces and suppress them at home, as the Danger or Defence of his Realm should require, and not be able to provide for his own personal Safety de presenti? Can he only punish by his Judges afterwards, or prohibit by Proclamation before, but not defend himself for the present? Is it Sense to suppose it? The Kings of England might have, and actually had, Soldiers or Guards (call them what you will) even in Times of Peace, and long before Hen. VII. as well as continually since; I may be so bold as to defy any Man to shew me the Year, the Month, the Week, or the Day, since the Conquest by William I. that England was without armed Men, actually upon Duty in some Part or other of the Nation. This Sheet is not intended for a studied Argument on this Subject; and perhaps it would be difficult to justify a standing Army as warrantable, when there's no Occasion for it; but to say he can't by Force, even by Force provide for his own personal Safety, when he apprehends it in Danger, as every English King hath continual Reason to do, especially if some Men's Doctrine prevail, it may be modestly affirmed unreasonable: Hath not every Subject Power to keep Arms, as well as Servants, in his House, for Defence of his Person? Is not his Mansion called his Castle? And yet the Law protects him too by Prohibitions a parte ante, and Punishments ex parte post: There are many Tenements in England, which oblige to the annual Payment of certain Sums towards Soldier's Wages, for defence of the King and Kingdom; there are others obliged to the annual finding certain Quantities of Grain in Kind, for the supplying the King's Castles and Garrisons, as well as Household; which being annual, do demonstrate the Lawfulness of their Continuance, even in Times of Peace; and their being immemorial, do conclude a Common Law Right in the Kings of England to have those Occasions, as they do conclude him a Right to have them supplied by such-like Services: Nay, Grand Serjeantry is either by Services of Attendance on the King's Person in Time of Peace, or for Military Aids in Time of War. The Crown may raise Forces by Commission, or the Militia, to suppress Insurrections, in case the Civil Power of the Sheriff is not sufficient or ineffectual. The Kings of England have the sole Power and Force of the Nation: Complaints have been in Parliament against billeting Soldiers contrary to the Will of the Hosts, but never for maintaining a Guard for their own Person at their own Charge; Complaints have been made of a standing Army, but never of a select Company for his personal Preservation; a Terror to the People may as well be pretended from his Coachmen, Footmen, or Grooms, if their Numbers be great: Besides, for a competent Power in Arms he always may have Occasion, when his Subjects know nothing on't; 'tis his Province to foresee and prevent, as well as suppress and punish, domestick Tumults; and the Business of War is separately his Office, and that exclusive of his Subjects, any otherwise than as they are bound to obey and fight, or desired to assist with Aids and Subsidies; and for this, to avoid a numerous Volumn of Citations, I'll name one notable Roll or two in Parliament, 6 Ric. 2. Mem. 9. the Manner and Way of the Prosecution of the War being given in Charge to the Commons to advise upon, they answered, That this nece doit nec flayt appertain al eux, mes al Roy; and so they did, 31 Edw. 3. Parte prim. n. 11. and 2 Ed. 3. n. 5. 'Tis true, in 5 Ed. 2. n. 4. Ordinances were made, that the King without the Assent of his Barons could not make War; but those that were repealed and dampned, 15 Edw. 2. Parl. Rot. M. 13. because prejudicial to the Royal Power of a King; and this is sufficiently affirmed by the Act concerning the Militia, in Car. 2. his Time. It is well known in what Time Bryan Chief Justice said, that if all the Subjects of England should war with the Subjects of another Kingdom, that this is no War unless the King denounces it: It suffices for my Friend's Point, that the King may lawfully have armed Men or Guards, when himself judges his Person or People to be in Danger, or stand in need of them: And that he may, when Reasons of State will not admit their Publication to the World. But however, some standing Force the Crown ever had, and ever will have, though not always to such a Degree as shall be burthensome or oppressive; and our old Law-Books say, that Arms as well as Laws are necessary for the Prince, not only in, but against the Times of Necessity, I mean War or Tumult: Besides, in Bracton, lib. 2. cap. 3. de Corona, 'tis said that Crimen laesae Majestatis is the greatest Crime, because of the Greatness of the Person against whom 'tis committed; his Description of it is, Presumptio contra personam ipsius Regis; then when he particularizes the several Sorts of Treason, the first which he names is, Si quis ausu temerario machinatus sit in (i. e. towards) mortem domini Regis, vel aliquid egerit vel agi procuraverit ad seditionem domini Regis vel exercitus sui, licet id, quod in voluntate habuerit, non perduxerit ad effectum. I'll make no Inference, there needs no Paraphrase, the Words are plain; an Act tending to the Destruction of the King's Host is High Treason against his Person: Agere ad seditionem exercitus Regis est presumptio contra personam Regis, & presumptio contra personam Regis est crimen laesae Majestatis: Now can Bracton be thought to speak only of Treasons in Time of War? Glanvil, lib. 14. cap. 1. Crimen laesae Majestatis dicitur de seditione domini Regis, vel regni, vel exercitus; and Flou, lib. 1. cap. 20. De seditione exercitus sui; & cap. 21. the same Words, Seditionem ejus, vel exercitus sui; this was the Sense of the old Law, and is very appositely applicable to the Case in question, as I could easily shew, would my Paper bear it. There is one Thing which I had quite forgot, and that is, that the Instrument of Grievances which the Prudence of the present Parliament hath provided, complains of a Standing Army; the Answer is easy, 'tis not of personal Guards: And the wise Inquiry of the House of Commons, into the Quantum requisite to maintain such and such Forces during the present Occasion, and of the Expences of the Crown in Household, Courts, Guards, &c. afterwards do plainly shew, that that was not the intended Grievance. Now, to sum up what is not answered at all, or endeavoured to be so by the Defender, nothing is said to the Reason of the Thing, or the Necessity and Nature of an overt Act, to the Opinion of Coke in the Places cited, to the Case of Sir Walter Raleigh, the Case of the Cardinal, the Case of Mr. Coleman, the Case of Constable, the Case of Owen, the Case of Burton, the Cases of Sparhawk, Awater and Heber, the Indictment against Sir William Ashton, Germain and Taylor, and Thomas Burdett, Collingbourne and Colledge, nor to the Opinion of the Judges in the Lord Stafford's Case, as if 'twere all Impertinent; but the Reader is Judge if it be so.

Now for the Prefacer, I'll be as short upon him as he was upon my Friend; he said that the Sheet needed a Vindication, and I have given it one; and if this needs another, I hope the Crown will find a Friend to write some Third. He seems so us'd to the Word Libel, that he cannot forbear calling it an infamous one; he says, it has not one true material Word in it: I'll remember, remember him of one, that Mocking is Catching in the Proverb, that is A Grumbletonian in the Stirrup generally proves a Tyrant—in the Saddle; that's enough for him to remember: If he wants any more Truth, and that he may not say, this hath none in't, Treasons are easier committed than distinguished, by some Men especially; and the Reason why I say this is, because of his Odious Preface, where he is grumbling still, for I always thought that he had smarted too much for libelling on Ministers of State, and Male-Administrations, to venture again; but when a Priest meddles with Law, he is like an Apothecary at Politicks, he generally runs himself into a Noose; for he'll never leave off 'till he's advanced one way or another. To conclude, the Design of the Sheet was to justify the Prerogative of the King and Queen, and the Rights of their Crown; and the Republican is angry that either should have any, and from thence flames the Passion; nay, rather than it should be allowed, they'll attempt another Change, from which good Lord deliver us, Prov. xxviii. 2.

During the Composure of the Premises, News was brought me, that another Pen had been procured to attack the Vindication, viz. The Author that runs a-muck at all Mankind, except his own Patrons: A deserved and full Remark upon so voluminous a Book, is not here to be expected; however, this Appendix may serve for an Advertisement to the World, that the new Repliant is in several Particulars obliged to Solicitor Coke, and the other Regicides Defence on their Trials for much of his Materials. Time is wanting to shew the Parallel; at present 'tis fit to be observed, that his blind Side is also apparent, consequently capable of a sufficient Answer; and to give my Reader a Specimen thereof, I'll take Notice of a few (amongst many) Mistakes, both in Fact and Law, which he hath wilfully committed. In the first Page he says, that to justify what hath been taken ill, accuses the present Government of Injustice; which is false. In pag. 2. he says, That the Vindication ventures on a Point of Law, which it pretends is the Result of the Evidence given; there's no such Pretence in the whole Paper, the only Debate was upon the Indictment. He says, in the same Paper, that it's said his Relations were pleased with the Justness of the Trial; it only says, his Relations were pleased, and his Enemies were angry with those who then sat upon the Bench, and that's true; for some of his Relations cannot deny it, the Fact is so well known. The last Line of page 3. and first of the next are also false; for 'twas neither written, perus'd, nor approv'd by any of his pretended Criminals: I believe they thought the Point too clear to need a Vindication; but this is just like his wonted Positiveness in his Remarks; where, for Instance, he says, that one of the Judgments he cavils at, was the first that was ever given without Argument or Reasons delivered in Court, which is also false; for in Plowden's Comment, 459. in Sir T. Worth's Case, the Author takes express Notice, that the Reasons of the Judgment were not disclosed when the same was pronounced; and fifty other Cases I could name him of the same, but one Instance is enough to falsify a general indefinite Position, though there are several more even in that very Book.

But to run over his Volume, pag. 2. is only a farther scurrilous Reflection to vindicate his own Remarks, and an impertinent Bombast of Words on the Phrase of English Proceedings: The third Page assigns four Reasons of Printing, the two last are applicable to himself only, and he thinks so of the fourth, or else his Story is foolish like---In the fourth Page he bolsters himself in his Raillery, by resorting to his Refuge of the Parliament's Authority that reversed the Judgment, which all Men agree to be just, but it was not because the Recorder did not arrest the Judgment on that trivial Exception to the Indictment, but because the Prosecution was supposed malicious, and the Evidence supposed false or deficient, or both.

The fifth, sixth, eighth, ninth and tenth Pages are all impertinent to the Point in Question, and contain nothing but a Vindication of his justly condemned Clamour in his former Book; concerning which, I'll boldly say it, in seventeen Points of twenty he is out in his Law; if 'twere convenient to publish the Proof on't, I could make it plain. His Design is to shew in those Pages his Wit and Fancy, more than Candour or Law: For my part I am of his Friend's Mind, that he comes not short of the old Observator for managing a Dialogue: But all this is not to the Purpose, he is not come at it yet, the twelfth Page favours of the same Kidney, and the thirteenth and fourteenth are no better: There he vents his Gall, and that in Ribaldry; no softer a Name than Tools can be afforded to Men of Worth and Honour: If himself be one, as some suppose him, I am sure it is not to the present Government; for he plainly condemns it, and declares the People, i. e. his sort of them, unsatisfied with it, for its Sparingness in Vengeance; and it is because others are not punished for maintaining the Law, and themselves not preferred for arraigning it: Some Men know my Meaning. He says, he is only for mumbling of Judges and Council, Causa patet.

But I must tell him two things, 1. The Inclinations of Englishmen, and the Laws of the Land, will never quadrate with a Commonwealth.

2. His supposed Criminals do not depend on their Number, but the Law, which ought and will justify them; if it doth not please, let it be changed by Parliament; or if the Author thinks that a tedious way, let us burn all our Law-Books at once, and then perhaps his Remarks and Reply will be thought to be Reason, and himself the greatest and only Lawyer in the Realm; but till then he must give others leave to know, and to say, that they know he is mistaken: For Resolutions, and Opinions, pursuant and agreeable to the Opinions and Rules of former Ages, I mean frequent and repeated Precedents, approved by the Lawyers of the Age that used them; I say, these will be the Law to the End of the World, unless altered by new Statutes.

And now we are come to debate the Question, all that is past is upon the Times, and not the Point. In p. 18. is his Reasoning part, which is no more than was said before in, &c. To redargue him I must repeat; if therefore he will observe what is said by the Sheet, p. 22. I will say no more on't, but submit to the Judgment of the Reader; he says, the Inferences are ridiculous; I say, they are rational and genuine: The single Issue is, if his or my Friend's Arguments are the most logical and natural, let the Reader judge.

Now for Authority, let us see if he urges any on his Side, or answers that on the other. He admires (p. 24.) at the Assurance of the Sheet-Author, and others admire at his. He says, the Parliament had often adjudged it; but none can shew any Judgment in the House of Lords, or Vote of the Commons House to that purpose. I have shewn the Sense of the present Parliament in the Point of Guards, and his temporary Laws are already answered; nor would any Man but he, and one more, pretend that they are Judgments in the Case. Surely it will not be pretended, that his Case of the Earl of Northumberland, in Hen. IVth's Time, is any thing to the Purpose: Nor is it any Argument to say, no King of England was ever killed for want of Guards.

Now for Cases, p. 26. He saith, that in the Earl of Essex's Case, there was an actual War levied, and that, as I said before, destroys the Argument from the different Sorts of Treason. As to Cardinal Pool's Case, he only says, there was another Statute in force then, but no Record or History says, that he was indicted on any other than the 25 Edw. 3. As to Dr. Story's Case, he tells a long Tale out of Camden about the Fact, but answers not one Word to the Indictment; whatsoever the Evidence was, the Indictment was as the Sheet alledges, and that is enough.

His Answer to Coleman's Case is that, that things happening afterwards proved more, but the Evidence was no more than what my Friend alledges. As to Sir Henry Vane's Case, his Answer is his own Hear-say of what was proved, but the Indictment he never perused, argued like a Lawyer! As to Constable's Case, and the rest, he gives no Answer, but only that Repetition of a Number of Cases makes a Mutter and a Noise, and so it does when they govern and rule the Matter in question, and are not answered. Owen's Case, he says, the Author presses it strangely, and that is all. He says, the Cases of Burton, Duke of Norfolk, Awater, Heber, and Crahagan, are not to the Purpose, let the Reader judge if they are not pertinent. As to the Opinion of the Judges in the Lord Stafford's Case, he does not mention it, but says, the reviving that Case might have been spared, and that is all; a pretty Answer! As to Colledge's Case, he talks of a Proof of a Self-defence, but nothing to the Point it was urged for. As to the Cases of Lord Cobham, Grey, and Rawleigh, in 32, 33, 34, 35 Pag. setting aside his scandalous Invectives and Reflections upon those Times, Ministers, and Governments, he no ways attempts to answer the Argument drawn from them, viz. That the Charge was the same as in the Case in dispute.

Now I appeal to any Man of Sense and Reason, that will read and think closely, if the Repliant hath offered any one Argument more than the Lord Ruffel's Case, Defence and Justification had alledged. If he hath shewn any one Judgment where such Indictment was resolved naught; if he hath given Answer to Dr. Story's, Collingborn's, Sir William Ashton's, Burdett's, and Sir Henry Vane's Indictment; in short, if he hath answered any two of the Cases cited; or if he hath done any thing but reflect on past and late Times, and if the Indictment remain not good, both for Matter and Form, notwithstanding all these pretended Replies. Upon the whole, I desire the Reader to peruse the Book cited; and to judge if there be not Precedents enough unanswerable to justify the Indictment in question, and that the Recorder gave a good Judgment upon the Verdict that affirmed its Truth; quod fuit probandum.

To conclude, Since the Repliant is in love with Horace, I would advise him to consider one Hint of his,

The third and last Part of the Magistracy and Government of England vindicated, with Reasons for a general Act of Indemnity, &c.

IT hath been the observed Misfortune of most mix'd Governments, particularly of our own, never long to enjoy the intire Friendship of all its individual Subjects; the lowermost Side hath too frequently acquired the greatest Share of the People's Love, or at least Pity: It's then no Point of Wonder, that the Servants of former Crowns should have incurred their Proportion of Envy, Hatred and Reproach; and amongst all those none more obnoxious to it, than the Ministers, Officers, and Instruments of Justice; for such are the vitiated Sentiments of Persons interested in all Suits, that the Vanquish'd is certainly injured, or thought or said to be so, which is all one, by the Persons themselves, their Friends, or Relatives, their Patrons or Creatures. In Truth there's scarce a Trial on the Plea or Crown Side, but one Party, and sometimes both, do leave the Court with a swinging Curse or two on Judge, Counsel, Jury, Witnesses, and perhaps all concerned; upon which Account, it can never be deemed a justifiable, much less a commendable and meritorious Employment, for Lawyers to note and report, and afterwards publish to the World, the Clamours of such Malecontents, with the Addition of Sarcasm instead of Argument, and blushing Lyes instead of Law and Precedents, VOL. III.

and all this under the Pretence of serving their Majesties and the Government; but 'tis a mere Pretence; for first, it's not their Province; these Publications are made by them, not as Legislators or Judges, but as private Persons; and one of their Libels seems calculated only for private Lucre, as either the Hopes of a Place, or Increase of Practice, by telling the Town, in the first and last Pages, where the Author lives, of what Profession, and how long standing; an Art learn'd from some of those exquisite Doctors inhabiting towards the Fields, whose Knowledge and Conversation is pretended to be in Heaven: Another writes for Bread, and scribbles that he may eat, &c. A third, or rather the first and prime is inspired with Venom and Revenge, even the pure Spirit on't; as one balk'd, he is angry at all; and because some were not his true Friends, he's resolv'd to make Enemies of those who despise him, and of them the Number is great. But secondly,

It's of no use to the present Government, for Truth only can be a sure Basis of Respect to that; and in case of Slander, the Filth rebounds, and the Dirt thrown most surely turns on, and dawbs their own Faces, especially when they arraign those as ignorant, whose Learning, Knowledge, and Judgment are so clear and acknowledged, as to render the Censors unworthy even of being their Bag-bearers; the like when they censure those as corrupt, who have always boldly done their Duty, even in Defiance of a Court Cabal, or a popular Faction; who have always adhered to an old English Law, and their just Opinions in it, tho' Frowns from Whitehall, or Clainours from Wapping, tho' Lampoons from Grub-street, or a worse Usage from an Observator, tho' a Superfedeas or a Take him, &c. were the only Reward they could expect for such their (formerly called Puritanical, now Arbitrary) Justice: Gentlemen who never poll the Law (which the great and good Sir Mat. Hale did truly call robbing the Poor of Justice) for the acquiring a Farm or an Office, or a lumping Sum for Sale of it; who never begg'd an Executorship for to gain a Fortune; Gentlemen who never gave strain'd Opinions concerning the Revenue, when made for their Clients the Farmers, but clamour'd at the same, when used by their King with more Moderation; Gentlemen who parted with their Places, tho' of Honour and Profit, rather than comply with a Court-opinion or a Club-notion, when others (I name nobody) offered entire and everlasting Service, if they could have preceded or succeeded them, (Teste, . . . apud St. James's, and the City of Gloucester) but missing their Aim then, as now they do, their Gall must have a Vent, and so it hath with a Vengeance, when a true and bold Justice is made the Subject on't: The Reason is plain, those Men's Repute is too great for Truth, Probity, and Usefulness: An Eclipse is necessary, if possible; for if otherwise, the Defender will never be Keeper, the Remarker Solicitor, nor the Gray's-Inn Poet wear Scarlet in Wales; their Hopes are but small, unless they can Postpone all their Betters by Death, Commitments, or that which is but little worse, Reproach and Slander; but some think their Sting grows weak, for 'tis apparent that there are a sort of Men, who tho' they might and did love his Majesty when as Prince, yet do not, will not, cannot love him, or any Man else, as King; and this is now pretty plain. But thirdly,

The Libels are criminal, and injurious to common Justice, for they create a Disrespect and Contempt upon all Justiciary Proceedings: To arraign all past is to excite a Suspicion of all present and future Administrations; whereas Plowden saith, fol. 38. It's a good and sure Way to believe the last Judgment; and if so, 'tis plain what Name the contrary Practice deserves; besides, were it otherwise, the Institution of Judges and Courts are vain, and our State, as Englishmen, the most unfortunate; for we have no Rule but ex ore Judicium, or from particular Statutes, and of them they are the Expeditors. Now let's inquire which is Law, the Defender's Fancy in his Argument inter S. and B. or the Judgment in the Exchequer-Chamber, affirmed by the Lords. If the judicial Resolution be so, then the Publication of his Argument was injudicious, and I am not to follow him as my Guide; but perhaps he'll tell me, That manifest Reasons and good Lawyers ought to govern me; if so, then I ask him, Who shall I follow in the E. of D's Case of a Capias pro sine puis Judgment, &c. whether the Eleven best Lawyers, or the Vote of the House? If the latter, why not so in the former Case? and if otherwise, then his Judgment was mistaken; so that quacunq; via data, there's no Infallibility in this World, and consequently no Excuse for private Censures of publick Proceedings in Courts of Justice: Besides, the Books are pretty clear, that such things are punishable; but I leave the Reader to peruse them at Leisure. Then let us consider the Confusion that must ensue upon the publick countenancing such a Practice as these Scriblers have introduced; for if allowed on a Disbanded Judge, 'tis so on a Sitting one, for the Case is the same in respect of private Lawyers, who pretend to think their Judgments erroneous or corrupt; but surely both are unlawful. Besides all this, in the present Case,

They have palpably wrested the Law in divers Instances: I need name no more than the Indictment in question, which that it was legal and good, most Men do now agree, especially since the Dint of the Opposal seems current only on the Evidence, with a Waiver of the other, and more since that Guards are proved lawful, and the Observator concedes it the most legal Part of the Procedure; and the Justice of Parliaments, &c. supposed written by the Defender, strains all its Forces on the Evidence and the Times: And their Follower, the Poet, in his new Nonconformist, pag. 10. runs the same way too: Only,

There remains one Objection to the first Vindication, which is, that it affirms, Words may be Treason within the twenty-fifth of Edw. 3. and the Remarker challenges a Proof of it, and asks where it may be found; and the Nonconformist quarrels at the Lawyer that did assert it, and some others have done the same ore tenus.

I confess, that the first Sheet did publish the Assertion, but waived its Evidtion, for fear of a strained Use of such Opinion to ill Purposes, for the serving a Turn upon particular Occasions; nor had there been any more said on it, but that their Confidence and Malice seems so exorbitant as to extort a Check; for the Regulator is grown so confident of his own Knowledge, as to undervalue the greatest of Judgments; whereas his Common-place-book affords us no Titles but those of Collusion and Malice prepenfe; and his Practice hath been much of the same Stamp, only that sometimes he hath added a little of the Lunatick, as appears by his Rhymes, Prophecies, Dreams, Politicks, and other Religious Works.

To prove the Assertion, I depend not on the Authority of the Sense of the Commons House, 1 Jac. 2. (tho' let the Cryer for Justice, or who else pleases contradict it) it was in Fact then affirmed and agreed unto, and upon that the then King's Council and Courtiers desisted the Motion and Prosecution of a Bill to make Words, &c. But that's a supernumerary Argument, there's more than enough besides.

I am not to maintain, that all rank, malicious and gross Words against the King or Queen's Person are such, nor that whosoever drinks an Health to our Sovereign Lord the People, or to the late King James, is a Traitor: But that Words significative and expressive of a present Intention to do an Act to the King's Destruction, such Words deliberately, maliciously, and advisedly spoken, on purpose to accomplish the Demise of the King, as by Promise of Money, with Importunity to commit the Fact, may be an Overt-fait to prove the Imagination within 25 Edw. 3.

To evince this, let us think a little—and 'twill be plain.

The Words of this Statute are clear, and of an easy Construction, if we will allow those dull old Times to speak Sense. They are to this Effect: That if it shall compass or imagine the Death, &c. and de cœo provablement fait, attain per evert fait: Now the Objection is this, That Words are not Deeds within that Clause: to this the Answer is very clear; for by all the grammatical and other Rules for Interpretation of the Sense of Words, the latter Part of a Sentence is to be construed (if used by way of Opposition) as opposite to the thing mentioned and intended in the foregoing Part, and not as opposed to every thing which it may ex vi termini exclude in other Cases; and this is an agreed Difference, both amongst Divines in Exposition of Sentences in Scripture, and Grammarians in almost all Cases whatsoever. Now to apply this:

Overt-fait is used not in Opposition to Words, for there's no such thing mentioned; but it is added in Contradistinction to that which was before specified, viz. Thoughts, and such are Imagination and Compassing; and therefore Overt-fait must mean any open, manifest thing as can truly discover those Thoughts, as may proveably attain the Traitor of such his Imagination; and it is a most natural and proper Mode of Speech, if they did intend, as most undoubtedly they did, that the Thought should be the thing prohibited, then 'tis as plain they intended by the Word Fait any Discovery of such Thought by Words or Actions: and so said Newton in 19 H. 6. That to imagine the Death of the King is Treason, tho' he do no Act towards it, if such Imagination be disclosed, that it can be tried if he did so think and imagine. If that Thoughts and Words are mentioned both in a Sentence, and afterwards Deeds in Opposition, then the last will exclude both the former; but here, when used only in Contradistinction with Thoughts, it seems plainly otherwise. That Deed, when used in Opposition to Thought, doth include both Words and Acts, none can deny; a thousand Instances might be given of it; and in the exactest propriety of Speech, Words are Deeds when and as contradistinguish'd from Thoughts; for the Soul thinks, even as abstractedly considered from the Body, but Man never speaks without Action and Motion: The Difference is plain, and needs no Explication. But farther:

I would fain know, What is a Consult or Plot, but the mutual and reciprocal Declaration of two or more Traitors Minds each to the other? Each declares his traitorous Imagination by Words, and so of an Agreement to commit the actual Murder, 'tis but a Declaration of their Minds by Words each to the other, only they do happen to agree. Now suppose one Man thinks and intends to destroy the King, and by Words doth willingly, deliberately, and advisedly declare this to another that is not of his Mind, tho' by Mistake is thought to be such, is not this the same thing? If a Man traitorously offers and promises to another a thousand Pounds to perpetrate the villainous Act; if he accept it, and a parole Agreement is made between them accordingly, surely the Apologists for Treason will agree that to be an Overt Thing, and both guilty, if it can be proved by two Witnesses of Credit. Suppose then the Party offered and promised doth abhor and refuse, will that make a Distinction? If it does, 'tis without a Difference: Perhaps the Word Consult will be called a new Cant; we know whose Coin it is, and who gave it the first Stamp; 'twas no less a Man than Sir William Jones, who at the time of such his Invention was no Prerogative Lawyer, tho' considerably so in Times then lately past: Nor is it imaginable what is the Meaning of a Conspiracy or Plot to take away the King's Life, but a Communication by Words between several Traitors concerning such Act, and the Method of its Accomplishment, and a Declaration by Words of each Man's being fixed in that Purpose; which, if it be proved by sufficient Testimony, will undoubtedly be an Evidence of a Compassing, &c. which is the Treason prohibited and punishable; nor can the Meeting make it more so; for they could not discourse unless they met; and therefore 'tis the Words only that are the manifest Overt-Fait. Nor doth Hugh Pyne's Case or the Resolution of the Judges therein, contradict this, notwithstanding the Confidence of the Remarker, that it did; they only say, that the Words in that Case were not Treason, that those Words were not an Evidence of Compassing, that for those Words he could not be indicted upon that Statute; but their Opinion doth plainly imply, that had the Words been Evidence of a Compassing, &c. as they were only slanderous and reflective, it had been otherwise; and the Instances therein mentioned are full to this, as John Quick's Indictment was only for Words to King Henry, unless standing up and speaking will alter the Case: Thomas Kier's, John Cliphams, and John Mirfield's, are all for Words, and some others there specified. Besides it's observable, that in most Indictments on this Statute, some Words have been alledged in them as an Overt-fait, to demonstrate the Imagination, which would be impertinent, if the Law were thought otherwise. I will not insist on Colledge's, because the Case hath been cavilled at, tho' with no Colour as to the Indictment: Part of Patrick Harding's Indictment was loquenda publicavit; but I'll not dwell on that, because foolishly drawn; but Arthur Croghagun's Case in Cro. Car. is pretty full, and for Words; and the Words of the Book are, That the traitorous Intent and Imagination of his Heart was declared by his Words, and therefore held High Treason within the expresse Provision of 25 Edw. 3. and upon his coming into England he was arrested, &c. Now no Answer can be to this, but that he came into England; but the Words only shewed his Intent, and by that Book the Words are alledged as the Overt-fait; besides the Case of Blanchflower and Atwood, Mich. 5 Jac. 1. B. R. in Yelverton's Reports 107. per curiam, resolved that Words may be Treason, and that is an expresse Resolution; for there was then no temporary Law in Being concerning Parole Treasons, that I know of. The Case of Berisford and Presse, Hill. 8 Jac. 1. B. R. Yelvert. 107. adjudged, That Treason may be committed by Speech as well as by Act, for any thing which discovers the Mind of a Man to be traitorous to his Sovereign, is capital to the Party: Hitcham ad Brook Pasch. 1 Car. 1. Hutt. 75. held per cur. that the speaking of Treason was Treason, and that sermo est index animi, as well as Preaching or Writing; and no Man can doubt but those are Acts, and Speech is as much so.

Besides, if the Consequence of the contrary Doctrine be well considered 'twill appear to be a plain Evasion of the Statute of 25 Edw. 3. as is manifest manifest upon the Reading it : And the common Books are full of this ; for otherwise no Action could lie for saying a Man hath spoke Treason. But here's enough said to answer the Challenge, Where's the Authority for such an Assertion ? Tho' infinitely more might be said for it ; nay, 'tis as easy to dumb-found the contrary, as 'tis to transcribe Law Cases. If this doth not give them Satisfaction, they shall remain unsatisfied for me, I'll plague the World no more with writing on this dull, flat, unprofitable Subject, Crown Law, lest I should provoke our new Scriblers to double the Plague by their Replies : If they attempt an Answer, I'll leave the Tobacconist and Grocer to confute them : And unless a Trunk or Band-box chance to bring them to my View, I'll never be tempted to read them ; and of this they may assure themselves, I say it to compliment the Reader with Patience to peruse the rest of the Sheet, being ascertained never to hear more on't, at least not from this Hand.

Some perhaps may wonder at the Reason of the Publication of these Sheets, and conceive them the Product of Malice on one Side, as those virulent Pamphlets are on the other : To solve that Scruple, I need only repeat the Reasons alledged in the first ; but a Repetition is damnable dull, as well as tedious and irksome : I'll therefore add a new one, and that's to shew the Reasonableness as well as the Necessity of a general, indefinite, speedy Act of Oblivion ; for though the Blood-hounds fret, and huff, and bounce, as if all their Madnefs and Rage were founded on a true Basis ; yet 'tis apparent from the Premises, that their Foundation is false, and the Law is direct and plain in their Teeth, and doth and will justify in most of the Particulars, at which they foam their Curses and Execrations. Reason therefore, as well as Necessity, enjoins a Silence as to what is past, for otherwise the Kingdom can never have its desired Satisfaction : For in Points justifiable, or at least doubtful, the Justice of inflicting Punishments can never be vindicated. Did I call them Punishments ? I beg the Reader's Pardon for the Improprity ; however I'll not name their proper Term, but with Calmness endeavour to evince three Things.

1. That it would be grateful to the Nation in general, and every good Man in particular. 2. Conducing to the Settlement and Interest of the present Government. And lastly, That 'tis consistent with, and promotive of, the highest and truest Justice.

First, The Nation did and doth expect it, for Revenge is never natural but when freshly pursued, and Time wears off the Sense of Injuries, by the Intervention of new ones either real or imaginary, which is all one as to this Purpose : The Horror of any Crime, or at least the Detestation of the Criminal, grows faint and languid upon the Removal of the Object, especially if Time interposes with the Accession of present Fears, which at present do more affect us than greater, if more distant. It can never therefore be thought the Desire of the People of England, to have their Neighbours or Acquaintance harrass'd and persecuted by Fines, Confiscations, Imprisonments, Marks of Disgrace, or the like, for Actions done in the last or former Reigns, about which the World hath been so much divided, if lawful or not : Besides, that this was the general Expectation of the Kingdom on the new Settlement, or at least the Coronation, of which Nature there never was an Instance before this without an Act of Grace ; and it is most plain, that none are Adversaries to it, but the Republicans and the Jacobites, not for that they need it not, as I shall shew anon, but for different Ends ; each drives at and wishes a Change, it matters not to what ; for if to the latter, the other hopes a Commonwealth will be the more desirable : If the Republican succeeds, then the other believes a Restoration the more easy ; but both dislike the present, and therefore dread a Settlement, and consequently dread the People's Satisfaction and Quiet under their Majesties, and consequently dread an Act of Indemnity : 'Tis true, the Cry for Vengeance is loud, but 'tis only from these two Corners ; which leads to the second Particular, That

It will establish and promote the Interest of the present Government : While the popular Bully is full of Damme's and Menaces, there's certainly Danger, and where there's Danger, there's Fear ; now Fear causes an Aversion, and Aversion begets Hatred ; and the Object of it is that from whence the supposed Danger arises, which is from the Government irritated by the Venom and Fury of those hot-headed Animals : Whatsoever hath Power and Will to hurt me, must and will be abhor'd ; and though none are immediate actual Patients, yet the being possibly obnoxious to it, and the want of Security for the contrary, doth of Necessity cool their Respect to the present Power, under which they are not safe ; and this tempts them and their Friends upon Contrivances and Attempts of Danger, both to themselves and the Publick ; and Danger by the Attempt is no Discouragement where the like Danger attends their Forbearance : And this is of Weight, unless Cromwell's Politicks be thought Christian, to cherish and promote a Plot, as of Advantage to Settlement, if reasonably discovered, and subtilly managed ; but however 'tis as true, that Enemies who are desperate, ought never to be thought inconsiderable ; for they may shake and batter what they can't destroy, they may do mischief, though they can't work Ruin, to their Adversaries ; upon which Account, the Temptation of continual impending Danger is fit to be removed. Besides,

The Want of Security, and the Fear of Danger, making Men uneasy in their Thoughts, replenishes them with Complaints and Murmurs at every awkward Action, or supposed Miscarriage, of the Government feared ; it makes them Mutineers at publick Taxes and Impositions, partly because they think it strengthens and increases the Power of hurting them, and partly because it sponges and bleeds them of that, which they fear an Occasion of themselves to bribe Black-rods, Serjeants at Arms, and other Gaolers with ; and in a Conjunction when extraordinary Aids are indispensably requisite, no Temptation to Complaint is deserving of Countenance ; besides, that it cramps Trade, and discourages Projects for publick Good, &c. But farther, it's the living, not the dead, the happy, contented, and cheerful, and free, not the oppressed, miserable, forlorn, or imprisoned Subject, that doth Service to the Crown and the Publick.

It hinders all such as are thought to be so obnoxious from any bold Essays for the Use of the present Government ; for that if success be the Attendant of such their Attempt, they continue unsafe notwithstanding ; for no Man will adventure an Hazard to secure that Authority, which he is not sure will make him safe, if he doth undertake the present Adventure, and escapes that Danger, and performs the Service ; so that Self-preservation renders it their Policy to unhinge themselves from, or to be shy of the present Power ; of which a considerable Number might prove useful Friends, which are now Neuters at least, if not Enemies.

It's observable in all foreign Policies, either to work a total Extirpation of the whole Party, or an universal Indemnity, after so grand a Revolution as this was ; the former is not to be practis'd here, for two Reasons : 1. Because we want People : 2. Many of our Friends must be banished too, for divers of the supposed Criminals were instrumental to the present Change, &c. Ergo the latter only is, and can be most advisable ; for once I'll suppose their Numbers but small, in Comparison to the Saints and Innocents (if any such there are in the Nation) ; yet under our present Circumstances, all are to be obliged as Friends that possibly may ; but if the thirteen Heads, with the Surrenderers Clause, and all its and their Subdivisions had been reduced into a Law, in the designed Act of Attainder, one third at least of the Nation had been involved, who, with their disobliged Relatives and Dependents, is not so contemptible a Flock, though but of Sheep for the Slaughter. Besides,

It's impolitick, as well as unjust, to deny or delay it to those who have submitted to the Government, yielded it Obedience, and quietly bore its publick Charges according to their Proportion, and yet give a free, full, and general Pardon both in Scotland and Ireland, to all that took up Arms, for all their Sins then past and present : It provokes the former to repent their Non-concurrence with the latter, for 'twas but resuming their Quiet and Submission at pleasure, and then they were safe, which now they are not, but under continued Menaces and Dangers of both, as appears in their being baited by every barking Cur, that can but write with Gall in his Ink, or speak with a Damme in his Mouth.

Experience farther tells us, that nothing turns or changes the Humour of the English Commoner, like Rage, Insolence, and Cruelty in their Fellow-Subjects, when made Superiors, and such is raking into old Sores thought to be ; it matters not whether justly or no as to this Purpose, the Effect is generally such : The Star-chamber in Car. 1. his Time, the Major-generals in Cromwell's : The Tophamizing of Abhorers in Car. 2. his Time : The Western Campaign, and the other criminal Prosecutions in the Beginning of Jac. 2. I say, all the Violences used in these several Periods (and yet they have their respective Provocations) did most notoriously alter the Kidney of the Commons, and made even their once beloved first dreadful and terrible, then odious and loathsome ; they produced considerable Changes in their several Consequences : I could come nearer Home, even to the teasing of Moor and North, and other Citizens of London, which first turn'd the Stomach of that City, as is now apparent ; but Sat verbum, &c. But farther,

The want of this renders both the Policy and Honour of the great Bel-lowers for Vengeance to be justly suspected : 1. Their Honour in taking Care of their own Servants, for all their Excesses upon the Revolution, and opposing the Indemnity of all others, as by the Act appears. 2. Their Policy ; for that it's observable in Story, that the Association in Queen Eliz. Time, was under a Protestant Prince for the Protestant Religion, and no ill Success attended it, yet those wise Ancestors of ours thought fit to secure themselves, by turning the Association into a Law, and a general Act of Indemnity ; I do not say they needed it, but the Associates in that Reign thought it needful ; and 'tis very considerable, that in no Reign was there more Peace and Quiet than in Her's, and in none were there ever more free and general Pardons : and in truth the latter was the Occasion of the former ; for when Men are once safe and quiet, no small Temptations will provoke any more Adventurers, though they like another better, yet Men being easy are generally contented. There was one free and general Pardon of the Queen's at first confirmed, 5 Eliz. cap. 11. another 8 Eliz. cap. 18. 13 Eliz. cap. 28. 18 Eliz. cap. 24. 23 Eliz. cap. 16. 27 Eliz. cap. 30. 29 Eliz. cap. 9. 31 Eliz. cap. 16. 35 Eliz. cap. 14. 39 Eliz. cap. 28. 43 Eliz. cap. 19. Eleven in Number, and never five Years without a Parliament-Pardon, and this made Parliaments and Crowns the Darlings and Desire of the People. Besides, it's the Interest of each Party amongst us, though some don't see it ; the Whig ought to promote it for two Reasons : 1. Left being the lesser Part he chance to feel the Want of it, and for that he hath given some Provocation. 2. That if it be the greater, the Memory of his Vengeance and Fury may be forgotten, and himself restored to the good Opinion of the rest of Mankind, by one Act at least of good Nature : The Tory ought to pursue the same Measures, and much for the same Reasons, for his Top-gallantry hath been, and if re-practis'd will be again as odious and loathsome to the moderate and good, as ever it was, or as the others could be. Temper therefore is now the Game, and a Veil over all that's past is certainly the most Politick, especially considering the Multitude of the supposed Criminals, and the Justice of their several Excuses, which comes next. For,

Lastly, It's consistent with, and promotive of the true and highest Justice ; for in most of the Cases the Law was doubtful, and to punish Opinion in Matter of Law is as unjust, as to persecute Mistakes in Matters of Religion is unchristian ; and new Laws for Government ad futuro are more agreeable to natural Equity, than a retrospective Fury ; that it was doubtful, is plain, the modern Scriblers have sufficiently proved it. In two of the Cases cited they differ themselves ; for Dr. Story's Case, the Defender cries, 'tis not Law, the Remarker agrees 'tis, and that he was well hanged ; for Plunket's Case, the Defender cries, he was well hanged, for there was Treason enough in his Charge, the Remarker insinuates as if he suffered hardly ; now, what shall a little Lawyer believe between these two great Bodies of Learning ? The like may be said of Soame's Case, and the other above-mentioned. But what is more : In the voluminous Argument against the Dispensing Power, owned by Sir R. A. he doth concede, that there are some Prerogatives so personally and inseparably inherent in the Crown, that no Act of Parliament can cramp or diminish, or at least take away ; and that being granted, I'm sure all that the rest of the Book says can never make that a plain Case, and in truth his own Argument shews and leaves it a disputable Point; and if that were doubtful, every particular else may well be buried in Oblivion; besides, in Cases of Construction, the Nature of the thing admits of no Doubt, and then there's no Colour for Punishment. Besides,

In respect of inferior Persons, by our Constitution, they are obliged to submit to and follow Westminster-hall, which is the Lex loquens Angliæ, and when all these Things are duly considered, there will remain but few grand execrable Criminals, who are fit to be made Examples of, only to tickle some, aggrrieve others, and terrify none; for that will be the Consequence; for that's the Case of all Violence, where the Justice of the Thing is not clear and undoubted. Then for Exceptions;

Let us think a little: Is it reasonable that some should suffer for not being afraid of Punishments never declared or promulgated, and others should escape, because their Countenances are more fawning, or that by Consent their Relations have play'd on the other Side, or that their swinging Fortunes enable them to scatter Mice for their personal Indemnity, or that they have had the lucky Principle of being faithful to all Changes, and true to nothing else, or that they have been forward to subvert their old Master, after their Fire and Folly had ruined him, and endangered themselves? These and such-like are no Pleas for Justice, and yet this is the Case. Farther,

The Drift is to magnify and aggrandize Punishments by Bill, which by the standing Laws and common Justice of the Realm could not be inflicted; and they urge two Reasons for it: 1. Their particular Pardons will otherwise excuse them. To that I answer, Either they are valid in Law, or not; if not, there's no need of Bills; if they are valid in Law, the same Law and Justice of the Land injoin their Allowance; even the same Law by which the Country-man plows his Land, the Gentleman receives his Rent, the Trader recovers his Debt, and the Senator sits in the House; and by the same Reason that these enjoy their Properties, the Criminal ought to have his Pardon allowed, for one's a Right accrued by the Law, as well as the other. 2. The common Channel is too smooth; Severity is sometimes necessary, and that now, if ever; and therefore the legislative Authority ought to exert its Power, and punish according to Demerit. To answer that, I say, either they are no Offences by Law, and there needs a Bill to make them such, and inflict Evils upon them as such; or else they are Offences, but deserve a greater Punishment than a common Court may pronounce: Now, if the first be the Case, then I'm sure 'tis rank, palpable, tyrannical Injustice, and that's the Plague of living under an arbitrary Power, for none can know what's not criminal: If they mean the latter, as I suppose they do, then I ask, to what End were Punishments invented in Societies, but to restrain Men from doing particular Actions, through the Power and Influence of Fear? And how could that Consequence be expected, when the Penalty was never known before? Is it inflicted? And to inflict an Evil afterwards, which was not known before, is to make a Man suffer that which he could not fear, because he could not know it, and this because he did not fear it: And the Justice of that is plain too.

I agree with the Satirists, that there are some Precedents of this late Method of proceeding, but most of them are repealed; I'll name two that are so, the Earl of Strafford's, which the very Law itself did injoin Posterity not to observe, or follow, or do the like. I can't forget one Expression of his, to this Effect, upon the Trial: If there be an Error in a Judge, so that he give a Sentence otherwise than a Man of better Understanding conceives Reason for, there's no Cause the Offence should be heightened, because he was not so wise a Man as he might have been, nor so understanding as another; which if allowed, will make it more eligible to follow a Plow than serve a Government, to dig in a Ditch than bear an Office; for all Men stand obnoxious to the Constructions and Passions of succeeding Times. There's one Instance more, and that was Sir Tho. Haxey's, who was attainted for Treason, for bringing in a Bill into the Commons House against the Prerogative, though while and as a Member: I suppose the Sparks will not much applaud the Justice of that Procedure for their own sakes; but, as I said before, that, and most others of their Precedents, were repealed, when a cooler Assembly met upon the next Session, and so was Haxey's, in 1 Hen. 4. Cott. abr. rec. 362, 363.

But if Vengeance be requisite, it ought to be without respect of Persons, the Justice of it ought to be impartial, true, and Catholick: And then come in the Pensioners and Surrenderers, the Regulators and Promisers, the old High Commissioners, and the new Creed-makers, &c. and, God knows, quis non, &c. To conclude, our Saviour's Rule, if observed, will be the most infallible Indemnity that can be contrived, and that is, John viii. 7. Let him that is without Sin amongst you, cast the first Stone. And in truth a Censor of the Manners of others ought himself to be pure, clean, and innocent, in omni re quacunq; and if there be no Danger but from such, I am sure there's no Danger at all, and that it should be so, is the truest Justice in the World, quod fuit probandum.

I'll not mention the Argument from the Vacancy, that the Government was dissolved, every thing reduced into its primitive State of Nature, all Power devolved into individuals, and the Particulars only to provide for themselves by a new Contract; for if so, there's yet no new Consent for Punishment of Acts done before the Dissolution, and consequently Revenge, for that is at an End; Indemnity therefore ought to be promoted by those who made that Vote, for otherwise their Truth may be suspected, &c.

The Lord Ruffel's Innocency further defended; in answer to the Magistracy and Government of England vindicated.

THERE is a Pamphlet very lately published, which styles itself, The Magistracy and Government of England vindicated.

It appears by the following Part of the Title, to be no less than a Justification of the Proceedings against Criminals; impudently declaring, in plain and express Words, as also by all his subsequent Discourse, That by the Criminal he means the late Lord Ruffel, Pag. 2. Column 2. in the middle of it.

And the Author does professedly own, That the Book is written by way of Answer to a small Discourse or Argument lately printed, which bears the Title of A Defence of the late Lord Ruffel's Innocency.

It argues a transcendent Boldness in this Answerer to call this Noble Lord a Criminal, and to justify those Proceedings against him, which all honest Men ever accounted no less than Murder, under a Pretence and Colour of a legal Proceeding, and to presume to publish such a Discourse as this, after the King and the Two Houses of Parliament have, by the most solemn Judgment that can be given, pronounced that Noble Lord to have been innocent; and thereby have done so great Right to his Memory, and that with so high a Zeal, and so mighty a Concernment for him, as the like cannot be shewn in former Precedents.

It is most evident, that the Author was composing this scandalous Libel even when he very well knew the Bill was brought down from the Lords to the Commons, for reversing this Noble Lord's Attainder; and the Author could not but observe with what Zeal and Affection the Bill was entertained at its first Entrance into that House.

The Author, by endeavouring to conceal himself, is from thence, as he plainly professes, encouraged to take the more Liberty to lay about him in the dark, (as he fancies) and thinks to escape unseen; and not only strikes at the Author of the Lord Ruffel's Defence, but, as far as in him lies, wounds that Noble Lord in his Honour, whose Justification and Defence was so undertaken, and labours to overthrow that Right and Justice that hath been done by the supreme Authority of the Nation.

This is no way agreeable to a noble and generous Soul, to come behind a Man and strike him; it rather follows the Example of that devilish Powder-Plot, to destroy and blow up the King, and both Houses, and to do it in such a close and clandestine way, as it should not be known who hurt them: for he was too much a Coward to set his Name to it.

But it is very easy to tell you what are the first Letters of this Author's Name, without casting of a Figure. His Argument in Law plainly speaks his Profession, and what Robe he wears; and his Style and Phrase of speaking having appear'd in so many noted Trials, as do in so many visible and legible Characters disclose the Author; Sir R. S. does under his Hand readily and utterly disclaim it, and is heartily believ'd in what he says.

This slanderous Author acknowledges, that upon the Lord Ruffel's Trial, some blamed the Jury, most censured the Witnesses, but very few are arraigned the Counsel or Court. Here it evidently appears how our Author is concerned, first for the Counsel, and then the Court; and Self hath the Preference, tho' it be here with a Breach of good Manners to name the Counsel before the Court.

Page 1. He takes it heinously, that any Gentleman of the Long Robe should appear in Print to ridicule their own Profession; this grossly speaks our Author one that was of Counsel in the Trial. Et tu Brute?

If it had been an open Enemy, a Doctor of the Commons exercising his Wit and Raillery on the Common Law Proceedings, then (as he expresses himself) this Author could have borne it; but he did not imagine that Satires and Invectives upon past proceedings should be writ by Lawyers.

In Reply to which it may be justly said, That when Lawyers will make use of their Wit and Rhetorick, as this Answerer has done, to bolster up an unjust and revengeful Proceeding, and out of ambitious Designs, to get or continue in Favour, and to gain greater Preferment, or shew their Parts, will engage in Causes of Blood, and help to destroy the Innocent, and be instrumental in subverting the Laws and Government, it is every Lawyer's Duty, as far as in him lies, to vindicate the Profession, by utterly disclaiming and abhorring all such Practices: And the Defender can appeal to all that have known his Conversation for above these forty Years and under, whether ever he used any such pitiful, mean and ungenerous Arts and Methods, better becoming the Stage than a Court of Justice; and whether he did not, when it was in his Power, constantly restrain and condemn that scandalous and disgraceful Way of Practice. And he can as freely appeal to all that will be at the Pains to read his printed Argument, (which this concealed Author so unjustly censures) whether any such bitter reviling and revengeful Humour appears in any Part of what he so publish'd, or the least reflecting on any particular Person, but only in the general, and no further than the mere Justice of the Cause did extort from him; so far was he from this Author's scurrilous and rude Course of reflecting upon any Person's private Conversation; but some Men's Faculties lie this Way, and they are very well known, tho' after such manifest and gross Provocations, that have been given by this Author, and such publick and scandalous Actings of his in the Eye of the World, it might justly be said with the Poet:

Difficile est Satiras non scribere.

The Author of this Answer, in his first Paragraph, would have the World believe, that he writes upon no other Design than to support Magistracy, and the Government; a noble Theme! (as he terms it). Every Man knows what sort of Government he labour'd to support but the other Day, and how far he was instrumental in it; but it is rather thought fit to leave him to a general Act of Indemnity and Oblivion, than take any Revenge upon him.

He seems to allow the Lord Russel's Defender, in his fourth Paragraph, to be an Author of Age, Experience, Figure, and Learning (but he will not say Candour or Honesty). Thus he writes.

The Lord Russel's Defender is very glad he hath so little of this Adversary's Commendation, for it would gain but small Esteem amongst Men of true Worth, to be commended by him. It might be said to him, with the Philosopher upon the like Occasion, being commended by an infamous Person, What Ill have I done, that thou shouldst thus commend me? Yet that Candour and Honesty, which he covertly refuses to allow, is that which the Lord Russel's Defender prefers before all this Answerer's mercenary Wit and Rhetorick.

In his fifth Paragraph he judges the Lord Russel very unfortunate to fall under the Accusation of Treason; and says, that noble Lord was most pitied of any under those Circumstances.

That noble Lord's Misfortune (among other Things) was his falling under the Lash of so bitter and sharp a Tongue as your's, who, however, you seem now to mention that Lord with Pity, had then no Pity for him, but used him with Severity, as may appear by your own printed Narrative of that Trial, and your Rhetorical Flourishes in a Case of innocent Blood, which contributed in a high Degree to inveigle the Jury, and bring that noble Lord to the Scaffold.

He confidently says in the same Paragraph, that in Truth the Fairness and Indifference of that Trial was such, that his own Relations were pleased.

How untrue this is, in both the Parts of it, that the Trial was very fair and indifferent, and that his nearest Relations were highly exasperated and offended, shall appear before we part.

In the sixth Paragraph of his Sheet, he complains, that the Memory of that unfortunate Gentleman was received by the Publication of the Defence of his Innocency.

Why, what Hurt in the reviving of his Memory? His Memory is precious, he died a Martyr for his Religion, and for the Rights and Liberties of his Country, and fell a Sacrifice under cruel and merciless Hands.

It is indeed this Answerer's Conscience that lies in his Face; the reviving of this noble Lord's Memory speaks Terror and Amazement to the Answerer. Thus did bloody Herod, when he heard of the Fame of Jesus, he presently cries out, This is John whom I beheaded.

He does prepare himself to make use of indecent or disrespectful Language, (as himself expresses it) and comforts himself with the Thought, that his Name shall not be known: A pitiful and unmanly Dealing, not becoming a Person pretending to Ingenuity. The Lord Russel's Defender dealt otherwise, and owns his Name, and will let the World know what this Answerer is.

In the four next ensuing Paragraphs, he is much to seek for what End and Purpose the Lord Russel's Defence was printed in that Pamphlet (as his wonted Rhetorick thinks fit to call it).

It could not be (as he most contemptuously says) for Consumption of Paper.

Nor for the Bookseller's Profit, for a Reason to be guess'd at.

Forbear, for Shame, to use these sly and silly Intimations; they are fitter for School-boys, or the Mountebank's Stage, or for Billinggate, than for a Man of your Figure; one may be ashamed to have any Dispute with such an Empirick, or rather a jesting and jeering Merry Andrew. Pray keep this Sport for the next Bartholomew Fair, and learn more Gravity and Civility.

It could not be (as he farther proceeds upon the same Inquiry) for the sake of the Lord Russel's Memory, or any of his surviving Relations; for what was written in the Lord Russel's Defence, is (says he) but a painting to the Life the too deep Concern of that noble Lord, in a weak as well as criminal Enterprize.

This is wonderful Boldness and Daring in this Answerer, still to pronounce him a Criminal, (that noble Lord) whom the supreme Power of the Nation, and the highest Judicature and Authority, have adjudged innocent. And yet he has the Impudence to intitle his undutiful Pamphlet, The Magistracy and Government of England vindicated: And to publish this, after he, as well as any Man, knew that the Act of Parliament had pass'd, asserting the Innocency of that noble Lord, and the Barbarity and Injustice of the Proceedings against him; wherein this Answerer had so great an Hand, and so bitter and sharp a Tongue.

One would think, that an ordinary Wit might have served to put him in Mind, that as yet there is no Act of general Pardon and Indemnity pass'd: And who knows upon whom the great Exception may light?

But he gives a very just Occasion to the Lord Russel's Defender, to let the World know for what End and Purpose he long since writ, and so lately printed, so despised a Pamphlet; by which, even his Adversary may be convinced, it was not merely for Consumption of Paper, or for the Bookseller's Profit, but truly for the sake of that Lord's Memory, in asserting his Innocency, and at the Desire, and for the sake of his surviving Relations. And for the Truth of what is thus affirm'd, he does appeal to those noble Relations of his who are yet alive.

While that noble Lord was upon his Trial, or very soon after, there came a Letter to his Defender's Hand, who was then in the Country, near eighty Miles from London, and this from a Person of great Honour, and one of the nearest Relations to that noble Lord, requesting the Author of his Defence to afford the best Advice he could; and accordingly he heartily and freely gave it: Much of which does appear by what is printed by him.

This was not the only Letter he received from that Lord's great Relations upon that sad Occasion: But after that Bloody Stroke had been given, a Paper was published, as the Speech intended by that dying Lord.

In Answer to which, the now Answerer and Adversary (as is too evident) did publish his first Pamphlet, intitled, An Antidote against Poison, compos'd (to use his own Words) of some Remarks upon the Paper printed by the Direction of the Lady Russel, and mentioned to have been deliver'd by the Lord Russel to the Sheriffs at the Place of the Execution. Thus far of the Title of that pretended Antidote.

In the latter End of his second Page, that which is mentioned in the Discourse out of his Pamphlet called the Antidote, and which is barely repeated in order to be answered and confuted, he grossly mistakes in this latter Pamphlet, and falsely affirms, it is admitted to be true; and from thence endeavours to have the Lord Russel's Defender understood as arguing against the Lord Russel, and acknowledging his Guilt: Which is a very unworthy way of dealing by this pretended Answerer, but easily discern'd by any wary and intelligent Reader. Nay, this Answerer himself immediately after, before he is aware, clears the Lord Russel's Defender again from the Imputation, by taking Notice, that the Defender of the Lord Russel endeavours to invalidate the Credibility of the Evidence given against the Lord Russel.

This Reply declines the taking Notice of many of this Answerer's Paragraphs, that are spent merely in vilifying the Lord Russel's Defender, it being obvious, that they were intended only to render mean and contemptible the Person he undertakes to answer; it being beneath this Reply to repeat them, and to follow the Answerer in his rude and scurrilous way of writing.

It was indeed no Secret to the Learned, that a Variance between the Indictment and the Evidence might be alledged on the General Issue; nor that Treason, and the Mispriison of it, are different Crimes; nor that Proofs of Treason must not be by Hearsay nor Argument only; nor that less than two Witnesses are not to be allow'd for Proof of that Crime; nor that the Witnesses ought to be credible: But these are not so generally known to such as are not profess'd Lawyers, and may be usefully remember'd to such as are brought upon their Trials for their Lives, and are denied the help of Council when they most need it, and are apt to be more under a Consternation, when they are beset with such sad Apprehensions of their Danger, and baited at by a Multitude of crafty Wits, and such as abuse their Parts and Eloquence to destroy the Innocent, and the Court (it may be) not always so indifferent as they should be. And these useful and well-intended Assurances, as are ordinary and useles, as the pretended Answerer would represent them, were very thankfully entertain'd, and made use of by several Persons of great Abilities, and of the best Quality, who afterwards fell under the like cruel and malicious Prosecution; but they were no profess'd Lawyers. And most of these are still living, and will and do testify the Truth hereof.

The Answerer, in his fourth Page, falls to argue the Points in Law upon the great Head and Title of Treason.

This Reply forbears to repeat what the Answerer says upon this Subject, or to repeat what this Replyant has formerly printed, but therein refers himself to what is so printed.

Only finds it necessary to state the Point in Question in as few and plain Words as he can, and leave it to any impartial Reader to judge of it.

The great Statute of Treason, viz. that of the 25th of Edw. 3. was the only Statute upon which the Lord Russel was indicted; and this is acknowledged and profess'd by the Attorney-General, as appears by the printed Narrative of the Trial, and he could best know his own Meaning.

They could not proceed against the Lord Russel upon the late Statute of Treasons, made in the 13th of Car. 2. for that Statute limits the Prosecution to a certain Time after the Treason committed, which was elaps'd in the Lord Russel's Case.

Now the Statute of 25 Edw. 3. does specify and enumerate the several and particular Heads, and Sorts or Species of Treason, that might be proceeded upon, and tried and adjudged, in the ordinary Courts, viz. in the King's-Bench, or Judges of Oyer and Terminer, or Gaol-Delivery: Such as that of Newgate, or the Sessions for Gaol Delivery at the Old-Bailey, where the noble Lord Russel was brought to his Trial.

The Scope and Drift of that Statute of 25 Edw. 3. (as appears by the Preamble) was to confine those arbitrary Courts, and the ordinary Judges, to plain manifest Rules, what they should adjudge Treason, and what not, it being of so great concernment to the Lives of Men; and not to allow the Judges or Lawyers a Latitude or Liberty to make what they thought fit to be Treason; or to exercise the Tongues and unruly Noises of Lawyers in a Matter of that Moment. And that Statute of 25 Edw. 3. being in its Nature a confining, restraining an explanatory Law, ought therefore not to be largely extended or improved, and stretched beyond the plain Words, and apparent Sense of them.

Now among other several Species, or Heads, or Sorts of Treason, particularly enumerated by that Statute, there are these two, pertinent to our Case; viz.

1. Compassing or imagining the Death of the King.
2. Levying War against the King.

Whereupon the common Reader (for whose Satisfaction this is written) may easily observe this Distinction, that the first of these is Treason, (in the very Imagining or Conspiring) tho' the King's Death do not ensue.

But the latter is not Treason in the conspiring and imagining, but the Treason must be in the actual levying of War.

So that barely to consult, conspire, or imagine to levy War, tho' there be never so plain nor so open or overt an Act of such consulting, or conspiring, or imagining of it, will not amount to this Species or Sort of Treason, upon this Statute of 25 Edw. 3. which is the only Statute upon which the Lord Russel was concern'd.

For that Statute of 25 Edw. 3. did not intend to make it Treason, to consult or conspire to levy War, without the actual levying of War.

This will not be denied nor disputed by the Lord Russel's Adversaries, nor by this Answerer.

But, perfectly to evade this Statute, and the manifest Intent and Meaning of it, they insist,

That tho' conspiring to levy War be not Treason within the Statute of 25 Edw. 3. yet to conspire, consult, agree, or conclude, to stir up, or raise, or move Insurrection, and Rebellion against the King, and to consult or conspire to seize the King's Guards, (which signify one and the same thing with consulting or conspiring to levy War) these (say they) may be an Open or Overt Act, to prove a consulting or conspiring to kill the King. What is this but to confound the several and distinct Sorts and Species of Treason, which the Statute of 25 Edw. 3. doth so carefully and industriously labour to distinguish?

And what is this, but to make a bare conspiring and consulting to levy War, without any actual levying of it, to be Treason within this Statute of Edw. 3. which plainly this Statute would not have to be so taken? And so the good Design and Scope of the Statute, the Security of Men's Lives, is wholly overthrown by this Artifice; and what shall be taken to be Treason, and what not, will be still as uncertain as it was before the making of that Act of 25 Edw. 3.

And it was then a needless idle Thing in those that made the Statute of 13 Car. 2. and so of former Statutes, to make the conspiring to levy War to be Treason; for by this Practice and Construction it is already made so to their Hands, by 25 Edw. 3.

Now the Lord Ruffel was indicted for conspiring to kill King Charles II. and the Overt or Open Act, alledged to shew and signify it, is nothing but his consulting and conspiring to raise and stir up Insurrection and Rebellion, and consulting to seize the King's Guards, (tho' they were not actually done) which are just the same Thing with conspiring to levy War; which plainly is no Treason within the Statute of 25 Edw. 3. and therefore most clearly the Lord Ruffel was not guilty within that Statute, upon that Indictment and Evidence.

Since the Lord Ruffel's Defender has composed this short State of his Case, upon this great Point, there hath come to his Hands a printed Half-sheet, which has excellently well done the same Work, which had it been but a few Hours sooner, had saved the Labour of this Part of the present Discourse and Argument: This Half-sheet is justly intituled, A Justification of the late Act of Parliament, for the reversing the Judgment against the Lord Ruffel.

There is but one Point more to speak to, and then the Lord Ruffel's Defender will bid his Answerer and Reader adieu: And it is that Point which the Answerer's first Print, viz. his Antidote against Poison, did not mention, and so no Occasion was given them to consider of it; but it is largely debated by Court and Council, at the Lord Ruffel's Trial; yet being then but suddenly started, tho' it were well argued by the Lord Ruffel's Council assigned, no Authorities however were then cited (tho' called for by the Court) to justify and make good the Arguments and Reasons urged by the Council; and it is a Point in Law, which the Act of Reversing the Judgment against the Lord Ruffel is principally, and in the first place, grounded upon, viz. That there had been an undue and illegal Return of Jurors to try that noble Lord, (too often practised of late) and that the noble Lord was refused this lawful Challenge to them for want of Freehold. The Truth of this, as to Matter of Fact, doth evidently appear by the large Narrative of the Trial, printed by that Lord's Adversaries; and this is not in the least touched upon by the printed Half-sheet, styled, A Justification of the Act for Reversal of the Judgment against that Lord.

That Point in Law now only remains to be spoken to, viz. That in all Cases of the Trial of a Man, especially in a Trial for his Life, the Jurors ought to be Freeholders, even at the Common Law, and before the Statute of 2 H. 5. cap. 3. and that not only in Trials within the City of London (as the Lord Ruffel's was) but in all other Cities or Towns Corporate, where there was a Jurisdiction of trying for Life in Cases criminal.

It was not material at the Common Law, how much, or of what yearly Value, that Freehold was, or is to be; but some Freehold (tho' never so small) the Jurors ought to have, or else it was a just Cause of Challenge.

It was indeed the Statute of 2 H. 5. c. 3. that first fixed the yearly Value of the Freehold, and required it should be of 40s. per Annum, which 40s. per Annum was then in that King's Reign (being so long since) equivalent to a much higher Value now.

And therefore the Books and Authorities that speak of Freeholds of a less Value than 40s. per Annum, must of Necessity be understood not to speak of Cases within that Statute, but of Cases at the Common Law.

3 H. 4. fol. 4. b. Rolle's Abridgment, Title-trial, fol. 648. It is there held, that Freehold of any Value was sufficient for a Juror. This proves that Freehold is requisite, and that it was so before the Statute of 2 H. 5. it being in the Reign of King Henry V's Father; and with this agrees Kelloway, fol. 46. towards the End.

Some other Cases, after the Time of King Henry 5. prove the same, as 16 Edw. 4. fol. 8. Half an Acre of Land, so it be within the Hundred, says that Book, is sufficient; and it is well known, that as to this Qualification of having Freehold, the same Rule governs in the rest of the Jurors, as in those of the Hundred, 10 H. 6. Brooke's Abridgment, Challenge 192. Hale's Pleas of the Crown, 260.

Nor do these Authorities distinguish, at all, between Cases Criminal and Civil, nor in Cases Criminal between that of Treason and in Cases less criminal.

This being so at the Common Law, and the Statute of 2 H. 5. c. 3. only adding the yearly Value, viz. 40s. per Annum Freehold, which before at the Common Law might be of any lower Value: Now, though that Statute of 2 H. 5. be repealed, as to Trials in Treason, as in Truth it is, by the latter Statute of 2 and 3 of Philip and Mary, cap. 10. which enacts that all Trials in Treason shall be according to the Course of the Common Law; the Result is, that still there must be Freeholders to try, tho' they may be Freeholders, as at the Common Law, of any yearly value whatsoever.

That the Statute of 2 H. 5. (while it was in Force) did extend to Cases of Treason, though Treason was not expressly mentioned in it, and the Statute speaks very ambiguously and obscurely) appears by the Authorities following, viz. Stamford's Pleas of the Crown, 161; and Poulton de Pace Regis & Regni, 187; and by the Statute of 33 H. 8. c. 23. in the Provision, that reserves to the Party the Challenge, for want of 40s. Freehold, even in case of Treason, tho' it makes the reason triable in any County.

See Sir Christopher Blunt's Case, Justice Croke, 37 Eliz. fol. 413. In an Information of Intrusion, by the Queen; a Juror was challenged for want of Freehold, and upon Examination of the Juror, it appeared he had Freehold of 15s. per Annum Value, and that was adjudged sufficient; which admits it had been a good Cause of Challenge, had there been no Freehold at all; and it necessarily implies, that it was required by the Common Law, for no Statute interposed as to any lower Value than 40s. per Annum. Nor does this Case distinguish between the Case of Intrusion upon the Queen, and any other Case.

But it may reasonably be argued, if Freehold be necessary in a Juror, who is to try a Case of Intrusion only a fortiori, it is requisite in a Case of High Treason; but in that Case of Sir Christopher Blunt, another Juror was challenged that had no Freehold, and he was therefore set aside.

Now that the Challenge, for want of Freehold, extends to the City of London, and other Cities and Boroughs, as well as to the Counties, is abundantly proved by the Statutes of 11 H. 6. c. 1. 7 H. 7. c. 5. and 23 H. 8. c. 13. to which the Reader, for Brevity's sake, is referred.

It is no-where maintained, that an Agreement to poison or stab, &c. is no Treason, if the very Act do not ensue, as the Answerer very falsely alledges in the second Column of his sixth Page, toward the lower End; for those have a manifest Tendency towards killing, nor are they any distinct Species or Sorts, or Kinds of Treason from the killing the King, as that of levying of War, and seizing the King's Guards, (especially not shewing what Guards) are a distinct Species from that of killing the King, and need not necessarily be understood to terminate and conclude in a killing the King. Taking the King Prisoner, or seizing his Person, may more reasonably be thought to aim at a killing of the King, or have a Tendency towards it.

And the Indictment ought surely to have declared and expressed clearly and plainly what Guards were meant, there being Variety of Guards; for every Indictment ought to contain Certainty.

Herein the very Indictment was faulty.

The bold Answerer hopes the King will always preserve those Guards, tho' the Parliament have declared their Sense to the contrary, when the present extraordinary Occasion shall be over.

This daring presumptuous Answerer, in Defiance of the Act for Reversal of the Lord Ruffel's Attainder, the Trial having been partial, unjust, and illegal, as the Act affirms it, yet dares to aver in his last Page, that there was Evidence enough to justify all concerned in the Prosecution and Trial.

The Answerer, towards his Close, takes great Care, and is much concerned, to justify the King's Solicitor that then was.

And this would incline one to think, that the then King's Solicitor was not the Author of that Antidote against Poison, nor of this last Print intituled, The Magistracy and Government vindicated; which are so much alike in their Style and Strain. And, in Truth, that late King's Solicitor doth utterly deny, that he had any Hand in either of them. And Sir George Jeffries, the last Lord Chancellor, could not compose this last. This being so, it may easily be judged where it must fix: For this, look into the printed Trial.

I now refer the Answerer to justify himself at Law, if he happen to be in Danger of an Exception out of an Act of General Pardon and Indemnity, where he may have a fairer Opportunity to defend himself in his own more immediate Concern, for endeavouring to subvert the Law, which ever proves too hard for all its Opposers. And I will so far follow his Humour and Vein, as to conclude with Verses too.

Rode, Caper, Vitem; tamen hic cum flabis ad Aras,

In tua quod fundi cornua possit, erit.

Which I thus Englisth:

*Go, spiteful Satire, browse that Sacred Vine
(The Law); but know there shall not want for Wine
To pour upon thy Head, which may suffice
To render Thee a perfect Sacrifice.*

The Case of William Lord Ruffel, tried for High Treason, July 13, 1683.

THE Indictment is very long: But for Substance it is, for conspiring the Death of the King, and intending to levy War, and to that End to seize the Guards: For the Indictment concludes, And the Guards for the Preservation of the Person of our said Lord the King to seize and destroy, against the Duty of his Allegiance, against the Peace, &c. and also against the Form of the Statutes, &c.

Those that gave their Evidence against the Prisoner, were Rumsey, Sheppard, and my Lord Howard.

The Overt Act of conspiring the Death of the King, is consulting to levy War, and to that Intent to seize the Guards: So that the Design to seize the Guards, is the Overt Act assigned of conspiring the King's Death.

The Quere then is, Whether my Lord Ruffel was guilty of High Treason within the Statute of 25 Ed. 3. (for upon that Statute he was tried) and I conceive he was not; and therefore his Attainder ought to be reversed.

But before I speak to the Matter of Law, on which I shall chiefly insist, I must desire you to observe some Inconsistencies and Contradictions in the Evidence.

First, That none of these Persons had their Pardons; which was otherwife in the Popish Plot: For no Person gave Evidence before he had his Pardon. Therefore, being unpardoned, though they might be legal, yet not credible Witnesses: Both which are required by the Statute. For whilst the Fear of Death attends a Man, he is thinking how he may save his Life, rather than to speak nothing but the Truth; and he that is so base to purchase his own Life at the Price of another Man's, will be sure not to speak less than the Truth.

Next, I observe how the King's Council, by the Questions they put to the Witnesses, did lead, if not, in a manner, dictate to them what to say.

And I take Notice, that my Lord Howard, who must be supposed to have a full Knowledge of the Plot, yet never says a Word of their Intent to seize the Guards, which was the principal Thing in the Evidence of Rumsey and Sheppard: For, had there been any such Intent, it is strange, that my Lord Howard, who had brought in so many other Things by Head and Shoulders, should forget so remarkable a Piece of Evidence, and so home as that.

This is only in general: But, in particular, do but observe Rumsey's Evidence.

He says, he was not there above a Quarter of an Hour; and whilst he was there, two Things were debated and resolved, and a third Thing discoursed. Surely they were Things which they did not much value; or else they were Men of wonderful Dispatch, that could receive and debate the Message which he brought from my Lord Shaftesbury, then debate the Matter of the Guards, and come to a Resolution in both; and afterwards discourse about the Declaration; and all this in a Quarter of an Hour, or else Rumsey is perjured.

In the next Place, it is very remarkable, where he says, He was not certain whether he was at another Meeting, or else heard Mr. Throgmorton make a Report of another Meeting to my Lord Shaftesbury. And again he says, that he was not certain, whether he did hear something about a Declaration, when he was at that Meeting; or that Mr. Fergusson did report it to my Lord Shaftesbury, that they had debated it. To say no more of it, it is very strange, that a Man cannot be certain, whether he knows a Thing of his own Knowledge, or by Hearsay: And if in so plain Matters as those he spoke on uncertain Knowledge, it is not unreasonable to suppose, that he might as easily be mistaken in the rest of his Evidence.

Then as to Sheppard; he first swears, point blank, that my Lord Russell was at two Meetings at his House. But, being pressed by my Lord Russell, he can remember but one; and when that was, he could not recollect himself, tho' not above eight or nine Months before, as he confesses. It's strange that a Man should be so much in a Wood about so remarkable a Thing. But surely it must be hard upon the Prisoner, that the Time could not be fixed: For if Witnesses may give Evidence at that rate, it will be much ado for any Prisoner to make his Defence.

As to my Lord Howard; his Evidence is so notorious, that I need say nothing of it, but refer you to the printed Trial for your Satisfaction: Only I will take Notice of one thing which he says, to reconcile what he said to my Lord of Bedford, my Lord Anglesey being present, and what he afterwards swore against my Lord Russell at his Trial. Says he, Your Lordship knows, that every Man that was committed, was committed for a Design of murdering the King. Now I laid hold on that Part: For I was to carry my Knife close between the Paring and the Apple; and I did say, that if I were an Enemy to my Lord Russell, and to the Duke of Monmouth, and were called to be a Witness, I must have declared, in the Presence of God and Man, that I did not believe either of them had any Design to murder the King.

As to the first, what he said to my Lord of Bedford, was as to the Plot in general; and if to any particular Part of it, it must be as to the Insurrection; for there was to be my Lord Russell's Province.

Secondly, My Lord Howard knew, that all that were committed, their Commitments run as well for levying of War, as for conspiring the King's Death. So that his Lordship must find out something that will reconcile himself to himself, better than his Knife between the Paring and the Apple; or else it will follow, that he solemnly said one thing, and swore another.

I have but only touched these Things; because I hasten on to the Matter of Law. For tho' it were without Contradiction, that every thing sworn against my Lord Russell were true, yet it did not amount to High Treason.

First, Because a Conspiracy to levy War is not an Overt Act of imagining the Death of the King.

In arguing of this, I will not meddle at all with the Original of Allegiance, nor the true Nature of it; neither make any Discourse, that heretofore it was a less Offence to plot against the King's Life, than against the Government; but I will leave those fore Places, and endeavour to prove my Point, by considering these five Things:

First, Whether any Court, the Parliament excepted, can try a Man upon an Indictment for High Treason, that is grounded upon the Common Law.

Secondly, To what End and Intent the Statute of 25 Edw. 3. cap. 2. was Enacted.

Thirdly, Whether [Conspiring the Death of the King,] and [Levying of War,] are distinct Species of Treason.

Fourthly, Whether every Law is not to be construed, most strictly to restrain the Mischief against which it was Enacted.

Fifthly, What is the true Meaning and Signification of being provably attainted by Overt Deed.

1. As to the first, it seems to be out of doubt: At this Day there can be no such Thing as an Indictment at Common Law for High Treason; tho' for other Things there may: Because there is no Precedent of it, since the Statute of 25 Edw. 3. For nothing is more common than for every Prisoner that is arraigned for High Treason, to demand upon what Statute he is indicted, and the Court, or King's Counsel, to tell him the particular Statute. Besides, every Impeachment before the Lords in Parliament, is grounded upon some Statute: And if so, a fortiori, no inferior Court can try a Prisoner upon an Indictment for High Treason, grounded upon the Common Law. For the Law, which greatly delights in Certainty, especially in case of Life, will not allow of an Indictment at Common Law: Because no Issue can be joined upon it, by reason of the Uncertainty.

As to the second, viz. To what End or Intent the Statute of 25 Edw. 3. was made? I thus answer:

Edward III. was a victorious Captain, and potent Prince, whereby he became very renowned; but that which made his Name the greater, and his Fame the more lasting, was those good and wholesome Laws which were enacted in his Time; by which he restored and beautified the Government, that had been defaced, and almost destroyed, by the illegal Proceedings during his Father's irregular Reign. And of all the Oppressions under which the Nation groan'd, there was none that lay heavier upon the People, than the extravagant Licence which the Judges took in the Interpretation of Treason. And this appears by the particular and universal Joy expressed by the whole Land, at the making of the said Statute; for tho' he called Parliaments very frequently, and none of them proved abortive of good Laws, yet that Parliament which was held in the 25th Year, did more than any of the rest: And of all the beneficial Laws that were then enacted, the second Statute, whereby Treason was reduced to Certainty, gave the People the greatest Cause to lift up their Heart and Voice in thankfulness to God, and the King; because the Jaws of their devouring Monster were broken, which had torn in pieces so many Families, and threatened Destruction to the rest. So that this Statute was made to restrain and limit Judges from calling any thing Treason, that might be so by Inference or Implication, and only to judge upon that which is literally so within that Statute. For it is there provided, that if any such-like Treasons shall come before any of the Justices, that they must stay, without going to Judgment, till the Cause be declared before the King and his Parliament. And all subsequent Statutes of Treason are all as so many Confirmations of this Statute: For they had been needless, if the Judges could have called any thing Treason, but what is literally such within that Statute. And the Statute itself had been made to no purpose, if it had not strictly restrained the Judges. And my Lord Chancellor Nottingham was of Opinion, that even the Lords in Parliament could not proceed upon an Indictment for High Treason, unless the Fact therein alledged were first declared by some Statute to be Treason.

3. As to the third Thing, it never was, nor ever will be denied, That Compassing the Death of the King, and Levying of War, are two distinct Species of Treason, unless all Treasons are of the same Kind. But if there are several Sorts of Treasons, then it will follow, that these are also distinct: Because in every Statute of Treason, which mentions Conspiring the Death of the King, and Levying of War, they are named distinctly. Besides, they are different in the manner of Proof: For that which is necessary to prove the one, does in no Sort prove the other. And furthermore, the one may be effected, and the other never so much as intended or designed. As for Example, the King may be murdered, and no War levied nor intended. And moreover, in the one Case it is Treason, as well to intend as to execute it, without tacking it to any other Thing: But it is not so in the other; for it is in itself, and abstractly from every thing else, Treason, as well to compass the King's Death, as to kill him. But an Intention to levy War, and doing all Things in order to it, is not Treason, unless the War be levied, except by Implication or Inference. And I am persuaded, that the want of observing, that these are distinct Species of Treason, has been the Occasion of that Mistake of calling a Conspiracy to levy War, an Overt Act of conspiring the King's Death.

4. As to the Fourth, no doubt, every Statute is to be construed most strictly to restrain the Mischief against which it was enacted. For the uninterrupted Course of all Judgments and Resolutions hath been accordingly; and nothing can more directly thwart common Sense, than to make it otherwise. And therefore, if the Statute be absolute, the more forcibly it is construed to restrain that Mischief, the more truly is the Intent of that Statute pursued. For how shall any Evil be suppressed, if the Remedy must be applied but by Halves? The Law then would be rather a Mockery, than a Means to redress the Evil, if it shall not be taken most strongly against it. Either it is, or it is not, a Restraint of the Grievance complained of. If it is not, why was it made? If it is, why must it not be understood in that Sense, whereby the Mischief or Evil may be more effectually suppressed and prevented?

5. As to the Fifth, the Answer will be best understood by considering, first, the Signification of the two Words apart, viz. Provably and Overt.

Provably, signifies to prove, or make good by Evidence, Argument, Reason, or Testimony.

Overt has all these Significations, open, clear, plain, apparent, manifest, notorious, evident, publick, known, undoubted, certain, perspicuous.

These then being the Significations of those Words, what can follow more naturally, than that to be provably attainted by Overt Deed, is, that the Fact must not only be direct, apparent, and notorious to the Point, but it must also be proved clearly, evidently, plainly, and perspicuously, void of all Doubt or Obscurity? And those two Words being taken together, do the better expound each other, and seem to be choice Words, and Words of Art, cull'd out by the Penners of that Statute, as the most expressive, to exclude all Implications or Inference, that might be made in case of Treason.

These Things being premised, which are as easily proved as alledged, there will remain very little, besides Shifts and Evasions, to prove, that a Conspiracy to levy War is an Overt Act of Compassing the King's Death.

The Things that are chiefly and commonly urged to maintain that Opinion, are these two:

First, It would be of dangerous Consequence, if a Conspiracy to levy War may not be interpreted an Overt Act of compassing the King's Death: Because there is no means left to prevent it, and the Mischief attending it, when the War is levied.

Secondly, If a War be levied, the Death of the King must needs be intended, and will certainly ensue, if the Rebels prevail.

In Answer to these it may be replied, That the one of them is but a bare Objection, and the other no substantial Argument; because it begs the Question, which is surely a feeble way of arguing.

But I will give a more particular Answer to them. And it will be more proper to begin with the second; because in speaking to it, the other will in great measure receive an Answer.

Now as to the second, it may be observed, that the Death of the King is made so certain and necessary a Consequence of Levying a War, that by reason of that Certainty a Conspiracy to levy War is an Overt Act of Compassing the King's Death. If therefore the Certainty will not hold, but that many Cases may be put, and Instances produced, wherein the King's Death is not intended, nor did ensue upon the Prevailing of the Party, then is the whole Weight and Strength of the Argument of no Effect.

The Huguenots in France have heretofore assembled in Arms; and tho' they repeated it several times, yet on which of those Occasions does it appear, either by the Cause of their coming together in that manner, or by the Effect of it, that it was levell'd at the King's Life? No, the Cause of their Rising in Arms was for the Asserting of their Religion and just Rights. For as soon as their reasonable Demands were satisfied, they laid down their Arms more willingly than they took them up; neither did they attempt any thing against the King's Life, when he was in their Power; but after they were answered in those Things to which they had Right, both by the Laws of Nature and the Government, immediately they returned home in Peace, and upon all other Occasions proved the most firm and loyal Subjects of all other in that King's Dominions; and so this present King of France must testify for them, if he will do them Right.

If the Protestants in France should at this Time rise in Arms, upon so just a Provocation as now they have, it would be senseless to suppose, that they levied the War with a principal Design to murder the King, and not for the Defence of themselves and just Rights, which are so inhumanly, and against all Law and Justice, at this Time, invaded and ravished from them. Story is full of like Cases and Instances to this. But to speak more particularly to England: What was the Baron's War? The Answer to which must be, That they took up Arms to assert their Rights and Liberties, which the King, contrary to his Oath, withheld from them: and tho' it lasted near forty Years, yet the King's Death was never intended, nor his Life in any Danger: For as soon as their just Demands were answered, they put up their Swords, and every Man returned home, and pray'd for the Life of the King. And out of English Story, what one Instance can be produced, where the Cause of War was declared to be against the King's Life; or if the Party prevailed, the King was to be put to Death by their general Consent and Approbation? For tho' it be true, that there are some instances, where they have been murdered after the War; yet it is also as true, that it was by private Assassination, and not by the Consent and Privy of those who levied the War: For all those who were concerned in the Murder, were afterwards condemned and executed for it, as Traitors: As in the Case of Edw. 2. and Ric. 2.

As for that of Charles the First, which is so much press'd and urged, tho' the Cause of War had been expressly against his Life; yet as one Swallow does not make a Summer, so neither does one Precedent prove the Point. But besides, in that Case of Charles the First, to infer from thence, that the King's Death is principally intended by levying of War, is altogether as weak an Argument, as to say, because a Thing falls out by Accident, therefore that very Thing was the principal Design and Aim of the whole Action. For in that War, those who first took up Arms, did it to oppose the King's arbitrary Practices; and though he was afterwards put to Death, yet it was altogether against their Consent or Desire; and most of the Army was against it, and would have prevented it, but that they were at that time so broken into Factions and Parties, that they durst not trust one another. For after that Tragedy was acted, those who first took up Arms, immediately upon it laid them down, and were afterwards the chief Instruments of the late King's Restoration.

But if the King's Death be the principal Thing intended by levying of War, to what Purpose is the War levied? Cannot the King be taken off more easily by Poison, or a private Assassination? To the effecting of which, Opportunity cannot be wanting; and so with more Certainty the End is obtained, and a less Hazard run in the Execution, than could be done by a War; except those who levy the War to kill the King, are not content with the Murder of him, unless they cut the Throats of all those that would defend him. Indeed to do it by an open War, rather than by Poison, or a private Assassination, is the more generous Way; for they give him fair Warning to look to himself, like a noble Enemy, that scorns to kill his Adversary basely. 'Tis indeed to go round about, for the nearest Way. Therefore a War, when levied, must be for some other Intent, than to take away the King's Life: Since Englishmen, if they enjoy their Properties, no Prince is so great and happy in the Heads, Hearts, Hands and Purfes of his Subjects, as an English King.

But yet, allowing that upon every War levied the Death of the King would certainly ensue if the Rebels prevail; yet this Question does naturally arise, viz. Where is that Statute which does in express Terms say, That a Conspiracy to levy War is Treason? For if it be not so expressly and literally within some Statute, then it is a constructive Treason, and consequently no such Treason, as upon which the Judges may proceed, if the Statute of 25 Edw. 3. was made to any Purpose: For that the Statute restrains all constructive Treason, or none. But if the Judges may, in any one Case, make a constructive Treason, they may do it in all; and so we are left in the same Uncertainty about Treason, as we were before that Stat. 25 Edw. 3. was made.

If the Judges might judge upon constructive Treason, yet it seems to be a far-fetched Construction to make Conspiracy to levy War, an Overt Act of compassing the King's Death: For this is not to be probably attained by Overt Deed.

First, Because the conspiring the Death of the King, and levying of War, are Two distinct Species of Treason; and therefore, it would be very unnatural, and too much forced, to join these together, and, as it were, to make them one and the same Thing, that are so different and divers, not only in the Manner and Matter of Proof, but also in themselves.

For then, Secondly, a Conspiracy to commit any other Treason, may also be called an Overt Act of imagining the King's Death: Which was never yet pretended.

Thirdly, A conspiring of any one Treason may then be an Overt Act of any other Treason.

Fourthly, Any other criminal Act may then as well be called an Overt Act of conspiring the King's Death.

Fifthly, This is to make a Conspiracy to levy War, Treason in itself. For there is very little Difference between calling a Thing Treason in itself, and to make it an Overt Act of some Treason within the Statute.

Sixthly, Because a Conspiracy to levy War, was not Treason at Common Law.

Seventhly, The Statutes of 23 Eliz. and the 1 and 3 Jac. 4. which make it High Treason to reconcile any to the Church or See of Rome; or to be so reconciled, were enacted to no Purpose, if a Conspiracy to levy War is an Overt Act of the Compassing the King's Death. For what can tend more plainly and directly to levy War, than to persuade the People to renounce their Allegiance to the King, and to promise Faith and Obedience to some other Power? So that these, and all other Statutes concerning Treason, which have been made since the Statute of 25 Edw. 3. are as so many Confirmations of it; and consequently prove, that the Judges can call nothing Treason, but what is literally such, within that, or some other Statute.

Eighthly, My Lord Coke says, That Conspiracy to levy War is not Treason, unless the War be levied in fact. And questionless his Opinion is very good Law; because in many Cases it is not Treason to levy War; & a fortiori, a Conspiracy cannot. For look into the Statute of 12 Q. Mary, and there you will find several Things provided against, which are plainly and directly a levying of War, and yet they are declared to be but Felony.

But it may be objected, That by Stat. 3 and 4 Edw. 6. the Offences mention'd in 1 Queen Mary were made Treason. It is very true; yet it does not alter the Case, but rather proves the Point. For, First, They being made Treason by Statute, proves that it was not so in itself. Secondly, Because in the two next succeeding Reigns it is declared to be but Felony. For the Statute of Queen Mary is confirmed by 1 Eliz. 16. And thereupon the Argument is the stronger; because those two Queens were of different Religions. Thirdly, Because when a Thing is declared an Offence by Act of Parliament, and is afterwards made a less Offence by Statute, it proves that it was not so great in itself; but that the necessary Circumstances of Time and Affairs requir'd it should then be such.

But the Case is yet stronger, because in some Cases it may be but a Trespass to levy War; as it was in the Case of my Lord Northumberland, 5 Hen. 4. He did actually raise Forces, and such as were taken to be a levying of War: For which he was question'd before the Lords, and tried for High Treason. But though the Lords did find the Fact, yet they adjudged it but a Trespass; because the Powers raised were not against the King, but against some Subjects. This Precedent seems to carry great Weight in it: First, Because it is a Judgment given in the highest Court of Judicature: Secondly, Because it was given so soon after the making the Statute of 25 Edw. 3. who must be supposed to understand the Intent and Meaning of that Statute full as well as succeeding Ages.

The Case of those who aided Sir John Oldcastle might also be urged; who were acquitted, because in their Defence it did appear, that by reason of Fear, and to save themselves, they were constrained to what they did. Which is Ground for another Argument, if there were Occasion; because it proves that the Maxim in Law, Actus non fit reus, nisi Mens sit rea, holds in Case of Treason, as well as in all other Cases. But I think there is no need of it: For if War may be levied, which is neither Treason nor Felony, it must be a very unnatural Construction of a Conspiracy to levy War, to make it an Overt Act of compassing the King's Death.

Thus the second Thing objected has received a full Answer, and likewise the first, in a great measure. Yet I will add a few Words, that no Doubt may remain.

If the Consequence on all Hands be duly considered, the Danger will be found to lie on the other Hand: Yet be it as great as can be pretended, it must be remembered, that the Law has settled the Point; and so it must stand, till by the same Authority it be altered. For the Rule in Law is not to be forgotten, Nemo Legibus Sapientior. It is pretended, that out of a tender Regard which the Law, and all Subjects, ought to have for the King's Life, a Conspiracy to levy War is taken to be an Overt Act of compassing the King's Death: To this it may be answered by way of Question, How comes it about, that this Age should have a greater Care of the King's Life than our Forefathers had? Can it be imagined, that they did not understand the Nature of the Government as well as we do? Nor did know of what Consequence to the Publick the Preservation of the King's Life is? Can it be thought, that they did not impartially weigh and consider the Consequence on all Hands? Yet however, let the Defects be never so many, seeing it is settled by Law, it cannot be altered but by the same Power: For if it may, then let the Consequences be seriously debated, of leaving it in the Breast of the Judges to rectify the Mistakes, or Defects, be they fictitious or real. For then, when a Turn is to be served, the Law will be sure to be defective; and so in Effect they shall Legem dare. Treason will then be reduced to a Certainty; that is, if the Judges please; otherwise not: There will be then no need of Parliaments: For the Judges shall both declare and make Law. What will all our Laws signify, though made and penn'd with all the Wisdom and Caution that a Parliament is capable of, if the Judges are not tied up and bound by those Laws? It renders Parliaments useless, and sets the Judges above that great Council. They can undo what the other has done. The Parliament chains up some unruly Evil; and the Judges let it loose again. But besides, where is this dangerous Consequence, as is objected? Indeed there had been some Weight in the Objection, had a Conspiracy to levy War been wholly unpunishable. But the Law has provided a Punishment commensurate to the Offence; which though it does not extend to Life, yet is sufficient to deter Men from the Commission of it. Yet if a Conspiracy to levy War is to be punish'd in as high a Degree as a War when levied, this would be to punish Thoughts as highly as Deeds; which if it be just, yet is summum jus.

Mr. Solicitor Finch twitter'd out two or three imperfect Precedents, viz. that of my Lord Cobham, Dr. Story, and Plunket. These, as they are not altogether to the Purpose, so they are so very modern, that no great Regard is to be had to them; and they rather prove the Ignorance or Boldness of those Judges, than that a Conspiracy to levy War is an Overt Act of compassing the King's Death: Because the Statute of 25 Edw. 3. has provided, That if any such-like Treasons come before the Justices, they must tarry without going to Judgment, till the Cause be shew'd before the King and his Parliament: And therefore for those Judges to take upon them to judge upon that which was doubtful, and not literally nor expressly a Treason, was to assume the Part which the King and Parliament had reserved to themselves. And therefore, upon what has been said, this Conclusion will follow, that no Man can (before the Judges) be convicted of Treason, unless the Fact be expressly and literally Treason within some Statute, and he be thereof probably attainted by some Overt Deed; and consequently a Conspiracy to levy War is not an Overt Act of Compassing the King's Death, but a Trespass, or High Misdemeanour: And therefore, the Judgment against my Lord Ruffel was manifestly unjust; and so, of course, it ought to be reversed.

If a Conspiracy to Levy War were Treason of itself, or an Overt Act of imagining the King's Death, yet my Lord Russell was not guilty of High-Treason within the Stat. of 25 Edw. 3. because the Overt Act assigned against him, was his being of a Counsel of six to manage an Insurrection, and in order to it to seize the Guards, for had he actually seiz'd the Guards, yet it could not be Treason within the Statute 25 Edw. 3.

First, Because the Guards are not settled by Act of Parliament, and consequently they have no legal Force: For the Law has pronounced, that all standing Force other than the Militia is in terrorem populi, Illegal, and a Grievance; and the Reason of it is clear; because the Law does never protect or countenance any thing that is, or may be burdensome, or that is useless: And it is so evident, that in the Pensionary Parliament, this Vote, pass'd in the House of Commons, Nomine Contradicente: That all standing Force other than the Militia is Illegal, and a Grievance: And though they have the King's Commission, as may be objected; yet his Commission cannot make that lawful that is illegal, no more than he can tolerate a Riot, or pardon a common Nuisance: For if several Persons were try'd for a Riot, and it manifestly appear upon the Evidence to be such, would their producing the King's Commission keep them out of the Compass of the Law? Or should those who did assemble together to suppress them, be guilty of Levying War, because those other Persons had the King's Commission? Therefore if my Lord Russell had assembled a Force sufficient to seize the Guards, the most that could have been made of it, was to bring it within the Statute of the 1 Qu. Mary 12. which makes it but Felony. And this being duly compared with the Precedents urg'd by Mr. Attorney, and Mr. Solicitor, will retort them strongly upon themselves.

Secondly, It could not be Treason within the statute 25 Ed. 3. because at the Time of making that Statute, there was no such thing as the Guards: For the first Thing of that Sort was the Band of Pensioners which Hen. 7. set up, in Imitation of what he had seen, and learned in France: For in Ed. the 3d's Time, though he was the Third that without Interruption had succeeded to the Crown; yet Succession had not then obtained so sacred a Reputation, as not to stand in need of the People to uphold them in the Throne; and therefore Kings were then too wise to do any thing that would be so apparent a distrust of the People, as to call in Guards to their Aid. And besides, the constant Wars, either with France or Scotland, made them stand continually in need of the People's Supplies; and therefore they would be sure cautiously to avoid all Things, that might give the Nation occasion of Offence: And nothing could be more distasteful to the People than to be nosed by a standing Force, which the Law had adjudged to be Illegal and a Grievance. And therefore, as there were no such Things as Guards at the making of that Statute 25 Ed. 3. so that Statute cannot be supposed to take notice of them.

Thirdly, If the Guards were Established by Act of Parliament, yet if they were so Established since the 25 of Ed. 3. my Lord Russell was not within that Statute, because it provided for nothing but what was lawfully in being at the time when it was made. So that if it were an Offence to seize the Guards, my Lord Russell ought to have been Indicted upon that Statute which did so make it an Offence. For if a Prisoner is Indicted upon a wrong Statute, and the Evidence proves nothing of the Statute on which he is Indicted, but comes very home, and point blank to the Statute on which he ought to have been Indicted, he may plead specially to it, and the Court must direct the Jury to bring him in Not Guilty.

Fourthly, My Lord Russell was not within the Statute of 25 Ed. 3. Because the Indictment concluded falsely; and more falsely than any Indictment that I ever saw or heard of. For it says, [And the Guards for the Preservation of the Person of our said Lord the King to seize and destroy, against the Duty of his Allegiance, against the Peace and also against the Form of the Statutes.] This Conclusion contains in it four Parts, and none of them is true: First, That the Guards are for Preservation of the King's Person. It will be an easier Matter to find a World in the Moon than that the Law has made the Guards a lawful Force, or any Statute that has Established any Force, particularly for the Guard of the King's Person. And though the Law had Established any such Force; yet it was not done by the 25 Ed. 3. and therefore in this the Indictment concluded falsely.

The Second Thing is this, That to seize and destroy the Guards was against the Duty of his Allegiance. To speak fully to the Nature of Allegiance would require a long Discourse. But a few Words will lay this upon its Back. It cannot be deny'd, that Nature and the Law did nothing in vain: And if so, can it be imagin'd that the Law would establish such a Thing as the Guards, which had made so much a better Provision for the Preservation of the King's Person, even the Duty and Interest of every one of his Subjects? In the next Place, Subjection and Protection are Convertible Terms, and therefore if the Subjects do not receive Protection by the Guards, it is not against their Allegiance to seize and destroy them: Whereas to seize the Militia is against their Allegiance, because they receive Protection by them. Besides no Man becomes an Offender, till the Law has been promulg'd so as that no Man can reasonably be supposed to be ignorant of it. Now then, though the King by his Commission might make the Guards such a lawful Force; yet non constat that they are so Commission'd by him. For it has not been publish'd in that due manner and form, as that the Nation can regularly take Notice of it. And besides, there is no Record enter'd, or remaining of it in any Court, or any other Place; whereby the People may come to a certain knowledge of it, Which is also a forceable Argument against the Legality of such a Commission. So that tho' in other Cases Ignorantia Juris is not allowed; yet in this Case it is a very good Plea, That it was not against my Lord Russell's Allegiance to seize the Guards, though the King's Commission did make them a lawful Force.

The Third thing is, That it was against the Peace, which is an untrue Conclusion. For it is not against the Peace to seize any Force that is not countenanced by Law. And a Needle may sooner be found in a Cart-load of Hay, than any Statute that hath Established the Guards. And if the King's Commission can make a Force a lawful Force, then it's hard to say, whether the Rebellion in Ireland did not act upon sufficient Authority, since no clear Answer has yet been made to the Commission under the Broad Seal, which the Rebels produced to justify their Proceedings. In the next place, every Treason is against the Peace. But to conclude, because it is against the Peace, therefore it is Treason, is neither Law nor Reason. For every Offence is against the Peace; but every Offence is not Treason. Furthermore, the King's lawful Commission is not to be oppos'd in any Case; and the Indictment upon it will run, that it is against the King's Crown and Dignity, and against the Peace. Therefore to conclude, that it is Treason, is a non sequitur: For it is not Treason in many Cases, to seize and destroy those that Act by the King's lawful Commission.

The Fourth thing is that it was against the Form of the Statutes. The Statutes thus mention'd must be those Statutes, or at least must comprehend some Statute that settles the Guards for the Preservation of the King's Person: For the Seizing of the Guards is the Overt Act assigned of Compassing the King's Death. Now if there be no such Statute, then is this Part of the Conclusion of the Indictment also false. And consequently the Judgment against my Lord Russell ought to be revers'd.

CXXII. The Trial of Colonel ALGERNON SIDNEY*, at the King's-Bench for High-Treason, Novemb.

21, 1683. Mic. 35. Car. II.

ON November the 7th Algernon Sidney, Esq. was by Habeas Corpus † brought up to the Bar of the Court of King's-Bench, and the Clerk of the Crown having read the Return, Mr. Attorney General informed the Court there was an Indictment against the Prisoner, and prayed he might be charged with it.

Cl. of Cr. Algernon Sidney, Hold up thy Hand. [Which he did.]

Midd. ff. The Jurors for our Lord the King, upon their Oaths do present, That Algernon Sidney, late of the Parish of St. Martin in the Fields, in the County of Middlesex, Esq. as a false Traitor against the most illustrious, most excellent Prince, our Lord Charles II. by the Grace of God, King of England, Scotland, France and Ireland, and his Natural Lord, not having the Fear of God in his Heart, nor weighing the Duty of his Allegiance, but moved and seduced by the Instigation of the Devil, utterly withdrawing the cordial Love, and true, due and natural Obedience, which a true and faithful Subject of our said Lord the King should bear towards him the said Lord the King, and of Right is bound to bear; contriving, and with all his Strength intending, to disturb the Peace and common Tranquillity of this Kingdom of England, and to stir up and move War and Rebellion against the said Lord the King, and to subvert the Government of the said Lord the King, in this Kingdom of England, and to depose and deprive the said Lord the King, from the Title, Honour and Regal Name of the Imperial Crown of his Kingdom of England, and to bring and put the said Lord the King to Death, and final Destruction, the thirtieth Day of June, in the five and thirtieth Year of the Reign of our Lord King Charles II. now King of England, &c. and divers other Days and Times, as well before as after, at the Parish of St. Giles in the Fields, in the County of Middlesex, maliciously and traitorously, with divers others Traitors to the Jurors aforesaid unknown, did conspire, compass, imagine and intend to deprive and cast down the said Lord the King, his supreme natural Lord, not only from the regal State, Title, Power and Rule of his Kingdom of England; but also to kill, and bring and put to Death the same Lord the King, and to change, alter and utterly subvert the ancient Government of this his Kingdom of England, and to cause and procure a miserable Slaughter among the Subjects of the said Lord the King through his whole Kingdom of England, and to move and stir up an Insurrection and Rebellion against the said Lord the King, within this Kingdom of England. And to fulfil and perfect those his most horrid, wicked and diabolical Treasons, and traiterous Compassings, Imaginations and Purposes, the same Algernon Sidney, as a false Traitor, then and there, and divers other Days and Times, as well before as after, maliciously, traitorously and advisedly, did assemble himself, meet and consult with the aforesaid other Traitors to the Jurors aforesaid unknown, and with the same Traitors did treat of, and for those his Treasons and traitorous Compassings, Imaginations and Purposes, to be executed and fulfilled. And that the aforesaid Algernon Sidney, as a false Traitor, maliciously, traitorously and advisedly, then and there, and divers other Days and Times, as well before as after, upon himself, did assume, and to the aforesaid other Traitors did promise that he would be aiding and assisting in the Execution of their Treasons and traitorous Compassings, Imaginations and Purposes aforesaid, and to fulfil, perfect and reduce to Effect those their most horrid Treasons and traitorous Compassings, Imaginations and Purposes aforesaid, the same Algernon Sidney, as a false Traitor, then and there, falsely, maliciously, advisedly and traitorously did send one Aaron Smith into Scotland to invite, procure, and incite divers evil-disposed Subjects of our said Lord the King, of his Kingdom of Scotland, to come into this Kingdom of England, to advise and consult with the aforesaid Algernon Sidney, and the aforesaid other unknown Traitors in this Kingdom of England, of Aid and Assistance to be expected and supplied from the Kingdom of Scotland to fulfil, perfect, and to reduce to Effect those their most wicked, horrid and traitorous Treasons aforesaid. And that the aforesaid Algernon Sidney to fulfil and perfect those most wicked, horrid and devilish Treasons, and traitorous Compassings, Imaginations and Purposes aforesaid; and to persuade the Subjects of the said Lord the King of this Kingdom of England, That it is lawful to make and stir up an Insurrection and Rebellion against the said Lord the King that now is, the said thirtieth Day of June, in the five and thirtieth Year of the Reign of the said Lord the King that now is, at the Parish of St. Giles in the Field, in the County of Middlesex, falsely, unlawfully, wickedly, seditiously and traitorously, did make, compose and write, and caused to be made, composed and written, a certain false, seditious and traitorous Libel, in which said false, seditious and traitorous Libel, among other Things, is contained as followeth in these English words, viz. The Power originally in the People of England is delegated unto the Parliament, he (the most serene Lord, Charles II. now King of England, meaning) is subject unto the Law of God, as he is a Man to the People, that makes him a King, inasmuch as he is a King, the Law sets a Measure unto that Subjection, and the Parliament judges of the particular Cases thereupon arising, he must be content to submit his Interest unto theirs, since he is no more than any one of them in any other respect than that he is, by the Consent of all, raised above any other; if he doth not like this Condition, he may renounce the Crown; but if he receive it upon that Condition (as all Magistrates do the Power they receive) and swear to perform it, he must expect that the Performance will be exacted, or Revenge taken by those that he hath betrayed. And that in another Place in the said false, seditious and traitorous Libel, among other Things, these false, seditious, and traitorous English Sentences are contained (that is to say), We may therefore change or take away Kings, without breaking any Yoke, or that is made a Yoke which ought not to be one, the Injury is therefore in making or imposing, and there can be none in breaking it, Against the Duty of his Allegiance, against the Peace of the said now Lord the King, His Crown and Dignity, &c. And against the Form of the Statutes in this Case made and provided, &c.

How say'st thou? Art thou Guilty of this High Treason whereof thou standest indicted, or not Guilty?

Col. Sidney. My Lord, I find here an Heap of Crimes put together, distinct in Nature one from another, and distinguished by Law; and I do conceive, my Lord, That the Indictment itself is thereupon void, and I cannot be impeached upon it.

L. C. J. We are not to admit of any Discourses, till you answer the Question, Whether you be Guilty or not Guilty.

Sir George Jeffries. Sir Robert Sawyer. Mr. Att. Gen. If he will demur, my Lord, we will give him Leave.

Col. Sidney. I presume your Lordship will direct me, for I am an ignorant Man in Matters of this Kind, I may easily be surprized in it, I never was at a Trial in my Life of any Body, and never read a Law-Book.

L. C. J. Because no Prisoner under your Circumstances is to have Counsel, but in special Cases to be assigned in Matters of Law, the Court is bound by their Oaths and Duty of their Places, that they shall not see any Wrong done to you: But the Business that we are to tell you now is, you are to plead Guilty, or not Guilty, or Demur, which is a Confession in Point of Law.

Col. Sidney. Under favour, my Lord, There may be Indictments that are erroneous, and if they are erroneous and vitious, they are null, and ought not to be answered to.

Mr. Just. Withins. If you please to demur to it you shall have Liberty to make any Exceptions.

Col. Sidney. I don't demur, 'tis only Exceptions. I think in Matters of Life, a Man may give in his Exceptions to the Bill, and plead not Guilty afterwards. I am sure in Sir Henry Vane's Case, the Court said it, and offered him to do it; that which, under Favour, I hope to do.

L. C. J. You must plead or demur.

Col. Sidney. My Lord, if I put in Exceptions to the Bill, I don't plead 'till those Exceptions are over-ruled. This was in the Case of Sir Henry Vane.

L. C. J. Sir, I must tell you, you must either plead or demur.

Col. Sidney. My Lord, there are in this Indictment some Treasons, or reputed Treasons, that may come within the Statute of the 13th of this King, which is limited by Time, the Prosecution must be in six Months, and the Indictment within three. Now, my Lord, if that this Business that is mentioned, be above six Months before my Commitment, or above three before the Indictment, I think, under Favour, I ought not to answer to these Matters.

L. C. J. You are mistaken in the Law. That will be saved when the Fact comes to appear. If they alledge the Thing to be at a Time, which, according to that Allegation would maintain the Indictment, if upon the Trial, it appear otherwise, the Court is bound to take notice of it when you come to your Trial, but we are not bound to examine that before you have pleaded.

Col. Sidney. My Lord, every body will acknowledge, that there have been, or may be, vitious Indictments. Now if I plead to an erroneous Indictment, and am acquitted, I may be indicted again. Bills of attainder have been upon Errors in original Indictments, as that of the Duke of Somerset. Now if there be here several Things distinct in Nature, distinguished by Law, that are put together, 'tis impossible to make a positive Answer to any one. If any one should tell me, that I by myself, or by others, by Sword or by Pistol conspired to kill the King, I can say, I did it, or I did it not. If any one say, I have levied War, and by several Acts undertake to prove I have done it, I can say I have done it, or I have not. But here I don't find any thing specified, or can tell upon what Statute I am indicted. I pray I may see the Record.

L. C. J. That we can't do. You shall hear it read again if you will, if you think it to be a void Indictment, Demur to it if you will.

Col. Sidney. My Lord, I desire you to accept of this. [Shewing a Parchment.]

L. C. J. What is it? Put in what Plea you shall be advised; but if you put in a special Plea, and Mr. Attorney demurs, you may have Judgment of Death, and by that you waive the Fact.

Col. Sidney. I can't make any Objection to the Bill after I have pleaded, Not Guilty, for I accept the Bill thereby to be good.

L. C. J. If you can assign any Matter of Law, do. But otherwise what a kind of thing would it be? All Criminals would say, in all Cases, I doubt whether the Bill be good or bad. And after I have thus considered of it, I will plead. You are misinformed, and this the Court tells you as a Duty incumbent on them.

Mr. Just. Withins. If you demur, and shew what your Causes are, we will assign you Counsel.

Col. Sidney. I desire you would not try me, and make me to run on dark and slippery Places I don't see my Way.

L. C. J. Don't apprehend yourself to be so, as if the Court would run you on any Inconvenience. But they are bound to see the Methods of Justice preserved, they are those that you, and all the King's Subjects are bound to conform to. If any one of us were in the same Condition, we must observe the same Methods of Law.

Cl. of Cr. Art thou Guilty or not Guilty?

Col. Sidney. Then pray, my Lord, will you tell me this, Is it true, that a Man, how vitious soever an Indictment is, must answer or demur to it?

L. C. J. He must either answer or demur.

Col. Sidney. Are there no Exceptions to be admitted?

L. C. J. None: And if you don't do the one, or the other, Judgment passes, as if you had pleaded Guilty.

Col. Sidney. Here is a Plea.

Mr. Just. Withins. Will you stand by it? Consider yourself, and your Life, if you put in that Plea, and Mr. Attorney demurs, if your Plea be not good, your Life is gone.

Col. Sidney. Pray, my Lord, give me a Day to consider of it.

L. C. J. No, we must not introduce new Methods or Forms for any body. The same Case that is with you may be with other People.

Col. Sidney. My Lord, I do not pretend to any thing but what is Law, and due to every Man upon English Ground. I would be very sorry to do that which may be hurtful.

L. C. J. You have the Rule of the Court. You must do one or the other. Call him to it.

Col. Sidney. I desire this may be read. [Shewing the same Parchment.]

L. C. J. It shall not be read unless you put it in as a Plea.

Mr. Sol. Gen. I must do my Duty. Mr. Williams exceeds his Liberty, he informs the Prisoner several Things.

Mr. Williams. I only said, if it was a Plea, put it in, Mr. Attorney can hear all I say. [Whereupon Mr. Williams was reproved by the Lord Chief Justice.]

Col. Sidney. I only give it as Exceptions to the Bill.

Cl. of Cr. Art thou Guilty or not Guilty?

Col. Sidney. If any one should ask me any particular Thing, I could tell how to answer.

L. C. J. He asks you a particular Thing. 'Tis the Duty of the Court to pronounce Judgment, if you do not plead.

Col. Sidney. Why then, if you drive me upon it, I must plead.

L. C. J. I am sure there is no Gentleman of the long Robe would put any such thing into your Head. There was never any such thing done in Capital Matters.

Col. Sidney. My Lord, I am there indicted for Conspiring the Death of the King; I have not conspired the Death of King: I am there indicted for Levying of War; I have not done that: I am indicted for having invited in others of another Nation; I have not done that neither: I am there indicted to have written a seditious Libel to stir up the Spirits of the People against the King; I have not written any thing to stir up the People against the King.

L. C. J. We are not to hear all this, you must plead as other People, or else in plain English we will pronounce Sentence. We ought to give all Men Satisfaction that will be satisfied; but if they won't be directed we can't help that.

Col. Sidney. My Lord, if you put me upon this inevitable Necessity, it lies upon you; I must plead then.

Cl. of Cr. Art thou Guilty or not Guilty?

Col. Sidney. Not Guilty.

Cl. of Cr. Culprit, How wilt thou be tried?

Col. Sidney. By God and my Country.

Cl. of Cr. God send thee a good Deliverance.

L. C. J. If you be not guilty, I pray God you may escape.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, will you please to appoint a Day for his Trial, that he may take notice of it now?

L. C. J. What time would you have?

Mr. Att. Gen. A Week's Time, do you think that will be enough?

Col. Sidney. No, pray, my Lord, give me a Fortnight's Time.

Mr. Att. Gen. I won't oppose it.

Col. Sidney. In the next Place I desire a Copy of the Indictment.

L. C. J. We can't grant it by Law.

Col. Sidney. I desire you would please to give me Counsel.

L. C. J. We can't do it; if you assign us any particular Point of Law, if the Court think it such a Point as may be worth the debating, you shall have Counsel: But if you ask for Counsel for no other Reason than because you ask it, we must not grant it. The Court is bound to see that nothing be done against you, but what is according to the Rules of Law. I would be very loth to draw the Guilt of any Man's Blood upon me.

Col. Sidney. Has not every Body Counsel?-----L. C. J. No.

Col. Sidney. I have several Points of Law.

L. C. J. Tell us them.

Col. Sidney. My Lord, will you oblige me that am an ignorant Man, and confess myself so, upon hearing my Indictment for Things I know not of a long Time, presently to raise a Point of Law?

L. C. J. 'Tis not we oblige you, Mr. Sidney, 'tis the Law obliges you. We are the Ministers of the Law, 'tis the Law says we are not to allow you Counsel without making your Objections, that the Court may understand whether it be fit: 'Tis the Law says we may not allow you a Copy of the Indictment. Therefore don't go away and say that we as Men sitting here impose upon you, we sit here only to administer the Justice of the Nation.

Mr. Just. Withins. Sir, you will have a Fortnight's Time to consider of Objections in Law.

L. C. J. If you will have it read, you shall. Those Things that you may have by Law, God forbid but you should have the Benefit of them.

Col. Sidney. I desire, my Lord, to hear it read again.

Mr. Att. Gen. Would you have it read in Latin?

Col. Sidney. Yes, if you please, I do understand a little Latin.

Then the Indictment was read in Latin.

Col. Sidney. What is that Statute;

L. C. J. When you come to your Trial, Mr. Attorney will tell you what Statute he goes upon. And he may give in Evidence any Act of Parliament that comprehends Treason.

Col. Sidney. Methinks he should say what Statute he goes upon.

Mr. Just. Withins. Sir, would have a new Indictment for you?

L. C. J. He must take notice of his Trial this Day Fortnight. Lieutenant of the Tower, you may take the Prisoner back again.

Then the Lieutenant of the Tower took away his Prisoner.

ON the 21st of November, Algernon Sidney, Esq; was brought to the Bar of the Court of King's-Bench by Habeas Corpus, and Proclamation for Information being made, he desired Pen, Ink and Paper, which were granted him. And he also desired, that two persons, (viz) Mr. Wynn and Mr. Gibbs, might write for him, which was also allowed by the Court.

Col. Sidney. My Lord, when I was last here before your Lordship, I did desire a Copy of my Indictment, and I thought the Law did allow it me. But being in an hurry, carried first to a Tavern, then led through Soldiers, and surprized absolutely, I could not give that Reason why I thought the Law allowed me a Copy. My Lord, I was denied a Copy, and thereby I was deprived of the Benefit of a special Plea I designed to have put in. This would have been a great Help to your Lordship, and to me; the Denial of which hath been a great Prejudice. Now, my Lord, that which I thought was Law then, I think I can give a better Testimony that 'tis so now upon the Statute of 46 Edw. III. wherein 'tis expressed, that tout parties & tout gens, that is, all People shall have a Copy of every Record; and it enumerates several Matters, as well that against the King as other People. This is a general Law still in force: My Lord Stafford, had a Copy, and my Lord Stafford, and the Lords in the Tower had Copies of their Indictments. And, under favour, I think it was never more necessary than to me, there never having been, perhaps, a Charge so long and so confused. Now, my Lord, I have a Copy transcribed of this Statute. [Shewing a Paper.]

L. C. J. We remember the Law very well. Mr. Sidney did move for a Copy of the Indictment, and the Court denied him then, and so shall now. And yet all this while we shall deny you nothing that is Law. You shall have the Right that becomes a Subject in your Condition. And we must tell you, that notwithstanding all that Case we ought not to have given you so much Favour (perhaps in strictness) as we did. And because you did particularly take notice of the Case of Sir Henry Vane last Time, I will shew you the Court did indulge more to you than was done to that Person. In Sir Henry Vane's Case, by the Opinion of all the Judges, it was declared, that no Copy ought to be given, neither of the whole, nor any part of the Indictment, except they shew Matter of Law. But your Counsel, since you went away, moved for the Copy of the Indictment; and to satisfy them, I directed the Case that you took notice of to be read in the Court: And I thought they had been sufficiently satisfy'd. You had the Indictment read to you in Latin, which was denied in the Case of Sir Henry Vane. And there is a later Case known to most Persons here. By the Opinion of all the Judges of England, a Copy of the Indictment was denied to my Lord Russel. Therefore arraign him upon the Indictment; we must not spend our Time in Discourses to captivate the People.

Col. Sidney. Is not this a good Law, my Lord? [Holding out the Paper.]
L. C. J. You have the Rule of the Court.
Mr. Just. Withens. Any thing the Law will allow you, you shall have; but I am sure if you did advise with your Counsel, they must tell you the same Thing.
So the Clerk of the Crown called the Jury, and after several Challenges, the Names of the Jury were as follow,

John Amger,	} Jur'	Josias Clerke.
Richard White,		George Glisby.
William Linn,		Nicholas Baxter,
Lawrence Wood,		William Reeves,
Adam Andrews,		William Grove, and
Emery Arguise,		John Burt.

L. C. J. Look you, Gentlemen of the Jury, there are some Gentlemen at the Bar, as we are informed, are apt to whisper to the Jury; 'tis no part of their Duty: nay, 'tis against their Duty: And therefore, Gentlemen, if you hear any of them by you that offer to whisper, or make Comments in this Cause, as you are upon your Oaths, and I doubt not but will do your Duty between the King and the Prisoner; so I expect if you hear the Counsel say any thing, you will inform the Court. Let us have no Remarks, but a fair Trial in God's Name.

Cl. of Cr. You that are sworn, look upon the Prisoner, and hearken to his Cause. He stands indicted by the Name of Algernon Sidney, of, &c. (as in the Indictment) your Charge is to inquire, &c.

Then Proclamation for Evidence was made.

Mr. Dolben. May it please your Lordship, and you Gentlemen that are sworn, This is an Indictment of High-Treason preferred against Algernon Sidney, the Prisoner at the Bar. The Indictment sets forth, That he, as a false Traitor against our most Illustrious Prince, Charles the Second, his natural Lord, not having the Fear of God in his Heart, &c. On the Thirtieth of June, in the Thirty Fifth Year of the King, and divers other Days and Times, as well before as after, in the Parish of St. Giles in the Fields, in the County of Middlesex, traitorously, with divers Traitors unknown, did conspire the Death of the King, and to levy War within the Kingdom. And, to complete these Traiterous Purposes, did then, and there maliciously, advisedly and traitorously, send one Aaron Smith into Scotland, to excite some ill disposed Persons of that Kingdom to come into this, and to consult with the said Algernon Sidney, and other Traitors, of and upon Assistance from the Kingdom of Scotland to carry on those Designs. And the Indictment sets forth further, that to persuade the People of England it was lawful to raise Rebellion, the said Algernon Sidney did cause to be written a false seditious Libel, in which are contained these English Words, The Power originally in the People of England is delegated unto the Parliament. The King is subject to the Law of God, as he is a Man to the People that makes him a King. In as much as he is a King, the Laws sets a measure unto that Subjection, &c. (as in the Indictment.) This is laid to be against the Duty of his Allegiance, against the Peace of the King, his Crown and Dignity, and against the Form of the Statute in that Case made and provided. If we prove him Guilty, we doubt not but you will find it.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, and you Gentlemen of the Jury, the Prisoner at the Bar stands indicted of the highest Crimes, the conspiring the Death of the King, and the Overthrow of the English Monarchy. Gentlemen, we shall use this Method in our Evidence. We shall shew by many Witnesses, that there was a Design of raising and making a Rebellion within this Kingdom: For, Gentlemen, you must take notice, and I think there is no Englishman but does believe, that for several Years last past a Design was laid, and for that purpose several secret Insinuations were made use of, and public Libels spread abroad to persuade the People, that the King was introducing Arbitrary Power; that he subverted all their Rights, Liberties, Properties, and whatever was dear to them. They endeavoured to make the World believe the King was a Papist. And when, Gentlemen, by such Stratagems they had worked upon many incautious Persons, when they thought they had gotten a sufficient Party, then there was a Design of an open Rising, (for they thought all Things were ripened) and that was to be in several Parts of the Kingdom. Some Persons, to effect this Design, were for a present Assassination of the King. Others would do it in a more fair and gentle way. They thought it below Persons of that great Quality as the Prisoner is, and therefore were for doing it by open Force.

When we have given that general Evidence, we shall then come to shew you what Share and Part the Prisoner had in this Design. For certainly he was looked upon as a very eminent Person, whose Education abroad, and former Practices at home had rendered him fit for to advise and proceed in such Affairs. We shall prove when these Matters were ripe, this Gentleman was of the Council of State, of the Six that were to manage this Matter of the Rising. We shall shew the several Consultations they held; one at Mr. Hambden's House, another at the House of my Lord Russel. There we shall acquaint you what Debates they had; for they acted like very subtle Men; and there they debated, whether the Rising should be first in the Country or City, or both together. They came to a Resolution it should be in both Places at once. Then, when they had asserted that Point, they come to consider the Time of Rising; and upon that they thought fit to call in Aid of Scotland first; and that was this Gentleman's particular Province. For he, being a Man of great Secrecy, was to send an Emissary into that Kingdom, and invite some Persons over to treat with them about it. We shall prove that an Emissary was sent, and this Gentleman gave him a considerable Sum to bear his Charges. We shall prove that several Scotch Gentlemen, in Pursuance of this Resolve, came here to treat with this great Council of State, about this Affair: And shall make it appear to you, that as soon as ever the least Discovery of this Plot was, These Persons concealed themselves and withdrew, as the rest of the Plotters that have fled from Justice.

Gentlemen, this was not enough for this Gentleman to consult on these several Passages, but to demonstrate to the World, that his Head and Heart was entire in this Service, and that he might carry it on the more effectually, he was at this very time, when this Emissary was gone into Scotland, preparing a most Seditious and Traiterous Libel; we instance in some particular Words of it; but we shall shew you, that the whole Design of this Treatise is to persuade the People of England, that it is lawful, nay, that they have a Right to set aside their Prince, in case it appear to them, that he hath broken the Trust laid upon him by the People. Gentlemen, he does use in that Treatise several Arguments drawn from the most Rebellious Times that ever were in England, from the late Rebellion (I must needs use that Word, notwithstanding the Act of Oblivion, when a Gentleman shall now attempt to do those Things for which he was pardoned then) and from other Kingdoms, where Rebellion hath been prosperous against Princes. Then he falls to reasoning, and uses great Reason in the Case, that all the Power of the Prince is originally in the People, and applies that Discourse, that the Power of the King was derived from the People upon Trust, and they had already declared the King had invaded their Rights, and therefore he comes to argue, they might assume that original Power they had conferred. And he tells the King, that is no hard Condition; if he thinks it so, he should lay down his Crown, if not, he threatens the Condition would be exacted, or otherwise should be revenged by those he had betrayed; and who but this Gentleman and his Confederates, that thought himself not only able to govern this Nation, but many Monarchies, should call him to Account for it? For he lays down this Principle, that tho' all the People do rise against their Prince, it is no Rebellion. The whole Book is an Argument for the People to rise in Arms, and vindicate their Wrongs. He lays it down, That the King has no Authority to dissolve the Parliament; but 'tis apparent the King hath dissolved many; therefore he hath broken his Trust, and invaded our Rights. And at last concludes with that Passage laid in the Indictment, We may therefore shake off our Yoke; for 'tis not a Yoke we submitted to, but a Yoke by Tyranny (that must be the meaning of it) they have imposed on us.

Gentlemen, if we prove all these Matters to you, I doubt not you will do right to the King and Kingdom, and shew your Abhorrence of those Republican Principles; which, if put in Practice will not only destroy the King, but the best Monarchy in the World.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray call Mr. West.

Mr. Finch.

[Who appeared.]

Col. Sidney. I pray one Word, my Lord, before Mr. West be sworn: I have heard, my Lord, Mr. West hath confessed many Treasons, I desire to know whether he is pardoned, or no?

L. C. J. I don't know that.

Col. Sidney. My Lord, how can he be a Witness then?

L. C. J. Swear him: For I know no Legal Objection against him. He was a good Witness in my Lord Russel's Trial.

Col. Sidney. My Lord, if another did not except against him, 'tis nothing to me.

Mr. North. Pray give an Account to the Court of what you know of a general Insurrection intended in England.

Col. Sidney. What he knows concerning me.

L. C. J. We will take care of that, that no Evidence be given but what ought to be.

Col. Sidney. Is it ordinary that he should say any thing, unless it be to me and my Indictment?

L. C. J. Mr. Sidney, You remember in all the Trials about the late Papish Plot, how there was first a general Account given of the Plot in Coleman's man's Trial, and so in Plunket's, and others: I don't doubt but you remember. And Sir William Jones against whose Judgment, I believe, you won't object, was Attorney at that time.

Mr. North. Mr. West, What do you know of the general Insurrection lately design'd?

Mr. West. My Lord, I have had the Honour to know Colonel Sidney several Years; but I don't remember that I ever saw him from the time I came acquainted with any part of the Conspiracy, till the Discovery that was at the Council.

Mr. North. Pray give an Account of what you know of the Plot in general.

Mr. West. My Lord, in October last, Captain Walcot came to me, and told me that my Lord Shaftesbury had designed an Insurrection in November; I used some Arguments to dissuade him from it. But a little afterwards he came and told me, the Thing was wholly disappointed, and then it went off, and my Lord Shaftesbury went for Holland. Colonel Rumsey afterwards, about Christmas, said there were some Lords and Gentlemen intended to make an Insurrection; the Persons were the Duke of Monmouth, my Lord of Essex, my Lord Howard, my Lord Russel, the Prisoner at the Bar, and Mr. Hambden, jun. After some time he told me they had altered their Measures, and were resolved not to venture upon an Insurrection in England, 'till they had a Concurrence in Scotland. Afterwards I was not privy to any thing else, but what I had the Report of from Mr. Nelthrop and Mr. Ferguson. Mr. Nelthrop told me the Prisoner had said—

Col. Sidney. My Lord, I am very unwilling to interrupt the Gentleman—

L. C. J. You must not interrupt the Witness. Go on, Sir.

Mr. West. Mr. Nelthrop told me, the Prisoner at the Bar had sent Aaron Smith into Scotland, and given him a Sum of Money to bear his Charges, and sent Letters to some Scotch Gentlemen to invite them to Town. The Letter bore a Cant of settling some Business in Carolina; but the Business was coming up about the Insurrection. After this Mr. Smith returned, and some Scotch Gentlemen with him; and soon after Mr. Ferguson gave an Account of that Affair, and said, the Scotch proposed, if they might have Thirty Thousand Pounds in ready Money, they would undertake to make an Insurrection in Scotland, without the Concurrence of England. He said this Proposal was agreed to, and Money would be soon ready; and he said that Sheppard would return the Money. That the Arms were ready bought, and my Lord of Argyle would go into Scotland, and head the Scots. He told me when Things were thus settled, some difference arose about raising the Money; and at last he told me, my Lord Grey did offer to raise ten thousand Pounds out of his own Estate, if the rest would pay their Proportion. Then the Scots came down to less, but that would not be complied with. The Places for the Rising were Bristol, Taunton, York, Chester, Exeter, London. That there had been some Debates, whether they should begin at London or the other Places, and at last it was resolved they should begin at London with the rest of the Places.

My Lord, This was the Account I had of the Matter in general of Mr. Ferguson; but he said they were disappointed. Afterwards he told me the Prisoner at the Bar, and Major Wildman, were very instrumental in working of it off, because they could not agree upon the Declaration to be made upon the Insurrection. The English were for a Commonwealth: but the Scotch Gentlemen answered fairly, it might come to it in time, but the Noblemen there would not agree to it at present. As to the Prisoner in particular, I know nothing, and did never speak with him 'till since the Discovery.

Mr. Att. Gen. Colonel Rumsey. [Sworn.]

Mr. North. Pray, Sir, will you give the Court an Account of what you know of any Insurrection intended, and how they designed to carry it on?

Col. Rumsey. My Lord, the latter end of October, or the beginning of November, I was desired by my Lord Shaftesbury to go to Mr. Sheppard's to know of the Gentlemen that were met there, what was done about the Rising intended at Taunton; and I had their Answer, that Mr. Trenchard had failed them, and that it must cease for that time. That was all at that time.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What else do you know of any Insurrection afterwards?

Col. Rumsey. After that we had several Meetings at Mr. West's Chamber, where we had divided the City into twenty Parts, and seven Parts Mr. Goodenough had brought an Account of; the other thirteen he said nothing of; for he had not spoke with those that were to tell him how many Men they would afford. There was there Captain Walcot, Mr. West, the two Goodenoughs, Mr. Borne, Mr. Wade, and myself.

L. C. J. What was the result of those Debates?

Col. Rumsey. To see what Number of Men they could produce in the City for the Insurrection.

L. C. J. Was there a Rising designed?

Col. Rumsey. Yes.

L. C. J. And did these People meet?

Col. Rumsey. There was no time set.

Mr. Sol. Gen. When was the Meeting?

Col. Rumsey. There were several Meetings in March, and April, and May.

Mr. Sol. Gen. After the Meeting at Sheppard's?

Col. Rumsey. Yes, a great while. It ceased, I think, six Weeks or three Months.

L. C. J. Who did you meet with at Mr. Sheppard's?

Col. Rumsey. There was the Duke of Monmouth, my Lord Grey, my Lord Russel, Sir Thomas Armstrong, Mr. Ferguson, and Mr. Sheppard.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Who did you expect should head this Army?

Col. Rumsey. That was never said any thing of.

Mr. Att. Gen. Who were to manage the Rising?

Col. Rumsey. We that met there.

Mr. Att. Gen. Had you no expectation of great Men?

Col. Rumsey. Mr. West told me, and Mr. Goodenough, that there was a Council, which were the Duke of Monmouth, my Lord Essex, my Lord Howard, Colonel Sidney, Mr. Hambden, and my Lord Russel, there were Six.

L. C. J. What did he tell you of them Six?

Col. Rumsey. He told me they were managing a Business with Scotland.

L. C. J. A Business, pray speak plain, tell all you know.

Col. Rumsey. For the Insurrection.

L. C. J. Say so then, we know nothing of the Business you were about.

Col. Rumsey. My Lord, Mr. West had that Discourse with my Lord Howard I never had; he is more fit to speak to that than me.

L. C. J. Speak your own Knowledge and no more.

Mr. Jones. After the Death of my Lord Shaftesbury, who were the Managers, and were to carry it on?

Col. Rumsey. I told you, Mr. West and Mr. Goodenough did tell me the Duke of Monmouth, my Lord Essex—

Mr. Att. Gen. He told you so before. Do you know there was an Insurrection then intended?

Col. Rumsey. Yes, because we met towards the Management of it; the Company that met at Mr. West's Chamber, and other Places.

Mr. Att. Gen. What Discourse had you with Mr. Ferguson about it?

Col. Rumsey. Not about those Gentlemen.

Mr. North. The next Thing we shall shew, shall be that the Scotchmen came to Town.

Col. Sidney. My Lord, I must ever put you in mind, whether it be ordinary to examine Men upon Indictments of Treason concerning me that I never saw, nor heard of in my Life.

L. C. J. I tell you, all this Evidence does not affect you, and I tell the Jury so.

Col. Sidney. But it prepossesses the Jury.

Mr. Keiling called and sworn.

Mr. Att. Gen. I ask you in general, what you know of the Rising to have been last Spring?

Mr. Keiling. My Lord, It was some time last Summer, Mr. Goodenough came to me, and brought me three Papers numbered on the backside; I asked him to what end he delivered them me? He told me, One was for myself, and I was to deliver the other Two to whom I could trust in the two Divisions. I asked him, what was the Design? He said, to raise Men. Says I, Do you design a general Insurrection? He said, if he did not, if the King was taken off this would do well; for then People would know how to have recourse to a formidable Body. And I have heard him say, that Colonel Sidney, whom I don't know, had a considerable Part in the Management of that Affair.

Mr. Att. Gen. We charge him with Conspiring, and there must be Confederates in the Case, Now then we come to the Prisoner, we will call my Lord Howard, that was one of the Persons that did consult.

The Lord Howard sworn.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray acquaint my Lord and the Jury of your Knowledge, of what Transactions there have been with the Prisoner about this Affair of the general Rising.

Lord Howard. Truly, my Lord, in the entering of the Evidence I am about to give, I cannot but observe, what a natural Uniformity there is in Truth. For the Gentlemen that have been before, have so exactly instanced, in every Particular, with what I have to say, that two Talles could not more exactly fall into one another, though I confess I had not seen their Faces, 'till the Plot broke out, for some Months before.

My Lord, and Gentlemen of Jury, About the middle of January last, it was considered by some of us that met together, that it was very necessary and expedient to an Enterprize that had been long in Hand, and fallen flat then, that it should be revived by some Consult or Cabal, that should be set up to give life to it, and Governance to the Motions of it. The first (for ought I know) Movers of this were the Duke of Monmouth, the Gentleman at the Bar, and my Self: And there we did agree, that we should bethink ourselves of some few, we were willing it should not exceed Five, at the most Seven. This Agreement being at first between us Three; I remember the Duke of Monmouth undertook to engage my Lord Russel, and my Lord Salisbury; and this Gentleman Colonel Sidney for my Lord of Essex, and Mr. Hambden; and these being put together, did presently constitute a little Cabal, of as great a Number as was intended. This being settled among them, it was within a few Days after, I can't certainly tell when, but between the middle and latter end of January that I was told, that the Persons had agreed to enter into this Conjunction of Councils; and in order to that, they had appointed a Meeting at Mr. Hambden's House, to which I was invited. This, in time, was between the middle and latter end of January, but I can't tell exactly. When we came there, there were all those Gentlemen I before named, the Duke of Monmouth, my Lord Essex, my Lord Russel, Colonel Sidney, Mr. Hambden, and my Self. It was at Mr. Hambden's House which ranges on the same Row with Southampton House: And being met, Mr. Hambden, I suppose, did think it most properly belonged to him to take upon him the Part as it were to open the Sessions, that was, to give us a little Account of the Reason, End, and Intention of that Meeting: In which Discourse, he took Occasion to recapitulate some Design, that had been before chiefly carried on by my Lord Shaftesbury, before this time Dead; and also took notice of the ready Disposition and Inclination of the Minds of Men to go on with it; and did give one Instance of his Judgment of it, That it being a Design communicated to so many, it had not been so much as Revealed, or a Murmur or Whisper gone about it: From whence he took occasion to tell us, that it was absolutely necessary for the future, there should be some Council that should be as a Spring, a little to guide and govern the Motions of the rest, for that there were divers Things to be taken care of, which if not taken care of by particular Persons, would all miscarry. This was the Substance of the Prologue and Introduction he made. From hence he made a Transition to some particular Things, that he thought were most principally to be taken care of. And though it is impossible for me to remember the Order and Method in which we discoursed, or who said this or that; but that which the Sense of all resulted to was this: That since we did not come prepared for it, we should consider what were the Things that would hereafter challenge our particular Care, that was, the Time when, the Places where, and the Persons by whom these Things should be carried on. This led into some particular Discourse concerning some of these Heads: For the Time, that it should be shortly, lest the Minds of Men should chill; and then as to the Place where, whether in City or Country, or both jointly. In all these, some Opinions were given, but not settled to any Resolution, but they were were committed to our Thoughts to be digested afterwards. But these being the Things that every one was to take upon his Thoughts, there was this Pre-requisite to the Undertaking, and that was to consider what Magazines were to be got; and that led to another Particular, which was, with what they should be gotten, and that was Money; and thereupon was propounded a considerable Sum to be raised: and, as I remember, the Sum propounded by the Duke of Monmouth was Twenty-Five Thousand Pounds, or Thirty Thousand Pounds. And then it was considered, how it should be raised without drawing Observation or Jealously. These are only the Heads that were then agreed on, hereafter to be better considered. But the present Resolution that was taken, was, that before any Procedure was made in any of these Things, or any Advance towards the Undertaking; the first thing to be considered was, How to make a Coalition of Councils between Scotland, and what we were doing here; and for that purpose, we should bethink ourselves of some fit Person to be sent thither, to Unite us into one Sense and Care. This is as much as occurs to my Memory upon that Meeting. About a Fortnight or three Weeks after, which I suppose carried it to the middle of February next, we had another Meeting, and that was at Southampton-House at my Lord Russell's, and there were every one of the same Persons; and when we came there, there happened to fall in a Discourse which I know not how it came in, but it was a little warmly urged, and thought to be untimely, and unseasonable; and that I remember was by Mr. Hambden, who did tell us, That having now united ourselves into such an Undertaking as this was, it could not but be expected, that it would be a Question put to many of us; To what end all this was? Where it was we intended to Terminate? Into what we intended to Resolve? That these were Questions he met with; and it was probable, every one had or would meet with from those Persons whose Assistance we expected; and that if there was any thing of a Personal Interest designed or intended, that there were but very few of those, whose Hearts were now with us, but would fall off: And therefore, since we were upon such an Undertaking, we should resolve ourselves into such Principles, as should put the Properties and Liberties of the People into such Hands, as it should not be easily invaded by any that were trusted with the Supreme Authority of the Land; and it was mentioned to Resolve all into the Authority of the Parliament. This was moved by him, and had a little Harshness to some that were there; but yet upon the whole Matter we generally consented to it, That it was nothing but a Public Good that we all intended. But then after that, we fell to that which we charged ourselves with at the first Meeting, and that was concerning sending into Scotland, and of settling an Understanding with my Lord of Argyle: And in order to this, it was necessary to send a Messenger thither to some Persons, whom we thought were the most leading Men of the Interest in Scotland: This led us to the inquiring on some particular Persons; the Gentlemen named, were my Lord Melvin, Sir John Cockram, and the Campbells; I am sure it was some of the Alliance of my Lord of Argyle, and I think of the Name. As soon as this was propounded, it was offered by this Gentleman Colonel Sidney, that he would take the Care of the Person; and he had a Person in his Thoughts, that he thought a very fit Man to be intrusted; one or two, but one in special, and he named Aaron Smith to be the Man, who was known to some of us, to others not; I was one that did know him, and as many as knew him, thought him a proper Person. This is all that occurs to me that was at the second Meeting, and they are the only Consults that I was at.

Mr. Att. Gen. What was he to do?

Lord Howard. There was no particular Deed for him, more than to carry a Letter. The Duke of Monmouth undertook to bring my Lord Melvin hither, because he had a particular Dependence upon him, and I think some Relation to his Lady: But to Sir John Cockram there was a Letter to be sent under the disguise of carrying on some Business of the Plantation in Carolina. This Letter I suppose was writ by my Lord Russell (tho' I know it not) for he was personally known to my Lord Russell, and I don't know that he was known to any of us. About three Weeks after this, then he was dispatched I suppose.

Mr. Att. Gen. To what purpose were these Gentlemen to come up?

Lord Howard. These were to acquaint us how they found Scotland tempered, and what Opportunities or Advantages there were or might be of putting them into a Commotion, and how Men might be raised, and how they would fall under Argyle, and also to keep Time and Place with us. After this, I was with Colonel Sidney, when he was going into London, and he did take out several Guineas, I can't tell how much it was, I suppose they might be about sixty, and put them into his Pocket (and set me down at my Lodging) which he said were to give Aaron Smith; whether he gave it or no, I don't know; and after that he was sent.

Mr. Att. Gen. Who told you so?

Lord Howard. Colonel Sidney. For I was inquiring of him; and he said, he had not heard of him in three Weeks, or but once, when he was about New-Castle. After this, I had Occasions that called me into the Country, and there I was. Some time after that I went to the Bath: And this is all the Account I can give.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Do you know that Aaron Smith did go?

Lord Howard. I know nothing but by hear-say. Colonel Sidney told me he was gone, and was upon the Road, and he heard from him about Newcastle.

L. C. J. Did you understand by the Discourse after he was gone, that he went in pursuance of that Debate?

Lord Howard. Yes, my Lord, That was the whole end of his going.

Mr. Just. Withins. I think you say, that Gentleman [speaking of Col. Sidney] undertook to send him.

Lord Howard. Yes, he did.

L. C. J. Will you ask him any Questions?

Col. Sidney. I have no Questions to ask him.

Mr. Att. Gen. Silence—You know the Proverb. The next Step is to shew you, my Lord, that these Persons came up immediately after Aaron Smith went down thither; and according to that which was said to be the shadow and pretence of their coming hither, they pretended they came about Carolina Business. Sir Andrew Foster and Mr. Blathwaite.

VOL. III.

Sir Andrew Foster sworn.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray, Sir, give an Account what Scotch Gentlemen came up lately.

Sir Andrew Foster. My Lord, about the End of the Spring, or Beginning of Summer, as I remember, these Gentlemen, Sir John Cockram, and Commissary Monro, and the two Campbells, Father and Son, came up hither. I did not see the Father at all, but I saw the Son the Day of the Lord Russell's Trial; but the other two, I think, I saw a little before the Discovery of the Plot.

Mr. Att. Gen. What did they pretend they came about?

Sir Andrew Foster. They pretended they came to make a Purchase in Carolina, and I saw their Commission from the Persons said to be concerned in that Design.

L. C. J. Who do you speak of?

Sir Andrew Foster. Sir John Cockram and Commissary Monro.

Mr. Att. Gen. As soon as the Rumour came of the Plot, What became of those Gentlemen?

Sir Andrew Foster. Sir John Cockram absconded, but Commissary Monro never absconded; and the Campbells I heard were seized changing their Lodging from Place to Place.

Mr. Atterbury sworn.

Mr. Att. Gen. Mr. Atterbury, will you give my Lord and the Jury an Account what you know of these Scotchmen, their absconding and lying hid.

Mr. Atterbury. My Lord, upon the latter End of June, or the Beginning of July; the Beginning of July it was, I was sent for into London upon a Discovery of some Scotch Gentlemen that lay about Black-Friers; and when I came down there, there was the Common Serjeant and some others had been before me, and found them making an Escape into a Boat.

Mr. Att. Gen. Who were they?

Mr. Atterbury. Sir Hugh Campbell, and Sir John Cockram, and one that was committed to the Gatehouse by the Council, as soon as brought thither.

Mr. Att. Gen. We shall end here, my Lord: How long had they been in Town?

Mr. Atterbury. They had been in Town some little time.

Mr. Att. Gen. We have done with this Piece of our Evidence. Now, to shew that while this Emissary was in Scotland, at the same time the Colonel (which will be another Overt-Act of the Treason) was writing a treasonable Pamphlet. I will call you the Witnesses. It is all of his own Writings. Sir Philip Lloyd.

Mr. Att. Gen. Sir Philip Lloyd, pray, will you look upon those Papers, and give my Lord and the Jury an Account where you found them.

Sir Philip Lloyd. I had a Warrant, my Lord, from the Secretary by the King and Council, to seize Mr. Algernon Sidney's Papers; and pursuant to it, I did go to his House, and such as I found there I put up. I found a great many upon the Table, amongst which were these, I suppose it is where he usually writes; I put them in a Pillow-bier I borrowed in the House, and that in a Trunk; I desired Col. Sidney would put his Seal upon them, that there should be no Mistake; he refused, so I took my Seal, and sealed up the Trunk, and it was carried before me to Mr. Secretary Jenkins's Office. When the Committee sat, I was commanded to undo the Trunk, and I did so, and found my own Seal upon it. And I took the Papers out of the Bag I put them into before.

L. C. J. Was Colonel Sidney present when you seized these Papers?

Sir Philip Lloyd. Yes.

Mr. Att. Gen. Are these some of those Papers?

Sir Philip Lloyd. Yes, I verily believe it.

Mr. Att. Gen. In the next Place, I think we have some Papers of his particular Affairs which will prove his Hand. Call Mr. Sheppard, Mr. Cooke, and Mr. Cary.

Mr. North. Sir Philip Lloyd, When were they seiz'd?

Sir Philip Lloyd. Towards the latter End of June, my Lord.

Juryman. Which June?—Sir Philip Lloyd. Last June.

Mr. Sheppard sworn.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray, will you look upon those Writings. [Shewing the Libel.] Are you acquainted with Colonel Sidney's Hand?

Mr. Sheppard. Yes, my Lord.

Mr. Att. Gen. Is that his Hand-writing?

Mr. Sheppard. Yes, Sir, I believe so. I believe all these Sheets to be his Hand.

Mr. Att. Gen. How come you to be acquainted with his Hand?

Mr. Sheppard. I have seen him write the Indorsement upon several Bills of Exchange.

Mr. Cary sworn.

Col. Sidney. My Lord, I desire you would please to consider this, that Similitude of Hands can be no Evidence.

L. C. J. Reserve yourself 'till anon, and make all the advantageous Remarks you can.

Mr. Att. Gen. Have you had any Dealing with him?

Mr. Cary. I never saw him write to my Knowledge, more than once in my Life, but I have seen his Indorsement upon Bills, and 'tis very like that.

L. C. J. Do you believe it is his Hand, as far as you can guess?

Mr. Cary. My Lord, it is like what came to me for his Hand-writing.

L. C. J. And you believe it to be his Hand?—Mr. Cary. Yes.

Mr. Cooke sworn, and the Papers shewn him.

L. C. J. What say you, Mr. Cooke?

Mr. Cooke. My Lord, I did never see Colonel Sidney write, but I have seen several Notes that have come to me with Indorsement of his Name, and we have paid them, and 'tis like to this.

L. C. J. And you were never called to account for Mispayment?

Mr. Cooke. No, my Lord.

Mr. Att. Gen. I pray it may be read. We will read as much as is necessary to prove the Indictment.

Col. Sidney. I pray it may be all read.

L. C. J. Mr. Attorney must have what Part he desires read, and you shall have what Part you will have read afterwards.

Col. Sidney. I desire it may all be read.

Mr. Att.

Mr. Att. Gen. Begin there. Secondly, There was no Absurdity in this, because it was their own Case.

Clerk Reads.

Secondly, There was no Absurdity in this, tho' it was their own Case; but to the contrary, because it was their own Case, that is, concerning themselves only, and they had no Superior. They only were the competent Judges, they decided their Controversies, as every Man in his own Family doth, such as arise between him and his Children, and his Servants. This Power hath no other Restriction than what is put upon it by the Municipal Law of the Country, where any Man, and that hath no other Force, than as he is understood to have consented unto it. Thus in England every Man (in a Degree) hath a Right of chastising them; and in many Places (even by the Law of God) the Master hath a Power of Life and Death over his Servant: It were a most absurd Folly to say that a Man might not put away, or in some Places kill an adulterous Wife, a disobedient Son, or an unlawful Servant, because he is Party and Judge, for the Case doth admit of no other, unless he hath abridged his own Right by entering into a Society where other Rules are agreed upon, and a superior Judge constituted, there being none such between King and People: That People must needs be the Judge of Things happening between them and him whom they did not constitute, that they might be great, glorious, and rich; but that they might judge them, and fight their Battles; or otherwise do Good unto them, as they should direct. In this Sense, he that is singulis Major, and ought to be obliged by every Man, in his just and lawful Commands, tending to the public Good; and must be suffered to do nothing against it, nor in any Respect more than the Law doth allow.

For this Reason Bracton saith, that the King hath three Superiors, to wit, Deum, Legem, & Parliament, that is, the Power, originally in the People of England, is delegated unto the Parliament. He is subject unto the Law of God as he is a Man, to the People that makes him a King, in as much as he is a King: The Law sets a Measure unto that Subjection, and the Parliament judges of the particular Cases thereupon arising: He must be content to submit his Interest unto theirs, since he is no more than any one of them, in any other respect, than that he is, by the Consent of all, raised above any other.

If he doth not like this Condition he may renounce the Crown; but if he receive it upon that Condition, (as all Magistrates do the Power they receive) and swear to perform it, he must expect that the Performance will be exacted, or Revenge taken by those that he hath betrayed.

If this be not so, I desire to know of our Author, how one or more Men can come to be guilty of Treason against the King, as Lex facit ut sit Rea. No Man can owe more unto him, than unto any other, or he unto every other Man by any Rule but the Law; and if he must not be Judge in his own Case, neither he nor any other by Power received from him, would ever try any Man for an Offence against him, or the Law.

If the King, or such as he appoints, cannot judge him, he cannot be judged by the Ways ordinarily known amongst us. If he, or other by Authority from him, may judge, he is a Judge in his own Case, and we fall under that which he accounts the utmost of all Absurdities. If a Remedy be found for this, he must say that the King in his own Case may judge the People, but the People must not judge the King, because it is theirs; that is to say, the Servant entertained by the Master may judge him, but the Master must not judge the Servant, whom he took only for his own Use. The Magistrate is bound by no Oath or Contract to the People that created him, but the People is bound to its own Creature, the Magistrate.

This seems to be the Ground of all our Author's Follies; he cannot comprehend that Magistrates are for or by the People, but makes this Conclusion, as if Nations were created by or for the Glory or Pleasure of Magistrates, and affects such a Piece of Nonfence; it ought not to be thought strange, if he represent as an absurd Thing, that the heedless Multitude may shake off the Yoke when they please. But I would know how the Multitude comes under the Yoke, it is a Badge of Slavery. He says, that the Power of Kings is for the Preservation of Liberty and Property. We may therefore change or take away Kings without breaking any Yoke, or that made a Yoke which ought not to be one; the Injury is therefore in Making or Imposing, and there can be none in breaking it.

That if there be not an Injury, there may perhaps be an Inconvenience; if the heedless Multitude may shake off the Yoke, I know not why the Multitude should be concluded to be heedless; it is not always so. Moses was Head of the Multitude that went out of Egypt; Othniel led them against the King of Mesopotamia, under the Conduct of Phœbidas; they obtained a Victory against the Moabites; they had the like Success under Shamgar, Barak, Gideon, Jephthah, Samuel, Sampson, and others against the Canaanites, Midianites, Philistines, and others; the Multitude that opposed Saul and Ishbosheth had David for its Head: and the ten Tribes that rejected Rehoboam chose unto themselves Jeroboam; the Athenians rising against the thirty Tyrants had Thrasylbulus; those that drove from Thebes were conducted by Pelopidas: When the Romans drove out the Tarquins, they chose Brutus and Publicola, and they destroyed the Decemviri under Horatius and Valerius. All the Multitudes that afterwards revolted from them under Mauritius, Telerius, Spartanus, and others, were not heedless; and we know of none that were, but all either found Heads, or made them. The Germans set up Arminius; the Britons, and others in later Times; the Cartinians, that rose against Peter the Cruel, had the Lord Detraeta Mara.

The French, when they grew weary of the corrupted Races of Pharamond and Pepin, and the same Pepin and Hugh Capet: The Scots, when they slew James III. had his Son to be their Head; and when they deposed and imprisoned Queen Mary, the Earl of Murray and others supplied the want of Age that was in her Son: And in all the Revolutions we have had in England, the People have been headed by the Parliament, or the Nobility and Gentry that composed it; and when the Kings failed of their Duties, by their own Authority called it. The Multitude therefore is not ever heedless, but doth either find or create Heads unto itself, as Occasion doth require: and whether it be one Man, or a few or more, for a short or a longer Time, we see nothing more regular than its Motions. But they may, saith our Author, shake off the Yoke; and why may they not, if it prove uneasy or hurtful unto them? Why should not the Israelites shake off the Yoke of Pharaoh, Jabin, Sisera, and others that oppressed them?

When Pride had changed Nebuchadnezzar into a Beast, what should persuade the Affyrians not to drive him out amongst Beasts, until God had restored unto him the Heart of a Man? When Tarquin had turned the Regal Monarchy of Rome into a most abominable Tyranny, why should they not abolish it? And when the Protestants of the Low Countries were so grievously oppressed by the Power of Spain, under the proud, cruel, and savage Conduct of the Duke of Alva, why should they not make use of all the Means that God had put into their Hands for their Deliverance? Let any Man, who sees the present State of the Provinces that then united themselves, judge whether it is better for them to be as they are, or in the Condition unto which his Fury would have reduced them, unless they had, to please him, renounced God and their Religion: Our Author may say, they ought to have suffered: The King of Spain by their Resistance lost those Countries; and that they ought not to have been Judges in their own Case. To which I answer, That by resisting they laid the Foundation of many Churches, that have produced Multitudes of Men, eminent in Gifts and Graces; and established a most glorious and happy Commonwealth, that hath been since its first Beginning, the strongest Pillar of the Protestant Cause now in the World, and a Place or Refuge unto those who in all Parts of Europe have been oppressed for the Name of Christ: Whereas they had slavishly, and, I think I may say, wickedly as well as foolishly suffered themselves to be butchered, if they had left those empty Provinces under the Power of Antichrist, where the Name of God is no otherwise known than to be blasphemed.

If the King of Spain desired to keep his Subjects, he should have governed them with more Justice and Mercy; when, contrary unto all Laws, both Human and Divine, he seeks to destroy those he ought to have preserved, he can blame none but himself, if they deliver themselves from his Tyranny: And when the Matter is brought to that, that he must not reign, or they over whom he would reign, must perish; the Matter is easily decided, as if the Question had been asked in the Time of Nero or Domitian, Whether they should be left at Liberty to destroy the best Part of the World, as they endeavoured to do, or it should be rescued by their Destruction? And as for the People's being Judges in their own Case, it is plain, they ought to be the only Judges, because it is their own, and only concerns themselves.

Mr. Att. Gen. The latter end, the last Sheet of all, §. 35.

L. C. J. The Argument runs through the Book, fixing the Power in the People.

Cl. of Cr. The general Revolt of a Nation from its own Magistrates, can never be called Rebellion.

Mr. Att. Gen. §. 37.

Cl. of Cr. The Power of calling and dissolving Parliament is not in the King.

Mr. Att. Gen. So much we shall make use of; if the Colonel please to have any other Part read to explain it, he may.

Then the Sheets were shewn to Col. Sidney.

Col. Sidney. I do not know what to make of it, I can read it.

L. C. J. Ay, no Doubt of it, better than any Man here. Fix on any Part you have a mind to have read.

Col. Sidney. I do not know what to say to it, to read it in Pieces thus.

L. C. J. I perceive you have disposed them under certain Heads: To what Heads would you have read?

Col. Sidney. My Lord, let him give an Account of it that did it.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, we will not delay Col. Sidney from entering on his Defence, only we have this Piece of Evidence to give further. One of his Accomplices was my Lord Russel, we will give in Evidence his Conviction. We will only ask my Lord Howard, Was your Lordship sworn as a Witness at the Trial of my Lord Russel?

Lord Howard. Yes.

Mr. Att. Gen. Whether or no, when you met, were there in those Debates any Reflections upon the King, that he had broken his Duty?

Lord Howard. Not that I remember.

Mr. Att. Gen. Why would you rise?

Lord Howard. If you mean upon the Misgovernment, not personally upon the King?

Mr. Att. Gen. Ay.

Lord Howard. Yes, and principally and chiefly that, which we thought was the general Disgust of the Nation, the imposing upon the City at that Time.

Mr. Just. Withins. That was complained of at that Time.

Lord Howard. Yes, my Lord, we took it all along to be the chief Grievance.

L. C. J. Have you any more Witnesses?

Mr. Att. Gen. Only the Record.

Mr. Sol. Gen. I know there is no Time mispent to make Things clear. If the Jury have a mind to have the Words read again —

L. C. J. If they have a mind, let it.

Then Mr. Trinder was sworn, and testified it to be a true Copy of the Record, and said he examined it at Fishmongers-Hall with Mr. Tanner. Then the Record of the Conviction of Lord Russel was read.

L. C. J. What will you go to next, Mr. Attorney?

Mr. Sol. Gen. We have done, unless the Jury desire to have the Words of the Libel read again. [But they did not.]

Col. Sidney. My Lord, I desire to know upon what Statute I am indicted.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, I will give as plain an Answer, You are indicted upon the old Statute of 25 Edw. 3.

Col. Sidney. Then I desire to know upon what Branch of that Statute?

Mr. Att. Gen. Why, I will acquaint you, 'Tis upon the first Branch of that Statute, for conspiring and compassing the Death of the King.

Col. Sidney. Then I conceive, what does not come within that, does not touch me.

Mr. Att. Gen. Make what Inferences you please, Colonel, we will answer you.

Col. Sidney. I desire to know what the Witnesses have sworn against me upon that Point?

Mr.

Mr. At. Gen. Go on, you have heard the Witnesses as well as we.

L. C. J. He says you are indicted upon the Statute of 25 Edw. 3. which Statute makes it High-Treason to conspire the Death of the King; and the Overt-Act is sufficiently set forth in the Indictment; now the Question is, whether 'tis proved.

Col. Sidney. They have proved a Paper found in my Study of Caligula and Nero. That is Compassing the Death of the King, is it?

L. C. J. That I shall then tell the Jury. The Point in Law you are to take from the Court, Gentlemen: Whether there be Fact sufficient, that is your Duty to consider.

Col. Sidney. I say, my Lord; that since I am indicted upon that Statute, I am not to take Notice of any other. I am indicted for conspiring the Death of the King, because such a Paper is found in my House; under Favour, I think that can be nothing at all to me. For tho' Sir Philip Lloyd did ask me, whether I would put my Seal to it, he did not ask me till he had been in my Closet; and I knew not what he had put in, and so I told him I would not do it. Then came these Gentlemen upon Similitude of Hands. My Lord, we know what Similitude of Hands is in this Age. One told me within these two Days, that one came to him, and offered to counterfeit any Hand he should shew him in Half an Hour. So then, my Lord, I have nothing to say to these Papers. Then for Point of Witnesses, I cannot be indicted, much less tried or condemned on 25 Edw. 3. for by that Act there must be two Witnesses to that very Branch unto which the Treason does relate, which must be distinguished. For the levying of War, and conspiring the Death of the King are two distinct Things, distinct in Nature and Reason, and so distinguished in the Statute. And therefore the conspiring the Death of the King is Treason, and the other not. 1 Edw. 6. 12. 5 Edw. 6. 11. does expressly say, there must be two Witnesses to either of these Acts. Now here is my Lord Howard, (I have enough to say of him by and by) 'tis he only who speaks of six Men, whom he calls a select Council, and yet selected by no Man in the World. I desire to know who selected my Lord Howard? Who selected me? If they were selected by no body, 'tis a Bull to say they were a select Council: If they were not selected, but erected themselves into a Cabal then, they have either Confidence in one another, or find they are near equally able to assist in the Design. Here is nothing of all this,—These six men were Strangers to one another. For my own Part, I never spake with the Duke of Monmouth above three Times in my Life. and one Time was when my Lord Howard brought him to my House and cozened us both. He told the Duke I invited him, and he told me the Duke invited himself, and neither of them was true. Now that such Men as these are, not hardly knowing one another, should presently fall into a great and intimate Friendship, and Trust and Management of such a Business as this is, is a Thing utterly improbable, unless they were mad. Now I do find in my Lord Howard's Deposition against my Lord Ruffel, that they were in Prosecution of my Lord Shaftsbury's Design; and yet he acknowledges the Duke of Monmouth said he was mad, and he said himself so too. Now that they should join with four more in the Prosecution of the Design of a Mad-man, they must be mad too. Now whether my Lord Howard would have you think he was mad, because a Mad-man cannot be guilty of Treason, I cannot tell. My Lord Howard in his last Deposition at my Lord Ruffel's Trial, fixes the two Meetings, one about the Middle of January, the other ten Days after: Now he fixes one to be the latter End of January, the other the Middle of February. Then he makes it to be the Prosecution of my Lord Shaftsbury's Design. I do not find that any one there had any thing to do with my Lord Shaftsbury, for my Part I had not. I had not seen his Face in two Years. Then, my Lord, that I go upon is, whatever my Lord Howard is, he is but one Witness. The Law of God and the Law of Man, understood and taken by all Men, does require two Witnesses; Moses says so, so the Apostles the same after him, and Christ says the same, that every Matter is to be established by two Witnesses. There ought to be two Witnesses to the same Thing. Now for one to come and tell a Tale of a Tub, of an imaginary Counsel, and another of a Libel, a Paper written no body knows when, is such a Thing you can never go over it. But if the Law of God be, that there must be two Witnesses to the same Fact, there is an End of this Matter. And under the Judicial Law, the Penalty would be in this Case, to put a Man to Death. Now here there are but two Things, which if allowed of, no body will be safe for Perjury. The one is to suffer Men to give their Testimony, one to one Thing, and another to another, that the Fraud cannot be discovered; and the other is to take away the Punishment. Now the Punishment is taken away in some Measure: And do but take away the other Point, whereby the Fraud cannot be discovered; and then there is no Defence can be made. That both Witnesses should be to the same Point; see the Story of Susanna. Two Elders testified they saw her in the Act of Adultery: They were carrying of her to Death; both of them said the same Thing; until they were taken asunder and examined, the Fraud was not discovered; and then one said, she was under a Tree of the right Hand, and the other, under the Tree on the left; and she escaped and they were punished. But now if you apply it to several Facts, my Lord Howard may say what he pleases, and if another shall come with a supplemental Proof, no Justice can be had. But, my Lord, I desire this, if there be two Witnesses to prove the Conspiracy, and in that there were those Matters done that are Treason, I must answer to it; but if there be not, I presume I need say nothing to it. If you do not allow it me, I desire Counsel to argue it.

L. C. J. That is a Point of Fact, whether there be two Witnesses. I tell you before-hand, one Witness is not sufficient.

Col. Sidney. Why then there is my Lord Howard, and never another.

L. C. J. Nay, do not make those Inferences; I will tell the Jury, if there be not two Witnesses, as the Law requires in this Case, they ought to acquit you.

Col. Sidney. You confound me, I cannot stir. You talk of a Conspiracy; what is a Conspiracy to kill the King? Is there any more Witnesses than one for levying of War?

L. C. J. Pray do not deceive yourself; you must not think the Court and you intend to enter into a Dialogue. Answer to the Fact; if there be not sufficient Fact, the Jury will acquit you. Make what Answer you can to it.

Col. Sidney. Then I say there being but one Witness, I am not to answer to it at all.

L. C. J. If you rely upon that, we will direct the Jury presently.

Col. Sidney. Then for levying War, what does any one say? My Lord Howard, let him, if he please, reconcile what he has said now, with what he said at my Lord Ruffel's Trial. There he said, he said all he could; and now he has got I do not know how many Things that were never spoken of there. I appeal to the Court, whether he did then speak one Word of that, that he now says of Mr. Hambden. He sets forth his Evidence very rhetorically, but it does not become a Witness, for he is only to tell what is done and said, but he does not tell what was done and said. He says, they took upon them to consider, but does not say what one Man said, or what one Man resolved, much less what I did. My Lord, if these Things are not to be distinguished, but shall be jumbled all up together, I confess I do not know what to say.

L. C. J. Take what Liberty you please. If you will make no Defence, then we will direct the Jury presently. We will direct them in the Law, and recollect Matter of Fact as well as we can.

Col. Sidney. Why then, my Lord, I desire the Law may be referred to me, I desire I may have Counsel to that Point of there being but one Witness.

L. C. J. That is a Point of Fact. If you can give any Testimony to disparage the Witness, do it.

Col. Sidney. I have a great deal to that.

L. C. J. Go on to it then.

Col. Sidney. Then, my Lord, was there a War levied? Or was it prevented? Why then, if it be prevented, 'tis not levied; if it be not levied, 'tis not within the Statute; so this is nothing to me.

L. C. J. The Court will have Patience to hear you; but at the same Time I think it is my Duty to advertise you, that this is but mispending of your Time. If you can answer the Fact, or if you have any Mind to put any Disparagement upon the Witnesses, that they are not Persons to be believed; do it, but do not ask us Questions this Way or t'other.

Col. Sidney. I have this to say concerning my Lord Howard: He hath accused himself of divers Treasons, and I do not hear that he has his Pardon of any: He is under the Terror of those Treasons, and the Punishment for them: He hath shewn himself to be under that Terror: He hath said, that he could not get his Pardon, until he had done some other Jobs, 'till he was past this Drudgery of Swearing: That is, my Lord, that he having incurred the Penalty of High-Treason, he would get his own Indemnity by destroying others. This by the Law of God and Man, I think, destroys a Man's Testimony. Besides, my Lord, he is my Debtor, he owes me a considerable Sum of Money I lent him in Time of his great Necessity; he made some Covenants with me for the Payment of that Money, which he hath broken; and when his Mortgage was forfeited, and I should take the Advantage the Law gives me, he finds out a Way to have me laid up in the Tower: He is a very subtle Man: At my Lord Ruffel's Trial, he carried his Knife, he said, between the Paring and the Apple; and so this is a Point of great Nicety and Cunning, at one Time to get his own Pardon, and at the same Time to save his Money. Another Thing, my Lord, is, when I was Prisoner, he comes to my House, and speaks with my Servant, and says, how sorry he was that I should be brought in Danger upon this Account of the Plot, and there he did in the Presence of God, with Hands and Eyes lifted up to Heaven, swear he did not believe any Plot, and that it was but a Sham; and that he was confident if I had known any thing, I would have told it him. He hath said somewhat of this before, I have several Witnesses to prove both. He was desirous to go further, and he would not only pay my Debt by his Testimony against me, but he would have got my Plate and other Goods in my Hands into his Hands, and he desired my Men, as a Place of Trust, to put them into his Hands. And the next News was, that there was a Warrant against my Lord Ruffel and me. But then, my Lord, he made other Affirmations in the same Presence of God, that I was innocent in his Opinion, and he was confident of it; for if he had known any Thing of it, he would have told it. Now I know, in my Lord Ruffel's Case, there was Dr. Burnet said something like it. And when he came to answer it, he said he was to face it out, and make the best of it he could. Now he did face it out bravely against God, but he was very timorous of Man. So that my Lord, he does say at the same Time, at my Lord Ruffel's Trial, upon his Oath, that he did believe that the Religious Obligation of an Oath, did not consist in the Formality of applying it to the Place, &c. but in calling God to witness. So that when he did call God to witness before Dr. Burnet and my Servant, and others, and this is not consistent with the Oath he has taken here, as the Gentleman said at my Lord Ruffel's Trial, unless he has one Soul in Court, and had another at my House, these Things are inconsistent, and cannot be true; and if he swear both under the Religion of an Oath, he swears himself perjured. Then, my Lord, he talks of Aaron Smith, what have I to do with Aaron Smith? He says, I sent him; my Lord, there is nobody else speaks a Word of it. Then by a strange Kind of Construction and Imagination, they will have it, that some Papers here, which are said to be found in my Study, have Relation to this Plot, as they call it; I know of none, nor am in none. Now, my Lord, I am not to give an Account of these Papers, I do not think they are before you, for there is nothing but the Similitude of Hands offered for Proof. There is the like Case of my Lady Carr some few Years ago: She was indicted of Perjury, and as Evidence against her, some Letters of hers were produced, that were contrary to what she swore in Chancery, and her Hand was proved; that is to say, it was like it: But my Lord Chief Justice Keeling directs the Jury, that tho' in Civil Causes it is a Proof, yet it is the smallest and least of Proofs; but in criminal Cases it was none at all. So that my Lord Howard's Testimony is single; and what he talks of those two Businesses that he calls a Consult, and Aaron Smith, is destroyed by Want of Proof. What could six men do? Can my Lord Howard raise five Men by his Credit? By his Purse? Let him say as much for me, with all my Heart; for my Part, I do not know where to raise five men. That such Men as we are, that have no Followers, should undertake so vast a Design is very unlikely: And this great Design that was carried on thus, it had neither Offi-ters nor Soldiers, no Place, no Time, no Money for it. That which he said last Time, which he forgot now, he talked of twenty five, or thirty thousand Pound, but no Man knew where it was to be had, but last Time he said, it was spoken in Jest. Now this is a pretty Cabal, that six Men should meet about a Business, and they neglect every one of the Points relating to the Thing they met about, make no Step about the Business, and if any one did speak of it, it was but in Jest. This is a very deep maintaining of the Plot. Then, my Lord, as to these Papers, I do not think I am to give any Account of them, I would say nothing to the Disparagement of Sir Philip Lloyd, I never saw him till he came to my House, but yet I say he is the King's Officer, and when I am prosecuted at the King's Suit, I think he ought to be no Witness. The Government of France is violent and absolute, but yet a few Years ago, a Minister of State had his Papers taken from him, and Abundance of them had dangerous Plots against the King in them; but because they were inventoried in his Officers Presence, or those deputed by him, there was no Use could be made of them, it was an irreparable Fault in the Process, and that saved him. The Similitude of Hands is nothing: We know that Hands will be counterfeited, so that no Man shall know his own Hand. A Gentleman that is now dead, told me, that my Lord Arlington about five Years ago, desired him to write a Letter, and seal it as well as he could; he writ it with Care, and sealed it with a Wafer and Wax upon it, and within a few Days, my Lord Arlington brought him five Letters, and he did not know which was his own. The Attorney shews these Papers to me, I do not know whether they are my own or no; but these very Papers, such as they are, do abhor, as much as any one can, such a Design. Look upon them, you see they are all old Ink. These Papers may be writ, perhaps, these twenty Years, the Ink is so old. But, my Lord, it is a polemical Discourse, it seems to be an Answer to Filmar, which is not calculated for any particular Government in the World: It goes only upon these general Principles, that according to the universal Law of God and Nature, there is but one Government in the World, and that is intire and absolute; and that the King can be bound by no Law, by no Oath, but he may make all Laws, and abolish them as he pleases: And this whether of Age or no, a Man, or a Child of Sense, or out of his Sense. Now, my Lord, what if any Man in his Cabinet should have written this Book? Then he has another Principle, he says, 'tis the same Thing whether a King come in by Election, by Donation, by Inheritance, or Usurpation, or any other Way; than which, I think, never was a Thing more desperately said. Cromwell, when one White, a Priest, wrote a Book, wherein he undertook to prove, That Possession was the only Right to Power, though he was a Tyrant, and a violent one, (you need not wonder I call him Tyrant, I did so every Day in his Life, and acted against him too) it would be so odious a Principle, he would not endure it, and he used him very slightly for it. Now this Filmar, that no Man must write against, is the Man that does assert it, that it is no Matter how they come by their Power, and gives the same Power to the worst Usurpers, as they that most rightly come to the Crown. By the same Argument, if the arrantest Rascal of Israel had killed Moses, David, &c. and seized upon the Power, he had been possessed of that Power, and been Father of the People. If this be Doctrine, my Lord, that is just and good, then I confess it may be dangerous for any Thing to be found in a Man's House contrary to it; but if a Commoner of England writes his present Thoughts, and another Man looking on his Book writes his present Thoughts of it, what great Hurt is there in it? And I ask Mr. Attorney how many Years ago that was written.

L. C. J. I don't know what the Book was in answer to. We are not to speak of any Book that Sir Robert Filmar wrote, but you are to make your Defence, touching a Book that was found in your Study, and spend not your Time, and the Court's Time, in that which serves to no other Purpose, than to gratify a luxuriant Way of talking that you have. We have nothing to do with his Book, you had as good tell me again, that there was a Parcel of People rambling about, pretending to my Lord Russell's Ghost, and so we may answer all the Comedies in England. Answer to the Matter you are indicted for. Do you own that Paper?

Col. Sidney. No, my Lord.

L. C. J. Go on then, it does not become us to be impatient to hear you, but we ought to advertise you, that you spend not your Time to no Purpose, and do yourself an Injury.

Col. Sidney. I say first, 'tis not proved upon me; And secondly, 'tis not a Crime if it be proved.

L. C. J. You began very materially in one Thing; it is material for you to apply yourself to take off the Credibility of my Lord Howard, that is a Witness; call your Witnesses to that Purpose, or if you have any other Point to take away the Credibility of any other Witness.

Col. Sidney. My Lord, I have seven or eight Points of Law.

L. C. J. I hear not one yet.

Col. Sidney. Why, my Lord, Conspiring to levy War is not Treason, and I desire to have Counsel upon that.

L. C. J. 'Tis not a Question. You had as good ask me, whether the first Chapter in Littleton be Law.

Col. Sidney. My Lord, I have neither made War, nor conspired to levy War.

L. C. J. You are still in a Mistake, you shall not think that we intend to dialogue with you, to let you know how far the Proof hath been given or not given, but when we come to direct the Jury, then we shall observe how far the Law requires there should be two Witnesses. But whether there be such a Proof, that must be left to the Jury.

Mr. Just. Withins. If you agree the Conspiracy, I will tell you my Mind of it; I cannot give you my Opinion in Law, till the Fact be stated.

L. C. J. The Law always arises upon a Point of Fact; there can be no Doubt in Point of Law, till there be a Settlement in Point of Fact.

Mr. Just. Holloway. My Lord has put you in a right Way: The Conspiracy is proved but by one Witness, if you have any Thing to take off his Credibility, 'tis to the Purpose.

Col. Sidney. Truly, my Lord, I do as little intend to mis-spell my own Spirit, and your Time, as ever any Man that came before you. Now, my Lord, if you will make a Concatenation of one Thing, a Supposition upon Supposition, I would take all this asunder, and shew, if none of these Things are any Thing in themselves, they can be nothing joined together. L. C. J. Take your own Method, Mr. Sidney; but I say, if you are a Man of low Spirits and weak Body, 'tis a Duty incumbent upon the Court, to exhort you not to spend your Time upon Things that are not material.

Col. Sidney. My Lord, I think 'tis very material, that a whimsical Imagination of a Conspiracy should not pass for a real Conspiracy of the Death of the King; besides, if these Papers were found in my House, 'tis a Crime created since my Imprisonment, and that cannot come in, for they were found since. My Lord, if these Papers are right, it mentions 200 and odd Sheets, and these shew neither Beginning nor Ending; and will you, My Lord, indict a Man for Treason for Scraps of Paper found in his House, relating to an ancient Paper, intending as innocently as any thing in the World, and piece and patch this to my Lord Howard's Discourse, to make this a Contrivance to kill the King? Then, my Lord, I think 'tis a Right of Mankind, and 'tis exercised by all studious Men, that they write in their own Closets what they please for their own Memory, and no Man can be answerable for it, unless they publish it.

L. C. J. Pray don't go away with that Right of Mankind, that it is lawful for me to write what I will in my own Closet, unless I publish it; I have been told, Curse not the King, not in thy Thoughts, not in thy Bed-Chamber, the Birds of the Air will carry it. I took it to be the Duty of Mankind, to observe that.

Col. Sidney. I have lived under the Inquisition.

L. C. J. God be thanked we are governed by Law.

Col. Sidney. I have lived under the Inquisition, and there is no Man in Spain can be tried for Heresy.

Mr. Just. Withins. Draw no Precedents from the Inquisition here, I beseech you, Sir.

L. C. J. We must not endure Men to talk, that by the Right of Nature every Man may contrive Mischief in his own Chamber, and he is not to be punished, 'till he thinks fit to be called to it.

Col. Sidney. My Lord, if you will take Scripture by Pieces, you will make all the Penmen of the Scripture blasphemous; you may accuse David of saying, There is no God; and accuse the Evangelists of saying, Christ was a Blasphemer and a Seducer; and the Apostles, That they were drunk.

L. C. J. Look you, Mr. Sidney, if there be any Part of it that explains the Sense of it, you shall have it read; indeed we are trifled with a little. 'Tis true, in Scripture 'tis said, there is no God, and you must not take that alone, but you must say, The Fool hath said in his Heart, there is no God. Now here is a Thing imputed to you in the Libel; if you can say, there is any Part that is in Excuse of it, call for it. As for the Purpose, whosoever does publish, that the King may be put in Chains or deposed, is a Traitor; but whosoever says, that none but Traitors would put the King in Chains, or depose him, is an honest Man; therefore apply ad idem, but don't let us make Excursions.

Col. Sidney. If they will produce the whole, my Lord, then I can see whether one Part contradicts another.

L. C. J. Well, if you have any Witnesses call them.

Col. Sidney. The Earl of Anglesey.

L. C. J. Ay, in God's Name, stay 'till To-morrow in Things that are pertinent.

Col. Sidney. I desire to know of my Lord Anglesey, what my Lord Howard said to him concerning the Plot that was broken out.

Lord Anglesey. Concerning this Plot you are now questioned for.

Col. Sidney. The Plot for which my Lord Russell and I was in Prison.

Lord Anglesey. The Question I am asked, is, What my Lord Howard said before the Trial of my Lord Russell, concerning the Plot; I suppose, this goes as a Branch of that he was accused for. I was then in the Country when the Business was on Foot, and used to come to Town a Day or two in the Week, living near in Hertfordshire, and I understanding the Affliction my Lord of Bedford was in, I went to give my Lord a Visit, we having been Acquaintance of above fifty Years standing, and bred together in Maudlin College in Oxford. When I came to my Lord of Bedford, and had administered that Comfort that was fit for one Christian to give another in that Distress, I was ready to leave him, and my Lord Howard came in. It was upon the Friday before my Lord Howard was taken, he was taken (as I take it) upon Sunday or Monday, my Lord Howard fell into the same Christian Office that I had been just discharging, to compassionate my Lord's Affliction, to use Arguments to comfort and support him under it, and told him he was not to be troubled, for he had a discreet, a wife and a virtuous Son, and he could not be in any such Plot (I think that was the Word he used at first, though he gave another Name to it afterward) and his Lordship might therefore well expect a good Issue of that Business, and he might believe his Son secure, for he believed he was neither guilty, nor so much as to be suspected. My Lord proceeded further, and did say, that he knew of no such barbarous Design (I think he called it so in the second place) and could not charge my Lord Russell with it, nor any body else. This was the effect of what my Lord Howard said at that Time, and I have nothing to say of my own Knowledge more than this; but to observe, that I was present when the Jury did put my Lord Howard particularly to it; What have you to say to what my Lord Anglesey testifies against you? My Lord, I think, did in three several Places give a short Account of himself, and said it was very true, and gave them some further Account why he said it, and said, he should be very glad it might have been advantageous to my Lord Russell.

Col. Sidney. My Lord of Clare. I desire to know of my Lord of Clare, what my Lord Howard said concerning this Plot and me.

Lord Clare. My Lord, A little after Colonel Sidney was taken, speaking of the Times, he said, that if ever he was questioned again, he would never plead, the quickest Dispatch was the best, he was sure they would have his Life, though he were ever so innocent, and discoursing of the late Primate of Armagh's Prophecy; for my Part, says he, I think the Persecution is begun, and I believe it will be very sharp, but I hope it will be short, and I said, I hoped so too.

Mr. Att. Gen. What Answer did your Lordship give to it?

Lord Clare. I have told you what I know, my Lord is too full of Discourse.

courte for me to answer all he says; but for Col. Sidney, he did with great Asseverations assert, that he was as innocent as any Man breathing, and used great Encomiums in his Praise, and then he seemed to bemoan his Misfortune, which I thought real; for never was any Man more engaged to another, than he was to Colonel Sidney, I believe. Then I told, they talked of Papers that were found; I am sure, says he, they can make nothing of any Papers of his.

Mr. Att. Gen. When was this?

Lord Clare. This was at my House the beginning of July.

Mr. Att. Gen. How long before my Lord Howard was taken?

Lord Clare. About a Week before.

Mr. Att. Gen. I would ask you, my Lord, upon your Honour, would not any Man have said as much, that had been in the Plot?

Lord Clare. I can't tell, I know of no Plot.

Col. Sidney. Mr. Philip Howard.

Mr. Just. Withins. What do you ask him?

Col. Sidney. What you heard my Lord Howard say concerning this pretended Plot, or my being in it?

Mr. Phil Howard. My Lord, when the Plot first brake out, I used to meet my Lord Howard very often at my Brother's House, and coming one Day from Whitehall, he asked me, what News? I told him, my Lord, says I, there are abundance of People that have confessed the horrid Design of murdering the King, and the Duke. How, says he, is such a thing possible? Says I, 'tis so, they have all confessed it. Says he, do you know any of their Names? Yes, says I, I have heard their Names. What are their Names, says he? Why, says I, Col. Rumsey, and Mr. West, and one Walcot and others that are in the Proclamation; (I can't tell whether Walcot was in Hold) says he, 'tis impossible such a thing can be; says he, there are in all Countries People that wish ill to the Government, and says he, I believe there are some here; but says he, for any Man of Honour, Interest, or Estate to go about it, is wholly impossible. Says I, my Lord, so it is, and I believe it. Says I, my Lord, do you know any of these People? No, says he, none of them, only one day, says he, passing thro' the Exchange, a Man saluted me, with a Blemish upon his Eye, and he embraced me, and wish'd me all Happiness: says he, I could not call to mind who this Man was; but afterwards I recollected myself that I met him at my Lord Shaftesbury's, and heard afterwards, and concluded his Name to be ----, his at whose House the King was to be assassinated.

Mr. Att. Gen. Rumbold?

Mr. Howard. Ay, Rumbold. My Lord, may I ask if my Lord Howard be here?

L. C. J. He is there behind you.

Mr. Howard. Then he will hear me. My Lord, says I, what does your Lordship think of this Business? Says he, I am in a Maze. says I, if you will be ruled by me, you have a good Opportunity to address to the King, and all the discontented Lords, as they are called; and to shew your Detestation and Abhorrence of this thing; for, says I, this will be a good means to reconcile all things. Says he, You have put one of the best Notions in my Head that ever was put. Says I, You are a very good Penman, draw up the first Address (and I believe I was the first that mentioned an Address, you have had many an one since, God send them good Success). Says he, I am sorry my Lord of Essex is out of Town, he should present it. But, says I, here is my Lord Russell, my Lord of Bedford, my Lord of Clare, all of you that are disaffected, and so accounted, go about this Business, and make the Nation happy, and King happy. Says he, Will you stay till I come back? Ay, says I, if you will come in any time; but he never came back while I was there. The next Day, I think, my Lord Russell was taken, and I came and found him at my Brother's House again (for there he was Day and Night); says he, Cousin, What News? Says I my Lord Russell is sent to the Tower. We are all undone then, says he. Pray, says he, go to my Lord Privy-Seal, and see if you can find I am to be taken up; says he, I doubt 'tis a Sham-Plot; if it was a true Plot, I should fear nothing; says I, What do you put me to go to my Lord Privy-Seal for? He is one of the King's Cabinet Council, do you think he will tell me? I won't go; but, says I, if you are not guilty, why would you have me to go to enquire? Why, says he, because I fear 'tis not a true Plot, but a Plot made upon us, and therefore, says he, there is no Man free. My Lord, I can say no more as to that time (and there is no Man that sits here, that wishes the King better than I do). The next thing I come to is this, I came the third Day, and he was mighty sad and melancholy, that was when Col. Sidney was taken; says I, Why are you melancholy, because Col. Sidney is taken? Says I, Col. Sidney was a Man talked of before, why were you not troubled for my Lord Russell, that is of your Blood? Says he, I have that particular Obligation from Col. Sidney, that no one Man had from another. I have one thing to say farther, I pray I may be rightly understood in what I have said.

L. C. J. What, would you have us undertake for all the People that hear you? I think you have spoken very materially, and I will observe it by and by to the Jury.

Col. Sidney. Pray call Dr. Burnet.

Mr. Just. Walcot. What do you ask Dr. Burnet?

Col. Sidney. I have only to ask Dr. Burnet, whether after the News of this pretended Plot, my Lord Howard came to him, and what he said to him.

Dr. Burnet. My Lord, the Day after this Plot brake out, my Lord Howard came to see me, and upon some Discourse of the Plot, with Hands and Eyes lifted up to Heaven, he protested he knew nothing of any Plot, and believed nothing of it, and said, that he looked upon it as a ridiculous thing.

My Lord Paget was sent for at the Prisoner's Request, being in the Hall.

Col. Sidney. My Lord, I desire Joseph Ducas may be called. [Who appeared, being a Frenchman.]

Col. Sidney. I desire to know whether he was not in my House when my Lord Howard came thither, a little after I was made a Prisoner, and what he said upon it?

Ducas. Yes, my Lord, my Lord Howard came the Day after Colonel Sidney was taken, and he asked me, where was the Colonel Sidney? And I said, he was taken by an Order of the King, and he said, Oh Lord!

VOL. III

What is that for? I said, They have taken Papers; he said, are some Papers left? Yes. Have they taken something more? No. Well, you must take all the Things out of the House, and carry them to some you can trust: I dare trust no body, says he; I will lend my Coach and Coachman said I, if the Colonel Sidney will save his Goods; he save them, if not, 'tis no matter. A little after the Lord Howard came in the House of Col. Sidney about eleven o' Clock at Night, When he was in, I told them, What is this? They talk of a Plot to kill the King and the Duke, and I told him, they spake of one general Insurrection; and I told him more, that I understood that Col. Sidney was sent into Scotland: When my Lord Howard understood that, he said God knows, I know nothing of this, and I am sure if the Colonel Sidney was concerned in the matter, he would tell me something, but I know nothing. Well, my Lord, I told him, I believe you are not safe in this House, there is more Danger here than in another Place. Says he, I have been a Prisoner, and I had rather do any thing in the World than be a Prisoner again.

Then my Lord Paget came into the Court.

Col Sidney. Pray, my Lord, be pleased to tell the Court, if my Lord Howard has said any thing to you concerning this late pretended Plot, or my being any Party in it.

Lord Paget. My Lord, I was subpoena'd to come hither, and did not know upon what Account; I am oblig'd to say, my Lord Howard was with me presently after the breaking out of this Plot, and before his appearing in that Part which he now acts, he came to me; and I told him, That I was glad to see him abroad, and that he was not concerned in this Disorder. He said, he had Joy from several concerning it, and he took it as an Injury to him, for that it looked as if he were Guilty. He said, he knew nothing of himself, nor any Body else. And tho' he was free in Discourse, and free to go into any Company indifferently; yet he said, he had not seen any Body that could say any thing of him, or give him occasion to say any thing of any Body else.

Col. Sidney. Mr. Edward Howard.

Mr. Ed. Howard. Mr. Sidney, What have you to say to me?

Col. Sidney. My Lord, I desire you would ask Mr. Ed. Howard the same Thing, what Discourse he had with my Lord Howard about this Plot?

L. C. J. Mr. Howard, Mr. Sidney desires you to tell what Discourse you had with my Lord Howard about this Plot.

Mr. Edward Howard. My Lord, I have been for some time very intimate with my Lord, not only upon the Account of our Alliance, but upon a strict Intimacy and Correspondence of Friendship, and I think I was as much his as he could expect from that Alliance. I did move him during this time, to serve the King upon the most honourable Account I could, but that proved ineffectual: I pass that, and come to the Business here. As soon as the Plot brake out, my Lord having a great Intimacy with me, expressed a great Detestation and Surprizing in himself to hear of it, wherein my Lord Howard assured me under very great Asseverations, that he could neither accuse himself, nor any Man living. He told me moreover, that there were certain Persons of Quality, whom he was very much concerned for, that they should be so much reflected upon or troubled, and he condoled very much their Condition, both before and after they were taken. My Lord, I believe in my Conscience he did this without any mental Reservation, or Equivocation, for he had no Reason to do it with me. I add moreover, if I have any Sense of my Lord's Disposition, I think if he had known any such thing, he would not have stood his being taken, or made his Application to the King in this manner, I am afraid not so suitable to his Quality.

L. C. J. No Reflections upon any Body.

Mr. Howard. My Lord, I reflect upon no Body. I understand where I am, and have a Respect for the Place; but since your Lordship has given me this Occasion, I must needs say, that that Reproof that was accidentally given me at the Trial of my Lord Russell, by reason of a weak Memory, made me omit some Particulars I will speak now, which are these, and I think they are material: My Lord, upon the Discourse of this Plot, did further assure me, that it was certainly a Sham, even to his Knowledge: How, my Lord, says I, do you mean a Sham? Why, says he, such an one, Cousin, as is too black for any Minister of publick Employment to have devised; but, says he, it was forged by People in the dark, such as Jesuits and Papists; and, says he, this is my Conscience. Says I, my Lord, if you are sure of this Thing, then pray, my Lord, do that honourable Thing that becomes your Quality, that is, give the King Satisfaction as becomes you; pray make an Address under your Hand to the King, whereby you express your Detestation and Abhorrence of this Thing. Says he, I thank you for your Counsel: To what Minister, says he, shall I apply myself? I pitch'd upon my Lord Halifax, and I told him of my Lord's Desire, and I remember my Lord Howard named the Duke of Mounmouth, my Lord of Bedford, the Earl of Clare, and he said he was sure they would do it; that he was sure of their Innocence, and would be glad of the Occasion: And I went to my Lord Halifax, and told him that my Lord was willing to set it under his Hand, his Detestation of this Plot, and that there was no such thing to his Knowledge. My Lord Halifax very worthily received me; says he, I will introduce it; but my Lord Russell being taken, this was laid aside, and my Lord gave this Reason. For, says he, there will be so many People taken, they will be hinder'd. I must needs add from my Conscience, and from my Heart, before God and Man, that if my Lord had spoken before the King, sitting upon his Throne, abating for the Solemnity of the Presence, I could not have more believed him, from that Assurance he had in me. And I am sure from what I have said, if I had the Honour to be of this Gentleman's Jury I would not believe him.

L. C. J. That must not be suffered.

Mr. Att. Gen. You ought to be bound to your good Behaviour for that.

L. C. J. The Jury are bound by their Oaths to go according to their Evidence, they are not to go by Men's Conjectures.

Mr. Howard. May I go, my Lord?

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord Howard desires he may stay, we shall make use of him.

Col. Sidney. My Lord, I spake of a Mortgage that I had of my Lord Howard, I don't know whether it is needful to be proved; but it is so.

Lord Howard. I confess it.

5 L

Col.

Col. Sidney. Then, my Lord, here is the other Point; he is under the Fear, that he dare not but say what he thinks will conduce towards the gaining his Pardon; and that he hath expressed, that he could not have his Pardon, but he must first do this Drudgery of Swearing. I need not say, that his Son should say, That he was sorry his Father could not get his Pardon unless he did swear against some others.

Col. Sidney. Call Mr. Blake. [Who appeared.] My Lord, I desire he may be asked, Whether my Lord Howard did not tell him that he could not get his Pardon yet, and he could ascribe it to nothing, but that the Drudgery of Swearing must be over first.

Then my Lord Chief Justice asked the Question.

Mr. Blake. My Lord, I am very sorry I should be called to give a public Account of a private Conversation, how it comes about I don't know. My Lord sent for me about six Weeks ago, to come and see him. I went, and we talked of News; I told him, I heard no body had their Pardon, but he that first discovered the Plot; he told me, no; but he had his Warrant for it: And, says he, I have their Word and Honour for it; but says he, I will do nothing in it till I have farther Order; and says he, I hear nothing of it, and I can ascribe it to no other Reason, but I must not have my Pardon till the Drudgery of Swearing is over. These Words my Lord said, I believe my Lord won't deny it.

Then Col. Sidney called Mr. Hunt and Burroughs, but they did not appear.

Col. Sidney. 'Tis a hard Case they don't appear. One of them was to prove that my Lord Howard said he could not have his Pardon till he had done some other Jobs.

L. C. J. I can't help it; If you had come for Assistance from the Court, I would willingly have done what I could.

Then Col. Sidney mentioned the Duke of Buckingham, but he was informed he was not subpoena'd.

Col. Sidney. Call Grace Tracy and Elizabeth Penwick. [Who appear'd.] I ask you only, what my Lord Howard said to you at my House concerning the Plot, and my being in it?

Tracy. Sir, he said, that he knew nothing of a Plot he protested, and he was sure Col. Sidney knew nothing of it. And he said, if you knew anything of it, he must needs know of it, for he knew as much of your Concerns as any one in the World.

Col. Sidney. Did he take God to Witness upon it?

Tracy. Yes.

Col. Sidney. Did he desire my Plate at my House?

Tracy. I can't tell that, he said the Goods might be sent to his House.

Col. Sidney. Penwick, What did my Lord Howard say in your Hearing concerning the pretended Plot, or my Plate carrying away?

Penwick. When he came, he asked for your Honour, and they said your Honour was taken away by a Man to the Tower for the Plot, and then he took God to Witness he knew nothing of it, and believed your Honour did not neither. He said, he was in the Tower two Years ago, and your Honour, he believed, saved his Life.

Col. Sidney. Did he desire the Plate?

Penwick. Yes, and said it should be sent to his House to be secured. He said it was only Malice.

Mr. Wharton stood up.

Mr. Wharton. 'Tis only this I have to say, That if your Lordship pleases to shew me any of these Sheets of Paper, I will undertake to imitate them in a little Time, that you shan't know which is which. 'Tis the easiest Hand that ever I saw in my Life.

Mr. Att. Gen. You did not write these, Mr. Wharton?

Mr. Wharton. No; but I will do this in a very little time, if you please.

L. C. J. Have you any more Witnesses?

Col. Sidney. No, my Lord.

L. C. J. Then apply yourself to the Jury.

Col. Sidney. Then this is that I have to say. Here is a huge Complication of Crimes laid to my Charge: I did not know at first under what Statute they were, now I find 'tis the Statute of 25 Edw. 3. This Statute hath two Branches; one relating to War, the other to the Person of the King. That relating to the Person of the King, makes the conspiring, imagining and compassing his Death, criminal. That concerning War is not, unless it be levied. Now, my Lord, I cannot imagine to which of these they refer my Crime, and I did desire your Lordship to explain it. For to say that a Man did meet to conspire the King's Death, and he that gives you the Account of the Business does not speak one Word of it, seems extravagant; for Conspiracies have ever their Denomination from that Point to which they tend; as a Conspiracy to make false Coin infers Instruments and the like. A Conspiracy to take away a Woman, to kill or rob, are all directed to that End. So conspiring to kill the King, must immediately aim at killing the King. The King hath two Capacities, Natural and Politick, that which is the Politick can't be within the Statute, in that Sense he never dies, and 'tis absurd to say it should be a Fault to kill the King that can't die: So then it must be the natural Sense it must be understood in, which must be done by Sword, by Pistol, or any other way. Now if there be not one Word of this, then that is utterly at an End, tho' the Witnesses had been good. The next Point is concerning levying of War. Levying of War is made Treason there, so it be proved by Overt-Act; but an Overt-Act of that never was, or can be pretended here. If the War be not levied, 'tis not within the Act, for conspiring to levy War is not in the Act. My Lord, there is no Man thinks that I would kill the King that knows me, I am not a Man to have such a Design, perhaps I may say I have saved his Life once. So that it must be by Implication, that is, it is first imagined that I intended to raise a War, and then 'tis imagined that War should tend to the Destruction of the King. Now I know that may follow, but that is not natural or necessary, and being not natural or necessary, it can't be so understood by the Law. That it is not, is plain; for many Wars have been made, and the Death of the King has not followed. David made War upon Saul, yet no body will say he fought his Death, he had him under his Power and did not kill him; David made War upon Ishbosheth, yet did not design his Death: And so in England and France Kings have been taken Prisoners, but they did not kill them. King Stephen was taken Prisoner, but they did not kill him.

So that 'tis two distinct Things, to make War and to endeavour to kill the King. Now as there is no manner of Pretence that I should endeavour to kill the King directly, so it can't be by Inference, because 'tis Treason under another Species: I confess I am not fit to argue these Points, I think I ought to have Counsel, but if you won't allow it me, I can't help it; but these Things are impossible to be jumbled up together. Now I say this, if I am not under the first Branch, if not directly, I can't be by Implication; tho' I did make War, I can't be said to conspire the Death of the King, because 'tis a distinct Species of Treason; and my Lord Coke says, 'tis the Overthrow of all Justice to confound Membris dividenda. Now if the making of War can't be understood to be a conspiring the Death of the King, then I am not guilty of this Indictment; but here, my Lord, is neither conspiring the Death of the King, nor making War, nor conspiring to make War. Besides, I say, 'tis not the best Man's Evidence here would be good in this Case, because the Law requires two. The next thing is the Business of Aaron Smith, which my Lord tells so imperfectly, and so merely conjectural, that there is nothing in it but his Rhetorick in setting it out. He tells you of a Letter sent with him, but he does not tell you by whom writ, what was in it, or whether it was delivered or no; so that I think we may lay that aside as the other, as Things nothing in them at all. Then says Mr. Attorney, These Scotch Gentlemen are come to Town, I profess I never heard the Names of one of them till he named them to me in the Tower. I have not sent myself, nor writ a Letter into Scotland never since the Year 59, nor do I know one Man in Scotland to whom I can write, or from whom I ever received one. I returned into England in the Year 77, and since that time have not writ nor received a Letter from Scotland. Then some Gentlemen came hither, What is that to me? I never saw one of the Campbells in my Life, nor Monro; if any one can prove I have had any Communication with them, I will be glad to suffer. Then here are Papers, if any thing is to be made of them, you must produce the whole, for 'tis impossible to make any thing of a part of them. You ask me, what other Passage I would have read, I don't know a Passage in them, I can't tell whether it be good or bad. But if there are any Papers found, 'tis a great doubt whether they were found in my Study or no, or whether they be not counterfeit; but tho' that be admitted, that they were found in my House, the Hand is such, that it shews they have been writ very many Years. Then that which seems to be an Account of the Sections and Chapters, that is but a Scrap, and what if any body had, my Lord, either in my own Hand or another's, found Papers that are not well justifiable, is this Treason? Does this imagine the Death of the King? Does this reach the Life of the King? If any Man can say I ever printed a Sheet in my Life, I will submit to any Punishment. Many others, my Lord, they write, and they write what comes into their Heads. I believe there is a Brother of mine here has forty Quires of Paper written by my Father, and never one Sheet of them was published; but he writ his own Mind to see what he could think of it another time, and blot it out again, may be. And myself, I believe, have burned more Papers of my own writing than a Horse can carry. So that for these Papers I can't answer for them. There is nothing in it, and what Concatenation can this have with the other Design that is in itself nothing, with my Lord's select Council selected by no body to pursue the Design of my Lord Shaftesbury? And this Council that he pretends to be set up for so great a Business, was to be adjudged with so much finesse so as to bring Things together, What was this finesse to do? (taking it for granted, which I don't) This was nothing (if he was a credible Witness) but a few Men talking at large of what might be or not be, what was like to fall out without any manner of Intention, or doing any thing; they did not so much as enquire, whether there were Men in the Country, Arms, or Ammunition. A War to be made by five or six Men, not knowing one another, not trusting one another. What said Dr. Cox in his Evidence at my Lord Russell's Trial, of my Lord Russell's trusting my Lord Howard? He might say the same of some others. So that, my Lord, I say, these Papers have no manner of Coherence, no Dependence upon any such Design. You must go upon Conjecture upon Conjecture; and after all, you find nothing but only Papers, never perfect, only Scraps, written many Years ago, and that could not be calculated for the raising of the People. Now, pray what Imagination can be more vain than that? And what Man can be safe, if the King's Counsel may make such (whimsical I won't say, but) groundless Constructions? Mr. Attorney says, the Plot was broken to the Scots, (God knows we were neither broken nor joined) and that the Campbells came to Town about that Time I was taken; and in the mean time my Lord Howard, the great Contriver of all this Plot, who was most active, and advised the Business that consisted of so much finesse, he goes there and agrees of nothing, and then goes into Essex upon great important Business, greater than the War of England and Scotland, to what Purpose? To look after a little pimping Manor, and what then? Why then it must be laid aside, and he must be idle five Weeks at the Bath, and there is no enquiring after it. Now, I desire your Lordship to consider, whether there be a Possibility for any Men, that have the Sense of Porters and Grooms, to do such Things as he would put upon us. I would only say this; If Mr. Attorney be in the right, there was a Combination with the Scots, and then this Paper was writ; for those that say I did it, say I was doing it then; and by the Notes, there is Work enough for four or five Years, to make out what is mentioned in those Scraps of Paper, and this must be to kill the King. And I say this, my Lord, that under Favour, for all constructive Treasons you are to make none, but to go according to plain Proof, and that these constructive Treasons belong only to Parliament, and by the immediate Proviso in that Act. Now, my Lord, I leave it to your Lordship, to see whether there is in this any thing that you can say is an Overt-Act of Treason mentioned in 25 Edw. 3. If it be not plainly under one of the two Branches, that I have endeavoured to kill the King, or levied War, then 'tis matter of Construction, and that belongs to no Court but the Parliament. Then, my Lord, this hath been adjudged already in Throgmorton's Case. There are twenty Judgments of Parliament, the Act of 13 Eliz. that says—I should have somebody to speak for me, my Lord.

L. C. J. We are of another Opinion.

Mr. Just.

Mr. Just. Withins. If you acknowledge the Matter of Fact, you say well.

Col. Sidney. I say there are several Judgments of Parliament, that do shew whatever is constructive Treason does not belong to any private Court. That of Mary, 1 Edw. 6. 1 Eliz. 5 Eliz. 18. another 13 Car. shews this. Now, my Lord, I say that the Business concerning the Papers, 'tis only a Similitude of Hands, which is just nothing. In my Lady Carr's Case, it was resolved to extend to no criminal Cause; if not to any, then not to the greatest; the most capital. So that I have only this to say, that I think 'tis impossible for the Jury to find this Matter; for the first Point you proved by my Lord Howard, that I think is no body, and the last concerning the Papers, is only Imagination from the Similitude of Hands. If I had published it, I must have answered for it; or if the Thing had been whole and mine, I must have answered for it; but for these Scraps never shewed any body, that I think does not at all concern me. And I say, if the Jury should find it (which is impossible they can) I desire to have the Law referred unto me.

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lord, and you Gentlemen of the Jury, the Evidence hath been long; but I will endeavour to repeat it as faithfully as I can. The Crime the Prisoner stands accused for, is compassing and imagining the Death of the King. That which we go about to prove, that compassing and imagining by, is by his meeting, and consulting how to raise Arms against the King, and by plain Matter in writing under his own Hand, where he does affirm, it is lawful to take away and destroy the King. Gentlemen, I will begin with the first Part of it, the Meeting and Consultation to raise Arms against the King. The Prisoner, Gentlemen, hath endeavoured to avoid the whole Force of this Evidence, by saying, that this in Point of Law can't affect him, if it were all proved; for this does not amount to a Proof of his compassing and imagining the Death of the King, and he is very long in interpreting the Act of Parliament to you of 25 Edw. 3. and dividing of it into several Members or Branches of Treason; and does insist upon it, that tho' this should be an Offence within one Branch of that Statute, yet that is not a Proof of the other, which is the Branch he is proceeding upon, that is the first Clause against the compassing and imagining the Death of the King. And, says he, conspiring to levy War is not so much as one Branch of that Statute, but it must be War actually levied. This is a Matter he is wholly mistaken in, in Point of Law. It hath been adjudged over and over again, That an Act which is in one Branch of that Statute, may be an Overt-Act to prove a Man guilty of another Branch of it. A levying War is an Overt-Act to prove a Man guilty of conspiring the Death of the King. And this was adjudged in the Case of Sir Henry Vane, so is meeting and consulting to raise Arms; and Reason does plainly speak it to be so; for they that conspire to raise War against the King, can't be presumed to stop any where, till they have dethroned or murdered the King. Gentlemen, I won't be long in citing Authorities, it hath been settled lately by all the Judges of England, in the Case of my Lord Ruffel, who hath suffer'd for this Conspiracy. Therefore that Point of Law will be very plain against the Prisoner. He hath mentioned some other Things, as that there must be two Witnesses to every particular Fact, and one Witness to one Fact, and another to another, is not sufficient; it hath been very often objected, and as often over-ruled: It was over-ruled solemnly in the Case of my Lord Stafford. Therefore if we have one Witness to one Overt-Act, and another to another, they will be two Witnesses in Law to convict this Prisoner. In the first Part of our Evidence, we give you an Account of the general Design of an Insurrection that was to have been, that this was contrived first, when my Lord Shaftesbury was in England, that after my Lord Shaftesbury was gone, the Business did not fall, but they thought fit to revive it again, and that they might carry it on the more steadily, they did contrive a Council among themselves of Six, whereof the Prisoner at the Bar was one. They were the Duke of Monmouth, my Lord of Effex, my Lord Howard, my Lord Ruffel, the Prisoner at the Bar, and Mr. Hambden. This Council they contrived to manage this Affair, and to carry on that Design, that seemed to fall by the Death of my Lord of Shaftesbury, and they met; this we give you an Account of, first by Witnesses, that gave you an Account in general of it. And tho' they were not privy to it yet they heard of this Council, and that Colonel Sidney was to be one of this Council. This, Gentlemen, if it had stood alone by itself, had been nothing to affect the Prisoner at all. But this will shew you, that it was discoursed among them that were in this Conspiracy. Then my Lord Howard gives you an Account, that first the Duke of Monmouth, and he and Colonel Sidney met, and it was agreed to be necessary to have a Council that should consist of six or seven, and they were to carry it on. That the Duke of Monmouth undertook to dispose my Lord Ruffel to it, and Colonel Sidney to dispose the Earl of Effex, and Mr. Hambden; that these Gentlemen did meet accordingly, and the Substance of their Discourse was, taking notice how the Design had fallen upon the Death of my Lord Shaftesbury, that it was fit to carry it on before Men's Inclinations were cool, for they found they were ready to it, and had great Reason to believe it, because this being a Business communicated to so many, yet for all that it was kept very secret, and no body had made any mention of it, which they looked upon as a certain Argument that Men were ready to engage in it. This encouraged them to go on in this Conspiracy. Then when the Six met at Mr. Hambden's House, they debated concerning the Place of Rising, and the Time; the Time they conceived must be suddenly, before Men's Minds were cool, for now they thought they were ready and very much disposed to it; and for Place they had in Debate, whether they should rise first in the Town, or in the Country, or both together. And for the Persons, they thought it absolutely necessary for them to have the united Councils of Scotland to join with them, and therefore they did refer this Matter to be better considered of another time, and they met afterwards at my Lord Ruffel's House in February, and there they had Discourse to the same Purpose. But there they began to consider with themselves, being they were to destroy this Government, what they should set up in the Room of it, to what Purpose they engaged. For they did very wisely consider, if this be only to serve a Turn, and to make one Man great, this will be a great Hinderance in their Affair, therefore they thought it was necessary to engage upon a publick Account, and to resolve all into the Authority of Parliament, which surely they either thought to force the King to call, or otherwise that the People might call a Parliament, if the King refused, and so they to choose their own Heads. But still they were upon this Point, that it was necessary for their Friends in Scotland to have their Councils united with them, and in order to that, it was necessary to contrive some Way to send a Messenger into Scotland, to bring some Men here to treat and consult about it, and Colonel Sidney is the Man that does engage to send this Messenger, and he had a Man very fit for his Turn, that is, Aaron Smith, whom he could confide in, and him he undertook to send into Scotland. This Messenger was to fetch my Lord Melvin, the two Campbell's, and Sir John Cockram; Colonel Sidney as he engaged to do this, so afterwards he did shew to my Lord Howard Money, which he affirmed was for that Business; he says it was of a Sum about sixty Guineas, and he believes he gave it him, for that Colonel Sidney told him, Aaron Smith, was gone into Scotland; that the Pretence was not barefaced to invite them over, to consult of a Rebellion, but to consult about the Business of Carolina, being a Plantation for the persecuted Brethren, as they pretended in Scotland. Gentlemen, these Scotchmen that were thus sent for over, they came accordingly, that is, the two Campbell's, and Sir John Cockram, and the Discourse with Sir Andrew Foster was according to this Cant that was agreed on beforehand, concerning a Plantation in Carolina. This was that that was pretended for their coming hither; but the true Errand was, the Business of the Insurrection intended, Gentlemen, that they came upon such a Design, is evident from the Circumstances; they came about the Time the Business brake out, and in that Time suspiciously changing their Lodging, they were taken making their Escape, and this at a Time before it was probable to be known abroad that these Men were named as part of the Conspirators. These things do very much verify the Evidence my Lord Howard hath given, and there is nothing has been said, does at all invalidate it. The sending of Aaron Smith into Scotland, and his going, and the coming of these Men, and their endeavouring to make their Escape, are mighty concurrent Evidences with the whole Evidence my Lord Howard has given. Now, what Objections are made against this Evidence? Truly none at all. Here are Persons of great Quality have given their Testimony, and they do not impeach my Lord Howard in the least; but some do extremely confirm the Truth of my Lord Howard. My Lord Anglesey gives you an Account of a Discourse at my Lord of Bedford's, that my Lord Howard came in, and that my Lord Howard should there comfort my Lord of Bedford, and enlarge in the Commendations of his Son, and say he was confident he knew nothing of the Design, and he must be innocent. Gentlemen, This is the Nature of the most part of the Evidence. My Lord of Clare, his Evidence is much the like, that is, his denying that he knew of any Plot. Now here is my Lord Howard under a Guilt of High-Treason; for he was one of those Conspirators not yet discovered, nor no Evidence of any Discourse leading to any thing that should give Occasion to him to protest his Innocency: And says he, I know nothing of the Plot. You would have wondered if he should have been talking in all Places his Knowledge, and declaring himself: His denying of it under the Guilt, when he was not accused, is nothing to his Confession when he comes to be apprehended and taken for it. Here Mr. Philip Howard says, he had several Discourses with him about this Business, upon the breaking out of the Plot, and that he advised him to make an Address, and that this was a Thing that would be very acceptable, and very much for their Vindication; and my Lord Howard (he says) thanked him for his very good Advice, and said, he would follow it: And presently after, when my Lord Ruffel was apprehended, Mr. Howard tells him the News, that my Lord Ruffel was apprehended; this was sudden to him. And what says he? We are all undone. When my Lord Ruffel that was one of this Council, that was a secret Council, and could not be traced but by some of themselves, when He is apprehended, then he falls out into this Expression, We are all undone. This is an Argument my Lord Howard had Guilt upon him. For, why were they all undone, that my Lord Ruffel was apprehended, any more than upon the apprehending the rest? Yes, because my Lord was one of the Six, and now 'twas come to the knowing of that Part of the Conspiracy. It was traced to the Council of Six, which in all likelihood would break the Neck of the Design. Now though he put it off afterwards, saying, I believe it a Sham Plot, yet this was but a trivial Put-off. And then, when Colonel Sidney is taken, the same Witnesses Mr. Howard tells you, my Lord was very sad and melancholy; for then he had greater Reason to lie under an Apprehension of being detected. Therefore, Gentlemen, this will rather confirm the Truth of the Evidence, than any way impeach it. Then (for I would repeat it all, tho' I think it had no great Weight in it) Dr. Burnet says, that after the Plot, my Lord Howard pretended he knew of no Plot. This is no more than was testified by the other Lords before; and all it imports, is, that my Lord did not discover himself to Dr. Burnet. But I would fain know, if my Lord had told Dr. Burnet, had it not argued that he had great Confidence in him, that he thought him a Man fit to be intrusted with such a Secret? And unless the Doctor desires to be thought such a Man, himself must own 'tis no Objection, that my Lord Howard did not tell him. Ducas's Testimony is no more neither, that he protested he was innocent, and believed Colonel Sidney was innocent, and this was before my Lord Howard discovered any thing of this Plot. Then Colonel Sidney objects, This is by Malice, my Lord Howard owes him Money, and seeks to pay his Debts by taking away his Life; and in further Prosecution of this Malice, would have seized upon his Goods. But the Evidence does not receive such Construction, for my Lord Howard only offered Colonel Sidney the Civility of his House to protect his Plate and Goods. Now, Gentlemen, there were two other Witnesses, my Lord Paget and Mr. Edward Howard; but they say no more than the rest of them, that he did protest his Innocency; and Mr. Howard says, he advised him to make an Address to the King. This, Gentlemen, I repeat, not that it is material, but for no other Reason, than because Colonel Sidney had produced it; and so we are to think, he intended to make some use of it; but I can't

I can't see any Inference to be drawn from it. There is one Witness more, and that is Mr. Blake, to the Credit of my Lord Howard, who comes here, and says, that when he discoursed about a Pardon, my Lord should say, That he had a Warrant for his Pardon, but that he had not yet pass'd it, and could not yet; and he apprehended the Reason was, because the Drudgery of Swearing was not over. But this is but what my Lord Howard had conjectured: First, It does not appear, that there is any Promise of Pardon at all to my Lord Howard, on any Terms imposed on him. In the next place, Whatever Expectation he has of a Pardon, he can't reasonably hope for it without making a clear Discovery of all he knows: For to stifle the Evidence he has given, is not a way to deserve a Pardon of his Prince. Therefore, Gentlemen, whatever Expressions were used, tho' he called it the Drudgery of Swearing, however unwilling he is to come to it, and tho' he gives it very many hard Names, and might think it very harsh to come and own himself to be one of the Conspirators, it might be irksome, and very irksome; yet none of them tell you, that my Lord Howard should say, that what he had said was not true. Now he has come and given his Evidence, and you have heard all these Objections against it, and not one of them touch it in the least.

I come in the next place to the other Part of the Evidence, the Papers found in Colonel Sidney's House. And in the first place he objects, They can't affect him; for, says he, there is no Proof they were found in my House, no Proof they were written by me; for Comparison of Hands, that is nothing; and if they were proved to be mine, 'tis nothing at all to the purpose; they are an Answer to a Polemical Discourse wherewith he entertained himself privately in his Study. Why, you have observed, I know, that Sir Philip Lloyd in the first place swears, that by Warrant from the Secretary he searched his House, and he found the Papers lying upon Colonel Sidney's Table in his Study, when he came in there; and there is no Ground nor Colour for you to suspect otherwise than that they were there, and he found them there. For the Surmise of the Prisoner at the Bar, that they might be laid there, 'tis so foreign and without Ground, that by and by you will think there is nothing at all in it. In the next place, we prove Col. Sidney's Hand, and that by as much Proof as the Thing is capable of; such a Proof as in all Cases hath been allowed; and that is, for Men to come that know and are acquainted with the Hand-writing, and swear they know his Hand-writing, and they believe this to be his Hand. You have heard from Mr. Sheppard, a Man that used to transact Business for him, pay Money for him; and Mr. Cook and Mr. Cary, Men of known Credit in the City of London, that have had the like Dealings with Col. Sidney, and they swear this is his Hand-writing, as they verily believe. So that, Gentlemen, this Proof to you of Col. Sidney's Hand-writing does verify Sir Philip Lloyd, that these Papers must be found there, if Col. Sidney writ them; and then this being found that they were writ by him, the next Thing will be, How far this will be an Evidence to prove his Compassing and Imagining the Death of the King. Compassing and Imagining the Death of the King is the Act of the Mind, and is Treason whilst it remains secret in the Heart, tho' no such Treason can be punish'd, because there is no way to prove it; but when once there is an Overt-Act, that is, any thing that does manifest and declare such Intention, then the Law takes hold of it, and punishes it as High-Treason.

Now after this Evidence, I think no Man will doubt, whether it was in the Heart of the Prisoner at the Bar to destroy the King. But first he objects, that this is a Part of a Book, and unless you take the whole, nothing can be made of it: As it is in wresting of Texts of Scripture, says he, you may as well say, that David says, there is no God, because David hath said, The fool hath said in his heart, there is no God. But, Gentlemen, the Application won't hold; for you see a long Discourse hath been read to you, a continued Thread of Argument; 'tis not one Proposition, but an whole Series of Argument: These are the Positions, 'That the King derives all his Power from the People; That 'tis originally in the People, and that the Measure of Subjection must be adjudged by the Parliament; and if the King does fall from doing his Duty, he must expect the People will exact it.' And this he has laid down as no way prejudicial to him; for, says he, the King may refuse the Crown, if he does not like it upon these Terms. But, says he, if he does accept it, he must expect the Performance will be exacted, or Revenge taken by those he hath betray'd. Then next, he sets up an Objection, and then argues against it: Ay, but shall the People be Judge in their own Cause? And thus he answers it, It must be so; for is not the King a Judge in his own Cause? How can any Man else be tried, or convicted of any Offence, if the King may not be Judge in his own Cause? For to adjudge by a Man's self or by his Deputy, is the same Thing; and so a Crime against the King can't be punished. And then he takes notice of it as a very absurd Position, 'That the King shall judge in his own Cause, and not the People.' That would be to say, 'The Servant entertained by the Master shall judge the Master, but the Master shall not judge the Servant. Gentlemen, after this sort of Argument he comes to this settled Position, 'We may therefore, says he, change or take away Kings; (without breaking any Yoke, or that is made a Yoke;) the Injury is therefore in imposing the Yoke, and there can be none at all in 'breaking of it.' But he goes on in his Book, and that is by way of Answer to an Objection, That if there be no Injury, yet there may be Inconvenience, if the headless Multitude should shake off the Yoke. But, says he, I would fain know how the Multitude comes to be headless; and there he gives you many Instances in Story, and from foreign Nations he comes home to the English, and tells you how all Rebellions in later Ages have been headed: and tells you the Parliament is the Head, or the Nobility and Gentry that compose it; and when the King fails in his Duty, the People may call it. The Multitude therefore is never headless, but they either find or create an Head, so that here is a plain and avowed Principle of Rebellion established upon the strongest Reason he has to back it. Gentlemen, This with the other Evidence that has been given, will be sufficient to prove his compassing the Death of the King. You see the Affirmations he makes; when Kings do break their Trust they may be called to Account by the People. This is the Doctrine he broaches and argues for: He says in his Book, in another Part, that the Calling and Dissolving of Parliaments is not in the King's Power. Gentlemen, you all know how many Parliaments the King hath Called and Dissolved; if it be not in his Power, he hath done that that was not in his Power, and so contrary to his Trust. Gentlemen, at the Entrance into this Conspiracy, they were under an Apprehension that their Liberties were invaded, as you heard in the Evidence from my Lord Howard, that they were just making the Insurrection upon that tumultuous Opposition of electing of Sheriffs in London. They enter into a Consultation to raise Arms against the King; and it is proved by my Lord Howard, that the Prisoner at the Bar was one. Gentlemen, Words spoken upon a Supposition will be High-Treason, as was held in King James's Time, in the Case of Collins in Rall's Reports, The King being excommunicate may be deposed and murdered, without affirming he was excommunicated; and this was enough to convict him of High-Treason. Now according to that Case, to say the King having broken his Trust may be deposed by his People, would be High-Treason; but here he does as good as affirm the King had broke his Trust. When every one sees the King hath dissolved Parliaments; this reduces it to an Affirmation. And tho' this Book be not brought to that Council to be perused, and there debated, yet it will be another, and more than two Witnesses against the Prisoner: For I would ask any Man, suppose a Man was in a Room, and there were two Men, and he talks with both apart, and he comes to one, and endeavours to persuade him that it is lawful to rise in Arms against the King, if so be he break his Trust; and he should go to another Man; and tell him the King hath broken his Trust, and we must seek some way to redress ourselves, and persuade the People to rise; these two Witnesses do so tack this Treason together, that they will be two Witnesses to prove him Guilty of High-Treason. And you have heard one Witness prove it positively to you, That he consulted to rise in Arms against the King, and here is his own Book says, it is lawful for a Man to rise in Arms against the King, if he break his Trust, and in effect he hath said, the King hath broken his Trust: Therefore this will be a sufficient Demonstration what the Imagination of the Heart of this Man was, that it was nothing but the Destruction of the King and the Government, and indeed of all Governments. There can be no such Thing as Government if the People shall be Judge in the Case: For what so uncertain as the heady and giddy Multitude? Gentlemen, I think this will be a sufficient Evidence of his consulting the Death of the King. You have here the Prisoner at the Bar that is very deep in it. Indeed some Men may by Passion be transported into such an Offence, and tho' the Offence be never the less, whatever the Motives are, yet in some it is less dangerous; for those that venture upon Passion to raise Commotions and Rebellion, are not always so much upon their Guard, but that they may make some false Steps to entrap themselves. But this Gentleman proceeds upon a surer Foundation, it is his Reason, it is his Principle, it is the Guide of all his Actions, it is that by which he leads and directs the ready Course of his Life. A Man convinced of these Principles, and that walks accordingly, what won't he do to accomplish his Designs? How wary will he be in all his Actions? Still reasoning with himself, which Way to bring it most securely about. Gentlemen, This is the more dangerous Conspiracy in this Man, by how much the more it is rooted in him; and how deep it is, you hear, when a Man shall write as his Principle, that it is lawful for to depose Kings, they breaking their Trust, and that the Revolt of the whole Nation cannot be called Rebellion. It will be a very sad Case when People act this according to their Consciences, and do all this for the Good of the People, as they would have it thought; but this is the Principle of this Man. Gentlemen, we think we have plainly made it out to you, and proved it sufficiently, that it was the Imagination of his Heart to destroy the King, and made sufficient Proof of High-Treason.

Col. Sidney. Give me leave, my Lord, to say a very few Words. I desire Mr. Solicitor would not think it his Duty to take away Men's Lives any how: First, We have had a long Story—

L. C. J. Nay, Mr. Sidney, we must not have vying and revying, I asked you before what you had to say; the Course of Evidence is, after the King's Counsel have concluded, we never admit the Prisoner to say any thing.

Col. Sidney. My Lord, it was a wise Man said, There never could be too much Delay in the Life of a Man: I know the King's Counsel may conclude, if they please. Mr. Solicitor, I would not have him think that it is enough by one way or another to bring a Man to Death: My Lord, this Matter of Sir Henry Vane is utterly misrepresented.

L. C. J. I must tell you, Gentlemen of the Jury, that what the Prisoner says, that is not proved, and what the King's Counsel have said, of which there is no Proof to make it out, must not be taken into any Consideration.

Col. Sidney. Then, my Lord, here is a Place or two in old Hale's [turning over my Lord Hale's Book] for the Overt-Act of one Treason, not being an Overt-Act of another, your Lordship knows Coke and Hale were both against it. [He reads.] Compassing by bare Words is not an Overt-Act, conspiring to levy War is no Overt-Act.

Mr. Sol. Gen. I desire but one Word more for my own sake as well as the Prisoner's, and that is, that if I have said any thing that is not Law, or misrepeated, or misapplied the Evidence which hath been given, I do make it my humble Request to your Lordship to rectify those Mistakes, as well in Point of Fact as Point of Law; for God forbid the Prisoner should suffer by any Mistake.

L. C. J. Gentlemen, the Evidence has been long, and it is a Cause of great Concernment, and it is far from the Thoughts of the King, or from the Thoughts, or Desire of any of his Judges here to be instrumental to take away the Life of any Man, that by Law his Life ought not to be taken away. For I had rather many guilty Men should escape, than one innocent Man suffer. The Question is, Whether upon all the Evidence you have heard against the Prisoner, and the Evidence on his Behalf, there is Evidence sufficient to convict the Prisoner of the High-Treason he stands charged with. And as you must not be moved by the Denial of the Prisoner further than as it is backed with Proof; so you are not to be inveigled by any Insinuations made against the Prisoner at the Bar, further or otherwise than as the Proof is made out to you. But it is usual, and it is a Duty incumbent on the King's Counsel, to urge against all such Criminals, whatsoever they observe in the Evidence against them, and likewife to endeavour to give Answers to the Objections that are made on their Behalf. And, therefore, since we have been kept so long in this Cause, it won't be amiss for me (and my Brothers, as they shall think fit,) to help your Memory in the Fact, and discharge that Duty that is incumbent upon the Court as to the Points of Law. This Indictment is for High-Treason, and is grounded upon the Statute of 25 Edw. 3. By which Statute, the Compassing and Imagining the Death of the King, and declaring the same by an Overt-Act is made High-Treason. The Reason of that Law was, because at Common-Law there was great Doubt what was Treason; wherefore to reduce that high Crime to a Certainty was that Law made, that those that were guilty might know what to expect. And there are several Acts of Parliament made between the Time of Edward 3. and that of 1 M. but by that Statute all Treasons that are not enumerated by After-Acts of Parliament remain as they were declared by that Statute of 25 Edw. 3. And so are Challenges and other Matters, insisted upon by the Prisoner, left as they were at the Time of that Act: I am also to tell you that in point of Law, it is not only the Opinion of us here, but the Opinion of them that sat before us, and the Opinion of all the Judges of England, and within the Memory of many of you, that tho' there be two Witnesses required to prove a Man guilty of High-Treason, yet it is not necessary there should be two Witnesses to the same Thing at one Time. But if two Witnesses prove two several Facts, that have a Tendency to the same Treason, they are two Witnesses sufficient to convict any Man of High-Treason. In the Case of my Lord Stafford in Parliament, all the Judges assenting, it is notoriously known, that one Witness to a Conspiracy in England, and another to a Conspiracy in France, were held two Witnesses sufficient to convict him of High-Treason. In the next Place, I am to tell you, that tho' some Judges have been of Opinion that Words of themselves were not an Overt-Act: but my Lord Hales, nor my Lord Coke, nor any other of the Sages of the Law, ever questioned but that a Letter would be an Overt-Act, sufficient to prove a Man guilty of High-Treason; for scribere est agere. Mr. Sidney says, the King is a politick Person; but you must destroy him in his Natural Capacity, or it is not Treason; but I must tell you, if any Man compass to imprison the King, it is High-Treason; so was the Case of my Lord Cobham. And my Lord Coke, when he says, If a Man do attempt to make the King do any thing by Force and Compulsion, otherwise than he ought to do, that it is High-Treason within that Act of 25 Eliz. 3. But if it were an Indictment only for the levying of War, there must be an actual War levied; but this is an Indictment for Compassing the Death of the King; and the other Treason, mentioned in that Act of Parliament for the levying War, may be given in Evidence to prove the Conspiracy of the King's Death: For 'tis rightly told you by the King's Counsel, that the Imagination of a Man's Heart is not to be discerned; but if I declare such my Imagination by an Overt-Act, which Overt-Act does naturally evince, that the King must be deposed, destroy'd, imprison'd, or the like, it will be sufficient Evidence of Treason within that Act. In the next Place, having told you what the Law is; for, Gentlemen, 'tis our Duty upon our Oaths, to declare the Law to you, and you are bound to receive our Declaration of the Law, and upon this Declaration, to inquire whether there be a Fact, sufficiently proved, to find the Prisoner guilty of the High-Treason of which he stands indicted: And for that I must tell you, whatever happens to be hear-say from others, it is not to be applied immediately to the Prisoner; but however those Matters that are remote at first may serve for this Purpose, to prove there was generally a conspiracy to destroy the King and Government: And for that Matter, you all remember it was the constant Rule and Method observed about the Popish Plot, first to produce the Evidence of the Plot in general: This was done in that famous Case of my Lord Stafford in Parliament. Gentlemen, I am also to tell you, this alone does not at all affect the Prisoner at the Bar, but is made use of as a Circumstance to support the Credibility of the Witnesses; and is thus far applicable to the Business before you, that 'tis plain, by Persons that don't touch the Prisoner at the Bar, (and I am sorry any Man makes a doubt of it at this time of day) that there was a Conspiracy to kill the King; for after so full a Proof in this Place, and in others, and the Execution and Confession of several of the Offenders, I am surprized to observe that the Prisoner at the Bar, and some others present, seem not to believe it.

But, Gentlemen, you hear the first Witness; I speak of West: He tells you he had the Honour to be acquainted with Mr. Sidney, and that he had Discourse with Walcot, a Person Convicted and Executed for this horrid Conspiracy. Why, says he, he told me at my Chamber, That they were not the only Persons concerned, but that there were other Persons of great Quality that had their Meetings for the carrying on the Business in other Places. And Ferguson, that was the Ring-leader in this Conspiracy, told him there was a Design of a general Insurrection; it was once laid down, but it is now taken up again. There are other Counsellors of great Importance; and he names among the rest, the Prisoner at the Bar. Mr. West goes a little further, and he tells you this: Says he, He did not only tell me so, but that there was a Design to conciliate a Correspondence with some Persons in Scotland, and they were to do it under the Cant of having Business in Carolina. There is Mr. Keeling, he tells you too, There was a Design for a general and public Insurrection; That he was present with the Goodenoughs, one and t'other, and that they had taken upon them to divide, and did divide the City into such and such Districts: And what was the Business? It was, that there might be a general Insurrection; might be an Insurrection, not only to Destroy the King and the Duke, but to Destroy all the King's Loyal Subjects; and in taking away their Lives, to take away the Life of Monarchy itself, and to subvert the Religion Established by Law. Then comes in Col. Rumsey, and he gives you an Account that he had heard of such things in Mr. West's Chamber; and tells you he had received such Intelligence. And all these give you an Account, that there was such a Design to kill the King: And this is the Substance of the general Evidence produced to prove the Conspiracy. Then to make this Matter come home to the Prisoner at the Bar, first my Lord Howard gives you an Account, and does directly swear, That about the middle or latter end of January last, he happened to meet with Colonel Sidney, the Prisoner at the Bar, and the Duke of Monmouth (they were the Persons first began to have Discourse about this Matter) and how they met with a Disappointment; the thing had slept a great while, and that it was fit it should be revived again; and that Persons of Quality were mentioned, who were to have an immediate Care in the carrying on of the Business, and that it should not be divulged to too many; accordingly there was my Lord Ruffel, my Lord of Essex, my Lord of Salisbury, and Mr. Hambden named. He tells you, the Prisoner at the Bar undertook for my Lord of Essex, and Mr. Hambden, and he tells you, the Duke of Monmouth undertook for my Lord Ruffel, and the rest; and that this was the Result of one Meeting: He goes yet further, That pursuant to this it was communicated to those Persons so to be engaged, and the Place and Time was appointed; the Place, Mr. Hambden's House; but is not so positive to the Time, but only to the Place and Persons. He says, all these Persons met, and he gives you an Account, That Mr. Hambden (because it was necessary for some Person to break silence) gave some short Account of the Design of their Meeting, and made some Reflexions upon the Mischief that attended the Government, and what Apprehensions many people had upon the late Choice of Sheriffs, and that there had been a Male-Administration of Publick Justice; That it was fit some means should be used to redress these Grievances. He can't tell you positively, what this Man, or that Man, said there; but says, that all did unanimously consent to what was then debated about an Insurrection; and in order to it, they discoursed about the Time when it should be, and that they thought fit it should be done suddenly, while Men's Minds were wound up to that height, as they then were; and as the first Witness tells you, There was a Consideration, whether it should be at one Place, or at several Places together: He says, then it was taken into Consideration, that this could not be carried on, but there must be Arms and Ammunition provided. The next Step is, about a necessary Concern, the Concern of Money, and therefore our Law calls Money, The Sinews of War. My Lord Howard tells you, That the Duke of Monmouth proposed 25 or 30,000*l.* That my Lord Grey was to advance 10,000*l.* out of his own Estate; but then they thought to make their Party more strong by the Assistance of a Discontented People in Scotland, my Lord of Argyle, and Sir John Cockram, and several other People there to join with them. That pursuant to this, they all after met at my Lord Ruffel's, and the same Debate is re-affumed, and among the rest, this particular thing of conciliating a Friendship with the Scotch; the Campbells, my Lord of Argyle, and my Lord Melvin were particularly mention'd. That Colonel Sidney took upon himself to find out a Messenger, but it was my Lord Ruffel's Part to write the Letter; One of the Messengers named to convey the same was Aaron Smith, he was known, says my Lord Howard, to some of us; and then we all agreed, that Aaron Smith was the most proper Man: Upon this they brake up that very Time. Afterwards comes my Lord Howard to Col. Sidney at some distance of time, and he comes to him, and shews him three score Guineas, and told him he was going into the City, and that they were to be given to Aaron Smith. He tells you after this, That he had some other Discourse about a Fortnight or three Weeks after, with Col. Sidney; and that Colonel Sidney did take notice, that he had sent him, and that he had an Account of him, as far as Newcastle. So that 'tis very plain, That it was not sudden and rash Thoughts, it is a little more than, according to the Language we meet with in some Pamphlets of late, more than Heats and Stirs. Gentlemen, Then I must tell you, here are Circumstances proved in pursuance of this Design, for Sir Andrew Foster informs you, how that Sir John Cockram and the Campbells, and one Monro, as I take it, came to town, and that he had Discourse with some of them about their Business of coming out of Scotland; and he says, they pretended it was about some Business of some Trade to Carolina, which does still corroborate the Evidence. He tells you likewise, that there being a Noise of Discovering the Plot, they began to hide; Sir John Cockram began to hide, and sculk from place to place; they come first with that Cant in their Mouths, about Carolina; the Messenger Atterbury tells you, When they came to take these Men, how they shuffled from place to place. So, Gentlemen, I must tell you, That if in case there be but one Witness to prove a direct Treason, and another Witness to a Circumstance that contributes to that Treason, that will make two Witnesses to prove the Treason: Because I would explain my Mind, Not long ago all the Judges of England were commanded to meet together, and one that is the Senior of the King's Counsel was pleased to put this Case: If I buy a Knife of J. S. to kill the King, and it be proved by one Witness I bought a Knife for this purpose, and another comes and proves, I bought such a Knife of J. S. they are two Witnesses sufficient to prove a Man guilty of High-Treason; and so it was held by all the Judges of England then present, in the Presence of all the King's Counsel. And therefore Mr. Sidney is mightily mistaken in the Law: For in case of any Treason (except the Treason at the Bar) or in Treason for Clipping and Coining, one Witness is sufficient at this Day. Now, Gentlemen, supposing all this should not be sufficient, here is a Libel, and it is a most Traiterous and Seditious Libel. If you believe, that that was Colonel Sidney's Book, writ by him, no Man can doubt but it is a sufficient Evidence, that he is guilty of Compassing and Imagining the Death of the King; and let us consider, what Proof can be greater, than what has been given of it. Mr. Sheppard, an intimate Acquaintance of his, that has seen him write, he looks upon the Hand, and says, He is extremely acquainted with the Hand, and says he, I believe in my Conscience, this Book is Colonel Sidney's Hand. Gentlemen, Do you expect Mr. Sidney would call a Witness to be by to see him write that Book?

In the next Place, you have two Tradefmen, Coke and Cary, and they tell you, one had seen him write once, the other had seen his Hand-writing, and they both believe it his Hand-writing; and they have good Reason, for they have paid several Sums of Money, upon Notes which they took, as well as this, to be his Hand-writing. Gentlemen, Besides that, give me leave to tell you, here is another thing, that makes it more plain. This very Book is found in Col. Sidney's House, on the Table in his Study, where he used to write, by a Gentleman, against whom Colonel Sidney can't make the least Objection; and that there was that Fairness offered by the Gentleman, Pray, Colonel, put your Seal upon it, that you may see, that no Injury be done you; but Mr. Sidney would not do it. Therefore he seals them with his own Seal, and carries them to Whitehall, where they were broken open, and swears that those Papers were found in his Closet, whereof this was one. Another thing which I must take notice of to you in this Case, is, to mind you, how this Book contains all the Malice, and Revenge, and Treason, that Mankind can be guilty of: It fixes the sole Power in the Parliament and the People; so that he carries on the Design still, for their Debates at their Meetings were to that purpose. And such Doctrines as these suit with their Debates; for there, a general Insurrection was designed, and that was discoursed of in this Book, and encouraged: They must not give it an ill Name: It must not be called a Rebellion, it being the general Act of the People. The King, it says, is responsible to them, the King is but their Trustee; That he had betrayed his Trust, he had misgoverned, and now he is to give it up, that they may be all Kings themselves. Gentlemen, I must tell you, I think I ought more than ordinarily to press this upon you, because I know the Misfortune of the late unhappy Rebellion, and the bringing the late blessed King to the Scaffold was first begun by such kind of Principles: They cried, He had betrayed the Trust that was delegated to him from the People. Gentlemen, in the next Place, because he is afraid their Power alone won't do it, he endeavours to Poison Men's Judgments; and the way he makes use of, he colours it with Religion, and quotes Scripture for it too: and you know how far that went in the late Times; How we were for binding our King in Chains, and our Nobles in Fetters of Iron. Gentlemen, this is likewise made use of by him to stir up the People to Rebellion. Gentlemen, if in case the Prisoner did design the Deposing the King, the removing the King, and in order thereunto he be guilty of Conspiring to Levy War; or as to the Letter writ by my Lord Ruffel, if he was privy to it, these will be Evidences against him. So that 'tis not upon two, but 'tis upon greater Evidence than 22, if you believe this Book was writ by him. Next I must tell you, Gentlemen, upon, I think a less Testimony, an Indictment was preferred against the late Lord Ruffel, and he was thereupon Convicted and Executed; of which they have brought the Record. These are the Evidences for the King.

For the Prisoner, he hath made several Objections; As that there was no War levied: For that, Gentlemen, at the beginning of the Cause I told you what I took the Law to be, and I take it to be so very plainly. But, Gentlemen, as to the Credibility of my Lord Howard, he offers you several Circumstances. First, he offers you a Noble Lord, my Lord Anglesey, who says, that he attended my Lord of Bedford, upon the Misfortune of the Imprisonment of his Son; after he had done, my Lord Howard came to second that Part of a Christian's Office, which he had performed, and told him, he had a very good Son, and he knew no harm of him; and as to the Plot, he knew nothing of it. Another Noble Lord, my Lord Clare, tells you, That he had some Discourse with my Lord Howard, and he said, that if he were accused, he thought they would but tell Noses, and his Business was done. Then Mr. Philip Howard, he tells you, how he was not so intimate with him as others, but he often came to his Brother's; and that he should say, he knew nothing of a Plot, nor did he believe any; but at the same time, he said he believed there were a sham Plot; and then he pressed him about the Business of the Address; but that now my Lord of Essex was out of Town, and so it went off. Another Thing Mr. Sidney took notice of, says he, 'tis an Act of Revenge in my Lord Howard, for he owes him a Debt, that he does (besides by his Allegation) does not appear.

Col. Sidney. My Lord, he hath confessed it.

L. C. J. Admit it; yet in case Colonel Sidney should be Convicted of this Treason, the Debt accrues to the King, and he cannot be a Farthing the better for it. But how does it look like Revenge? I find my Lord Howard, when he speaks of Colonel Sidney, says, he was more beholden to him than any body, and was more sorry for him; so says my Lord Clare. Gentlemen, You have it likewise offered, that he came to Colonel Sidney's House, and there he was desirous to have the Plate and Goods removed to his House, and that he would assist them with his Coach and Coachman to carry them thither; and did affirm, that he knew nothing of the Plot; and did not believe Colonel Sidney knew any thing: And this is likewise proved by a couple of Maid-Servants, as well as the Frenchman. You have likewise something to the same purpose said by my Lord Paget, and this is offered to take off the Credibility of my Lord Howard. Do you believe, because my Lord Howard did not tell them, I am in a Conspiracy to kill the King, therefore he knew nothing of it? He knew these Persons were Men of Honour and would not be concerned in any such thing. But do you think because a Man goes about and denies his being in a Plot, therefore he was not in it? Nay, it seems so far from being an Evidence of his Innocence, that it is an Evidence of his Guilt. What should provoke a Man to discourse after this manner, if he had not apprehensions of Guilt within himself? This is the Testimony offered against my Lord Howard in disparagement of his Evidence. Ay, but farther 'tis objected, he is in Expectation of a Pardon: And he did say, he thought he should not have the King's Pardon till such time as the Drudgery of swearing was over. Why, Gentlemen, I take notice, before this discourse happened, he swore the same thing at my Lord Ruffel's Trial. And I must tell you, though it is the Duty of every Man to discover all Treasons; yet I tell you for a Man to come and swear himself over and over guilty, in the Face of a Court of Justice, may seem irksome and provoke a Man to give it such an Epithet. 'Tis therefore for his Credit, that he is an unwilling Witness: But, Gentlemen, consider, if these things should have been allowed to take away the Credibility of a Witness, what would have become of the Testimonies that have been given of late Days? What would become of the Evidence of all those that have been so profligate in their Lives? Would you have the King's Counsel to call none but Men that were not concerned in this Plot, to prove that they were Plot-ting? Ay, but Gentlemen, it is further objected, This Hand looks like an old Hand, and it may not be the Prisoner's Hand, but be Counterfeited; and for that, there is a Gentleman, who tells you what a dextrous Man he is. He says, he believes he could Counterfeit any Hand in Half an Hour; 'tis an ugly temptation, but I hope he hath more Honour than to make use of that Art he so much glories in. But what time could there be for the Counterfeiting of this Book? Can you imagine that Sir Philip Lloyd, through the Bag Sealed up, did it? Or who else, can you imagine, should, or, does the Prisoner pretend, did write this Book? So that as on one Side, God forbid but we should be careful of Men's Lives, so on the other Side, God forbid, that Flourishes and Varnishes should come to endanger the Life of the King, and the Destruction of the Government. But, Gentlemen, We are not to anticipate you in point of Fact, I have, according to my Memory, recapitulated the Matters given in Evidence. It remains purely in you now, whether you do believe upon the whole Matter, that the Prisoner is guilty of the High-Treason where of he is Indicted.

Mr. Just. Withins. Gentlemen, 'Tis fit you should have our Opinions; in all the Points of Law we concur with my Lord Chief Justice: Says Colonel Sidney, here is a mighty Conspiracy, but there is nothing comes of it, who must we thank for that? None but the Almighty Providence: One of themselves was troubled in Conscience, and comes and discovers it; had not Keeling discovered it, God knows whether we might have been alive at this Day.

Then the Jury withdrew, and in about half an Hour's time returned, and brought the Prisoner in, Guilty.

And then the Lieutenant of the Tower took away his Prisoner.

Monday Nov. 26, 1683. Algernon Sidney, Esq; was brought up to the Bar of the Court of King's-Bench, to receive his Sentence.

L. C. J. Mr. Attorney, will you move any thing?

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, the Prisoner at the Bar is convicted of High-Treason, I demand Judgment against him.

Cl. of Cr. Algernon Sidney, Hold up thy Hand. [Which he did.] Thou hast been indicted of High-Treason, and thereupon arraigned, and thereunto pleaded not Guilty, and for thy Trial put thyself upon God and thy Country, which Country has found thee Guilty, what can't thou say for thyself, why Judgment of Death should not be given against thee, and Execution awarded according to Law?

Col. Sidney. My Lord, I humbly conceive, I have had no Trial; I was to be tried by my Country, I do not find my Country in the Jury that did try me, there were some of them that were not Freeholders, I think, my Lord, there is neither Law nor President of any Man that has been tried by a Jury, upon an Indictment laid in a County, that were not Freeholders. So I do humbly conceive, That I have had no Trial at all, and if I have had no Trial, there can be no Judgment.

L. C. J. Mr. Sidney, You had the Opinion of the Court in that Matter before: We were unanimous in it, for it was the Opinion of all the Judges of England, in the Case * next preceeding your's, tho' that was a Case relating to Corporations, but they were of Opinion, That by the Statute of Queen Mary, the Trial of Treason was put as it was at Common Law, and that there was no such Challenge at Common Law.

Col. Sidney. Under favour, my Lord, I presume in such a Case as this, of Life, and for what I know concerns every Man in England, you will give me a Day and Counsel to argue it.

L. C. J. 'Tis not in the Power of the Court to do it.

Col. Sidney. My Lord, I desire the Indictment against me may be read.

L. C. J. To what purpose?

Col. Sidney. I have somewhat to say to it.

L. C. J. Well, read the Indictment.

Then the Clerk of the Crown read the Indictment.

Col. Sidney. Pray Sir, will you give me leave to see it, if it please you.

L. C. J. No, that we cannot do.

Col. Sidney. My Lord, there is one thing then that makes this absolutely void, it deprives the King of his Title, which is Treason by Law, Defensor Fidei. There is no such thing there, if I heard right.

L. C. J. In that you would deprive the King of his Life, that is in very full I think.

Col. Sidney. If no body would deprive the King no more than I, he would be in no danger. Under favour these are Things not to be over-ruled in Point of Life so easily.

L. C. J. Mr. Sidney, We very well understand our Duty, we don't need to be told by you what our Duty is, we tell you nothing but what is Law; and if you make Objections that are immaterial, we must over-rule them. Don't think that we over-rule in your Case, that we would not over-rule in all Men's Cases in your Condition. The Treason is sufficiently laid.

Col. Sidney. My Lord, I conceive this too, that those Words, that are said to be written in the Paper, that there is nothing of Treason in them: Besides, that there was nothing at all proved of them, only by similitude of hands, which upon the Case I alledge to your Lordship was not to be admitted in a Criminal Case. Now 'tis easy to call a thing Proditorie; but yet let the nature of the things be examined, I put myself upon it, that there is no Treason in it.

L. C. J. There is not a Line in the Book scarce but what is Treason.

Mr. Just. Withins. I believe you don't believe it Treason.

L. C. J. That is the worst part of your Case; When Men are riveted in Opinion, that Kings may be deposed, that they are accountable to their People, that a general Insurrection is no Rebellion, and justify it, 'tis high time, upon my Word, to call them to Account.

Col. Sidney. My Lord, the other Day I had a Book, wherein I had King James's Speech, upon which all that is there, is grounded in his own Speech to the Parliament in 1603, and there is nothing in these Papers, which is called a Book, though it never appeared, for if it were true, it was only Papers found in a private Man's Study, never shewed to any body; and Mr. Attorney takes this to bring it to a Crime, in order to some other Counsel, and this was to come out such a time, when the Insurrection brake out. My Lord, There is one Person I did not know where to find then, but every body knows where to find now, that is the Duke of Monmouth, if there had been any thing in Consultation, by this means to bring any thing about, he must have known of it, for it must be taken to be in Prosecution of those Designs of his: And if he will say there ever was any such thing, or knew any thing of it, I will acknowledge whatever you please.

L. C. J. That is over; you were Tried for this Fact: We must not send for the Duke of Monmouth.

Col. Sidney. I humbly think I ought, and desire to be heard upon it.

L. C. J. Upon what?

Col. Sidney. If you will call it a Trial—

L. C. J. I do. The Law calls it so.

Mr. Just. Withins. We must not hear such Discourses, after you have been Tried here, and the Jury have given their Verdict; as if you had not Justice done you.

Mr. Just. Holloway. I think it was a very fair Trial.

Col. Sidney. My Lord, I desire that you would hear my Reasons; why I should be brought to a new Trial.

L. C. J. That can't be.

Col. Sidney. Be the Trial what it will?

Cl. of Cr. Crier, make an O yes.

Col. Sidney. Can't I be heard, my Lord?

L. C. J. Yes, If you will speak that which is proper; 'tis a strange thing, You seem to appeal as if you had some great Hardship upon you. I am sure, I can as well appeal as you. I am sure you had all the Favour shewed you, that ever any Prisoner had. The Court heard you with Patience, when you spake what was proper; but if you begin to arraign the Justice of the Nation, it concerns the Justice of the Nation to prevent you: We are bound by our Consciences and our Oaths to see Right done to you; and though we are Judges upon Earth, we are accountable to the Judge of Heaven and Earth; and we act according to our Consciences, though we don't act according to your Opinion.

Col. Sidney. My Lord, I say, In the first place I was brought to Westminster by Habeas Corpus, the 7th of this Month, granted the Day before I was to be Arraigned, when yet no Bill was exhibited against me; and my Prosecutors could not know it would be found, unless they had a Correspondence with the Grand Jury, which under Favour ought not to have been had.

L. C. J. We know nothing of it: You had as good tell us of some body's Ghost, as you did at the Trial.

Col. Sidney. I told you of two infamous Persons that had acted my Lord Russell's Ghost.

L. C. J. Go on, if you have any thing else.

Col. Sidney. I prayed a Copy of the Indictment, making my Objections against it, and putting in a special Plea, which the Law, I humbly conceive, allowed me: The help of Counsel to frame it was denied.

L. C. J. For the Copy of the Indictment, it was denied in the Case you cited. This Favour shewed you to-day was denied at any time to Sir Henry Vane, that is, to have the Indictment read in Latin. Don't say on the other Side, we refused your Plea. I told you, have a care of putting it in. If the Plea was such as Mr. Attorney did demur to it: I told you, you were answerable for the Consequences of it.

Mr. Just. Withins. We told you, you might put it in, but you must put it in at your Peril.

Col. Sidney. My Lord, I would have put it in.

L. C. J. I did advertise you: If you put in a Plea, upon your Peril be it. I told you, We are bound by Law to give you that fair Advertisement of the great Danger you would fall under, if it were not a good Plea.

Col. Sidney. My Lord, my Plea was that could never hurt me.

L. C. J. We do not know that.

Col. Sidney. I desire, my Lord, this, that it may be considered, That, being brought here to my Trial, I did desire a Copy of my Indictment, upon the Statute of 46 Edw. 3. which does allow it to all Men in all Cases.

L. C. J. I tell you the Law is otherwise, and told you so then, and tell you so now.

Col. Sidney. Your Lordship did not tell me, That was not a Law.

L. C. J. Unless there be a Law particular for Col. Sidney. If you have any more to say—

Col. Sidney. I am probably informed, and if your Lordship will give me time, shall be able to prove it, That the Jury was not summoned, as it ought to be; My Lord, if this Jury was not summoned by the Bailiff, according to the ordinary way, but they were agreed upon by the Under-Sheriffs, Graham and Burton, I desire to know whether that be a good Jury.

L. C. J. We can take notice of nothing, but what is upon the Record: Here is a Return by the Sheriff; if there had been any indirect means used with the Sheriff, or any else, you should have mentioned it before they were sworn.

Col. Sidney. Is there any Thing in the World more irregular than that?

L. C. J. I know nothing of it. That time is past.

Col. Sidney. Now, my Lord, all Men are admitted on the Jury.

L. C. J. Why, You did not like Gentlemen, and now you don't like those that you had. In plain English, if any Jury had found you Guilty it had been the same thing. It had been a good Summons, if they had acquitted you.

Col. Sidney. When the Jury thus composed, was sworn, four Witnesses, of whom three were under the Terror of Death for Treasons, were produced against me. And they confessed themselves guilty of Crimes of which I had no Knowledge, and told Stories by hear-say. And your Lordship did promise, in summing up the Evidence, that the Jury should be informed what did reach me, and what not, and I don't remember that was done.

L. C. J. I did it particularly, I think I was as careful of it as possibly I could be.

Col. Sidney. My Lord Howard being the only Witness, that said any thing against me, Papers, which were said to be found in my House, were produced as another Witness, and no other Testimony given concerning them, but that the Hand was like unto mine. No Man can say, I read them, or shewed them to any Man. None knew when they were written; The Ink shewed they had been done many, and perhaps 20 or 30 Years. Yea, some Passages were read out of them, without examining what went before and after; when I desired the whole might be read, it was refused, unless I specified the Passage, which I could not do, knowing not one Word in them. When I alledged, that in Criminal Cases Similitude of Hands could not be taken for Evidence, proposed my Points of Law concerning Constructive Treason, &c. And I did conceive that no Court under the Parliament could be Judges of it, and did desire the Statute, which did so enact it, might be read, it could not be obtained: And I cited many Judgments in Parliament.

L. C. J. Mr. Sidney, If you arraign the Justice of the Nation so, as tho' we had denied you the Methods of Justice, I must tell you, you do what does not become you, for we denied you nothing that ought to have been granted. If we had granted you less, I think we had done more our Duty. What Points of Law do you mean?

Col. Sidney. That of Constructive Treason, my Lord.

L. C. J. We do not go upon Constructive Treason, 'tis plain Treason within 25 Edw. 3.

Col. Sidney. Is Writing an Act?

L. C. J. Yes, 'tis agere.

Proclamation made for Silence.

Mr. Bamfield. Sir, I pray you to hear me one word as Amicus Curie; I humbly suppose that your Lordship will not give Judgment if there be a material Defect in the Indictment, as the Clerk did read it, he left out Defensor fidei, which is part of the Style of his Majesty.

L. C. J. We have heard of it already, we thank you for your Friendship, and are satisfied. Mr. Sidney, there remains nothing for the Court, but to discharge their Duty in pronouncing that Judgment the Law requires to be pronounced against all Persons Convicted of High-Treason; and I must tell you, that though you seem to arraign the Justice of the Court, and the Proceeding—

Col. Sidney. I must appeal to God and the World, I am not heard.

L. C. J. Appeal to whom you will. I could wish with all my Heart, instead of Appealing to the World, as tho' you had received something extreme hard in your Case, that you would appeal to the Great God of Heaven, and consider the Guilt you have contracted by the great Offence you have committed. I wish with all my Heart, you would consider your Condition, but if your own Ingenuity will not provoke you, nothing I can say will prevail with you to do it; if the King's General Pardon, in which you had so great a share of the King's Mercy, will not, I could wish, that, as a Gentleman and as a Christian, you would consider under what particular Obligations you lie to that Gracious King, that hath done so much for you. I should have thought it would have wrought in you such a Temper of Mind, as to have turned the rest of your Life into a generous Acknowledgment of his Bounty and Mercy, and not into a State of constant Combining and Writing, not only to destroy Him, but to subvert the Government; and I am sorry to see you so earnest in the Justification of the Book, in which there is scarce a Line, but what contains the rankest Treason, such as Deposing the King: It not only encourages, but justifies all Rebellion: Mr. Sidney, you are a Gentleman of Quality, and need no Counsel from me: If I could give you any, my Charity to your Immortal Soul would provoke me to it. I pray God season this Affliction to you: There remains nothing with the Court, but to pronounce that Judgment that is expected, and the Law requires, and therefore the Judgment of the Court is,

That you be carried hence to the Place from whence you came, and from thence you shall be drawn upon an Hurdle to the Place of Execution, where you shall be hanged by the Neck, and, being alive, cut down, your Privy-Members shall be cut off, and burned before your Face, your Head severed from your Body, and your Body divided into four Quarters, and they to be disposed at the Pleasure of the King. And the God of infinite Mercy have Mercy upon your Soul.

Col. Sidney. Then, O God! O God! I beseech thee to sanctify these Sufferings unto me, and impute not my Blood to the Country, nor the City, thro' which I am to be drawn; Let no Inquisition be made for it, but if any, and the shedding of Blood that is innocent, must be revenged, Let the Weight of it fall only upon those, that maliciously persecute me for Righteousness sake.

L. C. J. I pray God work in you a Temper fit to go unto the other World, for I see you are not fit for this.

Col. Sidney. My Lord, feel my Pulse, [holding out his Hand] and see if I am disordered; I bless God, I never was in better Temper than I am now.

Then the Lieutenant of the Tower carried back his Prisoner.

The Prisoner afterwards presented a Petition to the King, which see in State-Trials. Vol. VIII. p. 453.

The Execution of Algernon Sidney, Esq; on Friday December 7, 1683.

ON the 7th of December (his Majesty having been pleased to remit * all the Sentence but Beheading) he was brought to a Scaffold erected for that purpose on Tower-hill, where, having deliver'd the following Paper to the Sheriff, his Head was sever'd from his Body.

Men, Brethren, and Fathers; Friends, Countrymen, and Strangers.

It may be expected that I should now say some great Matters unto you; but the Rigour of the Season, and the Infirmities of my Age, increased by a close Imprisonment of above five Months, do not permit me.

Moreover, we live in an Age that maketh Truth pass for Treason: I dare not say any thing contrary unto it, and the Ears of those that are about me will probably be found too tender to hear it. My Trial and Condemnation do sufficiently evidence this.

Wesl, Rumsey and Keeling, who were brought to prove the Plot, said no more of me, than that they knew me not; and some others, equally unknown unto me, had used my Name, and that of some others, to give a little Reputation unto their Designs. The Lord Howard is too infamous by his Life, and the many Perjuries not to be denied, or rather sworn by himself, to deserve Mention; and being a single Witness would be of no Value, tho' he had been of unblemish'd Credit, or had not seen and confessed that the Crimes committed by him would be pardon'd only for committing more; and even the Pardon promised could not be obtain'd till the Drudgery of Swearing was over.

This being laid aside, the whole Matter is reduced to the Papers said to be found in my Closet by the King's Officers, without any other Proof of their being written by me, than what is taken from Suppositions upon the Similitude of an Hand that is easily counterfeited, and which hath been lately declared in the Lady Carr's Case to be no lawful Evidence in criminal Causes.

But if I had been seen to write them, the Matter would not be much alter'd. They plainly appear to relate unto a large Treatise written long since, in Answer to Filmer's Book, which, by all intelligent Men, is thought to be grounded upon wicked Principles, equally pernicious unto Magistrates and People.

If he might publish unto the World his Opinion, that all Men are born under a Necessity derived from the Laws of God and Nature, to submit unto an absolute Kingly Government, which could be restrained by no Law or Oath; and that he that hath the Power, whether he came unto it by Creation, Election, Inheritance, Usurpation, or any other way, had the Right; and none must oppose his Will, but the Persons and Estates of his Subjects must be indispensibly subject unto it; I know not why I might not have published my Opinion to the contrary, without the Breach of any Law I have yet known.

I might, as freely as he, publicly have declared my Thoughts, and the Reasons upon which they were grounded, and I am persuaded to believe, that God had left Nations unto the Liberty of setting up such Governments as best pleased themselves.

That Magistrates were set up for the good of Nations, not Nations for the Honour or Glory of Magistrates.

That the Right and Power of Magistrates in every Country, was that which the Laws of that Country made it to be.

That those Laws were to be observed, and the Oaths taken by them, having the Force of a Contract between Magistrates and People, could not be violated without Danger of dissolving the whole Fabric.

That Usurpation could give no Right, and the most dangerous of all Enemies unto Kings were they, who, raising their Power to an exorbitant Height, allowed unto Usurpers all the Rights belonging unto it.

That such Usurpations being seldom compass'd without the Slaughter of the reigning Person, or Family, the worst of all Villanies was thereby rewarded with the most glorious Privileges.

That if such Doctrines were received, they would stir up Men to the Destruction of Princes with more Violence, than all the Passions that have hitherto rag'd in the Hearts of the most unruly.

That none could be safe, if such a Reward were propos'd unto any that could destroy them.

That few would be so gentle as to spare even the best, if by their Destruction a wild Usurper could become God's Anointed; and by the most execrable Wickedness invest himself with that divine Character.

This is the Scope of the whole Treatise; the Writer gives such Reasons as at present did occur unto him, to prove it. This seems to agree with the Doctrines of the most revered Authors of all Times, Nations and Religions. The best and wisest of Kings have ever acknowledged it. The present King of France hath declared, that Kings have that happy want of Power, that they can do nothing contrary to the Laws of their Country, and grounds his Quarrel with the King of Spain, Anno 1667, upon that Principle. King James, in his Speech to the Parliament, An. 1603, doth in the highest degree assert it: the Scripture seems to declare it. If nevertheless the Writer was mistaken, he might have been refuted by Law, Reason, and Scripture; and no Man, for such Matters, was ever otherwise punished, than by being made to see his Error; and it hath not (as I think) been ever known that they had been referr'd to the Judgment of a Jury, composed of Men utterly unable to comprehend them.

But there was little of this in my Case; the Extravagance of my Prosecutors goes higher: The above-mention'd Treatise was never finish'd, nor could be in many Years, and most probably would never have been. So much as is of it was written long since, never reviewed nor shewn unto any Man; and the fiftieth part of it was produced, and not the tenth of that offered to be read. That which was never known unto those who are said to have conspired with me, was said to be intended to stir up the People in Prosecution of the Designs of those Conspirators.

When nothing of particular Application unto Time, Place, or Person, could be found in it (as hath ever been done by those who endeavour'd to raise Insurrections) all was supplied by Innuendo's.

Whatsoever is said of the Expulsion of Tarquin; the insurrection against Nero; the Slaughter of Caligula, or Domitian; the Translation of the Crown of France from Merovius's Race unto Pepin; and from his Descendants unto Hugh Capet, and the like, applied by Innuendo unto the King.

They have not considered, that if such Acts of State be not good, there is not a King in the World that has any Title to the Crown he bears; nor can have any, unless he could deduce his Pedigree from the eldest Son of Noah, and shew that the Succession had still continued in the eldest of the eldest Line, and been so deduced to him.

Every one may see what Advantage this would be to all the Kings of the World, and whether, that failing, it were not better for them to acknowledge they had received their Crowns by the Consent of willing Nations; or to have no better Title unto them than Usurpation and Violence, which, by the same ways, may be taken from them.

But I was not long since told that I must die, or the Plot must die.

Left the Means of destroying the best Protestants in England should fail, the Bench must be filled with such as had been Blemishes to the Bar.

None but such as these would have advis'd with the King's Counsel of the Means of bringing a Man to Death, suffer'd a Jury to be pack'd by the King's Solicitors and the under Sheriff, admit of Jurymen who were not Freeholders, receive such Evidence as is above-mention'd, refuse a Copy of an Indictment, or to suffer the Statute of 46 Edw. III. to be read, that doth expressly enact it should in no Case be denied unto any Man, upon any Occasion whatsoever, over-rule the most important Points of Law without hearing. And whereas the Statute 25 Edw. III. upon which they said I should be tried, doth reserve unto the Parliament all Constructions to be made in Points of Treason, they could assume unto themselves not only a Power to make Constructions, but such Constructions as neither agree with Law, Reason, or common Sense.

By these Means I am brought to this Place. The Lord forgive these Practices, and avert the Evils that threaten the Nation from them. The Lord sanctify these my Sufferings unto me; and though I fall as a Sacrifice unto Idols, suffer not Idolatry to be established in this Land. Bless thy People and save them. Defend thy own Cause and defend those that defend it. Stir up such as are faint, direct those that are willing, confirm those that waver, give Wisdom and Integrity unto All. Order all Things so as may most redound unto thine own Glory. Grant that I may die glorifying thee for all thy Mercies, and that at the last thou hast permitted me to be singled out as a Witness of thy Truth; and even by the Confession of my Opposers, for that Old Cause in which I was from my Youth engag'd, and for which thou hast often and wonderfully declared thyself.

His Attainder was reversed in Parliament, the first of Will. and Mary. See State Trials, Vol. VIII. p. 547. 472.

CXXIII. The Trial of JOHN HAMPDEN*, Esq; at the King's-Bench for an High Misdemeanour, Feb. 6, 1683. Hil. 36 Car. II.

John Hampden, Esq; being brought up by Writ of Habeas Corpus, from the Tower of London on the 28th of November, and there being an Indictment preferred against him for Misdemeanour, His Majesty's Attorney-General prayed, that he might be Arraigned upon it, which was done in this Manner.

Cl. of Cr. John Hampden, You stand here Indicted by the Name of John Hampden, late of the Parish of St. Giles in the Fields, in the County of Middlesex, Gent. for that you being a pernicious and seditious Man, and a Person of a wicked Mind, and of an impious, unquiet, and turbulent Disposition, and contriving, practising, and falsely, unlawfully, unjustly, maliciously, turbulently, and seditiously intending the Peace of our Sovereign Lord King Charles that now is, and the common Tranquility of this Kingdom of England to disquiet, molest, and disturb, and, as much as in you lay, Sedition within this Kingdom of England to incite, stir up, and procure, and the Government of our said Lord the King in this Kingdom of England into Danger to bring: And that you the said John Hampden, your most impious wicked, and seditious Intentions aforesaid to fulfil and perfect, and bring to effect, the last Day of June, in the Five and thirtieth Year of the Reign of our said Sovereign Lord the King that now is; and divers other Days and Times as well before as after, with Force, and Arms, &c. At the Parish of St. Giles in the Fields, in the County of Middlesex, unlawfully, unjustly, maliciously, and seditiously did assemble yourself, meet, consult, conspire, and confederate with divers evil-disposed Subjects of our said Lord the King to the Jurors unknown, and with the said Persons did treat concerning your said most wicked and seditious Com-passings, Imaginations, and Purposes aforesaid, to be executed, fulfilled, and brought to effect; and further that you the said John Hampden, your most wicked, impious, and seditious Contrivances, Practices and Intentions aforesaid to fulfil, perfect, and reduce to effect, then and there, viz. the last Day of June in the 35th Year aforesaid, and divers other Days and Times, as well before as after, at the Parish aforesaid, in the County aforesaid, with Force and Arms, &c. falsely, unlawfully, unjustly, maliciously, and seditiously did consult, consent, conspire and confederate of an Insurrection within this Kingdom of England to be made, and of procuring and providing Arms and armed Men to be prepared in divers Places within this Kingdom of England your some most wicked, impious and seditious Intentions and Com-passings aforesaid to fulfil and perfect: And that you the said John Hampden, your most wicked, impious, and seditious Intentions aforesaid to fulfil and perfect, and bring to effect afterwards, viz. the last Day of June, in the 35th Year aforesaid, at the Parish aforesaid, in the County aforesaid, with Force and Arms, &c. falsely, unlawfully, unjustly, wickedly, maliciously, and seditiously did consult, agree, and consent that a certain Person to the Jurors aforesaid unknown, should be sent into Scotland to invite and incite divers evil-disposed Subjects of our said Lord the King, of his Kingdom of Scotland, to come into this Kingdom of England to advise and consult with you the said John Hampden, and others the aforesaid evil-disposed Subjects of our said Lord the King in this Kingdom of England, concerning Aid and Assistance to be expected and supplied out of the said Kingdom of Scotland, your said most wicked, impious, and seditious Intentions and Com-passings aforesaid to fulfil, effect, and promote, in manifest Contempt of the Laws of this Kingdom of England, to the evil and most pernicious Example of all others in the like Case offending, and against the Peace of our said Sovereign Lord the King, his Crown and Dignity.

Cl. of Cr. How say'st thou, Art thou Guilty of this High Misdemeanour whereof thou standest indicted, and hast been now arraigned, or not Guilty?

Mr. Hampden. Not Guilty.

Upon which Plea Issue was joined between His Majesty's Attorney-General, on behalf of the King and Defendant, and Bail was then taken for the Defendant's Appearance the next Term.

Hillary Term 35 and 36 Car. 2d Reg. In the Beginning of the Term, Sir Thomas Jenner, Knight, His Majesty's Serjeant at Law, and Recorder of the City of London, moved for a Trial at the Bar, in the Case between the King and Mr. Hampden, which was by the Court appointed to be on Wednesday the 6th of February in the same Term, when the Court proceeded to the Trial as follows.

Cl. of Cr. Call the Defendant John Hampden.

Mr. Williams. He appears.

Cl. of Cr. Gardes, votres Challenges. Call Sir Charles Gerard.

Crier. You shall well and truly try the Issue between our Sovereign Lord the King and John Hampden, Gent. and a true Verdict give according to your Evidence. So help you God.

Sir Charles Gerard, Jur'

Cl. of Cr.

Roger Jennings, Esq; Jur'

Henry Hodges, Esq; Jur'

Joshua Galliard, Esq;

Mr. Williams. We challenge him for the Defendant.

L. C. J. What is your Cause of Challenge?

Sir George Jeffries. Mr. Williams. If your Lordship please to let him go through the Pannel, we will shew Cause if there be not enough left without him.

L. C. J. No, shew your Cause now, it being against the King.

Mr. Williams. He has an Employment under the King, he has an Office in the Forest, and that we say is our Cause of Challenge.

L. C. J. What then if he have?—Mr. Williams. My Lord, we suppose then he is not an indifferent Person to try this Cause.

L. C. J. Ay, let me hear that now proved and defended by any Gentleman of the long Robe, that that is a good Cause of Challenge. Shew me what Law there is for it.

Mr. Williams. To be of the King's Robe, or Pay, or Salary, is an Exception in any Case wherein the King is concerned.

L. C. J. Shew me any Law for that if you can, Mr. Williams, I know you are a Lawyer.

Mr. Wallop. It is the Opinion of my Lord Coke in his Institutes, that it is a good Cause of Challenge.

L. C. J. But there is the Opinion of all the Judges in Henry the Sixth's Time against it.

Mr. Wallop. It is, my Lord, fol. 156.

L. C. J. But I can cite you three or four Books, and you have them all together in Roll's Abridgment, Title Challenge, where he sets down four Books one after another, that it is no Cause of Challenge, even to be the King's Tenant, and there is a great deal of Reason for it. For if that were a good Cause of Challenge, mark the Consequence, then all Persons that hold Lands in England, hold them mediately or immediately of the King, and so the King could have no Freeholders to be Jurymen in his Cause.

Mr. Williams. This is a more special Cause of Challenge than that.

L. C. J. What can be greater than that of being the King's Tenant?

Sir Robert Sawyer. Mr. Att. Gen. Especially when all the Land of England was held of the Crown, as originally it was.

Mr. Trevor. My Lord, in 2d Rolls 646. Tit. Trials, There is the express Opinion of my Lord Rolls, that to be of the Livery, or a menial Servant of the Crown, is a good Cause of Challenge.

L. C. J. And look you but in the first Case in the first Part of the Abridgment, Title Challenges, where he mentions three or four Books to the same Purpose, and 'tis quite otherwise.

Mr. Williams. My Lord, in that of first Rolls, he only cites some Books, but the other is his own Opinion.

L. C. J. Well, make out your Fact if you have a mind to it; but it is well known, that neither Mr. Serjeant Rolls, nor my Lord Coke, when he delivered that Opinion, are to be reckoned such Authorities in Crown matters.

Mr. Williams. We will ask him, my Lord, if you please, I suppose he will not deny it.

L. C. J. No, make out your Fact if you will have any Benefit by it, 'tis only a Challenge to the Favour which ought not to be in the King's Case. I am very glad that we are now to debate this Matter with Men of the Robe, because we have had a strange sort of Notions and Reflections spread abroad of late, as tho' the Judges now-a-days gave strange sort of Opinions, and as tho' Persons that had been Blemishes at the Bar, were preferred to do strange Things when they came upon the Bench; but truly I wonder to hear that it should be a Doubt, when at the same Time that which we gave as our Opinion about one particular Challenge, that is as to Freeholders, it was the Judgment of all the Judges, that that was no Challenge, and all the Counsel that were concerned in that Case know it was the Opinion of all the Judges. But now if we meet with Lawyers, I shall be glad to have the Matter fairly argued and debated, and pray shew me what Law or Reason is for it.

Mr. Wallop. Certainly, my Lord, there is a great Difference betwixt the general Allegiance of all Men, and so of a general Tenure, and the Dependence of any particular Person who is a menial Servant and receives Wages of the King.

L. C. J. I would desire to know of you, Mr. Wallop, which is the greater Challenge, to say such a one is a Tenant, or such a one is immediate Servant to J. S.

Mr. Wallop. There is a great Difference, my Lord, I think, between an immediate Tenant, and the general Tenure of all Subjects.

L. C. J. But certainly the Law is thus, if he were an immediate or a mediate Tenant to any but the King, if his Lord were Party to the Suit, it would be a good Challenge, but the being Tenant to the King is no good Challenge in the King's Case.

Mr. Williams. My Lord, I take it, the Act of Parliament that takes away the Court of Wards and Liveries hath altered the Law as to that Matter of Tenure; for now we hold in Socage, and that other Tenure is destroyed that was between the King and his Subjects.

L. C. J. But pray how comes it to be a Challenge now that was not one before? Does that Act of Parliament make it a good Cause of Challenge? If it does, shew it. I tell you the old Books are against it.

Mr. Williams. I speak, my Lord, to the Tenure, that that is nothing at all now to be objected, because all is now in Socage.

L. C. J. I would not have Mr. Attorney insist upon a Jurymen, but yet withal I would not have it gone away with as Law, that it is a good Cause of Challenge.

Vol. III.

Mr. Wallop. My Lord, we finding in some Cases that are in our Books, that it is held to be a good Cause of Challenge, lay it before the Court.

Mr. Att. Gen. How many hundred Errors do you find in my Lord Coke, notwithstanding all his Learning?

L. C. J. I say, if I was Mr. Attorney, I would not contest for any particular Man to be a Jurymen, I speak that as my Advice, but I would not have it taken for Law, nor would I have it broached abroad, that tho' the Judges now were of one Opinion, yet the Law truly was of another.

Mr. Jones. If all that receive Salary, or Wages from the King, are not to be Jurymen in the King's Causes, then all the Deputy Lieutenants and Militia Officers, which generally are the most substantially Freeholders, are excluded from being Jurymen.

Mr. Just. Withins. Who will say so, Mr. Jones? No Lawyer in England surely will say so.

Mr. Williams. Offices where there is no Profit, will not be the same Exception.

Mr. Att. Gen. But he is no menial Servant of the King's.

Mr. Williams. What is he then?—Mr. Wallop. We hear that he is Keeper of one of the King's Forests, and has a Fee for it.

Mr. Williams. Well, we will ask him upon a voyer dire.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, the Fact is quite otherwise, and I desire they may make it out.

L. C. J. Truly, I think 'tis not tanti to insist upon any particular Man, but I find we are in an Age that is so full of Cavils, that if we act but according to the Precedents that went before us, we are thought to act as Originals, and to make new Laws, when we only follow the Rules that we have received from our Predecessors. And I say there was no such Challenge at Common Law, that ever I read of in any of our Books, nor is it any Challenge by the best Authorities extant.

Mr. Jones. I desire them to shew me any such Precedent, that any Man was challenged by one that was tried at the Suit of the King, for a Challenge to the Favour, but we must do unprecedented Things, or else there will be no satisfying of some Men.

Mr. Att. Gen. I would fain know, what one Opinion in a straggling Book is against the Current of all our Law?

Mr. Williams. Which do you call a straggling Book, Mr. Attorney? My Lord Coke's Institutes, or my Lord Roll's Abridgement?

L. C. J. I say the better Opinion of the Books is on the other Side, and the greater Number too.

Mr. Att. Gen. First of all, I do know of my own Knowledge, he is no menial Servant.

L. C. J. Mr. Attorney, I do debate it for Learning sake, truly I know not the Man, nor whether he be the King's Servant, or not, but I speak against allowing the Challenge, that if he be set aside, it may not be taken as a Precedent, and so pass for Law that the King's Servants can't be Jurymen. I would have you quit the Man by Consent, but not as a Force-pur, as tho' the Law were so, for the Law, I think, is otherwise.

Mr. Att. Gen. He is none, my Lord, they mistake.

L. C. J. Nay, I know nothing of the Man, I tell you only what I think.

Mr. Wallop. He receives Wages, or a Fee from the King for his Office.

Mr. Just. Withins. I would never, for my part, while I live, nor never did, while I was a Practiser, stand upon any particular Jurymen.

Mr. Att. Gen. He may be a Jurymen by Law sure.

L. C. J. There is no doubt of it, Mr. Attorney.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, if your Lordships have given your Opinion, I desire he may stand by.

L. C. J. Well, Mr. Attorney waves him, let him stand by.

Mr. Att. Gen. But for no Reason that has been offered.

L. C. J. No, no, I don't hear any thing of Reason offered for it.

Cl. of Cr. Mr. Galliard, you may go down.

Thomas Harriot, Esq; Jur'

John Sharp, Esq; Jur'

Thomas Earsby, Esq; Jur'

Richard Shoreditch.

William Avery, Esq; Jur'

Mr. Williams. We challenge him for the Defendant.

L. C. J. What is your Cause of Challenge?

Mr. Williams. There is the same Exception to him.

L. C. J. If Mr. Attorney will consent, with all my Heart.

Mr. Att. Gen. No, we humour'd you in one, we won't humour you any more.

Mr. Williams. Nay, here is something more clear for us, he is a Serjeant at Arms attending his Majesty.

Mr. Just. Withins. You know our Opinions already, Mr. Williams, unless Mr. Attorney consent, we can't do it.

Mr. Williams. We only acquaint Mr. Attorney with it, we must submit to your Rule, he is certainly Serjeant at Arms, he came in the Place of Dereham that let my Lord Grey escape.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray prove it, I don't know it for my Share.

Mr. Williams. Will you ask him the Question?

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray prove it. Are we to gratify your Client? Pray let him better instruct his Counsel.

L. C. J. If Mr. Attorney consent not, then he must be sworn.

Mr. Att. Gen. If there be enough without him that do appear, let him stand by.

Cl. of Cr. Stand down, Mr. Shoreditch.

Charles Good, Esq; Jur'

Mr. Att. Gen. That it may appear how fair Things were carried, they would not strike out one of these Men when they came before the Prothonotary, as they might have done.

Mr. Just. Withins. Truly that was not well done, to trouble the Court when you might make your Exceptions there.

Mr. Williams. We did not know it then, now we do, we offer it to the Court.

Cl. of Cr.

Cl. of Cr. Gentlemen of the Jury, You that are sworn, hearken to your Charge. The Defendant John Hampden stands indicted by the Name of John Hampden, of the Parish of St. Giles in the Fields, in the County of Middlesex, Gent. (Prout in the Indictment, mutatis mutandis)—To this Indictment he has pleaded not Guilty, and for his Trial puts himself upon the Country, and the King's Attorney General likewise, which Country you are; your Charge is to enquire whether the Defendant be guilty of the great Misdemeanour whereof he stands indicted, or not guilty; if you find him guilty, you are to say so; and if you find him not guilty, you are to say so, and no more; and hear your Evidence.

Then Proclamation was made for Evidence in usual Form.

Mr. Holloway. May it please your Lordship, and Gentlemen, you that are sworn, I am of Counsel for the King upon this Indictment. Gentlemen, the Indictment sets forth, that the Defendant being a seditious, malicious, evil-disposed Person, and seditiously and maliciously intending to disturb the Peace of the Kingdom, the last Day of June, in the 35th Year of his now Majesty's Reign, and divers other Days and Times, at the Parish of St. Giles in the Fields, in your County, did unlawfully assemble, and confederate himself with divers evil-disposed Persons, Subjects of our Lord the King, and then and there, with those other Persons did falsely, maliciously, and seditiously consult and conspire to make an Insurrection in the Kingdom of England, and to provide Arms and armed Men in divers Places of the said Kingdom. And the better to compleat his evil Intentions, the said last Day of June, did consult and agree to send certain Persons, to the Jurors unknown, into Scotland, to invite several evil-disposed Persons there to join in this Conspiracy. This is the Substance of the Charge, and to this he says, he is not guilty; if we prove him so, we do not question but you will find it.

Mr. Att. Gen. May it please your Lordship, and you Gentlemen of this Jury, Mr. Hampden stands indicted of an high Misdemeanour, for conspiring, with several others, to raise Rebellion within the Kingdom, and to crave the Assistance of the Brotherhood of Scotland. Upon the Face of the Indictment, Gentlemen, it appears to be a very high Crime, and the Matter of this indeed has been formerly in Examination in other Trials, and yet the Party, you may observe, do not acquiesce in those Trials, but think the Persons accused lay under very great Hardships, and that to a very great Degree, as not having the Advantage of Counsel, nor to have their Witnesses examined upon Oath; and therefore, Gentlemen, the King is pleased to go less in this Case than in the others, That this Gentleman, who is now before the Court, may clear his Innocence, if he has any Witnesses to do it. And if there be any Advantage that the having of Counsel can contribute to his Cause he has that allowed him too.

The Course of our Evidence, Gentlemen, will be this.

We shall prove to you that Mr. Hampden, with five other Persons, (I shall name them) the Duke of Monmouth, my Lord Russel, Mr. Sidney, my Lord of Effex, and my Lord Howard, they met several times, (the Particulars we shall give you an Account of) one was at Mr. Hampden's House, another was at my Lord Russel's, where they did contrive together, and took upon them to be a Juncto, or a Council of Six, collected out of the wisest Men of the Kingdom, to consider how they might better the Affairs of the Nation, and how they might make a Stir: For they thought there was no way possible otherwise of doing it, but by their joint Councils to carry on a Rising. And that they might do it the better, they resolved to crave the Assistance of Scotland. Gentlemen, we shall give you an Account of their Consults and Debates, and shall shew you, that at length they came to a Resolution, that the Rising was to be carried on jointly in London, and the several Parts of the Kingdom, in several Countries at once. Then they came to think, and consider whether it were not best to send into Scotland, to draw them in too. And thereupon it was agreed by this Juncto, that they would send thither, and the Management of it was committed to Mr. Sidney, to send some fit Person into Scotland, to treat with the Male-Contents there; and the better to carry on this joint Design, some of them were to come up to London. And they were to have a Pretence to treat about going to Carolina, and the purchasing some Shares in the Plantation there, of which my Lord Shaftesbury was a chief Governour. We shall prove to you, Gentlemen, besides all that I have opened, that the Person to whom that Trust was committed, Mr. Sidney, according to the Duty that he had taken upon him, does employ one Aaron Smith, which all that know him, do know him to be a fit Engine for such Counsellors, and a fit Instrument for such a Conspiracy. We shall prove he actually was in Scotland, and that he went into Scotland upon this Errand. And then we shall prove that those Gentlemen that were sent to, and were the Persons named in their Consults to be treated with, came here soon after to Town, and as soon as ever this Plot was discovered, they fled and absconded themselves. Gentlemen, if we shall prove all this Matter to you, I think it will be without any Question clear, that this Gentleman is notoriously guilty of this High Misdemeanour. And indeed, if you observe it, one of the Persons has given Judgment against himself, the Earl of Effex. But the Party have been so diligent and officious as to sling that upon the Government; but that Matter we shall have before the Court in Judgment to-morrow. For two of the others they have received the Judgment of the Law; for two more of them the King has been pleased to take them into his Mercy; the one is my Lord Howard, who is summon'd to appear here to day; the other is the Duke of Monmouth, who has confessed all this Matter, and has taken his Pardon, and we have summon'd him also to be here this Day; that the World, if they will have their Eyes opened (I mean the discontented World) may see there is nothing sought, but the Peace and Quieting of the Kingdom.

Gentlemen, if we prove all this Matter to you, I shall be glad to hear the Defence of the Counsel, and the Defence made by Witnesses upon Oath.

Mr. Synch. Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lord, we will call our Witnesses, and first we begin with the Duke of Monmouth.

Mr. Att. Gen. Call James Duke of Monmouth.

Crier. James Duke of Monmouth.

Mr. Att. Gen. Call him again.

Crier. James Duke of Monmouth.

L. C. J. Was he served with a Subpoena?

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, we will prove we have served him in all Places where he was like to be met with; that we left Subpoena's with his Servants, who promised to deliver them to him.

L. C. J. Prove it.

Mr. Att. Gen. Where is Mr. Atterbury? Swear him. [Which was done.] Pray will you give the Court an Account, whether you did serve the Duke of Monmouth with any Subpoena? In what Places you were to serve him, and who you left it with?

Mr. Atterbury. My Lord, on Friday last was Seven-night, I was commanded by Mr. Attorney-General, to carry a Subpoena to serve upon the Duke of Monmouth, and to go to his House at Moor-Park, where it was generally discoursed he was. I did go and take a Subpoena from Mr. Burton, by Mr. Attorney's Order, and went to the Duke's House at Moor-Park. When I came there, the outward Gate was locked, and I went to an House where the Keys are kept, and having got the Keys, I went down to the House, and I saw there one of his Servants fothering of Cattle; and coming up to him, I asked him if the Duke of Monmouth was in the House. He told me, he could not well tell, whether he was or not, but he thought he was gone to London, for he saw the Calash, and five or six Horsemen with it, and they said in the House, that it was the Duke that was gone to London. I asked if there were any Servants that were nearer to his Grace in the House, that I might speak with; they said, Yes, there was the House-keeper or Steward, one Mr. Rawkins, that attended upon the Duke. I desired to speak with him, and he came out to me; I asked him if the Duke was there? He seemed to be unwilling to give me an Answer. I asked him the second Time; but he did not say he was, or he was not. I told him then, I had a Subpoena, which I brought with me by Mr. Attorney-General's Order, to serve upon his Grace, which was to require him to attend here this Day, to testify his Knowledge, in a Case between the King and Mr. Hampden. He told me, Sir, said he, give me your Subpoena, and I will take care the Duke shall have it. He took it of me, and I came back to London presently. As soon as I came to Town, I had a second Subpoena given me to serve upon his Grace, with which I went to the Duke's House at the Cockpit. When I came there, I spake with the Porter, I think his Name is Johnson (but the Porter he is, and I remember him a Servant there many Years). I asked him, if the Duke were there? He told me he did not lodge there. I told him I had a Subpoena to serve upon his Grace to appear as this Day, the same as I said at Moor-Park. Says he, Mr. Atterbury, I will take care the Duke have it to Night, or to-morrow Morning early.

L. C. J. When was this?

Mr. Atterbury. It was of the same Day, Friday was seven-night last. I was told afterwards by one that I met with, that the Duke did lodge at Mr. Row's House, who is a Servant to the Duke, one of his Gentlemen. He lives in the Pall-Mall, 'tis either his House or his Lodging, but they call it his House. I had a third Subpoena given me to the same Effect. And when I came there, I asked for the Duke, and a Woman came to the Door, Mrs. Manley (I think they call her), she seemed to make little Answer to what I said. Said I, Pray will you give this Subpoena to the Duke, or to Mr. Row to give it the Duke. She took it of me, and said, she would give it Mr. Row certainly to give to the Duke. And Yesterday, or the Day before, I met Mr. Row at Whitehall, and says he to me, Mr. Atterbury, you brought a Subpoena to my House a little while ago. Yes, Sir, said I, I did, had you it? Yes I had the Subpoena, says he. Then says I, I hope you gave the Duke it? To that he made me no Answer, but nodded his Head, and smiled, and went away.

L. C. J. Now call his Grace again.

Crier. James Duke of Monmouth.

Mr. Att. Gen. Call William Lord Howard. [Who was in the Court.] Pray swear my Lord Howard. [Which was done.]

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord Howard, Pray will you be pleased to give the Court and the Jury an Account what you know of any Meeting by the Gentleman that is now accused, and the Duke of Monmouth, my Lord Russel, yourself and others, and when; Tell what you know.

Lord Howard. My Lord, in January last was Twelve-month, about the midst of January I was called out by Colonel Sidney, being then in my Lodgings in Southampton-Street, and carried by him to Mr. Hampden's House, I do not know what they call the Street, but the same Side of the Way with the fine House that is in Bloomsbury.

Mr. Jones. By my Lord Montague's House that now is, you mean?

Lord Howard. Yes, of the same side of the way. When I came there, there was my Lord Russel, and the Duke of Monmouth, Colonel Sidney and I went together, Mr. Hampden was then in the Room where they were. Afterwards came in my Lord of Effex, this made up Six. When they were there, we fell into Discourses.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray, my Lord, before you come to tell the particular Discourses, give an Account how, and upon what Grounds you came to have this Juncto of Six?

L. C. J. If you please, my Lord, Pray give an Account of the Preliminary Passages.

Lord Howard. My Lord, after the Disappointment given to an Undertaking that was begun by my Lord Shaftesbury, which was in October or November before, in November he died. After that, truly I cannot say, but that Colonel Sidney and myself might be, and were the two first that did give the Rise to it. For being in Discourse, we said it was absolutely necessary that there should be some Council erected to give some Steadiness to the Motions.

L. C. J. My Lord, I would not willingly interrupt you. But you seem to speak of a Disappointment given to an Undertaking by my Lord Shaftesbury. Pray what was that Undertaking?—Lord Howard. Your Lordship has heard of that before, and know it very well.

L. C. J. Though we know it, the Jury do not. They have not heard it judicially at least.

Lord Howard. Because it has been in the printed Books, every body suppose knows it.

L. C. J. But that they cannot judicially take notice of.

Lord Howard. That is something a long History, my Lord.

L. C. J. Though it be, we must hear it.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray make it as short as you can, my Lord.

Lord Howard. So much as I can give account of is this. It was about the Day after Michael's Day that I came to my own House, having been before in Essex, and that I think was Saturday. The Monday following Captain Walcot came to me, and dined with me, and after Dinner told me, my Lord of Shaftesbury had left his House, and had betaken himself to a private Lodging, and had hid himself from the rest of his Friends; but had a great Kindness for me, (which Kindness truly I wish he had spared) and desired to see me. I took time to consider of it; but I bid him go back to my Lord Shaftesbury, and tell him, if he had any thing of an extraordinary Nature to acquaint me with, I would come and assist him all I could. He came the next Day again, and shewed me to my Lord Shaftesbury's Lodging: He lodged then at one Watson's House, a Citizen, I know not what Street they call it; but it was in a little Street down by Woodstreet. And when I came to him, I found my Lord Shaftesbury very much differing from what he used to be, which was more cautious; and presently he fell to tell me, that he was forced to withdraw himself from his own House, for fear of being attacked again by Sham-Charges and Plots; and false Evidence, as he had before: For now he said, He saw they had the Possession of all Juries, by having those Sheriffs which were imposed upon the City, as he said, and he could not think his own Life or any Man's Life safe; for to be accused was sufficient to bring his Life into very great Danger, and for that Reason he had withdrawn himself to that private Retirement; and being there he was resolved to make some speedy Push, for recovering of the Liberties of England; that there was Preparation made in the City of several Thousands of Men, that were all in readiness to rise, and that for his Part, he was resolved to be set on Horseback; for get on Horseback he could not; and that there were great numbers that were ready, when he did but hold up his Finger, to be drawn together at any time: That divers had been drawn out of the Country to join with them by insensible Parties of Horse, I think he named about Fourscore or an Hundred. Which since I found were to be headed by Colonel Rumsey, upon the Day of making and declaring the Sheriffs; but finding there was nothing done, he withdrew himself and his Man thither; but there was such a general Preparation in the City, that if some Lords did not unhandlily desert them they should be in readiness for Action quickly: I asked him who he meant? He told me, the Duke of Monmouth and my Lord Russell had very unhandlily deserted him; for they had promised and undertaken to be in readiness with Men out of several Countries in which they had an Interest, he named Somersetshire, Devonshire, and Cheshire, I think, and that my Lord Grey should be disposed of into Essex to do the same there, and if they had held on this Resolution, it had been such a sure Game, that it could not have failed: But says he, they are started, and say they cannot be in a readiness to do it. My Lord, I very much wonder that those Persons you named should engage in any Design, and fail of performing what they promised! Says he, I'll assure you 'tis so. And so he proceeded to speak several sharp Things of the Duke of Monmouth, upon the account of his Ambition, that he thought to have all under his Command: Which was a secret lurking Ambition in him, that he said, he always suspected the Duke to be guilty of. And now he found his Suspicions true. That unless he might command all, he would do nothing. But for his part, since he found the Matter so, he was resolved to go on alone, rather than fail in his Design. Said I, my Lord, I should be very forward to concur with you in any thing; but I wonder your Lordship should step into an Action of such Danger; thus divided from those that are most likely to assist you in it. I cannot help it, said he, I have left my House, and must go on. My Lord, said I, pray give me leave to go to the Duke of Monmouth, and expostulate the Matter with him, and I will come and give you an Account again. Says he, 'tis to no purpose, I dare say. Said I, my Lord, pray let me go and try, for I would not have you divided, but I will promise you this, I will not tell him I came from you, but as from myself discourse it with the Duke. Well, said he, if you will you may. This was upon Tuesday, I think the 3d of October, the 3d or 4th. So I went to the Duke of Monmouth the next Day, which was Wednesday, and finding him not at home at his House in Scho, and being told he was at Moor-Park, I took an occasion to go to Moor-Park, and I came there a little after Dinner, and took him aside, and told him all this that I now have spoken about my Lord Shaftesbury. Says he, I think the Man is mad, what does he mean? We did undertake to do this, 'tis true; but not by that time he speaks of, and things are not ready, I know not what his own Fears make him do, but he does act so preposterously that he will undo us all. Said I, my Lord, all that I shall desire is, that there may be an Interview betwixt you, and discourse the thing with one another, or else it may be a thing of very fatal Consequence for him to step into an Action of this Danger and Concern while you are thus divided. With all my Heart, says the Duke, I would have nothing more, I desire to speak with him. This made me recoil back again to my Lord of Shaftesbury the next Day, and I told him all this, and desired he would give a Meeting; says he, I see they are false then to say they did not engage; they were engaged, and that against this time too, the Confirmation and Swearing of the Sheriffs; and now for me to meet with them, I know I shall run out into Passion and Anger, and therefore 'tis better omitted. Said I, my Lord, I must positively insist upon it. I must have an interview between you, for 'tis a Madness for you to go on thus divided in so great a Business. I could not prevail, he would not; but he told me if I would I might go to them from him, and let them know I had been with him; (for before I pretended to have it from a third Hand, and not from my Lord himself,) and if they would be in a readiness with what they promised from the Country, he would ask nothing from the City, he would take that Place upon himself, if they would perform their Engagement for other Parts; but he resolved to go on. So I went to the Duke of Monmouth again, and told him, what he said. That I could not by any means get him to an Interview. Says the Duke, he is a strange Man, I know not what to do with him, we will all be in a readiness as soon as we can; but it is impossible to do it so soon. I went to my Lord of Shaftesbury again on the Saturday, and did then positively engage him that he would give a Meeting to me, and the Duke of Monmouth, and some others: And we appointed Time and Place; he appointed to come out in a Parson's Habit, and a black Periwig to his own House, which he thought the safest Place, because he would not discover his Lodging to any of them, for fear it should come to be known. With these Instructions I came to the Duke of Monmouth to prepare about it, and proffered him to be ready the next Day at Evening with my Lord Russell to go to him. All this while I had not spoken to my Lord Russell, but only to the Duke of Monmouth. And the next Day when I came from Church to my own House, there met me a Message from Colonel Rumsey, who I understood by my Servants had been there, and left his Name, with this Message, that he came to tell me, the Gentleman that was to meet could not meet. This was so confused a Matter, that I was impatient till I knew the meaning of it. I took my Coach and went directly to the Duke of Monmouth's again, and he told me, Colonel Rumsey had been with him, and told him, my Lord of Shaftesbury was apprehensive there were a great many Tories about his House, and he feared being discovered, and therefore had removed his Lodging, and so could not meet; but we should hear from him in two or three Days. So that was the last time that I saw my Lord of Shaftesbury, or indeed, in a direct Line, did hear from him; collaterally by Walcot I did afterwards hear; but by this means we were at a loss. After this the Duke of Monmouth did tell me (for he did not own to me that he saw him, but indeed swore to me that he did not see him; but I find since he did.) That he would do what he could to prevent an untimely, dangerous Undertaking. But after this it seems they had a Meeting at Mr. Sheppard's House, where my Lord Shaftesbury sent a Message to him and my Lord Russell; but the Duke of Monmouth only told me, that my Lord Russell had met with him, and seen him; but he never owned that he had met him himself or seen him. About four or five Days after, Captain Walcot came to me, and told me, such a Day was set for the Rising. Upon which being startled, I had nothing to do, but recoil back to the Duke of Monmouth, and endeavour to stop any rash Proceedings; and it was stopped as I thought, and so it continued for two or three Days, and at that time, which was in October, there was a Rumour up and down whispered, as if something would be attempted; but what it was we did not know, but thus it went on for two or three Days, and then it meeting with a Disappointment upon the Consultation at Mr. Sheppard's, my Lord Shaftesbury took up his Resolution to be gone, and went away to Holland; and died in Holland. This is the Substance of that Account which I can give of those former Transactions.

Mr. Att. Gen. Now give an Account of what was subsequent to this.

Lord Howard. This was in November. After this there being frequent Conferences between Colonel Sidney and me; for Colonel Sidney by the way knew nothing of all this, and I was cautioned by my Lord Shaftesbury, that I should not tell my Friend Sidney any thing of it; and asking him the reason why I should not, Says he, I can't well tell; but you will wonder when I tell you, that his own Friend Major Wildman has barred him and would not let him know it. The Gentleman is now dead; but I will assure you he did know nothing of this for a Month after; for he was gone into the Country; but after my Lord Shaftesbury was dead, I told him the History of all these Transactions, which he was before a Stranger to. After this, when I had acquainted him with what had been intended in London, and what Preparations had been made, and how what was intended had been suppressed, and in what Posture Affairs then stood; We then took up a Resolution to form a Council, that might for the time to come give such Directions as might regulate the Motions of this Affair. Thereupon we began to think of the Persons who they should be. He undertook to speak to my Lord of Essex, and Mr. Hampden, and I was to bring the Duke of Monmouth to a right Understanding with him in it. So I went to the Duke of Monmouth, and told him Colonel Sidney did present his Service to him, and would willingly wait on him, but that he thought it would do him hurt, because he was a Person of such Note, and thereupon so obnoxious that it might prejudice him to have him seen to come to him; and therefore if his Grace would please to appoint any third Place, he should be very glad to kiss his Hand. Says the Duke, I do not know any where truly to appoint. Why then, said I, I will tell you a Place: Let us then go to his House (having before prepared Colonel Sidney for it) and take him by Surprise and dine with him, and then there will be the less Suspicion; But, said I, you must not expect to be treated as the Duke of Monmouth, because he does not expect you; but take him as a Philosopher, and dine with him as he uses to dine at his own Table. Says the Duke of Monmouth, I care not for Entertainment; I will go with you: And there at that time did the Duke of Monmouth undertake to bring in my Lord Russell and my Lord of Salisbury. This was the only Discourse preparatory to it that ever I knew of. Within a Fortnight or three Weeks after, nay, I think it was less than Ten Days after, Colonel Sidney came to me, and told me, my Lord of Essex was very forward in it. The Duke of Monmouth would prepare my Lord Russell, and my Lord Salisbury; and he himself did not doubt, but Mr. Hampden was very willing to be in it too; and they had appointed a Meeting at Mr. Hampden's House, and he would carry me thither to the House; and this was the first Meeting that I knew of; and there we met all Six.

Mr. Att. Gen. About what time was that?

Lord Howard. It was about the middle of January; and truly I think I could reduce it to a certain Day or two by the Persons where I lodged.

Mr. Att. Gen. What was debated there?

Lord Howard. When we came there every one discoursed what he would. There was a Discourse of the Time and Places where to rise; but among other Things it was resolved as a Principal Point, that there should be a Preparation made for the Design, by a Treaty with those of Scotland, and an Understanding settled with Argyle, and a Messenger sent to my Lord Argyle, and others. And before this was done, we could not be ripe for any Resolution: But this must be speedily done.

L. C. J. Pray, my Lord, give me your Favour, I would not interrupt you; but to make Things clear as we go, I desire to ask you, when you came first to Mr. Hampden's House, who spake first, when you were all met together?

Lord Howard. Every body discoursed what they pleased.

L. C. J. But who gave an Account of the Reason of the Meeting? Will you please to recollect, and tell what you know, who began the Discourse?

Lord Howard. Something introductive to it was said by Mr. Hampden, we being at his House, as 'tis natural to conceive for any Gentleman at whose whose House People are met, to say, Pray let us sit down and talk of our Business. Something leading and introductive was said by him.

L. C. J. Pray, my Lord, as near as you can remember, will you give an Account what was the thing he began to discourse of? Did he seem to take any Notice, or have any Knowledge of your Meeting, and other Things before?

Lord Howard. It was a general Hint and Intimation to us of the Ends of our Meeting, that we were there come to consult and advise one with another, how to put Things into a better Method and Posture than formerly: And he desired that we would sit down and discourse of these Things. My Lord, I would not charge myself with Particulars positively.

Mr. Att. Gen. Upon what Questions did you debate and consult, my Lord?

Lord Howard. Those were started severally. Some would speak of the Time when it should be, whether it were not convenient now, or when. Others offered something concerning the Places, whether it should be begun in the City or in the Country, or both together. Others took it into Consideration, what Persons were to be prepared in the several Countries to be assisting in it, that were probable to carry it on. And then some discoursed concerning the raising of Money, and then what Sum should be raised, and I think that was started by the Duke of Monmouth; but I am sure the Sum that he named was 20 or 30000 l. The last Thing that was talked of, but which was concluded to be the Thing principally to be taken care of, was the settling such a Concurrence and Correspondence with Scotland, that they might chime in at the same time, that so we might give as many Diversions both from home and abroad as could be at one and the same time.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord Howard, Did Mr. Hampden discourse of this Matter?

Lord Howard. I cannot speak to the Discourse of any one in particular; for I cannot say it was put to the Vote as we formerly express'd it, but it may be said we were all consenting and concurring.

L. C. J. Did any of you dissent from the Raising?

Lord Howard. No, no, my Lord.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did any of you oppose it at all?

Lord Howard. No, no, That was discoursed of as a thing resolved.

L. C. J. I ask you this Question, my Lord Howard, Was there any sort of Complaint made of the Government, that it was uneasy and that occasioned you to enter into these Debates?

Lord Howard. There was, I cannot say a Complaint, because there was no Person to complain to; but it was spoken of as a Matter of great Grievance, that such a Force and Violence should be put upon the City in their Election of Officers, and the tendency of that as to all Juries, tho' I cannot distinctly remember the particular things.

L. C. J. You say you were talking of a Messenger to be sent into Scotland to my Lord of Argyle, and others to chime in with you in this Matter, as you say, pray did you come to any resolution about that, and what did you resolve upon?

Lord Howard. That there should be one only at that time. And afterwards it was the matter of the Debate at the next Meeting, which was that Meeting at my Lord Russell's, which was about this time twelve-month, in February some time.

Mr. Att. Gen. How long after the first Meeting at Mr. Hampden's was that?—Lord Howard. My Lord, I think it was about a Fortnight.

Mr. Att. Gen. Who was there?

Lord Howard. The same Persons that met before. But then there was little spoken of but the Business of Scotland.

L. C. J. Was Mr. Hampden there at the second Meeting?

Lord Howard. He was there.

L. C. J. At my Lord Russell's you say it was?—Lord Howard. Yes.

Mr. Att. Gen. What Resolution did you come to then?

Lord Howard. Then we came to a Resolution that some body should be sent, and we began to discourse who was fit, and Colonel Sidney he propounded Aaron Smith, to some of the Company he was known, to others not; but those that did know him did approve of him as a fit Person.

Mr. Att. Gen. To whose Province was that committed of sending this Person into Scotland?—Lord Howard. Col. Sidney undertook it himself.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did the rest consent to it?

Lord Howard. Yes, No body did oppose it, but left it to him.

L. C. J. Did you name the Person then that was to go?

Lord Howard. He was not so named as to be with any solemnity approved or disproved; but it was left to Col. Sidney to manage it, and he naming Smith as a fit Person, (he told us that by the by not to put it to the Question for our Approbation) and some of us knew the Person, others did not. I was one that did know him, and did think him a very fit Man to send.

L. C. J. Pray, my Lord, who was the Person? Be pleased to tell the Jury so as they may know it.

Lord Howard Aaron Smith.

Mr. Just. Withins. Had you any discourse with Col. Sidney, my Lord, afterwards that he was sent?—Lord Howard. Yes, my Lord.

L. C. J. Pray give an account of that.

Lord Howard. About three or four Days after this Meeting at my Lord Russell's, I went to visit Col. Sidney at his House, and while I was there in the Room, he went to his Cabinet, and out of a Drawer where there were five or six hundred Pounds in Gold as I could guess, he took a good many Pieces, I do not know directly how many; but he took out so many as he said were threescore Guineas that he was going to carry to Aaron Smith; I went not in my own Coach, and therefore went away with him in his Coach, and he set me down at Southampton-Street at my own Lodging. I went no further, but he did, and he told me afterwards it was conveyed to him, and that he did go.

L. C. J. How long was that after your Meeting at my Lord Russell's, where you say you intrusted Col. Sidney to send one into Scotland?

Lord Howard. I think it may be less than a Week, four or five Days, that I saw him carry the Money. After this, he said, he had given him this Money, and was gone: And when he was dispatched, in a Week after I was making Inquiries after him, and Col. Sidney said, he had not heard of him since he went away; but about a Fortnight or three Weeks Col. Sidney said he had heard of him, that he was at Newcastle and staid there; but he wondered he could hear no more of him. I then went into Essex, and when I came back from thence, he told me, he was come, but I had never seen him, not to this Day; indeed I had once appointed a Meeting with him at Mr. Wyll's Chamber; but something or other happened, we did not meet.

Mr. Att. Gen. We have done with my Lord Howard; if they will ask him any Questions, they may.

L. C. J. They know their time, when the King's Attorney has done with any Witness, then they may examine him if they please. If they will not, call your other Witnesses.

Mr. Att. Gen. Will you ask him any Questions?

Mr. Jones. No, no, by Advice they are to ask him nothing.

Mr. Att. Gen. We shall give your Lordship and the Jury an Account in the next place, that we have traced Aaron Smith into Scotland. And for that we shall call some Witnesses which indeed we did not produce before at any Trial, because we had not then discovered so much. We shall bring you the Person at whose House he lay at Newcastle, and the very Messenger that was sent with him to conduct him a By-way into Scotland. Call Sheriffe and Bell.

L. C. J. Look ye, Gentlemen, You that are at the Bar there, you must let the Jury stand by themselves. I see there are a great many others intermingled with them, and you, Gentlemen of the Jury, if any Whisperer talk to you, we expect that you should tell us who they are; for we will suffer no Remarks to be made but what are openly made to the Court, and the Jury, by the Counsel of both sides.

Mr. Att. Gen. Swear Sheriffe and Bell.

Mr. Williams. What is this Man's Name, Mr. Attorney? Friend, What is your Name?—Witness. My Name is Sheriffe.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray give my Lord and the Jury an Account what you know of any Person that lay at your House some time since, and whether you have seen him since? My Lord, this Gentleman did not know Aaron Smith before, and therefore I desire Mr. Atterbury may be called and examined again. Mr. Atterbury, do you know Aaron Smith?

Mr. Atterbury. Yes, I know him very well.

Mr. Att. Gen. Had this Gentleman a View of Aaron Smith?

Mr. Atterbury. Yes, he had. He was brought where Aaron Smith was, and this other Person was by before him too, and I was by when they had a View of him.

Mr. Att. Gen. Now, pray give an Account what you know of the Man you saw.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Where is Aaron Smith?

Mr. Atterbury. He is in the King's-Bench Prison, and he was brought by Habeas Corpus to Whitehall before the King, where these two Persons were brought likewise, and there this Man, Sheriffe, did own that Aaron Smith was the Man that was at his House; and the other Bell, owned that he travelled towards Scotland with him, and that he was hired to shew him the Way into Scotland.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did Aaron Smith say any thing?

Mr. Atterbury. He would not answer any thing at all, nor say a Word.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray give an Account, Mr. Sheriffe, who it was that lay at your House, and when it was, and what he said was his Business, and by what Name he went.

Mr. Sheriffe. Indeed his Business I did not know; but he was at our House about the middle of February, it was thereabouts.

L. C. J. When was it? What February?

Mr. Sheriffe. The last February.

Mr. Att. Gen. You say he was at your House last February, pray tell the Court where that is?—Mr. Sheriffe. At Newcastle.

Mr. Att. Gen. Do you keep any Inn there?—Mr. Sheriffe. Yes.

Mr. Att. Gen. What Sign?

Mr. Sheriffe. The Sign of the Black-Spread-Eagle.

Mr. Att. Gen. And what did he do there?

Mr. Sheriffe. He staid there one Night and went away, and returned again in twelve Days or thereabouts, and came to my House again.

Mr. Att. Gen. Whither did he go from you?

Mr. Sheriffe. He went Southward as I suppose, I know no farther.

Mr. Att. Gen. But when he first came to your House, which way went he? Mr. Sheriffe. He went Northward towards Scotland, as he himself said, and desired to have one to shew him the way: And I sent for this Man, and when he came to him he hired him to go with him, and I was by.

L. C. J. When he first came to your House about the middle of February was twelve-month, whither was he bound then, Northward or Southward?

Mr. Sheriffe. He was going to Scotland, that is Northward.

L. C. J. And you say, after he came back again, and lay another Night at your House.

Mr. Sheriffe. Yes, ten or twelve Days after he did.

L. C. J. And which way went he then?

Mr. Sheriffe. Then he came Southwards towards London.

L. C. J. Did you take exact Notice of the Man?

Mr. Sheriffe. Yes, I saw him before his Majesty and the Council.

L. C. J. And upon your Oath, that same Man you saw there was the same Man that lodged at your House in February was twelve-month?

Mr. Sheriffe. Yes, it is.

Mr. Att. Gen. What Name did he go by at your House?—Mr. Sheriffe. He went under the Name of Mr. Clerk, but what his Surname was I can't tell.

L. C. J. Had he a Servant with him?—Mr. Sheriffe. He had a Man with him that staid at our House during the Time of his going Northward.

Mr. Att. Gen. What did he call his Name?

Mr. Sheriffe. William Langston.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did he desire you to furnish him with a Guide?

Mr. Sheriffe. He told me his Servant did not know the Way, and his Horse was a little lamish, and desired me to get a Guide for him. For after he had dined at our House, it happened to be a rainy Day, and he could not go farther that Night, and therefore desired me to get him a Man that knew that Country, and I sent for this same Man, and he hired him; and he went along with him next Morning, My Lord.

Mr. Att. Gen. Whither was he to go?—Mr. Sheriffe. Truly I did not know; but he told me he did not know the Way into Scotland, and I directed him to a Gentleman's House at Fadbrough in the way.

L. C. J.

L. C. J. Is that the Road to Scotland?
 Mr. Sheriff. Yes, the High Road to one Part of Scotland.
 L. C. J. Did he tell you to what Part of Scotland he was to go?
 Mr. Sheriff. He named the West of Scotland, I think he named Douglas, but I do not know what Place he certainly designed for.
 Mr. Att. Gen. Then where is Bell?—Bell. Here.
 Mr. Att. Gen. Had you a view of this Man they call Aaron Smith?
 Bell. Yes, I had.
 Mr. Att. Gen. Give an Account, whether you saw him in the North, and when, and where?
 Bell. This Man, Mr. Sheriff, sent for me. I live at Newcastle, and there I keep Hackney-Horses to serve any Gentlemen, or be a Guide to them as there is occasion; and Mr. Sheriff sent for me, and when I came, he told me the Gentleman wanted a Guide into Scotland. We immediately agreed, it was upon Thursday Night before that we call Easter-Eve.
 L. C. J. When was it, say you?
 Bell. It was, the Thursday before Easter-Eve, so they call it with us, that is, Shrove-Tuesday.
 L. C. J. Ay, they call it so in those Places, because 'tis the Even of the Fast of Ash-Wednesday, the Beginning of Lent—Well, go on.
 Bell. We went away on Friday the next Morning on our Journey towards Jadbrough, and the second Day, which was Saturday, in the Afternoon, my Horse tired, whereupon he left me with my Horse, and took the Man's Man of the House where he left me, to guide him, for my Horse would not ride up with him, being tired, and he resolving to go on, and he bid me follow him on the Sunday Morning to Jadbrough Town, which I did, and we staid there all Sunday. And on Monday Morning I saw him take Horse, and another Man that was his Guide, and away they went, as I think, he said towards Douglas he was going. And he paid me, and I returned again from him to Newcastle, and left him.
 L. C. J. Pray, how far was this? you say you went with him to Jadbrough, how far distant is that from Newcastle?
 Bell. To Jadbrough, my Lord?—L. C. J. Yes.
 Bell. 'Tis forty Miles, my Lord.
 L. C. J. How near Scotland is it?
 Bell. 'Tis within some six Miles of the English border.
 L. C. J. Did you see him at any time after that?
 Bell. I saw him at his coming back again, being at Sheriff's House, his Wife asked me, if I would go up and see the Gentleman that I went with towards Scotland: So I went up, and he made me eat and drink at the Table with him.
 Mr. Att. Gen. What name did he go by?
 Bell. He went by the Name of Clerk.
 Mr. Att. Gen. Was there any Servant with him?
 Bell. There was a Man that came with him as a Servant there, and was all that time at Newcastle, that he was gone towards Scotland, 'till he came back again.
 L. C. J. Mr. Attorney, Did this Man see Smith at the time the other saw him?—Bell. Yes, I did.
 L. C. J. And is that the Man that went by the Name of Clerk at Newcastle, and that you went with towards Scotland?—Bell. Yes, it is.
 Mr. Atterbury. And when they charged him with it, Aaron Smith did not deny it.
 Mr. Att. Gen. Did you go any By-road to get into Scotland?
 Bell. No, 'tis the Road Gentlemen usually go to Jadbrough, and so on; because 'tis something the nearer Way to that Part of Scotland, as we judge it to be, therefore Gentlemen use it.
 Mr. Att. Gen. Is it an high open Road?
 Bell. Yes, 'tis the high open Way to that Part of the Country.
 Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord Howard, Pray, were the Names of any of the Scotchmen mentioned at your Meeting that were to be sent for?
 Lord Howard. Yes; there was my Lord Melvin, Sir John Cockram, and one Campbell.
 Mr. Att. Gen. Now, my Lord, we will give you an Account, That as Smith went into Scotland, so these Persons soon after came into England.
 Jurymen. My Lord, we desire that my Lord Howard would name those Scotchmen that were to come.
 Lord Howard. There was my Lord Melvin, Sir John Cockram, and one Campbell, one that was of my Lord Argyle's Name and Family; and there was another Name, but I can't remember what that Name was.
 Mr. Att. Gen. We shall give you an Account, my Lord, that they came immediately after this to Town; and at the breaking out of the Plot they absconded.
 L. C. J. Mr. Attorney, Has my Lord Howard his Pardon?
 Mr. Att. Gen. Yes, my Lord, he has.
 L. C. J. Then your Lordship may be cover'd.
 Lord Howard. I can't tell but they may ask me some Questions.
 Mr. Att. Gen. Then you may be uncover'd when they ask them, in the mean time your Lordship may be covered. Swear Sir Andrew Foster.
 [Which was done.] Pray, Sir, will you tell my Lord and the Jury what you know about the Campbells, and Sir John Cockram's being in Town. Or any other Scotchman that you know of?
 Sir Andrew Foster. My Lord, I did see those Gentlemen in the Beginning of last Summer. Sir John Cockram, and Mr. Monroe and Campbell the Son, I did see, but the Father I did not, but I do know he was in Town, tho' I saw him not.
 Mr. Att. Gen. How do you know it?
 Sir Andrew Foster. I had Messages from them.
 L. C. J. Sir Andrew, you say, you saw Sir John Cockram and Monroe?
 Sir Andrew Foster. Yes.
 L. C. J. Did you see any body else?
 Sir Andrew Foster. I saw Sir George Campbell the Son.
 Mr. Att. Gen. What became of them upon the Discovery of the Plot?
 Sir Andrew Foster. Sir John Cockram did abscond, and Mr. Monroe was taken into Custody.
 Mr. Att. Gen. What became of the others?
 Sir Andrew Foster. The Campbells were both in Custody.
 Mr. Att. Gen. Did you see any Commission they had?
 Sir Andrew Foster. I did see a Commission that Sir John Cockram had.
 Mr. Att. Gen. What was it for?

Sir Andrew Foster. To make a Purchase of some Plantations beyond Sea, I think it was Carolina.

L. C. J. Ay, where my Lord Shaftesbury had an Interest.

Sir Andrew Foster. It was some of the West-Indies.

Lord Howard. I did omit that Passage, my Lord—

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray, was it discoursed then, what should be the Blind for these Gentlemen that were notorious Dissenters, that they should come to Town from Scotland about?

Lord Howard. It was to carry on a Plantation in Carolina. The Scotch Gentlemen were personally known to my Lord Russel only; and my Lord Russel was to write the Letter to them, and, I suppose, did.

Mr. Att. Gen. Mr. Atterbury, What do you know of these Scotchmen coming to Town; and what became of them afterwards?

Mr. Atterbury. My Lord, about the Beginning of July, 4th, 5th or 6th, or thereabouts, I had some Information, That there were some Scotch Gentlemen that had been shifting up and down, and at that Time were about Black-Friars, lodged there secretly. I immediately went with the King's Proclamation, and some Warrants that I had to apprehend some Traitors that were fled: And when I came, I found that Mr. Common Serjeant having notice of them, had beat up their Quarters, and they were endeavouring to escape by Water; but there they were caught. There was Sir Hugh Campbell, and Bayley, and Sir George Campbell, and some others, I know not the Names of them all; truly I can't tell whether Monroe was not another, but Sir Hugh Campbell I had in my Custody, and Bayley was immediately committed to the Gatehouse; and the rest of the Gentlemen I afterwards took in a cunning Hole by Moor-Fields, in a back House. And when I came there, I found them lying on the Bed in the Middle of the Day; and had them Prisoners in my Custody two or three Months; and then they were all sent out of my Hands into Scotland, Prisoners. Six of them there were, my Lord, that I saw.

Mr. Att. Gen. We have done, my Lord, only we desire that a Word of Record may be read.

Mr. Williams. What Record is it, Sir?

Mr. Att. Gen. Of Colonel Sidney's Attainder.

Mr. Williams. My Lord, we shall desire your Judgment, whether that Record ought to be read against Mr. Hampden; I perceive by Mr. Attorney, that is a Record of the Conviction of Mr. Sidney, which ought not to be given in Evidence against Mr. Hampden upon this Indictment.

Mr. Att. Gen. We make use of it to shew how upon former Trials upon this Evidence, Verdicts have gone.

Mr. Williams. We are in your Judgment, my Lord, if by Law it may be given in Evidence against Mr. Hampden, who is neither Party nor privy to it, nor indicted for the same Offence.

Mr. Att. Gen. Let it alone then.

L. C. J. Well, Mr. Attorney does not press it. What say you to it, Gentlemen, for the Defendant?

Mr. Williams. May it please your Lordship, and you Gentlemen of the Jury, I am of Counsel for Mr. Hampden the Defendant, upon this Indictment here before you. This Indictment is a severe Indictment: It is a very high Crime of which my Client is accused. How far the Evidence tends to reach it, you have heard; and I shall, with the Patience of the Court, particularly observe it to you. But I shall first speak to the Indictment itself: It says, that Mr. Hampden being a Person of a turbulent Disposition, and seditiously intending to disturb and disquiet the King's Peace, and to stir Sedition, and to bring the Government into Danger, did conspire, &c. As to this Matter, Gentlemen, there is no manner of Proof of what the Indictment charges, as to the Disposition of the Person accused; nor that he had any other Design, than what my Lord Howard hath now sworn. Then it says further, that Mr. Hampden did consult and conspire with divers Persons to execute these Purposes; and particularly for the making and raising an Insurrection in the Kingdom. This is laid as the particular Fact; And for this purpose he did further conspire with several Persons to provide Arms and armed Men: And for their fulfilling of this, he did further consult with several Persons, that some Persons should be sent into Scotland to stir up the King's Subjects in Scotland, to a Concurrence and Conjunction with some People in England, about this his evil Design. How far this Indictment is proved upon the Defendant, Gentlemen, is the Question before you. He has pleaded Not Guilty, and hopes to satisfy you he is not. Gentlemen, as to what Evidence has been given you so far as 'tis Positive and Affirmative, I mean the Testimony of my Lord Howard; in that Part, it is impossible for us that are of Counsel for the Defendant directly to contradict him with Proof, or to give a direct positive Proof in answer to it; I say, 'tis impossible for us to contradict him, who gives such a positive Evidence of Fact. By the Evidence of my Lord Howard he tells us, there were six Persons in this Council, as he is pleased to call them. By this Evidence, three of the six are dead, my Lord Russel, Col. Sidney, and the Earl of Essex; He himself is the Fourth, the Defendants the Fifth, who cannot give Evidence for himself; and the Duke of Monmouth, who is the Sixth, being away, there is not any Person in being, that should contradict my Lord Howard's Affirmative in this Part of his Evidence but the Duke of Monmouth, whom we cannot have her, since it appears by the Evidence, Mr. Attorney-General could not prevail to have him at this Trial; therefore Proof of that Nature cannot be reasonably expected from my Client to acquit himself by a positive Contradiction of what my Lord Howard has sworn. Then, in this Case we must, as in all Cases where a Person does swear directly against a Defendant, endeavour to satisfy and persuade your Lordship and the Jury, upon Circumstances arising out of this Fact, and further Circumstances attending the Fact, and by probable Arguments and reasonable Inductions out of the Evidence, that this Gentleman, the Defendant, is not guilty of what he is charged with.

In the first Place, we shall observe upon the Testimony of my Lord Howard, that as to some Things he is very positive and particular: He has an incomparable Memory, and speaks particularly to Persons, particularly to Places, particularly to Times. But, Gentlemen, as to that which is the principal Part of his Evidence, and which most affects the Defendant, and wherein it concerns us to contradict or disprove him, he is wanting as to that Circumstance of Time. He that is so exact in his Memory as to other Circumstances, is not positive, nor any thing like positive, as to the Times of the Meeting. For they would imagine, that the first Meeting the Defendant was concerned in, was at his own House. He describes the House and the Place very exactly, but as for the Time, he only says it was about the middle of January: He carries other Things in his Memory positively, and whether it might not be expected in a Case so remarkable as this, and which so nearly and highly concerned himself, that he should be as particular in the Time, as he is in other Things, you may intentionally judge. His Lordship sometimes is very particular as to Time: He tells you in his Relation about my Lord Shaftesbury, that his going to him was on the Saturday after Michaelmas-Day; and then he pursues it to the second and third of October. He is positive to many several Days; upon which I would observe, that he being particular to a Day, as to other Things, may well be expected to be ready (if it be true) to be as particular as to the Time of this Meeting. But therein he is to seek; he is doubtful as to that. And you must give us leave, Gentlemen, to make this Observation, that since he will not be particular to that Time, we do apprehend that he gives himself a little Loose; that we may not meet with him to contradict him in that Circumstance. For if he should be positive therein, as he is in the other Matters that concern not the Defendant, we might perhaps by clear pregnant Circumstances contradict, if not disprove his Lordship, that it is not probable (if possible) it should be true what he affirms. But, Gentlemen, we must answer it as well as we can; and since he is so cautious, we must meet him by Arguments in another way. Another Thing we should observe upon my Lord's Evidence, is this, that my Lord, tho' he be particular as to many Facts and Things relating to my Lord Shaftesbury, where he names other particular Persons, I think Col. Rumsey and Walcot, and names the particular Discourses particularly instancing in them, between him and my Lord of Shaftesbury, between him and Walcot, and between him and other Persons; yet he has not made use of any one Circumstance of Fact in this Case of the Defendant's now before you, that does justify what he hath said, save only that of Aaron Smith; not any one Circumstance of Fact. So that there is no more than the bare Saying of what my Lord Howard is pleased to deliver, no more than his Oath, nay, no more than his Observation and Inference of much of what passed in the Company of several Persons, without any concurring Circumstances in Fact to justify or confirm his Testimony. It might have been an easy Matter, if all that my Lord Howard says was true, that there was such a Meeting at Mr. Hampden's House by such and such Persons, to prove that such Persons, or some of them met there. But that there should be no Person to prove, that these Gentlemen, or any one of them, were there; nor any other Fact or Circumstance in the World, to go along with my Lord Howard to justify his Affirmation, is very wonderful, and may well make it doubtful that it should not be true. And the rather, Gentlemen, (if it be true, as my Lord Howard would have it) because there was a second Meeting of all these Persons at my Lord Russell's, which was so publick and open a Place, and yet no Man to concur or go along with my Lord Howard in any one thing; no particular Fact assigned to justify his Testimony as to this Meeting, is strange, if it be true.

So then, Gentlemen, there is no more than what my Lord Howard has sworn, without any one Circumstance to back it, to prove the Defendant guilty. My Lord, taking this upon the main of my Lord Howard's Evidence, it will be pretty hard too, upon the Nature of the Fact, that he is pleased to prove against this Gentleman, to make an Answer to it. And truly, I think it hard for you to believe it. Gentlemen, he would imagine, that there should be Men raised, Men armed, a Discourse of Money, and this done as he would have it, about the middle of January; and yet nothing at all done, though there appears no manner of Discovery of this very Contrivance, till about July. Neither is there any thing done in order to the raising of Men, the arming of Men, or the levying of Money all this while. So that there is no one Fact of any kind whatsoever, that goes along with what my Lord Howard has said.

My Lord, and Gentlemen, another Thing we would desire to observe, is this, and here we shall begin with what we have to say, as to our own Arguments and Circumstances, that we have to take off from the Testimony of my Lord Howard in this Case: In the first Place, it appears by the Evidence of my Lord Howard, that he was very deep in a Conspiracy against the Government, and to make a Disturbance in the Kingdom, long before this that he now speaks of against the Defendant, that is plain enough, for he tells you, that my Lord Shaftesbury and He, at Michaelmas, were contriving of Projects to overturn the Government, and raise a Rebellion. It appears plainly by his Evidence, that my Lord Shaftesbury, when he left his House, was resolved upon it, and my Lord Howard was very solicitous to carry on the same Design; nay, he was so active in it, that he tells you, that he did create Messages between my Lord of Shaftesbury, and the Duke of Monmouth, and would needs go by a false Insinuation of his own, to draw in the Duke of Monmouth, by telling his Grace, his Information he had from Walcot, and not saying he came from my Lord Shaftesbury, with whom he says he had been discoursing; but he would put it under some sort of Disguise, the better to prevail. So that it appears my Lord was very criminal, and guilty, in this Case. Why then, Gentlemen, my Lord being so highly criminal, and there being a Discovery of this Conspiracy by Keeling and Rumsey, and West, having made a more manifest Discovery, and this happening in July; Then it was high Time my Lord Howard might conceive for him to secure himself, and save one, he being thus Guilty, as he declares: It is but reasonable to conjecture, he then began to place his Security in a Pardon; and that there were no other Means to save his Life, and that the way to it, must be by some farther Discovery of a Conspiracy against his Majesty and the Government: And having since obtained a Pardon, it is agreeable, that whatsoever my Lord Howard has done in this Case, he has done for his own sake, to purchase his own Pardon for a Treason he was so deep in, and to out-do all the Witnesses that went before him, by fresh Testimony against the Defendant and others: This might incline him to go an Inch or two, or more, beyond the Discovery of Keeling, West, and Rumsey; to have but said the same Thing that was proved by three or four Witnesses before him, might not perhaps have availed him: May not the indifferent believe it in this Case, to be the Interest and Security of my Lord Howard, by these Means to merit his Pardon? May it not be believable, that what he hath said, he hath said only for his own sake, and that he has, by exposing this Gentleman, and the Blood of others, procured himself a Pardon?

L. C. J. What do you mean by that, Mr. Williams?

Mr. Williams. By being a Witness against the Defendant and others, he has procured his own Pardon.

L. C. J. That is a little harsh Expression.

Mr. Williams. My Lord, I explain myself thus.

L. C. J. 'Tis an harsh Word and too roundly expressed; you had need to explain yourself; 'tis a little too rank, as though the King's Pardon were to be procured by Blood.

Mr. Williams. My Lord, I intend nothing of harshness or amiss, but to speak according to my Instructions; and to make the best Observations I can, out of the Evidence of my Client: I will express myself as well as I can, that my Lord Howard being a Witness against Men in a Case of this high Nature; and there being other Witnesses before, and besides himself to the Discovery of the late Conspiracy against the Government, it concerned him to give an honest Evidence in the Case, or else he could not have any Expectation of his Pardon: For if he had done no more than what others had done before him, when there were three Witnesses besides, and they had got the Start in the Discovery, his Discovery had been in vain; and therefore he was concerned perhaps to strain, that he might make such a Discovery as might answer his End; and this will arise naturally, I suppose, out of what has happened in this Case: For it seems, though it was something long before he got his Pardon, now he has it. My Lord, another Thing is this, How far my Lord Howard will be credited in this Matter, we shall leave his Credit to you, Gentlemen, upon what we shall prove. For we shall make it out by Persons of great Honour, and Persons of great Integrity, that upon Discourse concerning this Conspiracy, my Lord Howard did declare, that he knew of no Persons that were guilty of having any Hand in it; he declared it upon his Honour, he declared it upon his Religion, and he used all the Affirmations that were possible for a Man to offer to make himself believed.

My Lord, it may be objected, as it has been sometimes, that that was to out-face the Conspiracy, and so stop the Prosecution of what he knew himself to be guilty of. But however, thus far we may make use of it for the Defendant, that if my Lord Howard would in the Face of Heaven, pawn his Honour, his Trust, his Conscience, and his Religion, to assert that which was not true, and under all those Vows and Engagements affirm an Untruth; a Man that would deal so, and speak an Untruth with that Solemnity, I think, is not a Person of the same Credit, as a Person of certain known Truth and Veracity. For if a Man will say one Thing one Time, and that with solemn Vows and Affirmations, and swear another Thing quite the contrary another Time, he does not stand so fair for Credit, I think, as he that always maintains, and avows the Truth. So far we may make use of it very safely, I think, as to my Lord's Credit.

My Lord, another Matter that we have to urge, is, that since the Trial of my Lord Russell, and since the Trial of Colonel Sidney, my Lord Howard has in Discourse owned, that my Lord Russell died innocent. If that be true, it will have a great Weight sure with you, Gentlemen, to discredit my Lord's Testimony: For then he hath contradicted what he hath sworn. For if my Lord swore, that my Lord Russell was Guilty, as all the World knows he did; and afterwards Soberly, and Publickly, shall have said he died Innocent; he has contradicted his own Evidence, and his own Oath; and sure is not to be believed as to what he swears now against the Defendant. My Lord, it did not rest there; but since the Trial of Colonel Sidney, it will be proved by Witnesses; that my Lord Howard did declare that Colonel Sidney had had Measure. This will be proved by Witnesses; and 'tis rather to be presumed, he meant hard Measure as to his own Testimony, which he was best knowing of, than of any thing else as to his Trial. Now, how this Person of great Honour can solve this, and how it can stand with his Oath, and his Honour; I will leave it to you, Gentlemen, to judge of it. My Lord, I have another Matter to say, that with me seems to have very great Weight: My Lord Howard, upon some Occasions has said, being in Discourse with a very great Intimate of his, and the Man being speaking of the World to come, speaking of Eternity, speaking of the Immortality of the Soul, speaking of the Rewards and Punishments of another Life; my Lord Howard should say to him, How long wilt thou persist in this Folly? How long wilt thou be so foolishly prevailed upon, as to believe the World was ever made, or will ever have an End? My Lord, if a Person be of that Opinion, (and a Man's Judgment in such Things will discover itself in his Words) how far the Testimony of a Man of that Persuasion shall influence a Jury when he stands single, when there is no fact to justify him, in Point of probable Circumstance, will be easily observable, and I must leave it to the Gentlemen of the Jury to consider.

My Lord, we have another Saying of my Lord Howard's, which we shall give you an Account of in the Proofs, and that was in relation to his Pardon. Being free in Discourse, as my Lord is a Man very liberal that way, and his Friend enquiring whether he had his Pardon: No, says he, no I cannot have it, till the Drudgery of Swearing be over. Truly 'tis a very odd Thing, that a Man should call that Drudgery, that is his Duty. To testify the Truth, is as much the Duty of every honest Man, as any thing else. Men have died for the Truth, and we look upon those as Martyrs, and the best of Martyrs that die for the Truth. Now, that this noble Lord, or that any Man should call this a Drudgery, which is so manifest a Duty, by giving a true Testimony to preserve the King's Life, and support the Government against the Contrivance and Conspiracies of evil Men, is but an odd Insinuation, and truly I think is rather to be taken in this Sense, as to my Lord, that he did strain a little to make his Discovery the more profitable to him; and so did say more (so far I may safely go) than any one else did say. And, my Lord, This is that that I would observe upon the first part of the Evidence.

As for that Part that concerns Aaron Smith, the Evidence given by Sheriff and Bell, I submit that to your Lordship, how far that can any way affect Mr. Hampden the Defendant. It is introduced to fortify the Testimony of my Lord Howard, and it is introduced by himself thus: That at their Meeting at Mr. Hampden's House, there was a Discourse of some Assistance to be had from Scotland; but says he, at the second Meeting at my Lord Russell's, then it came to a further Discourse, and Colonel Sidney did undertake to name a Person to send thither; and a Person was named; he does not say Mr. Hampden was concerned in it, or that Mr. Hampden named the Man, or any thing particular as to Mr. Hampden, more than that he was in the Company. Mr. Hampden had no Hand in the Undertaking, or sending him into Scotland; that was altogether the Part of Mr. Sidney, save this, this, that he says my Lord Ruffel writ the Letter that was to go by him. It does not appear Mr. Hampden was at all concerned in it, but only was there.

L. C. J. And consented to it. Mr. Williams. I would not strain any thing, my Lord, further than the Evidence is.

L. C. J. Nor do not misrepresent it. Mr. Williams. I design not any such Thing, my Lord, as to misrepresent it.

L. C. J. But you do though, for he swears it, every one of them consented. Mr. Williams. By Silence it must be then. For he does not say, that he said any thing.

He swears only Colonel Sidney undertook to manage it, to send a Person, and my Lord Ruffel to write the Letter.

L. C. J. And all the rest consented to it. Mr. Williams. What is meant by Consent, when nothing was said, I must leave to the Jury.

I must agree, the Lord Howard did swear, that my Client was in their Company, but how far he did, or did not consent, does not at all appear, and how far this will charge my Client, I must leave to you, Gentlemen.

But the Proof, as to this Matter, stands thus; that Aaron Smith was at Newcastle in February last, that he went publicly. Now, my Lord Howard says, that he went to agitate a Confederacy between the Malecontents of Scotland, and those in England.

Now it is strange, that a Man that was to agitate such a Concern, should go publicly with a Servant to Newcastle, so publicly as to be known again; and of his own accord tell them he was going to such a Place in Scotland.

And be it so in Fact, will any Man apply this to any thing was done before? (as my Lord Howard says about a Consultation to join in Rebellion.) Will any man think, that he should talk at that kind of Rate, if that were his Employment, and tell whether he were going? But I rely upon this, in Point of Evidence.

'Tis not proved yet, that Aaron Smith was in Scotland. That he came within six Miles of the Borders of Scotland, is proved; but it is not proved he was in Scotland, or did agitate any Conspiracy there; or did any thing more than go within six Miles of the Borders of Scotland.

But then they would press it further, and they say, that there were some Scottish Gentlemen, that in the Summer came here into England, and that they hid themselves when the Plot was discovered.

It does not appear my Client had any Conversation with these Scottish Gentlemen, or any of them, or was ever in their Company. 'Tis a very remote Inference to bring any thing of this to affect my Client in this high Charge.

My Lord, we shall add one Thing more to disprove that Part of the Indictment, that lays the Imputation of Turbulency and Sedition to the Charge of Mr. Hampden; and which also will shew the Improbability of his being concerned in any thing of this Nature.

We shall prove him to be a Person of a sober Conversation, of a retired Life, and studious Disposition; and as an Evidence for the Defendant, we shall prove, that he in October 1680, left England for his Health's sake, and went into France for the Recovery of his Health.

He continued there till about Michaelmas was Twelve-month, then he returned. 'Tis true, he continued in England from Michaelmas to the Time they speak of; but we shall make it plain, that in February, my Client, and my Lord Montague had adjusted Matters between themselves, to go the Beginning of Summer again into France, there to continue and abide some Time for their Healths.

Here is a strange kind of Imagination, that this Contrivance between my Lord Howard and my Lord Shaftesbury, that was going on before this Time, and that was disappointed, and my Lord Shaftesbury went away, and afterwards died in Holland, was taken up by my Client, and those other Persons, when my Client, as we shall prove, never intended to stay in England.

My Lord, he was a Parliament-man in both the last Parliaments, but appeared in neither of them, being all the while in France for the Recovery of his Health. We shall prove him to be one studiously inclined, that he lived a retired Life, and kept very little or no Company; and you will hear from Persons of very great Honour and Quality, that he is, as to his Person, and as to his Opinion; and then we shall submit it to you, Gentlemen of the Jury, whether you can believe him guilty of this he is charged with, which is your Issue. You are to try, whether he be Guilty, or Not Guilty, of the Crime charged in the Indictment.

Mr. Wallop. My Lord, and Gentlemen of the Jury, I desire to make one Observation before we call our Witnesses.

L. C. J. Pray do not take up our Time altogether in Speeches, but go on to your Evidence.

Mr. Wallop. I desire to observe but one Thing, my Lord.

L. C. J. Make your Observations at last, but spend not our Time in Speeches. I know you will expect to be heard at last, and so you shall, whatever you will say.

Mr. Williams. Call the Earl of Anglesey, the Lord of Clare, and Lord Paget, Mr. Ducas. [Who appearing was sworn.] Now we have him here we must begin with him, my Lord.

Mr. Ducas, pray what did you hear my Lord Howard say at any time concerning this Conspiracy, and who were concerned in it, and who were not?

Mr. Ducas. My Lord Howard came once to the House of Colonel Sidney, I believe it was about eight Days after the Imprisonment of Colonel Sidney; and when he was in the House, I asked him, What is the Matter, my Lord? He did answer me, he was told there was a Plot against the King and the Duke, and one general Infurrection to be made, and that Colonel Sidney sent a Man into Scotland, to which thing my Lord Howard swore, laying his Hand on his Breast, saying, God knows all Things, and God knows I know nothing of that; and I am sure if Colonel Sidney had known any thing, he would tell me; and I said, what is the Matter, my Lord? Are you afraid? And he made Answer to me, No honest Man is safe in his own House, I pray you lend me a Bed to lie in. And he asked me about the Goods of Colonel Sidney, because of the Plot and such Things, and he desired to have them removed to his House; and he said, rather than go to the Tower he would do any thing.

Mr. Williams. Speak again to the Jury that did not hear you, what said my Lord Howard to you?

Mr. Ducas. He said, rather than to be a Prisoner again he would do any thing.

Mr. Williams. Who to be a Prisoner again?—Mr. Ducas. My Lord Howard.

Mr. Att. Gen. What Things were spoken of?

Mr. Ducas. He said he would do any thing.

Mr. Williams. Were you speaking of the Conspiracy? Of the Plot?

Mr. Ducas. He spoke of the Plot, and said he knew nothing of it.

Mr. Williams. What did he say, Sir?

Mr. Ducas. He said to me and swore, he knew nothing of it, and called God to witness.

Mr. Williams. Pray, did he then say he would do any thing rather than go to the Tower, when you were talking of the Plot and Conspiracy?

Mr. Ducas. Yes, he would do any thing rather than be a Prisoner again.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray, what did he say?

Mr. Ducas. He raised up his Hands on high, and said, he knew nothing of the Plot, or of the Infurrection, or that Colonel Sidney had sent any Man into Scotland.

Mr. Williams. When was this?

Mr. Ducas. I believe it was 8 or 9 Days after the Imprisonment of Colonel Sidney.

Mr. Att. Gen. What Day of the Month, and what Month was it?

Mr. Ducas. He was Imprisoned about the End of June.

Lord Howard. My Lord, it would be necessary that I should make an Answer to this; and I know not whether I should make a particular Answer to every one; for here is a whole Set of Witnesses, I see.

L. C. J. No, let them alone. You must not interrupt them, they must go on with their Evidence; and when it is a fit Time for you to answer them, the Counsel for the King will call you.

Mr. Williams. Pray swear Mr. Howard. [Which was done.] Pray, Sir, will you please to acquaint my Lord and the Jury what you know of what my Lord Howard has said of the Plot, and who were concerned in it?

Mr. Howard. My Lord, what I have said is in the Paper of Mr. Sidney's Trial, and truly I can say no more than what I said there.

Mr. Williams. Pray speak out, Sir, and tell it again to this Jury.

Mr. Howard. I was told I spoke it very loud then.

L. C. J. Pray, Sir, speak as you please, we don't direct you in what Key you shall speak; speak in what Key you will.

Mr. Howard. Then if you will have me speak it, I will speak it as loud again. My Lord, is Mr. Hampden here?

L. C. J. Yes, there he is.

Mr. Howard. In the first Place I do not know Mr. Hampden, My Lord, I cannot promise to speak the very Words that I spoke the last time: I cannot make them so fit as one Tally fits another.

Mr. Att. Gen. Consider, Sir, you were not Sworn then, you are Sworn now, that is the Difference, and therefore pray consider of it.

Mr. Howard. My Lord, As near as I can, I will repeat the same Words again, I had little Acquaintance with my Lord Howard; but meeting him often at my Brother's House (and being he was extraordinary pleasant Company, I must needs say that he was so, and a Man of great Wit) and I coming from Whitehall, he asked me what News of the Plot? I told him there were some People that were in the Proclamation, or would be, and I named their Names. Says he, I know none of them except Rumbold, I think; and by chance I met him passing through the Old-Exchange, and he saluted me very kindly. After this my Lord Ruffel was taken, and when my Lord Howard heard that, says he, then we are all undone. And I very much fear it is a Sham Plot, since they have seized upon my Lord, and I doubt he is a lost Man. After that, I think, as near as I can remember—The next Thing was this—If you look upon the Book, you will see what I said there.

L. C. J. We are not to look upon the Book, Man. You must give your Evidence yourself. Mr. Howard, I hope you do not Swear by Book? Let the Truth come out in God's Name, whatever it be.

Mr. Williams. Ay, my Lord, we desire to have Truth come out.

L. C. J. Ay, whether it be of the one Side, or the other, God forbid but Truth should be spoken. Mr. Howard, go on.

Mr. Howard. Then, my Lord, Colonel Sidney was taken, and, says my Lord, I am extremely troubled for Colonel Sidney, for he is my very good Friend; said I, why are not you concerned for my Lord Ruffel? He is of your Blood, says he, he is a Man without Exceptions. There is no Man of such Honour as he; but I am concerned for Colonel Sidney, as that particular Man that has obliged me above all the World, but I never heard my Lord Howard name Mr. Hampden in all my Life.

Lord Howard. I'll give you Reason for it, my Lord, if you please, why I said so.

L. C. J. My Lord, this is Evidence for the Defendant. If the King's Counsel will call you afterwards to make Answer to any of these things, then is your time to speak. We will not let them interrupt you when you come to speak, nor must you interrupt them now. We are bound to hear both Sides, and so by the Grace of God we will do.

Lord Howard. My Lord, I desire both he and his Brother may stay in Court, for I have something to say to them.

Mr. Williams. Pray, what did you hear my Lord Howard say concerning the Plot?

Mr. Howard. He did deny it positively, and said, they acted nothing but what was Legal, and he said it 500 times over.

Mr. Williams. Did he deny it?—Mr. Howard. Yes, he did.

L. C. J. But when he said they acted nothing but legally, what did he mean? Was this Plot legal?

Mr. Howard. I had former Discourses with my Lord Howard at other times, and I asked him, My Lord, what tends all this to? Your going up into the City and making these Meetings? Says he, we intended nothing but what is legal. There is not one Man in the Company, that I know of, intends any thing else.

Mr. Williams. What was my Lord's Opinion of the Plot in June or July, or August?

Mr. Howard. He said he knew nothing of it, nor could he believe there was any such thing. When those Persons were named that were to kill the King, Lord bless me, said he, can there be such a thing in Nature? That any Men should be so wicked. But that there is one Man of Honour or Estate, or Conscience, that ever had any such Thought, it can never enter into my Head, I can never believe it.

Mr. Williams. When was this?

Mr. Howard. When Rumbold and those other People were put into the Proclamation.

Mr. Att. Gen. Mr. Howard, Then I will ask you your Opinion, whether in your Judgment, every Man that was in the Plot could not have said so much?

Mr.

Mr. Howard. I suppose every Man in the Plot would have defended himself as well as he could, but I cannot tell what way.

Mr. Thompson. Sir, Did he barely affirm it, or with Affirmations and Imprecations?

Mr. Howard. My Lord was not put upon his Oath before me.

Mr. Att. Gen. Mr. Howard, Don't you believe a great many that were concerned in this Plot would deny it?

Mr. Howard. I am to give my Opinion only for myself, not for other People.

L. C. J. Have you done with him?—Mr. Williams. Yes, my Lord.

L. C. J. Then go over, Sir.

Mr. Howard. My Lord, I am troubled with Fumes, and cannot well endure a Crowd, therefore I desire I may have leave to be gone.

L. C. J. You may go if you please.

Mr. Williams. Call Mr. Edward Howard. [But he did not appear.] Then swear my Lord of Clare and my Lord Paget. [Which was done.]

L. C. J. Well, What do you ask my Lord of Clare?

Mr. Williams. My Lord of Clare, Will your Lordship please to acquaint the Court and the Jury, what you heard my Lord Howard say concerning the late Conspiracy?

Earl of Clare. My Lord, Some Indisposition I have had of late, together with the great Rigour of the Season, has confined me to my House these six Weeks, so that I should not come here but upon this Summons of a Subpoena, which I thought I ought not to refuse. I suppose I need not repeat much of what was said at Col. Sidney's Trial.

L. C. J. My Lord, You must give what Evidence you have to give now.

Mr. Williams. My Lord, The Gentlemen of this Jury have not heard it, therefore you must say it all over again to them.

Earl of Clare. Sometime after Mr. Sidney was taken, my Lord Howard came to see me, and complaining of the Times, said, That all things were very sad and dangerous, and if ever he was questioned again, he would not Plead, but desire them only to count Noses, for the quickest Dispatch he thought was best: I replied, sure his Lordship was in jest. He said, No, he was in earnest, for he was confident if he came to Trial, they would have his Life, let him appear never so innocent. I said, I hoped not so, it was only his Lordship's Fear, and because of that, I thought it might be presumed he would venture much, rather than be tried. And discoursing of the late Preamble of Armagh's Prophecy; he said, for his part, he thought the Persecution was already begun, and he did believe it would be very sharp, but withal, he hoped it would be but short; and then he began to wish himself beyond Sea till the Troubles were over; and in compliance with his Lordship I did wish so too. But as to Sidney, He did with great Affirmations very much assert his Innocency. He said, he thought he was not guilty of any of the things laid to his Charge; and spoke with large Encomiums in his Praise, as he had Obligation to do, and seemed to bemoan his Misfortunes; which I said I had then reason to believe he was real in, for I believe never any Man was more engaged to another than he to Colonel Sidney. I told him there was a Discourse of some Writings of Mr. Sidney's that were taken; he said he was confident they would make nothing of any Writing of his; I told him, I supposed he meant, legally they could not do it. This was the most he said; as to Mr. Hampden, he mentioned nothing that I know of.

Mr. Williams. Did he seem to declare any Opinion about the Plot or Conspiracy in general, that there was any such thing or not?

Earl of Clare. I do not remember it.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord of Clare, Did you never hear my Lord Howard before this complain of the Government, that it was amiss, and was to be rectified?

Earl of Clare. Yes, he often did complain. Every body knows my Lord's way of Discourse.

Lord Howard. Pray, will you ask him, if my Lord of Clare used to fall out with me upon those Discourses.

Earl of Clare. My Lord was always good Company.

Mr. Att. Gen. You mean à propos, my Lord.

Earl of Clare. I understand what you mean by à propos, you are a learned Man, I know.

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lord of Clare, if I apprehend your Lordship aright, my Lord Howard was discoursing of the Preamble of Armagh's Prophecy, and said he thought the Persecution was already begun, and would be sharp, though he hoped it would be short, and he wished himself beyond Sea till the Troubles were over, and your Lordship wished yourself so too?

Earl of Clare. No; I said in compliance with his Lordship, since he wished himself beyond Sea till the Troubles were over, I wished he were there too.

L. C. J. But I perceive all these Discourses concerning the Government are reckoned but Jest and Matter of Laughter, but 'tis a very rank way of jesting, I assure you.

Mr. Williams. My Lord, We call our Witnesses seriously, they are the King's Counsel that jest.

Mr. Att. Gen. Was this before my Lord Howard was taken?

Earl of Clare. Yes, but after Mr. Sidney was taken.

L. C. J. Well, who do you call next?

Mr. Williams. My Lord Paget, Pray what have you heard my Lord Howard say concerning the Plot, and when?

Lord Paget. My Lord sits there, and I believe he may remember it was about the 7th of July, the Saturday before my Lord went into the Country, to the best of my Memory, which was, I take it, the 9th of July: upon Saturday the 7th at Night my Lord came to see me; I told him I was glad to see him Abroad, and not concerned in the Disorders that were then so general; my Lord told me he had been wished Joy by several, and he took it ill, because it looked as if he were guilty. 'Tis true, my Lord was a Man of great Finesse and Readiness in Discourse, and came easily into all Company; my Lord said that was true, but he had so carefully behaved himself, but he was sure they could not touch him with any thing, nor did he know any thing of any body else that he could charge them withal.

Mr. Williams. When was this my Lord?

Lord Paget. This was the 7th of July.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray, good my Lord, Why did you joy my Lord Howard? Had you any Reason to mistrust my Lord?

Lord Paget. No other Reason than because I knew he was a Man of great Freedom in Discourse, and might be concerned upon that Account.

Mr. Att. Gen. And he would frequently discourse against the Government I suppose?

Lord Paget. No, I never heard my Lord discourse against the Government in my Life.

Mr. Williams. Swear Dr. Burnet. [Which was done.] Pray will you, Doctor, acquaint the Court, what you have heard my Lord Howard say concerning the late Plot, and when?

Dr. Burnet. My Lord Howard came to see me the Day after the Discovery of the Plot broke out, Thursday I think it was, on Wednesday it began to be talked of. The thing was little understood then, but in general a Plot was discovered, and my Lord, with a great many Protestations, lifting up his Hands and Eyes to Heaven, protested he knew of none, and believed there was none, and spake of the whole thing as a Contrivance.

Mr. Williams. This was the Day after the Discovery broke out?

Dr. Burnet. Yes, the Day after that I first heard of it.

Mr. Williams. Had you any other Discourse with my Lord about it?

Dr. Burnet. I had not seen my Lord before of some Months. And then he spake a great deal to me. He told me he had been in Essex, and after that he went to the Bath, and went so early and came away before the Company came, because he would avoid all Danger. And he expressed great Apprehensions of Fear of Sham-Plots, and spake of False Witnesses and former Designs of that Nature. The Truth of it was, one had possessed me with a Belief of the Thing, it being then but a secret, but he strove to dispossess me of that Belief, and his whole Discourse ran upon that for an whole Hour, and expressed, as I said, great Fear of some Sham-Contrivance, and spake much of False Witnesses, wishing that he were beyond Sea.

L. C. J. What, he spake as if there were like to be great Heats and Stirs, I suppose?

Dr. Burnet. No, the Talk was about the Discovery, which he said he believed was a Contrivance.

Mr. Williams. Did my Lord Howard use to come to you sometimes?

Dr. Burnet. Yes, he used to come frequently to see me.

Mr. Att. Gen. Dr. Burnet, Pray let me ask you one Question; you speak of solemn Declarations and Protestations made by my Lord Howard, what gave the occasion to such a Solemnity?

Dr. Burnet. I will tell you the occasion truly, tho' it was never asked me before. It was thus: I being possessed with the Belief of the thing by one that assured me it was true, and would soon appear to be so, I argued upon that Belief to convince my Lord Howard, that it was true; and he argued a great deal to dispossess me of that Belief. And I said, if there be any such thing, I pray God forgive them that are concerned, but certainly it is one of the monstrouslest ill things that ever was done; for hereby they have done all that could be done to ruin the Protestant Religion. He was smoking a Pipe of Tobacco, and he laid down his Pipe, and lifted up his Hands and Eyes to Heaven, and protested to me, he neither knew of any such thing, nor believed it, but it was all a Contrivance.

Mr. Att. Gen. By his Discourse, you possibly might understand what he meant; did he mean being privy to the Murder of the King, or the Raising of Rebellion?

Dr. Burnet. There was not a Word then of the Assassination, but it was all of the Plot in general.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did he make no distinction?

Dr. Burnet. We talked of nothing but Plot in general, For the Particulars were not then known. It was only about the general Notion of a Plot.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray, What was the reason you had to believe it?

Dr. Burnet. There was a Gentleman from Whitehall that came to see me, and he did assure me it was true, as being one that had it from a Privy Counsellor. This was on the Wednesday, when the Council sat long about it; and nothing of Particulars was then let out, but only a Discourse in general of such a thing, and he said it would be found to be a certain Truth.

Mr. Att. Gen. But, Doctor, did not you a little wonder at the Carriage of my Lord Howard? That a Man that was not accused, that you heard of, should make such solemn Protestations?

Dr. Burnet. My Lord, he said just in this manner as I have told you, when I said, Pray God forgive them, if any have been concerned in such a thing; he laid down his Pipe, and lifted up his Hands and Eyes. Whether he thought I suspected him, or no, I can't tell, he best knows his own Thoughts.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did he say a Word of Mr. Hampden?

Dr. Burnet. No, there was not any particular Person named.

Mr. Recorder. Doctor, he would not make you his Confessor.

Dr. Burnet. His whole Hour's Discourse was to dispossess me of the Opinion and Belief I had entertained of the Plot.

Mr. Just. Holloway. This was about July, you say?

Dr. Burnet. I cannot remember the very Day of the Month, I believe it was the latter end of June, but I am sure it was before any body was committed, that we heard of.

Mr. Recorder. Dr. Burnet, you say you did believe there was a Plot then?

Dr. Burnet. Yes, I did so, and he labour'd to dispossess me of that Belief.

Mr. Recorder. Pray do you believe it now?

Mr. Williams. What a Question is that, Mr. Serjeant?

Dr. Burnet. I make no Doubt of it, Sir, as to the Assassination.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord Newport, Why do you lift up your Hands? You don't do well; for it is a very proper Question.

L. C. J. Well, call your next Witness, Gentlemen.

Mr. Thompson. Swear Mr. Gisborne. [Which was done.]

Mr. Williams. Pray, Sir, will you acquaint the Court and the Jury, what you have heard my Lord Howard say about the late Conspiracy?

Mr. Gisborne. My Lord only said he knew nothing of the Plot; that is all I can say.

Mr. Williams. When was this?

Mr. Gisborne. The Saturday before he was taken into Custody; then it was that your Honour did say so, my Lord.

Mr. Att. Gen. Ay, and a too more, I believe, would say so, that might be concerned in it for all that.

Mr. Williams. Swear Mr. Blake. [Which was done.] Pray acquaint my Lord and the Jury, what Discourse you had with my Lord Howard about his Pardon, and what he said to you?

Mr. Blake.

Mr. Blake. My Lord, about the Month of October last my Lord Howard sent me to know how I did, and desired me to come and make him a Visit. The next Day I went and waited upon my Lord at his Lodgings at Whitehall, and after the Compliments passed, my Lord began a Discourse of the Plot, and I told him, That I heard none of the Witnesses had their Pardons, but only Keeling, the first Discoverer. My Lord told me no, but he had a Warrant for his Pardon, and with that he pluck'd it out and shew'd it me, and I read it. And then I told him I thought it was of no Avail, without he had his Pardon actually under his Seal; he said no, but he had their Word and Honour: But, said he, when I first received the Warrant, they said I should not meddle in it till I heard from them again, which I have not yet; and I ascribe it to no other Reason but only this, That I must not have it till the Drudgery of Swearing is over.

Mr. Williams. When was this?

Mr. Blake. In October last some time. So I then took my Leave of my Lord, and my Lord desir'd me to come and see him at Night about six o'clock in the Evening, for he had a great many come to him, but then he should be at Leisure, and had many Things to say to me.

Mr. Att. Gen. At that Time did my Lord express himself as discontented, and that it was irksome to him to be brought as a Witness?

Mr. Blake. He only said those Words that I have told you, and looked up and turned up his Eyes towards Heaven when he said so.

Mr. Williams. Pray, where is Mr. Benjamin Mercer? Swear him.

[Who was sworn.]

L. C. J. What do you ask him?

Mr. Williams. We bring him to prove that my Lord Anglesey was served with a Subpoena, but is so ill of the Gout he can't come.

L. C. J. If that be all, there is no Question of it, but that he was subpoena'd.

Mr. Williams. If your Lordship please, we will prove in what Condition my Lord Anglesey is, and then we hope your Lordship will give us Leave to prove what my Lord has said concerning my Lord Howard's Discourses with him.

L. C. J. No certainly, Mr. Williams, and I am sure you ask it not as expecting it should be granted.

Mr. Williams. I lay it before your Lordship and the Court.

L. C. J. Ay, You lay it before us, but you are a Lawyer, do you yourself think fit it should be done?

Mr. Williams. My Lord, I must submit it to you.

L. C. J. Come, Will you consent that what the Duke of Monmouth has said, shall be given in Evidence, and then I presume the King's Counsel will consent to your Request?

Mr. Williams. I consent? Here is my Client, my Lord, in Court, I can consent to nothing.

L. C. J. But if so be there be Leave given on one Side to tell what another Person has said, why should it not be consented to on the other Side, that it be proved what a third Person that is absent has said for them?

Mr. Recorder. Ay, Will you consent that we prove what the Duke of Monmouth has said?

Mr. Williams. We don't know what the Duke of Monmouth has said.

L. C. J. But you do know 'tis not Evidence, nor fit to be granted what you ask.

Mr. Jones. You know that 'tis not for your Purpose what he has said.

Mr. Williams. My Lord, We must go according to our Instructions.

L. C. J. But you know the Law, why should you offer any such thing? Your offering it will make the Lay gens that know not the Law think that the Court puts Hardships upon People, in denying things which you that understand the Law know can't be granted.

Mr. Williams. I do not press it, my Lord, but leave it with you.

L. C. J. Why do you spend our time in urging things that are nothing to the purpose, and cannot be allowed?

Mr. Williams. Now, my Lord, We will go on to another Part of our Defence, and that is, to call Witnesses to the Reputation of Mr. Hampden, and his Behaviour, to satisfy you, that he cannot be such a Person as the Indictment says, and as he must be if it be true what this Gentleman, my Lord Howard, has sworn.

Mr. Thompson. We will first examine my Lord Paget. [Who stood up.]

Mr. Williams. My Lord, We ask you to that Question. Have you known this Gentleman Mr. Hampden, and what sort of a Man is he?

Lord Paget. I have good reason to know him. I have known him a great while, and have always believed him an honest and a prudent Man, a Man of Honour, and Virtue, and Integrity, my Lord; and I have had no Reason to have other Opinion of him. I know he has been always, ever since he came abroad into the World, a Man that hath loved his Study, and Books, and a contemplative Life. And therefore I should not be apt to believe, That he could apply himself to a Thing so contrary to his own Nature, and to that Way that he delighted in, and had always hitherto applied himself unto, I mean to engage in a Design of so much Malice and Wickedness.

Mr. Williams. My Lord, You have had a long Conversation with the Knowledge of Mr. Hampden, you say. What say you as to his Disposition; because this Indictment says he is a Person of a turbulent, factious, seditious Spirit?

Lord Paget. I have always known him a quiet peaceable Man, not meddling in Business, very friendly, free from all Turbulency, not of much Acquaintance, nor desirous to make much.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray, my Lord Paget, upon the same Oath you have taken, have you not at any Time heard him express Dissatisfaction as to the Male-administration of the Government?

Lord Paget. No, Never to me in the least.

Mr. Att. Gen. Not at the Time of the last Westminster Parliament?

Lord Paget. No, I never heard him then, nor at any Time else.

Mr. Williams. Mr. Hampden was then in France, and not in that Parliament, though he was a Member. Where is Mr. Pelham?

L. C. J. Here he is. He sits down here. [Pointing to the Table.] What would you ask him?

[He was sworn.]

Mr. Williams. Sir, will you please to acquaint the Court, what Acquaintance you have had with Mr. Hampden, and how long? And what you know of him?

L. C. J. You hear the Question, Sir, how long have you been acquainted with Mr. Hampden?

VOL. III.

Mr. Pelham. I have been acquainted with Mr. Hampden about five or six Years living near him, and all that I could observe from him was, that he was a Man much addicted to his Studies, kept much at home, and I never observed that he had much Acquaintance; but as to the Business before you, I know nothing of it, nor ever heard him speak any thing relating to it.

Mr. Williams. As to his Spirit and Disposition, is he a turbulent Man?

Mr. Pelham. No, I never found him any thing like it. We never talked together of Matters of that Nature.

Mr. Att. Gen. Were you ever in his Company at any time when he discoursed about Government?

Mr. Pelham. No, I was never with him at any time when he discoursed of any such thing.

Mr. Williams. Sir Henry Hobart.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, we oppose his being a Witness. He is one of his Bail.

Mr. Williams. That was upon the Habeas Corpus Act, not upon this Indictment.

Mr. Att. Gen. If he be Bail for the Defendant, my Lord, he cannot be a Witness.

Mr. Williams. I appeal to the Rule of Court, whether he was not Bail upon the Habeas Corpus Act only?

Mr. Att. Gen. Appeal where you will, the Bail cannot be a Witness.

Mr. Williams. We moved for an Habeas Corpus the Beginning of last Term upon the late Act for Habeas Corpus's. And then at the last Day of the Term upon Habeas Corpus he was brought up thither, and was bailed upon that Writ.

Mr. Att. Gen. Are not you one of the Bail, Sir Henry Hobart?

Sir Hen. Hobart. I was one of his Bail, I think it was for his Appearance.

L. C. J. If he be one of his Bail that he shall appear in this Court the first Day of this Term; and so from Day to Day, till he shall be discharged, and remains under that Recognizance, then in any Case against him he cannot be a Witness for him.

Mr. Att. Gen. But they mistake the Matter; he was then charged with this Indictment: He then pleaded to it, and was bailed to answer the Indictment; and surely in that Case he can never be a Witness.

L. C. J. That is certainly very true; and you know the Law so well; Mr. Williams, that I wonder you will insist of it; in every ordinary Case, it is every Day's Practice to deny the Bail to be Witnesses.

Mr. Att. Gen. Here is the Person principal, will they render him in Custody?

L. C. J. Ay, what say you, will you render him in Custody? Then we will discharge the Bail.

Mr. Williams. My Lord, I will tell you what we will do.

L. C. J. Tell me what you will do! Answer my Question, Will you render him in Custody?

Mr. Will. We will change the Bail, my Lord, and find some other sufficient Person to stand in Sir Henry Hobart's Place, rather than lose our Witnesses.

L. C. J. With all my Heart.

Mr. Williams. Here is Mr. Ashurst, my Lord, a Gentleman of very good Value.

L. C. J. But you must render him first, and change the whole Bail. They must enter into new Recognizances.

Mr. Williams. I can't tell whether we can do that so very well, because the others, I am afraid, are not all here. He is a mighty material Witness, I am sure.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, Mr. Williams says he is a material Witness, let him be sworn, I am so fair, I'll consent to it: Let us hear what he can say. [Which was done.]

Mr. Williams. We thank you, Mr. Attorney. I'm afraid you won't live long, you are so good-natur'd.

L. C. J. But you are like to live for your Good-nature, Mr. Williams.

Mr. Thompson. Sir Henry Hobart, How long have you been acquainted with this Gentleman, Mr. Hampden?

Sir H. Hobart. I have known him any time these ten Years.

Mr. Williams. How has he been, Sir, as to his Disposition and Spirit? Did you ever find him to be of a turbulent Temper?

Sir H. Hobart. Very far from it always.

Mr. Williams. Have you had any intimate Conversation with him?

Sir H. Hobart. I have known him all along, I say, these ten Years, but of late I have had more Converse with him some few Years in Travel.

Mr. Williams. Had you much Conversation, Sir?

Sir H. Hobart. I was with him continually at Paris, and abroad.

Mr. Williams. What say you as to his Loyalty and Principles? Was he a factious, seditious Person?

Sir H. Hobart. Sir, he always expressed a great Esteem for the Government, and great Respect and Duty to the King.

Mr. Will. Pray, Sir, when went Mr. Hampden abroad to go into France?

Sir H. Hobart. He went into France for his Health about November, (80.) I think it was.

Mr. Williams. How long did he continue abroad, Sir Henry?

Sir H. Hobart. I found him in Paris the May after.

Mr. Williams. How long did you tarry there, Sir, yourself?

Sir H. Hobart. I went from Paris in June, and came back again to Paris about October or November, the same Year, and I found him in France still.

Mr. Williams. And when do you take it he returned into England?

Sir H. Hobart. I was with him till he came over, which was about September (82.) I think.

Mr. Thompson. What do you know, Sir, of his Intentions to go again beyond Sea?

Sir H. Hobart. When, Sir, do you mean?

Mr. Thompson. Since that time he came over, you say in September (82.)

Sir H. Hobart. He told me of it often, I think it was about March, more particularly once at his own House.

Mr. Thompson. What March, Sir?—Sir H. Hobart. March (83).

Mr. Thompson. That is last March.

Sir H. Hobart. Yes, last March, he talked of it several times, particularly once I went about some Business of my own, and then he discoursed a great deal of his going over with my Lord Mountague that now is; for he told me his Health was not yet established, for he came over out of an hot Country in Autumn, and had been all the Winter in this colder Country, and the Air he found had impaired his Health again. And it was not not only what he told me, but I had a Letter from a Friend of mine in France, to whom I had sent to desire him to come over; but he writ me Word, no; Mr. Hampden was coming over again, and he would not come back again yet.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did he tell you when he intended to go over, Sir Henry?

Sir H. Hobart. As soon as Mr. Mountague, my Lord Mountague that now is, could get ready, who was to carry his Lady over with him.

Mr. Williams. Sir, do you know of any Preparation made by Mr. Hampden for it?

Sir H. Hobart. He had resolved to take his Lady with him, because Mr. Mountague's Lady went, and so I believe did prepare accordingly.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did Mr. Mountague go over?

Sir H. Hobart. He did not go then, but since he is gone.

Mr. Att. Gen. Were you in France then at this Time?

Sir H. Hobart. This was in England, at his own House.

Mr. Williams. Pray, Sir, what is his Disposition?

Sir H. Hobart. He was always inclined to a studious Life, and kept very little Company.

Mr. Att. Gen. Was this in March, 83?

Sir H. Hobart. Yes, he came over in September before. I always observed him to be of a retired Temper.

Mr. Att. Gen. You say in 1680 he went into France, and (82) he came over again?—Sir H. Hobart. Yes.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray, Sir Henry, since you conversed so much with him, have you heard him since the last Parliament at Westminster, or at any time have you been by when he hath discoursed his Opinion about Government?

Sir H. Hobart. Truly, Sir, I don't take myself to be capable of discoursing with him about any such Matters.

Mr. Att. Gen. Have you heard him at any time complain of the Maledministration of the Government?—Sir H. Hobart. No, Sir.

Mr. Att. Gen. Have you never heard any such Thing from him?

Sir H. Hobart. No, never.

Mr. Williams. Swear Dr. Lupee—My Lord, we must desire an Interpreter, for the Doctor speaks French only.

L. C. J. Swear an Interpreter.

Mr. Williams. Dr. Burnet, or if he be gone, call Sir Henry Hobart again. We must beg the Favour of you, Sir Henry, to be an interpreter, you understand the French Tongue very well.

Sir H. Hobart. I will do it with all my Heart, Sir, as well as I can.

L. C. J. Swear him.

Then the Doctor was sworn, and the Oath repeated to him by Sir Henry Hobart in French.

Crier. You shall well and truly interpret between the Court and the Witness, and the Witness and the Court, according to the best of your Skill and Knowledge: So help you God.

Mr. Thompson. Sir Henry, will you please to repeat what Questions we shall ask, and what Answers he makes?

Sir H. Hobart. Yes, Sir, as well as I can, I will.

Mr. Williams. Pray, Sir, ask the Doctor this Question, If he be acquainted with Mr. Hampden?

Sir H. Hobart. Yes, he says very well. He lived near two Years with him.

Mr. Thompson. How long is it since?

Sir H. Hobart. Four Years since, he says.

Mr. Williams. Pray, in that time, What was his Disposition? Was he a seditious and turbulent Man? Or was he a studious retired Man, or what?

Sir H. Hobart. He says the two Years he lived with Mr. Hampden, he kept him Company in his Studies, and all that time he found he had no other Inclinations but for Study and Knowledge, and his Inclinations were very virtuous. He always observed in his Discourse a great Submission and Respect that he had for the Laws of his Nation, and his Prince, and to that Degree he was a faithful Subject to the King; that once he told him, in discoursing with him of the late Popish Plot, that he was ready to sacrifice his Life and Fortune for the King's Service.

Mr. Thompson. Ask him what Discourse he had with him of the Plot since it brake out.

L. C. J. Will that be any Evidence do you think, Mr. Thompson? Will Mr. Hampden's Declaration be any Evidence, he being a Person accused? Do you think he would tell the Doctor, or any body else that he was guilty, when he was like to be questioned? That would have been a wife Business indeed. You say he was a very studious Man, and a learned Man, truly if he had done that, he had bestowed his Time in Learning to very good Purpose.

Mr. Williams. My Lord, That that we would ask him is this: This Person, the Doctor, being discoursing with Mr. Hampden upon the Discovery of the late Conspiracy, and of the dangerousness of the time, he would have advised Mr. Hampden to have gone; no, he said, he would not, for he was an innocent Man, and would not stir.

L. C. J. Well, ask him what you will, but his Declaration of his own Innocence cannot be taken for Evidence.

Sir H. Hobart. He says, since this Plot was discovered, he was going one Day to visit Mr. Hampden, and going through Long-Acre, he met a French Minister, a Savoyard Minister—But, my Lord, he speaks so fast and goes on with so much at a time, that I cannot remember it all.

Mr. Williams. Well, what said that Minister to him?

Sir H. Hobart. He says this Minister asked him if Mr. Hampden was not concerned in the Plot, and upon that he went and told him what the Minister had said to him—He says, he told Mr. Hampden, that the Duke of Monmouth, and my Lord Grey were hid—He says, upon that Mr. Hampden said to him, I will never fly, nor conceal myself, for my Conscience reproaches me in nothing.

L. C. J. Ask him why does he think the French Minister, the Savoyard, as he calls him, should ask whether Mr. Hampden were in the Plot?

Sir H. Hobart. He says, Mr. Hampden said he would rather die innocent than fly with the imputation of Guilt upon him.

L. C. J. But ask him the Question I put, why should that Savoyard Parion say so? What reason had he to think Mr. Hampden was in the Plot?

Sir H. Hobart. He says the Minister did ask him, but he can't tell what Reason he had to think so.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray, Sir Henry, ask him this Question; how long ago it was since he left him?—Sir H. Hobart. Four Years, he says.

Mr. At. Gen. Where was it, in England or France?

Sir H. Hobart. Whilst he lived in Bloomsbury, he says.

Mr. Williams. Call Dr. Needham and Monsieur Justell. [Who appeared.] And Monsieur Justell was sworn. Pray Sir H. Hobart, will you ask Monsieur Justell, who speaks French too, if he know any thing of Mr. Hampden's Resolution to travel with Mr. Mountague into France?

Sir H. Hobart. He says, Yes. He did tell him he was going into France, and he offered to carry some Books for him along with him.

Mr. Williams. What Company was he to go in, and what time?

Sir H. Hobart. He says, Sir, he can't be exact to the Month when Mr. Hampden spake of going over, but he says, it was a great while before this Plot came to be discovered.

Mr. Williams. Was it some Months before?

Sir H. Hobart. It was a Month before it was known, he says.

Mr. Williams. In what Company was he to go?

Sir H. Hobart. He said he was to go with Mr. Mountague.

Mr. Conyers. Pray, Sir, will you ask him, was he employ'd to get any French Servants to be with him?—Sir H. Hobart. Yes, he says.

L. C. J. Ay, but what was the Question? For there is such a Crowd of People before the Counsel, that the Court cannot hear Mr. Conyers's Question.

Mr. Conyers. My Lord, I asked him, whether he was employed to get any French Servants to be with Mr. Hampden.

Sir H. Hobart. Yes, he says.

L. C. J. Well there is Dr. Needham, what do you ask him?

Then Doctor Needham was sworn.

Mr. Williams. We call Dr. Needham for this Purpose, my Lord, to prove that these Gentlemen that are accused, Mr. Hampden, and my Lord of Essex, and the others, had very little Esteem, and mean Opinion of my Lord Howard. And how one, they so little esteemed, should be let into so great a Secret, will be very strange to imagine. Dr. Needham, Pray, what can you say of any of these Gentlemen's Opinions of my Lord Howard? What Opinion had my Lord of Essex of him?

L. C. J. Is my Lord of Essex now before us? What is that to this Case, Mr. Williams? Let my Lord of Essex have what Opinion he would of him; how does that concern the Defendant?

Mr. Williams. I tell you why I offer it, my Lord—

L. C. J. But pray, offer what is Evidence, and keep to the Business before you.

Mr. Williams. Falsus in uno, falsus in omnibus. If we can prove that what he hath said of my Lord of Essex is false, he is not to be believed against the Defendant.

Mr. Att. Gen. Ay, but upon the Evidence of my Lord Howard, all the rest were convicted.

Mr. Williams. I offer it only upon what is here to Day before you. He says, my Client, and my Lord of Essex were confederate with him upon such a Design. Now if my Lord of Essex was not there, then he is false in that, and that he was not, we offer this as Evidence—

L. C. J. But 'tis not a proper Evidence in this Case.

Mr. Williams. 'Tis a sort of Evidence—

L. C. J. Ay, 'tis a sort of Evidence, but 'tis not to be allowed. If you will prove Mr. Hampden's Opinion, you may, but you must not for him bring Proof of what my Lord of Essex, a third Person, thought of my Lord Howard.

Mr. Williams. I only offer it thus—

L. C. J. Offer what is Evidence, Man! You are a Practiser, and know what is Evidence, but you have offered two or three things to Day, that I know you do at the same time know is not Evidence, and I speak it that it may not be thought we deny you, or your Client any thing that is according to the course of Law. You that know the Law, know 'tis so as we say. Mr. Attorney has gratified you in waving three or four Things already, but nothing will satisfy, unless we break the course of other Trials.

Mr. Williams. My Lord, What I take not to be Evidence I do not offer, and where the Court over-rules me, I have not insisted upon it.

L. C. J. No?

Mr. Williams. No, my Lord.

L. C. J. But you would have insisted upon it, if Mr. Attorney would not have been so easy as to consent, and the Court would have let you. Pray keep to the Business, and the Methods of Law; you know the Law very well.

Mr. Williams. My Lord, I humbly apprehend this may be Evidence, and I lay it before you. My Lord Howard has proved that my Lord of Essex and Five more, of which Mr. Hampden was one, met and consulted about such Matters. We may, I hope, be admitted to prove, That my Lord of Essex was not there; for if we can take off his positive Proof, as to any one of the Circumstances, we take off from the Truth of the Fact. If all the Persons were not there; then my Lord Howard is mistaken in that, and accordingly must not be believed in the rest; therefore, my Lord, I press it no otherwise: He hath proved these six Persons were there. I offer this as some Evidence, That it is unlikely it should be so, because my Lord of Essex had so little Opinion of my Lord Howard, that he would never consult with him about any matter.

L. C. J. Then certainly my Lord Howard is to be believed, to all Intents and Purposes, for here is a Record of the Conviction of my Lord Russell, and of Colonel Sidney, and all upon the Testimony of this Gentleman, my Lord Howard; and is not that more to support his Credit, than a flying Report of a third Person's Opinion of him. And yet after all we say, 'tis no Evidence against Mr. Hampden, and has been waved by Mr. Attorney.

Mr. Williams. Then I will not press it, my Lord.

Mr. Just. With. It is no Evidence, certainly, Mr. Williams.

L. C. J. It seems my Lord Essex had such an Opinion of my Lord Howard's Evidence, That he thought fit to cut his own Throat, rather than abide the Trial.

Mr. Williams. Call Mr. Murray.

L. C. J. Suppose my Lord of Essex had said, That he was out of the Plot, and Mr. Hampden, was in, would that have been good Evidence against Mr. Hampden, do you think? Pray mind what is the Business before you?

Mr. Williams. Swear Mr. Murray.

L. C. J. Well, what do you ask this Man?

Mr.

Mr. Williams. My Lord, we call him as to what I opened of my Lord Howard's Opinion of the World to come, and Rewards and Punishments there.

L. C. J. Mr. Williams, Pray take notice of this: Private Discourses that People can't come to make Answer unto, because they can't imagine to have them objected, are a very odd sort of Evidence.

Mr. Williams. Therefore I opened it warily and tenderly; my Lord, the Witnesses will tell you the Story better than I.

L. C. J. I cannot tell what Mr. Williams has said, or I have said in heat of Talk or Vanity. God knows how often all of us have taken the great Name of God in vain: Or have said more than becomes us, and talked of Things we should not do.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, how can my Lord Howard be prepared to give any Answer to this?

L. Howard. My Lord, this presses hard upon my Reputation, my Lord. I profess before God I do not know this Fellow, I never saw him in my Life before as I know: But a Company of impudent Fellows take the liberty of saying what they please.

L. C. J. To rake into the whole course of a Man's Life is very hard.

L. Howard. I would fain have these Fellows dare to say this any where else of me.

Mr. Williams. Well, my Lord, we will wave it.

L. C. J. They do not think it a fit Thing to press it.

L. Howard. But, my Lord, it concerns me in my Reputation; who is this Rascal they bring here? God's Life, who is he?

L. C. J. We must be tender of Men's Reputation, and not let every Thing come as Evidence when 'tis not fit to be Evidence, to put Slurs and Scandals upon Men that they can't be prepared to wipe off. Is he convicted of any Crime? If he is, you say something, shew the Record of it.

Mr. Just. Withins. Mr. Williams. You know the Case adjudged lately in this Court, a Person was indicted of Forgery, we would not let them give Evidence of any other Forgeries, but that for which he was indicted, because we would not suffer any raking into Men's Course of Life, to pick up Evidence that they can't be prepared to answer to.

Mr. Williams. We have that Respect for my Lord's Honour too, as not to press it, only we had it in our Briefs, and we must go according to our Instructions.

L. Howard. I desire to know who that Rascal is? What is he? Where does he live? I will make him an Example.

L. C. J. Pray compose yourself, my Lord, there is nothing of this pressed.

L. Howard. To say I am an Atheist, my Lord? What can be a greater Reflection?

L. C. J. He has not told us any such thing as yet. And we will take care that nothing shall be offered but what is fitting.

L. Howard. I vow to God, my Lord, I do not know the Man.

L. C. J. My Lord, do you think that every thing that a Man speaks at the Bar for his Client, and his Fee, is therefore to be believed, because he said it? No, the Jury are to take nothing here for Evidence to guide them of what the Counsel say, but what is approved. They are to judge secundum allegata & probata, that is their Duty.

L. Howard. Does that Fellow look like a Man of that Figure, that I should say any thing, or have any Conversation with him?

L. C. J. My Lord, I don't know what he is. Go on, Gentlemen.

Mr. Williams. My Lord, we have done with our Evidence. If Mr. Attorney will leave it here, we will.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, we won't mistrust the Evidence, nor the Court, Mr. Hampden. My Lord, I desire to speak a Word myself, if you please.

L. C. J. Ay, in God's Name. You, or your Counsel, I will hear all you will say, and as long as you will speak, provided you speak within the Bounds of Decency.

Mr. Williams. My Lord, I think it best to leave it to the Court: We hope we make it clear that our Client is innocent.

L. C. J. Would to God you were innocent, that is the worst Wish I wish you, but we will either hear him or you speak, speak as long as you will.

Mr. Wallop. My Lord, I desire to make but one Observation.

L. C. J. Ay, in God's Name make what Observations you will, Mr. Wallop, I hindered you from making your Observations at first, because I knew it would be desired after the Evidence was over.

Mr. Att. Gen. Then my Lord, I expect to be heard too. If Mr. Hampden makes a Speech, I will reply, or if his Counsel do it, I expect the last Word, for I will have neither the Party, nor the Counsel to speak after I have summ'd up the Evidence for the King. Mr. Hampden, and his Counsel are all one.

Mr. Wallop. I have but one short Observation to make.

L. C. J. Go on then, Mr. Wallop, and say what you will.

Mr. Just. Withins. I think 'tis very fit you should do it of both Sides; 'tis a Cause of great Concernment.

Mr. Williams. My Lord, we will leave it here, I think.

L. C. J. Take your own Course, do not say we hinder you of saying what you will for your Client.

Mr. Att. Gen. Let them do what they will.

L. C. J. I'll sit still, make Speeches every one of you as long as you will.

Mr. Just. Walcot. 'Tis fit they should speak what they can for the Advantage of their Client.

Mr. Williams. My Lord, we leave it to the Court.

L. C. J. Gentlemen of the Jury, the Evidence has been something long, and the Counsel both for the King, and for Mr. Hampden, against whom this Indictment has already been found by the Grand Jury, having left it to the Court to sum up all, I shall do it as well as I can: And the Question before you, Gentlemen, is, Whether the Defendant be guilty of the Offence charged in the Indictment, or not Guilty, and there having been so long an Evidence on the one Side, and on the other, it will be fit for me, according to the best of my Remembrance, to help your Memories, by recollecting what has been said on both sides, which I shall do as near as I can, and if my Brethren will please to supply any thing that shall be omitted by me, nay, if the Counsel for the King, or for the Prisoner, will put us in mind of any thing that has been spoken, and proved either against, or for the Party indicted, in God's Name let them have Liberty to speak it: For it is fit the Question should be left before you with all Fairness; and according to the best of my Observation and Memory, thus it stands.

The first thing, Gentlemen, that is considerable to you, is, that there is such an Indictment, as has been already opened unto you, that is preferred against Mr. Hampden, that does set forth, that Mr. Hampden is a seditious Person, and a Man, according to the Language of the Indictment (which were Words of Course and Form in an Indictment of this Nature) of an evil Disposition, designing to disturb and distract the Government, and that he, with several other Persons, did conspire to bring in Troubles, and Perplexities upon the Government; and in order to that, that there were some Meetings between him and several other Persons, and that there was a Design to conciliate some Persons of another Nation to go along with them in their Design, particularly some in the Kingdom of Scotland. This is the Purport in the Indictment, to which the Defendant has pleaded Not Guilty.

Gentlemen, the Evidence for the King has been of this Sort, They did at the beginning, which yet I must tell you by the way, is not any thing of Evidence, but the King's Counsel would make some Overtures to press on their Side, as the Defendant, and those that are of Counsel for Mr. Hampden, have made some little Hints to press on their Side, that some Witnesses the one and the others would have had here, were subpœna'd, but could not be here. It seems by the Proof, here was a Meeting, as it was between Six several Persons, and they name them, the Duke of Monmouth was one, the Lord Howard another, the Lord Russell a third, the Earl of Essex a fourth, Algernon Sidney a fifth, and Mr. Hampden the sixth. As for my Lord of Essex he is gone to his long Home, my Lord Russell and Mr. Sidney have received Sentence, and been executed. So there remains three surviving, and say they that are for the King: We produce my Lord Howard, and we have taken care to summon the Duke of Monmouth, by leaving Subpœna's where it could be thought he was to be met with, with Promises of his Servants to deliver them to him in order to have the Duke to be a Witness for the King this Day. I presume the meaning is, they would infer from that, that they would give an Account of the Fairness of this Proceeding, though it has been a Matter that has obtained a sort of Belief in the World, as though the Duke of Monmouth had denied that there was any such thing as this Confederacy and Conspiracy: And that has given People occasion to be of very different Opinions and Persuasions about the Matter; but, say they, to shew we are not afraid to have the Truth come out, we have done as much as in us lay to get this Person hither: Therefore we have left Subpœna's at his Houses, at his Lodging with his Servants, and they have promised to take care they should be delivered to him, and he is not come. Against this, on the other Side, say they for the Defendant, we have taken all the care we could to bring my Lord Anglesey, who was to have been a Witness for the Advantage of the Person indicted; but my Lord Anglesey is at present afflicted with a Fit of the Gout, and for that very Reason we can't have him here. And so they shew, that they have been very zealous to get Witnesses on their Side to vindicate their Reputation, but they did not meet with that Effect that they desired. These two Things, Gentlemen, are Matters that are used both against him one way, and for him another.

But now to come home to the Evidence upon which this Matter is to turn, and here you are to consider, that whatsoever has been said or offered by the King's Counsel on the one Side, or the Counsel for the Defendant on the other Side, (I call him so, for 'tis but a Trepass tho' a great one) You must not take into your Consideration at all any further than as their Allegations are supported by the Testimony that has been given: And whatsoever the Witnesses have said either for or against him, and out of that Testimony as near as I can remember I will give you the Objections, and their Answers, with the Observations that have been made, or do naturally arise out of the Facts in Proof.

My Lord Howard, in the first Place, gives an Account of this Matter, and, Gentlemen, the Times will be wonderful material, and therefore I beg you would take a Pen and Ink, and mark these material Circumstances as you go. For in all Matters of Fact positively proved, which also have their Credit supported by Circumstances which do accompany them, the Testimonies given of such Facts are to be valued according as those Circumstances keep touch with, and humour, as I may so say, the Fact that they are to evidence the Truth of.

My Lord Howard does therefore in the first place acquaint you, that about Michaelmas there was a Discourse between him and my Lord of Shaftesbury, and that was concerning a Rising intended to be had, and he tells you how that my Lord Shaftesbury was fully resolved upon it; That Things at length came to that pass, that he was forced, to go from his own House, as he said, being disappointed by the Duke of Monmouth and others who had promised to join with him, and was retired to the House of one Watson in or near Woodstreet. But he understanding where he was, my Lord Howard went to him, (I think, he says, my Lord Shaftesbury sent to him) when he came my Lord Shaftesbury told him, that although there had been such a Disappointment by those Persons he named, yet that did not take off his Edge, but he was resolved to go on himself, nay, tho' his Body was infirm, yet he would be set on Horseback, tho' he was lifted up, to appear in the Head of a Party that he had prepared, and were ready when he would call them. And he began then to reflect upon the Disappointment of the Duke of Monmouth, and as tho' the Duke of Monmouth had only a Prospect to advance himself, and had only an eye upon his own particular Interest. That he so managed matters, as if he design'd to have the sole Disposition of all Things whatsoever, and began to be uneasy with the Duke of Monmouth. My Lord Howard did endeavour to have prevailed with my Lord of Shaftesbury for a Reconciliation between the Duke of Monmouth and him, it being a matter that required so much Safety and Security, and did desire him that he would have some Intercourse with the Duke of Monmouth, in order to conciliate a Friendship between them, that they might go hand in hand. You find he was under some Difficulties about this matter, he was not able to bring the Thing about; for after he had spake with the Duke of Monmouth, and prevailed with him, my Lord of Shaftesbury was peevish, and talked at a Distance, and when he had appointed a Meeting one Time, it was prevented; my Lord Shaftesbury went away into Holland, and there died in Holland. This is the Substance of what my Lord Howard says as to that Matter.

But, Gentlemen, this is material, and I'll tell you why I think it material; because the Counsel for the Defendant have made it an Objection particularly to my Lord Howard's Testimony, That my Lord Howard is particular as to the Day after Michaelmas-Day, but he is not so particular when he comes to speak of other Times upon which the true Question before you depends. For now he speaks more generally as to the Meetings at the Defendant's, and my Lord Russell's, that they were about the Middle of January and the Beginning of February, and is not particular as to the Day. I speak of this because that has been made use of as an Objection against my Lord Howard's Testimony. And I will tell you as near as I can, all the Objections that have been made against this Testimony after such Time as I have settled it, and laid before you what the whole of it amounts to.

Then comes my Lord Howard and says, that meeting with the Duke of Monmouth some time after this they began to talk together, and they thought that tho' the Business had failed in the Managery of my Lord of Shaftesbury, yet it was fit there should be a reassuming of the Business again; but in order to settle matters that things may not go inconsiderately on, it was thought fit that they should resolve themselves into a certain Number that were confident one of another, in order to steer and transact these matters the better among themselves. And they must be Persons fit to be trusted, and for whom there should be an Undertaking among them for their Faithfulness and Integrity; for all Persons are not fit to be trusted, but only such as they agreed upon. The Duke of Monmouth he undertook for my Lord of Essex and my Lord Russell, those were the Persons for whom he would engage, as likewise for my Lord Salisbury. And then they began to talk of some more, particularly of Mr. Sidney, but he was a Cynical Man, and a Philosopher, and they were first to come to him, and to treat with him in another manner than the rest. He was not to appear as the Duke of Monmouth, but to take him in his Retirement and Privacies, and then they might be the better able to break the matter to him. And he says accordingly there was a Time designed on purpose; and at that same Time the Duke of Monmouth and my Lord Howard did go and attack Mr. Sidney; they found him on a private Day, and dined with him; and upon that Dinner the whole Matter was broke up, and put into some Method; then was the whole Design contrived as to the Persons that were to be engaged in this Matter; and he says, they agreed upon Six. The Duke of Monmouth undertook for my Lord of Essex, and my Lord Russell and Colonel Sidney undertook for Mr. Hampden. He speaks of my Lord of Salisbury; but my Lord of Salisbury was never there among them, and so I put him out of the Case, I quit him from being of their Number, because there were but Six in all, my Lord of Essex, and my Lord Russell, who were undertaken for by the Duke of Monmouth, Mr. Hampden undertaken for by Mr. Sidney, and my Lord Howard; for by that time Mr. Hampden was come into the Matter upon Colonel Sidney's Undertaking.

Now we are got, Gentlemen, by these Steps till we come about the middle of January; but, says my Lord Howard, I cannot positively say, it was this Day, or that Day of the Month; but being about the middle of January, I conjecture it was about the 14th, but he is not positive to the Day. He says, accordingly they went to Mr. Hampden's House, which was the Place first design'd for them to meet in. He says, there accordingly they did all Six meet; and that it being Mr. Hampden's House, they thought it most proper for him who was Master of the House, who usually bids his Guests welcome, to break Silence, and to impart the Business of the Design they met about. He says, accordingly Mr. Hampden, after the first Compliments of Entertainment, did give an Account of the Business they were come about, and that it was in order to have a Raising. This, he says, was proposed by Mr. Hampden. He tells you, then they fell into Debate about the Time when, concerning Men, and Arms, and Money; and likewise concerning the Places. He tells you the Places wherein the Raising was design'd to be, were Devonshire, Cheshire, Somersetshire, and other Places, that is, as to the Circumstance of the Place. Then he tells you concerning the Time; it was debated, Whether it should be all at one Time, or at several Times; whether they should only begin here, and the Country fall in, or all at once: That likewise they had in Consideration the Business of Money, and that his Grace the Duke of Monmouth did speak of 30 or 35 Thousand Pounds, or some such Sum at that Time. But then, as was natural for Men of Deliberation and Consideration to consult about, they took into Debate that they might not go headlong, to endeavour to conciliate another Party to chime in, as he says, along with them, in the Business they were going about; and accordingly it was thought fit and proposed, That there should be an Endeavour to conciliate a Friendship with some Persons in Scotland, to fall in with them; and then he tells you who the Persons were that were named: Some of the Names he remembers, and others he has forgot; he speaks particularly of the Campbells, Sir John Cockram, and my Lord Melvin: And he says, other Persons were mentioned, but he can't remember their Names; and my Lord Russell knew some of these Persons, and the Duke of Monmouth knew some others of them, because of his near Relation to the Earl of Argyle, the Person that you know was professed for Treason in the Kingdom of Scotland. He says, that so far the Debate of this matter went, that they thought fit a Messenger should be provided, a trusty Man to be sent into Scotland to treat with these Gentlemen about this matter; and my Lord Russell I think he says, undertook to write a Letter to be carried by this Messenger to these Scotch Gentlemen.

He says, pursuant to this Consultation at Mr. Hampden's, a Fortnight after, or thereabouts, which brings it up to the Beginning of February, then was the Meeting at my Lord Russell's House, and there they debated these matters over again, and the whole Managery of sending a Messenger into Scotland was left to the Discretion of Colonel Sidney, and he undertook that Work, that was his Post that he was to manage; and he does say, that he does very well remember, that Aaron Smith was the Person proposed then; and tho' he was unknown to some of the Company, yet he was well known to others; and by reason of that Knowledge that others had of him, they looked upon him as a Person very fit, and every way qualified for it.

So that, Gentlemen, here is proved a Consultation in order to the Raising of Men to infest the Government; a Discourse concerning Money and Arms for this End, and the Places where, and the Time when; and of conciliating a Friendship with some discontented Persons in Scotland, to join, and chime in with these Conspirators in England.

And then there is yet another Circumstance very remarkable, because tho' my Lord spoke it not at the same Time that he delivered his Testimony; yet upon the Question asked, he gives you a plain Account of it; and it has a plain Dependence upon what went before. Said they among themselves, 'Tis proper for us, as near as we can, to shut the Door against any Exceptions about these Men's coming to treat with us; but how shall we get them hither without Suspicion? We must have some Shams, or Cant or other, to be a Pretence for these People to come into England; and that was agreed to be about some Plantation in Carolina.

This, he says, was the Result of that Meeting; and that when the Meeting was broke up, about three or four Days afterwards (mind the Circumstance of Time, Gentlemen, for 'tis very material), Col. Sidney and he met together, they went to Col. Sidney's House, and there he saw him take Money out of a Till, where there were several Hundreds of Guineas, or Pieces of Gold; and as he believes, he says, he took three-score Guineas, or some such Sum; and told him it was to give to Aaron Smith in order to his Journey into Scotland: That he went out with him in his Coach, but Mr. Sidney set him down by the way, and he himself went into London, telling him, he went to that purpose, to give Aaron Smith the Money. Some time after, about a Week, or a Fortnight, or ten Days after that, he says, he met with Mr. Sidney again; and he says, Mr. Sidney gave him an Account, that he had heard Aaron Smith had been at Newcastle, but he had not heard of him since that Time, and that is another Circumstance in Point of Time, Gentlemen; so that you have here a positive Oath made by my Lord Howard, that Mr. Hampden was privy, and consenting to all these Debates, as to the Raising of Men, and the Levying of Money, and about the conciliating a Friendship with these Men of Scotland, and about sending a Messenger into Scotland to that Purpose. And if my Lord Howard do swear true, no Man living can doubt but that Mr. Hampden is guilty of this Indictment. The first Meeting was at his House, and there he did take notice of what had been formerly done, and proposed the Things, breaking the Silence, and entering into the Debate; which shews that he had been discoursing about it before, and had it in his Thoughts before, or else he could not have propounded it as the End of their Meeting.

Now this, Gentlemen, here is a positive Fact; and as Mr. Williams says true, no Man living can give any Answer to a positive Fact, but by some other Things that may be Circumstances to oppose that Fact. Now he says, there are no Circumstances that have been proved, that will give any Credibility to what has been deposed, besides the positive Oath of my Lord Howard. So that, says he, your Fact, tho' it be positively sworn, is not supported by any Circumstances of the Fact, that may give Credibility to it. And he objects, very materially; for if it be not supported by credible Circumstances, then indeed it would be less material; yet I cannot say, it would not be at all material; it is material, and you are to determine, whether you have sufficient Evidence given you, to induce you to believe, that my Lord Howard is at this Time guilty of wilful and malicious Perjury, for it is Perjury, and that in the highest Degree, if it be not true that he says; and God deliver all Mankind from being guilty of any such Thing. I leave that to your Consciences, Gentlemen, who are the Judges of it.

But, says the King's Counsel, Here are Circumstances that do support our Fact, and the Credibility of it. For, first, here is the Circumstance of Aaron Smith, who was sent into Scotland by Mr. Sidney in pursuance of this Design, and this Circumstance my Lord Howard does subjoin to what he has positively affirmed against the Defendant. And this Circumstance is a thing that may be helped by other Proof; and what is this Circumstance? Say they, that Aaron Smith was sent into Scotland; and in order to prove that, they have called one Sheriffe, who is a Man that keeps an Inn at the Post-house in Newcastle, from whence Col. Sidney told my Lord Howard he had notice of his Arrival at Newcastle, but had heard no more of him after that. And this Sheriffe swears directly, I saw that Man they call Aaron Smith, when he was shewn to me before the King and the Council; and Mr. Atterbury swears he shew'd Aaron Smith to him, and then Sheriffe swears, that man you shew'd to me was the Man I saw at my House at Newcastle, that chimes in with the Circumstance of Fact that Mr. Sidney heard from him at Newcastle. And then there is the Circumstance of Time when he saw him there; says he, I saw him the Friday before Shrove-Tuesday, which they in the North call Easter's Even. He came to my House on Thursday Night, and went away the next Day, Friday; and he went with his Guide, the other Man, Northward, in order to his Journey into Scotland, as he himself said. Says he, I remember the Time very particularly, it was the Friday before Shrove-Tuesday last, this February was Twelve-month; and he went yet further, says he, I did not only see him when he went away, but when he came back again, for he left his Man at my House all the Time, and he tells you what his Name was; for he says, Smith went under the disguised Name of one Clerk, and he did then talk of going to the Western Parts of Scotland, he named Douglas as he thinks, tho' he is not positive in that, but he is in the Person, that was the Man. And, says he, I sent for this Person, the other Fellow Bell, and he was the Guide he had along with him. And upon Bell's Examination, What says he? Says he, I remember that Man came thither at that Time to the other Man's House: I take it upon my Oath that is the Man, and he went by the Name of Clerk, he hired me to be his Guide; I went out with him on Friday Morning, and I went along with him all that Day; but upon Saturday, which was the next Day, going Northward with him, my Horse tired, and failed me: Thereupon I was forced to be left behind, but I overtook him on Sunday Night following; I overtook him at such a Place, and saw him within six Miles of the Borders of Scotland. I take it upon my Oath, this is the Man that was there under the Name of Clerk; and at his returning back again I took notice of him, I went up to him, I drank

I drank with him, and we had Discourse of our Journey. He told me at first, he was to go to the West of Scotland, and so he went Northward. After that, which was about ten or twelve Days, he came back again, and so went Southward towards London. This he doth swear directly to be at that Time.

Now, Gentlemen, the Time is wonderful material in that Case, because that very Time twelvemonth that they talk of, is the Beginning of February. If you look upon your old Almanack of the last Year (I happen'd to have one in my Pocket, and look'd upon it, when the Men gave their Testimony) and there you will find, that the Monday before Shrove-Tuesday, when he says, he left him within six Miles of the Borders of Scotland, falls out to be the 19th of February; I will look upon it again, lest I should mistake; 'tis just so, and that humours the Time that my Lord Howard speaks of, which was about the Middle of February; a few Days after that, he says the Money was given by Mr. Sidney; and then for the Time for Aaron Smith to get to Newcastle, there is a fit space of Time, for it falls out that the Thursday that he arrived at Newcastle, is the 15th Day of February, and so it falls in well with my Lord Howard's Testimony, and so the Monday that he parted with him at the Borders of Scotland was the 19th, which also just humours the Time that he speaks of. So that here is a Circumstance of Fact to confirm his Testimony, both as to the sending the Messenger, and the Circumstance of Time. That he is the same Man is proved by these two Witnesses, who agree in this, that he was there about such a Time; and it does likewise humour that other Circumstance of Place, that Mr. Sidney said he had heard from him from Newcastle, but not since; and then there is the other Circumstance which backs and confirms all, There was not only a sending for these Persons, but there is Notice taken that these Campbells, who were to be assisting in this Matter, were to come about the Sham, and under the Disguise of purchasing Plantations in Carolina. About the Beginning of June they came to Town, the two Campbells, Sir John Cockram, and Mr. Monroe. Sir Andrew Foster he tells you he met with some of the Men, and they told him, they came about the Business of Carolina; and so the Cant of Carolina is made good in this Circumstance that way; but when the Plot brake out, these Men sculk, one flies one way, another another; some were taken as they were escaping away by Water; others of them were taken upon the bed at Noon-day in Moorfields: Had the Business they came over into England about been a fair, and a lawful, and honest Business, why should they hide themselves? Why should any Man sneak and sculk, and be ashamed to own an honest and lawful Business? But this does humour and touch the Thing exactly, as to that Circumstance, that Carolina was only a Cant for to disguise their coming over. These are the only two Circumstances that seem to be pretty strong for them, to prove and support the Credibility of what their Witness has sworn.

For, Gentlemen, what a wonderful sort of Expectation would it be, That we shall never convict a Man of High-Treason, unless you can bring a Man to be a Witness that is not concern'd? For then all these Persons must have been acquitted, for they intrusted none, it seems, but these Six; they took care they would keep it amongst themselves. Do you think they called their Servants to be Witnesses of what they were about? That is a vain and idle Imagination. In the Papish Plot, what Witnesses of it had you there? Were they Strangers to the Plot? No, you cannot expect any Witnesses but such as the Nature of the Case will bear.

This is the Meaning of the Evidence that has been given for the King, and it carries a great Weight in it. But they have made an Objection, which indeed is not remote, but may concern the question very much. Say they, if we prove my Lord of Essex was not there, or such a one was not there, would it not discredit the Evidence of my Lord Howard? Yes, certainly, it would wholly discredit it, and he were not to be believed at all; nay, which is yet nearer to the Question, if Mr. Hampden, that had notice all along of the Times fixed wherein this Transaction was, to wit, about the Middle of January, and Beginning of February. For because they talk of the Prints, Mr. Hampden had from them sufficient Notice and Intimation of the Time. If Mr. Hampden, that hath had all this Notice, could have proved before you, that he was in France, or any other Place at that Time, that had been wonderful material. But all the Circumstances that are any way significant to support the Credit of this Matter are very well proved; and so the Testimony of my Lord Howard is, by these concurrent Circumstances of Fact, sufficiently supported.

Now, Gentlemen, I must tell you, This being the Substance of the Evidence for the King; I will now, as near as I can, give you an Account of the Evidence for the Defendant; it was opened by Mr. Williams very ingeniously for the Advantage of his Client, as every Man is bound to say what he can for his Client. He made a great many Objections against my Lord Howard; so if he could but shake the Testimony of my Lord Howard, then he might easily bring off his Client; and if you, upon any thing that has been offered, either in Evidence, or by way of Observation fairly made from the Evidence, do believe my Lord Howard has forsworn himself, you must find Mr. Hampden, the Defendant, Not Guilty; but if you believe he has not forsworn himself, you must find him Guilty. So all our Matter is reduced into a very narrow Compass; and therefore I must repeat it again what I said at the Beginning, if my Memory do not serve me to recollect all right, the Counsel for the Defendant shall have free Liberty to inform the Court of what has been omitted.

First, says Mr. Williams, My Lord Howard was a Man very deep in a Conspiracy with my Lord Shaftesbury, by his own Acknowledgment, endeavouring to conciliate a Friendship between the Duke of Monmouth and my Lord Shaftesbury: and so he had a great Hand in the Plot; and what he might do on purpose to get himself out of danger from that Plot, and procure his Pardon, is not known.

It is a very strange Thing, that it should be an Objection before he had his Pardon, that he did it for Fear, and to get his Pardon; and when he has it, now the Objection is, because he has his Pardon; and he got it, say they, by this Means. It seems, whether he had his Pardon or no, it must be an Objection against him: Before he had it, he was under the Fear of not obtaining it till the Drudgery of Swearing was over; but now he has his Pardon, What now? Why he does it on purpose to accuse other People. Why, he says no more now than what he has said before he was pardoned; and if after he is pardoned, when he is under no Dread or Fear because of his Guilt, he says the same Things that he did when he might be in Fear. How can that be an Objection to him? He cannot be thought he does it to save his own Life; for that is as safe now by his Pardon, as it can any way be; and 'tis, and must be a great Satisfaction to his Mind, and will be so to any other reasonable Man's Mind: And is a plain Answer to the Objection of his Fear, (for 'tis a captious Age we live in, that will make some specious objection or other, tho' it be not of any great Weight.) But how can it be thought a Man would come and swear too much, or too far, for fear he should not save himself; or, as they call it, swear himself into a Pardon, when he has his Pardon? It might be an Objection before; but as long as he is under no such Terrors now, but stands right, both by the Laws of God and Man to be heard as a Witness, I think it would be hard for any one to come, and say, This Man would forswear himself. What should provoke him to come and forswear himself, when he is under no Danger as to his own Particular? There might be an Umbrage, I say, of an Objection before he had his Pardon, tho' it was, indeed, no Objection before; not a rational weighty one, to set aside his Testimony. But no body knows which way in the World to satisfy the Minds of some sort of People.

In the next Place, Gentlemen, says Mr. Williams, You are not positive as to the Time; you say, it was about the Middle of January, or the Beginning of February, and that is too general and wide; but you remember particularly to a Day the Business between you and my Lord of Shaftesbury, That that was the Day after Michaelmas-Day: How can you be so particular as to the one, and not as particular as to the other?

Why, I will undertake that Mr. Williams, when he made the Objection, must needs think of the Answer that would be given to it. It is notoriously known, that the Pressures these Gentlemen thought they lay under, were what my Lord of Shaftesbury said, Now they have got the Juries into their own Power, and no Man is safe; they will find me or any man Guilty, as they please; Why, how came they to get Juries into their own Hands, but by having the Sheriffs as they would have them? Now the Sheriffs that are to return Juries are, as all Men know that know any thing, sworn the Day before Michaelmas-Day; therefore he might very well, and had good reason to remember that Day; when such a notorious Thing happens to fall out at such a notorious Time, 'tis easier for a Man to remember that Time, than to speak to the particular Time of an Action, done about the Middle of a Month, where there is not such a notorious Circumstance. Why, I can tell you very well where I was upon the Day before Michaelmas-Day; upon that Day, and the Day after; for that very Reason, because it was a notorious Day about the Swearing of Sheriffs in London. But if you ask me, where I was the Middle of January, or the Middle of February, I cannot so well remember that. But there is Credit to be given to a Man that speaks to a notorious Circumstance, and thereby proves the Probability of what he says, though he should not be so particular in a Thing that admits not of such a notorious Circumstance.

Gentlemen, I make the Objections as they are stated on the one Side, and on the other Side; and the Answers that naturally flow to prove the Matters before you one way or other; and you are to judge, you are to weigh them; and which has the greater Credit with you, you are to take notice of.

He does say, in the next Place, Here was a Discourse of arms and armed Men, and a great Sum of Money spoken of, but there breaks out nothing of this Matter till July following; but this Debate was in January and February before. For that Matter, the Answer that is given, and it seems to be a plain one, is, That they were to conciliate a Correspondence with People that were Abroad, and that they could not go on till they had effected that, and till these People came to join with them, which could not be without some Time. And you hear the Cockrams and the Campbells came not to the Town till June or July; so that it was not probable it should break out till then, because it was to be agitated upon their coming here. And so that Objection is answered, they did not apprehend any such Necessity for present engaging in it. For my Lord Howard, because he thought it would be a Work of Time to settle the Correspondence, and get these People to Town, went down to his Country-House in Essex, and from thence to Bath, for he did apprehend some considerable Time must be spent ere these People could come; and therefore he thought it convenient to take his Retirement in the mean time.

Ay, but 'tis strange, says Mr. Williams, and he makes that another Objection; he would have my Lord Howard to draw in this Accusation of Mr. Hampden, to procure his Pardon, by going further than the other Discoverers had gone. It seems, say they, Mr. Hampden was not thought of at first; but because West and Keeling had discovered a Plot, my Lord Howard to secure himself, must go a Step further than they, and (as the Defendant's Counsel would have it) than the Truth; and that is the Stress of the Objection. But the Weight of the Proof is quite different; for all Men know, in the Plot there were several Parts. There was the Business of Keeling and West, and that was the Assassination of the King and the Duke; but the Duke of Monmouth, my Lord Howard, and those other Gentlemen, were for the Business of the Raising, tho' that might be in order to that other Purpose; but they kept not Company with those that were engaged in that Part of the Design. They were the Underlings, the Scoundrel Plotters, that were concerned in the Assassination. But these Gentlemen looked upon themselves to be Privy-Counsellors, not to be the Executioners; they were to be only Advisers, what was to be done after the other Business was over; and their Consultations were for raising of Men for an Insurrection, not the Business of the Assassination of the King, that was not their Province. Can it be an Objection against my Lord Howard, because he gives a Testimony West and Keeling could not give? Could they go further than the killing of the King, which was their Business: If any Man should have asked my Lord Howard about that Matter, he would have made Answer, it was not for that Purpose that we met together at Mr. Hampden's, and my Lord Russell's; no, that was upon a particular Business, and to a particular End and Purpose.

Then he says too, that though my Lord Howard comes here upon his Oath, and declares these several Matters that he hath deposed; yet he has given a different Account of things elsewhere, and he has called several Witnesses to that purpose. To whom my Lord Howard several times upon his Honour, upon his Word, with Eyes lifted up, and Hands elevated to Heaven, and many extraordinary Protestations, declared, that he knew nothing of the Plot; and say they, if a Man will at onetime pawn his Honour, and his Reputation for the Truth of a Thing, and after that, will come again to swear against all that Matter, that is an Argument that does sink the Credit and Reputation of that Witness; and thereupon they call you several Witnesses, some whereof are Persons of great Honour and Quality. I think they begin first with Ducas, Servant to Colonel Sidney, and he tells you, after his Master was taken, my Lord Howard came thither, and desired he might lie there; and desired the Use of some Plate and Goods of Colonel Sidney's; and then asked, what was become of his Master? And when Ducas told him what he heard of the Plot, that something was talked of about the Assassination of the King and the Duke, my Lord Howard lifted up his Eyes and his Hands to Heaven, and declared he knew nothing of it, but he believed Colonel Sidney was a very honest Man, and knew nothing at all of any such Matter; and as for himself, rather than he would be taken or confined again, he would do any thing. This was the Evidence they gave as to him. Then they come with Mr. Howard their second Witness; for I would take them in order as they were produced, and he gives you an Account, that he met with my Lord Howard, and my Lord Howard told him, he knew nothing at all of any Plot, and did believe that Colonel Sidney was innocent, and he did believe likewise that my Lord Ruffel was innocent, and for his Part he knew nothing of any such thing as a Plot; but he says, when he began to talk to him, why did he make such a Bustle, and go so often into the City and concern himself about the making of Sheriffs? He answered, I do nothing but what is in a legal way; and he justified all that was done to be only in a legal way.

When once People come to believe, that the raising of Tumults, and making Seditions, Stirs and Noises, is a legal way to obtain their Ends, as we know it is the Tenet and Principle of great many People, what will they not do under that Pretence, that all they do is according to Law? They think it is lawful by the Religion they profess, to resist and oppose the Government, and the Old Cause is a good Cause to this Day in some Men's Opinion, and they can die in it, and thank God for being concerned in it. And there are some People that say, the raising of Arms by the King's Authority against his Person is lawful by the Religion they profess, and they call themselves Protestants (how justly you may imagine); and if Men will make Insurrections to difficult the Government, it is Rebellion, and no Man can justify it, let him pretend Conscience, or what he will, 'tis rank Treason, it is not saying I am thus persuaded in my Conscience, that will excuse the Man; if I steer myself by the Dictates of a good and regular Conscience, it can never be thought that I shall commit Treason, but it is the effect of evil Principles.

Was it not under the Shape of Religion, that that blessed Martyr King Charles I. of ever blessed Memory, came to the Block: Nay, and I have heard of some Men in the late Times that were engaged on that Side, who finding that the King did prevail at the beginning of the War, because he had Gentlemen of Quality and Spirit to appear for him, were at a loss to know which way in the World they should put a Spirit in the common People to oppose the King; and some among them bid them to be sure to put Religion to be but the Pretence, and that would make them run headlong to what they would have them. Whose Opinion that was, is not strange to any that know any thing of the History of those Times. So that when once People take it to be the Principle of their Religion to oppose and resist all that are not of their Persuasion, and for Religion sake to resist Authority, then they think all is lawful they can do to preserve their Religion as long as they are wound up to that Opinion.

The next Witness, Gentlemen, is my Lord of Clare, and he gives you an Account of his Discourse with my Lord Howard. And by the way I must observe, what I am very sorry for with all my Heart, to hear, that among Gentlemen of Quality and Honour, Discourses of the Government, and the Male-Administration of it, as they think, should be only Matter of Jest fit for their Recreation, and Laughter, only merry Table-talk, as though Government, so sacred a Thing, were as mean as any trivial Concern whatsoever. I am sorry to hear and see, that Persons of great Honour and Quality should esteem it so. And I must be pardoned if I take notice of it: For Matters of Government, and yielding Obedience to Superiors, is a Matter of Religion, 'tis a serious Matter, and every Man ought to make Conscience of it; to talk of Government with Reverence, as well as pay Duty and Obedience to it. And when I find it made a Jest, I must be permitted to say that is not so well done, and whoever it is that makes it so, ought very much to be blamed.

My Lord of Clare comes and testifies, that my Lord Howard told him, he did not believe my Lord Ruffel was guilty of what he was accused of, much less did he believe it of Colonel Sidney, and when he began to talk about Writings found in Sidney's Closet, he said, there can be nothing of his Writings found, that can do him or any Man else any hurt. This is the Substance of what that Noble Lord has said.

Then there is my Lord Paget, and he likewise gives you an Account, that he had some Discourse with my Lord Howard about the Plot; and he told him too, that he did not believe any thing of this Plot, or that my Lord Ruffel and others accused had any Hand in it. But I would observe this one thing upon my Lord Paget's Testimony, that still my Lord Howard was wished Joy by every body, and I am glad to see your Heels at liberty, and the like. So that there was some Jealousy of his being concerned; something or other there was in it. Says my Lord Howard, I look upon myself as affronted, that any body should talk so of me. He was concerned that they should suspect him. But something there was at the bottom. Says my Lord Paget, I am glad to hear you are out of it. For he began to imagine there must be some Fire for all this Smoke. That, Gentlemen, was the Discourse he had with him. But he says, that with my Lord Paget there were Discourses of his going beyond Sea, but he did not go.

Then comes Dr. Burnet, and he tells you, that there were Protestations made to him, and he has got the same Words as the Frenchman had, that he did it with lifted up Eyes and Hands, he professed solemnly he was altogether a Stranger to any such Thing. The Doctor says, he had heard there was a Plot, and was persuaded of the Truth of it, but he was a little shaken by what my Lord Howard said to him. But now he is sufficiently satisfied there is a Plot, and I am glad he is, for I think it scarce does remain a Doubt, with any Men that have any Value for the Religion and Government we live under. And I know not how they could be better satisfied, than by the Evidence that has been given of it, a main Part of which was given by my Lord Howard. All this before my Lord Howard was taken.

Then comes in one Mr. Gisborne, and he tells you the same Story, that a great while ago my Lord Howard told him he knew nothing of the Plot.

The next to him is Mr. Blake, and he tells you, that after such a time as the Plot was discovered, and after my Lord Ruffel was tried, and after my Lord Howard had given Evidence at the Old-Baily, he shewed him the Warrant for his Pardon, and Blake telling him that was not sufficient without an actual Pardon; he replied, I think in my Conscience I shall not have a Pardon till the Drudgery of Swearing is over. But is that any Argument? Here is a Man under the Drudgery of Swearing; therefore he did not know any such thing as he swears. It carries thus much along with it, that it was uneasy to him, and there is a kind of a force put upon him to swear, as they say, in order to his Pardon.

But now, Gentlemen, that will admit of this Answer, and a plain one certainly it is, When a Man comes over and over again to tell the World such a Story, and gives such an Account of himself, it must a little grate upon him, though it be his Duty to tell the Truth, and though, as Mr. Williams says, he is the best Martyr that is a Martyr for Truth; even so say I on the other Side, he is the best Penitent that is a Penitent for Truth, and he is the best Witness that is a Witness for Truth's sake, and he gives the best Testimony of his Repentance, that by his Testimony declares the Truth, though it be harsh and uneasy to him; for if I have any Ingenuity, and have lived in good Credit in the World, it must be a drudgery and irksome thing to call myself a Traitor so often in a Court of Justice. It is true he might have given it a more moderate Term, and yet withal upon these Circumstances, he might have reason to call it in some sense a Drudgery. But now, Gentlemen, as he did swear it, before he had his Pardon from time to time upon all Occasions when he was called as a Witness: So now the Pardon is come, which they would have to be the Reason of the continuance of his Drudgery, he swears the same thing. He has his Pardon under the King's Seal, and tho' it might be thought they would keep him within the compass of his Tether till he had done his Evidence; now he has got that he desired, he swears the same Thing. And now his Pardon does not at all influence his Testimony, he is not under any fear, but is as free as any Subject the King has, and now he is upon his Oath, he gives you the Account you have had, and he did say all the same Things, before such time as Colonel Sidney, and my Lord Ruffel were tried, that he says now.

Then, Gentlemen, you have in the next Place Witnesses called, several of them to give you an Account of the Conversation and Disposition of Mr. Hampden; for says Mr. Williams, for a Man to be guilty of a Crime of this nature, there must be some kind of evil Disposition to it, and so Mr. Williams would argue and make this Inference. You see he is not a Man of a turbulent, seditious and fractious Spirit and Temper, he is a studious Person, very retired, that has been beyond Sea much, and came not Home till such a Time. And if there were Interlocutions between my Lord Howard and my Lord Shaftesbury it was before he came into England, and so he was not concerned in them. He says, That March last he was to go again, he had a mind to return again to France for his Health; and what reason have we to imagine he should concern himself in the Plot, when he was so studious a Man, lived so retired a Life, and intended to go Abroad so suddenly? And for this you have my Lord Paget, Mr. Peham, Sir Henry Hobart, Dr. Lupet, Monsieur Jussel, and one Murray.

Mr. Williams. Murray, my Lord, we did not examine.

L. C. J. 'Tis true, I beg your Pardon. Well then, these others tell you, they have been Persons very intimately conversant with him, they never knew he concerned himself with any thing about Government, but was of a quiet, peaceable Demeanour, and was so far from that which the Indictment talks of Turbulency and Sedition, that they never had any Discourse with him about any such Thing at all, save what Dr. Lupet says, who it seems lived with him about two Years, and kept him Company in his Studies; and that once having some discourse about the Popish Plot, He said he would venture his Life, and any thing he had to preserve the King and Government against this Plot, he did very well, and if he had since declared, he would have ventured his Life to have secured the King and Government against this Plot, I should have been glad to find him of that Mind, I pray God you may find him to be so. But from the Evidence, even of that Frenchman, it seems there was some Jealousy in the World, and that he lay under hard Censures as well as other People. For speaking of the Plot, the Advice given him was this: My Lord Grey is gone, and the Duke of Monmouth is gone, why won't you go? Why should that Advice be given, if there were no Suspicion of his being concerned? That he said, I will not go, and so they would make his staying here to be an Instance and Proof of his Innocence; Why, Gentlemen, if that should be so, then there was the same Innocency in my Lord Ruffel, and Colonel Sidney, and all of them: For all the Council of Six, every one of them stay'd, except the Duke of Monmouth, and he indeed did abscond. And the same Evidence that made the Duke of Monmouth fly, and my Lord Essex cut his own Throat, convicted my Lord Ruffel and Colonel Sidney, and is now brought against the Defendant, and has from time to time been given against the rest. We know no reason that they had to stay more than West or Rumsey had to stay and be taken, and yet that is not used by them as an Argument of their Innocency.

These are the Evidences that have been given on the Defendant's Part; and I tell you as I go along what Answers were given to it on the Part of the King. As to what is spoken of his Intention to go again into France, if he designed to go, why did he not go before before all this Mischief broke out? He came here at Michaelmas, and I may say he came, it may be at an unlucky time, when the City and its Neighbourhood was in a Distemper, and some Men were blown with Fears and Jealousies. These might animate him, and inspirit him as they did other People, and put them into a Ferment; but you find him attending in Town constantly here 'till the Matter was discovered, whatsoever his Intentions were, 'tis much he did not put them into Action, 'tis strange he did not go all this while, it had been much for his Advantage that he had never come out of France, or that he had returned thither much sooner.

Against all this that has been urged for the Defendant about my Lord Howard, I will tell you what is the Answer to it; and truly first I say, I am apt to believe my Lord Howard did tell these Gentlemen what they here testify; but was it ever thought, that any Man that was guilty of High Treason would presently proclaim his own Guilt? Is it reasonable to imagine, my Lord Howard would tell Dr. Burnet I am in a Plot, and Colonel Sidney is in a Plot, and Mr. Hampden is in a Plot, and make it his common Talk? Nay, it is so far from being an Argument of his Innocency, that more naturally it may be turned upon them as an Argument of his Guilt. For if a Man had not been concerned in the Business at all, but were an honest Man, and free from Suspicion, what need I talk or concern myself to proclaim my own Innocency, not being accused? Why must I tell Colonel Sidney's Footman, this Man, the other Man, that I know nothing of the Plot, and neither I nor any other Man I am sure is concerned in it? But that shews there was a Dread and Apprehension upon him of something that he was conscious of, and that lying within must have some Vent, and this Over-caution is an Intimation that there was something more than ordinary in the Matter. We take notice of it as a great Evidence against a Man that is accused for an Highway-man, if he comes to such an Ale-house or Inn, and bids the People take notice I am here at such a Time of the Day, and that is a Circumstance of Time that will serve to answer a Proof, it may be, that may be brought against him of a Robbery done at such a Time; but we always look upon that Industry of their's, as a Piece of Artifice designed to patch up a Testimony to evade a Proof. So that the Argument will turn the other way; and 'tis more for the Advantage of these worthy Gentlemen, that it should be turned the other way, for otherwise they would be thought to be Persons ill affected to the Government; that is, Dr. Burnet, my Lord Paget, my Lord Clare, and the rest. And if they have a Mind to be thought otherwise, they must let the Argument run that way as I say, and in Charity we ought to believe the best of all Mankind, 'till we find otherwise by them. We say then in Charity, we suppose he thought it not fit to intrust you with his Confessions; for you are all loyal Men, I know 'tis the best Answer that can be given, and that which they ought to value themselves upon for their own Credit and Reputation, and not to make it an Argument against my Lord Howard, or against the Credibility of his Testimony in the Matter.

I don't know, truly, Gentlemen, that I have omitted any one Thing that is material, on the one Side or on the other, of which there hath been any Proof; but I must only repeat to you this, Here is a Matter of great Concern and Consequence, a Matter wherein the Peace of the Government and the Kingdom is concerned in a very high degree; a Matter, that if there were another Witness as positive against the Defendant as my Lord Howard, would amount to no less than High-Treason. But as there is but one Witness, backed with these Circumstances to corroborate his Testimony, 'tis but only a Trespass; but I tell you it treads very nigh upon High-Treason, and the Tendency of it was to bring us all into Confusion; and what would be the Consequence of that, but to lay us open to the same Mischief that we were under in the Times of the late Rebellion? For tho' Men pretend never so fair, and veil it under the Names of the Security of the Government and the Protestant Religion; yet they would have done well to have tarried 'till they had a legal Authority to call them to consult of these high Matters that they pretend to secure; that had been well. What had these Gentlemen to do to take upon themselves this Power without Authority?

Gentlemen, you have heard the Evidence, and you see what it is. And I must say, the late Evidences you have had concerning another Business of this Nature, I wish that might be said to preserve and support the Credit of some Persons upon whose Testimonies Lives have been taken away, as as has been said, and is evident for the Advantage of my Lord Howard. I do not find that he has been guilty of Perjury, as being concerned in taking Oaths one way, and then giving Evidence another. I mean, first taking Oaths of Secrecy, and then revealing; not but that notwithstanding all this, they may be believed, and God forbid but they should be believed according to Truth. But I say, if Objections of this Nature are to prevail, we must never expect any great Crime to be punished, because we must stay 'till Persons that are Strangers to the Guilt of the Fact come to give Evidence of it, which is impossible to be done.

Therefore, Gentlemen, I must resolve it all into one Head; You have the Case of a Gentleman of Quality on the one Side, and the Peace and Preservation of the Government on the other Side. You hear what is proved against him, the Evidence given on this behalf, the Objections that have been made by the Counsel, which all of them, as near as I can remember, I have repeated to you, and I ask your Pardon and their's if I have omitted anything, and I desire to be minded of it. You hear the Answers that have been given. And because the Counsel were unwilling to give the Court trouble, or themselves to make long Speeches and Observations, therefore I have been necessitated to do it as well as I can.

Upon the whole matter, my Lord Howard has thus positively sworn the Matter of Fact charged in the Indictment against the Defendant; he has been supported by the Witnesses that confirm the Circumstances of Smith's going into Scotland, the Scotchmen's being here in June, and the Sham and Cent of Carolina. All which you have heard, and I make no Question observed, and is not contradicted by any thing I hear that carries any Probability of an Answer. Therefore, Gentlemen, I leave it to you, whether upon this Evidence you will take it upon your Consciences and Oaths, that my Lord Howard is guilty of wilful and corrupt Perjury, then you must find the Defendant not Guilty; but if you think he has proved the Matter fully, and his Testimony is supported by those four Witnesses,

Atterbury, Sir Andrew Foster, Sheriffe, and Bell, then, Gentlemen, you must find the Defendant Guilty.

Juryman. My Lord, we desire to ask one Question. At the Meeting at Mr. Hampden's House, I think my Lord Howard says they went to Dinner.

Mr. Just. Holloway. No, it was at Col. Sidney's they went to Dinner.

L. C. J. I know not whether you have taken notice of it, but I have, it was at Col. Sidney's they dined, not at Mr. Hampden's.

Then the Jury withdrew from the Bar, and within half an Hour the Jury returned, and being called over answered to their Names, and gave in their Verdict thus.

Cl. of Cr. Are you all agreed of your Verdict?

Omnes. Yes.

Cl. of Cr. Who shall say for you?

Omnes. Foreman.

Cl. of Cr. How say you? Is the Defendant Guilty of the Trespass and Misdemeanour whereof he is impeached, or Not Guilty?

Foreman. Guilty.

Which Verdict being Recorded, the Court rose.

Martis 12. Februarii, An. 1683. B. R.

L. C. J. Mr. Attorney, Have you any thing to move?

Mr. Att. Gen. I pray your Judgment against Mr. Hampden, my Lord, who was convicted the other Day of a great Misdemeanour.

L. C. J. Let Mr. Hampden come into the Court then. [Which he did.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, I need not aggravate the Heinousness of the Offence; for it appears both by the Information, and upon the Evidence to be beyond all Aggravation, wherefore I shall only pray your Judgment for the King, that you would please to set a good Fine upon him, and that he find Sutesies for his good Behaviour during his Life.

Mr. Williams. May it please your Lordship, I am of Counsel for Mr. Hampden.

L. C. J. Are the Rules out in this Cause?

Mr. Williams. Yes, my Lord, they are out.

L. C. J. Well then, what say you for Mr. Hampden?

Mr. Williams. Mr. Hampden does attend here according to the Condition of his Recognizance, and since Mr. Attorney hath prayed your Judgment, I shall not stir any thing as to the Indictment or the Verdict, but all I have to say for him is this, Mr. Hampden is but Heir apparent, his Father is alive; and so tho' he has the Prospect of a good Estate, yet he has but little at present in Possession; your Lordship knows what Magna Charta says, that there should be a Salvo Contentamento in all Fines, and how far that may be an Ingredient into your Lordship's Judgment, I leave to your Consideration.

L. C. J. For that matter, I cannot tell what Estate his is, I have no Knowledge of him, nor of his Estate, whether it be great or small; but Mr. Williams knows very well that the Crime, in conscience as well as Law, in case it had been proved by two Witnesses, would not only have wrought a Forfeiture of all his Estate, but a Forfeiture of his Life too, and all his Reputation, would have bastardized his Children, would have attainted and corrupted his Blood. So that there is no sort of Imagination but that the Crime was high enough of Conscience; and certainly deserves, if we can impose it adequate to its Desert, a very great Punishment. Mr. Hampden nor his Counsel can't deny but that they had a fair and a full Hearing, they had the Liberty to say and prove all that they could, and you cannot but say, Mr. Attorney was very fair in making several Concessions that he might very lawfully and rightfully have insisted upon. So that there can be no Exception of that kind. I am sorry that Mr. Hampden, a Gentleman of good Quality as he is by Birth, tho' he be a Person I never saw before he came here the last Day of the last Term upon his Habeas Corpus, that I know of. I say, I am sorry one of his Quality and Education, a studious Person, as it seems, by his own natural Inclination, and a learned Man, should be so unhappily engaged in a Design of this horribly evil Nature. But on the one Side as well as we must take care of the Subject, so on the other we must take care of the Government. Here was a Design of destroying the King, and subverting the Government, and bringing all into Confusion. Of this Design the Defendant is convicted, and we must take care to proportion the Punishment, and according to our Consciences and Oaths, and as we ought to have regard to the Offender, so also we are to have regard to the Government that he has offended.

Mr. Just. Withins. Mr. Williams, it was Amercements that were spoken of there in Magna Charta.

L. C. J. Ay, it was never meant of Fines for great Offences.

Then the Judges consulted together.

Mr. Just. Withins. Mr. Hampden, you know you are convicted of a very great Offence, as great an Offence as can be I think committed, unless it were High-Treason. For the Matter of it would have made you Guilty, if there had been two Witnesses. It was for conspiring to levy War against his Majesty, and for conspiring to raise an Insurrection and Rebellion within the Kingdom, a Conspiracy, of which some other Persons being lawfully convicted, they have suffered Death for it. You are a Person of an extraordinary good Family, and I am sorry one of your Family, that has flourished so long, and through so many Generations in great Honour and Reputation, and great Prosperity under the Monarchy of England, should come to conspire to deprive that King of his Government, whose Ancestors have protected and defended your Family, and to spoil that Monarchy that has been the Fountain of so much Prosperity and Honour to it. I am sorry it comes to my turn to pronounce the Sentence of the Court upon you, Mr. Hampden. I have not any personal Knowledge of you, but I have heard of you, and heard heretofore very well of you. You have had a good Education, and the Report of a learned and ingenious Person, which makes me yet wonder the more that you should engage in such a horrid Design as this was. Indeed, Mr. Hampden, I am satisfied no Fine can be too great, if any can be great enough for such an Offence. We cannot take Cognizance what your Estate is, 'tis reported there is a great Estate in your Family, it has been always represented to be so.

Mr. Hampden. I have nothing but for Life, and that is but little neither.

Mr. Just. Withins. I know not what it is truly, Sir. But it was always reported to me to be a very great Estate; but whatsoever it is, we are to look after the proportioning the Punishment as near as we can to the Offence.

My

My Lord, and the Court have considered of the Matter, and they think fit to give this Judgment upon you.

They set the Fine of Forty Thousand Pounds upon you, to be paid to the King, and you must be committed till you pay it.

L. C. J. And that you find Sureties for your good Behaviour during your Life.

Mr. Att. Gen. I pray he may be committed for his Fine.

L. C. J. Let it be so. Mr. Hampden, if you will apply yourself to the King, you may, and there perhaps you may find Mercy; we must, according to the Duty of our Places and Oaths, give such Judgment as the Law requires.

Mr. Just. Withins. Ay, in God's Name. You are in the King's Hands, and he may do what he pleases in it.

L. C. J. If a Crime of this Nature should have a little Punishment, it might encourage Offenders, and if we were to judge according to some Verdicts that have been given here for less Offences, where Gentlemen have given very much greater Damages than this Fine amounts to, this would be thought a moderate Fine. I am sorry any Man should bring himself into these Circumstances: The King, as he is the Fountain of Justice, so he is also of Mercy, and you and all the rest of his Subjects have Cause to bless God that you live under a Monarch that is very merciful. No doubt if you give an Account of your Contrition and Sorrow for your great Offence, and decently apply yourself to the King, he will think of shewing Mercy to you; but Justice is our Work that are Judges; and according to the Methods of Justice we think we cannot inflict less than we have done.

Mr. Williams. My Lord, I pray his Bail may be discharged.

L. C. J. Ay, his Bail is discharged, he being committed.

Mr. Williams. And for the High-Treason, he is discharged by the Habeas Corpus Act.

L. C. J. Yes, he is so, for there is no Prosecution.

Then Mr. Hampden was carried by the Marshal away Prisoner.

CXXIV. *The Trial of Laurence Braddon* and Hugh Speke at the King's-Bench for a Misdemeanour, in suborning Witnesses to prove the Earl of Essex† was murdered by his Keepers, Feb. 7, 1683. Hill. 36 Car. II.

THE Defendants, who had pleaded Not Guilty to an Information filed last Term, were now brought to Trial.

Cl. of Cr. Crier, Call the Defendants, Laurence Braddon, and Hugh Speke.

Crier. Laurence Braddon and Hugh Speke, come forth, or else this Inquest shall be taken by your Default.

Mr. Wallop. They appear.

Cl. of Cr. Gardez votrez Challenges. Swear Sir Hugh Middleton. [Which was done.] And there being no Challenges, the twelve Gentlemen sworn to try this Cause, were these.

Sir Hugh Middleton,
Thomas Harriott,
Thomas Earlsby,
Joshua Galliard,
Richard Shoreditch,
Charles Good,

Jur' Samuel Rouse,
Hugh Squire,
Nehemiah Arnold,
John Bisfield,
William Waite, and
James Supple.

Who being counted, Proclamation was made in usual Form for Information.

Cl. of Cr. Gentlemen, you of the Jury hearken to the Record. His Majesty's Attorney-General in this Court has exhibited an Information against the Defendants by the Names of Laurence Braddon of the Middle-Temple, Gentleman, and Hugh Speke of Lincoln's-Inn, Gentleman.

And the Information sets forth,

That whereas Arthur Earl of Essex, the 12th of July, in the 35th Year of the Reign of our Sovereign Lord Charles II. by the Grace of God, of England, Scotland, France and Ireland, King, Defender of the Faith, &c. was committed to the Prison of our Lord the King, in the Tower of London, for certain High-Treasons by him supposed to be committed. And the said Arthur Earl of Essex being a Prisoner in the Tower of London aforesaid, for the High-Treason aforesaid, the 13th Day of July, in the aforesaid 35th Year of the Reign of our said Sovereign Lord the King, that now is; not having the Fear of God before his Eyes, but being moved and seduced by the Instigation of the Devil at the Tower of London aforesaid, in the County of Middlesex aforesaid, himself feloniously, and as a Felon of himself, did kill and murder, as by an Inquisition taken at the Tower of London aforesaid, in the County of Middlesex aforesaid, the 14th Day of July, in the Year aforesaid, before Edward Fernham, Esq. then Coroner of our Lord the King, of the Liberty of the Tower of London aforesaid, upon the view of the Body of the said Arthur Earl of Essex; and now in this Court remaining of Record more plainly does appear. They the said Laurence Braddon and Hugh Speke not being ignorant of the Premises, but contriving, and maliciously and seditiously intending the Government of our said Lord the King of this Kingdom of England, into Hatred, Disgrace and Contempt to bring the 15th Day of August, in the aforesaid 35th Year of the Reign of our said Sovereign Lord the King that now is, and divers other Days and Times as well before as after, at the Parish of St. Clement Danes, in the County of Middlesex, with Force and Arms, &c. falsely, unlawfully, maliciously and seditiously did conspire, and endeavour to make the Subjects of our said Lord the King of this Kingdom of England, to believe that the Inquisition aforesaid was unduly taken, and that the said Arthur Earl of Essex, by certain Persons unknown, in whose Custody he was, was killed and murdered. And to perfect and bring to effect their malicious and seditious Contrivances aforesaid; they the said Laurence Braddon and Hugh Speke at the Parish of St. Clement Danes in the County of Middlesex aforesaid, the 15th Day of August, in the 35th Year aforesaid, falsely, unlawfully, unjustly, maliciously and seditiously did conspire to procure certain false Witnesses to prove, that the said Arthur Earl of Essex, was not a Felon of himself, but that the said Earl of Essex, by the said Persons unknown was killed and murdered: And to persuade other Subjects of our said Lord the King to believe this to be true, they, the said Laurence Braddon and Hugh Speke, falsely, maliciously, and seditiously, then and there in Writing did declare, and cause to be declared, the said Laurence Braddon to be a Person that would prosecute the Murder of the said Earl of Essex; to the great Scandal and Contempt of the Government of our Lord the King of this Kingdom of England, to the evil Example of all other in the like Case offending, and against the Peace of our Sovereign Lord the King, his Crown and Dignity. To this Information the Defendants have severally pleaded Not Guilty, and for their Trial have put themselves upon the Country, and His Majesty's Attorney-General likewise, which Country you are: Your Charge is to enquire, whether the Defendants, or either of them, are Guilty of this great Misdemeanour whereof they are impeached, or Not Guilty? If you find them, or either of them Guilty, you are to say so; if you find them or either of them Not Guilty, you are to say so, and no more, and hear your Evidence.

Then Proclamation was made for Evidence.

Mr. Dolb. May it please your Lordship, and you Gentlemen that are sworn: This is an Information preferred by Mr. Attorney-General, against the Defendants Laurence Braddon and Hugh Speke, and the Information does set forth, that whereas Arthur late Earl of Essex, the 12th of July last, was committed to the Tower of London for certain Treasons supposed to have been by him done: And the said Earl being so committed Prisoner to the Tower for Treason, not having the Fear of God before his Eyes, feloniously and as a Felon did kill and murder himself, as by an Inquisition taken before the Coroner of the Tower Liberty may more fully appear; yet the Defendants Laurence Braddon and Hugh Speke not being ignorant of the Premises, but designing to bring the Government into Hatred and Contempt, the 15th Day of August last, in the Parish of St. Clement Danes in this County, with Force and Arms, falsely, unlawfully, maliciously and seditiously did conspire together to make the King's Subjects believe, that the Inquisition aforesaid was unduly taken, and that the said Earl of Essex did not murder himself, but was by certain Persons unknown, in whose Custody he was, murdered. And it further sets forth, that these Defendants, Laurence Braddon and Hugh Speke, designed to disturb and disquiet the Minds of the King's Subjects, and to spread false Reports, did conspire to procure certain false Witnesses to prove that the said Earl of Essex was not a Felon of himself, but was by some Persons unknown killed and murdered: And to persuade other Subjects of our Sovereign Lord the King to believe the said Report, they did falsely, maliciously, unlawfully and seditiously cause to be declared in Writing, that the said Laurence Braddon was the Person that did prosecute the said Earl's Murder. And this was to the great Scandal of the Government, to the evil Example of all Persons in like Case offending, and against the Peace of the King, his Crown and Dignity. To this the Defendants have pleaded Not Guilty; if we prove it upon them, we make no question you will find it.

Mr. Att. Gen. May it please your Lordship, and you Gentlemen of the Jury, Mr. Speke and Mr. Braddon, these two Gentlemen, are accused of as High Conspiracy as ever has or could well happen in our Days, of throwing the Murder of a Person that killed himself upon the Government. And I must acquaint you, their Design was of an higher nature than barely that; for this Gentleman, my Lord of Essex, was committed to the Tower for the late Plot, and being so committed, when he had killed himself there, that was more than a thousand Witnesses to open the Eyes of the People, and confirm the Belief of the Conspiracy: And one would have thought, after that there had been an end of the Design, that these Protestant Gentlemen, as they call themselves, were carrying on; when the Earl of Essex, a Person of that Quality and Worth, should go to murder himself upon the sense of what he was Guilty of. So that the Design, Gentlemen, was to stifle the Plot, and at the same time they must throw this ill thing that the Earl had committed upon himself, upon the Government: That, Gentlemen, was the main Disgrace, in order to stifle that great Evidence of the Plot. And Mr. Braddon must of his own Head, not being put on by any of the Friends of the Earl of Essex, who were all very sensible the Earl had done this Fact, committed this Murder upon himself; but I say, he out of a true Principle to manage the Protestant Cause, as they call it, but indeed it was the Plot, he becomes the Prosecutor of this Business, and you will find him by the Proofs in the Case, a Man of many like Projects. For you will find him value himself upon these Titles, that he is the Prosecutor of the Earl of Essex's Murder, and the Inventor of the Protestants Flails, an Instrument, I suppose Gentlemen you have all heard of.

Now, Gentlemen, To make this appear to the World, Letters are sent into all parts of England of this Bruit and Report. He himself goes about to find Evidence: for it was so great a Truth, and there was such a plain Proof that the Earl of Essex had killed himself, that he must labour it to get Evidence. And he goes about it accordingly, and at length he meets with a little Child of twelve Years of Age, and he prepares for him, all with his own Hand-writing, a Disposition, which is a feigned Story all of it, and in every part of it will appear to be false, and there he mightily solicites this young Boy to sign it. He comes to his Father's House, carries him in a Coach, forces him away, and forces him to sign this Paper that he had thus prepared for him, all of his own Invention and Writing; and with the like Confidence as he appears here, (for so he does appear with very great Confidence, as you may observe) he attests it himself. And, Gentlemen, we shall shew you, that here up and down the Town he makes it his common Discourse what he was in hand with, and makes his boast of himself to be the Prosecutor of the Earl of Essex's † Ibid 552, 553.

Murder, and he had as good a Confederate as himself, Mr. Speke, and he having an Interest in the Country, whither the News must be sent all abroad, and Mr. Braddon must go to pick up Evidence, I know not where a great way off, of a Murder committed in the Tower. We shall prove to you, he had Letters Missive and Recommendatory from Mr. Speke to a Gentleman with whom Mr. Braddon was to advise; for they looked upon it to be as dangerous an Enterprize almost as the Plot itself, as indeed it was; therefore they must be wary, and Mr. Braddon is advised to go by a wrong Name; so this Mr. Speke and Braddon were to carry on and make up this Tragi-Comedy, for I can call it nothing else, for the Ridiculousness as well as the Dangerfulness of the Design. The Report was to be, that this Murder of the Earl of Essex was committed by the Officers that attended my Lord, and to fall out in time when His Majesty was in the Tower, as if the King himself had a hand in it. We shall trace it in all Parts of it by several Witnesses, and hope you will make them an Example, first by finding them Guilty, and the Court afterwards by a severe Punishment for such a villainous Practice, to scandalize the Government with the Murder of a noble Peer. We shall begin with shewing you the Inquisition, or rather first with the Conviction of the Earl of Essex for High-Treason, because it is said in the Record by way of Inducement. Call Mr. Reynolds. [Who was sworn.] Have you the Warrant of Commitment of my Lord of Essex?

Mr. Reynolds. Yes.

Mr. Att. Gen. Shew it the Court. Let the Clerk read it.

Mr. Reynolds. This is the Commitment that was delivered the Lieutenant of the Tower, together with my Lord of Essex.

Cl. of Cr. This is directed to Thomas Check, Esq; Lieutenant of His Majesty's Tower of London. Subscribed Leolin Jenkins, and dated—

Sir Leolin Jenkins Knight, of His Majesty's most Honourable Privy-Council, and Principal Secretary of State.

THESE are in His Majesty's Name to will and require you to receive into your Custody the Person of Arthur Earl of Essex here- sent you, being committed for High-Treason, in Compassing the Death of the King (whom God preserve), and Conspiring to Levy War against His Majesty. And him the said Earl of Essex to keep in safe Custody, until he shall be delivered by due Course of Law. And for so doing this shall be your Warrant. Given under my Hand and Seal at Whitehall, the 10th Day of July, 1683.

To Thomas Check, Esquire,
Lieutenant of His Majesty's Tower of London.

L. Jenkins.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, we will then read the Inquisition, that the Earl, being thus in the Tower, killed himself.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Shew the Inquisition. Where is Mr. Finch.

Mr. Farnham. Here I am. The Inquisition is returned here, and is upon Record.

Cl. of Cr. Here it is, Number 11. [He reads.]

London ff. An Inquisition indented, taken at the Tower of London aforesaid, in the County of Middlesex, the 14th Day of July, in the Year of the Reign of our Sovereign Lord Charles II. by the Grace of God of England, Scotland, France and Ireland, King, Defender of the Faith, &c. the 35th, before Edward Farnham, Esq; Coroner of our said Lord the King, of the Liberty of the Tower of London, aforesaid, upon View of the Body of Arthur Earl of Essex, then and there lying dead; by the Oaths of Samuel Colwall, Esq; William Fisher, Thomas Godsel, Esq; Thomas Hunt, Nathaniel Mountney, Esq; Thomas Potter, William How, Robert Burgoine, Eleazer Wickins, Thomas Hogshest, Henry Cripps, Richard Rudder, William Knipes, John Hudson, John Kettlebeter, Lancelot Coleson, Morgan Cowarn, Thomas Bryan, William Thackston, Richard Cliffe, Zebediah Pritchard, William Baford and Theophilus Carter, good and lawful Men of the Liberty of the Tower of London aforesaid, who being charged and sworn to enquire for our said Lord the King, when, by what means, and how, the said Arthur Earl of Essex came to his Death, upon their Oaths do say, that the said Arthur Earl of Essex, the 13th Day of July, in the Thirty fifth Year of the Reign of our said Sovereign Lord the King aforesaid, at the Tower of London aforesaid, in the County of Middlesex aforesaid, about the Hour of nine in the Forenoon of the same Day, not having the Fear of God before his Eyes, but being seduced and moved by the Instigation of the Devil of his Malice aforethought, at the Tower of London aforesaid, in the County aforesaid, then and there being alone in his Chamber, with a Razor of the Value of One Shilling, voluntarily and feloniously did cut his Throat, giving unto himself one mortal Wound, cut from one Jugular to the other, and by the Aspera Arteria, and the Windpipe, to the Vertebres of the Neck, both the Jugulars being thoroughly divided, of which said mortal Wound the said Arthur Earl of Essex instantly died; and so the Jurors aforesaid, say upon their Oaths, that the said Arthur Earl of Essex, in Manner and Form aforesaid, then and there, voluntarily and feloniously, as a Felon of himself, did kill and murder himself, against the Peace of our Sovereign Lord the King, his Crown and Dignity. In Witness whereof, as well I the Coroner aforesaid, as the Jurors aforesaid, to this Inquisition, have interchangeably put our Seals, the Day and Year aforesaid.

Mr. Att. Gen. Call Mr. Evans and Mr. Edwards. After this, my Lord, we shall shew you, that Mr. Braddon went about the Town, and declared the Earl was murdered, and he was the Prosecutor. There is Mr. Evans, swear him. [Which was done.]

Pray will you give an Account to my Lord and the Jury, what you know of Mr. Braddon's going about and declaring he was the Prosecutor of my Lord of Essex's Murder?

Mr. Evans. My Lord, all that I know of this Matter, is this. About the 17th of July last—

L. C. J. When is the Inquisition?

Sir George Cl. of Cr. It is the 14th of July.

Jefferies. L. C. J. Well, go on.

Mr. Evans. The 17th of July last I was at the Custom-house Key Shipping off some Lead, and the Person that brought me the Warrant, I told him I could not execute it without one of the Commissioners Officers; and I bid him go to Mr. Edwards, who was the next Officer adjoining to the Key, and he went to his House, and told him I was at the Water-side, and had a Warrant, which I desired him to be present while I executed it; Mr. Braddon it seems was then present in the Place with Mr. Edwards when this was told him, and hearing my Name, Mr. Braddon came down with Mr. Edwards, and found me then at Smith's Coffee-house, and Mr. Edwards told me Mr. Braddon had been with him examining his Son, in relation to a Matter of a Razor that was thrown out of my Lord of Essex's Window; and I presently replied, I desired they would not speak of any such Matter to me, for I had seen the Coroner's Inquisition upon Oath, where it was declared, the Thing was so and so, and two Persons had sworn what seemed to be contrary to this; and therefore I desired they would forbear any such Discourse to me.

VOL. III.

L. C. J. Who they?

Mr. Evans. Braddon and he were together.

L. C. J. Who he? Man.

Mr. Evans. Mr. Edwards. And withal I made my Application to Mr. Braddon, and I desired him he would not meddle with such a Matter, for I thought it might be prejudicial to him and Mr. Edwards too. Mr. Braddon made me no Answer, but went directly out of the Room.

L. C. J. What do you mean by so and so, and a Razor thrown out of a Window? We do not understand your so and so.

Mr. Evans. Relating to a Matter of a Razor.

L. C. J. Pr'ythee, we don't know what that Matter of a Razor is?

Mr. Evans. A Razor that was said to be thrown out of my Lord of Essex's Window.

L. C. J. Tell us what the Story was, Man.

Mr. Evans. Mr. Edwards told me, that Mr. Braddon was with him to examine his Son, relating to a Matter of throwing a Razor out of my Lord of Essex's Window: This is that he said, to the best of my Remembrance.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Was Braddon present there?

Mr. Evans. Yes, Mr. Braddon and Mr. Edwards were both present.

L. C. J. Well, What was the Discourse between you? Tell us plainly.

Mr. Evans. Says Mr. Edwards to me, Mr. Braddon has been to examine my Son about such a Matter, so I desired he would not discourse any thing of that Matter to me, and I told him, I advise you not to proceed; for I told him, it would be prejudicial both to him and Mr. Edwards too.

L. C. J. What is meant by this Matter? He examined my Son about a Matter, and I desired him he would not discourse of this Matter; What is all that Matter?

Mr. Just. Holloway. What did you apprehend by it?

Mr. Evans. I apprehend that Mr. Braddon had been to examine Mr. Edwards's Son about such a Matter.

L. C. J. What Matter, Man?

Mr. Evans. His dispersing of any such Report.

L. C. J. What Report?

Mr. Evans. A Report of throwing a Razor out of my Lord of Essex's Window.

L. C. J. Here is a Razor thrown out of a Window, and a Matter of I know not what.

Mr. Just. Withins. Suppose a Man should throw a Razor out of a Window, what signifies that?

L. C. J. Where heard he of that Matter?

Mr. Evans. This is all I heard, my Lord, I am upon my Oath.

L. C. J. But I wish thou wouldst let us know what it is thou didst hear?

Mr. Jones. Was there no Talk of a bloody Razor?

Mr. Evans. No, not a Word of it.

L. C. J. How came you to be frightened then, and to be unwilling to hear of that Matter, and to tell him, you thought it might be prejudicial to him and Mr. Edwards?

Mr. Evans. I told him I had seen the Coroner's Inquest, where it was proved, that the Razor lay in such a Place; therefore I desired they would not speak to me of any such Matter, and I desired Mr. Braddon not to proceed in it, for you may do yourself and Mr. Edwards too some Prejudice.

Mr. Att. Gen. Look you, Mr. Evans, what did you understand by the throwing the Razor out of the Window, and giving him Caution not to proceed? The Razor might be found there, what was the Meaning of it?

Mr. Evans. May it please your Lordship, there was a Report at the Custom-house that very Morning the Earl of Essex cut his Throat, that there was a Razor thrown out of the Window.

Mr. Jones. You did advise Braddon, you say, not to proceed in it?

Mr. Evans. Yes.

Mr. Jones. How came you to advise him so?

Mr. Evans. Because it might be prejudicial to him and Mr. Edwards too.

Mr. Att. Gen. Was there no Talk between Mr. Edwards, Mr. Braddon and you, that Mr. Braddon would be a Prosecutor of the Murder of the Earl of Essex, upon your Oath?

Mr. Evans. Not one Word or Syllable. For Mr. Braddon spake not one Word, good or bad: I gave an Account to Secretary Jenkins of every Word that passed.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did not you advise him not to prosecute the Business?

Mr. Evans. I did advise him not to disperse such a Report.

L. C. J. What Report?

Mr. Evans. Of a Razor being thrown out of my Lord of Essex's Window.

Mr. Att. Gen. Why, suppose there had been a Razor thrown out of the Window, What then?

Mr. Evans. Then it was contrary to the Information and Evidence given before the Coroner.

L. C. J. Why so? Why might it not be thrown out after it was found in the Place where the Inquisition says? Thou art a wonderful cautious Man; Where is the Danger of the Report of a Razor being thrown out of a Window? There must be something more in it, if we could but get it out of him.

Mr. Evans. Will your Lordship be pleased to hear me?

L. C. J. Ay, I do hear thee, but I do not understand thee.

Mr. Evans. May it please your Lordship, I will read the Words verbatim that I gave to the Secretary.

L. C. J. Why, I believe you can read, and I make no doubt you can write too, or you are not fit to be a Custom-house Officer.

Mr. Evans. I put in this Paper to the Secretary, and will repeat what I said then, as near as I can, upon my Oath.

5 R

L. C. J.

L. C. J. I care not a Farthing what you delivered to the Secretary; tell us what thou hast to say plainly?

Mr. Evans. May it please your Lordship, I will read it what it is.

Mr. Sol. Gen. You may look upon your Paper to refresh your Memory, but you must not read it here.

Mr. Evans. If it please you, I will tell you the Reason and Occasion I had to go to the Secretary.

L. C. J. I know not what Occasion thou hadst to go to the Secretary, nor do I care what thou didst when thou camest there, it may be thou madest three Legs, it may be never a one; what is that to us? What canst thou say to the Matter here before us?

Mr. Evans. That is all I can say, my Lord, It was an Accident that they came into my Company. And to tell you the Manner and the Occasion, That Person that brought me the Warrant, saying to Mr. Edwards that I was below, Mr. Braddon hearing my Name named, comes down with Mr. Edwards, for he had told Mr. Edwards I was related to him, and they both came to the Coffee-House, and there they began to discourse about this Matter.

Mr. Just. Withins. Who began to discourse?

Mr. Evans. Mr. Edwards.

L. C. J. Well, what was it he said to thee?

Mr. Evans. Mr. Edwards began thus: Says he, Mr. Evans, this Gentleman has been at my House to examine my Son concerning a Report that is spread abroad concerning a Razor that was thrown out of the Window of the Earl of Essex's Lodgings that Morning he cut his Throat. I hearing of that, said I, Gentlemen, I have read the Coroner's Inquest that is in print, and it is otherwise declared there: And therefore let there be no Discourse of any such Matter, for I believe no such Thing. And, said I to that Gentleman, Mr. Braddon, pray forbear meddling in any such Thing, for Mr. Edwards is a poor Man, and has divers Children, he may be ruined, and you likewise may be ruined yourself, if you proceed any farther in it.

Mr. Att. Gen. We shall interpret this Matter by our other Witnesses.

L. C. J. Ay, so you had need, for there is nothing to be made of this Fellow's Evidence.

Mr. North. Pray, by the Oath you have taken, when you gave that Advice, did Mr. Braddon make you no Answer?

Mr. Evans. No, none at all.

Mr. Braddon. [Lifting up his Hands in an unusual manner.]

Mr. Evans. Pray, will you answer one Thing?

L. C. J. Pray, Sir, let us have no Elevation of Hands. Your Confidence does not so well become you in a Court of Justice, this is not a Cause wherein you need use so much Confidence.

Mr. Braddon. Sir, pray answer, did not I—

L. C. J. What is it you would ask him?

Mr. Braddon. My Lord, I desire he may be asked, whether I, with a Brother of his, did not come to his Country-House, on the Monday immediately after my Lord of Essex's Death, and whether at his Table there was not a Report then of a Razor being seen to be thrown out of my Lord of Essex's Window?

L. C. J. Pray ask by your Counsel, they are most proper to ask Questions for you. Tell them what you would have asked, and don't make long Stories yourself.

Mr. Wallop. Were you not in Company with Mr. Braddon, the Monday after my Lord of Essex's Death?

Mr. Freke. What was the Report, Sir, at your Table, upon the Monday next after my Lord of Essex's Death?

Mr. Evans. My Lord, if your Lordship please—

L. C. J. Pray, Sir, make a short and plain Answer to what Questions are asked you, and let us have none of your Circumlocutions, and your Discourses of the Matter; but let us understand what you say.

Mr. Evans. I will, my Lord.

L. C. J. What is your Question?

Mr. Braddon. Whether I was not upon the Monday after the Earl of Essex's Death at his Table, where there was a Discourse of a Report that a Razor was thrown out of the Window, before Murder was cried out, and concerning a Boy which went to take it up?

L. C. J. What a Story is here! Pray ask him a fair and short Question, if he can remember what was said at his House? We are got quite to the Custom-house and the Coffee-house again, and I know not where.

Mr. Freke. What Discourse was there at your Table, Sir, the immediate Monday after the Earl of Essex's Death, concerning a Razor thrown out of a Window?

Mr. Evans. My Lord, this, to the best of my Remembrance, is what I have to say, and remember of the thing, that a Gentleman being with him—

L. C. J. Who?—Mr. Evans. Mr. Braddon.

Mr. Wallop. Where was this?—Mr. Evans. In the Country.

Mr. Wallop. Where, in what Country?—Mr. Evans. In Essex.

Mr. Wallop. What was the Place's Name?

Mr. Evans. At Wansted, my Lord; and being there, and he plucking out a Paper.

L. C. J. He, who?

Mr. Evans. A Brother of mine, that that Gentleman came down with to see me.

L. C. J. What is his Name?

Mr. Evans. His Name is Mr. William Hatfell.

L. C. J. With whom did he come?

Mr. Evans. With this Person.

L. C. J. With this Person, who is this Person?—Mr. Evans. Mr. Braddon.

L. C. J. Why can't thou not name him, without this wire-drawing? Thou art a most exact Custom-house Officer, I'll warrant thee, thou can't not make a plain Answer to a plain Question.

Mr. Evans. My Lord, I beg your Pardon, I do not know the Methods of the Court.

L. C. J. Pry thee, I care not for thy Methods, nor thy Matter; but deal plainly with us.

Mr. Evans. My Brother, Mr. Hatfell, came down along with Mr. Braddon to my House at Wansted in Essex, on the Monday after my Lord of Essex's Death, and coming down, my Brother, Mr. Hatfell, pulled out the Coroner's Inquest upon Oath that was printed, and shewing of it to me,

I read it; and as soon as ever I had read it, said I, Mr. Edwards, that was at the Custom-house, that very Morning when the Earl of Essex's Throat was cut, did declare to me upon the Custom-house Key, That his Son did declare that the Razor was thrown out of the Window, which seems to contradict this Paper, that says, it was found lying by him.

Mr. Freke. Was this before Mr. Braddon was with Mr. Edwards?

Mr. Evans. I can't tell that.

Mr. Freke. Was it before Mr. Braddon and Mr. Edwards came to you to the Coffee-house?—Mr. Evans. Yes, I believe it was.

Mr. Att. Gen. You say Mr. Braddon came with Mr. Hatfell to your House at Wansted?—Mr. Evans. Yes.

Mr. Att. Gen. Who was the Person that told you this Story?

Mr. Evans. He brought down the printed Paper with him, and upon plucking out that Paper, and reading of it, the Story was told.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray, who was the Person that told him it was so reported at the Custom-house?

Mr. Evans. I made that Answer myself, immediately upon reading the Paper; for I observed what the Coroner's Inquest had returned, and upon that I made this Observation, That it seemed to contradict what was declared at the Custom-house that Morning my Lord of Essex cut his Throat.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray, who declared there that the Razor was thrown out of the Window?

Mr. Evans. It was Mr. Edwards told me.

L. C. J. Why consider with yourself now, You say first of all Edwards and Braddon came to me to the Coffee-house.

Mr. Evans. That was at another Day.

L. C. J. I am sure you swore so at first.

Mr. Evans. With your Lordship's Favour—

L. C. J. And with your Favour too, Sir. Pray will you hear me? I have heard you a great while I am sure to no Purpose. But consider with yourself, and pray be pleased to reconcile what you say now with what you said at first, if you can. You say first of all Edwards and Braddon came to me to the Custom-house, and found me out at the Coffee-house, and that Edwards should say, Somebody had been with his Son, in order to examine him about a Razor that was thrown out of my Lord of Essex's Window, and that you immediately cried out, Have a care of that, for that contradicts the Inquisition that I have seen in Print, which declares as though the Razor was found in the Room. And after that you say, it was that you saw the Inquisition when Hatfell came down from Braddon, and you told him of the Report at the Custom-house. How came you, if you had not seen the Inquisition till then, to give out such Words at the Custom-house? Have a care of meddling with that, because it contradicts the Inquisition?

Mr. Evans. My Lord, this was several Days before that.

Mr. Att. Gen. Yes, my Lord, this Discourse at Wansted was before that at the Custom-house.

Mr. Wallop. This that he now speaks of is an Answer to Mr. Braddon's Question, which was about a Discourse that has passed before this other at the Custom-house. This that he speaks of, the Discourse at a Coffee-House, was afterward, but indeed he first spake of it; but these were two distinct Matters at several Times. This last of the Custom-house was, when he had made the Examination of the Boy, as that Witness says.

L. C. J. Therefore I think it was fit to explain it, for it looked very inconsistent before, what thou saidst at first, and what thou say'st now; but if thou tellest me thy Essex-matter was before thy Coffee-house matter it is well, otherwise the Matter, I assure you, looked very ill.

Mr. Evans. This is the Truth, my Lord, and I can tell no more.

Mr. Att. Gen. Take the Times, my Lord, and you will see he does speak very notably. The 13th of July my Lord of Essex murder'd himself, the 14th of July the Inquisition was taken before the Coroner; pray, what was the Day that Hatfell and this Gentleman came down to you to Essex?

Mr. Evans. I can't tell that, Sir, truly; but it was before this Matter of the Examination of the Boy.

L. C. J. But pray let me ask you one Question, if your Matter about the Inquisition in the Country was before the Matter of your cautious Discourse at the Custom-house, how came you to tell them, I heard this Report of a Razor thrown out of the Window that Morning the Earl of Essex cut his own Throat?

Mr. Evans. Mr. Edwards reported this same Thing that very same Morning to me and several others at the Custom-house Key.

L. C. J. Why did you not tell us this before?

Mr. Evans. I beg your Pardon, my Lord, I do not understand the Methods of the Court.

Mr. Wallop. Mr. Hatfell gave the Occasion by pulling out the Inquisition.

L. C. J. Pray, Sir, make your Observations anon, let the King's Counsel go on with their Evidence.

Mr. Att. Gen. What Discourse had Mr. Braddon with you then at that Time, when Hatfell came down with him to your House you say, and pulling out the Inquisition you read it, and made Answer, you heard at the Custom-house Key such a Report that very Morning the Earl murder'd himself?

Mr. Evans. Mr. Braddon was walking up and down the Room, I did not speak it to him, but I spake it to Mr. Hatfell; but I believe Braddon over-heard and took notice of it.

Mr. Just. Withins. Did he concern himself about it?

Mr. Evans. No, not much, I did not hear him say any thing, but he walked up and down the Room.

L. C. J. Now after all this Discourse of the Matter, for aught I can understand, the Matter is but this: He says, Edwards before the Meetings either at his House in Essex, or at the Coffee-house by the Custom-house, reported to him; as though the Earl of Essex had not murdered himself, but somebody else had done it for him. And this was reported at the Custom-house that Morning the Earl of Essex cut his own Throat, and he hearing this Report at the Custom-house at that Time, afterwards comes Braddon and Hatfell to his House into Essex, and after Hatfell had shew'd him the Paper of the Inquisition in Print, he said, I heard some Discourse from Mr. Edwards at the Custom-house of a quite other Nature; and then he says, Braddon and Edwards came to the Coffee-house, and there it was he desired them not to talk of that Matter; for, said he, that contradicts the Inquisition I saw before. This is the Substance of what he said.

Mr.

Mr. Att. Gen. And hereby it does appear, that Braddon, and Evans and Edwards, and Hatfell, are all of a Gang.

L. C. J. Have you the Information he gave in to the Secretary, Mr. Attorney-General, that that was given before the Council?

Mr. Att. Gen. Yes, 'tis much the same with what he hath said now.

Mr. Evans. Yes, my Lord; 'tis verbatim as I have declared now.

Mr. Att. Gen. Only this other part of Hatfell and the Meeting in Essex was spoken of since, that was not declared before.

Mr. Evans. No, my Lord, that I did not speak of, because I was not examined about it.

Mr. Att. Gen. That was part of the Secret.

Mr. Evans. No, it was common Discourse with me. And I did not think any thing of it; what Mr. Edwards said at the Custom-house, was spoken to a great many others as well as me, and the People seemed to be surprized with an account of the thing at the first News of my Lord of Essex's Death. And if I had thought it material, I could have brought a great many that were by then; but Mr. Edwards is here brought himself, I suppose he will not deny it.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Look you, Sir, you say that very Morning my Lord of Essex killed himself, Mr. Edwards discoursed, and made this Report to you at the Custom-house, pray tell what the Discourse was; what he said to you; and then tell us what time of Day it was?

Mr. Evans. To the best of my Remembrance it was about Eleven o'Clock; there were several Persons standing together, among the rest Captain Goodland, and some of the Searchers, and Mr. Edwards was there; and said he, I am informed from Home, That my Boy has been at Home, and given an Account to my Wife, that being in the Tower, he saw a Hand throw a Razor out of a Window, and he named my Lord of Essex's Window; and this Mr. Edwards did not only tell me, but to a whole Coffee-house of People, this Matter of Fact.

Mr. Just. Holloway. Did not Mr. Edwards tell you, That somebody had been examining his Boy about that Report?

Mr. Evans. That was the second time, when Mr. Braddon and Mr. Edwards came together.

Mr. Just. Holloway. Who was it had been examining his Boy did he say?

Mr. Evans. Mr. Braddon, he said, had been to examine his Son.

Mr. Just. Holloway. That was after the Discourse at Essex, that Braddon came to examine his Son concerning the Razor.

Mr. Wallop. Yes, it was after the Discourse at Essex, where Hatfell plucking out the Paper, Evans told Mr. Braddon first of this Razor.

L. C. J. Well, make your Defence by and by, Mr. Wallop: Do not make your Remarks now.

Mr. Att. Gen. Come, Mr. Edwards. Crier swear him [Which was done.]

L. C. Gen. What do you ask him, Mr. Attorney?

Mr. Att. Gen. Mr. Edwards, Pray, will you give the Court an Account of this Business; for I don't know whether you heard what that Gentleman that went out last said, he says, you raised this Story, Pray give an Account what you know of it?

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray tell what you know of Mr. Braddon's coming to your Son, and what Discourse he or you had about the Murder of the Earl of Essex?

Mr. Edwards. The Report that Mr. Braddon came to enquire after, was with us some three Days before; it was in our Family three Days before, and upon the 17th of July—

L. C. J. What was the Report, Mr. Edwards, before Mr. Braddon came to you?

Mr. Edwards. The Report I have already declared before the Council.

L. C. J. But you must tell us too what it was.

Mr. Edwards. The Report of the Boy the 13th of July, about 10 o'Clock, as I was informed by my Family, and by the Boy afterwards by Word of Mouth, was this, He comes in about ten o'Clock, says he, I have been at the Tower (to one of his Sisters), and I have seen His Majesty and the Duke of York, and the Earl of Essex has cut his Throat, and I see an Hand throw a Razor out of the Window, and one came out of the House, a Maid, or a Woman in a White Hood and a Stuff Coat, and took it up, and went in again, and then I heard a Noise as of Murder cried out. This was the Boy's Report, and more than as his Report I cannot speak to it.

L. C. J. This was your Son, was it not?

Mr. Edwards. Yes, the younger of them. The two Boys were that Morning going to Merchant-Taylor's School together as they used to do, and by the way hearing the King was in the Tower, this younger Boy that was well acquainted with the Tower, gave his elder Brother the slip and went into the Tower, and rambled about from Place to Place.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did not you examine him?

Mr. Edwards. Ay, I did examine him.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did not you find that he denied it again?

Mr. Edwards. No, I did examine him, and I found no denial of any thing at all that he had reported, till Mr. Braddon came to make Enquiry. As soon as he came to make the Enquiry, and I understood what Mr. Braddon's Business was, I begged of him that he would not insist upon it by no means, I begged of him as if I had begged for my Life, but he was so zealous in the Business, that nothing would satisfy him. And after I had told Mr. Braddon that which I could not deny, which was the Boy's Report, I left him and went down to the Custom-house, and some of my Family discoursed the Boy at that rate, that he began to deny it, and in less than half an Hour's time recollected himself, and began to own it again; and so the Boy was off and on till the time he was before the Council; and to this Day he seems to stand in the Denial, whether he will do it now or no I can't tell.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did you acquaint Mr. Braddon, That you had found this Boy to be a lying Boy, and detected him in Lies several times?

Mr. Edwards. May it please you, Sir, I acquainted him with thus much: Said I, Mr. Braddon, As I have dealt ingenuously with you, to let you know what the Boy's Report was, so I must likewise tell you, that I cannot, nor will undertake to assert the truth of it; and presently upon that my Daughter told me, the Boy had many times excused his playing Truant by false Stories.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did you acquaint Mr. Braddon, that your Boy was a lying Boy at that time?

Mr. Edwards. I think I did not at that instant of time.

L. C. J. How old is this Boy you talk of?

Mr. Edwards. About 13 Years of Age, my Lord.

Mr. Att. Gen. What do you know of Mr. Braddon's forcing your Boy to sign any thing that he had prepared after this?

Mr. Sol. Gen. When you told him your Boy had deny'd it, what did he say? Was he pleased and satisfied?

Mr. Edwards. He was not told it by me, but some of my Family.

Mr. Sol. Gen. How did he behave himself?

Mr. Edwards. At the same time they told him he denied it, at the same time they told him he owned it again.

Mr. Sol. Gen. How did Mr. Braddon behave himself?

Mr. Edwards. Like a civil Gentleman. I saw nothing else by him, but that he was very zealous in the Business, that is the truth of it, nothing could persuade him to desist.

Mr. Just. Holloway. Pray did you ask Mr. Braddon, or did he tell you, what was the reason that he was so inquisitive about this Razor, and the Report of the Boy?

Mr. Edwards. As to that he told me, he would let me know the reason of it, which was out of Conscience.

Mr. Jones. Did not Mr. Braddon carry your Son before several Justices of Peace?

Mr. Edwards. Before none as I know of, not one truly to my Knowledge.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did you understand he had taken your Boy from your House in a Coach?

Mr. Edwards. Never till he carried him into his Majesty's Presence before the Council, and I knew not that till the Boy came Home.

Mr. Thompson. Mr. Attorney, Have you done with him? May I ask him a Question?

Mr. Att. Gen. Ay, ask him what you will.

Mr. Thompson. If I understand you right, Sir, this Report of the Boy's was that Morning that the Earl of Essex was murdered—

L. C. J. Was murdered, murdered himself, Man.

Mr. Thompson. My Lord, I mean the Day of his Death. Now I would ask you, Sir, when that was?

Mr. Edwards. The Boy's Report was this, Sir,—

Mr. Thompson. I ask you not what his Report was, but when? What Day it was?

Mr. Edwards. The 13th of July. That Day the Earl of Essex cut his Throat.

Mr. Thompson. How many Days after that was it when Mr. Braddon came to you?

Mr. Edwards. It was not till the 17th of July.

Mr. Thompson. Had you discoursed of the Report of your Boy at the Custom-house, or any where else, that same Day he came to you?

Mr. Edwards. I cannot say that.

Mr. Thompson. Had you discoursed it before Mr. Braddon spake to you, upon your Oath?—Mr. Edwards. Yes, I believe I had.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Had you discoursed it before your Boy told you?

Mr. Edwards. I should then indeed have been the Contriver of the Story.

Mr. Att. Gen. So it is like enough you were.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Had you discoursed it to any body before you went home to your own House, upon your Oath, Sir?

Mr. Edwards. Upon my Oath then I discoursed nothing of that Nature, not a Tittle of it, nor knew nothing of it, till I had it from my own Family.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did you not discourse of it before you went home?

Mr. Edwards. No, when I came Home they told me of it.

L. C. J. I ask you again, Sir, Did not you tell it before you came Home? Mr. Edwards. About ten o'Clock, I having heard the News of the Earl of Essex's cutting his Throat, at the Custom-house, I stepped Home, being very near to my own House, and as soon as I came in at the Door, the Family began to give me an Account what News the Boy brought in.

L. C. J. That was the first time you heard of it?

Mr. Edwards. Yes, that was the first time I heard of it.

L. C. J. And did you not discourse of it till after that?

Mr. Edwards. No.

L. C. J. Call Mr. Evans, let him come in again.

Mr. Att. Gen. Let Mr. Evans come in again.

L. C. J. Mr. Evans, I would ask you this Question, There were three times that you say, I think, that you had Discourse with Edwards about the Matter, as you call it, once at Essex, and twice at the Custom-house?

Mr. Sol. Gen. No, not in Essex, it was Hatfell and Braddon, my Lord, that came to him there, Edwards was not there.

L. C. J. When you first had a Discourse with Edwards about this Matter, what was it that Edwards did say to you?

Mr. Evans. Being upon Custom-house Key, and Captain Goodland and several others standing upon the Key, that very Morning my Lord of Essex's Throat was cut, about eleven o'Clock Mr. Edwards came to us, being standing upon the Key, and told us, That he was informed his Boy had been at the Tower, and came Home and told his Mother, he saw a Hand throw a Razor out of a Window, and that he went to take it up, and a Maid or a Woman came and took it up, and went in again.

L. C. J. Evans, Did he tell you this as if he had been at Home?

Mr. Evans. No, I think it was that he had it from Home by some Hand or other.

Mr. Edwards. I was at Home.

Mr. Evans. My Lord, At two o'Clock in the Afternoon, when he came again to the Custom-House, he did tell us he had been at Home, and his Boy did tell him the same Story.

L. C. J. But when he had told you before he had dined, did he say, he had been at Home?

Mr. Edwards. My Family can testify I was at Home between ten and eleven o'Clock.

Mr. Evans. To the best of my remembrance he told me he heard so from Home.

L. C. J. Before he went Home, you say, he told you of this, and that was 10 o'Clock in the Morning, and about two o'Clock in the Afternoon, he said, he had been at Home, and it was true.

Mr. Evans.

Mr. Evans. Yes, my Lord.

Mr. Edwards. My Lord, I was at Home.

L. C. J. Mr. Edwards, Did you tell him so, or did you not?

Mr. Edwards. It is like I might say so about 10 o'Clock, but not before I had received the Report at Home.

Mr. Evans. I understood it so, my Lord, That he had heard from Home.

L. C. J. I ask you this upon your Oath, mind the Question, and answer me plainly, Did you speak to him, that you had such a Report from Home, or did you not?

Mr. Edwards. When I told it him, I had it from home, for I brought it from Home.

L. C. J. Nay, Did you tell him you had such a Report from Home at 10 o'Clock, or no?

Mr. Edwards. I told him that I had met with such a Report.

L. C. J. From whom?

Mr. Edwards. From my Family at Home, for the Boy came not to me to tell it.

L. C. J. Then did you see Mr. Evans about two o'Clock that afternoon?

Mr. Edwards. 'Tis probable I did.

L. C. J. Did you, or did you not?

Mr. Edwards. Yes, I believe I might, I beseech your Lordship give me leave to speak. Mr. Evans and I am conversant Forenoon and Afternoon every Day, we have business together.

Mr. Evans. We have Business, my Lord, about shipping of Goods.

Mr. Edwards. But, my Lord, if you please, I will tell you, that is the Occasion of our being together.

L. C. J. Answer me my Question, Did you, or did you not tell him so?

Mr. Edwards. I did not acquaint him with it before I had been at Home, and received it from my own Family.

L. C. J. Look you, Sir, Don't you go about to evade the Question, to trifle with the Court, you must answer me my Question directly, and upon your Oath, Did you tell him you had Notice from Home of such a Report, or no?

Mr. Edwards. I did not receive Notice from Home, but I brought it from Home.

L. C. J. Did you tell him you had it from Home.

Mr. Edwards. I told him I had it from my Family, who told me the Boy had made such a Report.

L. C. J. Did you tell him you had it from your Boy, or received Notice from Home about it?

Mr. Edwards. I did not tell him any thing before I had been at Home.

L. C. J. Well, then, answer me this Question. Did you tell him in the Afternoon at two o'Clock; Now I have been at Home and examined my Boy, and find it so as I told you?

Mr. Edwards. I examined my Boy at Dinner, and I found the Boy agreed with the Report of my Daughter, and confirmed it.

L. C. J. I ask you what you told Mr. Evans, not what your Boy or your Daughter told you?

Mr. Edwards. It is probable I might tell Mr. Evans the same Story after Dinner at two o'Clock, that I did before.

L. C. J. Now tell us the Passage again, Mr. Evans, as you heard it.

Mr. Evans. To the best of my remembrance, at two o'Clock in the Afternoon, Mr. Edwards came and told us, he had examined the Boy, and says he, the Boy has confirmed all that I told you.

L. C. J. But before that in the Morning what did he say?

Mr. Evans. I cannot say exactly the Time, but I think it was about ten o'Clock. There were four or five more besides myself standing at Custom-house Key, and Mr. Edwards came to us, and told us, says he, I am informed from Home, as I understood it, not that he had been at Home, but that he heard it from Home, that his Boy had been at the Tower, had seen an Hand throw a Razor out of a Window.

L. C. J. What said he at two of the Clock?

Mr. Evans. He said he had examined his Boy, and he said the same thing, that he told us he had heard in the Morning.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, we are now but upon the Entrance of our Evidence, to shew upon what slender Grounds, how slight a Foundation there was for this Gentleman to undertake this Prosecution.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Mr. Edwards, Pray let me ask you a Question, Did Mr. Braddon tender any Paper to your Son to sign?

Mr. Edwards. I was informed he did do it afterwards, but I saw him not do any such Thing.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did you never say that Mr. Braddon had tendered a Paper to your Son to sign?

Mr. Edwards. I do not believe I ever did say so, I do not remember any such Thing.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray recollect your Memory, and tell us whether you did, or did not?

Mr. Edwards. I thank God, Sir, that he has given me my Memory and my Understanding, I bless him for it.

Mr. Att. Gen. But it were well if thou hadst any Honesty too.

Mr. Edwards. And Honesty too, Sir: I have not lived these 39 Years at the Custom-house without Honesty. I never had my Honesty questioned to this Day. I am sure no body can tax me with Dishonesty.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray Mr. Edwards let your Anger alone for a while, and answer the Question that I shall ask you: Did your Son refuse to sign that Paper?

Mr. Edwards. He did sign it at last.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did he refuse to sign it?

Mr. Edwards. I do not know whether he refused it or no.

Mr. Just. Withens. Did you hear that your Son refused it?

Mr. Edwards. I did hear that he had signed it.

Mr. Just. Withens. But did you hear that he refused to sign it?

Mr. Edwards. The Boy did not tell me he had refused to sign it. I did not hear him refuse it.

L. C. J. Thou dost prevaricate very strangely, I must tell thee that, notwithstanding thy Reputation of 39 Years of Honesty: Pristee, answer plainly, Did you hear at any time, that your Son had refused to sign it?

Mr. Edwards. No, my Lord, I did not, to the best of my remembrance.

L. C. J. That is a plain Answer, Man; but thou dost so shuffle up and down, one can't tell what to make of what thou sayest.

Mr. Thompson. Sir, I desire to ask you one Question, Whether ever Mr. Braddon and you had any former Acquaintance?

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray, stay, Sir, and if you please, spare your Question a little, for we have not yet done with Mr. Edwards. Mr. Edwards, pray answer me, Did Mr. Braddon ever tell you, that he had other Informations to confirm this Report of your Son from others?

Mr. Edwards. Truly, I do not remember he said any such Thing.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did you ever say he told you so? Consider of it, and remember your former Examination.

Mr. Edwards. 'Tis like since he may have said so, but not at his first coming.

Mr. Sol. Gen. At his first coming did your Son sign his Paper then?

Mr. Edwards. No, he did not, as I am informed, I saw it not.

Mr. Sol. Gen. But afterwards you say, Mr. Braddon did tell you, he had other Evidence to confirm it.

Mr. Edwards. It may be he might, I can't say it positively.

Mr. Att. Gen. You say he did not sign the Paper at his first coming?

Mr. Edwards. No, I am informed he did not.

Mr. Sol. Gen. How do you know he did sign it at last?

Mr. Edwards. My Wife and Daughters Information.

L. C. J. But how then can you say, That you never heard he did refuse it?

Mr. Edwards. My Lord, he did not tender a Paper to him to sign, till he had been two or three times there, as I have heard, it was not tender'd the first time he came.

L. C. J. I wonder how thou hast escaped 39 Years with such a Reputation.

Mr. Edwards. My Lord, I never was thought otherwise, nor I hope never gave any occasion for such a Thought.

L. C. J. I assure thee, I do not, nor can take thee for one.

Mr. Edwards. I hope I have done nothing to make your Lordship think the contrary.

L. C. J. Yes, thou hast. Thou didst nothing but shuffle up and down, thou art to consider thou art upon thy Oath, and must answer Questions plainly.

Mr. Edwards. My Lord, I do answer as truly as I can.

Mr. Att. Gen. Hark you then, Mr. Edwards, answer me.

L. C. J. Speak the Truth, and nothing but the Truth, that is all that is required of thee; no Court of Justice ought to be afraid to hear Truth. Let Truth come out of God's Name.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did Mr. Braddon ever tell you, That he had other Evidence besides your Son?

Mr. Edwards. I do not remember he said any such thing at his first coming.

L. C. J. How thou dost shuffle again. Answer plainly.

Mr. Att. Gen. I ask you, Whether ever he did say it?

Mr. Edwards. Yes, he did say so afterwards.

Mr. Sol. Gen. I must ask you one Question more, (for I see 'tis very difficult to get it out of you) Pray did he tell you that he had other Evidence besides your Son, before he signed the Paper, or after?

Mr. Edwards. It was before, as I take it. I speak to the best of my Knowledge, my Lord, I can say no more.

L. C. J. If thou hast a mind to continue the Reputation thou hast got, as thou sayest, the way is to answer Questions, and speak the Truth plainly, let it concern whom it will.

Mr. Edwards. I labour to do it, my Lord, to the best of my Understanding and Capacity.

L. C. J. I would not have thee say a Tittle more than the Truth, but let the Truth come out.

Mr. Freke. Now, Sir, I would ask you, if they have done with you, Did you ever know Mr. Braddon before the 17th of July? Or did you ever see him before?

Mr. Edwards. No, I never had any Knowledge of him, nor ever heard a Word of him.

Mr. Wallop. Mr. Edwards, the Question was asked of you, Whether Mr. Braddon did say, There was other Evidence besides your Son; Pray when was that?

Mr. Edwards. He did not at the first time, but afterwards he did.

Mr. Wallop. That was a good while after, he had been with the Boy first?

L. C. J. Make your Observations by and by, Mr. Wallop. This is not a Time for them.

Mr. Att. Gen. Then where is Edwards, the Boy?

[Who was brought forthwith into Court.]
Mr. Edwards. I charge you in the Presence of Almighty God, speak Truth, Child.

Mr. Sol. Gen. And so should you too.

Mr. Edwards. Be sure to say nothing but the Truth.

L. C. J. And Child, turn about, and say, Father, be sure you say nothing but the Truth.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, This is the Boy, he is very little and very young, will your Lordship have him sworn? What Age are you of?

William Edwards. I am 13, my Lord.

Mr. Att. Gen. Do you know what an Oath is?—William Edwards. No.

L. C. J. Suppose you should tell a Lye, do you know who is the Father of Liars?—William Edwards. Yes.

L. C. J. Who is it?—William Edwards. The Devil.

L. C. J. And if you should tell a Lye, do you know what will become of you?—William Edwards. Yes.

L. C. J. What if you should swear to a Lye? If you should call God to witness to a Lye, what would become of you then?

William Edwards. I should go to Hell-fire.

L. C. J. That is a terrible Thing. And therefore, Child, if you take an Oath, be sure you say nothing but what is Truth, for no Party, nor Side, nor any thing in the World; for that God, that you say will call you to an Account, and cast you into Hell-fire, if you tell a Lye, and witness to a Falshood, knows and sees all you do, therefore have a care, the Truth you must say, and nothing but the Truth.

Crier. Pull off your Glove, and hearken to your Oath.

[Then he was sworn.]
Mr.

Mr. Sol. Gen. And now remember you call God to witness to the Truth of what you say.

Mr. Att. Gen. Young Man, look upon that Paper, is that your Hand?

William Edwards. Yes.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did you sign that? — William Edwards. Yes.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pristhee tell the Court, how thou camest to sign it?

L. C. J. Ay, Child, be not afraid. Tell the Truth, for if thou tellest the Truth, thou needest not be afraid, but if thou tellest a Lye, thou hast need to be afraid; let no body, whatever has been said to thee, affright thee from telling the Truth.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Don't be afraid of thy Father, or any body, but tell plainly what thou knowest, and speak only the Truth.

Mr. Att. Gen. How came you to sign that Paper?

William Edwards. Mr. Braddon bid me sign it when he had writ it.

L. C. J. Hark thee, Child, Did he take it from thee what he writ, or did he write it from himself? Come hither, Child, be not afraid, no body here will do thee any hurt.

Then the Boy was lifted up upon the Table before the Judges.

L. C. J. Look upon that Paper, didst thou put thy Name to that Paper, Child? — William Edwards. Yes.

L. C. J. Whose Hand-writing is that Paper, besides thy Name?

William Edwards. Mr. Braddon's.

L. C. J. Did he bring it ready written?

William Edwards. He writ in our Parlour.

L. C. J. How came he to write it?

William Edwards. He said it was for the Earl of Essex, to give to his Wife.

L. C. J. And what did he ask thee before he writ that?

William Edwards. He asked me, whether I saw any thing at the Tower; and so I told him, yes.

L. C. J. Ay, tell us what you told him, and be not afraid, Child, but tell the Truth. — William Edwards. I told him, I was in the Tower, and saw a Razor thrown out of a Window.

L. C. J. You told him so, and then what said he to you?

William Edwards. He bid me speak the Truth.

L. C. J. Was that all the Words you had?

William Edwards. I afterwards went with my Brother into the Tower, and I shewed my Brother the Place, and then afterwards Mr. Braddon writ this, and he said it was to give to the Countess of Essex.

Mr. Just. Holloway. Did he read it to you after he had writ it?

William Edwards. Yes.

Mr. Just. Holloway. And did he ask thee, whether it were true?

William Edwards. Yes.

L. C. J. And didst thou tell him it was true?

William Edwards. Yes.

L. C. J. And didst thou tell him all that was in that Paper was true?

William Edwards. Yes.

L. C. J. Did you tell him all that was writ in that Paper before he writ it down. — William Edwards. Yes.

L. C. J. Pristhee mind the Question, and speak Truth, Didst thou tell him all that was in that Paper before he writ it down?

William Edwards. Yes, I told him, and so he writ it down.

Mr. Just. Holloway. You heard it all read to you, you say?

William Edwards. Yes.

L. C. J. Then I ask you again, Did you tell him all that was in that Paper was read to you, before he writ it down?

William Edwards. Yes.

L. C. J. And after you had told him, he writ it down?

William Edwards. I told him as he writ it down.

L. C. J. And after such time as he had writ it down, did he read it to you? — William Edwards. Yes.

L. C. J. And then you put your Name to it?

William Edwards. Yes.

Mr. Att. Gen. I pray, my Lord, he may be asked this Question, Whether or no, when he first brought it in, the Boy did not deny to sign it?

L. C. J. Did he bring the Paper thither before thou signedst it?

William Edwards. It was upon the Table.

L. C. J. Didst not thou refuse to put thy Name to it?

William Edwards. Yes.

L. C. J. Why? — William Edwards. I was afraid.

L. C. J. Why?

William Edwards. For fear of coming into Danger.

L. C. J. Why, what Danger could there be? There was no Danger if it was Truth. — William Edwards. That was not the Truth.

L. C. J. Which was not the Truth? Was not the Paper that he had written Truth? — William Edwards. No.

L. C. J. How so, Child? Was not that thou toldest him the Truth?

William Edwards. No.

L. C. J. Tell the Truth now then.

William Edwards. So I do.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Then he offered it first to you, and bid you sign it, and you denied to put your Hand to it, because it was not true?

William Edwards. Yes.

L. C. J. And how long after did he offer it to you again?

William Edwards. A little while after.

L. C. J. But did you tell Mr. Braddon it was not true, when you refused to sign it? — William Edwards. No, I did not.

L. C. J. Why didst thou refuse to sign it then?

William Edwards. I was afraid, because it was not true.

L. C. J. Didst not thou tell Mr. Braddon it was not true?

William Edwards. I did not tell Mr. Braddon it was not true.

L. C. J. Why then wast thou afraid to sign it because it was not true at one time, and yet did sign it, though it was not true at another time?

Mr. Sol. Gen. Child, Didst thou give Mr. Braddon any Reason, why thou didst not sign it at that time? — William Edwards. No, Sir.

Vol. III.

Mr. Sol. Gen. How didst thou come to sign it? Did any body speak to thee between that first Time thou refusedst to sign it, and the second Time thou didst sign it?

William Edwards. He would fain have got my Aunt to have signed it.

L. C. J. Thou sayest, thou didst first refuse it, because it was not true?

William Edwards. Yes.

L. C. J. And then afterwards thou didst sign it?

William Edwards. Yes.

L. C. J. Then I ask thee, who persuaded thee to sign it after that time that thou still refusedst it?

William Edwards. My Mother was afraid to have me sign it.

L. C. J. Who persuaded you to sign it? — William Edwards. Mr. Braddon said there was no Harm in it, so I did it.

L. C. J. Did Mr. Braddon then persuade you to sign it?

William Edwards. He said there was no Harm in it, that was all.

L. C. J. Did you do it at his Desire? — William Edwards. Yes.

L. C. J. And you refused it at first when he desired it?

William Edwards. Yes.

L. C. J. What, because it was false? — William Edwards. Yes.

L. C. J. Why then wouldst thou sign it afterwards, if some body did not persuade thee to it?

William Edwards. He told me there was nothing of Harm in it.

Mr. Att. Gen. Hadst thou any Money offered thee by Mr. Braddon?

William Edwards. No.

Mr. Att. Gen. Hadst thou any Money promised thee?

William Edwards. No.

Mr. Att. Gen. Hadst thou any thing else offered or promised thee?

William Edwards. No, nothing at all.

L. C. J. You have heard what he has said, Gentlemen?

Jury. No, my Lord, we have not heard a Word.

L. C. J. Then I will tell you what he has said exactly. He says, that Mr. Braddon writ it from him; that he writ it in the Room while he was there; that after such time as he had writ it, Mr. Braddon read it to him: He says, that he had carried his Brother to shew him the Place where he assigned that the Razor was found in the Tower; he says, that after such time as the Writing was finished, Mr. Braddon offered it him to sign, and he refused to sign it, and I asked him the Reason why, and he says, because it was false; he says, some short time afterwards Mr. Braddon came to him again.

William Edwards. No, Sir, it was the same time.

L. C. J. Well, the same time Braddon was at him again, and told him there was no harm in it, and therefore desired him to sign it, and because he would not, he would have his Aunt to have signed it; and he says, that Braddon telling him there was no Harm in it, he did sign it.

Mr. Sol. Gen. But withal he says, that it is false.

L. C. J. Ay, he swears now 'tis all false.

Mr. Freke. Did you tell Mr. Braddon it was false?

L. C. J. No, he says he did not.

Mr. Freke. Did your Sister at all discourse with you after you had dictated to Mr. Braddon? Pray what Discourse had you with her after Mr. Braddon writ that Paper, before you refused to sign it?

L. C. J. Do not ask any leading Question, Sir, but propose a fair plain Question.

Mr. Freke. Did you discourse with your Sister at all, after Mr. Braddon had been at your House?

William Edwards. Yes, I had been at School, and when I came home, they said that a Gentleman that came from the Earl of Essex's Brother, had been to inquire of the Truth of the Report I had raised.

Mr. Freke. What did your Sister say to you?

William Edwards. That was all.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did she name the Gentleman, and did you see him afterwards?

William Edwards. Yes.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Who was it?

William Edwards. That Gentleman, Mr. Braddon.

Jury. My Lord, We don't hear a Word he says.

L. C. J. He says, he had been at School, and when he came home, they told him a Gentleman came from the Earl's Brother, to inquire of the Truth of what he had reported: It was asked him who the Gentleman was, and he says, it was that Gentleman, Mr. Braddon.

Mr. Thompson. Before such time as Mr. Braddon came to you, what did you tell your Father about this Razor, and when?

William Edwards. Sir, I told him the King and Duke of York were at the Tower, and while I was there, I said, I saw a Hand cast out a bloody Razor, and a Maid come out and take it up, and go in again.

Mr. Thompson. Did you see any such thing as a bloody Razor cast out?

William Edwards. No.

L. C. J. What a Duff has such a trivial Report made in the World! Admit the boy had said any such thing, what an Age do we live in, that the Report of every Child shall blow us up after this rate? It would make a body tremble to think what sort of People we live among: To what an Heat does Zeal transport some People, beyond all Reason and Sobriety? If such a little Boy had said so, 'tis not an Half-penny matter, but presently all the Government is to be libelled for a Boy, which, whether he speaks true or false, is of no great Weight, and he swears 'tis all false.

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lord, We shall next call Dr. Hawkins's Son of the Tower. Where is Thomas Hawkins?

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, Agreeable to what the Boy has now said, to shew you that what Mr. Braddon got him to sign was all false, here is the young Man that truanted with him the same Morning, that was with him all the Time, the whole Morning, that says, there was no such Thing, and he saw no such thing; and how could it enter into the Boy's Head such a malicious Lye, if it had not been dictated? Pray Mr. Hawkins, will you acquaint my Lord, and the Jury, whether you play'd Truant that Morning with this other Boy, and where you were?

L. C. J. Ay, tell the Truth in God's Name, young Man, be it one way or t'other, let the Truth come out.

Hawkins.

5 S

Hawkins. In the Morning, Sir, I met with him at the Tower, going round with the King, and we walked round the Tower as long as the King walked, and then the King going into the Constable's House, we and some more Boys were playing—

L. C. J. Pristhee speak out, as tho' thou wert at play at Chuck-Farthing.

Hawkins. After we had been at play, I went Home, and after I had been there a little while, News was brought to my Father that the Earl of Essex had killed himself. My Father went down, and I followed him, and after I had been there a little while, William Edwards came Home, and there we stood looking up at the Window an Hour or two at least, and after we had tarried there a great while, I went out of the Tower Gate a little after Eleven.

Mr. Att. Gen. Was there no Razor thrown out of the Window?

Hawkins. No, there was no Razor thrown out.

L. C. J. Didst not thou see a Razor thrown out of the Window? and a Maid come and take it up?

Hawkins. No, there was no such Thing.

L. C. J. Were you there before Edwards came?—Hawkins. Yes.

L. C. J. And you went out with him?—Hawkins. Yes.

L. C. J. Did you and Edwards go away together?—Hawkins. Yes.

Mr. Thompson. Did he tell you of any such Thing?—Hawkins. No.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What time of the Day was it that you went out of the Tower?—Hawkins. Almost Eleven o'Clock.

Mr. Wallop. The Boy does say, he did tell his Father and Mother, and all the Family of it. And 'tis plain by the Father, that it was known in the Family by Ten of the Clock.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Was this young Man with you, all the Time that you was there, Edwards?—William Edwards. Yes.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did not you tell your Father of this Story when you came from the Tower?—William Edwards. Yes.

Mr. Att. Gen. And that was the same time you came out of the Tower with Hawkins?

William Edwards. Yes.

Mr. Att. Gen. And you, Hawkins, was this young Man with you all the time you were at my Lord Essex's Window?

Hawkins. He came thither while I stood there.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, this is but the beginning of our Evidence, your Lordship sees what a fine Case it is, and how all this Noise and Bustle has come to be made in the World. The Rumour did first arise in a Fanatick Family, and was propagated by that Party.

Mr. Jones. Ay, 'tis easily known whence it came.

L. C. J. Gentlemen, Pray will you go on with your Evidence, and make no Descants.

Mr. Freke. You, Hawkins, when you came from your Father's House, did you find that Boy in Tower?

Hawkins. Yes, Sir, a going round with the King.

L. C. J. That was before this Thing happened.

Mr. Freke. Were you with him all the while he was in the Tower?

Hawkins. Just before my Lord Essex cut his Throat I went Home.

Mr. Freke. Were you with him all the time or no? And how long were you with him?

Hawkins. I went with him round the Tower with the King. And after we were at play, and then I went Home, and then when I had been at Home a little time, the Rumour and Noise came, that the Earl of Essex had killed himself, so I went with my Father, and stood before the Window, and I tarried there a while before he came Home, and I stayed with him looking at the Window a great while, and we went out of the Tower together.

Mr. Freke. You little Boy, Edwards, was this Mr. Hawkins with you all the Time that you were in the Tower?

William Edwards. Yes, but only a little while that I was at the Mills.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, we had not laid so much Weight upon Mr. Braddon for this Matter, but that he could not be quiet, but must inform the King of it, and this Matter was all examined before the King, the Boy was sent for, and before his Face the Boy declared it was a Lye. And after he knew this, and after the Boy had twice in the Presence of the King denied it, yet notwithstanding all this, then was the Project between him and Speke. We shall first prove the Examination of this Matter before the Council, and how he was acquainted with it. Pray call Mr. Blathwaite and Mr. Monstevens.

Mr. Blathwaite was Sworn.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray Mr. Blathwaite will you give an Account whether you were present at the Council, when Mr. Braddon brought this Information, and how the Matter was Examined there, and what was done.

Mr. Blathwaite. My Lord, it was on the 20th of July, that Mr. Braddon came to Whitehall, he may remember I was there, for he could not but see me attending on the King. This little Boy was brought before his Majesty, and was asked what Information he had given Mr. Braddon? And whether the matter of the Information was true? The Boy said it was a Lye, and that upon his Faith it was not true. Mr. Braddon knew all this, for he was called in and informed of it; and I believe Mr. Braddon will remember, that he heard the Boy deny it. The whole Examination could not but shew that it was an Invention of his, as he said, it was to excuse himself for having play'd Truant that Day, and that because he was afraid to go Home he invented that Lye. After this Mr. Braddon, as it appears, did nevertheless pursue this Business.

L. C. J. Pray only tell what you know of your own Knowledge, both before and after.

Mr. Blathwaite. I know, my Lord, that Mr. Braddon (having been in the Country) came afterwards before the King, and was again Examined upon this matter, by which it appear'd, that he did continue in his Pursuit, though he was always informed of the Denial the Boy made, and that it was understood to be a Lye by the whole Family of the Edwards's, as well as from the Denial of the little Boy; for they did confess, that the Boy used to tell Lies, and one of the Sisters said he had denied it at first, but afterwards was brought to say it. And if I remember right, the Words of one of the Sisters were, BRADDON COMPELLED THE BOY TO SIGN IT. Those are the Words in the Minutes that I took at the Examination; therefore I believe it was so, that the Boy had denied before to sign it. But this I only mention as what the Sister said.

L. C. J. Have you any more Questions to ask Mr. Blathwaite, Gentlemen? Mr. North. Because we will not trouble Mr. Blathwaite to call him again, pray produce the Letter.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray, Sir, will you look upon that Letter, and tell the Court what you know of it, and whose Hand it is.

Mr. Blathwaite. My Lord, This is a Letter that was produced before the King, when Mr. Speke attended there. It was then put into my Hands; and I do well remember, and likewise I have written upon it, That Mr. Speke owned it to be his Letter.

L. C. J. Did he own it to be his Letter, Sir?

Mr. Blathwaite. Yes, he did own it to be his Letter.

Mr. Att. Gen. That is all we have to trouble you with at present, Sir. We will now call Mr. Monstevens.

[Who standing up by the Crier was sworn.]

And we call him to prove, That Mr. Braddon had Notice the Boy had disowned this Matter.

Mr. Sol. Gen. You hear the Question, Sir, pray acquaint my Lord and the Jury, what you know of this Boy's Examination before the Council, and this Gentleman's having Notice the Boy disowned the Thing.

Mr. Monstevens. My Lord, About 5 or 6 Days after my Lord of Essex had murdered himself in the Tower, I saw Mr. Braddon at the Secretary's Lodgings, my Lord Sunderland's Lodgings at Whitehall, with a young Woman, and a Boy about 12 or 13 Years old. The Boy was just now in Court, I saw him there. He came to me, and told me, he had earnest Business to speak with my Lord Sunderland, That he came from Sir Henry Capell, and he told me, he came with an Information that the Boy had given relating to the Earl of Essex's Death. (The Information I believe is in Court.) He gave me the Information, and I read it, and I remember there was something in the Information of a Razor thrown out of a Window, a bloody Razor thrown out of my Lord Essex's Window; and after I had read the Information, I told Mr. Braddon, I wonder Sir Henry Capell had not appeared himself in a Matter of that Moment, wherein the Reputation of his Family was so much concerned; and I took the liberty to tell him, That I believed if Sir Henry Capell had thought that to be true, that was contained in that Paper, he would doubtless have come to my Lord Sunderland himself. Thereupon he told me, That Sir Henry Capell had not been well, and did not stir abroad. Then I told Mr. Braddon again, as I very well remember, That I was confident he had been abroad lately, and had been to wait upon the King, since the Death of my Lord of Essex. Then, my Lord, he had little or nothing to say to that; but he said, what he did he was obliged to do in Conscience, and out of the Duty he owed to the Memory of my Lord of Essex. Upon that, my Lord Sunderland came by, and I went with him to my Lord Sunderland, and he gave him that Paper, as I suppose, which I read, and my Lord Sunderland took the Information, and afterwards Mr. Braddon was committed in Custody, and then the thing was brought before the King, and the Lords of the Council, which Mr. Blathwaite has given you an account of.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, I pray that a Word of the Information may be read, we will first prove the Information taken by him, and then call Sir Henry Capell, who will prove that he never had any Order from him, as he said he had, but it was only his own busy Inclinations.

Cl. of Cr. This is subscribed, William Edwards.

L. C. J. Call the Boy in again.

Mr. Braddon. May I ask Mr. Monstevens a Question, my Lord?

L. C. J. Ay, ask him what you will.

Mr. Braddon. Sir, Did not I come to you the Thursday Evening, and waited at the Dutchess of Portsmouth's Lodgings, before I brought the Boy and the Girl to Whitehall?

Mr. Monstevens. No, I did not see you there.

Mr. Braddon. You are positive in that, Sir?

Mr. Monstevens. Yes, I will take my Oath again of it, if you will.

Mr. Braddon. Then I will prove I was, and that I saw you at Ten of the Clock that Morning.

Mr. Monstevens. I remember, my Lord, very well, That I was surprised to see him at the Lodgings at Whitehall. I never saw him, to the best of my Remembrance, but once in my Life.

Mr. Braddon. What time was it, pray, you first saw me?

Mr. Monstevens. It was in the Afternoon, as I remember.

L. C. J. Hark you, young Man, do you know my Lord Gerard?

William Edwards. Yes.

L. C. J. Which Lord Gerard do you know?

William Edwards. My Lord Brandon Gerard.

L. C. J. How came you to know him?

William Edwards. By sight I know him.

L. C. J. Do you know where he lodged in the Tower?

William Edwards. Yes.

L. C. J. Where?—William Edwards. At one Mr. Sam's.

L. C. J. Was you ever in his Lodging?—William Edwards. No.

L. C. J. Never at all?—William Edwards. No.

L. C. J. Did you ever tell any body you were in my Lord Brandon Gerard's Lodgings?

William Edwards. Never in my Life.

L. C. J. Did you never tell Braddon, that you went to see his Lodgings?

William Edwards. Into the House I never went.

L. C. J. Did you never tell Braddon, That you went to see my Lord Brandon Gerard's Lodgings? Never in your life?

William Edwards. No, Sir.

L. C. J. Now read it.

Cl. of Cr. [Reads.]—The Information of William Edwards, second Son to Thomas Edwards, of the Parish of All-hallows Barkin, London, taken the 18th Day of July, in the 35th Year of the Reign of our Sovereign Lord King Charles II. Anno 1683, says: That this Informant on Friday the 13th of this instant July, as he was going to School, with his Brother ther Edward, he heard that His Majesty, and his Royal Highness the Duke of York, were going to the Tower. Whereupon this Informant left his Brother, and went to the Tower to see His Majesty, and His Royal Highness. And when this Informant had seen His Majesty and his Royal Highness, this Informant about nine of the Clock in the Morning of the same Day, went to see my Lord Brandon Gerard's Lodgings; and as this Informant was standing almost over against my Lord Gerard's Lodgings, between the Lord Gerard's and the late Lord of Essex's Lodgings, this Informant saw a Hand cast out a bloody Razor out of the said Earl of Essex's Lodgings. And this Informant was going to take up the said Razor, which he saw on the Ground to be bloody; but before this Informant came to the Razor, there came a Maid running out of Captain Hawley's House, where the said Lord of Essex lodged, and took up the said Razor, which she carried into the said Captain Hawley's House. And this Informant believes that it was the said Maid, who he first heard cry out Murder. And this Informant further saith, That he heard the said Maid say to some which were about the Door, after the Murder was cry'd, That she did bear the said Lord of Essex to groan three times that Morning. The Father, three Sisters, and Brother will swear, That the said William Edwards did declare the Substance of this Information to them on Friday the 13th Instant, and never in the least denied it till Tuesday after, when being chid and threatened by the eldest Sister, he did deny it; but soon after confessed it, and signed it in the Presence of five or six Witnesses.

Mr. Just. Withins. Thus you see, he persuaded him to tell a fine Story of going to see my Lord Brandon Gerard's Lodgings, but the Boy never told any such thing.

L. C. J. No, he never told him a Word of it, he Swears.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, Your Lordship has heard from Mr. Monstevens, That this Gentleman, Mr. Braddon, made use of the Name of an honourable Person, Sir Henry Capell, and so at the Secretary's and at Edwards's House made use of the name of my Lady Essex. We shall now call Sir Henry Capell. [Who was sworn.] Sir Henry Capell, Will you please to give an account, whether ever you employed this Gentleman, Mr. Braddon, about any such Business as he has here undertaken?

Sir H. Capell. I hope you will give me as short a Dispatch as you can, Sir, for 'tis very uneasy for me to be here in this Crowd.

Mr. Sol. Gen. We give you some trouble, Sir Henry, but indeed 'tis not we, but this Gentleman, that has been pleased to use your Name, has necessitated it.

Mr. Att. Gen. We ask you a short Question, Whether you employed Mr. Braddon to go to Mr. Edwards's House, or to the Secretary's, or any where else to prosecute this matter of your Brother's Death?

Sir H. Capell. My Lord, I know very little of Mr. Braddon. He was to speak with me twice. The first time he took me in very great Disorder, both as to the Circumstance of Time and Place, which are so tender with me, that truly I cannot express, nor do I very well know what I did say, or what he said to me; but the second time he came to me, I do very well remember what I did say. And that which I did say the second time is the most material Thing I have to say in the matter. He came to me and spoke of such a Business as the Court is well apprized of already, (I hope you will pardon me if I do not repeat it,) I made Answer to him, Mr. Braddon, I am under great Grief and under a great Burden of Business in my private Family, whatsoever you have to say in the matter, I desire you would go to a Secretary of State and acquaint him with it. This is the most material thing that was said that I remember.

Mr. Att. Gen. But you never employed him to go about to prosecute any such thing?

Mr. Just. Withins. Sir Henry, Pray answer me, Did you desire him to go to Edwards's House and ask him any Questions about it?

Sir H. Capell. I know nothing of Edwards, nor his House at all.

Mr. Braddon. Sir Henry Capell, Will you please to let me ask you one Question? Do you not remember I came to Essex-House on the Monday Night, and that I came and told you of such a Report, and that I had not been with the Father of the Boy as yet, but if you would then send one with me I would go, and in his Presence examine the Boy, and you, Sir, promised me that you would; and whether you did not appoint me to tarry at such a Place, where you promised to send one to go along with me?

Sir H. Capell. My Lord, I have a gross Idea of that which he speaks of concerning his having one to meet him, and that I told him such an one should meet him, and the Person did desire to be excused, and I did excuse him, and so he did not go; upon which this Gentleman Mr. Braddon came to me the second time, which was after Dinner, and I directed him to go to a Secretary of State and acquaint him with what he had to say in the Business.

Mr. Braddon. Did not you promise, Sir, to send one to me to go with me, and desired me to meet at such a Place?

Sir H. Capell. I remember no more but what I have said.

Mr. Braddon. Upon the Oath you have taken, Sir Henry Capell, I desire you would recollect your Memory, whether you did not promise me in the Morning to meet at such a Place, and was not I twice with you that Day?

Sir H. Capell. Sir, I know no more.

Mr. Just. Withins. Do you think Sir Henry Capell would forswear himself, Mr. Braddon?

Mr. Braddon. My Lord, I only desire him to recollect his Memory.

Sir H. Capell. Only I do farther remember, he seemed to be very willing to go to the Secretary of State.

Mr. Att. Gen. And if he had acquiesced there he had done very well, and there had been no farther Trouble.

Mr. Jones. But that was not the Way he intended, that would not do his Work.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray, Mr. Blathwaite, do you give my Lord and the Jury an account whether this Information was ever carried before any Justice of Peace in order to have it sworn before him, and the Circumstance of it.

Mr. Blathwaite. My Lord, I do very well remember, when this Information was before the King, and was shew'd to Mr. Braddon, he there confess'd, That he had gone about to find some Justice of Peace to take it upon Oath. He named Sir Robert Clayton, and Sir John Lawrence. And I do very well remember, and 'tis upon my Minutes, That he confess'd that Sir Robert Clayton, being asked by him to take the Information in private, alone without Company, being by Sir Robert Clayton refused to take it, unless he might take it more publicly, and Sir Robert Clayton refusing to take it alone, in private, he would not let him to take it at all, but went away with it. I remember this for Sir Robert Clayton, and it may be Mr. Braddon may remember the same of Sir John Lawrence; but I can't tell that.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, now we are come to the 20th of July, when this Business was heard before his Majesty, and the Boy declared it was a Lye, and then he had full notice it was a Lye. But after this Mr. Speke and he consult together, and he must be sent as an Emissary into the Country to pick up Informations and Evidences, and with this, and some other Informations in his Pocket, to possess the People, that the Government had murdered my Lord of Essex. And he must be sent I know not how far, as if the farther he went from London the better Intelligence he was like to have of a thing done at the Tower. The Justice of Peace that took him was summoned, but is since dead. But we will call the Persons that were present when he was taken, where is Mr. Beech? [He was sworn.] Mr. Beech, Will you acquaint the Court and the Jury with the manner of apprehending this Gentleman, and what Papers were found about him?

Mr. Beech. My Lord, I was present when Mr. Braddon was apprehended in Wiltshire, and several Papers were found upon him, and upon Examination he was committed to the County Goal, and from thence removed by Habeas Corpus hither up to London. I have Copies of all the Papers that were taken about him, which I examined with the Originals. The one was the Copy of a Letter sent by one Speke to Sir Robert Atkins, and there were other Papers in the nature of Informations; another was a Letter to one Cumpten, Post-master at Frome. Mr. Braddon upon his Examination said, his Business was to inquire after the Murder of the Earl of Essex, and that one Mr. Burgis had sent him a Letter to this purpose, That it was reported at Frome that very Day the Earl of Essex cut his own Throat, that he had so done; the News of which could not so soon come down thither.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray speak out, Sir, Tell us what his Business he said was, and as to the Letters he had about him, tell us what he said?

Mr. Beech. He told me, that he had a Letter from one Mr. Burgis of Marlborough, to go to one Cumpten at Frome, who is Post-master there, to inquire about a Report, that it was said was reported in Frome, the 13th Day of July, the same Day the Earl of Essex murdered himself, that he was murdered. Mr. Braddon had that Letter about him. I went afterwards to that Cumpten at Frome, he said, he never heard any thing of it; or that there was any Noise of the Earl of Essex's Murder, until the Sunday following, which was two or three Days after. From thence I went to my Lord Weymouth, a Person of Quality that lives near Frome, and acquainted his Lordship with it, and he then said that he had an Account on the Sunday of my Lord of Essex's Murder, and he believed that was one of the first Letters of it that was in the Country.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Are these the Papers you found about him, Sir?

Mr. Beech. I examined these Copies with the Originals, and they were true Copies.

Mr. Att. Gen. Well, put them in.

Mr. Beech. Truly, Mr. Braddon gave a very ill account of his Journey to those that did examine him.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray look upon those Papers that are the Originals.

Mr. Beech. One Colonel Ains was the Justice of Peace, before whom Mr. Braddon was examined, and by whom he was committed, he is since dead, but I do believe this was the Original Letter that was taken about Mr. Braddon.

L. C. J. Do you believe that was the Original?

Mr. Beech. I do, I have a true Copy of it.

Mr. Att. Gen. Besides, We will prove it otherwise to be Mr. Speke's Hand. It was proved by Mr. Blathwaite that Mr. Speke upon his Examination did own it; What say you, Mr. Blathwaite?

Mr. Blathwaite. He did own it, and said in these Words, as I remember, he believed it to be his Hand.

Mr. Att. Gen. What, that Paper?

Mr. Blathwaite. Yes, and I have put my Hand upon it, that it was owned by him.

L. C. J. Read it.

Cl. of Cr. This is subscribed by Hugh Speke, and dated London, Lincoln's-Inn, August 15th, 1683, Wednesday Night Ten o'Clock, and directed; For the Ever Honoured Sir Robert Atkins, Knight of the Bath, at his House at Netherfwell near Stow on the Old in Gloucestershire.

Honoured Sir,

THE Bearer hereof is one Mr. Braddon, a very honest Gentleman, whose Father has at least Eight Hundred per Ann. in Cornwall; It seems it is his Fate to be the only Person that follows, and prosecutes the Murder of the Earl of Essex, and he has made a very considerable Discovery already of it, notwithstanding the hard Stream he rows against, as things stand and are carried on at present. But indeed I think it could never have fallen on so fit a Man, for he has been a very hard Student, and is a Person of a very good Reputation, Life and Conversation, and has a great deal of Prudence, and has as much Courage as any one living whatsoever. He went away on a sudden hence Post towards Marlborough to make some farther Discovery, and what he has discovered he will give you a full Account, and of all the Transactions hitherto about it. I lent him my man to go with him for fear he should come to any Mischief, for most here fear he will either be stabbed or knock'd on the head, if he do not take great care of himself; seeing he came into these Parts, I thought it not amiss to go and advise with you how he had best to proceed in it, and I did charge him not to let any body know who he

he was, that it might not be known that he had been with you; for I would not for the World that you should come to any Prejudice in the least for your Kindness towards us. For we labour under many Difficulties as the Tide runs at present.

Pray call Mr. Braddon by the Name of Johnson when he is with you; I have given him the same Item. We hope we can bring on the Earl of Essex's Murder on the Stage, before they can any of those in the Tower to a Trial. He being in great haste, I have not time to write more, but to assure that Mr. Braddon is a Person of that Integrity and Courage that no body needs fear to trust him. I was very willing that he should take your Advice in this Case which is of so great a Moment, seeing he came within twenty or thirty Miles or thereabouts of your House. He will give you a full and clear Relation of every thing in that Affair, and how hard they have been upon him. Sir Henry Capell told him, that it was a thing too great for him, &c. All which Mr. Braddon (that you are to call Johnson whilst he is with you at your House) will give you a true Relation of. Mr. Braddon hath been at a great Trouble and Charge already about it; I know few that would have ventured to have undertaken this Affair besides himself, as Times go. I received yours this Day, with the great pains you took, and the Letter to the Lady Russell, which finding unsealed, I sealed, without looking into it, and carried it myself: She returns you ten thousand Thanks, and says, she knows not what Return to make you for your most extraordinary Kindness. I have not time to write any more at present, by reason that Mr. Braddon, alias Johnson, stays only for this my Letter.

I am, Sir, Your most obliged Friend and most humble Servant,
Hugh Speke.

I am writing a Letter to send to you by the Carrier.

Mr. Att. Gen. This Gentleman brings in Mr. Speke to be the Author of all this Contrivance. But we shall prove to you, That at the same time this Letter was taken about him, this Gentleman had others that were likewise taken. These Examinations, which I desire may be likewise read.

Mr. —. My Lord, I came lately from Sir Robert Atkins, He is an utter Stranger to all this, he is now in the Country, and knows nothing of it.

L. C. J. If they will use his Name, I can't help it.

Mr. —. My Lord, I would not have any Reflexion upon him, for he knows nothing at all of this matter.

Mr. Sol. Gen. The Letter was never received by Sir Robert Atkins, but taken before it came to him.

Mr. Att. Gen. All the matter is, 'tis an unhappy thing to be thought well of by such sort of People.

L. C. J. I see nothing of Sir Robert Atkins in the Case, but only my Name is used, and notice is taken of the great Obligations some People have to him, for his great Kindness to his Friends.

Cl. of Cr. Here is an Information.

L. C. J. Was this found about him too?

Mr. Beech. Yes, I believe that is the very Paper, I have no Copy of that Paper, but I well remember the Contents of it.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did you sign it or mark it?

L. C. J. He may believe it to be without signing.

Mr. Beech. I presume Mr. Braddon will own it.

Cl. of Cr. the Information of Mrs. Edwards, Wife to Thomas Edwards, faith, 'That about 10 of the Clock in the Morning on Friday the 13th of this Instant July, this Informant's youngest Son William Edwards, aged about 13 Years, came trembling to this Informant, and in great Amazement and Horror told this Informant, that the Lord Essex had cut his Throat in the Tower, and further said, That he the said William Edwards in the Morning about nine of the Clock, did see a Hand cast out a Razor out of the said Lord of Essex's Lodging Window, which Razor he saw on the Ground to be bloody. And the said William Edwards was going to take up the said Razor, but before he came to it, there came a Maid running out of Captain Hawley's House, where the said Earl of Essex lodged, and took up the Razor, which she the said Maid forthwith carried into the said Captain Hawley's House, and soon after he the said William Edwards heard her, as he the said William Edwards did believe, cry out Murder. And this Informant further saith, That the Substance of which the said William Edwards hath sworn in this Information, he the said William Edwards on Friday last did declare to this Informant and her whole Family, several times attesting it to be true, and several times since."

Cl. of Cr. Here is the Information of William Edwards second Son of Thomas Edwards.

Mr. Att. Gen. That is the same with what was read already.

L. C. J. Ay, that is the Boy's Information.

Cl. of Cr. Here is another, 'tis dated August the 8th, 1683. The Information of Jane Lodeman, aged about 13 Years, did in the Presence of these, whose Names are here underwritten, declare as followeth, 'That the said Jane Lodeman was in the Tower on Friday Morning, the 13th of July last, and standing almost over-against the late Earl of Essex's Lodging Window, she saw a Hand cast out a Razor out of my Lord's Window, and immediately upon that she heard Shrieks, and that there was a Soldier by my Lord's Door, which cried out to those within the House, that somebody should come and take up a Razor which was thrown out of the Window, whereupon there came a Maid with a white Hood out of the House, but who took up the Razor she can't tell."

This is subscribed

John Borm, and William Smith.

Cl. of Cr. Here is another Paper August the 8th, 83. Mr. William Glasbrooke does declare, That one Jane Lodeman, aged about 13 Years, inhabiting in the same House where he the said William Glasbrooke lodged, did on Friday the 13th of July last past, between the Hours of 10 and 11 in the Morning, in the Presence and Hearing of him the said William Glasbrooke declare to her Aunt, 'That the Earl of Essex had cut his Throat, upon which her Aunt was very angry with her, whereupon she the said Girl did declare, that she was sure of it, for she saw him throw the Razor out of the Window, and that the Razor was bloody, and that she heard two Groans or Shrieks (which of the two Words she used, he the said William Glasbrooke is not certain); of this he the said William Glasbrooke is ready to make Oath.

This is subscribed

William Glasbrooke,
Margaret Smith."

Mr. Att. Gen. He carried his Stuff about him, it seems, wherever he went. L. C. J. 'Tis Stuff indeed. Good God, what an Age do we live in!

Mr. Att. Gen. It is not taken upon Oath before any Magistrate, but cooked up to amuse the Country, as if they were formal Informations. Here is another Letter, Mr. Beech, was this Letter found about him?

Mr. Beech. Yes, this Letter was found about him.

Mr. Att. Gen. It is from one Burgis, a Man of the same Kidney.

Cl. of Cr. This is directed for Mr. Cumpen, at the Dolphin at Frome, and 'tis subscribed Jeremiah Burgis, and dated Marl. Oct. 21.

Mr. Cumpen,

MY kind Love to you. These are to desire you to call to mind, that I was in Frome the 6th of July, being Friday, where I heard the Report that the Earl of Essex had cut his own Throat; I would desire you to inquire into it, to know who first reported it, and give this Gentleman the truth of it. And in so doing you will oblige me, who am your Friend, Jeremiah Burgis.

Mr. Beech. Under favour, my Lord, This Letter talks of a Report that was the 13th Day, the very Day the Earl of Essex murdered himself, I went directly to Frome and spake with this Cumpen, and he told me, he did not speak with Burgis nor see him, nor was there any such Report before the Sunday Morning. From thence I went to my Lord Weymouth's, as I told you.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, We have gone through our Evidence for the present, to shew how this Man has endeavour'd to spread this Matter to the Scandal of the Government. We shall end here at present to see how he has improved his Confidence, by what Defence he will make to all this Proof. Afterwards, if there be Occasion, we shall give an Account of the Earl's Death, how he murdered himself. And for that we have a Cloud of Witnesses, though this Gentleman has taken upon him so much Confidence as to contest it.

L. C. J. That would be very fit, Mr. Attorney, because they have raised a Doubt in some People's Mind about it.

Mr. Att. Gen. I thought it best to reserve it till after I see what Defence he will make.

L. C. J. Take your time.

Mr. Wallop. May it please your Lordship, and you Gentlemen of the Jury, I am of Counsel for Mr. Braddon and Mr. Speke, the Defendants here. You see what the Issue is before you, Mr. Speke and Mr. Braddon, they are in the Information charged, That they did Conspire together to make the People believe, That whereas the Earl of Essex murdered himself, and so it was found by the Inquisition, yet they would have the People believe, that that Inquisition was taken unduly, and that they did Conspire to procure false Witnesses to make these Things out. Now, Gentlemen, the only Point that you are to enquire of, is this, Whether these two Gentlemen did maliciously, factiously, and seditiously set these Things on Foot. This Report that the Earl was murdered, or whether there were such Intimations offered to them accidentally and casually, without Officiousness, or any of their own seeking that might induce a good Man, or a wife Man to follow the Business upon such Information given. For our Parts that are for the Defendants, we say this for our Clients, we are not so much to make any Men guilty of this Murder, that is not our Business, but to prove our own Innocency and fair dealing in this matter. Now, Gentlemen, if these two Persons had no Inducement to lead them on to this, but did of their own heads, that is Criminal in them; but if they had that which might induce a wife and good Man, though they were much mistaken, yet they are not to be found Guilty of this Offence that is charged on them. I shall leave it, Gentlemen, to you, who I question not have observed the Evidence that has been given, and whose proper Work it is to make your Judgment upon it. But in our Defence, the Steps we go are these, and we desire you would please to observe them. First, we say, That the Report of this Murder was the Day before, two or three Days before, and that very Day, so many Miles distant from London, that hearing of such a Report, we might very easily be induced to make some Inquiry after it; and of this four Instances we shall give in the Course of our Evidence, that this was a great many Miles off London talked of at the Day, and immediately after the Day, before the News could reach those Places, after the Fact committed. Then we shall proceed to those Passages concerning the Boy, and produce Evidence to set forth the true State of that matter, That this Boy, as he says himself, did tell the Family this Story, that very Day that my Lord murdered himself, immediately upon his coming home. Now this Original Story is impossible to be contrived by Mr. Braddon, be it true or be it false. Then Mr. Braddon coming into Essex, to Mr. Evans's House at Wansted, there what was said by the Boy was spoken of. Then Mr. Braddon finding this Information of the Boy, which he had given merely of himself, and which contradicted the Inquisition, and put him upon this Inquiry. Now how far this Intimation has weight, and may be an Inducement to a good and a wife Man, as I say, that we must leave to you. But besides that, there is a Girl, a Stranger to the Boy, that at the same time, upon the matter, and to this same Effect and substance, delivered such an Evidence, as might very well serve to confirm us in our Inquiry, and this is the Course of our Evidence, in the Substance of it. And we shall apply ourselves to your Lordship and the Jury after the Evidence given, and make our Observations upon it, and submit it to you, Gentlemen.

Mr. Williams. Will your Lordship please to spare me one Word, that is an Objection that we would make from the Record itself. The Information that does recite, That the Earl of Essex was imprisoned in the Tower, and during his Imprisonment there cut his own Throat; and became Felo de se. And that there was an Inquisition taken before such an one, before Edward Farnham, Coroner of the Liberty of the Tow-er: My Lord, I was not here when the Inquisition was read, if I had I should have made the Objection then, but this is that I say, if we can falsify that part of the Record, if there be a Mistake there, that is, if Farnham was not Coroner, then they fail in their Proof, and we must be found Not Guilty, for so it is in the Information.

L. C. J. It is said to be before him as Coroner of the Liberty.

Mr. Williams. Yes, my Lord, They recite that he is Coroner, and that the Inquisition was taken before him as Coroner, and Mr. Braddon knowing of it, did thus, and thus.

L. C. J. Why, Is he not Coroner?

Mr. Williams. My Lord, I desire the Inquisition may be looked into, I cannot go to contradict the Inquisition, but my Instructions only are that he is Deputy-Coroner, and if it be so they are mistaken in their Information.

Cl. of Cr. It is Coram Edwardo Farnham Coronatore.

Mr. Williams. Then we can't help it. But there are these Things that we say to it, One Part of the Information is, That we should go about to persuade the People, that this Inquisition was not duly taken; another Part is, That we did procure false Witnesses to prove it; now what Proof is offered as to the Matter of persuading the People, I must submit to you, whether it be such as comes up to the Charge in the Information. There is some kind of Proof, but what it is, you see. Then for the other Matter, which is the procuring of false Witnesses, that, under favour, I think I may affirm, That there is no Proof at all of, That Mr. Braddon or Mr. Speke did procure false Witnesses. Gentlemen, we shall endeavour to acquit ourselves of all, if we cannot of all, yet of Part, especially that Part which seems to be the most Criminal. And I must needs say, I have not heard any Proof of procuring false Witnesses, by either of the Defendants. Then there is a Third Thing charged, and indeed in the Evidence there is something that looks towards it, That he should go about by Papers, and otherwise to publish it, That he was a Person employed to prosecute the Murder of the Earl of Essex. Now as to this Matter, all I shall say for Mr. Braddon is this, If he have done something more, it may be by a Transport of Zeal, than became him, that must be submitted how far it is Criminal. If he did what did not become a mighty wife and discreet Man; yet if he did what became a rational Man of ordinary Capacity to do, if he had this Information, and so many other Informations, and he did search innocently a little into it, if he did not do it Seditiously and Factiously with an ill Mind, we hope there is no such great Harm done. And indeed, Gentlemen, his Mind is to be try'd in this matter. And 'tis an hard matter to try a Man's Mind, quo animo, a Man did such an Action; that he did it, there is some Sort of Evidence, but if he did it not out of an ill Principle, and with an evil Intention, then, under Favour, we take it he is Not Guilty of this Information. And we shall endeavour to make it out thus, This Gentleman hearing of this Report of the Boy, makes his Application first to Sir Henry Capell, who was a Person well known, to be nearly related to this unfortunate Lord, the Earl of Essex, and he tells him what Information he had received. Sir Henry Capell puts him into an excellent Course, and desires him to go and inform the Secretary of State, and he did so, and if he had gone only this way, all that he had done had been innocent. Then the matter is only this; He has gone a little out of the way, and has taken some Informations and Examinations in Writing: Why, though he has gone a Step or two awry, yet if it was with a Design to prepare the Matter the better for the Secretary, by laying these Papers before him, we hope there is no Crime; if we did it not Seditiously, but only with an Intention, That Mr. Secretary might receive a more clear and full Information; I hope the Jury will acquit us.

L. C. J. You say well. Come, prove your Matter.

Mr. Thompson. Call Mr. Fielder, and Mrs. Mewx, and Mr. Lewes. Lewes appeared.

Crier. Lay your Hand on the Book.

Lewes. My Lord, I desire my Charges may be paid, before I swear.

L. C. J. Pr'ythee, what have I to do with thy Charges? I won't make Bargains between you. If you have any Evidence to give, and will give it, do; if not, let it alone.

Lewes. My Lord, I shall not give any Evidence till I have my Charges.

L. C. J. Mr. Braddon, If you will have your Witnesses swear, you must pay them their Charges.

Mr. Braddon. My Lord, I am ready to pay it, I never refused it; but what shall I give him?

L. C. J. Nay, I am not to make Bargains between you, agree as you can.

Mr. Thompson. My Lord, we are willing to do what is reasonable. You, Lewes What do you demand?

Lewes. He can't give me less than Six Shillings a Day.

L. C. J. Why, where dost thou live?

Lewes. At Marlborough.

L. C. J. Why, canst thou earn Six Shillings a Day by thy own Labour at Marlborough?

Lewes. My Lord, I am at Forty Shillings or Three Pound a Week Charge with my Family and Servants.

L. C. J. What Trade art thou?

Lewes. A Stapler.

L. C. J. And does your Trade stand still while you are here in Town?

Lewes. Yes, to be sure it can't go well on.

L. C. J. Well, I say that for you, you value your Labour High enough, I know not what your Evidence may be; but, Mr. Braddon, you must pay your Witness, if you will have him.

Mr. Braddon. I will, my Lord, very readily. What will you have? I have paid you something already.

Lewes. Give me Twenty Shillings more then. You can't give me less.

Then Mr. Braddon paid him Twenty Shillings, and he was Sworn.

L. C. J. Well, what do you ask him, Mr. Thompson?

Mr. Thompson. We ask him, What Report he heard of the Earl of Essex's Death, and when?

VOL. III.

L. C. J. What is your Name, Friend?

Lewes. Lewes.

L. C. J. Well, what is it you say?

Lewes. My Lord, as I was riding up Husband, within three or four Miles of Andover—

Mr. Wallop. How many Miles is that off of London?

Lewes. Fifty-two.

Mr. Wallop. Well, go on.

Lewes. Between the Hours of Three and Five, but it is so long ago that I cannot exactly tell the certain time; a Man asked me what News I heard in the Country, I told him, I heard none. Says he, I hear the Earl of Essex has cut his Throat: It was upon a Friday in the Summer, I forget the Day of the Month, I can't tell what Month it was certainly.

Mr. Thompson. What Day of the Week was it?

Lewes. I remember it was upon a Friday.

Mr. Thompson. Can't you tell what Month it was?

Lewes. I can't tell what Month it was, it was in the Summer I know.

Mr. Braddon. My Lord, I desire to ask him a Question.

L. C. J. Do, if you will: Ask him what you will.

Mr. Braddon. Did not you go to Marlborough on the Saturday?

Lewes. I did go to Marlborough the next Day, which was Saturday.

Mr. Braddon. I desire to know of him, whether he did meet with the News of it there then?

Lewes. My Lord, as to that, when I came Home, my Neighbours asked me if I had heard any News? I told them, says I, I hear the Earl of Essex hath cut his Throat. Why when did you hear it, say they? I heard it Yesterday, said I. Said they, it was done but Yesterday, how could you hear it so soon? That is all I have to say, my Lord.

Mr. Williams. By the best Conjecture you can make, was it that very Day the Earl of Essex cut his Throat?

Lewes. I do not know that ever any such Man cut his Throat, but this I heard, and I tell you the Time as well as I can.

Mr. Williams. Then pray let us have our Money again.

L. C. J. Thou art well paid, I will say that for thee.

Mr. Williams. Where is Mr. Fielder? Swear him. [Which was done.] Pray, Sir, what did you hear, and when, of the Earl of Essex's Death?

Mr. Fielder. The Wednesday and the Thursday of the same Week that the Earl of Essex cut his Throat, it was reported in our Town of Andover, that he had so done. The Women, as they came in and out of the Town, talked of it to one another.

L. C. J. What was talked of that Wednesday and Thursday?

Mr. Fielder. That my Lord of Essex cut his Throat in the Tower.

Mr. Just. Withins. What, before he had cut his Throat?

Mr. Fielder. Yes.

Mr. Just. Withins. That is very strange indeed.

L. C. J. Lord, what a Story is here!

Mr. Williams. My Lord, if you please, I will tell you what Use we would make of it.

L. C. J. I know what Use you would make of it, the Use is just the same, as you make use of all sorts of ridiculous and shamming Stories, to set us together by the Ears, and rake into all the Dunghills that can be, to pick up Matter to put us into Confusion.

Mr. Williams. But, my Lord, if there was such a Report so long before—

L. C. J. Mr. Williams, you were here in Town at that time, I am sure.

Mr. Williams. My Lord, I heard it at Eleven o'Clock that Day, that is the soonest I heard it.

L. C. J. What an Age do we live in! What Stuff is here picked up, on purpose to kindle the Fire, and set us all into a Flame!

Mr. Att. Gen. What Day of the Month was it, Fielder, upon your Oath?

Mr. Fielder. I did not mind the Day of the Month, I can't tell that.

Mr. Sol. Gen. How do you know it was that Week?

Mr. Fielder. Because on the Saturday Night that Week, we had the certain News of it.

Mr. Sol. Gen. You say somebody told you then of it on Saturday?

Mr. Fielder. Yes, on Saturday we had certain News of it.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Who gave you the certain Intelligence?

Mr. Fielder. Some Clothiers.

Mr. Williams. Was Gadbury your Countryman?

L. C. J. Ay, pr'ythee ask him that, whether Gadbury told it him, or Erra Pater, if you will.

Mr. Att. Gen. From what Market-People was it reported?

Mr. Fielder. Some Women.

Mr. Att. Gen. It was only Women's Stories then?

Mr. Fielder. Yes, they talked of it among themselves.

Mr. Att. Gen. Was it the Forenoon or the Afternoon?

Mr. Fielder. The Wednesday and Thursday both, it was the common Talk of the Town all Day long.

Mr. Just. Withins. Name one that spake it to you.

Mr. Att. Gen. Ay, name one of any Credit, if you can.

Mr. Fielder. I cannot, it was the Women as they came in and out of my Shop, and as they went up and down the Town.

Mr. Wallop. My Lord, we leave it with your Lordship and the Jury. He swears he then heard such a Report.

Mr. Just. Withins. Do you believe this, Mr. Wallop, yourself? You are a Man of Ingenuity, I appeal to you.

Mr. Wallop. I believe that Mr. Braddon in his Prosecution of this Matter, went upon the ground of this Report, for he had heard the like Evidence was given in my Lord Stafford's Trial, about the News of Sir Edmundbury Godfrey's being killed, before it was known here what was become of him, and that perhaps misled him, if he be misled.

Mr. Just. Withins. Do you believe that this Man can speak Truth, when he says it was reported all about their Town, for two Days before it was done, and yet can't name one Person that spake it?

5 T

Mr. Fielder.

Mr. Fielder. I keep a publick Shop, and don't take notice of every one that comes in and out, to remember particularly.

Mr. Just. Withins. You heard it up and down the Town you say, surely you might remember somebody.

Mr. Wallop. He might hear it, and not take notice of one, but it was the common Fame at Andover.

Mr. Williams. Let it go as it will. Your Lordship and the Jury hear what he says—

L. C. J. But, under Favour, Mr. Williams, it ought not to pass so easily; 'tis a Contrivance to deceive the King's Subjects, and shews a Design to pick up Evidence to amuse the unwary, and fill their Heads with Fears and Jealousies of I known not what.

Mr. Wallop. My Lord, I would excuse my Client from Malice as well as ever I can, and therefore we produce these Witnesses, to shew what grounds he had for what he did.

Mr. Williams. We will next call some Women that live near the Tower, that might give him some occasion for his concerning himself in this Business, Jane Lodeman, and Margaret Smith. This Voice and Rumour in the Country, made him to go into the Country, but it shews he was no Contriver of the Report.

Mr. Att. Gen. I would fain know of Fielder, when he told Mr. Braddon of this?

Mr. Braddon. My Lord, I desire the Family of the Edwards may be called.

L. C. J. Name them, Who are they? How can we tell who your Witnesses are?

Mr. Braddon. Crier call them, Mrs. Edwards and her Daughter. Will your Lordship give me leave to make my own Defence?

L. C. J. Ay, if you will, but then! take notice your Counsel are discharged from making any Defence for you.

Mr. Braddon. May it please your Lordship, and you Gentlemen of the Jury, These were the Inducements following, that put me upon engaging in this Matter.—

Mr. Att. Gen. Call your Witnesses first, and then speak.

Mr. Braddon. Mr. Edwards, and Mrs. Edwards. [Who came into Court.

Mr. Just. Withins. Pray, Mr. Braddon, answer me this one Question. What was the Matter that encouraged you to proceed after you knew the Boy had denied it, and said it was all a Lye?

Mr. Braddon. I was bound to answer to an Information after I had been examined at the Council; I had not otherwise stirred in it again.

L. C. J. Well, What do you ask Edwards?

Mr. Braddon. What Day was the first Day I saw you, and had Discourse with you, and what was the Discourse I had with you?

Mr. Edwards. It was the Seventeenth of July.

Mr. Braddon. What did you tell me then that your Boy reported?

Mr. Edwards. I told you what I acquainted the Court withal before, that the Boy had brought Home such a Report.

Mr. Braddon. Had the Boy ever denied it before I saw you?

Mr. Edwards. That Day you came to speak with me about it, as I was informed by my Wife and my Daughter, the Boy did deny it.

Mr. Braddon. Was it before I came, or after I came that he denied it?

Mr. Edwards. It was after you came.

Mr. Braddon. What were the Inducements that made him to deny it.

L. C. J. He tells you himself, because it was false.

Mr. Braddon. I desire the elder Sister Sarah Edwards may be called.

Mr. Wallop. It is apparent the Boy did affirm it—

L. C. J. I thought Mr. Braddon would have made his Defence himself, Mr. Wallop, but you will be breaking in upon him with your Remarks. Make your Remarks by and by, this is a Time for Evidence.

Mr. Wallop. My Lord, I only say this, 'Tis apparent the Boy did first affirm it, and we shall shew how he came to deny it.

L. C. J. 'Tis not proper for you to make Remarks, when you are examining your Witnesses; but when you sum up, You may take what Notes you will, and reserve them 'till that time, but do not break in upon the Evidence.

Crier. Here is Sarah Edwards now.

[Who was sworn.

Mr. Att. Gen. This is not the Sister, this is the Mother of the Boy.

L. C. J. Well, what do you ask her?

Mr. Braddon. What Discourse had you with your Boy about Ten of the Clock that Friday Morning I met you?

Mrs. Edwards. I had no Discourse, but what my Child told me.

Mr. Braddon. What did your Child tell you?

Mrs. Edwards. I gave an Account to my Lord-Keeper, he had it in Writing, I gave him an Account in Writing.

Mr. Braddon. But you are now called upon your Oath, and are to speak the Truth, and must give an Account to his Lordship and the Jury upon your Oath, what it was the Boy told you?

Mrs. Edwards. What was it, Sir, he came and told me? Why, the Boy told me, Mother, says he, I have been at the Tower, and seen the King's Majesty, and his Hoyal Highness, and, says he, the Earl of Essex has cut his Throat; and Lord, Mother, says he, and wept. Lord, Child, said I, I am afraid you are going to make some Excuse to me, that I should not beat you, being you have play'd Truant; no, Mother, says he, I did not. He continued in this for a little while, and then afterwards did deny it.

Mr. Braddon. What did he deny?

Mrs. Edwards. What he had said to me.

Mr. Braddon. Did he deny that he had been at the Tower? Or that the Earl of Essex had cut his Throat?

Mrs. Edwards. No, he denied what he said he saw.

Mr. Braddon. What was that?

Mrs. Edwards. He said, He saw an Hand out of a Window, and a Razor fell down, and he went to take it up, and there came out a Woman, or a Maid, a short fat Woman came out, and took it up, and went in again.

Mr. Wallop. And he said this crying and weeping you say?

Mrs. Edwards. Yes, he did so.

Mr. Braddon. Did he deny it before such time as I had been there?

Mrs. Edwards. No, you was once at my House before, and spake to my Husband, and then you came the same Day again.

Mr. Braddon. Pray, what was the Discourse your eldest Daughter had with the Boy between the time of my first coming, and the time of my second coming?

L. C. J. 'Tis impossible for her to answer any such Question, what Discourse two other People had.

Mr. Att. Gen. Bring the Daughter herself, and let her tell.

L. C. J. Hark you, Mrs. Edwards, before you go. The Boy denied it, it seems, in two or three Days after he had given out such a Report?

Mrs. Edwards. Yes, my Lord he did.

L. C. J. How came he to deny it?

Mrs. Edwards. I will tell you how, When this Gentleman came and acquainted my Husband with his Business, it put us all into a great Damp; and my Husband said, Now both my Boys were gone to School, and says he, after the Gentleman was gone, to my Daughter Sarah, Don't you say any thing to your Brother when he comes in, but let him alone, and we will talk to him. So with that she was so grievously affrighted, and so amazed, that as soon as he came in, she said, prythee, Billy, deal truly, and don't you tell any Lye to save your Breech, for here has been a Gentleman to inquire something about what you said; why, Sister, says he, will any thing of Harm come? Truly, Child, says she, I don't know; and upon that he did deny it.

L. C. J. Did you tell Mr. Braddon he had denied it?

Mrs. Edwards. He was told he had denied it.

L. C. J. Did you tell Mr. Braddon, before the Paper was signed, that he did deny it?

Mrs. Edwards. Yes, my Lord, he knew that before the Paper was signed.

Mr. Braddon. Mrs. Edwards, Did not the Boy come to you, and cry out, he should be hang'd, and then did deny it?

Mrs. Edwards. Yes, that he did.

Mr. Braddon. From whence did he come, that he was in such a Fright?

Mrs. Edwards. I can't tell that, Sir.

Mr. Braddon. Did not your eldest Daughter chide him and threaten him?

Mrs. Edwards. Yes, she did bid him speak the Truth.

Mr. Att. Gen. And then he denied it?—Mrs. Edwards. Yes.

L. C. J. Ay, says she to him, Billy, do not, to save thy Breech, tell a Lye, but speak the Truth; why then, says he, the Truth of it is, there was no such Thing.

Mr. Braddon. My Lord, she says it was after his Sister had chid and threatened him.

Mr. Sol. Gen. You are a little too fierce upon the Woman, Mr. Braddon, you do not observe what she says.

L. C. J. Yes, he is wonderful zealous, flourishing his Hands—

Mr. Sol. Gen. She says, the Daughter did tell the Son that he must speak the Truth, and not tell a Lye to save his Breech, for there had been a Gentleman to inquire about it; Why, says the Boy, will there come any harm of it? I don't know, says his Sister; Why then, says he, I tell you the Truth, there was no such thing.

L. C. J. Ay, when she engaged him to tell the Truth, and not tell a Lye to save his Breech, then the Truth comes out.

Mr. Braddon. Pray call Sarah Edwards the Daughter. My Lord, they told me in the House that she had frightened him into a Denial.

L. C. J. Pray, good Sir, how came you to be a Justice of Peace, and to turn Examiner? You live in the Temple, or belong to the Temple, how come you to take Examinations here in London, but that some People are so very zealous and officious in Matters that concern them not, on purpose to raise a Dust?

Then Sarah Edwards the Younger was sworn.

Mr. Braddon. Did not your Brother deny what he had said by your means?

L. C. J. Pray, ask a fair Question.

Mr. Braddon. Mistress, Pray tell your Knowledge of what the Boy declared?

L. C. J. Ay, ay, Tell what you know, what your Brother said concerning his seeing a Razor, and his denying of it afterwards. Tell all from the Beginning to the End, and tell Truth in God's Name, and nothing but the Truth. We desire the Truth may come out, let it be of which Side it will.

Sarah Edwards. My Brother came home, and said he had been at the Tower, and that he had seen His Majesty and His Royal Highness, and the Earl of Essex had cut his Throat, and that he saw an Hand fling a Razor out of a Window, and that a Maid, or a Woman, came out and took it up, and went in again, and presently after he heard a Noise of Murder cried; so I knowing he was very apt to tell Lies, I did not believe it.

Mr. Braddon. Pray, Mistress, Did you prevail with him to deny it afterwards?

L. C. J. You are so wonderful full of Zeal and Heat in this Matter, you cannot let your own Witnesses tell their own Story, but you must interrupt them. You have been bred to the Law, and you have been before here present, I suppose, at many Trials, and what Pretence can you have to be more indulged in an extraordinary way of Proceeding than others? 'Tis not for the Integrity of your Conversation, I am sure, that you ought to have it, but only because you have more Impudence.

Mr. Braddon. My Lord, I have nothing of Confidence, but what is grounded upon Innocence.

L. C. J. I tell you, you are too confident, and pray know where you are, and behave yourself as you ought.

Mr. Braddon. My Lord, I hope I do no otherwise.

L. C. J. We must give such Liberty and Toleration because of the Extravagance of his Confidence, as to let him break in upon all Rules and Methods. When you behave yourself as you ought to do, the Court will indulge you, and give you all just Liberty; but don't expect for your Zeal sake, and the flinging of your Hands, to do what you list. Go on, Mistress.

Sarah

Sarah Edwards. So Sir, this Mr. Braddon came on Tuesday following, about one or two of the Clock, and asked for my Father, and coming, my Sister Mary went to the Door, and called my Father out to him. When my Father came to him, he told my Father he came from Sir Henry Capell, and the Countess of Essex, to know the Truth of my Brother's Report. So my Father told him the Boy had reported such a thing, but he would not assert the Truth of it, for he had been informed by us that the Boy was apt to tell Lies to excuse his playing Truant; so the Child was gone to School when Mr. Braddon came, and when he came home from School they went to the Child; said I, Billy, will you be sure to tell me the Truth of this Report; why Sister, said he, will any Harm come of it? Nay, said I, I do not know, for there has been a Gentleman to enquire about it. So then the Child denied it.

L. C. J. Did he know this before he made the Boy sign the Paper?

Sarah Edwards. Yes. This was on the Tuesday after Mr. Braddon had been first there. And I spake to him, said I, Billy, say nothing but the Truth, be sure, and don't tell a Lie to save your Breech. So, Sir, as soon as ever the Child denied it, Mr. Braddon came in again the same Day, and coming in found us, my Mother and all of us, daunted hearing the Boy deny it; but he asked the Child and bid him speak the Truth, and told him it was a dreadful thing to be Liar, and bid him read the 5th of the Acts, telling him he would find there two were struck dead for telling of a Lye, and several other such Expressions that I cannot remember. Upon Wednesday, about Noon, he comes again, and then my Brother did own it again, and he writ down what the Boy owned, and went away, saying he would go to Sir Henry Capell and the Countess of Essex. And on Thursday, he comes again and brings a Paper written over again, not the same he writ at our House, and then the Child set his Hand to it. The Child was something unwilling, so says he to him, It will be no harm to you, if any Danger does come of it, it will come to me and not to you.

L. C. J. The Child was unwilling to sign it you say, but by his Persuasion?

Sarah Edwards. Yes, Mr. Braddon told him it would be no Harm to him, all the Harm would come to himself.

Mr. Braddon. When the Child had owned to me what he first said, and upon your saying that he denied it, I asked him the reason why he denied it? pray will you tell what Answer he made to that Question. Pray tell the Truth, and nothing but the Truth.

Sarah Edwards. Upon my Word, Sir, I can't recollect that.

Mr. Braddon. Pray Mistress, what Answer did he make?

Sarah Edwards. I have told you what I know, to the best of my Remembrance.

Mr. Braddon. Did not you hear your Brother run to his Mother, and cry out, I shall be hanged?

Sarah Edwards. Yes.

Mr. Braddon. What was the reason of his crying out so?

Sarah Edwards. Why, the Child had that Fear and Dread upon his Spirits, knowing it was a Lye, I suppose, he told.

Mr. Braddon. What was the Reason of his Fear?

L. C. J. She tells you, It was the Falseness of the Story.

Mr. Wallop. Mistress, Did not you tell him, that his Father would be in danger of losing his Place?

Sarah Edwards. Yes, Sir, we did.

Mr. Wallop. Did you tell him, the King will hang your Father if you do not deny it?

L. C. J. Why have you a mind to have it believed that it was true, then, Mr. Wallop?

Mr. Wallop. My Lord, the Boy best knows that.

L. C. J. But do you believe that if it had been true, that the King would hang his Father, or turn him out of his Place if he did not deny it, as tho' the King would force People to deny the Truth?

Mr. Wallop. My Lord, I do not say nor believe any such thing.

L. C. J. But your Question seems to carry it so.

Mr. Wallop. My Lord, I ask the Question of her, whether she did not say so to him. I ask Questions according to my Instructions.

L. C. J. Nay, Mr. Wallop, be as angry as you will, you shan't hector the Court out of their Understandings. We see plainly enough whither that Question tends. You that are Gentlemen of the Robe, should carry yourselves with greater Respect to the Government, and while you do so, the Court will carry themselves as becomes them to you.

Mr. Wallop. I refer myself to all that hear me, if I attempted any such thing as to hector the Court.

L. C. J. Refer yourself to all that hear you, refer yourself to the Court; 'tis a Reflection upon the Government, I tell you your Question is, and you shan't do any such thing while I sit here, by the Grace of God, if I can help it.

Mr. Wallop. I am sorry for that, I never intended any such thing, my Lord.

L. C. J. Pray behave yourself as you ought, Mr. Wallop, you must not think to huff and swagger here.

Mr. Just. Withins. Mr. Braddon, You hear what the Reason was of his crying out so. She said he was afraid because he knew he had told a Lye.

Mr. Wallop. Pray, Mistress, who told him the Family would be ruined by it?

Mr. Just. Withins. Mr. Wallop, I asked this Gentlewoman, whether she did say it, and she said she could not tell.

Sarah Edwards. Indeed I cannot tell, my Lord.

Mrs. Edwards. She did indeed say so, my Lord.

Mr. Wallop. Pray let it go, my Lord, as it is, what was it she said? Did she speak about turning her Father out of his Place?

Mrs. Edwards. I cannot say that, but she said, when the Boy asked whether there would be any harm by it, she could not tell, but it may be her Father and Family might be ruined.

L. C. J. And is not this a Reflection upon the Government, to say the King would ruin any one if they did not tell a Lye?

Mr. Wallop. My Lord, for a false Report he might be ruined, but it seems upon this saying he did deny it.

Mr. Just. Withins. Was there a Word said of his being turned out of his Place?

Mrs. Edwards. I cannot say there was.

L. C. J. No, not a Word, but only Mr. Wallop is so impetuous in the worst of Causes.

Mr. Wallop. I am in the Judgment of the Court, whether I do any thing but what becomes an Advocate for his Client, according to my Instructions.

L. C. J. Yes, you are so, and shall know that you are under the Correction of the Court too.

Mr. Wallop. My Lord, I know where I am.

L. C. J. Ay, you know well enough, but you would do well to carry yourself as you should do.

Mr. Wallop. With humble Submission, my Lord, I appeal to all that hear me.

L. C. J. Appeal to whom you will, I know the Business of the Bar is to appeal to the Court.

Mr. Just. Withins. What is the Matter with Mr. Wallop, that makes him so earnest in this Cause?

L. C. J. There is such an Heat in this Cause, I wonder whence it should come, I am sure 'tis not from the Honesty of it.

Mr. Braddon. Young Mrs. Edwards, If I suffer any thing by reason of the falsity of your Testimony, it will return upon you.

Sarah Edwards. Sir, I do tell you all I know.

Mr. Braddon. Then I desire you to answer me this Question, Whether or no when the Boy did own what he first said, and I asked him the reason of his Denial whether the Falsity of the thing, or Fear caused him to deny it, did not he say it was Fear through your Discouragements and Threatenings?

Sarah Edwards. No, he did not say it, did he, Mother?

L. C. J. Why, we are got into a way of appealing and appealing, here is appealing to the People, and appealing to the Witnesses; pray keep to the Business, and within the Bounds of Decency. Before such time as the Boy denied it, did you desire him to speak Truth?

Sarah Edwards. Yes, I did.

Mr. Thompson. And when Mr. Braddon examined him, did he desire him to speak Truth?

Sarah Edwards. Yes, he did.

L. C. J. But he knew before he examined him that he had denied it, did not he?

Sarah Edwards. Yes, the second time before he came into the House.

Mr. Braddon. I desire the old Gentleman may be asked this Question.

Mr. Thompson. Call Mr. Edwards again.

L. C. J. The Spirit of the Client was got into the Counsel I think just now, and now 'tis got into the Client again. 'Tis an hard matter to lay it, I perceive.

Mr. Wallop. My Lord, I am here of Counsel for Mr. Braddon, and I only ask Questions as they are in my Breviate.

L. C. J. But, Sir, if you have any thing in your Breviate that reflects upon the Government, you ought not to vent it, nor shan't be permitted to vent it as long as I sit here.

Mr. Wallop. My Lord, with Submission, I hope I never did, nor never shall let any such thing come from me.

L. C. J. Nay, be as angry, or as pleased as you will, 'tis all one to me, you shall not have liberty to broach your seditious Tenets here.

Mr. Braddon. Mr. Edwards, Pray will you answer this Question? Did not your Son, when he was asked why he denied it, say that it was Fear and Discouragement, through his Sister's Threats, was the Cause? Pray speak the Truth.

Mr. Edwards. I cannot tell whether the Child did say so, something of that Nature he did say.

Mr. Thompson. Call Anne Burt.

L. C. J. We have got such strange kind of Notions, now-a-days, that forsooth Men think they may say any thing because they are Counsel. I tell you Mr. Wallop, your Questions did reflect upon the Government, as tho' the King had a mind to turn a Man out of his Employment, if he did not swear a Falsity. What can be a greater Reflection than that? But all the matter is, what has been done must be avouched and justified, though it be never so ill. But we plainly see through all. This was the Design from the beginning, the King and the Duke of York were in the Tower at that time, and it must be thought and believed that they had designed this Matter, and so then all People must be ruined in case they would not say the Earl murdered himself, tho' indeed others had done it.

Mr. Wallop. Mr. Edwards did not delight to have such a Report, as might create Trouble, first come out of his House.

Mr. Braddon. My Lord, As to the making such an Inference, or any Reflection as your Lordship mentions, I am as far from it as any body here.

L. C. J. We must give a wonderful deal of Countenance to such barbarous and horrid Practices, and I warrant you must suffer, the Government to be reflected upon at the will and Pleasure of every Man. No, let us hear the Truth, but not in the face of a Court permit Men to asperse the Government as they please by asking such Questions.

Mr. Att. Gen. And the Witnesses say nothing to it neither.

L. C. J. No, nothing at all like it, but 'tis Asperion for Asperion sake. And we must sit still and hear it.

Mr. Wallop. My Lord, I think 'tis for the Honour of the Government to have all things fairly enquired into.

L. C. J. And 'tis for the Honour of all Courts of Justice not to suffer Reflections upon the Government, let them be by whom they will. And in Gentlemen of the Bar 'tis worse than others.

Mr. Just. Withins. Truly, I do not see where there is any countenance for asking such a Question.

L. C. J. No, but some People are so wonderful zealous—

Mr. Wallop. My Lord, Zeal for the Truth is a good Zeal.

L. C. J. It is so, but Zeal for Faction and Sedition, I am sure is a bad Zeal. I see nothing in all this Cause but Villany and Baseness. And I believe believe no Man that has heard it, but will readily acknowledge that it appears to be an untoward malicious ugly thing, as bad as ever I heard since I was born, on purpose to cast an Indignity upon the King and Government, and set us all in a Flame.

Then Anne Burt appeared, and was sworn.

Mr. Braddon. Mrs. Burt, I desire to know what Discourse you had with Mrs. Edwards, and that Family?

Mr. Att. Gen. I beg your Pardon for that, here Mrs. Edwards is herself to tell what she has said.

Mr. Braddon. I desire to know what Discourse she had with any of the Family?

Mrs. Burt. I went to make a Visit to Mrs. Edwards, and I had not been there half an Hour but in comes this Gentlemen; now I had asked no Questions about the Business, but in he comes and desired to speak with Mrs. Edwards; Mr. Edwards was called, and when he came in with Mr. Edwards, the Gentleman sat down in the Room, and told Mr. Edwards he had heard a Report of something his Son had spoken, but he desired to have it from his Son's own Mouth, and the Boy was called in, (this is a real Truth, Sir, for I do not know whether I may stir from this Place where I am alive or no;) And when the Boy came in, the Gentleman said to him, if it be true that you have reported, own it; if not, do not own it; for, said he, it is a dreadful thing to be found in a Lye, I would have you read the 5th Chapter of the Acts, where a Man and a Woman were struck dead for telling a Lye. Sir, said the Boy, 'tis true, and what I said I will speak it before any Justice of Peace in the World. And then he asked him what he had reported, and the Boy made a Repetition of what he had seen and said before, that he went into the Tower and came to the first Row of Houses that goes along. And at the first House he saw nobody look out at the Window, nor at the second House, but he looked up at the third House, and he took his Hand and shewed thus, said he, I saw a Man's Hand he did not say, but an Hand throw a Razor out, of this fashion, and he imitated it with his Hand. Said the Gentleman, was it not the wrong Window, or the wrong House? I will not take the thing upon this Credit, take your other Brother down, that was a bigger Boy than this, and, says he, go down to the House, and shew your Brother the Window where you saw this. The two Boys went down, and he shew'd his Brother the Place where he saw the Hand—

L. C. J. Were you present at his shewing?

Mrs. Burt. Will your Lordship please to give me leave—

L. C. J. And pray give me leave too. I ask you, Were you present? For you tell it as if you knew it yourself.

Mrs. Burt. Both the Boys came up and said so.

L. C. J. You should have said so then, that they told you it, for you are upon your Oath, and must affirm nothing but your own Knowledge.

Mrs. Burt. If I do misplace my Words I cannot help that—

L. C. J. You misplace your Evidence, Woman, you must not swear that to be true, that you don't know to be true.

Mrs. Burt. My Lord, I heard what I say with my own Ears.

L. C. J. But you talk of a thing you did not see with your own Eyes, as if you had seen it.

Mrs. Burt. I beg your Pardon, my Lord, I can't tell how to place my Words so exactly.

L. C. J. I care not how thou placest thy Words, tell thy own Knowledge.

Mrs. Burt. I tell what is Truth, what I heard and saw; for, said Mr. Braddon, I believe it was not the right Window, when the Boy came up and said he had shewed the Window. And this Gentleman, I cannot hit his Name right, (he is a Stranger to me) he and Mr. Edwards went down with the Boy, to see whether it were the right Window of the House where my Lord died (which where it is I cannot tell any otherwise than has been reported, or whether there be one Room or two of a Floor I don't know;) and when he came up again he called for a Sheet of Paper, that he might write from the Boy's Mouth, and that he might not differ one Word from what the Boy had said himself. And when I saw Mr. Braddon begin to write I went away, for I thought it may be the Gentleman might expect I should set my Hand to it as a Witness, and I did not desire any Trouble.

Mr. Braddon. I desire this Question may be asked her, my Lord, Do not you remember it was said the Boy denied it?

Mrs. Burt. Yes, it was said, the Boy did deny it.

Mr. Braddon. What did his Sister say was the reason of his denying it?

Mr. Thompson. Ay, what did you hear the Sister say?

L. C. J. I told you before, that was no Evidence what another body did say.

Mr. Wallop. Mistress, The Boy denied it, for what Reason?

Mrs. Burt. Because his Sister, as his Mother told me, had been talking to him.

L. C. J. As his Mother told you, prithee, Woman, speak your own Knowledge, and not what another body told thee.

Mrs. Burt. Pray, give me leave, my Lord—

L. C. J. I tell thee, I will not give the leave to say what thou should'st not say.

Mrs. Burt. I heard his Sister say—

L. C. J. It is not Evidence if thou didst hear never so many People say it.

Mrs. Burt. My Lord, I speak nothing but the Truth.

L. C. J. Shall we allow that in this Case for Evidence that we allow in no other Case, for what Reason, pray? I do not see it deserves any such extraordinary Favour.

M. Just. Withins. Mr. Wallop, we must not hear what another said, that is no Party to this Cause. You know it is no Evidence, therefore do not press it.

Mrs. Burt. My Lord, I have done, if that will satisfy you.

L. C. J. Prithee, satisfy thyself, good Woman.

Mrs. Burt. My Lord, I have done. I come here to speak the Truth, and so I do.

L. C. J. Nay, prithee be not so full of Tattle, so full of Clack.

Then a little Girl came into Court.

L. C. J. What Age is this Girl of? How old art thou, Child?

Girl. I was 13 last Saturday.

L. C. J. Do you know the Danger of telling a Lye?

Girl. Yes.

L. C. J. Why, What will become of you if you tell a Lye?

Girl. The Devil will have me.

L. C. J. Give her her Oath. What is thy Name, Child?

Girl. Jane Lodeman.

Then she was sworn.

L. C. J. Child, do not be afraid of any thing in the World, but only of telling any thing but what is true; be sure you do not tell a Lye, for if, as you say, you shall be in Danger of Hell-fire by telling a Lye, much more will you be in danger if you swear to a Lye. Now, what do you ask her?

Mr. Braddon. What did you see in the Tower that Morning the Earl of Essex died?

Lodeman. I saw a Hand out of a Window, but I cannot tell what Window it was, but it was a Hand throw out a Razor.

Mr. Braddon. And what did you hear after that?

Lodeman. I can't well remember, but it was either two Shrieks or two Groans that I heard presently after.

L. C. J. What time of the Day was it, Child?

Lodeman. It was between nine and ten of the Clock.

L. C. J. Who was with you besides yourself there?

Lodeman. There were more besides me, but they went away.

L. C. J. Who were they, Child?

Lodeman. A great many that I did not know.

L. C. J. And how came you to take notice of it?

Lodeman. And there was a Coach stood just at the Door.

L. C. J. Tell us some of them, Child, and that were there besides thyself, speak the Truth, be not afraid. Thou say'st a great many People were there, and all the People must necessarily see it.

Lodeman. They were People I did not know.

L. C. J. But they all saw it as well as you?

Lodeman. So I suppose they did.

L. C. J. And you heard a Shriek or two, you say?

Lodeman. Two Shrieks or two Groans, I can't well remember which.

L. C. J. How high was the Window?

Lodeman. Not above one pair of Stairs high.

L. C. J. How high from the Ground might it be?

Lodeman. Not above one Story.

Mr. Thompson. Whereabouts in the Tower was it?

Lodeman. Sir, it was as you go upon the Mount.

Mr. Wallop. Whose Lodging do you think it was?

Lodeman. I did not know whose it was, but Folks said it was the Earl of Essex's.

L. C. J. Who did you tell this to?

Lodeman. I told no body till I came to my Aunt, and I told her.

L. C. J. What is her Name?

Lodeman. Margaret Smith.

L. C. J. Did you ever tell this to that Man?

Lodeman. Yes, afterwards I did.

L. C. J. How came he to enquire of you about it?

Lodeman. He came and asked me, and I could not deny it.

L. C. J. Ay, but how came he to ask you?

Lodeman. There was a Gentlewoman that was at our House, and she heard of it, and spake of it at a Gentlewoman's at Dinner, and so he came to our House to enquire about it.

L. C. J. Who is that Gentlewoman? What is her Name?

Lodeman. Susan Gibbins.

L. C. J. Let me see the Information of this Girl, that Mr. Braddon had taken?

Cl. of Cr. Yes, my Lord, there it is.

L. C. J. Do you know my Lord of Essex's Lodgings?

Lodeman. They said it was his.

L. C. J. Did you know it of your own Knowledge?

Lodeman. No, Sir, I did not.

Mr. Thompson. Pray what became of the Razor that was thrown out of the Window, after it was thrown out?

Lodeman. I saw a Woman in a white Hood come out, but I did not see her take it up.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Girl, you say, that when you were at this Place in the Tower, and saw this Matter, there were a great many People there besides yourself?

Lodeman. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did the Razor fall among the People that stood there, or did it fall out in the Street, or how?

Lodeman. Sir, it fell within the Pales.

Mr. Sol. Gen. And was the Passage easy into the Pales?

Lodeman. Yes.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What, they must climb over, must they?

Lodeman. No, you need not climb over, there is a Door to go in. And when People went in the Soldier opened the Door.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Who went in with the Soldier? Did you see any Body go in?

Lodeman. There was a Man went in, but I know not who he was.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did the Soldier stand at the Door when this Razor was thrown out?

Lodeman. I cannot tell that, a Soldier used to be at the Door.

Mr. Sol. Gen. The Woman came out of the Lodging, did she not?

Lodeman. Yes.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did she go in again?—Lodeman. I did not see her go in again.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did she go into the Pale?

Lodeman. I did not see her go into the Pales.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did you see the Razor after it fell upon the Ground?

Lodeman. No.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Was it bloody?—Lodeman. Yes.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Very bloody?—Lodeman. Yes.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did you see no body take it up?

Lodeman. No, I did not.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Come hither, Child; Are you sure it was a Razor; or a Knife?

Lodeman. I am sure it was a Razor.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Was it open or shut?—Lodeman. It was open.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What Colour was the Handle?

Lodeman. Sir, I can't tell, I see it but as it flew out.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Was it all over bloody?—Lodeman. No.

Mr. Sol. Gen. All but a little Speck?—Lodeman. It was very bloody.

L. C. J. Blessed God, What an Age do we live in! Girl, you say, you did not know it to be my Lord of Essex's Window?

Lodeman. No, but as they told me.

L. C. J. Nor you did not see any body take up the Razor?—Lodeman. No.

L. C. J. But you are sure you did not?—Lodeman. I am sure I did not.

L. C. J. But, Child, recollect thyself, sure thou didst see somebody take it up?—Lodeman. No, I did not.

L. C. J. I ask thee again, Didst not thou know it to be my Lord of Essex's Window?—Lodeman. No, but as they told me.

L. C. J. Did you hear no body speak to the Maid that came out?

Lodeman. No body at all.

L. C. J. No, pr'ythee is that thy Hand, Child? Shew her the Paper, the uppermost Part of it.—Lodeman. Sir, I can't write.

L. C. J. Who put thy Name to it?

Lodeman. Sir, I don't know, no more than the Pope of Rome.

L. C. J. Whose Hand-writing is that?

Lodeman. I cannot tell, I never could write in my Life.

Mr. Braddon. Those are the Names of such as heard her say it.

Mr. Att. Gen. Yes, you have cooked it up bravely.

L. C. J. You shall see what a brave Managery you have made of this poor Child. Read the Information.

Cl. of Cr. Reads.—The Eighth of August, 1683, Jane Lodeman, aged about 13 Years, did in the Presence of these whose Names are under-written, declare as follows, That the said Jane Lodeman was in the Tower on Friday Morning, the 13th of July last, and standing almost over-against the late Earl of Essex's Lodging-Window, she saw a Hand cast out a Razor out of my Lord's Window, and immediately upon that she heard Shrieks; and that there was a Soldier by my Lord's Door, which cried out to those within the House, that somebody should come and take up a Razor, which was thrown out of the Window, whereupon there came a Maid with a white Hood out of the House, but who took up the Razor she cannot tell.

L. C. J. Here 'tis said the Soldier cried out, but now she says, the Soldier she does not know was there; and she heard no body speak to the Maid.

Mr. Braddon. With Submission, my Lord, I desire to ask her this Question.

L. C. J. Pr'ythee ask her what thou wilt. We hear what she says.

Mr. Braddon. Did you hear the Soldier cry out, or did you not?

Lodeman. No, I did not.

Mr. Braddon. Did not you say, you heard him cry out?

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lord, we cannot admit Mr. Braddon should ask such Questions, they are leading Questions. Ask her a general Question, and you shall have an Answer, but you shall not give her Words to Swear to.

L. C. J. No, upon my Word, you have given her too many Words to Swear to already.

Mr. Braddon. My Lord, I only writ what she declared.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Were you carried by Mr. Braddon before any Magistrate, or any Justice of Peace?—Lodeman. No.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did he take the Examination himself?—Lodeman. Yes.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did not he desire you to go before a Justice of Peace to be Sworn?—Lodeman. No, Sir.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did he write it himself?

Mr. Att. Gen. Ay, he writ it, and took it, and this Woman that is coming here, is a Witness to it.

L. C. J. What is this Woman's Name?

Mr. Braddon. This is the Aunt, Margaret Smith. [Who was Sworn.

L. C. J. Well, what say you to her?

Mr. Braddon. I desire to know, what this Girl said to you, when she returned from the Tower the 13th of July?

Mrs. Smith. She said to that effect that she speaks now.

Mr. Braddon. What was that? Tell the Court.

Mrs. Smith. I chid her, because she had been playing: That is all I can say.

Mr. Just. Withins. Did she tell you, the Soldier cried out for somebody to come and take up the Razor?—Mrs. Smith. I cannot say that.

Mr. Just. Withins. Did she say, she saw a Razor thrown out of my Lord of Essex's Window.

Mrs. Smith. She said, she saw a Razor thrown out of a Window; I can't tell whether she said out of my Lord of Essex's Window.

Mr. Freke. Did you set your hand to that Paper?

L. C. J. Were you a Witness to that Paper?

Mrs. Smith. There were others heard what the Girl said, as well as I.

L. C. J. Who desired you to sign it?

Mr. Freke. Who writ that Paper, Mistress?

Mrs. Smith. Pray excuse me, Sir, I do not know.

Mr. Freke. Did you see it writ?—Mrs. Smith. No.

L. C. J. No: It was one got ready drawn by Mr. Braddon.

Mr. Just. Holloway. Pray let the Boy's Information be read again, for I observe there is a Difference; she says, the Razor fell within the Pales; the Boy says, it fell without.

L. C. J. Ay, ay, the one says it was the Inside; the other, the Outside of the Pales.

Then the Information was read.

L. C. J. Go on now, and ask your Questions.

Mr. Braddon. Did the Girl say, That after the Razor was thrown out, the Soldier cried to somebody to take it up?

Mrs. Smith. Sir, I can say no more than what I have said.

Mr. Braddon. Did she, or did she not?

Mrs. Smith. Pray, Sir, excuse me; I have spoken what I know.

VOL. III.

Mr. Att. Gen. You may see how he has managed this Matter; my Lord, by his urging the Witnesses with Questions they know nothing of.

L. C. J. Yes, yes, we see he would fain put Words into their Mouths.

Mr. Att. Gen. Mistress, Did you send to Mr. Braddon, to inform him of what the Girl had said? Or did he come to you?

Mrs. Smith. Sir, I never saw him before in my Days.

Mr. Att. Gen. He came first to you then?

Mrs. Smith. Yes: He hearing of it, came as a Stranger to me.

Mr. Braddon. Did I, directly or indirectly, offer you, or your Niece, any Thing?—Mrs. Smith. No, never in this World.

Mr. Braddon. Did I ever desire her, or you, to say any thing but what was true?

Mrs. Smith. No, Sir: You ever encouraged the Girl to speak Truth; and bid her speak nothing but what was Truth.

Mr. Att. Gen. You need not pay dear for a Lye; you are like to pay dear enough before you have done.

Mr. Braddon. My Lord, as to personal Knowledge, I am as much a Stranger to this Matter, as any body here; and in all my Concern in it, I have done nothing but what was very fair.

L. C. J. Mind your Defence, Mr. Braddon, and leave commending yourself; or, if you will, rather commend yourself by your Actions, than your Expressions: One good Action is worth Twenty good Expressions.

Mr. Braddon. Swear William Glasbrooke.

[Which was done.

L. C. J. Well, what do you ask him?

Mr. Freke. My Lord, we desire to know of him, whether he was by on the 13th of July, when the Girl gave this Report?

Mr. Glasbrooke. I was up two pair of Stairs when she came in.

L. C. J. What is your Name, Sir?—Mr. Glasbrooke. William Glasbrooke.

Cl. of Cr. Ay, here is his Information, among those that were taken about Braddon.

Mr. Glasbrooke. She came in to her Aunt, that went out just now before me, and I heard her very loud with her Aunt, saying, the Earl of Essex had cut his Throat in the Tower. Her Aunt chid her upon it; and her Aunt chiding her, she said, she was sure it was true; for she saw a bloody Razor, with a bloody Hand, thrown out of the Window.

Mr. Freke. Was this the Day of my Lord of Essex's Death?

Mr. Glasbrooke. It was the Day the King was in the Tower; and, as was reported, the Day he was killed.

Mr. Braddon. Were you present when I first discoursed the Girl?

Mr. Glasbrooke. Yes.

Mr. Braddon. Had you ever seen me before, or no?

Mr. Glasbrooke. No.

L. C. J. Did she say, my Lord of Essex cut his Throat at that Time?

Mr. Glasbrooke. Yes.

L. C. J. Are you a Witness to this Paper? Did you set your hand to this Paper?

Mr. Glasbrooke. To the Paper Mr. Braddon writ, I did: I am a Witness to that.

L. C. J. Then read his Information.

Cl. of Cr. Reads.—Mr. William Glasbrooke does declare, That one Jane Lodeman, aged about Thirteen Years, inhabiting in the same House where he, the said William Glasbrooke, lodged, did on Friday, the 13th of July last past, between Ten and Eleven in the Morning, in the Presence and Hearing of him, the said William Glasbrooke, declare to her Aunt, That the Earl of Essex had cut his Throat; upon which her Aunt was very angry with her; whereupon she, the said Girl, did declare, That she was sure of it, for she saw him throw the Razor out of the Window; and that the Razor was bloody; and that she heard two Groans or Shrieks (which of the two Words she used, he, the said William Glasbrooke, is not certain:) Of this, he, the said William Glasbrooke, is ready to make Oath.

L. C. J. Now my Lord of Essex cut his own Throat, and after threw the Razor out of the Window.

Mr. Glasbrooke. 'Tis what the Girl did declare.

Mr. Att. Gen. Does not this Girl usually tell Lies?

Mr. Glasbrooke. I have before that Time taken her in a Lye.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did you acquaint Mr. Braddon with that?

Mr. Glasbrooke. I cannot tell that I did.

Mr. Att. Gen. Do you remember that you told Mr. Braddon, That she was a Girl that told Truth?

Mr. Glasbrooke. No, I never did that; for I was always of another Persuasion about her.

Mr. Sol. Gen. He never was of that Temper, to praise her; he was always of a contrary Persuasion.

L. C. J. I'll assure him, that I am of his Opinion too: I do believe she is a lying Girl, and hath told us a company of Lies now.

Mr. Braddon. These two Children told me, they never saw one another till they were examined at the Council.

L. C. J. Well, well: Go on with your Witnesses.

Mr. Braddon. Where is William Smith? [Who appeared, and was sworn. I desire to know of you, Mr. Smith, what you heard the Girl say, when I was there?

Mr. Smith. I heard the Girl tell us, That she saw a Hand cast out a Razor, and either the Hand was bloody, or the Razor, I can't tell which; but she said it was out of the Window, where she said the Earl of Essex lodged.

L. C. J. Did she say the Earl of Essex did it himself?

Mr. Smith. She said, she saw an Hand cast out a Razor.

L. C. J. Did she tell you, it was the Earl of Essex's Lodging-Window?

Mr. Smith. She said it was that Lodging.

L. C. J. Ay, but she says now, she does not know it to be his Lodging.

Mr. Braddon. My Lord, she says she was told it was his Lodging.

L. C. J. But you have made her to say positively, it was his Lodging, and that he threw out the Razor.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray, Sir, where did you first hear this Report of this Girl?

Mr. Smith. There, at the House, where she was.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Were you alone when you went to the Girl the first time?

Mr. Smith. No, I went with Mr. Braddon.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did you hear any thing of it before? What did induce you you to go along with Mr. Braddon? What were the Arguments that prevailed with you to go with him?

Mr. Smith. I did not know where he was going; Mr. Braddon called me at the Shop, as I stood at the Door, and asked me if I was busy, or would go with him? So I went with him to the Tavern.

Mr. Sol. Gen. You never heard one Word before of the Girl's Report?

Mr. Smith. No, I did not.

L. C. J. What else did the Girl tell you?

Mr. Smith. I can't say what else she said. This I remember, that I have told you.

L. C. J. Did she name the Earl of Essex's Lodgings?

Mr. Smith. I am sure she said the Lodging where the Earl of Essex lay.

L. C. J. Did she name the Earl of Essex?

Mr. Smith. She did name the Earl of Essex's Lodgings?

L. C. J. Did she in so many Words say, That it was the Earl of Essex's Lodgings?

Mr. Att. Gen. Your Lordship sees, they give one Evidence, and she another.

Mr. Smith. I cannot say whether she did in so many Words say so, or no; but she said, That she saw a Hand tofs out a Razor, and either the Hand was bloody, or the Razor, and it was where my Lord of Essex's Lodgings was.

L. C. J. But did she name my Lord of Essex's Lodgings?

Mr. Smith. Yes, she did.

L. C. J. Well, what else did she say? Tell us all she said.

Mr. Smith. She said, There was a Man stood below, and she heard two Shrieks, and the Man did say, Here is a Razor; and a Woman came out, or one in Woman's Clothes, with white Head-clothes. Mr. Braddon asked if she see any body take it up, and she said, no; but she heard a Man say, here is the Razor, and she saw a Woman come out.

L. C. J. You are sure that is all you heard her say?

Mr. Smith. I think so.

L. C. J. Recollect yourself, pray good Mr. Smith.

Mr. Smith. I do not know that I heard any Thing else.

L. C. J. Pray read his Information.

Cl. of Cr. Here is William Smith subscribed.

Mr. Smith. Mr. Braddon writ down what the Girl said, and we did read it over all, and then set our Hands to it.

L. C. J. Well, Sir, Read the Information then.

Cl. of Cr. Reads the Information as before—

L. C. J. You hear what you have affirmed in this Paper, that the Girl said; you have forgot in your Evidence now this long Business about the Soldier.

Mr. Smith. My Lord, I have told all I did remember.

L. C. J. Why, you have set your Hand to it.

Mr. Smith. I did read it over, and it was nothing but what the Girl said, I am sure.

L. C. J. Where do you live?—Mr. Smith. In Throgmorton-street.

L. C. J. What Trade?—Mr. Smith. A Barber.

L. C. J. A notable Shaver, upon my Word! a special Fellow, I'll warrant him!

Mr. Braddon. Call Mrs. Mew.

[Who appeared and was sworn.]

Pray what Day was it you went from London to Berkshire?

Mrs. Mew. The Day before my Lord Russell was tried.

Mr. Braddon. What Expression did you hear from a Gentleman in the Coach?

L. C. J. We must not suffer such a Question to be asked, that is not Evidence.

Mr. Braddon. My Lord, I ask the Question in general Terms, what she heard such a Day?

L. C. J. Does she know any Thing of her own Knowledge?

Mr. Braddon. She can tell what she heard, my Lord.

L. C. J. 'Tis no Evidence.

Mr. Braddon. Will your Lordship please to hear what she says?

L. C. J. No, I will not hear what I should not hear; let her speak what she knows.

Mr. Braddon. She knows this, that a Woman told her—

L. C. J. Ask your Counsel, whether that be Evidence. If you will not be satisfied with what I say, ask them?

Mr. Wallop. She proves a Report.

L. C. J. I ask it of you, Mr. Wallop; Is what another said to her, Evidence in this Case?

Mr. Wallop. My Lord, if really there was such a Report—

L. C. J. Is that Evidence?

Mr. Wallop. 'Tis Evidence there was such a Talk, and that is Evidence of the Probability of the Thing.

L. C. J. I'll leave it to yourself, if you as a Lawyer say it is Evidence, we will hear it, because you say so; but I believe you, nor no body else will offer to say any such thing.

Mr. Wallop. My Lord, we lay it before the Court, as part of the Ground upon which we went, in our being concerned in this Business.

L. C. J. Is that a Justification of Mr. Braddon?

Mr. Wallop. Upon these Probabilities he engaged in this Matter, and to prove this Report, he brings this Gentlewoman to tell what she heard.

L. C. J. Why, is what the Woman told her, Evidence; She reported a Report to me, can that be Evidence?

Mr. Wallop. My Lord, with Submission, we think it justifies Mr. Braddon, that he went upon these grounds.

L. C. J. Where is the Woman that told her? Why is not she brought?

Mr. Wallop. They say, she is so big with Child she can't come.

L. C. J. Why, if that Woman were here herself, if she did say it, and would not Swear it, we could not hear her; how then can her saying be an Evidence before us? I wonder to hear any Man that wears a Gown, to make a doubt of it.

Mr. Braddon. I desire Jeremy Burgis may be called.

[Who appeared and was sworn.]

Mr. Wallop. What can you say about the Report in the Country?

Mr. Burgis. I was at Frome about my Business on a Friday—

L. C. J. Why, Gentlemen, what are we doing all this time? Do you think we sit here for nothing? Is not this the first time that a Report was given as Evidence in Westminster-hall?

Mr. Freke. My Lord, we are necessitated to use this Sort of Evidence.

L. C. J. I tell you, Sir, It is no Evidence, be necessitated what you will.

Mr. Freke. My Lord, They have produced this Man's Letter that was taken about Mr. Braddon, that is produced in Evidence against him: Now this Man comes to give an Account how he came to write that Letter.

L. C. J. But he shall not give an Account by a Report in the Country.

Mr. Burgis. It was written to the Landlord of the House where I quartered, that he might give notice to Mr. Braddon of a Discourse that passed in his House that Friday, of a Report that was there concerning the Earl of Essex's murdering himself.

Mr. Att. Gen. Had the Master of the House told you any such thing?

Mr. Burgis. No, he had not told me so; but I heard it in the House.

L. C. J. Of whom did you hear it? Who told you so?

Mr. Burgis. Sir, I was a Stranger there.

L. C. J. They can never tell any of them, who it was first reported it, nor particularly who told it them; but it was reported by some body, we don't know who.

Mr. Beech. Under Favour, my Lord, I rode directly to the Postmaster at Frome, whither this Letter was directed, and by the way, there is a Remark in the Letter of an Alteration of the Figure, 'tis interlined the 13th; it was not so before, to hit the Day exactly of the Murder of the Earl of Essex; and when I came thither, the Postmaster told me, There was no such Report in his House, nor in the whole Town at that Time.

L. C. J. I desire to know, upon your Oath, who told you that Report?

Mr. Beech. Sir, I do not know; I was a Stranger there.

L. C. J. Was it a Man or a Woman?

Mr. Burgis. He did not tell his Discourse to me.

L. C. J. But thou couldst guess by the Habit, whether it was a Man or a Woman?—Mr. Burgis. It was a Man.

L. C. J. Who did he tell it to?

Mr. Burgis. The Company in the House.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray, let him tell how Mr. Braddon came to speak to him about it?

L. C. J. Shew him that Letter. Look upon it, Friend; Is that your Hand?—Mr. Burgis. Yes, it is.

L. C. J. When did you put that Figure of 13 in? There was another Figure before, and that is blotted out.

Mr. Burgis. It was a mistake in me, I mistook the Day, and I corrected it.

L. C. J. When did you correct it? How soon did you correct it?

Mr. Burgis. Presently.

L. C. J. What Day had you put in first?—Mr. Burgis. The 6th Day.

L. C. J. Ay, but that was not the right Day, Man.

Mr. Burgis. It was a great while after, and I did not expect to be brought in question for any such thing.

L. C. J. How long after?—Mr. Burgis. Six Weeks.

L. C. J. How camest thou to recollect, to make it from the 6th to the 13th, six Weeks after?

Mr. Burgis. Mr. Braddon was there when I had writ it.

L. C. J. And he corrected it, did he?

Mr. Burgis. He said, that that was not the Day of my Lord's Death.

L. C. J. You had written it the 6th, and he put you in mind of the 13th.—Mr. Burgis. Yes.

Mr. Att. Gen. And he was to be the Messenger that carried the Letter himself?—Mr. Burgis. Yes, he was.

Mr. Sol. Gen. That is very well. I suppose, Gentlemen, you hear what he says, He says, Mr. Braddon was there, and told him that was not the Day.

L. C. J. Ay, Mr. Braddon said, You have mistaken the time, that will not do it, it must be the 13th.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray let me know one thing, Who recommended Braddon to you?—Mr. Burgis. Indeed I can't tell.

L. C. J. Who did he say he came to you from? Tell the Truth, upon your Oath.

Mr. Burgis. Sir, I was at work at my Business, and knew nothing of his Coming.

L. C. J. What Trade art thou?—Mr. Burgis. A Pinmaker.

L. C. J. Where do you live?—Mr. Burgis. At Marlborough.

L. C. J. How came Mr. Braddon and you acquainted?

Mr. Burgis. Sir, I will tell you; I was at work at my Trade, and there came came down a Gentleman that lives in our Town to me, and asked me—

L. C. J. What is that Gentleman's Name?—Mr. Burgis. Mr. Butcher.

L. C. J. What is that Butcher?

Mr. Burgis. A Gentleman that lives in Marlborough, a Grazer by Trade. He came and told me, There was a Gentleman came from London, about the Business now in Dispute—

L. C. J. Prithee, what was spoke of?

Mr. Burgis. It was concerning the Earl of Essex's Death. And he desired me to speak what I heard at such a time.

L. C. J. Who had you told what you heard first to? You must have told it to some body; who did you tell it to first?

Mr. Burgis. Indeed I can't directly say who I did tell it to.

L. C. J. Had you told that Gentleman of your Town, Butcher, as you call him?—Mr. Burgis. No, not that I know of.

L. C. J. Well, when he came to you, what then?

Mr. Burgis. He desired me to go to Mr. Braddon to the White-Hart. And so I went up to the White-Hart; and when I came to Mr. Braddon, I told him what I had heard at Frome.

L. C. J. And what then?

Mr. Burgis. Then Mr. Braddon asked me the same Night, Whether I would go down with him to Frome, and I could not; so then he desired me to write a Letter to recommend him to the House where I had heard it.

Mr.

Mr. Sol. Gen. And you did write that Letter?—Mr. Burgis. Yes, I did so.
Mr. Att. Gen. Your Lordship observes, this House was the Post-house, to be sure, to have it spread in Publick Places.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did you tell Butcher of your Knowledge, before he carried you to Braddon?—Mr. Burgis. Yes, Sir, I did.

Mr. Sol. Gen. When?—Mr. Burgis. Then, at that time.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did he ask you of your Knowledge, or did you tell him voluntarily?

Mr. Burgis. He asked me if I remember'd any such thing as I had spoken.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Why, had you spoke of it before?

Mr. Burgis. Yes, I had.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did he tell you upon whose Recommendation he came to you?

Mr. Burgis. I do not know upon whose Recommendation he came.

L. C. J. When you writ this Letter, did he dictate it to you, or did you write it of yourself?—Mr. Burgis. I writ it of myself.

L. C. J. Did he tell you what you should write?

Mr. Burgis. I shewed him what I had written.

L. C. J. And when you writ it, of yourself you put in the 6th Day?

Mr. Burgis. Yes, I did so.

L. C. J. What he did say then?

Mr. Burgis. Mr. Braddon said, it was the 13th Day.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Why did you shew Braddon your Letter after you had written it?

Mr. Burgis. He came to my House before I had sealed it.

L. C. J. But why did you shew him the Letter?

Mr. Burgis. He desired a Letter to recommend him to that Man at whose House I heard it.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What was he to be recommended to him for?

Mr. Burgis. It was to desire him to inquire, who brought the News first to Town.

Mr. Sol. Gen. You say, he desired a Letter of Recommendation?

Mr. Burgis. Yes, it was to recommend him to that Man.

Mr. Sol. Gen. That you may not be in a Mistake, pray recollect yourself; for there is not one Word of Recommendation in the Letter. Tell the true Reason, why you shewed him the Letter?

Mr. Burgis. I can't tell any other, but only he came before I had sealed it.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did he desire to see it?

Mr. Burgis. No, but the Letter lay writ upon the Table.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Was the Master of the Post-house at Frome present, when that Report you talk of was made?

Mr. Burgis. I cannot rightly say, whether he was or no.

L. C. J. How comest thou to put it in thus? This bears Date a pretty while ago, Marlborough, Aug. 21. and that was a good distance of Time from that Report that thou talkest of: How comest thou then to say, These are to desire you to call to mind, That I was at Frome such a time, and heard such a Report: If he was not there, why should he call to mind? What didst thou mean by that calling to mind?

Mr. Burgis. I would have had him called to mind my being at his House at that time.

L. C. J. But if he was not there, why didst thou ask him to call to mind that Report?

Mr. Burgis. He might hear of it from some other at that time, tho' he might not hear it in that Company where I was.

Mr. Sol. Gen. There is a Riddle in it, if we could but solve it.

L. C. J. No, no, Mr. Solicitor, the Riddle is unfolded; 'tis a plain Contrivance.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray, from whom did he tell you he was recommended?

Mr. Recorder. How came you to talk so to a Stranger, Sir, whom you never see before, about such a Business?

Mr. Burgis. He was recommended to me by Mr. Butcher, as I told you, who carried me to him.

Mr. Att. Gen. But who, as Braddon, or Butcher told you, did recommend him first to come down thither to you?

L. C. J. Upon your Oath, Sir, Who did Butcher tell you he came from?—Mr. Burgis. I have forgotten, Sir; I do not remember.

Mr. Recorder. Was it not a Non-conformist Parson, Sir, upon your Oath?—Mr. Burgis. Sir, I cannot remember.

Mr. Att. Gen. Mr. Beech, Do you know any particular Person that Braddon said he came recommended from?

Mr. Beech. I can tell what Account Braddon gave of his Journey himself: He said, he had a Letter that came particularly from this Man to London, to bring him down into the West: Said I, when came you out of London? I came on Thursday, said he: Where did you lodge a Thursday Night? At Ockingham. Said I, That is not your way to Marlborough: Where did you lie the next Night? He told me, at one Venables; and the next Night at Salisbury, I think.

L. C. J. Did Braddon tell you he had a Letter from that Man?

Mr. Beech. He said a Letter from that Man brought him down into the West.

L. C. J. Burgis. Did you send him e'er a Letter?

Mr. Burgis. No, I did not.

Mr. Beech. He said he came down purposely upon this Report.

Mr. Att. Gen. What said the Postmaster to you, Mr. Beech?

Mr. Beech. If you please to give me leave to speak, I'll tell you: I did desire, that Mr. Braddon might have no Pen and Ink, and presently I rid away to Frome, to this Postmaster's House, and spake with the Postmaster, and all his Family: We then examined them all, and there was no such Report in that Town 'till the Sunday after.

Mr. Sol. Gen. He was persuaded, sure, all People would say just as he would have them.

Mr. Thompson. Well, Mr. Braddon, Who do you call next?

Mr. Sol. Gen. Nay, I desire this Man may go on; for methinks he mends every Step he goes.

Mr. Braddon. Mr. Burgis, Do you remember how it was that you came to recollect yourself, and to know it was the 13th, and not the 6th?

L. C. J. He says, you told him.

Mr. Braddon. Pray, Sir, remember yourself, whether you did not say yourself you remember'd the true time; for you came from Frome to Marlborough on the Saturday Night, and then you heard there the Earl of Essex had cut his Throat the Day before; and when they told you so, you cried out, How can that be? It must be done before; for Yesterday I heard at Frome before Five of the Clock.

Mr. Just. Withins. Did not Mr. Braddon himself tell you, you had mistaken the Day?

Mr. Braddon. Sir, It was from this, he told this whole Story that I just now repeated, that the Saturday Night he was told, that the Earl had cut his Throat, and replied to them, that he had heard at Frome, the Day before, that he was murdered, and then I said, that must be the 13th.

L. C. J. How came you to tell that Man, you had a Letter from Burgis?

Mr. Braddon. No, my Lord, I did not tell him any such Thing.

L. C. J. Mr. Beech, Did not he tell you he had a Letter from Burgis?

Mr. Beech. He told me he came down upon the Information of this Burgis.

L. C. J. And he swears he never saw him before, nor never writ to him.

Mr. Braddon. You ask me, whether I had received any Letter from this Burgis. I told you, I had a Letter of Recommendation to Mr. Butcher, thinking he had been the Person that had reported it, and Mr. Butcher went to this Person and brought him to me, and he told me what he heard.

Mr. Beech. I never heard of the Name of Butcher 'till now he mentioned it.

Mr. Braddon. My Lord, I will call no more Witnesses.

Mr. Att. Gen. Your Lordship and the Jury observe, I suppose, his confident Behaviour.

L. C. J. Ay, He is no more concerned at it, than if he had been doing the most justifiable thing in the World.

Mr. Thompson. My Lord, I have but one Word to add on the Behalf of Mr. Speke, who is likewise joined in this Information. Truly, Mr. Speke, is a young Gentleman of some Quality, his Father is of very good Quality, Mr. Braddon was of his Acquaintance, and being his Acquaintance, and thus concerned, as you have heard in the Prosecution of this Business; he hearing of these Reports, and resolving to go down into the Country about it, desired Mr. Speke to lend him his Man and his Saddle, for he was going into the Country. Mr. Speke inquires what his Business was, whereupon he told him it was to inquire about some Persons that had reported something relating to the Earl of Essex's Death. And being to go into the Country where Mr. Speke, who was that Country-man, had some Acquaintance, upon this he desired him to write him a Letter, to recommend him to some Persons of Credit. He did write that Letter, but was never concerned in this Business, either before or after; and this is the whole of the Case, as to this Mr. Speke.

Mr. Speke. My Lord, I desire I may speak one Word for myself.

L. C. J. Ay, say what you will.

Mr. Speke. My Lord, One Day, some time after Mr. Braddon had concerned himself in this Thing, I met him casually and accidentally, and he was telling me somewhat of the Matter. And after this, one Night as I was going to Bed, between 10 and 11 at Night, somebody knocked hard at my Door. My Man went to the Door, and opened the Door, and Mr. Braddon comes in, and tells me, he desired the Favour of me, that I would lend him my Man, and lend him my Saddle. He being my Acquaintance, and I knowing him, I was willing to do him that Kindness; and asking him, whither he went? He told me he was going down to Marlborough, and he told me he had heard that my Lord of Essex's Death was discoursed of there in the Country that Day it was done; besides other Things of a Boy and of a Girl, that could prove such and such Things. Said I, This is a Thing of great Concernment, and I would have you take good Advice in it, before you proceed, because otherwise it may be a Reflection upon the Government; therefore, said I, I would not have you proceed to concern yourself further in this Thing, but take the Advice and Judgment of some prudent and discreet Person or other, that you may do nothing but what is according to Law. I was never at all concerned, nor knew any thing of the Business but what I heard from Mr. Braddon at first. And before he came into my Chamber, I knew nothing of his coming; and I writ this Letter, because he should not concern himself without the Advice of some Person that I thought was able to advise him, that he might do nothing that might bring him within the Danger of the Law, or reflect upon the Government.

Mr. Just. Holloway. And you advised him to go by the Name of Johnson, not Braddon.

Mr. Speke. It was late at Night, and I had been at the Tavern drinking a Bottle of Wine or two with a Friend, and might not so well consider what I did write.

L. C. J. But, Mr. Speke, You hear what you writ, We row against Stream, and we thank you for the Countenance you have given to Us. And here is a worthy Gentleman, Mr. Braddon, who is a very proper Man for the Design he has in hand, and none better than he, and when you are with him, you may discourse freely; and he is a true Man, and a stout Man, and fit to be trusted; but he must not go by the Name of Braddon, but of Johnson.

Mr. Speke. My Lord, the Reason was, because he was not personally known to Sir Robert Atkins; and for him to go down directly, and to have it reported, one of such a Name came to Sir Robert Atkins, who was a Man that had retired himself into the Country from all Publick Concern, I thought not so well.

L. C. J. Why did you trouble him, if he was so retired?

Mr. Speke. I had particular Concerns of my own, that Sir Robert Atkins was pleased to concern himself for me, and I knew him a prudent Man, that would advise him nothing but according to Law.

L. C. J. You should not have disturbed him in his Privacies, Mr. Speke.

Mr. Speke. My Lord, I never was any other way concerned, I knew nothing of the matter.

L. C. J. You had done well if you had not concerned yourself about it at all.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Most here do fear, you say, that he will be either stabbed or knocked on the Head, and therefore you lent him your Man to guard him, I suppose.

Mr. Speke. He desired me to lend him my Man, because he did not know the way so well himself.

Mr. Sol. Gen. But why was there such Fear about him?

Mr. Speke. I know nothing at all of the Matter, but what I had from Mr. Braddon.

L. C. J. Ay, we live in such a stabbing Age, that such an extraordinary Gentleman as Mr. Braddon, that is such an extraordinary good Protestant, can't walk the Streets for fear of being murdered.

Mr. Speke. My Lord, I writ it at such a time of the Night, after I had been at the Tavern, that I knew not well what I writ.

Mr. Just. Withens. Mr. Speke, You see what a Sort of a Man he is, upon the Evidence that hath been given.

Mr. Speke. Truly, my Lord, I never knew any thing, but what I had from him.

Mr. Sol. Gen. But to make the Country believe, that there were such Endeavours here to stifle any Thing that might give light into the Murder of the Earl of Essex, there must be great Caution used to conceal his Name.

L. C. J. Yes, being such a virtuous Man, as Mr. Braddon, there was great need of all Circumspection and Care to preserve him: Why did not he get his Life-guard to keep him from the Danger that was thought so near him?

Mr. Sol. Gen. They had not raised them as yet, but he was contented at present with Mr. Speke's Man.

Mr. Speke. My Lord, I am wholly innocent in all this Matter.

L. C. J. Would to God you were Innocent, You are a Man of Quality, Mr. Speke, I know; I should be glad you were innocent with all my Heart. But when Men forget their Studies and their own Business, and take upon them the Politicks without being called to it, That puts them into Frenzies, and then they take all Opportunities of shewing themselves Men of Zeal.

Mr. Att. Gen. We need but read the Letter which Mr. Speke has owned, and you will say it is ten times worse than what Mr. Braddon has done.

L. C. J. Nay, I will not have Mr. Braddon topped upon for all that, I assure you.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, if you read it once again, you will find, that he therein owns it all, and pins the Basket upon himself.

L. C. J. Indeed, Mr. Attorney, I will not have such a Reflection put upon Mr. Braddon, That any Man should be a greater Actor in the Business than he.

Mr. Speke. My Lord, I writ it at Night after a Bottle of Wine, and other People may be mistaken as well as I.

L. C. J. If some of these Gentlemen, that now and then think themselves better-headed than others, and that are so extraordinarily concerned to preserve our Religion, but are generally much mistaken, were, and I observe their Mistakes are always on the wrong Side; I wish you could have gone and recollected yourself next Morning, Mr. Speke, and then the Mistake had been more pardonable.

Mr. Speke. I writ nothing as to matter of Fact, but what he told me, and I could hardly recollect it next Morning, when he was gone away.

Mr. Recorder. My Lord, we shall prove he has bragged, that is, Mr. Braddon, That he was the only Inventor of the Protestant Flails, an Instrument you have heard of, Gentlemen, and for what Use designed.

L. C. J. But, Brother Jenner, that is nothing to the Purpose now, what he was before this Business, or what he was after. You are, Gentlemen, to Try him upon this Indictment only, and are not to mind any other Thing at all.

Then Mr. Speke's Letter was read again.

Mr. Att. Gen. You see, Gentlemen, in what Strain it runs, We and We; he makes himself a considerable Party in the Design.

L. C. J. Aye, We thank you for your Kindness towards Us, and We hope to bring on the Trial of the Earl of Essex, before they can any of those in the Tower.

Mr. Speke. He told me, Sir Henry Capell said it was a Thing too great for him to meddle with. And I knew nothing, but what I had from him.

L. C. J. He was a Man of Integrity, and could tell you nothing but what was true, Mr. Speke.

Mr. Wallop. My Lord, All I can say, for Mr. Speke, is this, He did believe Mr. Braddon's Grounds, as he told him, were probable to go upon, but he knew nothing himself, and concerned himself no further. I hope the Jury will consider of it, that there is no Contrivance proved against him.

L. C. J. Nay, Mr. Wallop, though we interrupted you in making Remarks upon every Witness, yet now make what Remarks upon what hath been said that you will.

Mr. Wallop. My Lord, I shall leave it to your Lordship and the Jury, how far they think the Defendant guilty of this Information.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, We have indeed given as great an Evidence as ever was given I think of any Offence. But to clear up the Matter, that it was impossible for any Man, unless the most maliciously and villainously inclined against the Government and Peace of the Kingdom, that can be, to imagine such a Thing, much less spread such a Report, we will call you two or three Witnesses to prove, that the Earl of Essex murdered himself.

L. C. J. 'Tis necessary, Mr. Attorney, I think, for you to do, to satisfy the World, though to a discerning Eye there is enough given from the Evidence this Day, to make it appear to be a most malicious and scandalous Contrivance, to hawk about for every idle Rumour, to pick up Children of such tender Years, and make them Swear any thing to serve a Turn.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, we do not call these Witnesses, as if there were any Doubt of it in the World.

L. C. J. But we live in an Age, when Truth passes for nothing in the World, and Swearing and Forfeiting is taken for a Thing of Course. Had his Zeal been half so much for Truth as it was for falsehood, it had been a commendable Zeal. But when Men are so zealous and fierce for such vile Things as these are, 'tis time of my Word, for the Government to interpose.

Mr. Att. Gen. 'Tis not to satisfy the Court nor the Jury, who I believe are all of them already sufficiently satisfied, but 'tis to satisfy the World, that may have entertained some Prejudices from this Conspiracy. Call Mr. Bomeney in.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Not as if there were any doubt, whether Mr. Braddon were the malicious Inventor of this Report at the beginning, and went down into the Country to spread it. The Evidence has been full, and by his own Management of his Defence, he has proved it himself, and seems by his Confidence to justify it. But we shall, to give the World some Satisfaction, call some that waited upon the Earl in the Tower, and others that saw him when dead, that will give a Confutation to any thing that could be supposed, as if my Lord of Essex had not murdered himself.

Then Bomeney was Sworn.

L. C. J. Did you wait upon this unfortunate Gentleman, my Lord of Essex?—Mr. Bomeney. Yes, my Lord.

L. C. J. Well, what do you know of his Death?

Mr. Bomeney. I went with him from Whitehall, and I stayed with him all the while he was in the Tower.

L. C. J. How came he by that unhappy End, pray?

Mr. Bomeney. When we were at his Lodging, my Lord used to call for a Pen-knife to cut his Nails of his Hands and Feet, and he then had long Nails, and said he to me, give me your Pen-knife to cut my Nails; said I, my Lord, I have none, I came in haste, but I will send to Morrow for one; and therefore I sent our Footman, one William Turner; to whom I gave a little Note for Provisions, and among other Things which I writ Directions to the Steward to send, there was a little Line; Pray send a Pen-knife for my Lord. He brought some Provisions, but he did not bring a Pen-knife on the Thursday, because he said he had none, but he would send one the Morrow after; I sent William Turner, the Morning after very early, and gave him another little Note for Provisions; and, among other Things, I writ in the Note, Do not forget the Pen-knife for my Lord. He went, and when he was in the way, my Lord, sent the Warder to me, to call me. I came to my Lord, and my Lord asked, Is the Footman come? Has he brought the Pen-knife? No, my Lord, said I, but I hope he will not stay long, because I sent him early. Then I was turning to come down from the Chamber, and I saw my Lord walking in the Room, and picking of his Nails with the Pen-knife----

L. C. J. How? With a Pen-knife?

Mr. Bomeney. No, with the Razor that I gave him. For I went to my Lord, and when my Lord asked me if I had gotten him a Pen-knife, I said the Footman was not come, but I hoped it would come immediately, because I sent him early. And I was turning from the Chamber, thinking I had done with my Lord, and my Lord called me again, Hark you, Bomeney, said he, I can do it with one of your Razors. My Lord, said I, I will fetch one, so I went into my Closet and fetched one. And I went to my Lord, and when he had it, he did as if he picked his Nails with it, and was walking in the Chamber. I looked a little while upon him, and turning out of the Chamber into the Passage, where I talked with the Warder, Ruffel his Name was, and when I looked out of the Window, his Majesty was in the Tower, and there was a great Bustle in the Street; and when I had talked a little while with the Warder, I went down into my Closet again, and at the same time that I was in my Closet, there came the Footman, and one with him that brought the Provisions, and he gave me the Pen-knife, and gave me a little Note, that he had brought with the Provisions, which, he said, Mr. Billingly, that was our Steward, bid me to shew that to my Lord. I took it, and went up to shew it to my Lord; I found no body in my Lord's Chamber, there was a Closet there, in which was a Close-stool, and that I found shut, and thinking my Lord was there, I would not disturb my Lord, but came down again, and stayed a little while, in so much as I thought my Lord by that time might have been come out. I went up again, and found no body in the Chamber, but the Closet-Door shut still, I went against the Door, and knocked three times, and said My Lord, my Lord, and no body answered: Then I looked through the Chink of the Door, between the Door and the Wall, and I could see Blood, and a little part of the Razor. Then I called to the Warder, and the People of the House, and they came up and found him there.

Mr. Att. Gen. Had you much ado to open the Door, or could you open the Door easily?

Mr. Bomeney. No, the Door could not be opened easily, I know not how they opened the Door, but I think Ruffel the Warder, when he came up, pushed at the Door, but could not open it very far, because my Lord's Foot was against the Door, and so they had much ado to open the Door.

Mr. Att. Gen. Which way does the Door open, out of the Room, or into the Room?—Mr. Bomeney. Inward, into the Room.

L. C. J. And so his Feet being against it, it could not easily be opened.

Mr. Att. Gen. How big is the Closet?

Mr. Bomeney. A very little Closet, I believe no wider than that; and the length of a Man, and a Close-stool at the upper end would fill it up. My Lord lay all along on his Side.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did you observe your Lord melancholy, Mr. Bomeney?

Mr. Bomeney. Yes, he was melancholy. But we took no notice of it, for he was used to be so, and we had no reason to suspect any thing more than ordinary.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did you find the Razor?

Mr. Bomeney. Yes, it lay by him.

Mr. Att. Gen. What became of the Razor?

Mr. Bomeney. The Coroner's Jury had it.

L. C. J. Was there any Window in that Room, where the Close-stool was?

Mr. Bomeney. Yes, there was a Window.

L. C. J. Was there a Casement to that Window?

Mr. Bomeney. Yes, I think there might.

Mr. Just. Withens. Which way does that Window look?

Mr. Bomeney. I can't very well remember, my Lord.

Mr. Just. Withens. Which way do you think?

Mr. Bomeney. I believe it is upon a Yard.

L. C. J. He says he does not well know. But, Mr. Bomeney, you saw Mr. Ruffel the Warder in the same Place, as you came up again, that you left him in when you went down?

Mr. Bomeney. My Lord, I went down but a little while.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Where did you find Ruffel the Warder, when you came up again?—Mr. Bomeney. At the Guard.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did you find him in the same Posture, when you went up again, that you left him when you went down?

Mr. Bomeney. Yes.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did you hear of any body that went up else?

Mr. Bomeney. No, my Lord.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Then we will call Mr. Ruffel the Warder he speaks of.

[Who was sworn.]

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray will you give my Lord an Account at that Time where you were, and what was done?

Mr. Ruffel. I was in the Chamber, next opposite against my Lord's Chamber, there is but a little step betwixt the Doors, the Stairs come up betwixt the two doors, no body could pass backwards or forwards but I must see them; for I was then Waiter at that time, and stood upon the Guard; and my Lord asked Mr. Bomeney, Whether the Pen-knife was come; and he told my Lord, No. Then says he, lend me your Razor, that will do it. And my Lord took the Razor in his Hand, and the Door was open, and he went two or three Turns in the Room, with the Razor so. This I saw, the Door being open, as I stood in the Passage. My Lord, by and by Mr. Bomeney goes down, and my Lord shut the Door to him, and Mr. Bomeney staid below a little while, and afterwards comes up again. And my Lord was gone to the Closet to Stool, as he supposed. So away he comes down again, and staid about a quarter of an Hour, or thereabouts. And this I see all myself, my Lord.

L. C. J. Had any Person been there, from the time Bomeney went down, to the time he came up again?

Mr. Ruffel. No, my Lord, there was no body went up or down all the time, but Bomeney. He came up, and seeing my Lord was not come out of his Closet (this I did stand and hear) so he puts by the Hanging, and looks in, and sees my Lord in his Blood, lying in the Closet; and he makes an Oration, a great Noise; with that I stepped two or three Steps, hearing him make such an Oration, and I found the Key was on the outside of the Door, and I opened the Door, and saw him lie in his Blood.

L. C. J. Could you open the Door with ease?

Mr. Ruffel. Yes, I could put it a little way open, and there saw him.

L. C. J. But you could not put it quite open?

Mr. Ruffel. No, for his Legs lay against the Door.

L. C. J. Was it a narrow Closet?—Mr. Ruffel. Yes, a very narrow Closet.

L. C. J. In what Posture did my Lord lie?

Mr. Ruffel. He lay all along on one Side.

L. C. J. Where lay the Razor?

Mr. Ruffel. By him. But I did not take so much notice of the Razor, for I was surprized with the Sight.

Mr. Just. Holloway. Was there any Window in the Closet?

Mr. Ruffel. Yes, that looks into Captain Hawley's Yard. And the Window is quite Northward.

L. C. J. Which way does that Window look?

Mr. Ruffel. Quite the other way, into the back-yard.

L. C. J. Then there is no way out, Nor Light, nor Casement out into the Fore-yard?

Mr. Ruffel. No, my Lord, 'tis backward, and 'tis paled in, only into the House there is a Door.

Mr. Att. Gen. Was there any Door out of the Street, that way?

Mr. Ruffel. No, there is one Door that goes out from the Entry to go into the Yard.

L. C. J. Has any body else access to come to the Yard, but what must come through Hawley's House?

Mr. Ruffel. No, no body.

Mr. Sol. Gen. We will call Captain Hawley himself.

L. C. J. Warder do you remember there was any Coach that stood there?

Mr. Ruffel. No, there was no such thing.

L. C. J. I ask you for this reason, because here was a Girl that spake of a Coach, that came through the House I suppose, and so through the Entry out of that Door into the Yard.

Mr. Att. Gen. Where is Lloyd the Soldier? For, my Lord, as there was a Warder above, so there was a Soldier that stood at the Door below. And while he staid there, there could not any one come in, nor near, but he must observe them.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray, my Lord, be pleased to ask Mr. Bomeney, how long he lived with my Lord?

L. C. J. How long had you lived with my Lord of Essex?

Mr. Bomeney. Six Years.

Mr. Just. Withins. You waited on him in his Chamber, I suppose?

Mr. Bomeney. Yes, in the Nature of his Valet de Chambre.

Then Lloyd was sworn.

Mr. Recorder. Hark you, Lloyd, you were the Sentinel. Give an Account where you stood that Day that my Lord of Essex murdered himself?

Lloyd. At my Lord's Door.

Mr. Att. Gen. Which Door?—Lloyd. At my Lord of Essex's Door.

Mr. Att. Gen. Were you above Stairs, or below at the Street Door?

Lloyd. Below at the Street Door.

Mr. Just. Withins. Did any body come into the House that Morning?

Lloyd. No body came in, all the while I stood there, that I knew of.

Mr. Just. Withins. Were you there at that time when my Lord killed himself?

Lloyd. I was there when the Noise was made of it above Stairs.

L. C. J. Did you e'er see a Coach there?

Lloyd. Not to stand at the Door at all.

L. C. J. Didst thou see e'er a Coach in Captain Hawley's Back-yard?

Lloyd. No, no.

L. C. J. Why, could not the Coach go through the Door and the Entry into the Yard?

Mr. Sol. Gen. Had you seen my Lord of Essex that Morning?

Lloyd. Yes, he spake to me, and asked me What o'Clock it was?

Mr. Sol. Gen. Where was he?—Lloyd. At the Casement.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What did he say to you?

Lloyd. He said, Centry, What o'Clock is it?

Mr. Att. Gen. Did you see him when my Lord Ruffel went by?

Lloyd. Yes, I saw him then.

VGL. III.

Mr. Att. Gen. How long after was the Cry of my Lord's having killed himself?

Lloyd. I believe, not half an Hour after.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did any Maid go out of the House?

Lloyd. None at all.

L. C. J. What, not in a white Hood?—Lloyd. No.

L. C. J. Why, didst not thou call to the Maid to come and take up the Razor, that was thrown out of the Window of Captain Hawley's House?

Lloyd. There was no Razor at all thrown out, that I saw.

L. C. J. Did not you open the Pales for her to go in, and take up the Razor?

Lloyd. No.

L. C. J. Was there any other Soldier there besides you?—Lloyd. No.

L. C. J. Then you must be he that cried out, or no body?

Lloyd. I saw no Razor, nor did not cry out to any body.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Could you open the Pales? is there a Door to the Street-side, out of the Pales into the Yard?

Lloyd. 'Tis no Yard, but there is a Door that all pass through that come to the House.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What else did my Lord of Essex say to you?

Lloyd. He only examined me, what o'Clock it was? That was all.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, We have here two Women, who were the only Women that were in the House, they will tell you what they saw.

L. C. J. Pray Gentlemen, do not mispend your Time unnecessarily, because I am to sit this Afternoon at London.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, We will then only call Captain Hawley.

[Who was Sworn.]

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray, Captain, tell what you know of this Matter?

Capt. Hawley. My Lord, All the Account I can give, is, That about four or five o'Clock in the Morning, I went to open the Gates, that being the usual Hour to open the Gates. And I was at the Gate then when a Warder came, and told me, my Lord of Essex had killed himself, and that was between nine and ten of the Clock. When I came into the House, I went up Stairs, and saw no body in the Room, nor no blood; said I, to the Warder, What, do you make a Fool of me? Here is nothing: Says one of the Warders, look into the Closet; I went to the Closet, and could not open the Door above this Wideness, and I looked in, and saw the Razor all in Blood, and my Lord lay on his Arm in this fashion. I could not tell, whether he was dead or no, but I thought it was not my Business to stir him. Then my Lord Constable was ordered to come and Secure, and Examine all the Servants.

L. C. J. Pray, Captain Hawley, where does the Casement look into?

Capt. Hawley. The House, ever since I came to it, is just as it was; and the House having settled, the Casement won't open above thus far: And 'tis so low, and the Pales are nine or ten Foot high, that 'tis impossible for any one to throw anything out of the Window three Foot hardly. It is one of the horridest Reports that ever was heard of, and the unlikeliest Thing, they cannot throw any thing out of the Window to be seen.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, I think it is not necessary to call any more Witnesses.

L. C. J. Have they any thing to say further, on the other Side?

Mr. Speke. I desire, my Lord, to call my Man.

L. C. J. Call your Man, for what Purpose?

Mr. Speke. My Lord, If your Lordship pleases, I will call my Man to prove, that I knew nothing of Mr. Braddon's coming to me.

Then Mr. Speke's Man was sworn.

L. C. J. Ask him what you will.

Mr. Speke. Did you ever see Mr. Braddon with me?

Servant. Never but once, before that time he came to my Master's Chamber, which was the Night before he went out of Town; and when he came, after he had been there a little while, my Master ordered me to get me ready to go into the Country with him. And after I had been with him a little time, he got another to go with him, and sent me Home again.

Mr. Speke. I was going to Bed, Was I not?—Servant. Yes, you was.

L. C. J. Have you done of both Sides;

Mr. Speke. Was it not a Surprize to me, when he came to me?

L. C. J. How does he know that?

Mr. Speke. I tell you why, my Lord, I ask it: Because when I go out of Town, I always tell him to prepare himself.

Servant. It was a Surprize to me; I knew nothing of it.

L. C. J. Well, have you done now? Have you a mind to say any thing to the Jury you that are of Counsel for the Defendants; or you, Mr. Braddon?

Mr. Braddon. No, I will say nothing.

L. C. J. Have you, Mr. Speke?

Mr. Speke. My Lord, I have proved it here, That I had no Hand in what I am accused of. It is put down in the Information, that I conspired with Mr. Braddon, to endeavour to procure false Witnesses. I have proved I never had any Hand at all in any Thing of it. It was an accidental Thing, his coming to me; and it was a great Surprize to me, when he came; and I never concerned myself in it more, than the writing of that Letter: And I had no ill Intent in it; I did it not designedly, for I knew nothing of his coming; and I had not writ the Letter if he had not come to me. And 'tis plain, it was a Surprize, for I always give my Man notice, when I go out of Town, before-hand to prepare himself. I thought nothing at all of ill in the Letter: I writ it late at Night, when I had been with some Company at the Tavern. And he made me believe that to be true, which was not; I hope the Gentlemen of the Jury will consider that. I have nothing to say of the Thing, I did not concern myself in it any further at all, than writing the Letter, which I did not well know what I writ.

L. C. J. Well, have you any more to say, Mr. Speke?

Mr. Speke. No, my Lord.

L. C. J. Have you any more, Mr. Braddon?

Mr. Braddon. My Lord, I have only this to say for myself. It has not been proved directly, or indirectly, That I used any evil Arguments to persuade these Witnesses to testify what was false; but I dealt with them with all the Candor, that any Person in the World could use; and used all the Caution that I could, to hinder them from speaking any thing that is false. There has been nothing proved of evil Practice used by me; and I desire the Gentlemen of the Jury to take no other notice of any Thing that has been, or shall be spoken, but what has been proved.

L. C. J. Gentlemen of the Jury, The Evidence has been very long, that has been given both for and against the Persons, against whom this Information is exhibited. 'Tis an Information exhibited by the King's Attorney-General, in His Majesty's Name against Lawrence Braddon and Hugh Speke. And the Information does set forth, That the late Earl of Essex murdered himself in the Tower, and that thereupon there was an Inquisition taken before the Coroner, that did find that he had so murdered himself, he being before that Time committed for High-Treason, in Conspiring the Death of the King, and levying War to disturb the Government. And these Persons did render that Inquisition, as tho' it had been fraudulently and irregularly obtained; and also to breed ill Blood, and spread false Rumours among the King's Subjects, by endeavouring to persuade them to believe, That the Earl of Essex was murdered by some other Hand, and had not murdered himself, and had procured false Witnesses to testify some such Matter, in order to the spreading about that false Rumour. This is the Substance of the Information. To this Information they have both pleaded, Not Guilty; and the Evidence, as I was telling you, has been somewhat long; but according to the best of my Memory, and for the Assistance of yours, I will mind you of as many Things, as occur to me, that have been said against them, and what has been said on their Behalf, I mean so much of it as is Evidence. For I must tell you, all Hear-says, and common Discourses of other Persons are not Evidence, and I will give you that Reason, that is sufficient to satisfy any Man that is unbiased. That if in case the Person that so told the Story had been here, if he had not told it upon Oath, you could not have believed that Person. Therefore, surely there is less Credit to be given to him, that tells a Tale out of another body's Mouth. And I tell you this, because there have been great Allowances given, and ought to be when People are accused of such great and weighty Crimes; for these are monstrous Crimes that these Gentlemen are accused of; but 'tis you that are to try, whether they are guilty or not. Certainly there is scarce in Nature a greater Crime that can be committed, than this that is now before you; for I think Robbery or any other such Felonies, are not such monstrous Crimes in their true real Weight, though in consideration of Law, in respect of Punishment they are greater; yet in Point of Crime, they are surely less; for to spread false Reports, in order to raise Sedition, Ill-will, Heart-burnings, and Jealousies in the King's Subjects against the Government, and to suborn Witnesses to that evil Purpose, is surely a much greater Crime than robbing on the High-way. Now, Gentlemen, 'tis not unknown to most of you, what Endeavours have been of late made, to possess the Minds of the King's Subjects of great Injuries designed to be done them by the King, or His Authority: And in order to foment Differences and Misapprehensions between the King and his People, and among the People between one and another, all Arts have been used, to proscribè People that they are minded to expose. Those, they bear ill-will to, must be called Papists, or Papists in Masquerade; but They and their Confederates are the Sober Party, the true Protestants, as if there were none Sober or true Protestants but such as are Factious and Troublesome in the Government. But by these Things they bring an Odium upon the Name of a Protestant, their Aim is by distinguishing to divide us; whereas if they were Protestants in Truth, the Church of England Protestants, they would have another Behaviour, they would learn to obey, and submit to Authority, and not go buzzing from House to House, and spreading false Reports, but study to be quiet, and do their own Business. And though Mr. Braddon made use of the 5th Chap. of the Acts, to the Child, he would have done well to have taken notice of some other Parts of Scripture, that are as much Scripture as that, That injoin Obedience and Submission to the Magistrate; and, being quiet and minding his own Business, it's odds, he had never come to that Trouble, he is now likely to meet with. But the Crime he is accused of, carries all the Venom and Bafeness, the greatest Inveteracy against the Government that ever any Case did, that I have met with. For it's insinuated, That because the King and the Duke were walking in the Tower, that Day, and near that Time, when this unfortunate Thing happened, now it must be whispered, as though the King and the Duke had designed this Murder. How Base? How Devilish and Hellish a Design is this? But yet, this must be spread about, and endeavoured to be distilled into the Minds of the King's Subjects. But besides, Gentlemen, you are to consider, as was opened by the King's Counsel, to what this Thing tended; for in as much as there was an horrid bloody Conspiracy, to take away the Life of the King, and of his dear Brother, His Royal Highness the Duke of York. And forasmuch as several Persons have been duly executed for that Conspiracy, who were concerned along with this unfortunate Lord; (I cannot help the naming of it, though I am sorry for his Misfortune, for the Sake of that Honourable Family) but rather than he would abide his Trial, God knows what other Reason he had, but the probability of the Thing speaks it, he being conscious, the great Guilt he had contracted, in being concerned in such a Conspiracy, made him destroy himself. And 'tis easy to imagine, how far that might prevail upon him, it being done immediately after my Lord Ruffil, who was one of the Conspirators with him, was carried to his Trial. It cannot be thought, but it was to prevent the Methods of Justice in his own particular Case. And, Gentlemen, there was Digitus Dei in it, and it is enough to satisfy all the World of the Conspiracy; though we live in an Age, wherein Men are apt to believe only on one Side; they can believe the greatest Lye, if it makes for the Advantage of their Party, but not the greatest Truth, if it thwarts their Interest.

But because Mr. Attorney has produced his Proofs, to manifest, that this Lord murdered himself, I will take notice a little of it, because it may have some good effect to undeceive some that have been imposed upon. Not for my own Satisfaction, I thank God I am satisfied, and so I believe are most honest Men: But that silly People may not be imposed upon by every busy Fellow for the future, that takes the liberty to run about and spread false News; and that Men may be aware of such Fellows, and may not be decoyed any more by such false Pretences; it was therefore fit that Evidence should be given of the Truth of the Fact, that that Gentleman did murder himself. And the Evidence is this.

Besides the Inquisition, which was taken upon the Oaths of several Persons of Quality, (as you hear upon the reading their Names, several of them were Esquires, and Men of Note) 'tis here also proved by the Testimony of his Servant that attended him, how he came to this untimely End. And, Gentlemen, I would observe, 'tis Sworn by his Servants, one that had lived six Years with him, not an upstart, or a wandering Fellow, but one whose Integrity and Fidelity to my Lord was confirmed by six Years Experience of his Service. Then here is the Warder that was at the Door, here's the Soldier, here's the Master of the House, who are all the Persons that probably can give any Account of the Matter, and they tell you positively that no one did go up and down, but this Frenchman, who was his Valet de Chambre. And the Warder tells you, That he coming to the Door, and knocking at the Door, and hearing no one answer, did endeavour to open the Door, but it was so fast by my Lord's Feet, that he could open it but a little, and looking in, discerned Blood, and that made him make Acclamations, as the Warder calls it, Orations, which brought all the People in the House thither, and they gave the same Account that he does.

And 'tis likewise fit to be taken notice of, that the Window of this Closet looks into a private Yard, where no Strangers usually come, and where no Coach could come; and that the Pales were so high, that in case a Man were desirous to throw any thing out, it were impossible to cast it above three Foot. And if there could no Coach at all come into the Yard, as it is plain there could not, (for there is no Door, save only a back House-door) then this must needs be a Lye that was spread abroad. And 'tis beyond all peradventure true that my Lord of Essex did murder himself.

Now to have so great a Truth as this to be perverted, and to reproach the Government with Falsties, is the most malicious Thing in the World. If in case the Law has made it Penal for any Man to scandalize any one private Person as it has; and if it be by Law much more Penal to scandalize a Nobleman: How much more ought it to be, when the King and the whole Government is thus scandalized?

Now to come to the Fact, as near as I can recollect, I will give you an Account of what Evidence has been given of the one Side, and of the other. But this I thought fit to premise, because there will some Circumstances fall out fit to be taken notice of in the Evidence, especially about the Window in Captain Hawley's Yard and House, which may be cleared this Way.

In the first Part of the Evidence for the King, they call a Witness to prove the Earl of Essex's Commitment, which is Part of the Inducement in the Information.

But for the Information itself, there is this Evidence. First, Evans, he comes and tells you, how that he had heard at the Custom-House from Edwards, the Father of this Boy, as though there had been a Report came to him from Home, at Ten o'Clock that Morning my Lord Essex cut his Throat, of a Razor thrown out of my Lord of Essex's Window; That he came to him in the Afternoon again, and in the Afternoon told him he had examined the Matter further, and his Boy confirmed the Truth of it. He says, That after this, Mr. Braddon and another Man, one Mr. Hat-fell, if I am not mistaken in his Name, came to the Place where he was in Essex, and there they had some Discourse about my Lord of Essex's Death, and there Hat-fell took out of his Pocket a printed Copy of the Inquisition; and Mr. Braddon was then in the Room, but he says he thinks Mr. Braddon at that time took no manner of notice of it, but walked about the Room; but he says, the Inquisition was read while he was in the Room, and Evans said something about the Report he had heard, which did seem to contradict that Inquisition. But some time after, he says, That he being at the Coffee-house, Braddon and Edwards came to him into the Coffee-house, and there they began to talk; Edwards said, That Braddon had been with his Child to examine him, to bear Testimony about flinging the Razor out at Window. He was very full of the Word [Matter] and tossed that to and fro, but at length the Substance of his Matter was, that Report of the Boy's, and he advised them to forbear talking any farther to him about the Matter, for it might do Edwards and Braddon both an Injury; and he had read the Inquisition which was quite contrary. That was all he could say.

Then comes Edwards, and the Substance of what he says, is this, That he first heard it from his Family, and afterwards the Boy confirmed the Truth of it; but then afterwards he heard he had denied it, which was after Braddon had been there to inquire about it. And then he says, Braddon came to him again, and then he had got a Note dictated by himself and not by the Boy, but at first he tendered it to the Boy, and the Boy refused to put his Hand to it; and Mr. Braddon came again another time, (though he was told the Boy had denied it as he heard) and then the Boy did set his Hand. This is the Substance of what Edwards says. He does say indeed, the Boy used to tell Lies very often, to make excuses when he played Truant, and that his Family told him, the Boy was often guilty of telling of Lies.

Then the next Evidence is the Evidence of the Boy himself. He it seems is thirteen Years of Age: Certainly any Man that had been of an upright Mind and Conscience, as Mr. Braddon pretends to be, and would have you, Gentlemen, think them so; would have it thought that he was full of Honesty and Integrity to the Boy, when he baited his Hook with a Text of Scripture, about the Danger of telling a Lye, and, How a care, Child, of telling a Lye; if he had done no more but given him this Advice, it had been worthy of Commendation: But when the Boy had refused to sign it, for him to go and make such a stir, without examining further into the Particulars, but only taking a slight Report from such a Child, and to make such a Disturbance in the Nation, and such a Noise, Noise, not only here, but Abroad, as this has done, sure argues neither Uprightness nor Conscience. Had the Boy stood in it and persevered in it, it had become him, in regard of the Tenderness of the Boy's Age, to have been more inquisitive into Circumstances, before he gave such Credit to what he said, as to make all this ado.

But what says the Boy when he comes here, he is now upon his Oath, and he tells you, He did tell his Mother so at first, and he did tell Mr. Braddon so at first; but afterwards when his Sister spake to him, and bid him be sure to tell nothing but what was Truth, then he said truly, it was not Truth. He tells you, Mr. Braddon offered him the Paper to sign, but he would not sign it; and being asked the Question, Why he would not sign it; He says, because it was not true; and being asked, Whether Braddon had notice of this? The Mother and Sisters, all tell you, He had notice the Boy had denied it.

How came Mr. Braddon, what Authority had he to take this Examination? He is no Justice of Peace, no Magistrate that had any Authority to take Examinations. What Concern had he in it more than other People? The Boy could tell him there were abundance of People there besides himself, tho' it was a Lye he told then, and that the Girl told now. Why did not he stay to have it confirmed by some of those People? Why did not he carry these Children before some Magistrate or Justice of Peace, some body that had Authority to take Examinations? There was a Spirit that prevailed with Mr. Braddon to engage and make a stir in this Business, and you may easily guess what a kind of Spirit it was which gave him this Authority that he had not before.

Gentlemen, another thing is this, 'Tis plain, and the Boy now swears it directly, That whereas he put it into his Information, How that he told him he was going to see my Lord Brandon Gerard's Lodgings, but now he is upon his Oath, he swears directly he never told him any such thing, and yet he hath put it into the Paper he made him sign.

He tells you a second time, Mr. Braddon came to him, which was after the Boy had refused and declared himself unwilling, and that then he was persuaded by Mr. Braddon, who told him there was no Harm in it; if there be any Harm, it would be to him, and not to the Boy, and so by Virtue of that, he insinuated himself, and got the Child to sign that Paper, which is every Tittle of it false, as the Boy now swears directly. And he tells you, how he was imposed upon by Mr. Braddon, pretending there was no Harm to him, all the Harm would come to himself, and by reason of these Insinuations he was prevail'd upon to put his Name to that which was notoriously false.

The next Witness (to make it appear that it was notoriously false, not only by the Boy himself, but by other Circumstances) is Hawkins the Minister's Son, Dr. Hawkins's Son of the Tower. And he tells you, I play'd Truant as well as he that Day, and I saw the King and the Duke at the Tower, and when I had seen them I went about as they did, and afterwards I went home, and there came a Report, that my Lord of Essex had cut his Throat, which made me go back again to the Tower, and there was I a considerable time gaping among other People, and there did I see this Boy Edwards; when he came there, I was there, I was there all the time that he was there, and we went out of the Tower together, and there was no such thing, nor any pretence or ground for such a Story. And Edwards himself being asked the Question, upon his Oath, doth likewise say, Hawkins was with him all the time there. So that that shews not only by what the Boy says, that it was false, but it is also proved false by the Testimony of this other Witness Hawkins.

Then next comes Mr. Blathwaite, who was present when Mr. Braddon was before the King, and what does he say? He says, there was the Boy fetched, and the Girl fetched, and all Persons examined there, and then 'tis told him, all the Boy had said to him was false, and it was told him with all its Circumstances. So that Notice sufficient, if you will believe Mr. Blathwaite, was given to this Mr. Braddon, That the Boy had denied it then, as he had before to his Sister: So he knew it was false.

But what does Mr. Braddon do now? He is so far from being satisfied in the matter, that instead of stopping there, his Zeal transported him to pursue it further: And so he tells you, that Mr. Braddon confessed he would have got some Justice of Peace to have the Boy examined; and he applied himself to Sir Robert Clayton, and Sir John Lawrence. There were many Justices of the Peace besides them, in London, to whom he might have applied himself. But when he comes to Sir Robert Clayton, and acquaints him with the matter, he would not do it alone; it was thought a matter of that Importance. Then says Mr. Braddon you shan't do it at all. He must have the Kindness of having it done in private; to have it examined when any body was by, was not so well for his purpose; which shews you still, Gentlemen, his Design was to contrive privately, to effect that which the Light should not easily discover.

Then the next thing is the Evidence of Mr. Monfrevens, and he gives you an Account, That he came to him, and he read the Information, and gave him a Caution, that he wondered at him: Says he, Why do you concern yourself about this Business, there is Sir Henry Capell, he does not concern himself? Then he pretended to come in his Name; but at length, when Mr. Monfrevens began to dispute it with him, why Sir Henry did not appear himself in it? then truly Sir Henry Capell was very ill, and could not possibly come himself, but I am to go to him, and give him Satisfaction about what I do, and so also to the Countess of Essex. No, says Mr. Monfrevens, that cannot be, for Sir Henry Capell is not so ill but that he has been with my Lord Sunderland, and with the King too, since the Death of my Lord of Essex. To which he made him no Answer. So that that was but an Excuse and a Subterfuge; but yet notwithstanding all this Caution, he continues on his Zeal in the thing: Whereupon Mr. Monfrevens brought him to my Lord Sunderland, and what Discourse has past between them, he has given you an account of.

The next Evidence is Sir Henry Capell, who tells you, That Braddon comes officiously and tells him, he had some Discovery to make about the Death of the Earl of Essex, and you hear that poor Gentleman being related to this unfortunate noble Lord, was at the first time very much under Surprise, (being in such great Affliction as one Brother must needs be for another, Nature obliges People to a great Concern for such Accidents) and he says, he is not able to give an account what he said or did at that time, or what Braddon did particularly say to him. But when he came the second time to him, he was a little more sedate and calm, and then (he does remember) he told him, If you have any thing of this nature to say, go to a Secretary of State, it is his Business to inquire into this Affair, and 'tis not the Business of every particular private Man, because these are Matters that concern the Government. But Braddon pretended (forsooth) it was his Zeal and his great Conscience that made him to be thus transported, and to be so eager for carrying on this Prosecution.

The next Witness, Gentlemen, that you hear of, is the Gentleman that seized upon Mr. Braddon in the Country; and that is Mr. Beech, who brought him before a Justice of Peace (one Ares that it seems is since dead,) and in his Pocket he found a Letter from the other Defendant Speke, which is the only thing indeed in the Evidence that does affect that Gentleman; and what that Letter is, you have heard it read, and for your better Satisfaction, because the Language of the Letter is pretty extraordinary, if you have a mind to have it to peruse while you are here in Court, you may have it with you. I suppose you remember the Substance of it, commending the great Integrity, Courage, and Magnanimity of this Gentleman Mr. Braddon, thanking the Person to whom it was writ, for his great Kindness to him and his Friends, how they did hope to be able to get the Murder of my Lord of Essex tried before any in the Tower could come to their Trial; That the Tide ran strong against them: And, pray, you must take notice, I have given him a hint he must go by another Name, by the Name of Johnson, and not by the Name of Braddon? for alack-a-day he would be stabbed in these dangerous Times, or knocked on the Head, if he be known by his own Name. Mr. Braddon would be thought a Man so considerable in the World for his Zeal for Truth, and the Protestant Religion, that there was very great Hazard of his being murdered, we live in such perilous Times.

Gentlemen, This is to amuse and affright People, and to put odd Thoughts and Jealousies and Fears into the Minds of the King's Subjects, which was the Beginning and Rise of the late Rebellion, which we have all reason to remember with Horror; that Rebellion that in the Issue of it brought the late King of Blessed Memory to the Scaffold: And therefore we must have a great care of such things growing upon us now.

And pray, Gentlemen, mind the Style of the Letter: We have many Thanks to give you, for your Care of Us, and Countenance you have given to Us, and We don't doubt We shall be able to carry on the Business of the Earl of Essex, notwithstanding that the Tide runs strong against Us; We hope this, and We hope that, and t'other, and so makes himself a Party. And he recommends him in particular to Sir Robert Atkins, to whom the Letter was written, to advise him in the matter he went about (which by the way, you see, was to pick up false Evidence) to carry on this wicked Design. And I must tell you, Gentlemen, if Mr. Speke was given to believe a Lye, and did write that Letter, with a Design to have that Lye spread abroad, he makes himself a Party, and he is as guilty in every Circumstance as the other, as to the Design in general laid in the Information, though not equally guilty about the Management of the Witnesses: And it is the Letter only that particularly affects him. But I tell you, If in case you think he was surprized in the thing, or did it ignorantly or innocently, without any Concern, (though he seems to have a wonderful Concern in his Letter, and very zealous he seems to be in the Prosecution of this Business) you are to acquit him. But, if he did contribute to the Design of spreading this false Report, he is as guilty of that Part as Mr. Braddon, though he be not guilty of Suborning the Witnesses. But the Evidence against Braddon goes farther; There is not only the Evidence of this Letter, which speaks plain enough as to this Design, but you find also about him all the Informations that have been read. The Information of this Boy of 13 Years of Age; the Information of the Girl of 13 Years of Age: There was also taken in his Pocket a Letter from one Burgis a famous Pin-maker of Marlborough, written to one Cumpen a Postmaster at Frome, in this manner: "Pray call to mind such a Business of hearing such a Report of my Lord of Essex's cutting his Throat upon Friday the 13th of July last. Pray recollect such a thing, and impart it to this Gentleman the Bearer." This likewise was intrusted with Mr. Braddon: But it seems the Man had gone and writ this Letter, and had put in the 6th Day, which happened to be a Week too soon, and this must be rectified by Mr. Braddon himself, he being a great Companion of Mr. Braddon's; for it seems he had such a Confidence in him, that upon his Report, he came down from London to Marlborough, tho' now indeed they pretend they never knew one another before: But it is proved he confessed he had such a Regard to his Report, that that brought him down from London. He had (as I was saying) put it down the 6th at his first writing; and I believe as to the thing itself, it was as true the 6th as any other time, and the 16th and the 26th is all one to such People. And this Letter, he tells you himself, was written six Weeks after, but Mr. Braddon must correct it: No, says he, you mistake, it must be the 13th, it must not be the 6th; the 6th would not do the Business, for the 13th was the Day that he was murder'd, and so he was forced to interline it, the 13th, to make it to humour the Story; for the Lye would not pass so well if it had been put upon a Day so long before; but to make the Lye a correct Lye, and to humour the rest of the Evidence, Mr. Braddon comes and informs him, it must be the 13th.

That was the next piece of Evidence that was given, and I think the Substance of the Evidence of the whole Matter given against the Defendants for the King, except it be some Remarks out of the Evidence that has been given on the other side, which it will be material for you to take notice of.

Now

First, They bring a Man, I think his Name was Lewes, to whom they gave the Money before he would give his Evidence. And he says, one Day he was going up a Hill, near Andover, and going up the Hill, he heard the News of my Lord of Essex's cutting his Throat; but what Day, Week or Month it was he cannot tell, that he heard this. And, Gentlemen, Let me tell you, 'tis as bad as the Case itself, and worse if possible, the endeavouring to pick up Witnesses to put a Colour and Countenance upon so black a Villany as this is. Then the next Evidence is Fielder, and he tells you, That at their Town of Andover, the Wednesday before my Lord murder'd himself, it was all the Talk about the Town, that he had cut his Throat; it was in every body's Mouth, the Market People, Men, Women, and Children, all over the Town had it, when the Earl of Essex did it not till the Friday following. We asked him to name any one; no truly he could not, the Town was so full of People, and yet he cannot remember one, whence he had it: But, Gentlemen, here is the malicious Design of the Matter. 'Tis to make it believed it was a designed Business to murder my Lord, and cast it upon himself, and they knew of the Design at Andover, two Days before the Fact was done; as though the Persons that designed to murder him, would go to make it publick, as such a Report was likely to do. But the Design of this, besides the Falshood and Baseness of the thing itself, does speak Malice and Seditious, and all the Distempers of a disloyal Man's Heart, and to go about to get Witnesses to support the Credibility of a thing that is notoriously false, is ten times worse than the spreading of such a Report itself.

Then comes Mrs. Edwards the Mother, she is the next Witness, and she tells you at first, the Boy did tell this strange Story, but afterwards denied it; but she likewise tells you, how Mr. Braddon came, and how he dealt with the Boy. He is a busy Man, you see, a great Reformer, that does mightily concern himself in the Reformation of the Government. I never knew that Mr. Braddon had any great share in it: He has not such a prodigious Estate I suppose, that for fear of losing his great Estate he should be so wondrous busy and active in reforming the Government; but I have always observed it for a Rule, that your beggarly inconsiderable Fellows are the warmest People in the Business of Reformation, and for defending Liberty and Property as they call it; and then they put it under the Disguise of Religion, when, alas, those that have no Religion are generally the greatest Pretenders of taking care of it; and those that have no Estates nor Properties, are usually the fullest of Noise about Liberty and Property. But the meaning of it is plain, if they can but exasperate the People into a Rebellion, that is the way to get a Property: And if they can but have Liberty do what they please, that is all the Liberty they contend for. They are such mean inconsiderable Fellows only that make all this ado among us: For no Persons of any Interest or Quality will offer to engage in any such thing. But I hope the Snare is seen, and we shall avoid it; for God be thanked we live under a regular Government, where the Laws are duly executed; we need not be afraid of wrong from the Government. The Courts of Justice are open where they may have Security; and the best Security to good Subjects, is that which the Law gives them.

Mrs. Edwards, she tells you, When Braddon came to enquire about it, it made them all a little concerned; and the Daughter was affrighted, and she comes to the Boy, and says, Billy, Billy, here has been a Man about such a thing, pray speak the Truth: Why, says he, will any harm come of it; Says she, I can't tell, but tell you the Truth. And then when the Boy comes to tell Truth, he then says, all the Story was false. Besides this, says she, We told Mr. Braddon, before the Boy signed it, That he had said it was false; and he was told it again before the King and Council, that it was false. But nothing would serve him but he must have a Horse and a Man, and he must go his Circuit to pick up ridiculous Stories. Letters must be contrived from one to another to give a Colour to the Matter, and all this to spread about his malicious Reports and false News.

And by this means, Gentlemen, I must tell you, The Matter is fixed as to the second part of the Information, which is the corrupting of Witnesses; for tho' he did not get any Witnesses sworn, and so 'tis no Subornation of Perjury, strictly, yet however 'tis a Misdemeanour to labour any one, much more such a Child, into a Falsity, as apparently he did; for as the Boy swears now, He never did make mention of going to my Lord Gerard's Lodgings.

The next Evidence is young Mrs. Edwards, Sarah the Daughter, and she comes and gives an account of the same. That the Boy did tell such a Story at first, but, says she, I knew him to be such a lying Boy, and I had so often found him in Lies, that I did not mind what he said. And he used to tell Lies when he had been playing Truant. Then comes Mr. Braddon to enquire about the Business, and when he began to prosecute it, the Girl began to be affrighted, and she calls the Boy to her, and engaged him to tell her the Truth, and then immediately upon that, he did say it was all a Story, and Invention of his own.

And then 'tis very material to observe, That the Boy in that Paper of Information (which is all of Mr. Braddon's Hand-writing) makes the Circumstance of the Razor's falling down, to be cast of the inside of the Pales, and the Girl says, it was of the outside, and there was a Coach, and abundance of People by, and a great many fine Circumstances, and not one of them true.

The next piece of Evidence is, she does say, That after he told her it was false, she gave notice to Braddon, and being asked, Whether she did not frighten him by threatening his Father would be turned out of his Place? She swears, No. But all those kind of Questions were by a Side-Wind, to make Reflections upon the Government; as tho' the King would turn Men out, because they would not swear what was false. It carries, I tell you, a Sting towards the Government still, and shews the Malice of the Design. But, Gentlemen, you hear what is said about that, there was no such thing said; They did apprehend some Fear, but from whom their Fear came, that they can't tell. But she positively swears, when the Boy had denied it, he had Notice of it; and when he refused to sign it, yet he pressed him, by telling him, there was no Harm in it like to come, but only to Mr. Braddon himself, and so he was persuaded to sign it.

The next Witness is Mrs. Barton; She comes and tells you, that she was at Mr. Edwards's House, and what she tells you of her own Knowledge, you are to take for Evidence, and nothing more. She says, Braddon did engage the Boy to tell Truth, and put him in mind of that Chapter in the Acts, of the great Displeasure of God against the two Witnesses that forswore themselves, and bid him speak nothing but the Truth. And after he had talked thus awhile, she observed he was going to take Pen, Ink, and Paper, and she was afraid she might be drawn in for a Witness, and so she went out of the Room. But before that time, Mr. Braddon did go to see the Window, and the Place where the Boy said the Razor was thrown out.

Then there is the Evidence of the little Girl, who is the next Witness, Jane Lodeman, I think her Name was, and that is likewise written by Mr. Braddon. Now you hear what that young Wench says. She comes and would give some sort of Countenance to the thing, How she was looking up at the Window of my Lord of Essex's Lodgings, and that there was a bloody Razor thrown by a Hand out of the Window, but whether it was half bloody, or all over bloody, she can't tell, but bloody it was; and it was, as she says, thrown on the outside, though the Boy said, it was thrown of the inside. But the Wench being asked, Whether she knew that was my Lord of Essex's Lodging? She answered, No, she did not, when they come and make her swear in her Information, that she saw the Razor thrown out of my Lord of Essex's Lodgings: And then she says, she heard no Soldier speak a Word at all; but in the Information, it is set down, that the Soldier cried out to the People of the House, Go fetch up the Razor. And this was all done in the open Day, and there were abundance of People, but she could not tell any particular body. So that of one hundred People, which, if she say true, were there, Mr. Braddon could not satisfy himself to enquire after some of them, but only he must pick up a Child of 13 Years of Age to practise upon in this villainous manner. And it carries the greater Venom, and Malice, and Virulency, and Baseness, to endeavour to corrupt young People to that height, as to come and say, and swear those things in the Face of a Court, that are impossible to be true. It is impossible to be true, that she saw a Coach in the Yard; for you hear what Account Captain Hawley gives of his House. It is impossible to be true, that there should be a Crowd of People, because that there was a Sentinel at the Door, who must see all that go out, and that come in; and there is no way to go into the Yard, but through the Back-door, and the Pales are so high, that nothing can be flung over, that could be easily discerned. So that the very Thoughts of such a thing as this are ridiculous in themselves, and not only the Falsity of the Story is apparent, but there is also apparent a great Villany, in endeavouring to get Witnesses to prove that Falsity. For you see who Mr. Braddon employs; he gets a Barber to go along with him on purpose to testify what idle Reports he could pick up. But this Barber, and the other Witnesses, when they come here, can't tell any thing. For the Barber, he says, she said, There lay a Razor; but the Information says, (to which he is a Witness) that the Soldier cried, Take up the Razor; and she now upon her Oath denies any thing of that.

The next Evidence is the Aunt, and she tells you, she does not remember such and such Particulars, but somewhat to that purpose she does; but whether she named my Lord of Essex, or no, in particular, as to his Lodgings, she cannot give an account.

Then you have Glabrooke, that comes to give an account concerning this Girl's Story, and he plainly is quite different from what the others had testified before; for his Evidence is, That the Girl had said my Lord of Essex cut his own Throat, and afterwards flung the Razor out of a Window: After he had committed this horrid Murder upon himself, he got to life again, and threw away the Instrument he did it with; that is plainly his Testimony, that this Child should say so. So that, as in the Case of Susanna, which I heard cited here upon another occasion, the wicked Elders were discovered by the different Circumstances of Time and Place; so here you have Circumstances of Time and Place, and of all things in the World that can contribute to prove the Falsity of this Report, and to prove the malicious Design of these People that were engaged in this Business.

The next Witness is one Smith, and he speaks much to the self-same purpose. He was the Barber that went with Braddon to examine this Girl.

Now, Gentlemen, you are to consider of these Contrivances of Braddon, in buying himself to sollicite these Children to testify these Stories, after a Denial by the Boy to sign the Paper, To tell him there was no Harm could come to him, to dictate what he should say, and put Words into his Mouth, about going to see my Lord Gerard's Lodgings, which he never spake of; for him to dictate to the other Witness the Pinmaker of Marlborough, what the right Day should be, to set up such a senseless Story that he heard such a thing at the Post-house, but he cannot tell from whom, or name any one that heard it or spake it besides himself: It is strange how he should meet with this Man, for even the Man himself tells you, he knows not who he had discoursed of it to; and never saw Braddon till that time he writ the Letter. But you may observe, that to be sure the Report might be spread, it was so contrived that the Scene should be laid in the Post-house, and then it was like to run abroad quickly; for alas it was not their Business to make Truth of it, but to make the discontented Rabble believe it to be a Truth. And so they began to consult with themselves where it was best to lodge it, and upon Deliberation the Place must humour the Design as well as the Time, and that must be at the Post-master's House, in order to disperse the Noise of it; and then Mr. Braddon takes his Circuit to Salisbury unto Sir Robert Atkins at Strat in the Held, and to other People, filling the Country with his braded Ware; and 'tis time to look after such Pedlars, for they vent the worst of Ware.

Now, Gentlemen, for the Defendants they bring this Evidence:

First,

Then, Gentlemen, you may observe this Fellow is easily persuaded to swear any thing, for he gives no manner of Account how he came to hear what he speaks of, or from whom, or how Mr. Braddon came to him: He had never seen him before that time, he says (tho' Mr. Braddon had such a value for this worshipful Pinmaker, whom he never saw, that he came from London upon the least intimation of this Man, so zealous he was for the carrying on this weighty Affair, which I may call this impudent and intolerable Lye).

Gentlemen, I must tell you, if any Proof in the World be sufficient to prove Malice, you have sufficient Proof of it before you now. If it had been a thing of Indiscretion only without Malice, if there had been nothing of Caution given to him about it as a thing that concerned not him, there might have been something said to alleviate it; but for him to come as if he had Authority from the Countess of Essex, and Sir Henry Capell, who denies it, shews the Malice of his Design.

Gentlemen, 'Tis a Concern of an High Nature, and if you do believe these Persons that are Defendants, or either of them to be guilty; such as you believe to be guilty, you must find guilty, and of so much as you believe them guilty. And if in case they shall by you be found guilty, the Court is to take care to inflict a Punishment, if it be possible, suitable to their Offence.

Then the Court arose, and the Jury afterwards gave in a private Verdict, which the next Morning was repeated in Court and recorded. And by that Verdict they found the Defendant Laurence Braddon guilty of the whole Matter charged upon him in the Information, and the Defendant Hugh Speke guilty of all but the Conspiring to procure false Witnesses, and of that they found him Not Guilty.

Lunæ 21 Aprilis.

Mr. Att. Gen. MY Lord, Here are two Persons to receive your Judgment.

L. C. J. Who are they?

Mr. Att. Gen. Braddon and Speke. But it being late, I know not whether you will give it now, or appoint some other time.

L. C. J. No, no, let them come in. They will say we are afraid of giving Judgment else.

Then Mr. Braddon and Mr. Speke came into Court.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, we pray your Judgment for the King, that you will set a good Fine.

Mr. Williams. We are retained to move in Arrest of Judgment.

Mr. Att. Gen. Judgment is enter'd already, and there is nothing but a Fine in the Case.

Mr. Williams. My Lord, If it be entered, it is entered but this Term; and 'tis in the Breast of the Court, if they please, to admit us to speak in Arrest of Judgment.

L. C. J. When were the Rules out?

Mr. Williams. My Lord, It was put off by Consent to this Day.

L. C. J. But when were the Rules out, I ask?

Cl. of Cr. The Rules were out the last Day of the last Term, and then Judgment was entered.

L. C. J. Well then, Judgment is entered, what say you against a Fine?

Mr. Williams. We were retained to move in Arrest of Judgment, I am sure I was, and instructed to that purpose.

L. C. J. I cannot tell what you were retained to do, but now Judgment is entered, what say you as to the Fine?

Mr. Williams. We cannot say any thing as to that, we are not instructed; I am sure I am not.

Mr. Wallop. My Lord, We took it, and I was told so, That it was put off by Consent to this Day.

L. C. J. I know nothing of your Consent, nor what you consented to. If you consent among yourselves at the Bar, that is nothing to the Court. Here we find Judgment entered, and we must proceed upon what is before us.

Mr. Wallop. Your Lordship will please to remember, what the Evidence was.

L. C. J. I do remember it very particularly.

Counsel. My Lord, Mr. Speke is found Guilty of nothing but writing that Letter.

Mr. Att. Gen. He is found Guilty of all but the Suborning.

L. C. J. We do very well know there is a difference between them.

Then the last Rule was read.

L. C. J. Well, Judgment is regularly entered, What say you to it for the Defendants?

Mr. Wallop. My Lord, we conceive we have very good Matter upon the Verdict, to move in Arrest of Judgment.

L. C. J. Yes, no doubt what you have to say is extraordinary material, but you come too late, we cannot hear you. Sir Samuel Astrey, is Judgment entered according to the Course of the Court?

Cl. of Cr. Yes.

L. C. J. Then we must proceed to fine them.

Mr. Braddon. Pray, my Lord, Let Mr. Ward be asked, whether they did not agree we should move to Day?

Mr. Ward. That was only an Agreement on Saturday, that they might appear to Day, and I would not take them in Execution.

Mr. Braddon. This was the Day I was to move in, my Lord; Mr. Burton knows very well, he agreed to it.

Mr. Burton. I know nothing more of it, my Lord, but that indeed I did consent on Saturday, that whatsoever they could move then, they should move on Monday.

Mr. Ward. That was only that they should appear to Day, instead of Braddon's being taken up by a Capias pro Fine.

L. C. J. Well, well, I know nothing of your Agreements, here is Judgment entered regularly, as we find it; you had best bring your Action against Mr. Burton, if he have done you any wrong, but I did not know that Mr. Burton was the King's Attorney. But I find here is Judgment against you, and 'tis a very foul Offence, as notorious an Offence as any Person, under that which is Capital, could be guilty of; base Aspersions of the Government, in order to promote Sedition and Faction; and for that End, made use of all villanous Means to corrupt Infants, and then justify that Villany with a brazen Face, to that degree of Impudence, as I never before saw, That all the Justice of the Nation must be affronted by such audacious Fellows, for it seems his Confidence has not left him; but here he smiles, and seems as if he had done no Harm.

Vol. III.

Mr. Braddon. My Lord, I know my own Innocency, and therefore have no reason to be troubled.

L. C. J. Your Innocence! Your Impudence, you mean. I tell you, had you been in any other Country but this, the Innocence you brag of, would have sent you to the Gallies.

Mr. Just. Withins. Then you think, Mr. Braddon, you have done very well in what you have done?

L. C. J. Ay, I assure you, does he. And the Zeal of his Party has gone so far, that at Winchester, when I was there in the Circuit, I was told that his Doctrine had obtained so much in that Country, especially about that Place, whence some of his Witnesses came, I mean Andover, that there was a Woman that was here the other Day, Mrs. Drake, being at Conventicle, held forth, That my Lord of Essex was murdered while the King was in the Tower, and that God was the Avenger of Murder, and had found out a proper Person for the Prosecution of it, that was Mr. Braddon; and this snivelling Cant prevailed at the Conventicle. It is no such smirking Matter as you make it, Mr. Braddon, I assure you.

Mr. Braddon. My Lord, if I did know myself to be under any Guilt, I would very readily and humbly acknowledge it.

L. C. J. Well, I see a great many of the Party about you, I can spy them out, though they think they are not seen; but they shall know we will not suffer such Monsters as these to go without due Punishment.

Mr. Just. Withins. He stands upon it, he is innocent still, notwithstanding all that was proved, and the Jury's Verdict.

L. C. J. Yes; alack-a-day; he wipes his Mouth, and has not so much as eaten, I'll warrant you.

Mr. Just. Withins. I expected you would have been sorry, Mr. Braddon, for what you had done, and expressed some Penitence, but it seems you are very innocent.

Mr. Braddon. I did not directly, nor indirectly, offer any thing to induce the Children to give their Testimony, nor was any such thing proved: I know my own Innocency.

Mr. Att. Gen. The Jury have found it otherwise.

L. C. J. And that upon a fair, a full, and a convincing Evidence, and no Man in the World can make any doubt of the Truth of that Verdict; but he that had a share in your Guilt, or in that it had a tendency towards, I mean that horrid Conspiracy. And I assure you, Mr. Braddon, you tread upon the very Heels of it; smirk at it, and be as merry about it as you will.

Mr. Braddon. If I did not know my own Innocency, then I had reason to be troubled.

L. C. J. Your own Innocency? If you did not know your own Impudence, you mean; 'tis that only that makes you smirk and smile at such Things as these.

Mr. Just. Withins. Mr. Braddon, when you were advised by Sir Henry Capell to take a prudent and a good Course, to go and leave it with a Secretary of State, you would not take that Advice, but you would go your own way, and you would turn Examiner, and Prosecutor yourself; when he that was the Earl's Brother, and was sure more concerned than you, thought it fitter to go that way.

L. C. J. We remember what Sir Samuel Barnardiston, in his Letter, speaks of this Matter, Mr. Braddon, he was got off; why, they dare not meddle with Mr. Braddon, he is such a dreadful Man, and his Party are so considerable, that we dare not meddle with them; and the TORIES are all cast down. Alack-a-day! because these Fellows can't cast down the Government, therefore all honest Men must be cast down, and not dare to meddle with them. But they shall see we are not so much cast down, but we are able to reach the highest of them. What Condition is this Man in? I speak in Point of Estate, for his other Conditions, we know what they are, his Trial will satisfy any Man of that.

Mr. Att. Gen. He is the eldest Son of a Father that has a good Estate.

Mr. Williams. He is then but Heir Apparent.

Mr. Braddon. No, I am a younger Brother.

Mr. Williams. It seems he is but the Second Son, and a young Gentleman.

Mr. Braddon. My Father has an elder Son alive.

L. C. J. I remember particularly 'tis said in one of the Letters, that he was a Man of 7 or 800l. a Year.

Cl. of Cr. That was in Mr. Speke's Letter. He says his Father had so much.

Mr. Braddon. That is in Mr. Speke's Letter; but that is not true.

L. C. J. I don't know truly, that may be as false as any thing else you went about to have these Children Swear; but I'll undertake it, if thou hadst told the little Girl that he had 800l. a Year, she would have been as ready to have Sworn it as the other.

Mr. Just. Withins. 'Tis a wonderful Thing, Mr. Braddon, you could bring no body to come and testify these Things, but those two little Children.

L. C. J. But oh! What a Happiness it was for this Sort of People, that they had got Mr. Braddon, an honest Man, and a Man of Courage, says Mr. Speke, a Man à propos; and pray, says he to his Friend, give him the best Advice you can, for he is a Man very fit for the Purpose, and pray secure him under a sham Name, for I'll undertake there are such Designs upon pious Mr. Braddon, such Contrivances to do him a Mischief; that if he had not had his Protestant Flail about him, somebody or other would have knocked him on the Head, and he is such a wonderful Man, that all the King's Courts of Justice must needs conspire to do Mr. Braddon a Mischief; a pretty sort of a Man, upon my Word, and he must be used accordingly; Men that arrogate and assume to themselves a Liberty to do such kind of Things, must expect to fare accordingly.

Mr. Just. Withins. Mr. Speke is not found Guilty of the Subornation.

Mr. Att. Gen. He is found Guilty of all but the Subornation; he is found Guilty of Conspiring to spread the Report. The Subornation will require another Sort of Punishment.

L. C. J. Ay, but there is a Difference between them. The Crime was very great in Mr. Speke, though not so great as in Mr. Braddon, and I am sorry that Mr. Speke should be concerned in it, and should take such care about such a Business, with all that Piety and Zeal for Religion he expresses in his Letter to Sir Robert Atkins (Mr. Justice Atkins that was,) that he should recommend him to have a wonderful Care of him, and then thank him for his Kindness shewed to Our Party. So he makes himself to be of the Party, and makes this the Business of the Party, and so makes himself to be a Sharer in the Business; for 'tis We thank you for your Kindness to Us, and the Tide is strong against Us, and We hope We shall be able to bring the Business of my Lord of Essex upon the Stage, before they do any of these in the Tower. So Mr. Speke makes himself a Party in the Business. And I am mighty sorry that when he comes to be asked the Question, How he came to write this Letter? he should tell us, He had been at the Tavern, and did not know what he writ, but does not say, he recollected afterwards. It seems he used to be often at the Tavern, and had been there when he writ this pious Letter, and so his Saintship broke out in a Fit of Drunkenness, for most of our Reformers of Religion now-a-days want common Morality. And yet they are wonderfully Zealous for Reformation and Religion. All the Villany that has been thought of, nay more than ever could enter before into the Imagination of Mankind, has been wrought by these Men, that pretend to be Reformers of Religion, and amongst the rest Mr. Braddon; and indeed I look upon Braddon to be the Daringest Fellow of the Party, he and his Brother Smith. If there were any Reluctancy, or any Sense of any Guilt they had contracted, and would shew it by acknowledging their being surprized into it, and testified Repentance by a submissive and dutiful Behaviour, that were something to incline the Court to Commiseration; but when we see, instead of that, they are more obdurate and steeled in their Opposition to the Government, they must be reclaimed by Correction, and kept within due Bounds by condign Punishment, otherwise it will be thought by the ignorant Sort of People, that all Courts of Justice are afraid of them.

Mr. Just. Withins. Nay, Mr. Braddon's Zeal was very extraordinary in the Case, going on in this Business, not only without, but contrary to the Advice of Sir Henry Capell, who surely was most concerned about the Death of his Brother.

Then the Judges between themselves consulted about the Sentence, which Mr. Just. Withins pronounced thus.

Mr. Just. Withins. Mr. Braddon, You see what it is you are convicted of. It was for as foul an Offence, as any can be imagined, that is not

Capital, wherein the King is very much concerned, for the Insinuations were such, as that the King was mightily concerned; for in as much as you say the Earl of Essex should be murdered at that time the King was in the Tower, it was an implied Accusation of the King, and an Insinuation that the King should design to take away an innocent Man's Blood; and so downright be guilty of murdering an innocent Person, which how great an Offence that is, let any Man that has any Loyalty, or Reverence for the King in him consider, and you cannot say you are innocent, Mr. Braddon. Your Prosecution was most pertinacious, and you would proceed after the Boy had denied it, and proceed in such a manner, when Sir Henry Capell had told you what you should do; and what did you go upon? You had got a little Girl, a Child of 11 or 12 Years old, to tell a Story of I know not what, and nobody else knew any thing of it, and this must be a ground sufficient for you to go up and down, and spread such a Report, when Sir Henry Capell gave you Advice to go to a Secretary of State, and let him examine it; indeed you did go to him, but would not rest satisfied with what the King and Council did; no, Mr. Braddon, you thought that would not gratify your own Passion, and Malice against the King and the Government, but you must take Ways of your own. This is to scandalize the whole Justice of the Nation, and not only make the King a Murderer, but you would have all the Plot hereby quite lose its Credit; and you would make it, as Sir Samuel Barnardiston would insinuate, a Sham Plot, to take away innocent Protestants Lives. But as to the Plot, there has been fresh Proof of it beyond all Contradiction this Day; a Man here in the Face of the whole Court has owned the whole Thing; he would not take the Liberty of defending himself, that was offered him, if he would try it, but confessed that Conspiracy, which you had a great mind to be an Instrument of making the World to believe, was nothing but a Sham. I shall not make any long Speech to you, The COURT, for this Offence, Sets upon you, Mr. Braddon, the Fine of 2000l. and order that you find Sureties for your good Behaviour during your Life, and that you be Committed till this be Performed. And for you Mr. Speke (we have considered that you are not so highly Guilty as Mr. Braddon, you are Guilty of a great Offence, but not so Guilty as he, and therefore) we think fit to set upon you the Fine of 1000l. and that you find Sureties for your good Behaviour during your Life, and be Committed till you perform it.

L. C. J. Marshal, take them in Custody, and use them as they ought to be used.

Counsel. My Lord, Mr. Speke's Bail is discharged, I suppose?

L. C. J. Ay, they must be, as to this Matter, but nothing else but this.

Then they were carried away to the King's Bench-Prison.

The Earl of Essex's Innocency and Honour vindicated; in a Letter to a Friend: By Laurence Braddon.

S I R,

YOURS of the 10th Instant came the last Night to my Hands; and I give you many Thanks for your kindness therein expressed; and more particularly, that you have so often endeavoured to rescue me from the Slanders of such, as without either knowing my Person or Offence, have given me those uncharitable and unjust Terms, worse than which, the greatest Offenders can hardly deserve. Sir, Your Country is not the only Place where I have been so traduced: But my Misfortunes having made my Name known where in Person I have never been, and my Adversaries being as malicious as numerous, I have heard from other hands, That I have elsewhere met with the like treatment. But to do myself that Justice which I think is incumbent on me, in order to the clearing myself from those undeserved Calumnies with which I have been, and am daily slandered, I have herein sent you a particular Account of what, and how, and for what I did so unjustly suffer under our late Male-Administration. And seeing the Honourable late Committee of Lords (appointed to examine into the Death of the Right Honourable Arthur (late) Earl of Essex) is dissolved, by the last Dissolution of Parliament, and most of the Depositions and Examinations taken before this Honourable Committee have been read before the Honourable House of Lords, (and so no longer to be thought a Secret,) I do humbly conceive it's neither an Offence, or divulging a Secret, to publish what (since this happy Revolution) hath been proved for the clearing of That Truth which (when I first engaged) to assert was the highest Offence.

By the Proceedings before this Honourable Committee, you will in some measure perceive what great pains those Honourable Persons have been at, in the many Committees which have herein sat, and the many Examinations taken before their Lordships: All which had long since been published to the World, had it not been for the Prorogations and Dissolution which have happened, depending upon this Prosecution. But when the Honourable House of Lords shall think fit to revive this Committee, and order this Report to be made, I hope I shall have an opportunity to vindicate myself in some other way than at present is proper.

Sir, Though this Letter may at first sight seem much longer than you think the Subject-matter required; yet when you shall have read the whole, and observed the numerous Examinations and Depositions which herein have been made, what industrious and villainous oppositions it hath met with, not only in false Reports and sly Insinuations, but the many false Oaths which have been procured, to destroy the belief of this barbarous Murder; you will (I hope) not find this Discourse so tedious in its perusal, as at the first glance you may fear it will prove.

Sir, With leave of a late Author upon this Subject, I have freely borrow'd of that Discourse: Yet in all parts not observed his Method; but according to your Command, shall begin with the Reasons that moved me to this Prosecution: In order to which, I shall in the first Place give you a short Relation of my Lord's Commitment to the Tower, with the Depositions taken before the Coroner upon my Lord's Body; for the reading those Depositions proved the occasion of my first engaging herein.

The Right Honourable Arthur (late) Earl of Essex was committed to the Tower the 10th of July 1683, by virtue of a Warrant from Secretary Jenkins; which Warrant ran as followeth:

Sir Leoline Jenkins, Knight, of His Majesty's Most Honourable Privy-Council, and Principal Secretary of State.

THESE are in His Majesty's Name to Will and Require you to receive into your Custody the Person of Arthur Earl of Essex, herewith sent you, being committed for High-Treason, in compassing the Death of the King, (whom God preserve,) and conspiring to levy War against His Majesty: And him the said Earl of Essex to keep in safe Custody, until he shall be delivered by due Course of Law. And for so doing this shall be your Warrant. Given under my Hand and Seal at Whitehall, the 10th of July, 1683.

To Thomas Cheek, Esq; Lieutenant of His Majesty's Tower of London.

L. JENKINS,

The first Night his Lordship lay at Captain Cheek's, the then Lieutenant of the Tower; but the next Day was removed to Major Hawley's (then Gentleman-Porter of the Tower;) and the two Warders placed upon his Lordship, were Nathanael Monday and Thomas Russel; one to stand at my Lord's Chamber-door, or in his Chamber; and the other at the Stairs-foot; and thus by turns. Paul Bomeney, my Lord's Servant, was permitted to be with his Lordship. At Major Hawley's my Lord lay Wednesday Night and Thursday Night; but Friday Morning about nine of the Clock, his Lordship was found with his Throat cut through both Jugulars and Arteries, even to the Neck-bone, on both Sides the Neck. The next Day, being Saturday, the Jury sat; and before them were sworn the aforesaid Paul Bomeney, Thomas Russel, and two Chirurgeons; whose Informations are as followeth, according to the Print; but that (as I shall observe in its own proper place) varies in the Original from Bomeney's Information.

The

The Information of Paul Bomeney, Servant to the late Earl of Essex for about three or four Years now last past, taken upon Oath the 14th day of July 1683, Anno Regni Caroli secundi Dei Gratia Angliæ, Scotiæ, Franciæ, & Hiberniæ Regis, Fidei Defensor, &c. Tricesimo quinto, Annoque Domini, 1683.

SAITH, That when my Lord came to Captain Hawley's, which was the 11th Instant, my Lord of Essex asked him for a Penknife to pare his Nails, as he was wont to do; which this Informant answered, being come in haste, he had not brought it; but he would send for one; and accordingly sent the Footman with a Note for several things for my Lord, amongst which the Penknife was inserted; and the Footman went, and gave the Bill to my Lord's Steward, who sent the Provisions, but not the Penknife; and he told the Footman he would get one next Day. When the Footman was come, my Lord asked if the Penknife were come? This Note. Informant answered, No; but he should have it the next Day. And accordingly on the 12th Instant in the Morning, before my Lord of Essex was up, this Informant sent the Footman home with a Note to the Steward, in which, amongst other things, he asked for a Penknife for my Lord. When the Footman was gone, about, or a little after eight of the Clock, my Lord sent one Mr. Ruffel, his Warder, to this Informant; who came, and then he asked him if the Penknife was come? This Informant said, No, my Lord; but I shall have it by and by. To which my Lord said, That he should bring him one of his Razors, it would do as well. And then this Informant went and fetched one, and gave it my Lord, who then went to pare his Nails, and then the Informant went out of the Room into the Passage by the Door, [On Friday the 13th Instant] and began to talk with the Warder; and a little while after he went down Stairs; and soon after came the Footman with the Provisions, and brought also a Penknife, which this Informant put upon his Bed, and thought my Lord had no more need of it, because he thought he had pared his Nails; and then this Informant came up to my Lord's Chamber about eight or Nine in the Forenoon, [on Friday the 13th Instant] with a little Note from the Steward [where there were three Lines writ]. But not finding his Lord in the Chamber, went to the Closet-door, and found it shut; and thinking his Lord was busy there, went down, and staid a little; and came up again, thinking his Lord had been come out of the Closet; and finding him not in the Chamber, he knocked at the Door with his Finger thrice, and said, My Lord! But nobody answering, he took up the Hangings, and looking through the Chink, he saw Blood, and part of the Razor; whereupon he called the Warder Ruffel, and went down to call for help; and the said Ruffel pushed the Door open, and there they saw my Lord of Essex all along the Floor, without a Penwig, and all full of Blood, and the Razor by him. And this Deponent further deposeth, That the Note. Razor now shewed to him at the time of his Examination, is the same Razor which he did bring to my Lord, and which did lie on the Ground in the Closet by my Lord.

This was not in the Original, but added by Authority.

The Information of Thomas Ruffel, one of the Warders of the Tower, who had the Custody of the Earl of Essex, taken the 14th day of July, Anno Regni Caroli secundi Dei Gratia Angliæ, Scotiæ, Franciæ, & Hiberniæ Regis, Fidei Defensoris, &c. Tricesimo quinto, Annoque Domini, 1683.

SAITH, That on Friday the 13th Instant, about eight or nine of the Clock in the Forenoon, he was present, when he did hear the Lord of Essex call to his Man, Mr. Bomeney, for a Penknife to pare his Nails; and then for a Razor, which Mr. Bomeney brought him; and then my Lord walked up and down the Room, scraping his Nails with a Razor, and shut the outward Door. Mr. Bomeney, half a quarter of an Hour afterwards, not finding my Lord in his Bed-Chamber, went

Note. down Stairs again, believing that my Lord was private in his Closet. Bomeney came up about a quarter of an Hour afterwards, and knocked at the Door; then called, My Lord, my Lord: But he not answering, peeped through a Chink of the Door, and did see the Earl of Essex lying on the Ground in the Closet; whereupon he cried out, That my Lord was fallen down sick; and then the Informant went to the Closet-door, and opened it, the Key being on the outside, and then did see my Lord lie on the Ground in his Blood, and his Throat cut.

The Information of Robert Sherwood in Fanchurch-street, Chirurgion, taken the 14th day of July, Anno Regni Caroli secundi, Dei Gratia Angliæ, Scotiæ, Franciæ, & Hiberniæ Regis, Fidei Defensoris, &c. Tricesimo quinto, Annoque Domini, 1683.

SAITH, That he hath viewed the Throat of the Earl of Eex; and doth find, That there is a large Wound; and that the Aspera Arteria, or Windpipe, and the Gullet, with the Jugular Arteries, are all divided; of which Wound he certainly died.

The Information of Robert Andrews of Crouched-Friars, Chirurgion, taken upon Oath the 14th day of July, Anno Regni Caroli secundi, nunc Regis Angliæ, &c. Tricesimo quinto, Annoque Domini, 1683.

SAITH, That he hath viewed the Throat of the Lord of Essex; and doth find, That it was cut from the one Jugular to the other, and through the Windpipe and Gullet, into the Vertebres of the Neck, both Jugular Veins being also quite divided.

Upon these Informations, the Coroner's Jury found my Lord Felo de se. The Substance of these Informations in short is this, viz.

That my Lord of Essex called for a Penknife to pare his Nails; but the Penknife not being ready, his Lordship required a Razor, which was delivered him; with which Razor his Lordship retired to his Closet, and locked himself in: But soon after, the Closet-door being opened, my Lord was found with his Throat cut through both Jugular and Arteries, to the Neck-bone, and the Razor (as before delivered) lying by him.

These Informations taken by the Coroner were published the next Monday after my Lord's Death; and I the 16th of July buying one of these, that very Morning (with one Mr. William Hatfield) went to Wansted, to the House of one Mr. John Evans (then an Officer of the Custom-house). Upon reading the last part of Bomeney's Information, which depose, That when they opened my Lord's Closet-door, they found his Lordship on the Ground, with his Throat cut, AND THE RAZOR BY HIM; Mr. Evans declared, That could not be true; for Friday Morning about Ten of the Clock, being upon the Custom-house Key with one Mr. Edwards, the said Mr. Edwards told him (with several others,) "That his Son being in the Tower that Morning, just before the Death of the Earl of Essex was known; he was standing just over-against the Earl's Chamber-Window, and saw a bloody Razor thrown out of that Window, which he went to take up; but a Maid came out of Captain Hawley's House, and took it, and forthwith ran with it into my Lord's Lodgings, and up Stairs immediately, several times crying out Murder! and then coming down, pretended the Earl of Essex had cut his Throat."

Upon hearing Mr. Evans give this Relation, I declared, If this was true, what was sworn before the Coroner must be false; and I did not believe they had sworn false for nothing; but must conclude my Lord was murdered. Hereupon I did desire the said Mr. Evans to inform me where this Mr. Edwards lived; for I protested, I would inquire into the Matter. Mr. Evans then told me, Mr. Edwards lived in Mark-Lane, by the Tower.

When I came to Town that Afternoon, about Six of the Clock, I did forthwith acquaint several of my Friends with my Design of making immediate inquiry into the Truth of this Story; which if I found Reason to believe, I thought it was proper to be taken upon Oath before some Justice of Peace, in order to a further inquiry. By most of my Acquaintance I was dissuaded from it; they telling me, That if my Lord was indeed murdered, the Persons and Interest concerned in the Murder were too Powerful for me to engage; and therefore I must expect nothing but Ruin by meddling in the Matter. To all which Dissuasions, I generally gave this Answer: That I would do nothing herein, but what I could justify to God and a good Conscience. And the threatened Ruin I did not fear, or would thereby be deterred; for if my Lord was indeed barbarously murdered, the same Principles and Practices that murdered him, might take off many of those Honourable Persons they then had, or should take into Custody, and pretend, as they did in this Case, That this was done by the Prisoners themselves, to avoid an Infamous Execution: So that God only knew in how many Men's Destruction such treacherous Practices might determine. But if those Bloody Men once found, that such their Design was suspected, and like to be detected, in all probability, they would desist from the like villainous Practices; and seeing this would be more for the Interest of the Publick, than I could possibly be either in my Liberty, or otherwise, I was resolved to sacrifice that, and whatsoever else I had, to the Service of my Country.

My Friends finding me thus resolved to engage, they advised me at first to inform my Lord's Honourable Family herewith, and to observe such Directions as from them I should receive; wherefore that very Monday Evening, I went to St. James's-Square to my Lord's House, where I found Sir Henry Capell under great Disorder, by Reason of that deplorable Accident. I did inform Sir Henry of what I had heard, but told him, That I had not then spoken either with the Boy, or his Father, who (as I was informed) lived in Mark-Lane by the Tower; and if Sir Henry thought fit, I would the next Morning go with any whom he should appoint, to Discourse the Father and Him: Sir Henry thanked me for my Information, but said he was then under such a Concern for so great a Misfortune, as had herein befallen his Family, that he hardly knew what he did or said, &c. The next Morning I went to Mr. Edwards, to whom, as soon as I had told the Cause of my coming, the old Man seemed much surprized and concerned, and in Tears told me he was Ruined; to which I answered, That I did suppose he was not ignorant what great Things the Father of this Unfortunate Lord had done, and suffered for His Majesty's Interest, and how this very Lord himself had been highly in His Majesty's Favour, having been employed in Places of the greatest Honour and Trust; and therefore, if his Lordship fell by treacherous Hands, none (in Reason) could be supposed so zealous for a Discovery as his Majesty would, who could protect him from whatsoever Danger might seem to threaten him: besides, if there were any Danger, I stood principally subject to it; but the Danger I did not fear, considering of what Consequence this might prove, by being inquired into: At length Mr. Edwards gave me the same Information (in Substance) I had the Day before received from Mr. Evans. I then desired to see his Son, who being then at School, I could not speak with him; but that Afternoon about Two of the Clock I went again, and was then told, That the Boy had denied all, which denial was occasioned by his Sister's telling him, He should be Hang'd for what he had therein declared: this the Sister could not deny; but as soon as the Boy was called into the Parlour, where I with several others were, before I questioned him about it, I discoursed him concerning the Danger of a Lye; and after I had solemnly enjoined him to tell me the very Truth, he Boy then declared to me, as he did at first to his Father and Sisters, and told me, That his Sister's Threats had frightened him into a Denial. Upon this, I took in Writing the Substance of what the Boy declared, and the next Day drew it into a formal Information, which followeth:

The Information of William Edwards, Second Son to Thomas Edwards, of the Parish of All-hallows Barking, London, taken the 18th Day of July, in the Thirty Fifth Year of the Reign of our Sovereign Lord King Charles the Second, Anno 1683.

SAYS, That this Informant on Friday the 13th of this Instant July, as he was going to School, with his Brother Edward, he heard that His Majesty, and His Royal Highness the Duke of York, were going to the Tower;

Tower; whereupon this Informant left his Brother, and went to the Tower to see his Majesty and His Royal Highness. And when this Informant had seen His Majesty, and his Royal Highness, this Informant about Nine of the Clock in the Morning of the same Day, went to see my Lord Brandon Gerard's Lodgings; and as this Informant was standing almost over-against my Lord Brandon Gerard's Lodgings, between the Lord Gerard's and the late Lord of Essex's Lodgings, this Informant saw a Hand cast out a bloody Razor out of the said Earl of Essex's Lodgings: And this Informant was going to take up the said Razor, which he saw on the Ground to be bloody; but before this Informant came to the Razor, there came a Maid running out of Captain Hawley's House, where the said Lord of Essex lodged, and took up the said Razor, which she carried into the said Captain Hawley's House: And this Informant believes, that it was the said Maid, whom he first heard cry out Murder: And this Informant further saith, That he heard the said Maid say to some which were about the Door, after the Murder was cry'd, That she did hear the said Lord of Essex to groan three times that Morning.

The Information of Mrs. Edwards, Wife to Thomas Edwards.

SAITH, That about Ten of the Clock in the Morning, on Friday the 13th of this Instant July, This Informant's youngest Son William Edwards, aged about Thirteen Years, came trembling to this Informant, and in great Amazement and Horror, told this Informant, That the Lord of Essex had cut his Throat in the Tower; and further said, That he the said William Edwards in the Morning about Nine of the Clock, did see a Hand cast out a Razor out of the said Lord of Essex's Lodging Window, which Razor he saw on the Ground to be Bloody, and the said William Edwards was going to take up the said Razor, but before he came to it, there came a Maid running out of Captain Hawley's House, where the said Earl of Essex lodged, and took up the Razor, which she the said Maid forthwith carried into the said Captain Hawley's House; and soon after, he the said William Edwards heard her, as he the said William Edwards did believe, cry out, Murder. And this Informant further saith, That the Substance of what the said William Edwards hath sworn in his Information, he the said William Edwards on Friday last did declare to this Informant, and her whole Family, several times, attesting it to be true, and several times since.

This the Boy declared he was ready to attest; but finding several Justices of the Peace very shy, I thought it proper to carry these Informations to the Secretary of State, and know his Pleasure therein: accordingly, Thursday the 18th of July, about Four of the Clock, I delivered these Informations of the Boy and his Mother, to whom the Boy had discovered it, as soon as he came from the Tower. My Lord Sunderland seemed much surprized, and after some Pause, told me, That I should bring the Persons (who were not then with me) the next Morning, and if it were proper, he would take their Depositions. — The next Morning about Nine or Ten of the Clock, I went with the Boy and his Sister, (the Mother not being well) to whom the Boy had likewise, as soon as he came from the Tower, revealed what he had as before seen. As soon as I came to the Secretary's Office, I sent his Lordship word, that according to his Lordship's Order, I did attend. Immediately upon which (before myself, or either of the Informants were examined) Mr. Atterbury the Messenger came to the Office and took me into Custody; (the only Instance where such as came to give Information on the Behalf of the King, were so treated before any Accusation against them,) and some short time after, thus in Custody, I was called in before the then King and Council.

The first Question (to my Remembrance) asked, was, What made me engage in that Matter? To which I answered, That I was altogether un-related to, and unacquainted with, that honourable Family; so that there lay no more personal Obligation upon me first to move, than upon any Man whatever, who might have met with the like Information; but it was my love to Truth and Justice first engaged me in it; and through the Grace of God, my Duty therein I would do, though Death stared me in the Face every Step I made. I can't but here observe the Carriage of the then Duke of York, who with a concerned Countenance, leaning his Elbow upon the Board, covered his Face with his Hand, upon which I did immediately imagine, that somewhat within did more trouble him, than all the trouble from without did me; for though I stood as the supposed Criminal, I had reason to guess — — — — — somebody else was the real one. I did then observe to his Majesty the Incoherence and Contradictions sworn before the Coroner by Bomeny and Ruffel, who were the Persons that pretended to prove the Self-Murder before the Coroner; upon which his Highness called for those Informations, but said nothing in Answer. His Majesty then took them, and said as little; but the then Lord Keeper North having read them, went about to reconcile those Incoherences and Contradictions; upon which I did object against what his Lordship said, as insufficient, and further urged the Objections I had before made. His Lordship seemed very angry that I made those Reflections; but, with Submission, I think, by printing the Coroner's Depositions, every Man was in some sort appealed to, whether what was so sworn, and printed, was not sufficient to induce every impartial Person (for such the Coroner and Jury ought to have been) that the Earl of Essex did indeed cut his own Throat; and the printing those great Incoherences, and contradictory Depositions, argued as great Impolicy in the Authority that published them, as the deposing them did Villany in the Informants, or the believing them want of Understanding (not to say Honesty, Integrity and Impartiality) in the Coroner, and most of the Jury. After some time spent in the Examination, I was ordered to withdraw into the Secretary's Office, and repeated Orders given by the then King, that I should be kept close (perhaps that I might not hear the Boy or his Sister examined); the Boy was then called in, and at first (as I was afterwards informed) did not deny the Truth of his Information; but being not then past Thirteen, and frightened by being before so great Authority, he wept; upon which his then Majesty stroked him upon the Head, and said, Did you not invent this to excuse your truanting? To which the Boy trembling, answered, Yes (this the Boy declared at Home after his Examination). Then the sister was called, who declared how the Boy, upon his first coming from the Tower, had informed her as before set forth; and tho' after threatened to be whipt, never retracted till the Tuesday, when I having been there, his Sister had frightened him into a denial, which as soon as I came the second time, he retracted, and stood to his first Information, saying his Sister had frightened him, and told him he should be hanged, and his Father would be undone; the Fear of which made him deny it: She further declared, that she did verily believe they never knew nor heard of me till the Tuesday after my Lord's Death, and that I never did give, or offer her Brother one Farthing, but still enjoined him to speak nothing but the Truth (this the Sister did after declare was the Substance of her Examination). After the Sister's Examination was over, I was the second Time called for, and told by my Lord Keeper, that I would have suborned the Boy; to which I answered, that I was well satisfied of my Innocency in, and Abhorrences of all such Practice, which in this case appeared impossible, seeing that the Relation of the Boy was several Days before I ever saw or heard of the Boy; nevertheless I was ready to give what Bail his Lordship should be pleas'd to command; upon which I was ordered to give Bonds with Two Securities in Two Thousand Pound a-piece; this I did that very Afternoon; but the Omission of the Under-Secretary, in the Form of these Bonds, was very advantageous to me, and my Security; for whereas the Conditions of all Council-Bonds were to conclude, and in the mean time to be of the good Behaviour; this Clause in mine was left out, by which my Friends were saved from that, which otherwise would (as you will afterwards find) have ruined them. Standing thus under Two Thousand Pound to answer to an Information of Subornation, I thought I was in Self-Justice bound to make what further Inquiry I could, to strengthen the Boy's Evidence. To which my Lord Keeper (without the least Colour) suggested, I did endeavour to suborn the Boy to swear. In this Inquiry I was daily hurried up and down, and found most People afraid to discover what they herein knew; and which was more, few of my Acquaintance could I prevail with to go with me upon these Inquiries; for my Misfortunes, with the Danger that from the Corruption of the then Times naturally threatened Men, deterred all from engaging any way herein. But at length I met with a Gentleman, who readily went with me upon all Occasions. Mr. Cragg. In a constant search after many Particulars (which would be too tedious here to repeat) I was likewise informed of a Girl that had also seen the bloody Razor, as before, thrown out of my Lord's Chamber Window; upon which I went to St. Catharines, where the Girl lived, and several Persons being present, I took in Writing what she could say herein, and what her Aunt and Mr. Glasbrooke, to whom she related it as she came from the Tower, could testify; which Relation was as followeth:

August the 8th, 1683. The Information of Jane Lodeman, aged about 13 Years, who did in the Presence of these whose Names are here under-written, declare as followeth:

THAT the said Jane Lodeman was in the Tower on Friday Morning, the 13th of July last, and standing almost over-against the late Earl of Essex's Lodging Window, she saw a Hand cast out a Razor out of my Lord's Window, and immediately upon that she heard Shrieks; and that there was a Soldier, by my Lord's Door, which cried out to those within the House, that somebody should come and take up a Razor, which was thrown out of the Window; whereupon there came a Maid with a White Hood out of the House; but who took up the Razor she cannot tell.

August the 8th, 1683, Mr. William Glasbrooke doth declare:

THAT one Jane Lodeman, Aged about 13 Years, inhabiting in the same House where he the said William Glasbrooke lodged, did on Friday the 13th of July last past, between the Hours of Ten and Eleven in the Morning, in the presence and hearing of him the said William Glasbrooke, declare to her Aunt, That the Earl of Essex had cut his Throat; upon which her Aunt was very angry with her; whereupon she the said Girl did declare, that she was sure of it. For she saw him throw the Razor out of the Window, and that the Razor was bloody, and that she heard two Groans or Shrieks (which of the two Words she used, he the said William Glasbrooke is not certain.) Of this he the said Glasbrooke is ready to make Oath.

William Glasbrooke. Lodeman's Aunt, Margaret Smith.

About this time I was informed, That the Report of the Earl of Essex's Death was at Tunbridge about Nine of the Clock that very Morning he died, whereas my Lord's Death was not known in the Tower till about Nine; whereupon I rid to Tunbridge, but I found the Person very shy, and unwilling to appear in the Matter. I had no sooner returned to London, but I was told, the same Report was at Marlborough in Wiltshire, (about 70 Miles from London) the very Morning of the Earl's Death; whereupon I rid to Marlborough, resolving to trace the Report as near as I could to the Author. When I came to Marlborough, I met with one Jeremiah Burgis, whom before this I never to my remembrance saw or heard of; who declared, That the very Morning my Lord died, he was at Frome in Somersetshire (about 30 Miles distant from Marlborough, and an hundred Miles from London;) and being there at the Dolphin, he was informed that the Earl of Essex had cut his Throat in the Tower. I did desire Burgis to write me a Letter to the Master of the House at Frome, to inform me (if he could remember) who it was that reported this at his House. I did at Marlborough likewise speak with one Lewis, who did also inform me, "That about Two of the Clock the Day the Earl died, as he was riding up Husband's-Hill, (not far from Andover) he overtook a Gentleman, riding a very easy Traveller's page;

"pace; and as they were discoursing of the News in the Country, the Gentleman said, He had heard a Report of the Earl of Essex, that he cut his Throat in the Tower: But the Gentleman was altogether a Stranger to him, and therefore he could not inform me how or where to find him." With Burgis his Letter I was riding to Frome; but when I came within about six Miles of the Place, at a Town called Bradford, I stopt at an Inn-Door to drink a Glass of Cyder; upon which, one Beech an Attorney, (notorious in his Country and Generation) informed a Justice of Peace then there, That I looked like a disaffected Person, by wearing Band and Cuffs, and therefore in that dangerous Time I ought to be examined; upon which, the Justice came out to examine me, and there came with him one who knew me, so that the Justice seemed well satisfied: But Beech taking the Justice aside, tells him, That he ought to be more strict, and search me; for by my wearing Band and Cuffs, it was plain I was disaffected to the Government, (of this I have been often told by some then there;) upon which the Justice told me, He must search me. When I perceived this, I thought it proper to give the Justice a particular Account of the Occasion of my being in the Country, as also, what Papers I had about me; which Papers being read, after some Debate, and advising with Beech, he made a Warrant for my Commitment; the Form whereof, in the Conclusion, was the most illegal I ever saw.

The Warrant ran in these Words, viz.

Wilts. TO the Keeper of His Majesty's Goal of Fisherton-Anger, in this County, or his sufficient Deputy, These. I send you herewithal the Body of Laurence Braddon, apprehended in the Town of Bradford, in the County aforesaid, this present Two and twentieth Day of August, taken upon Suspicion of being a dangerous and ill-affected Person to the Government, and for refusing to give an account of his Business in these Parts, and for having Letters of dangerous Consequence about him. These are therefore in the King's Majesty's Name to will and Require you, That upon sight hereof, You receive him, the said Laurence Braddon, into your Goal, and him there safely keep, (not permitting him to have Pen, Ink, or Paper, or Person to converse or speak with him) until you shall receive further Orders from His Majesty and Privy-Council. Hereof you are not to fail at your Peril. Given under my Hand and Seal at Bradford, this 22d Day of August aforesaid, Anno Regni Caroli Secundi, Angl. &c. 35 Anno Dom. 1683.

It was long before I could prevail with the Justice to let me hear my Warrant read; but when I told him by the Statute I would have a Copy of it within six Hours after I was brought to Goal, he read it to me; finding the Conclusion to be so Arbitrary, I told him he could not justify his Warrant; which should the Jailor obey, I might be kept a close Prisoner during Life. For I was not to be admitted to Pen, Ink or Paper, or converse, till the Jailor heard from the King and Council, without which I must perish in Prison without Conviction or Trial: I told him, That all such Warrants of Commitment ought to conclude, till he be discharged by due Course of Law; but the Justice told me he would maintain the Legality of his Warrant. By Virtue of this Warrant I was carried to Wiltshire Goal (about 30 Miles distant from Bradford,) where I found the Keeper of more Sense or Honesty than either his Worship, or his Cabal; for there were several Attorneys in the Inn when I was examined; (with whom Mr. Justice advised) for the Goaler told me, that notwithstanding the strictness of my Commitment, I should discourse with whom I would, himself being by; and write to whom I would whilst he was present and saw it. Thanking my Keeper for this Civility, I did immediately demand a Copy of my Commitment, and writ to London for my Habeas Corpus thereupon, which within some short time I received, and was brought to London to be bailed; but all the Judges being out of Town, I was, according as the Statute herein directs, to be carried before my Lord-Keeper (North); but his Lordship ordered the Goaler to bring me before him at the Council that Afternoon; as soon as I appeared before his Lordship, my Lord seemed well pleased at a supposed, but mistaken Advantage he thought to have had against my Bail; for his Lordship smiling, told me, notwithstanding he did not expect that I should have had much regard to myself, yet he did believe I would have had that just respect to my Bail, as not to ruin them by those new Matters then to be laid to my Charge. To which I answered, I knew not wherein I had prejudiced my Bail, of whom the only thing required was my Appearance the then next Term, which (if God permit) I would do, and thereby indemnify them: No, replied his Lordship (smiling), the good Behaviour was likewise required; a notorious Breach whereof appears in these Matters you stand afresh charged with. I did humbly appeal to the Bonds themselves, and in the Condition there appeared the Omission before observed. For which his Lordship was very angry with Secretary Jenkins, who immediately transferred the Blame thereof to his Under-Secretary. When his Lordship found, that by his neglect my Bail was slept from his Hands, his Lordship was resolved to hold me fast enough; and therefore demanded Bonds with Sureties in Twelve Thousand Pounds, for my Appearance, and as much more Security for the good Behaviour. I did hereupon desire his Lordship, That he would consider the Statute upon which I then came to be Bailed; and, as that Statute required, his Lordship would consider my Quality, and the nature of my Offence: As for the first, I was a younger Brother, and my Father living; and as to the second, the pretended Crime, it was of the very same nature with that under which I stood bound with Sureties in Two Thousand Pound for my Appearance. My Lord Keeper replied, That according to the Statute, he did consider both my Condition and the Offence, and regulated his Demands accordingly; for had I been an Alderman of London, my Quality answerable to the Crime, for every Six Thousand Pound his Lordship would have demanded Twenty; so that then I must have given Eighty Thousand Pound Bonds in Bail and Suretiship; which (to the best of my remembrance) is twice as much as I ever yet heard demanded of any Nobleman in England, though under a Commitment of High-Treason. Whilst I was before the Council, I desired his Lordship, that some of those Witnesses might be sent for out of the Country where the Report was of the Earl's having cut his own Throat in the Tower, before his Lordship was dead: Upon which, one of the Lords of the Council (to the best of my remembrance, the now Marquiss of Halifax) said, This is just as it was in the Case of Sir Edmundbury Godfrey. But the Lord-Keeper, I found, would not send for Witnesses to prove what his Business was industriously and oppressively to stifle. Not being able to comply with these hard Terms, I was remanded to Wiltshire Goal: But that Night lying in Town, I read the Statute, and advised with some of my Friends, who found that the Good Behaviour could not be demanded, but that Bail to answer the Cause of Commitment, was all the Statute did require. I did therefore the next Morning desire my Keeper to carry me to his Lordship's House in Great-Queen-Street; and for the Reasons before observed, I did hope his Lordship would not insist either upon the Good Behaviour, or yet upon so great Bail. My Keeper accordingly carried me: But before his Lordship that time saw me, my Keeper did acquaint his Lordship with the Occasion of his bringing me once more before his Lordship. Upon which, the Lord-Keeper sent for me, and told me, That the Good Behaviour he neither did or could require; and if I would give Bail to answer my Commitment, I might have my Liberty. To which I replied, That in so large a Sum as was demanded, I could not; but in all would give Ten Thousand Pound Bail, which I hoped his Lordship would judge sufficient. His Lordship said, What was agreed upon at the Council, he could not there change: but my Keeper should bring me down that Afternoon to the Council; and if there it could be complied with, I should be bailed. That Afternoon I did accordingly attend the Council, where I found his Lordship's Mind changed, and returned to his first Demand, Twelve Thousand Pound for my Appearance, and Twelve Thousand Pound more for my Good Behaviour; notwithstanding that very Morning he had (as before) declared he could not by Law require it.

His Lordship did represent my Offence such as deserved the greatest Punishment, and told me, Such Practices might shorten my Days (or Words to that effect). I replied, That I was not conscious of my having done any thing which deserved a Prison, much less Death; but the manner of Death I did not fear; and if in the way of my Duty I met it, I could as cheerfully die at Tyburn in a Halter, as in my Bed of a Fever.

Having thus suffered in the defect of this Act, I cannot but here take notice of one great Omission in this Statute. This Act inflicts a Penalty of One Hundred Pound upon the Goaler that denies the Prisoner, or any on his behalf, a Copy of his Warrant; and Five Hundred Pound Penalty on every Judge that refuses to grant an Habeas Corpus upon the Statute, for the removal of such Prisoners; but inflicts no certain Penalty upon the refusal to bail the Prisoner that shall upon this Act be brought before them; so that if the Judge either demand Ten times more than the Quality of the Prisoner, or the Nature of the Offence requires, or refuse to take any Bail whatsoever, there can no Action of Five Hundred Pound for this refusal be brought, for no Penalty in this Case is enacted. It's very strange, that the Statute should lay so great Penalties upon the denial of the means of Bail, (viz.) the Copy of the Warrant, and Habeas Corpus; and yet not enact an express Penalty for refusal of the end, (viz.) Bailing the Prisoner; for what signifies either a Copy of the Commitment, or an Habeas Corpus thereupon, if Bail be not procured? This is the putting the Prisoner to a very fruitless Expence.

I must confess, seeing the Statute requires the Judge shall Bail the Prisoner, taking Recognizance with one or more Sureties, according to the Quality of the Person and Nature of the Offence, a Special Action of the Case lies against such Judge upon his refusal: But if there be little Damages sustained, as it may happen; for though one Judge refuse, another may grant the Prisoner his Liberty upon Bail, and consequently so proved, the Jury being sworn to go according to Evidence, as well in the Damages, as in the Matter directly in Issue, must go according to Proof unless they think the extravagant Verdicts of late Times, (which found One Hundred Thousand Pounds, where not one Farthing was proved) will excuse them, in giving Fifty times more than was sworn to be sustained. Few Words more in the Statute would, I humbly conceive, have sufficiently provided in this Case; for in the Statute, wherein it is said, That if the Judges shall deny any Writ of Habeas Corpus, by this Act required to be granted, being moved for as aforesaid, (it had been added, or shall refuse such Bail as the Quality of the Prisoner, and Nature of the Offence requires,) they shall severally forfeit to the Prisoner or Party grieved the Sum of Five Hundred Pound, to be recovered in manner aforesaid: These few Words would have given the Five Hundred Pound for refusal of Bail, as well as denying the Habeas Corpus; whereas without the like Clause, the Statute may (in effect) be daily evaded.—To return.

But now, instead of being sent back to Wiltshire, I was turned over to Mr. Atterbury the Messenger, where upwards of Five Weeks, I lay at no less Charge than 4*l.* and odd Money per Week directly, besides other collateral Expences; this being too great for my Fortune to comply with, I was advised to remove myself to the King's-Bench; but before-hand, to agree with the Marshal, upon Security, to have the Liberty of the Rules; this I did by a Friend, who told me, That upon giving the Marshal 2000*l.* Security for my faithful Imprisonment, and 5*s.* 3*d.* per Week Chamber-Rent, he had promised to allow me the Liberty of the Rules. Whereupon (after some Opposition) I removed myself; but the Marshal found false to his Promise, for he having got me into his Custody, demanded Two Men for my Security in 10,000*l.* a-piece, and 10*s.* 3*d.* per Week, Chamber-Rent, and then assured me, I should have the Liberty of the Rules. To these Terms (so much above our first Agreement) I submitted. But the Marshal the second time unjustly disappointed me; for under this Security and Chamber-Rent, I was ordered to be kept close Prisoner at no less Charge, than 2*l.* 5*s.* 3*d.* per Week; and under this strict Confinement, the Marshal refused to give me back my Security-

Bonds, which at last I was forced with Guineas to redeem. For this severe and unjust Usage, the Marshal pretended the special Order of the then Lord Chief Justice Jeffrey, before whom at the Kings-Bench-Bar, I was the then next Term bailed; after which, with all possible Industry and Diligence, I renewed my former Inquiries. But about the 12th of that November, I was taken up by the City-Marshal, by Virtue of a Warrant of the Lord-Mayor, or Court of Aldermen, as illegal in the Cause, as the other was in the Conclusion of the Commitment: for the only Cause (if it can properly be so called) in the Warrant, was, My being suspected to be Disaffected to the Government; finding the Words so general, and not one particular Instance to justify that Suspicion of Disaffection, I could at first give no probable guess at the Information. By the City-Marshal I was carried before Sir James Edwards, and after that, the then Lord-Mayor, before whom I refused to answer such general Questions as were asked, without seeing my Accuser, and hearing my Accusation; but I soon found what was the Pretence of my Commitment, which I had grounds to suspect, was designed to be stretched to the highest Offence, nothing less than Treason; for I was charged with bespeaking several Hundreds of the Protestant-Flails, with a Design therewith to massacre the King's (then called) Loyal Subjects. Refusing to answer the Lord-Mayor's Questions, I was committed to Captain Richardson, who was ordered forthwith to carry me before the King and Counsel; as soon as I came there, my old Friend, the Lord Keeper North, began to interrogate me in several Particulars; but I refused to answer any, till I saw my Accuser, and heard my Accusation; his Lordship told me, my not answering that Honourable Board was a Contempt, for which I might be prosecuted. To which I replied with Submission, 'I did not understand I was obliged, in strictness of Law, to answer to any Accusation, till I came judicially to be tried, where I should both see the Accuser, and hear my Accusation.' At length the King ordered my Accuser to be called in, whose Charge (in Substance) was this, (viz.) That such a time, about four Years and a half before, I came to his Shop, and bespoke a Pocket-Flail; which by Description, I did order him to make; the next Day after I bespoke three more, which I was to fetch the third Day. And did likewise declare, He should make me several Hundreds, but I came not according to my Promise for either of the three, or did he make any of that Number I pretended to bespeak. That I did bespeak one, and the next Day three, I did confess to be true, and likewise fetched one of the three the third Day; but these not being made according to Direction, I would not have the other two. As for the Five Hundred, or any such Number I should bespeak, I did declare, (a the Truth was) that Part of the Charge was very Malicious and False. Major Richardson being then there, as foolishly as maliciously endeavoured to frustrate my Defence; for he told His Majesty, the true Cause I came not according to my Promise for any of that great Number I had bespoke, he would give His Majesty. For Captain Richardson declared, 'That almost three Years before, he had been in that Turner's Shop, where seeing one of those Instruments (it being the first that he ever saw) he demanded of the Turner what he called them; who answered, A Pocket-Flail.' And then further told him, 'That the Gentleman for whom he made the first above a Year before, pretended he would then have several Hundreds made, and bespoke three Flails after the first, but came not for either of the three, or any of that Number which he pretended he did want.' Captain Richardson declared upon this, 'He did believe there was a general Design against the Government, and therefore he did Charge the Turner, That if the Gentleman came according to his Promise, he should endeavour to secure him; which Caution he did suppose I had heard of, and therefore came not according to my Promise.' Of this most ridiculous Suggestion, I took immediate Advantage, and told his Majesty what the Captain alledged, could not possibly be true, even by his own Suggestion. For he confessed, That the Turner told him when he first saw the Flail, that I had bespoke a great Number above a Year before, and was forthwith to have fetched one of them, but came not according to my Appointment; and yet the Captain alledged, 'That his Caution so long after given, did influence my not coming a Year and a half before. Immediately upon this, the King saw this Charge mixt with such Folly and Falshood, that His Majesty thought fit to order my immediate Discharge. As soon as I came into the Room next the Council, Captain Richardson took me by the Hand, and protested he was extremely glad I was discharged; but considering his good Service, in just before endeavouring to prevent it, I gave little Credit to this Assurance. Being once more at Liberty, I continued, as before, my Enquiries, in which I was daily hurried up and down; for having made it my Business to get the Names of most of the Soldiers upon Duty that Day my Lord was murdered, I was in a constant Enquiry after some of them; for I had Reason by some Information I had received, to believe that not a few could speak not only to the throwing out of the Bloody Razor, but to that which was more material, the sending in the Russians to my Lord, and from whom those Villains went commissioned. But as I spoke with any of those Soldiers, I perceived them very shy, and denied to me, what they had before freely confessed to their intimate Acquaintance; and afterwards told their Friends, they would not be brought into Trouble, by testifying their Knowledge therein, which they knew would most certainly prove their Ruin.

Whilst I was Prisoner in the King's Bench, I (with the rest of the King's Prisoners) was several times search'd; but having still notice some short time before such Search, I conveyed away such Papers, as being seized, might have tended to my Prejudice. But in such hurries, I lost a List of such Names that could have declared that which was not a little material to this Discovery.

In Hillary Term 83, Mr. Speke and myself were tried upon an Information; the Substance whereof was, 'That whereas Arthur late Earl of Essex, the 13th of July, (being Prisoner in the Tower for High-Treason) himself feloniously, and as a Felon of himself, did Kill and Murder, and the Day after, was by the Coroner's Inquest so found; The said Laurence Braddon and Hugh Speke, well knowing hereof, but contriving, and maliciously the Government of our said Lord the King, of this Kingdom of England, into hatred, disgrace and contempt to bring, &c. did falsely, unlawfully, maliciously, and seditiously Conspire, and endeavour to make the King's Subjects believe, that the said Coroner's Inquisition was unduly taken, and that the said Arthur Earl of Essex, by certain Persons unknown, IN WHOSE CUSTODY HE WAS, was killed and murdered; in order to which they the said Laurence Braddon and Hugh Speke, did falsely, unlawfully, unjustly, maliciously, and seditiously Conspire to procure certain false Witnesses to prove, that the said Arthur Earl of Essex, by the said Persons unknown, was killed and murdered.'

Observe, The Information doth not Charge us, or either of us, with conspiring, or endeavouring to Suborn false Witnesses; because to prove that, some Money, or other Consideration must have been prov'd offered, or promised; which they being not able to prove, the Information saith we did Conspire to procure false Witnesses. And yet, because Subornation would represent the Matter most odious, in the Title Page of the Trial, it was expressed, Upon an Information of High Misdemeanour, Subornation, and spreading false News.

This Information charges Mr. Speke and myself with falsely, unlawfully, maliciously and seditiously endeavouring to procure false Witnesses to prove, That (the Right Honourable) Arthur, late Earl of Essex, was killed and murdered by Persons unknown, in whose Custody he was; but to destroy this conspired Charge of Mr. Speke, and myself, against those in whose Custody my Lord was (at the time of his Death), the then Attorney-General tells the Court, That they would give an Account of the Earl's Death, how he murdered himself, and for that they had a CLOUD OF WITNESSES. But when this Cloud appear'd, it consisted in Major Hawley (at whose House my Lord was murdered,) Russell the Warden (who then kept the Chamber-door,) Bomeney my Lord's Servant (then attending on his Lordship,) and Lloyd the Sentinel (who kept the outward-door whilst my Lord was murdered.) Here are Three (Monday being the 4th) of the Men in whose Custody my Lord was, and consequently (according to the Information), the very Men Mr. Speke, and myself had conspired to charge with my Lord's Murder; and these very Men, in whose Custody my Lord was, were like a Cloud of Witnesses brought to prove, that those Men, in whose Custody my Lord was, did not murder his Lordship, but that the Earl himself, feloniously, and as a Felon of himself, did kill and murder.

How very ridiculous would it have looked, should the then Court, or King's Counsel, have thus spoke to those Three Witnesses, (viz.) Gentlemen, YOU (being three of the Men in whose Custody my Lord was at the time of his Death) are designed to be charged by the Defendants Speke and Braddon, with the Murder of my Lord; but WE have thought it convenient and JUST by YOU to prove, that YOURSELVES did not murder this unfortunate Lord, but that this Lord himself feloniously, and as a Felon of himself, did kill and murder, as UPON ONLY SOME OF YOUR DEPOSITIONS he hath been already found by the Coroner's Inquisition. Do YOU therefore upon Oath but purge YOURSELVES, and lay this Murder to your Lord's own Door, and WE will inflict exemplary Punishment upon these Defendants, whose Conspiracy tended to the charging YOU as Actors in it, or Priory therunto.

I do humbly conceive, That all this was virtually included in the Examination of those Witnesses, whose Oaths were not only admitted to purge themselves, but to render such as Criminals as should endeavour to charge them. Should the like be practised in protection of all accused (I am well satisfied) no Man will turn Accuser.

If any shall say, THESE (being the Men attending on my Lord at the time of his Death, and his Lordship then a close Prisoner) are the Persons to be presumed privy to what was done BY his Lordship just before his Death, and therefore the Parties which as to that could be sworn.

I answer, As they were THE MEN which were to be presumed privy to what was done BY his Lordship just before his Death, because they were the Persons whose Stations were so near his Lordship, for this very Reason they were THE PARTIES which were likewise to be supposed privy to what was done TO HIS LORDSHIP just before his Death; and therefore admitting that his Lordship fell by Treachery and Violence, these were THE MEN must be presumed consulant thereof. Wherefore these Men's Testimony being in effect a Self-discharge, ought not here to have been admitted.

With all Submission to that great Justice, Judgment and Policy, which drew and managed this Information against Mr. Speke, and myself, I think herein the Managers of this Prosecution extremely failed in their Proof; for Mr. Speke and myself, being accused with falsely, &c. conspiring to charge those in whose Custody my Lord was, with murdering my Lord; The Duty incumbent on the then King's (or rather DUKE's) Counsel was to prove, That we, or one of us, did use indirect Means, by Bribes, Threats, or the like, to procure those False Witnesses; and this (or whatever else was brought to prove this Information) ought to have been deposed not by such as appeared in Court (in effect) with Halberds about their Necks to swear for their OWN Lives; being virtually told, This do, and you shall live; but in the Day ye fail thereof, ye shall surely die: But this Information ought to have been testified by Men who stood recti in Curia, which were neither themselves to be hanged for murdering my Lord, provided they would not (by consequence) prove he did murder himself; or to be not only saved, but well rewarded in case they did (though contradictorily) confirm the same.

As for all those Witnesses which were produced against us, to prove any Bribes, or the like, I do suppose Prejudice itself will not pretend to say, That by the Trial (which none can believe Sir George

That Nation is happy whose Government answers the true end of Governors, (viz. To be Terrors to Evil-doers, and a Praise to those that do well; but when once this end is inverted, and Justice (or rather that which a Corrupt Court falsely calls so) becomes a SCREEN to Malefactors, and Punishment inflicted on those who would punish them, then is that Kingdom in a much worse Condition than it could be by the State of Nature. For Justice thus corrupted, would prove as fatal to the Body Politick, as the poisoning all Drugs, Simples, &c. would to the Body Natural.

This by the perversion of all Law and Justice would probably have proved our general Fate, had not God (in Mercy) by our present Sovereign, removed the Source hereof.-----But to return;

Upon my Trial, I did expect all that the most inveterate and malicious Rage could utter, and therefore was not surprized with all that Fury and unjust Inveteracy that appeared in the Court; especially the MOUTH thereof; for in the midst of his Rage, when I was falsely represented under the most odious Character, worse than a Common Robber, or Burglar, (for these Men's Crimes tended only to a private Mischief, but mine to a general Confusion;) I could not forbear smiling upon the then remembrance of this Story. A Neighbour of mine, whom long since I knew in the Country, an illiterate plain Country Farmer, who had a Wife of as violent Spirit as liv'd; and one Day she came into the Room where her Husband was (with several Neighbours); as soon as she came, tho' there was not, or it seems had been, the least colour for Provocation, for he still carried himself well towards her, she flies into the greatest Rage imaginable, calling him all the Names that Malice could invent, or Rage could utter; and had she not been prevailed upon might have done him some Mischief. The Husband in the midst of this great Storm, well knowing all to be false with which the Fury of his Wife had charged him, stood as a Man altogether unconcern'd, and appeared rather pleasant than displeased. One of his Neighbours then ask'd him, How it was possible for him, so to receive the scurrilous and bitter Railing of that furious Woman? To which the Husband smiling, calmly replied, That his Wife talked of a Man he did not know; and therefore, what Reason had he to be concern'd, when he was not the Person she spoke of, &c. I did ask my Conscience, an Infallible Evidence, according to the Truth, to condemn or acquit, whether I was this profligate Villain his Lordship did so infamously characterize; and I found that impartial Judge (by whose Sentence at the last Day I shall stand or fall) did acquit me from that Crime, which his Lordship's Corruption against his Belief unjustly charged me with; and therefore I thought I might well say to myself, as that honest Country-Fellow did to his Neighbours, I am not the Man thus railed at; but his Lordship reviled a Man I was not acquainted with, or knew, and therefore stood very much unconcerned at whatsoever his Lordship's corrupt virulence falsely and maliciously (in suberviency to that bloody Design that committed the Murder), without the least colour of Crime applied to me, who was as innocent of the Offence, as of the far-fetched strained and groundless Aggravations. Let any impartial Man read the Trial, and well observe what is sworn, if in the Evidence he find the least appearance of an Offence, I dare suffer what I have already undergone; but if Men will take the malicious and groundless Insinuations of a Time-serving, Mercenary Counsel, &c. or the corrupt Charge of as corrupt a Judge for Evidence, they will find me painted in the worst of Colours: I did not expect that my Innocence would prove my Protection against these unjust and violent Proceedings, and therefore I might have saved myself, and Friends the trouble of a Defence; and with that Welchman, who sleeping at the Bar, whilst the Evidence in a Capital Crime was swearing against him; and being awaked by his Friends, and advised to prepare for his Defence, starts up, and rubs his Eyes, saying, If they have a mind to hang him, they will hang him whether he make his defence or no.-----But desiring in some measure to satisfy the World that there were strong grounds to believe this unfortunate Lord was treacherously butchered, I thought it proper to produce some Witnesses in order thereunto; but when I found that some of these so produced, were so brow-beaten by the King's Counsel, and saw that they were afraid to testify the Truth, and upon Oath denied what I knew to be true, I thought it convenient not to produce many of these whom I had subpoena'd, because they should not be baffled, and spoiled by the Court; for should any of these Witnesses upon Oath (through fear) have denied what they knew to be true, and afterwards (when Truth in this Case became not Criminal, which I did still believe I should live to see) testify the very Truth, their former Denial would be produced to invalidate their after Testimony, and so their Credit be destroyed.

As soon as the great Counsel against me came into Court that Morning I was tried, before ever the Information was read, he told me he would do my Business; upon which I desired he would have the patience to tarry till the Jury had done it to his Hands; to which he replied, he did not doubt them; and I found by woful experience he had no reason; for the Jury, without the least Proof, found me guilty of the whole Matter charged upon me in the Information, and the Defendant Hugh Speke, guilty of all but the conspiring to procure False Witnesses, and of that they found him Not guilty.

In this Verdict I stand only guilty (could such a thing be possible) of a Conspiracy to procure False Witnesses. It was never before known that one only could commit a Conspiracy. For the Notion of a Conspiracy I take to be the combining together of two or more to do that which is ill. But when Falshoods are to pass for Truths, Contradictions must be admitted for Sense; & quod fieri non debet factum valet. Upon this Verdict Mr. Speke was fined 1000*l.* and because (the Court said I) was the greatest Criminal, my Fine was 2000*l.* and both ordered to give Security during Life.

But Mr. Attorney-General at the Trial was pleased otherwise to express it; for Sir Robert Sawyer tells the Court, They need but read Mr. Speke's Letter, and they would find it ten Times worse than what Mr.

Braddon had done. For which his Lordship seemed very angry with the Attorney-General, and told him, None should appear so great an Actor in the Business as myself.

His Lordship's Behaviour at this Trial was so very remarkable, that (as I have been informed by several) he was scarce ever seen more passionately to express himself. And though my Trial shews great Bitterness of Expression, yet it is not printed in all its Parts as it was spoke, but some of the Billinggate Railing left out; yet such as it is, by his Lordship's Authority published (I do humbly conceive) there have few, if any, Trials being stuff'd with such foul-mouth'd Invectives. But his Lordship in this was to act counter to his Title; for though the Duty of his Place required his greatest Encouragement to the Detection of Blood, and the Punishment of such vile Offenders, at this Trial his Business was quite different: For (as I have been long since informed) one Day, not long after my Trial, his Lordship having drank very freely, upon some Discourse with relation to the Earl's Death, a Gentleman took then an Occasion to tell his Lordship, That my Trial was excellently well managed by his Lordship and the whole Court. To which his Lordship made answer to this effect, (viz.) That though he was well satisfied the Earl of Essex was murdered, his Business was to stifle it. This Gentleman is altogether averse from betraying the common Rules of Conversation; by appearing as an Informer or Evidence, in judicially exposing what passed over a Glass of Wine; Whether the effects of Wine in this verified the Proverb (In vino veritas;) I knew not: But it appeared notorious to Persons unprejudiced, that there was just ground to believe his Lordship's Corruption did herein endeavour to stifle what his Love (had he any) to Justice in the Duty of his Place, should have zealously strove to detect.

Under this Fine I lay Prisoner for about five Years: But about August 1687, Graham and Burton came over to the King's-Bench to treat with several of the King's Prisoners, in order to their Discharge; and they brought with them a List of such Prisoners; in which List perceiving my Name the ONLY Name crossed, I did enquire how my Name became so marked; To which I was answered, That as soon as His (then) Majesty had seen my Name, he called for a Pen and Ink, and with his own Hand crossed it; by which I perceived I was designed for Judgment not Mercy; and upon Application was so told; for I was informed, that no Man was more obnoxious to His Majesty than myself, who was the only Person that ever cast Blood in his Face: But if his own Conscience by a just Application threw it there, I could not help that; I am sure they that said it, talked without Book; for nothing at my Trial, or at any time after proved against me, made any such thing appear. I must confess, several Witnesses at my Trial subpoena'd, could have mentioned somewhat with Relation to his (then) Highness's Guilt in this Matter; but I found it was a Truth too hot, which that Court would not hear, and therefore thought it not proper to call them, but left them till such a Season, wherein Truth in this Matter should not be prosecuted as the highest Offence.

And this brings me to the Proofs that have in this Case been taken before the late Right Honourable Committee of Lords. But before I do begin with the Evidence, it may not be amiss to give some short Account how this Case came before that Right Honourable House, where it was occasionally brought, upon the Motion of the Right Honourable the Lord Lucas, then Governor of the Tower.

For the Day before the Convention sat, (viz.) the 21st of February 1683, having a Warrant against several as suspected privy to, or concerned in the Murder of this Honourable Patriot; and amongst the rest, against Major Hawley, at whose House my Lord was murdered, and Ruffel the Warder before-mentioned; both which belonged to the Tower: I desired a Friend of mine to acquaint the honourable Governor therewith, so that these Persons might be secured. As soon as the Lord Lucas saw the Warrant against these two, he did order them both to be secured; and the next Day there were several Depositions, with relation to my Lord's Murder, taken before Justice Robins, who that very Day carried Copies of them to my Lord Lucas; upon which his Lordship the very next Day moved the House of Lords for their Lordship's Directions as to the disposal of Hawley and Ruffel, and thereupon produced these Informations Mr. Robins had before brought him. Upon reading of these, the House entered into a Debate of the Matter, and then called me before their Lordships, before whom I gave a short Account of what is as before most materially mentioned. After which, their Lordships constituted a more general Committee.

This Committee having several times met, there was a close Committee appointed; the Order for which followeth:

The Order for the Close Committee.

Die Martis, 5 Februarii 1683.

LORDS Committees appointed by the House to be a Close Committee to examine and take Informations concerning the Death of the late Earl of Essex, and have Power to send for and examine what Persons they please, and such Affidavits, as have been already made in this Business; as also for what other they please, in order to give their Lordships further Light therein, whose Lordships are to make a Report thereof to the House.

*E. Bedford.
E. Devonshire.
L. Viscount Mordant.
L. Delamere.*

Whole Lordships are to meet when, and where, and as often as they please.

Before this Right Honourable Committee, there have been above 60 Persons examined of which most were examined upon Oath, and many of these several times before this Committee, which in all have sat above 30 times, and several times, adjourn'd when other extraordinary Occasions hinder'd their Lordships from taking the Depositions of such as then attended to be examined.

mined. In May last, three of the four Lords of this Committee, (viz.) the Earl of Devon, the Earl of Monmouth, and the Lord Delamere, being commanded by His Majesty into the Country, the Earl of Devon (being Chairman of this Honourable Committee), the 22d of May brought such Depositions and Examinations as in this Case had been taken, into the House: But the House not having time that Day to read them, it was deferred till the then next Day. Upon the reading of them (it appearing that the Earl of Devon, the Earl of Monmouth, and the Lord Delamere were absent in His Majesty's Service, for the Earl of Devon that very Morning went into the Country,) their Lordships thought fit to suspend the full Examination of the Matter, till these three Lords returned. This appears by the Order following.

Die Jovis, 23 Maii, 1689.

AFTER reading several Papers and Depositions relating to the Death of the late Earl of Essex, it is ordered by the Lords Spiritual and Temporal in Parliament assembled, That the Considerations of this Business shall be suspended, until the return of the Lord Steward, the Earl of Monmouth, and the Lord Delamere, who were of the Committee before whom they were made, and who are now in the Country in His Majesty's Service. And it is further Ordered, That the said Depositions and Papers shall be sealed up, and kept by the Clerk of the Parliament in the mean time.

John Browne,
Cleric' Parliamentor'.

These Depositions lay sealed up with the Clerk of the Parliament till the 26th Day of October, when their Lordships of the first Committee moved for reviving the Committee; which the House revived by this Order.

Die Sabbati, 26 Octobris 1689.

ORDERED by the Lords Spiritual and Temporal in Parliament assembled, That the Committee appointed on the 5th Day of February, to take Informations concerning the Death of the late Earl of Essex, be, and is hereby revived, to continue and sit as before.

John Browne,
Cleric' Parliamentor'.

Several other Persons were now examined before their Lordships, who having finished their Examinations, they began to reduce those Depositions and Examinations into such order, as to their Lordships should seem most meet; but this was hardly finished before the 27th Day of January, when the last Parliament was prorogued, and the 6th of February dissolved, and consequently all Proceedings hereupon stopt till their Lordships shall think fit to revive the Committee in order to bring in their Report.

The Substance of what hath been deposed before the Honourable Lords of the late Committee, and some Justices of the Peace, I shall, in as short an Abstract as I can well reduce it, here give you; in which I shall observe, for the most part, as it falls in order of time; and first, what passed before my Lord's Murder; secondly, the Day of his Death; thirdly, after the Day of his Death.

As to the first, before my Lord's Murder; it is deposed by Dorothy Smith to this effect: "That about nine Days before my Lord's Death, being Servant with one Holmes in Baldwins-Gardens, and standing upon the Kitchen-Stairs, she heard several Papists discoursing (in the Parlour of the said Mr. Holmes's House) concerning the taking of the Earl of Essex; and it was then and there declared, That they had been with his Highness, and His Highness was first for poisoning the said Earl; but that manner of Death being objected against, it was proposed to his Highness, That the Earl should be stabbed; but this manner likewise not being thought proper, His Highness had concluded and ordered his Throat to be cut; and his Highness had promised to be there when it was done. About three Days after this, (viz.) about six Days before the Earl's Death, some of the aforesaid Persons met again at her said Master's House, where she heard them declare to this effect, That they had resolved the Earl's Throat should be cut; but they would give it out, That he had done it himself; and if any should deny it, they would take them up, and punish them for it. This Informant being hereupon much troubled in her Mind, and willing to prevent (if possible) this intended Mischief, did hereupon advise with one Mr. Billinger, who before that time had been her Master; but the said Mr. Billinger told her to this effect: That if she valued her Life, she should not discover it to any; for the Papists then carrying all before them, she was ruined if she did. Wherefore she did not before my Lord's Death (to her Remembrance) discover it to any other, unless she might to Mrs. Billinger, in which she can't be positive: But the Day of my Lord's Death, about Two or Three of the Clock the same Day, some of the aforesaid Consult coming to her said Master Holmes's House, one leap'd about the Room as extremely over-joy'd, and strikes the said Mr. Holmes on the Back, and cried, The Feat was done, or, we have done the Feat; And further said, He could not but laugh to think how like a Fool the Earl of Essex look'd when they came to cut his Throat. She further saith, That about five Years since, living with Mr. Rowden of the Old-Exchange, she was willing to discover what she had as before heard, to her said Master and Mistress, and Daughter; but her said Master Rowden was not free to hear all she could say with relation hereunto, but advised her to hold her Peace; for by such her Discourse she might ruin Him and all his Family." This is further confirmed by the Oath of Mr. Rowden, Mrs. Rowden, and Mrs. Mary Rowden: And Mrs. Rowden doth further depose to this effect; (viz.) "That the said Dorothy Smith hath some Years since with great Concern declared, that she did hope to live to see the Day wherein she might fully testify her Knowledge herein; and this she would do, when she might without Danger." Mr. Adams and his Wife have deposed to this effect: "That November last was two Years, this Dorothy lived with them as their Servant; and in Tears hath often declared her over-hearing the Papists consult of my Lord of Essex's Murder several Days before his Death, and by whose Order the Earl was to be murdered: But these Informants knowing the Danger of such Discourse (the late King James being then in so great Power) did advise her, for her own Safety, and the Safety of those she lived with, not thus to discourse: But the said Dorothy in Tears did usually answer, That it lay upon her Mind Night and Day, and she could not be quiet in her Thoughts, that the Earl of Essex should be falsely charged with cutting his own Throat, when she had heard the Papists Resolution to cut it themselves, and after own they had done it. And if ever she might with Safety testify the Truth here-in, she would; and did hope those Men that did it, might suffer for it." Richard May deposeth to this Effect: "That (to the best of this Informant's Remembrance) before the Death of King Charles the Second, observing Dorothy Smith to be very melancholy, he desired to know the Cause; upon which she said, That somewhat which she knew, with relation to the Death of the late Earl of Essex, was the Cause of her Trouble; and it was not safe for her to reveal it to any. Upon which this Informant advised her then to be silent in the Matter. But about the Beginning of February, after our now King's coming, finding it safe for the said Dorothy Smith herein to declare her Knowledge, this Informant went to the said Dorothy Smith, and told her, She might now safely speak what she knew as to my Lord's Death; upon which, the said Dorothy Smith told this Informant, How she had heard the Papists several Days before my Lord's Death, declare How the Earl's Throat was to be cut, and by Whom ordered, (with several Particulars in relation thereunto;) upon which, this Informant discovered this to Mr. William Tournay, who thereupon told this Informant he would reveal this to Mr. Brad-don, then upon the Prosecution of my Lord's Murder; and some short time after, Mr. Tournay told this Informant, That he had therewith acquainted Mr. Brad-don, and desired this Informant, with the said Dorothy Smith, to meet the said Mr. Brad-don, and the said Mr. Tournay, such a time, at the Cross-Keys in Watling-street, where they met accordingly: But when Mr. Brad-don had been particularly informed herein by the said Dorothy Smith, the said Mr. Brad-don declared, That unless the said Dorothy could make it appear, That she had long since revealed this, he would esteem it as a new-made Story and a Lye. Upon which, the said Dorothy mentioned the Names of several to whom she declared she had long since revealed it; but by all was enjoined to Secrecy."

Mr. William Tournay hath likewise deposed what herein relates to him. And I am ready to depose, That I never heard of this Dorothy Smith, till Mr. Tournay, about February last was Twelve Month, informed me of her; and I never, to my Remembrance, saw the said Dorothy Smith, till the said Mr. May had, as before, brought her to the Cross-Keys in Watling-street, where I first discoursed her in the Presence of Mr. May, Mr. Tournay, and another. Here are five or six Witnesses prove the very Substance of this Evidence, revealed some Years since, when it was little less than Death to discourse it, which clearly proves it is not a new-made Story, and strongly argues the Truth of the Relation; for it can hardly be supposed, that this Woman should often, under the greatest Concern and Danger imaginable, declare any thing of this Nature, unless the Relation was really true; Because she could (rationally) then propose no Advantage by this Invention; but was still told, and convinced of the Danger. Wherefore it is rational to suppose, that only the Power of Truth moved her to declare what she so often in Tears related. But as a further Argument of the Truth of this Deposition, I shall briefly relate what Informations have been taken in Contradiction to this Relation, and how these Informations have been detected as false in every Particular, which corroborates the Truth of the Accusation: For as a true Defence detects and frustrates a false Charge; so a false Defence (being discovered to be such) as strongly strengthens a true one. The Depositions in opposition to Smith's Evidence, were, Dorothy Hewit's, a most violent Papist, who the 9th of April 1689, before Mr. Justice Dolben, deposed, "That in April before my Lord of Essex's Death, the said Dorothy Smith was turned away from Mr. Holmes's upon Suspicion of having stolen a Silver Spoon; and that from April 1683, to nine Months next after, one Elizabeth Christopher, then Elizabeth Cadman, was Servant to the said Mr. Holmes, and no other Maid-Servant in all that mean time."

Elizabeth Christopher (of a very loose Character), who in this particular upon Oath, the 9th Day of April 1689, before Mr. Justice Dolben, confirms Hewit's Testimony; but that these two are Forsworn, appears by many Depositions. For,

It's proved by Robert Bond, that Dorothy Smith did not go to Mr. Holmes's Service, till the beginning of June 1683, and that Green Beans were fit to be eat, before she left that Service in which she lived, just before she went to Holmes's House.

It's further proved by five Witnesses, that Dorothy Smith Eliz. Morris, Anne Dupuis, Catbarine Colabam, Corab Douthwait, and Robert Bond was Servant at this Holmes's, when Green-Peas were very plenty and cheap, (which is naturally evident it must be the latter end of June, or sometime in July, which is about two Months after Hewit swore Dorothy Smith was turned away); and it's positively sworn by one, that Dorothy Smith was Servant in Holmes's House in July 1683, after the Death of the late Earl of Essex; and this Informant remembers the time, by a very remarkable Particular. So that here are five or six Depositions in Contradiction to Hewit's and Christopher's Evidence, which was designed to destroy the Credit of Dorothy Smith's Testimony; but this Opposition, thus detected, adds Strength to what it was designed to prejudice. But it was further sworn by Hewit, that the 6th of July 1683, (which was the Friday in the Week before my Lord's Death) she went with the said Mr. Holmes into the Country, and the first Night lay at Wickham in Buckinghamshire, the next Night at Oxford, and continued there till the 9th; and the 9th, this Informant went with the said Mr. Holmes to Alderminster in the County of Worcester, to the House of one Mr. Nathanael Swan, Minister of the said Town, and continued there till the 23d of the said Month of July, and then returned, &c.

Nathanael Swan, Clerk, deposeth before Mr. Justice Dolben the 9th of April 1689, "That about the 9th of July 1683, Hewit and Holmes came "came to his House in Alderminster, and continued there till about the 23d.

This last Information is of little force (tho' the Parson designed well) for it swears, about such a time Holmes came to his House, and about such a time went away; but about makes the time very uncertain.

This was designed to destroy that part of Dorothy Smith's Testimony, which declares Holmes in Town the Day my Lord was murdered.

When I found Mr. Holmes endeavoured to prove (as before sworn by Hewit) himself out of Town, from the 6th of July 1683, to the 26th or 27th of the same Month; I did endeavour to inquire out of all such, as either Mr. Holmes, or Mrs. Hewit were well known to, or traded with; and therefore I made inquiry after those with whom (in that Month and Year) they Bought of, or Sold to, all Shopkeepers, Taylors, Butchers, Fishmongers, Shoemakers, Hatters, &c. and such as upon inquiry I received such Characters of, as I might expect fair Satisfaction from, I did desire to see their Books in that Month of July, to see whether any Goods were bought in Town by the said Mr. Holmes, or Mrs. Hewit, (for proving Hewit in Town, proves Holmes likewise in Town, because it's sworn, and can be proved, they both went out of Town together) or any Money paid between the 6th and 26th of July, by either of these. After a very long and tedious Inquiry (all those Tradesmen being altogether strangers to me), I providentially met with one Mr. Wellstead, who very readily shewed his Book, wherein is entred according to his Information, which followeth:

John Wellstead of St. Dunstan's in the West, London, declareth, and is ready to depose, "That in July 1683, he lived in Poppin's Alley, nigh Fleet-street, very near Mrs. Dorothy Hewit, and often wrought for the said Mrs. Hewit; and between Monday the 9th of July 1683, and Monday the 16th Day of the same Month and Year, this Informant made, or caused to be made, a Duff-Gown for the said Mrs. Hewit, as appears by this Informant's Book, ready to be produced; and the very same Week, (viz.) between Monday the 9th of July 1683, and Monday the 16th of the same Month and Year (but in the very Day this Informant is not certain,) this Informant carried the said Gown to the said Mrs. Hewit, who did then pretend she was about going into the Country; but how long after the Duff-Gown so delivered, the said Mrs. Hewit did go into the Country, this Informant knoweth not."

This Book hath not been of any use to Mr. Wellstead for almost five Years, and it was a very great Providence this had not been torn out, seeing the Book for some Years had been used as waste Paper, and the very next Leaf to this torn out, and lost. As soon as Mrs. Hewit understood such a Taylor's Entry was against her Oath, she, with Mr. Holmes's Wife, went to this Taylor, and desired to see his Book; which being shewed, Hewit first pretended that this Entry was forged, and new; but Mr. Wellstead declared he could safely, and would depose, That the Entry was real; it was then pretended, that the Gown was sent into the Country after Mrs. Hewit; but when, in answer to that, Mr. Wellstead declared he could depose, That Mrs. Hewit was in Town when the Duff-Gown was made and delivered, and that she then pretended she was about going into the Country; (but how many Days after she did go he could not tell) Mrs. Hewit told him, if he did swear that, he would take off her Brother's Life, and Holmes's Blood would be upon his head.

Some time after my Lord's Murder, this Holmes abusing his Wife, she told him, He was a murderous Rogue, and he well knew she could hang him when she pleased. To which Holmes answered, That he little thought she would have spoken of it, who of all the World had the least Reason: For said this scurrilous Fellow, You Bitch, you Whore, Don't you remember I bought you a good Sattin Gown and Petticoat, and therefore you above all the World ought not to prate. But she replied, He was a murderous Rogue for all that.

I have been the more large and particular in this Evidence, as well because it hath met with such villainous Opposition by false Oaths, as for that it alone proves by what Party, and by whose Order this Unfortunate Lord was treacherously murdered.

The next thing previous to my Lord's Murder, are the several Reports in many Places in England (before my Lord's Death, or before it could be known) that the Earl of Essex had cut his Throat in the Tower. This is proved by Eight Witnesses. It is as to this sworn "That Mr. Hubland, "at Frome (which is about 100 Miles from London) it was Merch. "reported the very next Morning after my Lord's Com-

Mrs. Hubland. "mitment to the Tower (viz.) the 11th of July 1683, that Mrs. Meux. "the Earl of Essex had cut his Throat in the Tower:"
Treherne. "And this Informant, the Week after my Lord's Death, Jr. Burgess. "meeting the Gentleman which had before given him this Tho. Feiler. "Information, and desiring to know how before my Lord's — Savage. "Death he could declare it; the other replied, That all Men Mr. Butler. "concluded my Lord would either cut his Throat or turn Evidence against his Friend my Lord Ruffel; but it was generally believed that my Lord would rather destroy himself, than be made a Witness.

This Report so far off the very next Morning after my Lord's Commitment, proves the Tower to be the Place (before my Lord's Commitment) pitched upon as the most proper for this perfidious Tragedy.

But the very next Day (viz.) the Wednesday after my Lord's Commitment, was it reported about 60 Miles off, that the Earl of Essex had cut his Throat in the Tower for this Reason, (viz.) The King and Duke coming into the Tower to view the Tower, the Earl of Essex was afraid the King would have come up into his Chamber, and seen him; but his Guilt and Shame was such, that he could not bear the Thoughts of it, and therefore cut his Throat to avoid it.

Observe in this previous Report sixty Miles from London, the next Day after my Lord's Commitment, the very pretended Reason for the Self-murder is given; which Reason carries in it an Accident that could never be before reported, or indeed expected, but by those which were the most secret in this Treacherous Cruelty; for herein is it said, the Wednesday before the King and Duke went to the Tower, that the King and Duke were in the Tower when the Earl cut his Throat, &c. It is notorious that the King and Duke did not go till Friday Morning, and their then going was a Surprise to their very Guards, for it seems they had not been there together above once since the Restauration. In short, The several Reports proved by Eight Witnesses, all agree in the manner how, and place where; and one more particularly sets forth the pretended Reason wherefore. I do therefore humbly submit to every impartial Reader, whether these very Reports do not strongly prove, That the manner, place, and pretended reason, were all agreed upon before this barbarous complicated Tragedy was acted. For otherwise, how could it possibly be so particularly related so far off, and so long before it was done?

Vol. III.

I shall in the 2d Place observe what passed in the Day of my Lord's Murder, which proves his Death to be such.

Bomeney and Ruffel before-mention'd, did before the Coroner's Jury upon Oath deny, that any Men were let into my Lord that Morning my Lord died. The like did John Lloyd, the Soldier that kept the outward Door, depose at my Trial.

Nathanael Monday, who was my Lord's other Warder, and likewise Ruffel, before the Lords, have denied that any Men were that Morning let into my Lord. But that there were some Ruffians a little before my Lord's Death let in to Murder him, plainly appears by the Proofs following.

Mr. Samuel Story depose to the effect following, (viz.) "The 21st of January 1688, being the Day before the Convention sat, John Lloyd (Sentinel upon the late Earl of Essex at the time of his Death) was taken up as suspected privy to the said Earl's Murder; and being therefore in Custody, the said Lloyd, with Tears in his Eyes, wrung this Informant by the Hand, and declared, That by special Order of Major Hawley, or one of my Lord's Warders, he did let in two or three Men into the Earl's Lodgings just before his Death, and he was very sure, and could safely swear that Major Webster (then there in Custody, suspected as one of the Ruffians that murdered my Lord) was one; and that as soon as he so let them in, he heard a Noise in my Lord's Chamber, and somewhat thrown down like the Fall of a Man; soon after which it was said, 'The Earl of Essex had cut his Throat.'

This Lloyd the same Day before the Justice did confess the letting in some Men a little before the Earl's Death, as appears by his Examination following.

The Examination of John Lloyd of Goodman's-Yard in Aldgate Parish Without, in London, Cloth-worker, taken before Jo'n Robins, Esq. one of the Justices of the Peace for the County of Middlesex, the 22d Day of January, 1689.

THIS Examinant saith, on the Day whereon the Right Honourable the late Earl of Essex was found dead, upon the suspicion of having been murdered in his Lodgings in the Tower of London; he then being a Soldier, was standing Sentinel at the Door of the said Earl's Lodgings, and had order to let no body up Stairs to the said Lodgings without leave from Major Hawley, or the Warder then in waiting on the said Earl; and that about half an Hour after Eight of the Clock in the Morning of the said Day, two Men (to this Examinant unknown) knocked at the Hatch-Door belonging to the said Lodgings, and by Permission of the said Warder, entered the said Lodgings; but when they came out, he can give no account; and that about Nine o'clock he heard a struggling on the said Morning, and a little time after heard a Crying, My Lord is dead.

After Lloyd had lain some time close Prisoner in Newgate, he did desire to see one Mr. Tempest, a Neighbour of his, who having permission of the Secret Committee to discourse Lloyd, thereupon went to Newgate, where he found the said Lloyd very melancholy; when Mr. Tempest first came, Lloyd told him, that he did hope, as he was his Neighbour, he would be his Friend, and true to him; to which the other answered, that he would, if the said Lloyd was ingenuous in his Discovery; whereupon the said Lloyd (after often pressing the said Mr. Tempest to be true to him) told him, that when he was first seized, he did confess to a Gentleman, who was altogether a Stranger to him, the letting in some Men into my Lord of Essex just before his Death; and this Confession did lie upon his Conscience, and troubled him Night and Day; upon which the said Mr. Tempest replied, That the like he had confessed to several the same Day he was taken; and he declared the same before a Justice of Peace; but if it was false, he ought to retract it, and be sorry for having said it; whereupon the said Lloyd renewing his Request, that the said Mr. Tempest would be true to him, said, it was indeed very true, but it was what he should not have confessed.

Lloyd did then farther declare, "That upon the letting in those Men, there was so great a Bustle in my Lord's Chamber, that the said Lloyd would have forced in after them, but the Warder had made fast the outward Door, so that he could not; and that upon the Bustle he did hear somewhat thrown down like the Fall of a Man, which he did suppose was my Lord's Body; and soon after, it was cry'd out that my Lord of Essex had cut his Throat." This is the Substance of what Mr. Tempest hath depose before the Lords.

By this it appears more than probable, not only that my Lord was murdered, but that there was some villainous Oath of Secrecy entred into by those concern'd therein, not to discover what they knew with relation thereunto; for what other as likely reason can be assigned for Lloyd's being troubled in Conscience (as he pretended) for having confessed, what at the same time, under repeated Injunctions of Secrecy he confirmed to be true, though he said he should not have confessed it?

But to put this Matter beyond all doubt, that some Men were bustling with his Lordship just before his pretended Self-murder discovered, evidently appears by this Information following.

Martha Bascumb declareth, and before the Lords in substance hath depose'd, "That a little before the Death of the late Earl of Essex was discovered, this Informant was walking up before the Earl's Chamber-Window, and hearing a very great Trampling and Bustle in "my Lord's Chamber, this Informant stood still, and looking to the Window of the said Chamber, saw three or four Heads move close together, and heard one in the Chamber (which seemed to be one in this Bustle) cry out very loud, and very dolefully, Murder, Murder, Murder; this Informant not then knowing it to be my Lord's Lodging, nor thinking any other of this Cry, than what might be occasioned by some accidental Quarrel, walked up towards the Chapel, but not out of sight of the Lodgings, and about a quarter of an Hour after (or less) it was first cried out in the House, that the Earl of Essex had cut his Throat; upon which this Informant went down to the House, and being shewed the Chamber where the Earl lay, she found that was the Chamber where she saw the Men, and heard the Bustle, and Murder cried out, as before related." This Informant further saith, "That some few Days after this, telling Mr. Perkins and his Wife (whom she then kept in her Lying-in) of what she had seen and heard, as before declared; the said Perkins advised her not to speak of it, for her divulging it, in all probability, would prove her Ruin."

Mr. Perkins hath upon Oath confirmed the latter part of Martha Bafcomb's Information, which clearly proves this not a newly-invented Story.

I think this Proof is little less than ocular Evidence of the Murder; for my Lord was a close Prisoner, to whom (as was pretended, and sworn by such as kept the Chamber-Door) none was admitted that Morning, but his Lordship cut his Throat in all silence; whereas it is here deposed, that several were bustling together in my Lord's Chamber before his Death, (and this part agrees with the Confession of the Sentinel who let in the Ruffians) and one in this Bustle (which can be presumed to be no other than my Lord) cried out several times very loud, and very dolefully, Murder, Murder, Murder.

And as a farther Confirmation of these Men being (and by whom) sent to murder my Lord, Elizabeth Gladwin and Sarah Hughes declare, (and before the Lords in substance have deposed) "That the Day of the Death of the late Earl of Essex, (viz.) the 13th of July 1683, about Eleven of the Clock the same Day, one Ruddle, in the hearing of these Informants, did declare, That he was in the Tower that Morning, where it was reported that the Earl of Essex had cut his Throat, but he was sure he was murdered, and that by the Order of his ROYAL HIGHNESS; for the said Ruddle then declared, That he did observe His Majesty and Royal Highness part a little from those that attended them, and discoursed (to the best of these Informants remembrance) The said Ruddle declared it was in French, concerning the Prisoners then in the Tower; and his HIGHNESS declared, That of all the Prisoners then there, the Earl of Essex ought to be taken off; but His Majesty said he was resolved to spare him for what his Father had suffered; upon which his HIGHNESS seemed very dissatisfied; and a little before the Death of the said Earl, his HIGHNESS parted a little way from his Majesty, and then two Men were sent into the Earl's Lodgings to murder him."—So far before their Lordships.

The said Ruddle declared this with great Earnestness and Passion, and protested he thought no Man safe who was against the Popish Interest, if once they began thus barefaced to cut Throats. And he protested his Blood did so boil against his Royal Highness, that if he could have got a Party that would have stood by him, he would have shot his Highness dead upon the spot, for so barefaced a Murder had before scarce ever been committed under a Civil Government.

John Bampton and his Wife both declare, and in substance before the Lords have deposed, "That about One of the Clock, the very Day the late Earl of Essex died in the Tower, one Robert Meake that Morning (a Soldier in the Tower) came to these Informants House, and these Informants desired the said Meake to give them the best Account he could how the Earl of Essex cut his own Throat; to which the said Meake (with some earnestness and passion) answered, That the said Earl did not cut his own Throat, but was barbarously murdered by two Men sent for that purpose by his ROYAL HIGHNESS to the Earl's Lodgings just before his Death."

What Robert Meake did further declare, and what was since his Fate, you will hear in its proper order.

I do expect it will be objected, That these four are but Hear-say Evidence. To which I shall answer almost in the very Words of a late Discourse on this Subject, viz. Seeing there is Reason to believe that the sisting the first Murder occasioned the Addition of these two Soldiers Blood (as you will hereafter have some Grounds to suppose) I think such Informations ought not to be slighted; for after that rate 'tis but taking off such as knew any thing with relation to a Murder, and you are very secure from any Discovery, though never so many upon Oath gave an Account of what those Men (whose Mouths have been by Murder stoppt from giving their own Relation) have declared in the Matter. These two Soldiers related the same as to the sending the Men into my Lord's Lodgings in two Houses as far distant as Duke's-Place and Baldwin's-Gardens; and I am verily persuaded that neither Hughes nor Gladwin ever spoke to Bampton and his Wife in their Lives, for neither two remember to have seen or heard of the other Informants. And who could imagine that two Soldiers should declare with such concern and earnestness that which was so very dangerous to be spoken, if their Love to Truth, and Hatred of such a treacherous and bloody Murder had not even forced it from them, to the hazard of almost their Lives by such their Relation?

'Tis true, no Man ought to suffer barely upon Hear-say Evidence, but such Testimony hath been used to corroborate what else may be sworn, and of itself may (in some cases) be enough to give Satisfaction in the general, of the Truth of a Matter, and no farther is it here used: And I would have all Men consider the many such Testimonies heretofore produced, amongst which I shall only mention one which had an immediate relation to myself. Mr. Blatwaite (Clerk of the Council in 1683, and as I think still in that Post) being sworn on the behalf of the King, against Mr. Speke and myself, in his Relation of what the Young Edwards's Sister should declare to the Council-Board, viz. That Braddon compelled the Boy to sign it (the Paper the young Edwards signed). This you find to be Hear-say-Evidence, and the Author (the Sister) then in Court, but testified no such thing; therefore this Hear-say-Evidence ought (if any ought) to have been rejected: And yet this Hear-say-Evidence (though not confirmed by the Author then upon Oath) was not only admitted, but ordered to be printed in the Trial in large Capital Letters. How much sooner ought the Evidence of Bampton and his Wife (as to what Meake declared) and of Hughes and Gladwin, as to Ruddle's Account, be particularly remarked, seeing Meake and Ruddle we cannot now produce in Court, (as that Author was) they (especially the first) being supposed to be murdered by way of Prevention, by that bloody Party that murdered my Lord.

But the next Account of these two Men being sent, as before, by his Highness, shall be from the first Hand. Mr. Peter Effington declareth, (and before the Lords in substance hath deposed) "That he this Informant was in the Tower that Morning the late Earl of Essex died; and about a quarter of an Hour before the said Earl's Death was discovered, this Informant observed His Highness to part a little way from his Majesty, and then beck'ned to two Gentlemen to come to him, who came accordingly; and this Informant did observe his Highness to send them towards the Earl's Lodgings; and less than a Quarter of an Hour after, this Informant did observe these very two Men to return to His Highness, and as they came they smiled, and (to the best of this Informant's Hearing and Remembrance) said, The Business is done; upon which, His Highness seemed very well pleased, and immediately thereupon his Highness went to his Majesty; soon after which, News was brought to the King, That the Earl of Essex had cut his Throat."

I do expect that will be objected to this, which heretofore hath been, (viz.) That it cannot be thought the late Duke of York (admit he was so bad as to give Order for such a Fact) would be so impolitick as to send the Ruffians, so that any People might see their Mission, and their Return. But I desire such would consider this Murder in all its Circumstances, and then tell me, Whether those bloody Varlets had not all the Reason in the World to have all the Security could be expected or desired? You well know, that my Lord of Essex was deservedly very popular; and therefore a Parliament that should have had the least Information of this treacherous and bloody Murder, would have prosecuted the Matter with all the Diligence and Vigour such a Piece of Barbarity deserved. Now, should they, in such their Inquisitions, have detected those treacherous Villains, these bloody Men without a full Discovery, must have expected no Mercy; and should the Duke have employed them in his Closet only, and they could not by any Circumstance have given Satisfaction that they were his hired Journeymen in this piece of great Service, their Evidence against him had not been the tenth part so credible as it would have been, could they have proved that they were sent by His Highness towards the Earl's Lodgings just before His Death, and soon after returned to His Highness, before others knew that this cruel Tragedy was finished. This Circumstance, I say, would have so corroborated their Evidence against their Master, that none could in the least have doubted of the Truth of their being so employed, that were once satisfied they were, as before, sent by, and returned to His Highness. This then obliged His Highness, under no less Obligation than Self-Preservation, to screen those his faithful and ready Servants from any Prosecution, well knowing that his own Interest (and Indeed Life) was wrapt up in theirs.

Wherefore I think this Matter was very cunningly managed (as to the Security of these Cut-throats from the Hands of Justice, either in their Punishments or Prosecution.) And it could not possibly have been done with greater Safety to the Persons of those that did it.

The Sentinel Llyd declared, He could not be positive whether Major Hawley or the Warder let the Men into the outward Door: But Major Hawley pretends, He could not; for he (as he saith) went out of his House at Five o'Clock in the Morning, and did not go nigh his own House till News of my Lord's Death was brought him by Monday the Warder; and therefore he could not open the Door to any that went in just before my Lord's Death. This Reason of Major Hawley is equally true with what else he saith in his Defence, as appears by this Information.

Richard Nicolson, in the Ward of Queenhithe, Corn-Factor, deposes, That the Day of the Earl of Essex his Death, this Deponent was a Warder in the Tower, and stood Warder at the Inner-Tower-Gate that Morning the Earl dy'd, (before the Earl's Death) and by Major Hawley (then Gentleman-Porter of the Tower) ordered to let no Man into the Tower, or out of the Tower. This Deponent further deposes, That about Eight of the Clock, or a little before, whilst this Deponent was Warder at the Gate as aforesaid, he did observe the said Major Hawley five or six times turn up towards his own House through the Gate (over-against the Traytors-Gate) leading towards his own House; and about Eight of the Clock the same Morning, this Deponent was desired by a Stranger to let him into the Tower, for which the said Stranger gave this Deponent a Shilling: This Deponent let him through the Gate; the said Major Hawley thereupon came to this Deponent in great Fury, and check'd this Deponent for letting in the said Stranger into the Tower. This Deponent further deposes, That Major Hawley ordered this Deponent (with several others) to go Warder with the Lord Ruffel to the Old-Bailey; and as this Deponent was going with the Lord Ruffel to the Old-Bailey, (viz.) about Eight of the Clock, he passed before Major Hawley's House, and did observe Major Hawley then to go into his own House.

Jurat' gno die Aug.
1689, coram me,

Tho. Pilkington, Mayor.

Richard Nicolson.

That Major Hawley was in the House when my Lord was murdered, seems farther probable from the Relation of Mary J. Jenson, then at work in Major Hawley's House at the time of my Lord's Death; and what Account she hath hereof given, appears by these two Informations.

The

The Information of Philip Johnson of White's Alley in Coleman-Street, in London, Free-Mason, taken the 22d Day of January 168<sup>3</sup>, before John Robins, Esq; a Justice of the Peace for the County of Middlesex.

THIS Informant maketh Oath, and saith, That Mary Johnson, his Wife, (since deceased) being a labouring Woman to Major Hawley, in whose House the late Earl of Essex was found dead, That the Morning on which he died, as she was at Work, she heard a Noise; and designing to go up Stairs, she met Major Hawley coming down, who told her, My Lord was dead; upon which, she went up Stairs, and found the said Earl dead in his Closet, as she gave her Husband, this Informant, an Account; and that by Order of the said Major Hawley, she helped and assisted a Man (to the best of his Memory his Name is Major Webster) to strip the said Earl from his Clothes; and at the further Command of the said Major Hawley, she washed the said Earl's Body, and also washed the said Chamber and Closet belonging to the said Earl; for the said Major Hawley gave her 10s. and that the Neck of the Cravat that she took off the said Earl's Neck, was cut in three Pieces.

The Mark of Philip Johnson.

The Information of Miriam Tovey, of Red-Lion-Street, in Whitechapel-Parish, in Middlesex, Widow, taken the Day aforesaid, before John Robins, aforesaid.

THIS Informant maketh Oath, and saith, That she several times heard Mary Johnson, above said, declare the Substance of the preceding Information; and further sweareth, The said Mary Johnson told her, That Major Webster was the Person who helped her to strip the said Earl of his Clothes; which she was very unwilling to do, saying, She should bring herself into Trouble and Hazard of her Life, by intermeddling with the Body before the Coroner had sat upon it; and that Major Hawley told her, She must do it, and should come to no Trouble by it.

Miriam Tovey.

But it seems Major Hawley's Principles were ever averse to those brave True English Champions that opposed the late Court-Arbitrary Designs and could afford those Honourable Lords, and Truly-worthy Knights and Gentlemen, no better Titles than Rogues. This appears by what he declared the very Day that a great Number of Honourable Lords (amongst which this unfortunate Lord, I hear, was one) and Worthy Knights, Gentlemen and Citizens, dined together at Mile-End-Green; for some time that Afternoon Hawley told Mr. Bunch, then a Warder, That above Two hundred Rogues that Day dined together at Mile-End-Green; but he did with that he had Forty of the biggest of them there in the Tower, that they might be made shorter by the Head; for till then the Land would never be at quiet. This in Substance is depofed by the said Mr. Bunch, who with one Mr. — are ready likewise to depofe, That some time since discoursing with one — a Servant-Maid in the Tower at the time of my Lord's Murder, but since turned out, they told her, That it was supposed to be Major Hawley that occasioned her being turned out of the Tower; but she replied, 'It could not be the Major, for he was the best Friend she had in the World, upon the Account of somewhat which she knew with relation to the Death of the late Earl of Essex.'

I have some Grounds to believe, that not a few in the Tower, that Morning my Lord was murdered, could discover several Things very material in order to a farther Detection; and particularly, as to the coming out of the Ruffians after they had perpetrated this not-to-be-parallel'd treacherous Cruelty; for I have been informed by some, who that very Morning my Lord was murdered were in Leaden-Hall-Market, That there came a Servant-Maid (who then lived, as she said, in the Tower) to that Market the very same Morning; and wringing her Hands, she wept, and cried out, 'The Earl of Essex was murdered;' upon which the People gathering about her, advised her to Silence, telling her she would bring herself into Trouble by such Expressions; the Maid thereupon declared, 'She was sure it was true, for she saw the Men that murdered him, just as they came from his Lodgings.'

I have used all Diligence possible to find this Maid out: but neither of those I have met with could tell me her Name, or the Name of the Person in the Tower with whom she lived. Not long after my Lord's Death, I was likewise informed of the Name of one who declared he saw the Ruffians just as they came out of my Lord's Lodgings, and did observe some Blood upon the Clothes of one of them: But having been obliged in a Hurry often to convey away my Papers, this Name I have lost. I do wish I could find Men as free, as their Duty obliges them in this Matter, to declare what they knew.

I have reason to suppose many Men would be then examined; and whoever there is that can discover any Thing material with relation to this Murder, and in silence stifles it, by such his silence he consents to the Blood of my Lord; and though our Law may not reach his Offence, yet He who knows it, will one Day lay it to his Charge; for if God requires that all Governments should make diligent Inquisition for Blood, in defect whereof he will require the Blood of the Slain at the Hands of such Magistrates on whom this Neglect is chargeable: then on those more especially will the greatest Guilt lie, who refuse or neglect to give Information to those ordained for such Inquisition.

But, to return:

Bomeney and Ruffel, you find, have before depofed, That there was a Razor delivered to my Lord wherewith to pare his Nails; which his Lordship having done, he retired into his Closet, and there cut his Throat. The Closet-Door being opened, Bomeney and Ruffel have declared they saw the Body there lie in its Blood, and the Razor lying by him.

This is, in short, the Substance of these Men's Relations, whose Interest it is to prove the Self-Murder. That this Story is false in every Part, I doubt not but to convince every unprejudic'd Person, and hope to satisfy all who are not blinded with prejudice.

First, That his Lordship did not pare his Nails that Morning he died, as all these have sworn or declared; nor was there any Razor delivered to my Lord for that Purpose that Morning he died.

Secondly, That his Lordship's Body was not locked into the Closet, when first found.

Thirdly, That there was no Razor lying by the Body when these Three first saw the Body; but the Razor laid there after my Lord was murdered, to colour the pretended Self murder.

That my Lord's Nails were not par'd, John Kittlebeater hath depofed, That he being of the Coroner's Jury did very narrowly observe my Lord's Nails on his Fingers and Feet, and could not discern either of them par'd or scrap'd.

I shall now prove Bomeney's Relation to be false, by what Ruffel swore; and Ruffel's Deposition forged by what Monday declared the very Day, and some time after my Lord was murdered: and Monday's Account in every material part is a Fiction, by the Depositions of the two former: In order to which, I shall give you Bomeney's first Information, taken in the Coroner's own Hand, which is as followeth:

THE Information of Paul Bomeney saith, That the Earl of Essex on the 11th Instant did speak to this Informant to bring him a Penknife to pare his Nails; but this Informant could not then get one. The Earl of Essex called to him again on Friday the 13th Instant, about Eight of the Clock in the Forenoon, did again speak to this Informant to bring him a Penknife to pare his Nails: But this Deponent telling him that he had not one, his Lord commanded him to bring him a Razor, which he did accordingly; and then his Lordship walked up and down the Room, scraping his Nails with it: and this Informant then left him; and coming about half an Hour afterwards up into the Bed-Chamber, found his Closet-Door fast; whereupon this Informant knocked at the Door, and called My Lord, My Lord; but he not answering, pushed the Door a little open, where he did see his Lord lying all at Length on the Ground in his Blood, with the Razor near him on the Ground. And further depofeth, That he hath not any Papers of his Lord's, nor doth know where any of his Papers or Writings are. And also, That on Thursday-Night last was very merry at Supper, and did not seem to be discontented the next Morning.

This Information is verbatim as the Coroner took it from Bomeney's own Mouth: But the Coroner proceeding to ask further Questions, Bomeney began extremely to hesitate, and thereupon desired he might write his own Information; which being granted, he retired from the Coroner and Jury into the next Room; where having been some considerable time, he brought the Information first mentioned, according as it is there observed to be in the Original.

James Whitechurch declareth, (and in Substance before the Lords hath depofed) 'That the very Day the Earl of Essex died, he went with one George Jones to the Tower, to discourse Nathanael Monday concerning the Death of the said Earl; and when they came to the Tower, meeting with the said Monday, he gave them this Account: That as soon as the Gentleman-Goaler had opened my Lord's Chamber-Door, that very Morning he the said Monday (by Order) went into my Lord's Chamber, and tarried there, because their Orders were, That one of the Warders should be in his Lordship's Chamber, and the other at the Stairs-Foot; and that they had this farther Order, Not to suffer his Lordship to have a Knife, or any thing like it, but whilst he used it in cutting his Meat; and that being done, all Knives and such like were to be taken from him; with which Orders having acquainted my Lord, his Lordship answered, He should take nothing ill from them in observing their Orders.'

This Informant further saith, That the said Monday did then declare, That he tarried with my Lord in his Chamber two Hours or better that very Morning; and that whilst he was with my Lord in his Chamber, he did observe his Lordship pared his Nails with the Heel of a Razor. This Informant further saith, That the said Monday did further declare, Before he left his Lordship, and went down Stairs to stand below, he called up Ruffel, his Fellow-Warder, to stand in his Chamber; and as he went down Stairs, he lighted his Pipe, and sat at the Stairs-Foot; but before he had half-smoked his Pipe, he heard it cried above Stairs, That my Lord had cut his Throat; whereupon he the said Monday ran up Stairs, and pushed the Closet-Door open, and there found my Lord dead. This Informant further saith, That the said Monday did further declare, That when he came up Stairs, he asked Mr. Bomeney and Ruffel, Where they were whilst my Lord was in the Closet? The said Bomeney answered, He was sitting upon the Bed in my Lord's Chamber; and the said Ruffel declared, He stood at my Lord's Chamber-Door, just without the Door: Whereupon he the said Monday (as the said Monday declared) checked the said Ruffel for not keeping in the Chamber according to Order.

Richard Jordan declareth, 'That on the Day Mr. Braddon was tried, in Hilary-Term, 1683, (upon the Account of the late Earl of Essex) this Informant heard Nathanael Monday declare, That the very Morning the late Earl of Essex died, as soon as the Gentleman-Goaler opened the Chamber-Door, which was about Seven of the Clock, the said Monday stood as Warder above Stairs upon the said Earl; and at the first opening the Door, did observe the said Earl to have a Razor in his Hand, paring or scraping his Nails with it; and this the said Monday declared he saw a long time before Ruffel stood Warder above Stairs upon the said Earl.'

By these two Informations, you may perceive what Monday declared; My Lord had this Razor in his Hand about Seven o'Clock in the Morning, long before Ruffel came up Stairs to stand Warder upon my Lord; and that my Lord pared his Nails with the Heel of the Razor.

By the Way, I cannot but here take notice of what Monday would have insinuated, (viz.) That the Government was jealous my Lord would destroy himself; for otherwise, how should there be Orders given not to suffer his Lordship to have a Knife, &c.? This was said, the more easily to induce People to believe that my Lord did indeed cut his own Throat: but Monday will not now pretend such Orders were given him. And observe how inconsistent Monday's Relation is! for he pretended that they had Orders not to suffer his Lordship to have a Penknife or Razor, &c. and yet at the same time confessed he left this Razor with his Lordship.

Ruffel the Warder hath before depofed, and now declares, That this Razor he saw Bomeney deliver to my Lord, whilst he stood Warder at my Lord's Chamber-Door, after Monday was gone down Stairs.

Let

Let us now compare these three Men's Relations as to the Time of Delivery of the Razor; by doing which, it will plainly appear that no Razor at all was delivered to his Lordship. For the clearer understanding hereof, I suppose Bomeney under Examination with the Jury, and answering according to what he hath sworn:

Jury. Did you deliver this Razor to my Lord?

Bomeney. Yes.

Jury. When did you deliver this Razor to my Lord?

Bomeney. About Eight of the Clock that Morning my Lord died.

This is according to what he first swore; but he then withdraws to write his own Information, which point-black contradicts this his Oath in that particular; for he is then examined, and answereth as followeth:

Jury. Do you remember the very time that you delivered the Razor to my Lord?

Bomeney. Yes.

Jury. When did you deliver this Razor to my Lord?

Bomeney. About Eight of the Clock on Thursday Morning, being the Day before my Lord's Death.

This, as you observe, he swears in the Information himself writ, and brought to the Coroner.

Bomeney then to withdraw, and let Ruffel answer to this particular.

Jury. Mr. Ruffel, do you know when this Razor was delivered to my Lord?

Ruffel. Very well; for I saw it delivered to my Lord by Bomeney.

Jury. When did you see this Razor delivered?

Ruffel. Less than a Quarter of an Hour before we found my Lord dead. I stood Warder at my Lord's Door; and I heard his Lordship ask for his Penknife to pare his Nails; and Bomeney said, It was not brought; upon which my Lord required a Razor, saying, It would do as well; and I saw Bomeney give my Lord the Razor, it being then about Nine o'Clock.

Jury. Who first stood as Warder at my Lord's Chamber-Door, or in my Lord's Chamber, Yesterday Morning before my Lord died; was it You or Monday?

Ruffel. Monday, upon my Lord's Chamber-Door being opened first, stood at the Door; and after he had been there as long as we use to stand, he called me up, and then went down and stood at the Stairs-foot, at the House-Door, where I did before stand.

Jury. Then this Razor you saw delivered to my Lord after Monday went down Stairs, and whilst you stood as Warder at my Lord's Door?

Ruffel. It is very true; for I am sure I stood by Bomeney when he delivered the Razor, and saw it delivered to my Lord.

Jury. What distance of Time do you say there might be, from the Time this Razor was delivered, to the time of my Lord's Death?

Ruffel. I am sure it could not be Half an Hour from the time of the Delivery of the Razor, to the time we found my Lord dead in the Closet.

Ruffel withdraws, and Monday is examined.

Jury. Mr. Monday, did you see my Lord have any Razor in his Hand Yesterday Morning before his Death?

Monday. Yes, I did.

Jury. What Time was it when you saw my Lord have the Razor in his Hand?

Monday. About Seven of the Clock, as soon as the Gentleman-Goalor had opened my Lord's Chamber-Door; for I first stood Warder above Stairs; and as soon as the Door was opened, I saw my Lord have the Razor in his Hand, and observed him to pare his Nails with it.

Jury. Was this before Ruffel came up to my Lord's Chamber-Door, to stand Warder there?

Monday. Yes, almost Two Hours.

This is according to their own Informations and Relations. Now, can you believe that this Razor was delivered by Bomeney at Eight of the Clock on Friday Morning, according to his first Oath; and yet not delivered till Eight of the Clock on Thursday Morning, according to Bomeney's second Oath? And can you also believe that the Razor was not delivered till about Nine of the Clock on Friday Morning, according to Ruffel's Information; and at the same time give Credit to Monday, who declared, My Lord had the Razor by Seven of the Clock, Two Hours before Ruffel came up to stand Warder at my Lord's Chamber-Door?

These Three are of equal Credit, and consequently you have as much reason to believe Bomeney as Ruffel; and Monday deserves equal Credit with either of the former: But all cannot be credited; neither can Bomeney's Contradiction be reconciled: Or can One of these be thought True, without giving the Lye to the other Two?

Therefore, upon the whole Matter, you cannot reasonably believe there was any Razor at all delivered.

If any shall say, that all Three in the main agree, That my Lord had a Razor delivered him to pare his Nails, and their Contradictions is only in Point of Time:

I answer, 'Tis true, it's a Circumstantial Contradiction in Point of Time; and the Contradiction of the Two Elders in the History of Susanna, was a Circumstantial Contradiction in Point of Place; for the first swore they took Susanna in Adultery under a Mastick-tree, and the second under a Helm-tree: Both these agree in the main, viz. That they found her in Adultery; but by this Contradiction, as to the place where, Daniel convinced all then present, that these Two Elders were perjured in their Evidence, (and consequently Susanna innocent of her Charge) and thereupon these two Accusers justly suffered, what by Perjury they would have unjustly caused to be inflicted upon the Innocent. And I never yet heard any deny Daniel's Wisdom in this Detection; or arraign his Justice in the Punishment those Two False Accusers thereupon suffered.

Secondly, That my Lord's Body was not locked into the Closet. I will now suppose that Bomeney, Monday and Ruffel, were to answer as to the opening this Door, according to their former Informations, and you will find their Contradictions, as to this, as gross as the former.

Bomeney first appears.

Jury. Mr. Bomeney, was my Lord's Body locked up into the Closet, when he was first found dead?—Bomeney. Yes.

Jury. Who opened the Door?

Bomeney. When I had knocked at the Closet-Door, my Lord not answering, I did open the Door, and there saw my Lord lying a-long in his Blood, and the Razor by him; and I then called the Warders.

This according to his first Information, taken (as before) by the Coroner. About an Hour after this, the Jury did again examine him as to this Point; and he answering according to the Information, which (as before) he writ in the Room next the Jury, and then you will find it as followeth.

Jury. Mr. Bomeney, Did you first open the Closet-Door upon my Lord's Body?

Bomeney. No, I did not, but Ruffel did; for after I had knocked at the Door thrice, calling, My Lord; my Lord not answering, I took up the Hangings, and peeping through a Chink, I saw Blood, and part of the Razor, whereupon I called the Warder Ruffel, and the said Ruffel pulled the Door open.

At my Trial, Bomeney being asked who did first open the Door, upon Oath answered, he knew not who opened the Door.

Jury. Mr. Ruffel, Did you find the Closet-Door lock'd upon my Lord's Body?

Ruffel. Yes.

Jury. Who first opened the Closet-Door?

Ruffel. When Bomeney saw my Lord's Body through the Chink, he cried out, my Lord was fallen down sick; whereupon I went to the Closet-Door, and opened it, the Key being on the out-side.

Here Ruffel makes no Difficulty in opening the Door; but observe Monday's Answer.

Ruffel withdraws, and Monday is called.

Jury. Mr. Monday, Where were you when my Lord was first found dead?

Monday. I was standing at the Foot of the Stairs, and hearing a great Noise of my Lord's Death, I ran up Stairs, and found Bomeney and Ruffel endeavouring to open the Door; but the Body being so close and strong against the Door, neither could.

Jury. Who then opened the Door?

Monday. I being much stronger than either of these Two, put my Shoulder against the Door, and pushing with all my might, I broke it open.

Upon the whole Matter you find, first Bomeney opened the Door before he called either of the Warders, according to Bomeney's first Information taken (as before) by the Coroner; and secondly, That he did not open the Door, for Ruffel opened it, according to Bomeney's second Information (which himself writ) and Ruffel's Deposition: And thirdly, That neither Bomeney nor Ruffel could open the Door, because the Body lay so close against it, and so Monday broke it open. This according to Monday's Account of the Matter.

These Contradictions before observed of themselves, are as (I do humbly conceive) sufficient to convince the Man not bias'd, that this Unfortunate Lord was treacherously murdered; for our Law supposes every Man, destroy'd by violent Means, to be murdered by others, unless the contrary appears to the Coroner, and his Jury; now those which in this Case come to testify the contrary, are so notoriously self-destructive in their Evidence by their gross Contradictions, that all these Three appear treacherously false; and therefore these Men's Evidence thus contradictory, cannot prove the Self-murder, but rather demonstrate the contrary; for these three being the only Men, who by their Stations near my Lord at the Time of his Death; could then be supposed capable of giving any Account how my Lord came by his Death; (for Bomeney attended upon my Lord in his Chamber; and Monday and Ruffel, the Two Warders, which alternately kept my Lord's Chamber-Door, for when Monday kept my Lord's Chamber-Door, Ruffel stood at the Stairs-Foot-Door, and this by turns;) and seeing these Men's Relations, for the Reasons before observed, are notoriously false, there was a Truth which these Perfidious Men thought neither convenient or safe to declare, which would have detected the true Manner of my Lord's Death, and in what Parts these Three stood related thereunto.

I would fain ask the Coroner and his Jury, What Inquisition they would have brought in upon my Lord's Body, in case Bomeney, Monday and Ruffel should have declared they would not discover what they knew with relation to my Lord's Death? I am apt to have such a charitable Opinion of the Discretion and Integrity of these Gentlemen, as to believe they would have been so far from finding my Lord Felo de se, that they would have found him murdered by others, and these three concerned therein; for by their respective Stations at the time of my Lord's Death, they could not be ignorant of the true manner thereof; and by their Refusals to discover their knowledge therein, they (tacitly) would have confessed their Guilt, either as Actors in that cruel Tragedy, or privy and consenting to it. Now as such their first positive Refusal would have rendered them Guilty before the Coroner and his Jury; so their false and contradictory Account makes some of them more Criminal, by so great an Addition to their first Offence. For in the first, by their silence they would have endeavoured to conceal the Murder, and their Guilt therein; So here by their many false Relations (which have so plainly appeared, for Contradictions cannot be true) have they designed to attain the same End.

And for my own Part, (admitting what is sworn against them to be true) I think these Three are worse Criminals than those Ruffians who cut my Lord's Throat. For some of the latter were not so intrusted with my Lord's Body, as properly to be termed treacherous, neither have they appeared by Falsities to conceal their Guilt, by perfidiously transferring the same on him whom their own Hands have destroyed; But two of the three Former, (viz.) Ruffel and Bomeney, if what is sworn against them be true, have superadded the greatest Treachery and Falsity to Blood, and therefore stand Guilty of a complicated Villany, by which they have, as much as in them lay, murdered his Lordship's Honour, and stained his Family with such Guilt, as nothing but the Discovery of Truth, and a just Re- crimination of those Treacherous Men can wipe off.

But as a farther Argument of the Closet-Door's not being locked upon my Lord's Body; it appears, That when Bomeney, Monday and Ruffel pretended my Lord was lying in that Posture wherein they first found him, his Lordship's Legs were part out of the Closet-Door. This is declared by William Turner and Samuel Peck, who before the Lords have in Substance depofed, 'That thefe two Informants were Servants to the late Earl of Essex at the Time of his Death, and brought fome Provisions into the Tower juft upon the firft Difcovery of my Lord's Death, of which as foon as they heard, they ran up Stairs, and found my Lord's Legs lying upon the Threfhold of the Clofet-Door, and a Print of a bloody Foot upon my Lord's Stockings.' This proves not only that the Clofet-Door could not be lock'd (as was fworn and declared by Bomeney and Ruffel), but likewife that Somebody had been with the Body in the Clofet, or otherwife how came the Print of a bloody Foot upon my Lord's Stockings, as thefe fwear to have obferved.

In the third and laft Place, I fhall difprove that Part of thefe Men's Relations which faith, That the Razor was lock'd into my Lord's Clofet, when his Lordship was firft by them feen dead. Thofe Three have all depofed, or often declared, 'That the Razor was found by my Lord's Body lock'd into the Clofet; and all three denied that there was any bloody Razor thrown out of my Lord's Chamber-Window juft before my Lord's Death was firft difcovered to thofe out of the Houfe.'

William Edwards, aged about Eighteen Years, and Jane Lodeman, aged about Eighteen Years, have both before the Lords in Substance depofed, 'That a little before my Lord's Death was difcovered, they faw a bloody Razor thrown out of my Lord's Chamber-Window; and that juft after there came a Maid in a White Hood out of Captain Hawley's Houfe; which Maid, William Edwards hath depofed, 'took up the Razor, and ran with it into Major Hawley's Houfe; and up Stairs, crying out Murder; and immediately hereupon was it firft laid; that the Earl of Essex cut his Throat.'

Thomas Edwards, Father to the faid William Edwards, Sarah Edwards, Ann Edwards, and Elizabeth Edwards, Sisters to William Edwards, (in Substance before the Lords) have depofed; 'That the very Morning of my Lord's Death, when William Edwards came home, he did give this Information (in Substance) to thefe Informants.'

William Edwards did farther depofe to this effect, 'That the very Morning Mr. Speke and I were tried, going into Westminster-Hall to be an Evidence at that Trial, he met with Major Hawley, who in a threatening manner told him, That if he might have the Management of him, the faid William Edwards fhould be whipt once a Fortnight, for feven Years together; which Threat of the faid Major Hawley did fo terrify this Informant, (he being then about Thirteen Years of Age) that he was afraid to fpeak the Truth at that Trial, left he fhould feverely fuffer for fo doing.'

Mrs. Smith, Aunt to Jane Lodeman, and Mr. Glasbrooke, did depofe, 'That this Relation Jane Lodeman gave as foon as fhe came from the Tower that Morning.' Mrs. Gibbons hath before the Lords (in Substance) depofed the fame.

Here are two Children (aged then about Thirteen Years) altogether Strangers to each other, and whole Relations were as much Strangers to one another, that gave the fame Relation, exactly agreeing in feveral Circumftances, and this Story by them was told when there could not poffibly be any ufe made of it to prove my Lord's being murdered. For here are Seven or Eight Witneffes have (for both Parties) depofed, That this Story was related by thefe two about Ten of the Clock the very Day my Lord died, when it could not poffibly be known what would be fworn before the Coroner's Jury the then next Day. Now the only ufe made of it, is to contradict the Depofitions of thofe which before the Coroner would have proved the Self-Murder. Which Depofitions (as before obferved) were not taken till the Saturday (which was the Day after thefe two Children had given this Relation), and not publifhed before the then next Monday Morning. Nay, thefe two Children were firft fo far from uſing it as an Argument of my Lord's being murdered, that both of them (to their refpective Relations) when check'd for ſaying that my Lord cut his own Throat; in their Childifhnefs and innocent Simplicity, urged this as an Argument of my Lord's Self-Murder; For they declared they were ſure 'twas true, for they ſaw him throw the Razor out of the Window. But thefe two Children were not the only Perfons that ſaw this Razor thrown out; for feveral others that very Morning my Lord died, declared, That the bloody Razor was thrown out of my Lord's Chamber-Window before my Lord's Death was known, and that a little Boy did endeavour to take up this Razor, but was prevented by the Maid, who took it up, and ran with it into the Houfe, and up Stairs, immediately whereupon my Lord's Death was difcovered. This Relation Robert Meake, before mentioned, did give the very Day of my Lord's Death, to Bampton and his Wife, (as they have depofed before the Lords). The ſame Account did the aforeſaid Ruddle give before Twelve of the Clock the Day my Lord died, to Hughes and Gladwin, as they have teſtified before the Lords. This Relation of thefe Two you find agrees exactly with what William Edwards declared. And that the throwing out this bloody Razor was commonly reported in the Tower juft after my Lord's Death was known, appears by the Teſtimony of feveral Perfons; for John Salifbury hath depofed, 'That being ſent as one of my Lord Ruffel's Guard to the Old-Bailey, as they were returning to the Tower that Morning, one met them in great haſte, and declared he juſt then came from the Tower, and that the Earl of Essex had cut his Throat in the Tower, and thrown the Razor out of the Window; upon which one replied to this effect, That my Lord had a good Reſolution, firſt to cut his Throat, and after to throw the Razor out of the Window. He farther teſtifieth, That when he came into the Tower, he heard it declared by feveral, that the bloody Razor was thrown out of my Lord's Chamber-Window before his Death was known.' Grimes and Boſſick both, likewiſe in the Tower that very Morning, have depofed, 'That the throwing out of this bloody Razor was talked of by feveral then in the Tower upon the firſt Difcovery of my Lord's Death, ſome then and there declaring, That they ſaw this bloody Razor ſo thrown out.' But if theſe many Teſtimonies will not ſatisfy, I ſhall next give you the Confefſion of him who declared he threw it out, and of the Sentinel who ſtood by my Lord's Lodging-Door, and confefſed he ſaw it thrown out.

VOL. III.

Mr. Samuel Story did farther depofe, 'That the very Day Major Webſter was taken up, to wit, the 21ſt of January 1688, as ſuſpected to be concerned in my Lord's Murder; the faid Webſter being then charged as concerned in my Lord's Murder, declared, 'He did nothing but throw the Razor out of my Lord's Chamber-Window.' Being asked, What made him throw the Razor out? He ſaid he was under ſuch a Conſternation, that he knew not what he did. Upon this Confefſion of Major Webſter, Lloyd confirm'd the ſame, ſaying, 'That it was indeed true that the bloody Razor was thrown out; for it was thrown out juſt over his Head, and a little Boy did endeavour to take it up; but the Maid came out of the Houfe, and took it up, and ran immediately in with it, and then difcovered my Lord's Death.' That this Maid did carry up the Razor, and then difcover my Lord's Death, farther appears by the Teſtimony of John Nuthill, who depofeth, 'That juſt before my Lord's Death was known, he was leaning over the Pales before Major Hawley's Houfe, and asked my Lord's Sentinel how his Lordship did? To which the faid Sentinel answered, Very well: And this Deponent did then obſerve a Maid run into the Houfe in great haſte, and up Stairs (when a Warder and another were coming down my Lord's Stairs, but declared nothing of my Lord's Death, as this Deponent could hear, who ſtood about fix Foot from them) but ſhe immediately came down, and cried, My Lord had cut his Throat. And this Informant did obſerve the faid Maid to have a Razor in her Hand, either as ſhe ran up Stairs, or as ſhe came running down.'

The ſeveral large Notches in the Razor, were Self-Evidences of its Fall from ſome Height upon an hard Body; for thofe Notches could not be made by my Lord againſt his Neck-bone, as a Surgeon fooliſhly or knaviſhly ſuggeſted to the Coroner's Jury.

To ſum up all in a Word with relation to this Particular. Major Webſter (one of the ſuppoſed Ruffians) confefſed he threw the bloody Razor out of my Lord's Chamber Window. Lloyd the Sentinel likewiſe own'd that he ſaw it thrown out. Edwards and Lodeman have depofed, That they did ſee the bloody Razor thrown out of my Lord's Chamber Window; four have depofed, That Edwards declared (juſt as he came from the Tower that Morning) he ſaw it thrown out. Three have ſworn that Lodeman gave this Relation as ſoon as ſhe returned from the Tower that very Morning; (and theſe Children, and their Relations, far diſtant from, and altogether Strangers to each other;) Two Soldiers in every part of their Relation, the very Day of my Lord's Death, did at two Places, far diſtant from each other, declare this Matter; and three more have depofed, That the throwing out of the Razor was generally diſcourſed in the Tower juſt upon the firſt Difcovery of my Lord's Death. This I do humbly conceive to be ſufficient to convince any but Prejudice itſelf, That the Razor was ſeen thrown out, and confequently that it could not be locked into the Cloſet with the Body, as Bomeney and Ruffel have depofed, or often declared. Whereas Bomeney ſwore before the Coroner, That peeping through a Chink of the Cloſet-Door, he ſaw the Razor; this appears to be impoſſible, conſidering the Poſition of the Razor, and the Circumſtances of the Chink.

For the Razor they all declare lay in the upper part of the Cloſet by the Cloſe-ftool, and the only Chink of the Door is in that part next the Chimney; now looking through that Chink when the Door is lock'd, you cannot ſee within three Foot of the Place where the Razor was ſaid to lie; this was about a Year ſince demonſtrated to the Right Honourable the Lord Lucas, now Governor of the Tower, and to ſeveral Gentlemen more.

The Maid, who is ſuppoſed to have taken up the Razor, denies it, and in her Defence faith to this Effect: 'That ſhe went out of her Maſter's Houſe almoſt half an Hour before my Lord's Death was known, and returned not until my Lord's Death was publick, and ſeveral People in the Houſe to ſee my Lord.' For ſhe tells this Story, 'That about half an Hour before my Lord's Death was difcovered, my Lord's Footman came to her, and told her, the Warder would not open the Wicket to let in my Lord's Proviſions that were brought, and therefore begged her to go to her Maſter (Mr. Hawley the Gentleman Porter) to deſire him to go to the Warder that kept the Gate, and order him to let in the Proviſions.'

She did accordingly go to her Maſter, who thereupon order'd the Warder to let in my Lord's Proviſions; and as they (viz.) my Lord's Footman, William Turner, and one Samuel Peck, and a Porter, were bringing the Proviſions, a Sentinel told them they were come too late; upon which, this Maid declares ſhe was ſurpriſed, and asked William Turner what ſhould be the Meaning of that Expreſſion, You are come too late; for ſhe did not underſtand it: whereto Turner answered, That he did ſuppoſe the Sentinel believed thoſe Proviſions to be my Lord Ruffel's, who being gone to his Trial, this Soldier might think he would never return again to the Tower, and ſo the Proviſions were brought too late. This (ſhe declares) ſhe then believed; but as ſoon as they came in Sight of her Maſter's Houſe, they admired to ſee ſo great a Crowd about the Door; but were ſoon too well ſatisfied in the Occaſion, for it was juſt before difcovered that my Lord of Essex had cut his Throat.'

But this is a forged Lye throughout; for William Turner, Samuel Peck, and the Porter, do all three declare, That the Maid was not with them whiſt they were bringing in the Proviſions, neither did the Warder that kept the Gate in the leaſt ſcruple the letting in my Lord's Proviſions; this they all ſay, they are ready to depofe.

All Men, I find, are to ſeek of the Reaſon that ſhould move theſe Men to throw the bloody Razor out of the Chamber-Window, before my Lord's Death was difcovered. But if we conſider the Amazement that might naturally ſeize theſe Men upon the leaſt Diſturbance in this Deed of Darkneſs, we muſt not expect that what is done under ſudden Confuſion, fuſion,

fusion should be according to the deepest Policy. And you find that Webster did confess, That when he threw the Razor out, he was under such a Confusion, that he knew not what he did. This Disorder might be occasioned by some one's coming up Stairs, who was not then privy to the Murder, before they had laid all things aside, as they designed they should be found by such as were not immediately concerned in it; and Webster having the bloody Razor in his Hand, which was designed to be laid by the Body, as the pretended Instrument of the feign'd Self-Murder; upon the coming up of one, of whom he was not aware, he, under a surprizing Fear of a Discovery, threw the Razor out of the Window, and the Maid was afterwards sent for it, and then was it laid by the Body as the pretended Instrument of Death. For this I have some Reason; which I think not fit now to publish.

That Major Webster was one of the Russians, and consequently might be the Man who threw this bloody Razor out of my Lord's Chamber-Window (as himself confessed), farther appears probable by his producing (that Day my Lord was murdered) the Earl's Pocket-Handkerchief all bloody, (the Handkerchief was known by the E, and Coronet upon it) and shaked it, saying, There was the Blood of a Traytor; and the very next Morning a Purse of Gold of 49 Guineas, and a Pistole, which, rejoicing, he produced to some of his Neighbours, and immediately after my Lord's Death lived at a Rate much above his Quality, (being a poor Alehouse-Keeper, and Under-Bailiff of the Tower-Liberty) and (as I have been credibly informed) in some few Months after my Lord's Death, lost at Gaming several Hundreds of Pounds, which made those that had well known his Poverty, conclude he robbed. But ill got, ill spent; for his Extravagancy and Losses soon reduced him to his former Necessity; whereupon one upbraiding his Wife (or his Whore as he now calls her, for he saith he never married her, and therefore though she is living, he keeps or hath married another;) I say, upbraiding his Wife with her Husband's Poverty, she replied, That her Husband not long before, had Five Hundred Guineas; whereupon the other declared he could not come by them honestly, for his Trade would scarce find him Bread. In Alehouse-Keeping he run very deep in the Brewer's Debt; but just after my Lord's Murder, he paid his Brewer Thirty Guineas in Part, which made the Brewer wonder how he came by so much Gold. But not discharging the whole Debt, and beginning to contract new, the Brewer sued him, and at last in Execution seized his Goods; whereupon Major Hawley (for what reason is not unsuspected) was a daily Solicitor to the Brewer for this Webster, and at last offered a considerable Sum in discharge of the Debt.

This Webster very much abusing his Wife (or Whore) she told him, 'That he was a Fool as well as a Rogue, to abuse her so, when he knew 'it was within her Power to hang him, and one in the Tower, and naming ' (as I have been informed) Major Hawley for the Man in the Tower.' A great part of this is deposed, and the whole ready to be proved.-----But farther, to disprove my Lord's cutting his Throat in the Closet:

Had my Lord cut his Throat standing in the Closet, that part of the Wall as high as his Throat would have been all bloody; for the Closet being about three Foot and two Inches wide, it could not be otherwise; for the Blood out of so large an Orifice might have gushed five Foot. Or, if my Lord had cut his Throat kneeling, the Blood in the Wall would then have been as high as his Throat might have been in that posture. But there was no Blood a Foot higher than the Floor, therefore he could not cut his Throat either standing or kneeling. Neither can it be supposed to be done lying along, for then the Wound beginning at the Left-side, (and his Lordship being Right-handed) and ending at the Right, the Razor would have lain on the Right, whereas the Razor lay on the Left-side of the Body. But left the Circumstances of the Body, as first pretended to be found, might prove a detection of this Villany, care was taken that before the Coroner's Jury saw the Body, the Body should be stripped, and the Clothes carried away, and the Room and Closet washed, so that the Body might appear as naked of its first Circumstances, as it was of its Clothes. This Particular was so notoriously irregular, or rather criminal in some degree, that all Men know the Law requires the contrary. For by the first Posture of the Body, with the Circumstances of the Clothes, &c. great Light may be given to the true Manner of his Death. But that in this Case was not to be discover'd, and therefore such Practices were necessary. My Lord's Clothes were not only carried away, but when demanded by the Jury, as what might be serviceable in their Inquisition, the Coroner was upon this Question immediately called into the next Room, and returning, told the Jury, It was the Body, and not the Clothes, they were to sit upon; the Body was there, and that was sufficient. It is an unhappiness the Coroner hath forgot (as he swears) who those were which were in the next Room, whilst the Jury sat, and to whom, whilst they sat, he did several times go; but had the Jury seen the Clothes upon the Body in its full Posture, these would of themselves have convinced them, that my Lord of Essex was murdered; for how could there be a print of a bloody Foot upon my Lord, and yet none (as they pretended) had been in the Closet with him? Or how could his Lordship with such an Instrument as the Razor, cut twice through the Neck of his Cravat? For Alice Carter and Mary Johnson, who (together with Major Webster) stripped the Body, have declared, as hath been deposed, the Neck of my Lord's Cravat was cut in three Pieces. The Circumstances of the pretended Instrument of Death gives strong suspicion of the Murder; for the pretended Instrument of the Self-murder, was a French Razor about four Inches and a quarter in its Blade, and no Spill or Tongue at the end; wherefore this Razor in its use must be held by the very Blade, and not less than two Inches of that could well suffice to be held in his Hand for that Strength and Steadiness the Cutting twice through the Cravat, and afterwards so deep in the Neck, required. And then the Wound, if made at once, would not have been above two Inches and a Quarter deep, no more of the Blade being outside the Hand, which length could not at once possibly make a Wound above three Inches in depth; I do suppose none do believe his Lordship cut twice to effect it.

The largeness of the Wound at first, did make very ingenious Physicians and Surgeons say, That they supposed it impossible for any Man to cut his Throat, according as the two Surgeons upon my Lord's Body deposed, the Wound being such, both Jugulars and Arteries quite divided, and cut to the very Vertebres of the Neck: now in cutting the first Jugular Artery, there would immediately have issued such a quantity of Blood and Spirits, as would have soon incapacitated him from dividing the second; and tho' as ingenious an Anatomist as most in England, before their Lordships would not say that he thought it impossible his Lordship should so cut his Throat; yet he did confess, that he never saw or heard of any before, who cut through both Jugulars and Arteries to the Neck-bone, as my Lord's was cut. This Gentleman for some Years having been Physician to Bedlam, he may be supposed to have as many Instances of Self-violences as any Physician in England; and of all Men, none do it with that good will and vigour as the Distracted do, and therefore should make the deepest and largest Wound. But I think I need not insist in this Case upon such Arguments, considering what is before said to be proved. Now to proceed with the Jury.

These Gentlemen, had they not been hurried into their Inquisition (as you will hereafter find they were) by the Body as it was left naked, upon a strict view might well have been satisfied his Lordship fell not a Self-sacrifice; for it's proved there were Five Cuts in his Right-hand (viz.) * one almost on the top of the Fore-finger, and another upon the same near the Hand; † one upon the Fourth-Finger, and another upon the Little-Finger, and ‡ a fifth about two Inches long in the very Palm of the Right-hand; can it be supposed that his Lordship made these Wounds (and that upon his Right-hand) for trial how sharp the Razor was, and how well it would perform what he designed to execute? These Cuts cannot be supposed to be made by holding the Razor. No, these were previous to that direful Cut; and the effects of his struggling with those bloody Men, when he so often cried out, Murder, Murder, Murder; as he then used his Tongue to discover, so did he likewise his Hands to prevent that treacherous Wound he perceived designed for his Destruction; and in thus striving to put off the Instrument of Death, did his Right-hand receive these several Wounds. Mr. Fisher, one of the Coroner's Jury, hath deposed to this effect: 'That he asked Bomeney, whether his Lord was not esteemed a good Man, for such he had heard him represented? Bomeney answered, As good a Man as lived. Upon which Fisher said, Then it was very strange so good a Man should be guilty of so bad an Action, for nothing could be worse than Self-Murder; whereupon Major Hawley told Fisher, Whoever thought that Action unlike his Lordship, did not know my Lord of Essex; for every one that was but well acquainted with the Earl, knew 'it was his Lordship's fixed Principle, That any Man might cut his own Throat, or otherwise destroy himself, to avoid a dishonourable and infamous Death, and therefore this was like my Lord of Essex's avowed Principle.' Fisher believing this to be true, was the more easily inclin'd to believe that his Lordship had followed such his own fixed Principles. But when Major Hawley was questioned for this Suggestion to the Jury, he positively deny'd it, and for Answer saith, that he was not nigh the Victualling-House in the Tower all the time the Jury was there considering of their Inquisition: And as for the Principle, he could not say it, for he never heard it said to be my Lord's Principle, till their Lordships charged him with having suggested it. I know it is commonly discoursed about Town, that such was his Lordship's Principle; and this was industriously spread immediately upon my Lord's Death; but observe, Major Hawley was the Man that suggested this to the Jury, that they might the more easily believe the Self-Murder. And the Major's now denial of this Suggestion, or that he ever heard it said to be my Lord's Principle, when the Matter is positively sworn against him (I think) naturally argues that this was a false, forg'd, and maliciously invented Story by that bloody Party that murdered my Lord, and Hawley the Man by them pitch'd upon as the most proper Person to corrupt the Jury (the then proper legal Judges of the Manner of my Lord's Death) with this treacherous and villainously contriv'd Suggestion; so that the Jury might the more easily be inclin'd to believe my Lord's Self-Murder upon Evidence as inconsistent as false. And the Major's disowning that he was near the Jury at the Victualling-House whilst they were upon their Inquiry, implies his being conscious that he was there for a very ill purpose, and therefore thought it not safe to own his being with them; but he was too officiously there, not to be remembered; for when some of the Jury moved for Adjourning their Inquisition, in order to the giving notice to my Lord's Family; so that if any Thing could be proved on my Lord's Behalf, it might be by them heard; Hawley immediately enters a Caveat, and prevents it; for he tells the Jury, That they could not Adjourn, but must immediately dispatch their Inquiry; for His Majesty was then in Council, and had sent for their Inquisition, and would not rise till it was brought him. This further Suggestion caused the Jury to make more haste than good speed; and so, without that time which was convenient, ended their Inquisition. But Major Hawley denies this likewise, and protests, He was not nigh the Jury at the Place, or did at all thus hasten them. But this is positively sworn against him by some of the Jury; and many of the Jury declare they remember the Major with them at the Victualling-House. The Indiscretion in the Coroner and his Jury, I cannot but observe; which was, their suffering Bomeney and Russell to come together, and hear each other's Examination; and, which was more foolish, to permit Bomeney, when he began to hesitate in his Examination, (which alone gave reasonable Grounds of Suspicion that he was telling a Lye; for Truth would have readily occur'd; but Lies were first to be invented, before they could be given in Evidence,) to write his own Examination; and not only so, but in the Room next the Jury, where his Tutors were ready to instruct him: And yet, after all, this forged Deposition needed further Amendments at Whitehall, (as you will immediately hear) for as it was sworn, it was not thought fit to be exposed. All Men must agree, That the Circumstances in which Bomeney and Russell

Good related to my Lord at the time of his Death, render'd them highly to be suspected as privy to my Lord's Death, if not acting in it, in case my Lord did not destroy himself: For, could Ruffel keep my Lord's Chamber-Door (as himself upon Oath confesses), and be ignorant of what Violence was offered to his Lordship within the Chamber (the Room not being fourteen Foot square)? Or could Bomeney be waiting on his Lord in the very Chamber, and a Stranger to the true manner of his Death? Wherefore, in common Discretion and Justice, these Two (and Monday, the other Warder, who first that Morning kept the Chamber-Door, with the Sentinel that kept the outward Door) should upon the first Discovery have been seized, and separated, and kept apart, and examined apart, so that neither might have been privy to the other's Examination, by which the Truth would have been soon detected; for had my Lord destroyed himself, all their Depositions would have so harmonized (though separately and crossly examined) that the Truth would the more plainly have appeared; whereas, on the other hand, in case his Lordship fell by Treachery, then such Proceedings would have immediately discovered it to the Jury; for then these Warders, and Servants, and Sentinel, not being able to foretell what Questions the Jury would ask them, consequently could not previously agree upon their Answers. And should their Examinations, upon this Management, have materially interfer'd, and thwarted each other, (as it is natural to suppose they would, for though Truth be still the same, yet Lies are almost infinite,) these Depositions would have been so far from proving my Lord a Self-Murderer, as they would have plainly discovered the contrary, and these Men guilty in a most perfidious and barbarous Connivance.

For, admitting that these Men, upon their cross and separate Examination, should have answered the Jury as it is before represented (which is according to their own Oaths, or repeated Relations,) can it be supposed that any Coroner and Jury could be so void of common Sense and Honesty, as to give credit to such, and so many Contradictions? But, alas! such fair Practices were not to be expected, where such a foul Villany was to be concealed. And therefore, instead of securing apart the two Warders, Servant, and Sentinel, poor William Turner and Samuel Peck (whose Depositions are before mentioned) were to be locked up close, (with Bomeney for a Colour,) as though these two Men were more to be suspected than my Lord's two Keepers. And thus in Custody were these two innocent Men kept, whilst the two Warders and Sentinel, more to be suspected Criminals, were permitted to go at large. But this was contrary to his then Majesty's Command: For as soon as King Charles the Second (then in the Tower) had heard of my Lord's Death, he did immediately send the Lord Allington, Sir C---, and Thomas Howard, Esq; to my Lord's Lodgings, with Orders, That such as were attending upon my Lord at the time of his Death, should be secured and examined, and all Things to remain till the Coroner's Jury had seen the Body. In Obedience to which Command, Sir C--- coming into the Lodgings began to take some Examinations; but was soon interrupted by one, who told Sir C---, His Majesty did command him immediately to go to the Old Bailey, and give notice to the then Attorney-General of my Lord's Death, and to know what was to be done therein. Sir C--- by the same Gentleman desired his Majesty's Leave to finish those Examinations he was then upon; but the same Messenger came the second time, with positive Orders (as from His then Majesty) for Sir C---'s immediate going in Obedience to this repeated Command. Sir C--- went: But Sir C--- remembers not who this Gentleman was, which thus twice came with Orders as from his then Majesty. It is a great Misfortune, Sir C--- remembers not; for by the Messenger (it is strongly suspected) it would be soon found, His then Majesty's Authority (in this Command) was used by him, who too often abused it.

This great haste to the Old Bailey, when that great Patriot, (but unfortunate) Lord Ruffel was there Trying, and the indirect use, by malicious Application of this pretended Self-Murder to the taking off him, of whom we were no longer worthy—This gave to an Honourable Person then upon the Bench just Grounds to suspect, that this Noble Earl was murdered without Form of Law, the more easily to destroy that Great Lord under colour of Justice.

The Coroner's Inquisition, and the Depositions of Bomeney and Ruffel being carried in all haste to Whitehall, in order to their immediate publication, they were there perused; and it being found that Bomeney and Ruffel had point-blank contradicted each other (for the first, as before observed, had sworn the delivery of the Razor the Day before my Lord's Death; and the second, that it was not delivered till the Day of his Death): these Contradictions were not thought convenient to be exposed, lest they should give just Ground of Suspicion that the whole was forged; and therefore a Reconciler was ordered to amend the one, so it might be agreeable to the other, it matter'd not how inconsistent or contradictory they were in the Original, for those could be seen by none but the Coroner himself, in whose Custody they were; and it was to be supposed, that the Coroner would not then dare to contradict what Authority had ordered so to be printed; and hereupon was that Alteration made, as was before observed, in Bomeney's Information, page 899, but this done (as some Years since observed by an ingenious Author upon this Occasion) without the least congruity either to Sense or Grammar; for nothing can be more apparent, than that the foregoing part of the Information relates wholly to Thursday: but at last, without any regard to what Bomeney had before sworn, on Friday the 13th Instant is foisted in, contrary to all Rules of Grammar, and common Measures of Sense as well as Justice, which justly esteems this printed Information forged. This forged Reconciliation is done with the greatest incongruity and absurdness, as well as falseness imaginable; and I know not whether the Folly of the Suborner (for without doubt the Suborner and Reconciler in this case are the same, or of the same Stamp) or the Perjury of the suborned in that false Information, be most conspicuous.

The Soldiers that were in the Tower that Morning my Lord was murdered, having made such Discoveries as satisfied them my Lord was treacherously taken off; they used too great freedom in their Discourse with relation thereunto; and therefore (as Robert Meake declared to two who have deposed it) 'An Officer called several of them together, and under severe Threatening enjoined them not to speak one Word of what they had either seen or heard with relation to my Lord's Death. Wherefore the said Meake desired his Friends not to divulge what he had told them; for should it be known, it would prove his Ruin: But some short time after Meake declared (as three have deposed) That he did believe he should be privately murdered for what he knew and had said with relation to my Lord's Murder, and therefore he desired Bampton or Davidson (as they have both sworn) to keep him Company that very Day, for he much feared he should that very Day be destroyed. But both of them (fearing the Danger themselves might be in) refusing, that very Night was the said Meake thrown into the Tower-Ditch. As for Ruddle before-mentioned, all the Information I can have of what is become of him, is, That not long after my Lord's Death he was drawn out of the Tower, and sent to the East-Indies, and at Fort St. George shot to Death, but for what Reason I cannot learn. There was one Mr. Hawley, a Warder in the Tower that very Morning my Lord was murdered, and by what he had observed with relation thereunto, he had Reason to declare to a Friend, That it was a Piece of Villainy throughout. This Mr. Hawley being in Westminster-Hall whilst I was upon my Trial, said, He wondered what made me stir in it, when to his Knowledge I knew nothing of the Matter; upon which one Mr. B. said, Mr. Hawley, if you know Mr. Braddon knows nothing in this, what must you know? To which Mr. Hawley made no Reply. But this Gentleman's Knowledge in the Matter cost him too dear; for about March next after my Lord's Death, being missing, one of the Warders suspected to be a Papist, said, Mr. Hawley had been prating about the Earl of Essex's Death, and therefore was forced to fly. But six Weeks discovered how he fled; for he was then found in a River by Rocheſter so changed through the Barbarity he had met with, that neither his Face or Body could be known by his nearest Relations; and his Clothes were all taken off except his Stockings and Shoes, by which he was discovered to be the Man; for he wore three Stockings upon one Leg, and two Stockings and a Cere-Cloth upon the other, and (as I have been informed) the Lining of the Toes of his Shoes cut out. By these remarkable Circumstances his Wife knew him. She had used all possible Diligence for finding her Husband; in order to which she offer'd in several Gazettes an Hundred Pound Reward to any that could discover his Body dead or alive, but it was six Weeks before he was found. Several of the Soldiers in the Tower, that Morning my Lord was murdered, I have been inquiring after, but have been told they were killed in the West against the late Duke of Monmouth.

But considering what Fate befel Hawley, Ruddle and Meake, before-mentioned, I have Reason to suspect that others may likewise have been murdered by Way of Prevention.

Besides such Addition of Blood, other violent Methods were used to prevent a Discovery, by punishing such Soldiers as seemed to disbelieve (upon very good Grounds) my Lord's Self-Murder: This appears by his Information following:

Richard Jordan declareth, 'That (some time that Summer the Earl of Essex died, and not long after the said Earl's Death) he saw a Soldier tied to the Wooden-Horse in the Tower (by Order of Lieutenant Colonel Nichols) and whipt after a very cruel Manner.' And this Deponent heard the said Lieutenant Colonel tell the Soldier, he ought to be hanged. This Deponent further declareth, 'That he was just after informed by the Marshal that whipt the said Soldier, that by Order of Lieutenant Colonel Nichols, he gave the said Soldier 53 Stripes (tho' the usual Number was but 12), and that the said Soldier had lain a Fortnight before in close Custody, and been fed with Bread and Water, and all only for the Offence following; (viz.) Some short Time after the Death of the late Earl of Essex a Dr. H. of Norwich coming into the Tower, the said Soldier was sent with him to shew him the Tower; and as the Doctor was almost over-against Major Hawley's, the Doctor asked the said Soldier, Which was the Chamber wherein the late Earl of Essex did cut his Throat? whereupon the said Soldier (pointing to the Chamber in which the Earl had been Prisoner) said, That is the Chamber in which it is said the Earl of Essex cut his Throat. The Doctor then asked the Soldier, what he did believe? To which the Soldier answered, That he did believe in God; but being prest by the said Doctor to tell him, whether he did believe my Lord cut his Throat? the Soldier then replied, he would not say he did believe it; for which only saying, the Punishment aforesaid was inflicted.

And the more effectually to prevent any Discourse that might give the least credit to my Lord's being murdered, our then Misgovernment took all possible Care to punish, or rather oppress such as should declare their Belief thereof; amongst which one of the Coroner's Jury upon the Earl's Body, suffered under this Tyranny; for this Man, sometime after my Lord's Death, discoursing concerning the Earl's Death, and the several Irregularities which he observed practised upon my Lord's Body before they saw it, and how they were not permitted to make that Inquiry which was necessary; said to this effect: 'That he did believe they (viz. the Coroner's Jury) were all infatuated to bring my Lord in Felo de se; but he did suppose, had they not been hurried into their Inquisition, they should have found it otherwise.' For this Discourse this honest poor Man was prosecuted upon Information, and fined (at first I have heard) 300*l.* but it appearing he was very poor, his Poverty prevailed for a mitigation of his Fine; and his Age and great Infirmities of Body (together with the charitable Intercession of a Gentleman of Interest in the then times) avoided the corporal Punishment which he had otherwise undergone.

If such Practices as these were used by our then Court to prevent my Lord's but being suspected to be murdered, it could not be supposed that any Encouragement should be given to a full Detection, and therefore all Proposals in order thereunto, were to be rejected; an Instance whereof was as followeth, (viz.)

About six Weeks after My Lord's Death, there was a Letter (unsealed) left with one Mr. Cadman, then living at Durham-Exchange; the Letter was was directed to the Right Honourable the Countess Dowager of Essex; the Substance of this Letter was, 'That if her Honour could prevail with the King for the Author's Pardon, he would ingenuously make a full Discovery, how, by whom, and whose Order my Lord was Murdered: and this Letter did assure her Honour, that the DUKE of YORK and — were authorizing this Murder.'

This Letter was subscribed P. B.

By the Hand that writ it, and the Letter subscribed, it was Paul Bomeney before-mentioned, who did once blasphemously say, 'That he could as well tell how my Lord came by his Death, as God Almighty himself;' for the Letter was fairly writ, in an Hand between a Roman and an Italian, and such an Hand Bomeney, when he would write fair, did write; besides, the two Letters subscribed, are the Letters of his Name.

I do suppose it may be objected, That this Letter cannot be thought to be writ and subscribed by Bomeney; for the Letter, had it been brought in Accusation against him, and prov'd to be his, would have cost him his Life, seeing herein he confess'd himself Guilty of the Fact.

But, with Submission, I think Bomeney by this Letter, could it have been proved to be his own Writing, was in no Danger at all of being punished; for had they seized Bomeney, they would have caught a Tartar; should they have proceeded against him for this Murder, upon this Confession, the World would have believed the whole Contents of this Letter to be true; and consequently that the Duke of York and — authorized (or rather commanded) this most treacherous Murder. And then pray consider what that Government could have got by such Prosecution, Conviction and Punishment.

This Letter was carried by Cadman to a Justice of Peace, and by him to the Secretary of State: But this Bookfeller was never sent for, nor any Enquiry made after the Author.

The Backwardness of the then Government in not examining into the Matter, gave just Grounds of Suspicion they were too well satisfied in the Truth of the Contents; which was of such a Nature, as it could not bear an Inquisition; for that would have centered in His Ruin, who was then by Blood and Cruelty, and other illegal and oppressive Methods, endeavouring the total Subversion of our Church and State; and this by the Removal of some of the Chief of those noble Lords and Worthy Gentlemen, who had ever opposed their Arbitrary Designs. Amongst which, this Noble Lord and the Right Honourable the Lord Russell they did esteem two of the Chief.

Had none then in Authority and Power been concerned in this barbarous Treachery, and had our then Government had the least Desire to know this Truth, in order to a just Punishment of those bloody Villains; with what Diligence would they have search'd out the Author, who desired no other Reward than the Security of his Life; and in order to his Indemnity (if they could no otherwise have found him out) a Proclamation of Pardon would immediately have been issued forth, by which the Author would have been assured of his Life; and then, without doubt, according to his Promise would have laid open this bloody Deed of Darkeness? Hath our Age ever seen or known recorded, any Murder (admit this one) committed within this Kingdom, that hath been (all its Circumstances considered) attended with such Aggravations? We have seen a Reward of 200*l.* (as well as a Pardon) by Proclamation offered for the Discovery of those bloody Ruffians, who barbarously wounded but (design'd to have murdered) that worthy Gentleman, Mr. Arnold. And was there not 500*l.* and a Pardon by Proclamation promised to Him or Them that should detect the Murder of Sir Edmundbury Godfrey? Such Means as these would have been likewise in this Case used, if such who then misled Charles II. and corrupted the State, had not been the deepest in this black Contrivance.---

This Bomeney, soon after my Lord's Death, gives an eminent Divine an Account to this Effect: (viz.) 'That his Lord did use to be taken with sudden frenzied Passions; and in particular, with one that Morning he died, just before his Death: For (said this vile Judas), as soon as my Lord saw my Lord Russell go to his Trial, he struck his Breast, and said, Himself was the Cause of my Lord Russell's Misery, seeing he had vouched for that Gentleman whose Treachery would prove my Lord Russell's Ruin, &c. and hereupon fell almost distracted'.---But this Fellow's repeated Oaths give the Lye to this Forgery. Before the Coroner, in the Conclusion of his first

* Pag. 918. * Deposition, he swears, 'That on Thursday-Night, (which was the Night before his Lord's Death) the Earl was very merry at Supper, AND DID NOT SEEM TO BE DISTURBED THE NEXT DAY.' And when one of the King's Counsel at my Trial, ask'd such a Question as seem'd either to imply my Lord's being Melancholy, or else would have had Mr. Bomeney---for the Question was thus worded, (viz.) 'Did you observe your Melancholy, Mr. Bomeney?' Bomeney answered, Yes; but we took no Notice of it; for he us'd to be so, and we had no Reason to suspect any Thing more than ordinary.'

Had this Varlet rested in the general Affirmative, without proceeding farther, his Answer would (it's probable) have better served the Design of the Question: but by the latter part of his Answer, he destroy'd that Service which the first Word [Yes] might have otherwise done. And observe what a point-blank Contradiction this Evidence at the Trial is to what he depose (before the Coroner) the very next Day after my Lord's Death, when (had this been true) it would have been fresh in his Memory, and he would (without doubt) have sworn it. But this was according to some After-instruction, not thought of at the Time of the Coroner's Inquest.

In the next place, I shall give you some Account of what was sworn against one Mr. Holland, so much talked of in this Affair, by which you will have some ground to suppose a more convenient Instrument than a Razor gave this barbarous and treacherous Wound.

The Information of Richard Davis of the Parish of St. Mary Somerset, London, School-master, taken before J. Cardran, Esq; Justice of the Peace for the County of Middlesex.

THIS Informant saith, That a little after the late Duke of Monmouth was routed in the West, one Mr. J. E. (to the best of this Informant's Remembrance) told this Informant, That it was almost universally whispered amongst the Acquaintance of Mr. John Holland, (formerly Servant to the Earl of Sunderland), That the said Mr. Holland had confes'd to one Mr. D. of his intimate Acquaintance, (and afterward concerned with Holland in the Robbery of Mr. Gatford, for which both were condemned, and the said D. executed, but Holland pardoned), That the said Holland was concerned in the Murder of Arthur late Earl of Essex, in which he was employed by the Earl of Sunderland, upon this occasion, (viz.) 'The said Mr. Holland one Day waiting on my Lord Sunderland, his Lordship seem'd much disturbed with Passion; upon which, the said Holland told his Lordship, That if his then coming to his Lordship had so discompos'd him, he would withdraw, and wait on his Lordship some more convenient time; whereupon my Lord said, That he should tarry, for it was not with him (the said Holland) that he was angry, but with others; and that he was concerned to think that of so many Servants his Lordship had made, and being so very kind to, he had not one he could trust, or would serve him (or Words to that Effect); upon which, the said Holland replied, He was then ready faithfully and punctually to observe his Lordship's Commands in any thing. My Lord then discover'd to the said Holland the designed Murder of the said Earl of Essex, and would have the said Holland therein to be engaged, to which the said Holland readily consented; and that the said Earl's Throat was cut with a large Knife, and not with a Razor.' And this Informant was then further inform'd, That the said Holland had further declared to the said D. That some People were afterwards made away for blabbing what they knew concerning the said Earl's Death; and that the said D. had charged the said Mr. Holland, before several of their Acquaintance one Day drinking together, with what the said Holland had confes'd to him the said D. as aforesaid; and that he the said Holland being so charged, seem'd much dejected, but could not deny it. This Informant further maketh Oath, that one D. P. about three Years since, did give this Informant almost the same Account with Relation to Holland and D. And the said D. P. did further tell this Informant, That when the said Holland and D. were committed to Newgate for robbing Mr. Gatford, the said D. P. went to see the said Holland in Newgate, to condole his Condition; but the said Holland was very cheerful, and told the said D. P. 'He was secure of his Life, and likewise not to want Money as long as the Earl of Sunderland was living.' The said D. P. did likewise then further tell this Informant, That the said Holland (as soon as he was committed to Newgate for the foresaid Robbery) sent to my Lord Sunderland for some Money, and that his Lordship sent him the said Holland sixteen Guineas. And this Informant hath been told by several, That the said Lord Sunderland hath many times supplied the said Holland with Money.'

When Holland was imprisoned for Mr. Gatford's Robbery in Newgate, my Lord Sunderland sent often thither, and took a more than ordinary Care of him; whereupon Major Richardson told my Lord's Gentleman, That he did much wonder his Lordship would be so kind to so profligate a Fellow. To which it was answered, That his Lordship had a very great Kindness for Holland, because he had been Servant to my Lord Spencer (my Lord Sunderland's Son); but it seems somewhat else was in the Matter; for it's depose'd by John Waytis, 'That observing Holland to be frequently furnished with Money by my Lord Sunderland, and ---, this Informant ask'd Holland how his Lordship became so kind to him? To which Holland replied (with his usual Phrase) Damn him, he had done that for him, that HE DURST NOT DO OTHERWISE. And when this Informant was once saying, It was whisper'd that the late Earl of Essex was murdered; Holland said, Damn him, it was not a Farthing matter if Twenty such were taken off.' He that so little valued the Lives of Twenty, would not in all probability much boggle to be concerned in the murdering One.

Holland writ a Letter to the Earl of Feversham, wherein he represented me as endeavouring to suborn him to appear an Evidence in the Case of the late Earl of Essex; which Letter was read in the House of Lords. But that which Holland falsely called Endeavours to suborn, I shall truly and faithfully (as it can be prov'd) declare, and appeal to every impartial Reader, Whether it deserves that infamous Name.

Having some reason to believe Holland one of the Ruffians, I did use all Means possible for his Apprehension; but I found that Holland lay very private, and, as I had reason to believe, designed to fly beyond Seas (as his own Letter before mentioned declared). Hereupon I applied myself to some of Holland's Acquaintance, and by them being brought to Mrs. Holland, I told her, That I had reason to believe her Husband was concerned in this villainous Murder, and herein I was confirmed by Mr. Holland's absconding; for Innocence desires a Trial, but Guilt still flies from Justice. I then told her, That if her Husband were really guilty of this Fact, and would immediately surrender himself, ingenuously declaring, how, by whom, with whom, and for what he'd to do this barbarous Murder, her Husband should have a general Pardon, and both Him and Her provided for: But if her Husband was innocent, (notwithstanding whatsoever was said to the contrary), and should take upon him a Crime (for any Advantage whatsoever) of which he was not guilty, he deserv'd to be Hang'd here and Damn'd hereafter, seeing by his Perjury he would make Justice an Instrument of executing the worst of Murders.---But if he were indeed the Man, and should surrender himself, and discover the whole Matter, he must be sure to keep within the Limits of Truth; for should he be detected in the least Perjury, no Man was ever more vigorously prosecuted, nor any more severely punished, than he (for such his Perjury) must expect to suffer.

These were the Arguments with which I would have suborn'd (as that Letter calls it) Holland to a full Discovery: And I do appeal to all the World, Whether, admitting this to be true, (as it will be proved when the occasion serves) I deserve this villainous Charge. For the Truth of this, I do appeal to the Consciences of Mrs. H. Mr. P. and Mr. S. with whom I several times treated in this Affair.

I shall now mention one or two more Objections against my Lord's being murder'd, and then draw to a Conclusion. The first is this, viz. The Right Honourable the Lady Countess Dowager of Essex, having heretofore declared (whether lately, I cannot say) That she did believe her Lord cut his own Throat; and being so possessed, some time after this Committee had several times sat, she desired several Lords (amongst which some were of this Right Honourable Committee) to meet at her House; and after her Honour had acquainted their Lordships with the occasion of her Request, an eminent Divine (and now Bishop) did inform their Lordships what were the Reasons that moved her Honour to believe that her Lord did indeed lay violent hands on himself; the Chief, if not the Only whereof, was, That some short time before my Lord's Commitment to the Tower, his Lordship seemed to be under a great concern of Mind; but then declared, That the Trouble he was in did not arise from any Thoughts of Self-preservation, for Himself was the least of his Care; but the Thoughts of his Family, what would after his Death become of them, was what did indeed trouble him: As for himself, he was resolved what to do; SEVERAL TIMES VERY RESOLUTELY REPEATING THAT EXPRESSION, AS FOR MYSELF, I AM RESOLVED WHAT TO DO. This I was told by a Gentleman then present, who (as I have great Reason to believe) would have represented every Thing to the best Advantage (as far as Truth would permit) on the Behalf of such Objections. But, with all Submission to such Judgments as are swayed with this Objection, I think it carries not that Force which many imagine: For is there nothing to which that Resolution of his Lordship might so probably have relation, as a Self-Destruction? Was that the only, or the most likely thing he was resolved to do? I do humbly conceive, a little Consideration may afford us both a more charitable Opinion of his Lordship's Resolution, and somewhat more probable than Self-Murder to be assigned as what his Lordship was resolved to do. For when I consider the Time when his Lordship was apprehensive of the like Danger as threatened him just before his last Imprisonment, (viz.) when my Lord Shaftesbury and my Lord Howard, &c. were committed to the Tower, and a Gentleman who had a very great Honour for his Lordship, (as all good Men had, who had the Honour to know him) in true Zeal for his Lordship's Preservation (having heard that the Court designed likewise to commit my Lord of Essex, and to take off many in Form of Law; or rather, that which they falsely called so), went to his Lordship, and informed him of what he had been told, and humbly submitted it to his Lordship's Judgment, Whether it were not proper for some time to withdraw, till the Fury of the Court by time was a little appeased? This Gentleman told his Lordship, He found by the Papists, that they did design to take off several; and his Lordship being to their Arbitrary and Popish Designs as great and profess'd an Enemy as any, he did fear his Lordship might not be safe from their pretended Justice, when once within their Power. My Lord hereupon smiled, and said very sedately, and yet very resolutely, That he would not stir, though he did expect the Court would proceed very far, not only to the Imprisoning, but against the Lives of many; and if God in his Providence should think fit to suffer him to fall a Sacrifice to the Malice and Rage of the Court, he did hope, and did not doubt, but the World should see that he could die with as GREAT RESOLUTION as ever his Father did; for he was ready at all times, and upon all Occasions, to lay down his Life for his Country.

Reflecting therefore on my Lord's declared Resolution of his not stirring, though then under the like Danger, as in this Case apprehended, and with what Readiness, Courage, and Cheerfulness he could lay down his Life for his Country; and likewise the Knowledge that he may be supposed to have of the then Court-Designs (which those Villains, nine Days before his Death declared; for it is * sworn the Papists then said, The Earl knew so much of their Designs, and was so very averse to their Interest, that they could never carry them on, UNLESS HIS LORDSHIP WAS TAKEN OFF; AND HIS LORDSHIP WAS THEREFORE TO BE MURDERED.) I say, when I consider these Things, and that the more this Honourable Lord knew of the black Intrigues of the Court, the more so good a Man, and so true a Patriot must be supposed to hate them; I can't but imagine that this brave State-Champion, when he had been once satisfied that the Court, under Colour of Law, would have taken him off, had RESOLVED AS TO HIMSELF, to lay open those Popish Arbitrary Court-Contrivances, and justified that just Design of standing upon their Guard; there was no other Way (under God) to defend what was so grossly invaded. Now, though his Lordship might suppose, by dealing thus plainly, he should the more exasperate the Court; so that their Malice would be more inveterately bent in his Destruction; yet that he declared he FEARED NOT, but was ready cheerfully to lay down his Life in so just a Cause. And should this daring true Lover of his Country have thus expired, by his State-Martyrdom, he would have given such Satisfaction in the Truth of what he thus courageously, with his last Breath, should have affirmed, as would have raised a general Hatred against those Arbitrary and Popish Court-Resolutions; and this might so suddenly have given another so general a Resurrection to that just Cause, as would have totally routed those true and only Enemies of both Church and State. Our then Enemies, under Colour of Law, were industriously endeavouring the total Subversion of our Laws; and whilst in shew they seemed to maintain the Protestant Church, they were secretly contriving its total Destruction, by wresting those very Laws which were chiefly designed as destructive to Popery, and making them productive of what they were enacted to destroy: For by a malicious and furious Prosecution of all Protestant Dissenters, they did hope to raise so general Animosities between the Conforming and Non-Conforming Protestants, that they might, through such Division, have an Opportunity to fulfil that notorious Jesuitical Maxim, Divide & Impera.

* Vid. D. Smith's Evidence first mentioned.

The late Earl of Essex had the least Reason to despair of the late King's Mercy; for should his Lordship have been convicted through False Evidence, or Corrupt Judgment in the Court, by their adjudging that to be Treason which the Law never made, or designed to make so, (as they did in the Case of the Right Honourable the Lord Russell, and some others;) no Nobleman in England had better Grounds than his Lordship to presume upon the late King's Mercy, seeing his Lordship's Father had sacrific'd his Life in that King's Service; wherefore his then Majesty had good Reason to declare (when His Highness, not many Hours before the Earl's Death, said, the Earl ought to be taken off) that he was resolved to spare his Lordship for what his Father had sacrific'd; (this you find before by * two sworn to be declared by Ruddle, who heard it that very Morning my Lord was murdered;) And this Account of Ruddle seems the more probable by what his then Majesty is generally said to have declar'd soon after he heard of that deplorable Accident, (viz.) That he did much wonder his Lordship should murder himself, and not trust to his Mercy, seeing he ow'd him a Life.

Considering therefore that his Lordship had so good Cause for Hopes of Mercy under the greatest Danger [even Conviction,] there is the less Reason to believe, THAT HIS LORDSHIP HAD RESOLVED TO DESTROY HIMSELF.—I find this Objection from the Right Honourable the Countess Dowager of Essex, hath been generally us'd as what should convince every Man that the late Earl did indeed cut his own Throat.—But I would fain ask those Gentlemen (who immediately run away with this as what is sufficient to answer whatsoever seems to prove the contrary), Whether it is within the Power of Belief or Disbelief of a Fact, either to alter the Nature, or destroy the Existence of a Fact. Most certainly none will be so ignorant as to assert, That any Thing becomes true by being believ'd, or false by being discredited, for then, according to different Persuasions, a Thing would be, and not be at the same time, which is impossible. Wherefore no Man should be implicitly swayed by the bare Belief, or Disbelief of another, (without knowing and examining the Reasons of that Belief, or Disbelief) for this is to act in the Belief of Matters of Fact, which we justly condemn in the Church of Rome in Matters of Faith.—But when the Truth of a Fact is question'd, and Reasons given pro & con, every Man is naturally swayed by those Testimonies which to him seem the strongest for the Proof, or Disproof of that Fact; and no Man (but such as are easily impos'd upon, or are willing to impose upon others) will oppose to such Evidences as naturally proves a Fact, another's bare Disbelief of the Fact. But before any unprejudic'd Person will be influenc'd (by another's Disbelief) against the Proof of the Fact, he will know, and well weigh the Grounds of that Disbelief, and compare their Strength and natural Efficacy with that Evidence that seems to prove the contrary; and having judiciously weigh'd both in an unprejudic'd Balance, which Side draws down, MUST naturally draw his Belief; for no Man can believe what he would, but every Man MUST believe according as his Judgment stands inclin'd to assent upon such Evidence as to him seems sufficient.—Prejudice, I must confess, naturally indisposes and corrupts Men on either Side according as they stand affected: For as some are induc'd to ASSENT upon such Evidence as is in itself INSUFFICIENT, so others many times DISSENT upon such as is SUFFICIENT. Amongst the first of these (viz.) the CREDULOUS, a Reverend B. some time since rang'd me. For tho' his Lordship (heretofore) did charitably excuse me from any Malice or ill Design, yet (as I have been credibly inform'd) he hath been pleas'd to say that I am of a very strong Imagination, and possess'd with a Fancy that a Thing is, without rational Grounds to believe the Thing to be. But I dare now appeal to his Lordship's own Judgment, whether Credulity is more justly chargeable on the Belief of the Self-Murder, or its contrary. That is to say, whether such as believe the late Earl of Essex murder'd himself, because his Lordship, some Days before his Death, several times declared, as for himself he was resolved what to do *. And because Bomeney pretended (contrary to what he twice swore) that morning of his Lordship's Death, my Lord was taken with a Fit of a Frenzy; and because Bomeney, Monday, Russell and Lloyd (the three latter being three of those † in whose Custody my Lord was, and who, as Mr. Attorney in his Information against Mr. Speke, and myself, sets forth, were consequently charged with my Lord's Murder) to save their own Lives, with Halts about their Necks, endeavour to prove his Lordship a Felo de se by their Relation, which in every Part is contradictory to each other.

For Bomeney first ‡ swore he delivered my Lord the Razor about Eight of the Clock in the Morning the very Day of his Death, and within two Hours ‖ depose'd, 'He did deliver this Razor to his Lordship about Eight of the Clock on Thursday Morning, the Day before his Death.' But Russell § depose'd, 'That he saw this Razor delivered by Bomeney about Eight or Nine of the Clock on Friday Morning (being the Day my Lord dy'd) and did ever declare, and still asserts, that this Razor was delivered AFTER Monday the Warder had left my Lord's Chamber-Door, and that it was delivered * within less than half an Hour of the time they found his Lordship dead in the Closet; both which † Monday (if Contradictions can) confirmed by declaring that this Razor my Lord had, and pared his Nails with it. When his Lordship's Chamber-Door was first opened that Morning (viz.) about Seven of the Clock, about two Hours BEFORE Russell came up Stairs to stand Warder at the Door; Bomeney first ‡ swore, that he first opened the Door upon my Lord's Body; in his § second Information depose'd, 'That he did not, but (seeing Blood, and Part of the Razor through the Chink) he call'd Russell the Warder, and Russell push'd the Door open; and in his third Oath declared, 'He knew not who open'd the Door.' Russell * depos'd before the Coroner, 'That he first open'd the Closet-Door, the Key being on the Outside (and he mentions no Difficulty in the doing it), but Monday † declared, The Day my Lord dy'd (and afterwards confirm'd the same) ‡ That my Lord's Body lay so close against the Door, that neither Bomeney nor Russell could stir the Door; but he, being much stronger than either, thrusting with all his might, broke it open.

These Men's Depositions and Relations THUS AGREEING in every Part in Proof of the Self-Murder, can't but satisfy all Men (except such as are, like myself, of strong Imaginations, and too easily inclined credulously to believe the contrary.) And whereas Bomeney,

It's † proved (I do humbly conceive, to the satisfaction of more than the Credulous) that there was a bloody Razor thrown out of my Lord's Chamber-Window (which is about sixteen Foot from the Closet where the Body lay) and the Maid who carried up this Razor, first discovered my Lord's Death to those out of the House (wherefore the Razor was afterwards laid by the Body for to colour the (pretended) Self-Murder); and when my Lord's Body was seen in the very Posture in which the Warders pretended it was first found, his Lordship's Legs lay part outside the Closet-Door (and therefore the Door could not be lock'd), and upon his Stocking the Print of a bloody Foot coming out of the Closet; wherefore somebody before that, and after my Lord was dead, had come out of the Closet.

Is there not rational Grounds from the many Contradictions before observed, for any Man (though not possessed with Prejudice against the Self-Murder) to believe that there was no Razor delivered to my Lord just before his Death, nor the Closet-Door lock'd upon the Body, or the Razor first found lying by the Body (as these have sworn, whose Interest and Lives depend upon the Proof of the Self-Murder) and consequently their Relation a Forgery throughout, by which they would prove his Lordship Felo de se.

But farther, to excuse from Partiality such as disbelieve the Self-Murder upon the Evidence before observed in all Parts contradictory; and from Credulity, because they are persuaded that his Lordship fell by Treachery and Violence, seeing they find it § sworn to this effect; (viz.) That about nine Days before my Lord's Death, the Papists declared, That because the Earl of Essex knew so much of their Designs, and was so very averse to their Interest, he was to be taken off; and that his HIGHNESS HAD CONCLUDED AND ORDER'D HIS THROAT TO BE CUT, and had promis'd to be there when it was done; and about three Days after these Men said that it was resolved the Earl's Throat should be cut, but they would give it out he had done it himself; and if any should deny it, they would take them up and punish them for it; and the very Day it was done, after my Lord's Murder, they seemed extremely overjoy'd, and confessed, THEY HAD DONE THE FEAT, AND COULD BUT LAUGH TO THINK HOW LIKE A FOOL THE EARL OF ESSEX LOOK'D WHEN THEY CAME TO CUT HIS THROAT. And that this is not a new-made Story, but long since revealed to many who did caution this Deponent to Secrecy, appears by the Testimony of six or seven Witnesses; and for a farther Confirmation of the Truth of that Consult, † three Depositions which were made to destroy the Credit of that Deponent, are detected, and (by † many Witnesses) proved false in every Part; but as farther rational Grounds (and not Strength of Imagination) for this barbarous Murder, † Eight Witnesses have proved, That before the Earl's Death, or before his Death could be known, was it reported in many Parts of England, that the Earl of Essex had cut his Throat in the Tower; all these several previous Reports agreed in the manner how, (viz.) cutting his Throat; and place where, (viz.) the Tower; (though at some of those Places when so reported, it could not be known that the Earl of Essex was a Prisoner in the Tower). And one of these previous Reports, the next Day after my Lord's Commitment, (viz.) the Wednesday, pretended to give the Reason wherefore the Earl cut his Throat (that is to say) because the King and Duke being in the Tower, he was afraid his (then) Majesty would have come up into his Chamber, and seen him; but his Guilt and Shame was such, as he could not bear the Thought of it, and therefore cut his Throat to avoid it: This being said about 60 Miles off, two Days before the King and Duke went to the Tower, and the very next Day after my Lord's Commitment; wherefore many that are not of too strong an Imagination credulously to believe without Grounds from those very particular previous Reports, as to Manner, Place, and pretended Reason, are apt to think that the MANNER HOW, THE PLACE WHERE, AND PRETENDED REASON (to be given out) WHEREFORE, were all previously agreed upon some Days before my Lord's Death; for they cannot perceive how my Lord's Death, in all its Parts (as it was afterwards pretended to be acted) could be so particularly related in so many, and far distant Places from each other.

of my Lord's Death declared, That they saw his HIGHNESS send two Men to the Earl's Lodgings to murder the Earl, and that his HIGHNESS did send two Men towards the Earl's Lodgings just before his Death, and that these two Men soon after returned, and said, The Business was done, appears by the † Testimony of him who saw His HIGHNESS send these Men, and their Return to His HIGHNESS: And it's farther* proved, that the Sentinel who kept my Lord's outward Door, confessed, by special Order he let in two or three to my Lord, (of which Webster was one, who that Night produced my Lord's bloody Pocket-Handkerchief, and the next Day a Purse of Gold of 40 Guineas and a Pistole, tho' he was very poor before) just before his Death; and that upon those Men's going into my Lord's Chamber, there was so great a trampling and bustling, that the Sentinel would have forced in after them, but could not, because the first Door was made fast; and that upon the Bustle, he heard somewhat thrown down like the Fall of a Man, which he did believe to be my Lord's Body; soon after which, it was pretended my Lord cut his Throat: And for what those Men were thus bustling, appears by the Murder which was several times very loud and very dolefully cried out during this Bustle; and this heard by † one who saw this bustling, and soon after revealed it, but was cautioned to Secrecy for her Safety, by † him who in this respect upon Oath hath confirmed the same: And that his Lordship made use of his Hand to prevent, as well as his Tongue to discover, that Villany, which he saw designed his Destruction, is verily believed by those who find it proved, of the Jury were doubtful of my Lord's Self-Murder, because his Lordship was (very deservedly) esteemed a very good Man, and therefore not to be thought Felo de se: Major Hawley, to remove this Objection, and to corrupt the Jury with a Lye, tells them to this effect, (viz.) That whosoever did believe Self-Murder unlike my Lord of Essex, did not know his Lordship, for every Man that was well acquainted with the Earl, knew that it was a fixt Principle in his Lordship, that any Man might cut his Throat, or otherwise dispose of his Life, to avoid a dishonourable and infamous Death; and therefore this Action was according to the Lord of Essex's avowed Principles. But when Major Hawley was charged (before the Lords) with this Suggestion, he did utterly deny it, and professed that he never heard it said to be my Lord's Principle, till their Lordships charged him with having suggested it, and therefore he could not suggest it: Besides, he was not nigh the Jury at the Victualling-house any time whilst they were there upon their Inquisition: But the Major had given them another reason not to forget his being then there; for (it is proved by one, and ready to be proved by many then present) that some of the Jury were for adjourning their Inquisition, and immediately to give notice to my Lord's Relations, so that if any thing could be proved on my Lord's behalf, it might be heard: This Major Hawley steps in and prevents it, by protesting † that his (then) Majesty had sent an Express for their Inquisition; and his Majesty had declared, That he would not rise from Council till it was brought, and therefore they could not adjourn, but must immediately dispatch. In answer to this, the Major protests that he was not near the Jury at that House, and so did not, or could hasten them. But the Major was so well known to the Coroner, Surgeons, and Jury, that it is highly improbable all should be mistaken.

The timing my Lord's Death, and the speedy hurrying it away to the Old-Bailey, and the immediate use that was made thereof as an Evidence from Heaven of his Lordship's Guilt, and of the Truth of the Charge against the Right Honourable the Lord Russell, then upon his Trial, and the corrupt Influence it had upon the Court, Counsel and Jury, (so that they did at one stroke virtually destroy two of as great Patriots as this Age or Nation ever knew, and of whom we were no longer worthy;) This might be used by impartiality itself as a probable Evidence of this treacherous Cruelty.

The unjust Methods and Violence used to prevent any search after, or discovery of this unfortunate Lord's Death, are farther rational Inducements for sober Men to believe this Murder, when they find that † I was committed as soon as I came to Whitehall with the Persons to be sworn with relation to my Lord's Death, and this before either myself, or any Person had been examined, and consequently before any thing criminal could appear against me: And afterwards Mr. Speke and myself prosecuted, and represented (especially myself) as the worst of Criminals, tho' nothing like a Crime was proved against me, admitting, for true, every thing sworn at my † Trial, where those in whose Custody my Lord was, § and consequently whom we would have accused of my Lord's Murder, were called a CLOUD of Witnesses to prove the Self-Murder.

† Vide p. 902.

The

The Prosecution of * one of the Coroner's Jury, for declaring, That he believed they (viz.) the Jury were all infatuated to find his Lordship Felo de se; but he did suppose, had they not been hurried, they might have found it otherwise; is another Instance of the Severity of the Government, with relation hereunto; and the cruel Usage of an * old Soldier, in feeding him with Bread and Water in the Hole, and afterwards causing him to receive Fifty-three Stripes with great Force (tho' the usual Number was but Twelve,) and then telling him, He ought to be Hanged for saying what he did, and so discarded him; and all this, only for declaring (when pressed to give his Opinion with relation to my Lord's Death,) Whether he did believe his Lordship cut his own Throat? declared, That he would not say he did believe it. But greater Cruelties than these, some bloody Men may be supposed to have used to prevent a Discovery of my Lord's Murder; for Mr. Hawley, who * KNEW THAT I KNEW NOTHING WITH RELATION TO MY LORD'S DEATH; and his too freely imparting his own Knowledge in the Matter, is thought to have caused him (not to run away, but) to be murder'd.

And honest Robert Meake * protested, the very Day he was murder'd, that he did fear that same Day he should be murder'd for what he knew and had declared concerning my Lord's Murder; and the very next Morning was found dead in the Tower-Ditch.

And whether poor Ruddle was shot to Death in the Indies, (where I've heard he so dy'd) for his knowing and revealing what he knew of this Murder, Time may discover.

To proceed no farther. Now whether that CLOUD of (Three or Four) * Witnesses, in whose Custody my Lord was, to avoid being charged with treacherously consenting to my Lord's Murder, with Halsters about their Necks, by Contradictions endeavouring to prove the Self-Murder,—or that GREAT CLOUD of (upwards of Sixty) Witnesses (for more have been, and will be examin'd with relation to my Lord's Murder) which swear not for their own Lives; but stand vesti in Curia, being Persons unprejudic'd, deserve the most Credit—must be left first to the Right Honourable the Lords, before whom this Cause will (in Convenient Time) be reviv'd; and afterwards to such other Judicatures before which this Matter may hereafter be brought; till when it is not proper to publish what might be farther said.——But I do humbly conceive I have herein already furnish'd you with sufficient Grounds to satisfy some (who have been deceiv'd by Misinformation) that there are more arguments than they could have expected, to clear his Lordship's Innocence, and less Reason for them to believe, that I have us'd such villainous practices as my greatest Enemies have suggested, or (as some of my pretended Friends would insinuate) am possess'd with such heat of Imagination, as credulously to believe a thing to be without rational Grounds to convince me that it is.

Sir, As you already have, so I doubt not but you will (as becomes a Friend) endeavour to rescue me from the Slanders of such as have unjustly accus'd me; and likewise from those Reproaches which have been uncharitably taken up against,

S I R,

CXXV. The Trial of Sir SAMUEL BARNARDISTON, Bar. at Nisi Prius at the Guildhall of London, for a Misdemeanour, Feb. 14, 1683. 36 Car. II.

THERE being in Hilary-Term last, an Information in the Court of King's-Bench preferred by His Majesty's Attorney-General against Sir Samuel Barnardiston, for a very great Misdemeanour: Upon Oath made, that he was so extremely indisposed, that he could not appear in Person without danger of his Life; The Court were pleas'd to respite his Recognizance, (which he by Order of the Lords of his Majesty's most Honourable Privy-Council entered into the last Vacation, to appear in Court the First Day of this Term) and to allow him the Liberty of Pleading to the Information by Attorney, which he did. And Thursday the 14th of February 1683, being the Session of Nisi Prius, after the Term holden for the City of London, and County of the same, was appointed for the Trial of this Cause, and accordingly then the same came on, and was tried before the Right Honourable Sir George Jefferies, Knight and Baronet, Lord Chief Justice of his Majesty's Court of King's-Bench, in this manner.

Clerk. Call away, Crier.
Crier. You good Men of Nisi Prius, summoned to appear here this Day between our Sovereign Lord the King and Sir Samuel Barnardiston, Baronet, answer to your Names, and save your Issues.

Cl. Thomas Vernon and his Fellows. Vous avez plein Inquest. Call the Defendant Sir Samuel Barnardiston.

Crier. Sir Samuel Barnardiston, come forth, or this Inquest shall be taken by your Default.

Mr. Williams. He appears.

Cl. Gardez vosfrs Challenges. Swear Thomas Vernon.

Cr. You shall well and truly try this Issue, between our Sovereign Lord the King and Sir Samuel Barnardiston, according to your Evidence. So help you God.

Cl. Percival Gilburn. Who was sworn, and so the rest.

The NAMES of the Twelve were these.

JURORS.

Thomas Vernon,	James Wood,	Kenelm Smith,
Percival Gilburn,	Robert Masters,	Thomas Goddard.
Edward Boverly,	Samuel Newton,	Thomas Amy, and
William Withers, Sen.	George Torriano,	Richard Blackburn.

Then they were counted, and Proclamation made for Information, in usual manner.

Mr. Poultney. May it please your Lordship, and you Gentlemen of the Jury; this Cause is between the King and Sir Samuel Barnardiston, and it is upon an Information exhibited by Mr. Attorney-General, wherein he sets forth, That there having been lately a horrid Plot discovered (as appears by the Convictions of those that have suffered justly for it, and by the Evidence that has been given of it, has been made so apparent, that I do not question, but that no Man, but who either has a Hand in it, or else bears a good Will to it, doth at all scruple the belief of it,) Sir Samuel Barnardiston, the Defendant, intending to scandalize and vilify the Evidence, wrote a Letter, wherein are contained these Sentences.

'The Return of the Duke of Monmouth to Whitehall, and his being received into extraordinary Favour of His Majesty, hath made a strange Alteration of Affairs at Court: For those that before spake of him very indecently, now court, cringe, and creep to him. His Grace complain'd to the King of the scandalous Misrepresentation that was made of him in the Monday's Gazette, upon which the Gazetteer was called to Account for it, who alledged for himself, That a Person of great Quality sent him in Writing the Words therein recited, commanding him to put them in the Gazette. Yesterday being the last Day of the Term, all the Prisoners that were in the Tower upon the late Sham Protestant Plot, were discharged upon Bail. Mr. Braddon, who prosecuted the Murder of the Earl of Essex, the Information put in against him in the King's-Bench by Mr. Attorney, for a pretended Subornation, &c. was not prosecuted, and his Bail was discharged. And the passing Sentence upon the Author of Julian the Apostle, and the Printer of the late Lord Russell's Speech, was pass'd over in Silence. Great Applications are made to His Majesty for the pardoning Mr. Sidney in the Tower, which is believed will be attained, and that he will be banished. The Lord Howard appears despicable in the Eyes of all Men; he is under Guard at Whitehall, and 'tis believed he will be sent to the Tower, for that the Duke of Monmouth will accuse him concerning the Testimony he hath given, and the Papists and High Tories are quite down in the Mouth, their Pride is abated, themselves and their Plot confounded, but their Malice is not asswaged. 'Tis generally said, the Earl of Essex was murdered. The brave Lord Russell is afresh lamented. The Plot is lost here, except you in the Country can find it out amongst the Addressers and Abhorers. This sudden Turn is an Amazement to all Men, and must produce some strange Events, which a little Time will shew.'

And then he goes on further, and says in another Letter these Words: 'I am to answer yours of the 27th and 29th past, and truly I cannot but with great Sorrow lament the Loss of our good Friend honest Mr. John Wright; but with Patience we must submit to the Almighty, who can as well raise up Instruments to do his Work, as change Hearts, of which we have so great an Instance in the Business of the Duke of Monmouth; that no Age or History can parallel. I am now thoroughly satisfied, that what was printed in the Monday's Gazette is utterly false, and you will see it publickly declared so shortly. The King is never pleased but when he is with him, hath commanded all the Privy-Council to wait upon him, and happy is he that hath most of his Favour. His Pardon was sealed and delivered to him last Wednesday. 'Tis said, he will be restored to be Master of the Horse, and be called into the Council-Table, and to all his other Places, and 'tis reported he will be made Captain-General of all the Forces, and Lord High-Admiral, &c. He treats all his old Friends that daily visit him with great Civilities, they are all satisfied with his Integrity; and if God spares his Life, I doubt not but he will be an Instrument of much Good to the King and Kingdom. He said publickly, That he knew my Lord Russell was as Loyal a Subject as any in England, and that His Majesty believed the same now. I intend shortly to wait on him myself. It would make you laugh to see how strangely our High Tories and Clergy are mortified, their Countenances speak it. Were my Sheforary to be moved for now, it would be readily granted. Sir George is grown very humble. 'Tis said Mr. Sidney is reprieved for Forty Days, which bodes well.'

And then, Gentlemen, he goes on further; and in a third Letter says, 'The late Change here in Publick Affairs is so great and strange, that we are like Men in a Dream, can hardly believe what we see, and fear we are not fit for so great a Mercy as the present Juncture seems to promise. The Sham Protestant-Plot is quite lost and confounded. The Earl of Macksfield is bringing Actions of Scandalis Magnatum against all the Grand Jury-Men that indicted him at last Assizes.'

L. C. J. *. This is the only true thing in the * Sir George Jefferies whole.

[Mr. Poultney reads.]——'And the several Gentlemen that were indicted in Cheshire and Northamptonshire will bring their several Action at Law against them.'

And, Gentlemen, then in a fourth Letter are contained these Expressions:

'Contrary to all Men's Expectations, a Warrant is Signed at last for Beheading Col. Sidney at Tower-Hill next Friday. Great Endeavours have been used to obtain his Pardon, but the contrary Party have carried it, which much dasheth our Hopes, but God still governs.'

Gentlemen, All this the Information says, he has done against the Peace of the King, his Crown and Dignity. To this he has pleaded Not Guilty. We will call our Witnesses, and if we prove it, we question not but you will find him Guilty.

Mr. Recorder *. May it please your Lordship, and you Gentlemen of the Jury; I am of Counsel for the King in this Cause. Upon the opening of these Letters to you, you cannot but wonder much more than he does that wrote them. His Matter of Wonder was one Way, and I suppose your Matter of Wonder is another Way, that a Man, such an one as he is, should have that Confidence to write such Letters as these are. Gentlemen, I do not doubt but you observe in the Series of these Letters, how he hath travelled through all the Transactions of this horrid Conspiracy, that was of late contrived against the Life of the King, and the Life of his Royal Highness, and for the Destruction of the Government; and how he does endeavour to turn it all into Ridicule, and to magnify the Men that have come to Publick Justice for being concerned in that horrid Conspiracy, as being very brave Men. The brave Lord Russel he is lamented as a brave Man lost; The Earl of Essex he forsooth was murdered; and Mr. Braddon, who prosecuted that Murder, he is a brave Man, whom I suppose some of you have heard of, and what is become of him, how he is convicted of one of the most notorious Facts that ever was acted by Man in any Civil Government, which was, that Braddon should go up and down to get Witnesses to make it appear to the World, as tho' some body had murdered that Earl. Thus you see he goes through the Conspiracy from one thing to another, and calls it a Sham Protestant-Plot, and all to ridicule the Discovery, which by these very Letters you may easily be satisfied of the Reality and Extent of. You see how he magnifies his Julian, but he likewise is come to condign Punishment for that most pernicious and scandalous Libel. In the next places he comes to the Duke of Monmouth, and tells you what a brave Man they have in him to be their Captain-General, and he did not doubt but to see him come to it; and sets forth, that he has denied all the Plot, and how he doth persist in that Denial. And this Gentlemen has raised his Confidence in these Letters to that Degree, that I think any Man, that has lived any time in this Nation, cannot but wonder, that ever there should be such an impudent Action committed in it. Gentlemen, We shall call our Witnesses and prove it positively upon him, that these Letters he did write, and then I suppose he will give an account how he came to write them.

* Sir Tho. mas Jenner.

Mr. Herbert. May it please your Lordship, and you Gentlemen of the Jury, I have but one Word which I desire to observe; for the opening of the Case, and a right Understanding of the Matter will have a great Influence upon the Proofs. And I shall not insist upon any thing that has been opened at large out of the Letters, but one thing I would observe to you, and that is out of the last Letter. Great Endeavours have been used to obtain his Pardon, but the contrary Party have carried it, which much dasheth our Hopes. So it seems by this that the Faction, the Party, have their Hopes still, and it seems likewise the Writer of these Letters hath a very great Share in them. We have, Gentlemen, nothing to do here before you, but to prove that Sir Samuel Barnardiston was the Author, Writer and Publisher of the Letters, which contain that which is charged in the Information, and that we question not but to prove clearly without contradiction. Call Mr. Blathwaite. [Who was sworn.] Pray give in the Letters. [Which was done.]

Mr. Recorder. Pray, Sir, look upon those Letters, and give the Court and the Jury an account where you had them.

Mr. Blathwaite. Gentlemen of the Jury, These three Letters Sir Samuel Barnardiston, upon the 10th of December, before the King and the Lords of the Council, did own to be of his Hand-writing. I marked them at that instant of time, and I am well assured they are the Letters he owned to be of his Hand-writing.

Mr. Williams. Did he own them to be of his Hand-writing?

Mr. Blathwaite. Yes.

L. C. J. * Did he own them all three?
* Sir George Jefferies. Mr. Blathwaite. Yes, my Lord, he did.

Mr. Williams. Pray, Sir, who are they directed to?

L. C. J. Mr. Williams, He is informed against for writing, not for supercribing.

Mr. Williams. My Lord, I ask that Question for this reason, He is indicted for writing and publishing, therefore I would know who they are directed to. Did he say they were published by him, or sent to any one?

Mr. Blathwaite. He did not deny but that he had published and sent them.

Mr. Williams. Did he confess it?—Mr. Blathwaite. He did not deny it.

L. C. J. I suppose they on the other side will give an Account where they were taken.

Mr. Herbert. Yes, my Lord. Swear Mr. Atterbury. [Which was done.]

Mr. Recorder. Hark you, Mr. Atterbury, Do you know any thing of these Letters?

Mr. Atterbury. If you please to let me see them, Sir.

Mr. Recorder. Shew him them.

[Which was done, and he looked upon them, and gave them in again.]

Mr. Herbert. Did you hear Sir Samuel Barnardiston own them to be his Letters?

Mr. Atterbury. My Lord, and you Gentlemen of the Jury, I had a Warrant from Mr. Secretary Jenkyns, about two Months, or ten Weeks ago, to apprehend Sir Samuel Barnardiston, and I did, according to Order, by Virtue of that Warrant, apprehend him, and carry him before his Majesty. When he was there, those three Letters I had just now in my Hand, were then shewn to Sir Samuel Barnardiston. I marked them, and know them to be the same; Sir Samuel Barnardiston did own he wrote them Letters all three.

L. C. J. Were the Supercriptions upon them all, as they are now?

Mr. Atterbury. Yes, they were all as they are now.

L. C. J. What say you, Mr. Blathwaite?

Mr. Blathwaite. Yes, they were just so, the same Supercriptions.

Mr. Atterbury. His Majesty asked him, Who subscribed them?—

L. C. J. Supercribed them, thou meanest, they are not subscribed.

Mr. Atterbury. Yes, my Lord, supercribed them; and he looked on them again, and said, They were supercribed by one of his Servants, and so ordered to be carried to the Post-House.

Mr. Recorder. Where is Nehemiah Ofsand?

Juryman. My Lord, We would ask the Witness, Whether he did own that he sent them to the Post-House?

L. C. J. He says, he ordered his Man to supercribe them, and so to carry them to the Post-House.

Mr. Williams. Look you, Mr. Atterbury, Did he say he directed any of his Servants to carry them to the Post-House, upon your Oath?

Mr. Atterbury. I am upon my Oath, Sir; I say, that he did say, that they were supercribed by some of his Servants, he could not say which of his Servants it was, and then they were sent to the Post-House.

Mr. Williams. Pray, Sir, mind, and answer my Question, Did he say, he directed any of his Servants to carry them to the Post-House?

L. C. J. Did he take any notice to you, or did you understand by him, that they were sent to the Post-House by his Consent?

Mr. Atterbury. Yes, my Lord, I did understand him so.

L. C. J. Did he write these Letters to keep them in his Pocket, do you think, Mr. Williams?

Mr. Williams. I do not know what he design'd them for, my Lord; nor do I yet know till they are read, what is in them: But I ask him this Question, Did he say he sent them to the Post-House?

Mr. Atterbury. With your Leave, I remember one thing more, my Lord; while he was in my House, (for there he was in Custody two Days or more) talking about these Letters, says he, I wonder how they were taken, they were sent to Sir Skippon, or some such Name he named.

Mr. Recorder. Swear Nehemiah Ofsand. [Which was done.]

Mr. Herbert. Look upon those Letters, Sir. Shew him them. [Which was done.]

L. C. J. Is this Man's Name Ofsand?

Mr. Recorder. Yes, Nehemiah Ofsand, Do you know any thing of those Supercriptions?

Ofsand. Two of those Supercriptions I writ by his Order as his Servant.

Mr. Recorder. Which are those two? Then he gave them into the Court.

L. C. J. Can you tell whose Hand is the other Part?

Ofsand. I did not see it writ, but the Hand is somewhat like Sir Samuel Barnardiston's Hand.

L. C. J. You believe it to be his Hand?—Ofsand. Yes, I do.

Mr. Williams. Did you ever see the Inside of those Letters that you say you supercribed?—Ofsand. No, I never saw the Inside.

L. C. J. What Directions had you about them, after you had supercribed them?

Ofsand. I had no Direction, but to leave them where I used to leave his Letters, and that was in a Window that Sir Samuel Barnardiston always left his Letters in, and from thence one of the Boys used to carry them to the Post-House.

Mr. Williams. Sir, Did Sir Samuel order you to supercribe those three Letters, and send them to the Post-House?

L. C. J. He said he supercribed them by his Command, and left them in the Place that Letters used to be laid that were to go to the Post-House.

Mr. Recorder. Pray, Sir, Look upon those Letters again.

L. C. J. Whose Hand is the Supercription? Is that Sir Samuel's too?

Ofsand. I believe it Sir Samuel's Hand.

L. C. J. Shew that other Letter to Mr. Blathwaite: What say you to it, Sir?

Mr. Blathwaite. Gentlemen of the Jury: This is another Letter that was seized and brought before the King and the Lords of the Council, and this Letter was afterwards owned by Ofsand, to be writ by him by Sir Samuel Barnardiston's Order.

L. C. J. Did Sir Samuel own this Letter to be his Hand-writing too?

Mr. Blathwaite. No, he did not, but Ofsand did own it.

Mr. Recorder. My Lord, We prove it otherwise to be Sir Samuel's Letter, because it is not his Hand, but his Man's. You Ofsand, Do you know who writ that Letter?—Ofsand. I writ it.

Mr. Recorder. By whose Order?

Ofsand. I transcribed it out of a Copy given me by Sir Samuel Barnardiston, as I was his Servant.

L. C. J. And did you write the Supercription too?

Ofsand. Yes, I writ the Supercription.

L. C. J. In order to what? To go down into the Country too?

Ofsand. In order to go where it was directed, my Lord.

L. C. J. Where was that?—Ofsand. Into Suffolk, to Sir Philip Skippon.

L. C. J. This Letter was written at London, was it not?

Ofsand. In Bishopsgate-street, at Sir Samuel's House.

Mr. Williams. What is your Name, Sir?—Ofsand. My Name is Ofsand.

Mr. Williams. Your Christian Name?—Ofsand. Nehemiah.

Mr. Williams. Then, Nehemiah Ofsand, I ask you this Question upon your Oath, when these Letters were supercribed by you, did you lay them in that Window you speak of, or did you give them back again to Sir Samuel?

Ofsand. Sir, I am not so certain as to swear to these particular Letters; but his usual Custom was, He would write a Letter, and then give it me to copy: His Closet-door was near another Window, and there he would leave it. If it were but one Letter, he would use to say, Direct such a Letter to such a Person, or such a Place, and when it was so directed, I was used to put my Letters there, and thence one of the Boys came and fetched them to carry them to the Post-House. But sometimes he would send me down directly with it away to the Post-House, if he had not any other Business for me to do.

Mr. Williams. But, Sir, mind the Question. I ask you again: Did you deliver these Letters, or any of them, back again to Sir Samuel Barnardiston, or no?

Ofsand. I cannot tell for these particular Letters. I tell you what the usual Custom was in the House.

Mr. Williams. Pray when you had supercribed them, or Sir Samuel, what became of them Letters?

Ofsand. They went to the Post-House, as I believe.

Mr. Williams. How long have you served Sir Samuel Barnardiston?

Ofsand. Five Months.

Mr. Williams. Did you serve any body before?

Ofsand. No.

Mr. Recorder. Why, do you think he doth not serve him well now, Mr. Williams?

Mr. Williams. I know very well what I think of it, Mr. Recorder.

L. C. J. Well, come read them.

Clerk reads.—This is directed to Sir Philip Skippon, Knight, at Ipswich, and dated Novemb. 29, 83.

(Reads)

(Reads) Sir, The Return of —

Mr. Williams. That is not Sir Samuel's Hand, I think.

L. C. J. No, but writ by his Order.

Osland. I transcribed it by his special Order: For he came to me and gave me a Letter, says he, Go and make me a Copy of this Letter.

Mr. Recorder. And you did transcribe it exactly as it was in the Paper he gave you?

Osland. I examined it after I had writ it my self, and read it over again.

L. C. J. What did you write it out of? — Osland. A Copy he gave me.

L. C. J. Was that Copy his Hand-writing?

Osland. I did not see him write it, but I believe it to be his writing.

L. C. J. Come read it. — Clerk reads —

SIR,

THE return of the Duke of Monmouth to Whitehall, and his being received into extraordinary Favour of His Majesty, hath made a strange alteration of Affairs at Court: For those that before spake of him very indelicately, now court, cringe, and creep to him. His Grace complained to the King of the scandalous Misrepresentation that was made of him in the Monday's Gazette, upon which the Gazeteer was called to Account for it, who alledged for himself, That a Person of great Quality sent him in Writing the Words therein recited, commanding him to put them in the Gazette.

Yesterday being the last Day of the Term, all the Prisoners that were in the Tower upon the late Sham Protestant Plot, were discharged upon Bail. Mr. Braddon, who prosecuted the Murder of the Earl of Essex, the Information put in against him in the King's Bench by Mr. Attorney, (for a pretended Subornation,) &c. was not prosecuted, and his Bail was discharged. And the passing Sentence upon the Author of Julian the Apostate, and the Printer of the late Lord Russell's Speech, was passed over in Silence. Great Applications are made to His Majesty for the pardoning Mr. Sidney in the Tower, which is believed will be attained, and that he will be banished.

The Lord Howard appears despicable in the Eyes of all Men; he is under Guard at Whitehall, and believed he will be sent to the Tower, for that the Duke of Monmouth will accuse him concerning the Testimony he hath given, &c.

The Papists and High Tories are quite down in the Mouth, their Pride is abated, themselves and their Plot confounded, but their Malice is not abated. 'Tis generally said the Earl of Essex was murdered. The brave Lord Russell is afresh lamented. The Plot is lost here, except you in the Country can find it out amongst the Addressers and Abhorers.

This sudden Turn is an Amazement to all Men, and must produce some strange Events, which a little Time will shew.

Mr. Recorder. Now go on to the next. The Second Letter.

Clerk Reads. — This is directed, To Sir Philip Skippon, Knight, at Ipswich, Suffolk.

L. C. J. That is one of his own writing.

Mr. Recorder. Yes, my Lord.

Clerk. It is dated London the first of December 1683.

Dear SIR,

I Am to answer yours of the 27 and 29th past, and truly I cannot but with great Sorrow lament the Loss of our good Friend honest Mr. John Wright, but with patience we must submit to the Almighty, who can as well raise up Instruments to do his Work, as change Hearts, of which we have so great an Instance in the Business of the Duke of Monmouth, that no Age or History can parallel. I am now thoroughly satisfied, that what was printed in the Monday's Gazette is utterly false, and you will see it publicly declared so shortly. The King is never pleased but when he is with him, hath commanded all the Privy Council to wait upon him, and happy is he that hath most of his Favour. His Pardon was sealed and delivered to him last Wednesday. 'Tis said, he will be restored to be Master of the Horse, and be called into the Council Table, and to all his other Places, and 'tis reported he will be made Captain-General of all the Forces, and Lord High-Admiral, &c. He treats all his old Friends that daily visit him with great Civilities, they are all satisfied with his Integrity, and if God spare his Life, doubt not but he will be an Instrument of much Good to the King and Kingdom. He said publicly, That he knew my Lord Russell was as Loyal a Subject as any in England, and that his Majesty believed the same now. I intend shortly to wait on him my self. It would make you laugh to see how strangely our High Tories and Clergy are mortified, their Countenance speak it. Were my Sheforary to be moved for now, it would be readily granted. Sir George is grown very humble. 'Tis said Mr. Sidney is reprieved for Forty Days, which bodes well.

Mr. Kedder sat with me sometime this Evening.

L. C. J. There is no more in the Record.

Mr. Recorder. No, my Lord. Then go on to the Third.

Clerk. This is directed For Mr. Edward Gael, Linen-Draper, at Ipswich.

Mr. Williams. Is it likely he should write these Letters to a Draper?

L. C. J. It is, it seems, the ordinary riff-raff he writes. He thinks not below him to keep a Correspondence with all the Scoundrels of this Party in the Country.

Mr. Recorder. Ay, all Sorts of Trades he is acquainted with.

Clerk. It is dated the first of December 1683.

Reads. — Mr. Gael,

This Evening Mr. Kedder came and sat with me —

L. C. J. Will you have it all read?

Mr. Williams. No, my Lord, we do not desire it.

L. C. J. Then read what is in the Record.

Mr. Recorder. Look where that Passage begins, The late Change —

Clerk. Where is it, Sir? It is not marked.

L. C. J. If you cannot find it out, then read the whole.

Clerk Reads —

Mr. Gael,

THIS Evening Mr. Kedder came and sat with me, when acquainted him what you and others writ me in reference to himself, as also of the Death of Mr. Wright, which he was sorry for. He protested, if could persuade his Wife, he would accept of Ipswich Choice, notwithstanding all the Discouragement he had met with. One more he acquainted me with, that had seen a Letter from Mr. Cutliffe to Dr. Clegat, extremely discouraging him from coming to Ipswich, where if he did come, said, would find himself mistaken, for that would never enjoy Quietness or Peace, notwithstanding his Balsamick Temper, &c. as he called it. These Things frights Mr. Kedder, who I am now persuading so soon as he is up again, to go down for a Month or two, and then if he doth not like the Place and People, may return hither again. This I resolve to press hard on Monday, when have promised to Dine with me, as also Mr. Hodges. Be confident, I shall think nothing too much to effect this Business, though one or other still pulls down as fast as I build up. — Here is now a Door of Encouragement opened for sober Men to come into publick Employment. You will undo the Town of Ipswich if you bring not sober Men into play: For God's sake consider of it. Persuade Mr. Snilling, or some sober Men, to come in their two Ports-Mens Places void for other Matters, refer you to Sir P. the late Change here in Publick Affairs, is so great and strange.

VOL. III.

L. C. J. There begins the Passage in the Record.

Clerk reads — The late Change here in Publick Affairs is so great and strange, that we are like Men in a Dream, can hardly believe what we see, and fear we are not fit for so great a Mercy as the present Juncture seems to promise. The Earl of Mackensfield is bringing Actions of Scandalis Magnatum against all the Grand Jurymen that indicted him at last Assizes. And the several Gentlemen that were indicted in Cheshire and Northamptonshire, will bring their several Actions at Law against them. Acquaint Mr. Snilling —

L. C. J. There is all that is in the Record.

Mr. Recorder. There are but two Lines more

Clerk reads — Acquaint Mr. Snilling we received the two Barrels of Oysters, and two Couple of Ducks, and desire him to take Money of Buckle for them. I rest, yours.

Mr. Recorder. Now go on to the next.

Clerk. This is the Fourth Letter: it is directed to Mr. William Cavell, at Brightwell near Ipswich in Suffolk, and dated London the 4th of December 1683. Shall I read it all?

L. C. J. No, no: If you can find that Part that is in the Record, Contrary to most Men's Expectations, there it begins.

Clerk reads — Contrary to most Men's Expectations, a Warrant is Signed at last for Beheading Colonel Sidney at Tower-Hill next Friday. Great Endeavours have been used to obtain his Pardon, but the contrary Party have carried it, which much dasheth our Hopes, but God still governs. Acquaint Buckle —

L. C. J. There is all.

Clerk. Here is but a Line more (reads) Acquaint Buckle, here is no News of Crafton Hoy, notwithstanding the Wind is fair, 'tis his Practice always to loiter by the Way. I rest, your loving Friend.

Mr. Williams. Pray let me see that Letter.

Mr. Recorder. We have done, my Lord, we leave it here.

L. C. J. Well, What say you to it that are for the Defendant?

Mr. Williams. May it please your Lordship, and you Gentlemen of the Jury, I am of Counsel here for the Defendant, Sir Samuel Barnardiston, and the Question now before you is, Whether this Gentleman be knowingly guilty of the writing and publishing these four Letters that have been read here to you, and which of them he is guilty of writing, and which not? I do not see that his Name is put to any of them; nay, the Letters are not subscribed by any body, and that, Gentlemen, you may see by looking upon the Letters. For the Evidence that hath been given, I beseech your Lordship to observe what it is. As to his publishing of them, I see no Evidence at all to prove him any way concerned in that: Some of them, indeed, are his own Hand-writing, and proved to be his Letters, by his own Confession before the King and Council; that Mr. Blathwaite and Mr. Atterbury the Messenger swear directly, that Sir Samuel Barnardiston did own the Letters, but for the Fourth they say he did disown that to be his Letter, and it is not so much as his Hand; but what Proof is it they have brought to apply this to him? You see what a Sort of Proof is made: They produce you here a young Man that was (as it happened) his Servant at this Time, and lived in his Family with him in the Nature of a Secretary, it seems; and how fit he was to be entertained in that Quality, you, I question not, observe. He says, he did copy this Letter by the Direction of his Master. It is well if he did not keep a Copy himself by him of such a Letter as this for a particular Use, as some honest Servants have done before now, that have designed somewhat of Advantage to themselves: But that is his Evidence about this Fourth Letter. That then Gentlemen which we would offer on behalf of the Defendant, is this, Whether there be any Evidence of the publishing of these Letters by Sir Samuel Barnardiston, either of all, or any, and which of them? All the Proof that I hear, comes from Atterbury, and the Clerk of the Council Mr. Blathwaite, which is but this: Atterbury says, That Sir Samuel should say, They were sent to the Post-House; and Mr. Blathwaite says, he did not deny the publishing of them, but he does not say, he confessed it. As to the sending to the Post-House, if it be true, I shall leave it to your Lordship, how far that, my Lord, can be a publishing of a Libel; Whether that be a publishing within the Information, or no? A Gentleman writes a Letter to a private Friend, and sends it to the Post-House; Whether that be a publishing of a Libel, I leave it to you? For the Fourth Letter, this same trusty Secretary cannot tell you, whether he delivered it back again to Sir Samuel, or no; or whether he put it in the Window; or whether he delivered it in at the Post-House, only, as he believes, he laid it in the Window as he used to do other Letters. But whatever he believes must not pass for Evidence, especially in Matters of this Nature, it being a great Crime, as the Information has set it forth. If then there is no Proof (as with Submission I hope there is not) of the Publication of these Letters, I suppose Gentlemen, you will not take it upon your Oaths, that he is guilty of what he is here accused of without Evidence. This Information, Gentlemen, doth mention several Things, which do very much aggravate the Matter, if they were proved. Many Things are laid in it to induce the Information, and which may much enhance the Crime, but of which I see no manner of Proof at all. Many Things are mentioned as Facts leading to the main Facts, which is the great Offence; but these not being proved upon him, I desire he may be acquitted of that Part.

L. C. J. What do you mean, Mr. Williams?

Mr. Williams. Of all your Preamble.

L. C. J. What Preamble do you mean?

Mr. Williams. That he being a Person of a turbulent and unquiet Spirit—

L. C. J. Why, Mr. Williams: Would you have the Jury find that he is not so?

Mr. Williams. My Lord, There is no Proof of it; or that he did do it with a Design seditiously to disturb the Peace, that he did it with a seditious Intent.

L. C. J. You would have the Jury find, I warrant, that he did it piously, and with a good Intent.

Mr. Williams. My Lord, There is a middle way—

L. C. J. No, no, Mr. Williams. Let us have none of that Doctrine, we must have a care of that, and your middle Ways. For certainly the Law supplies the Proof, if the thing it self speaks Malice and Sedition. As it is in Murder, we say always in the Indictment, He did it by the Instigation of the Devil: Can the Jury, if they find the Fact, find he did it not by such Instigation? No, that does necessarily attend the very Nature of such an Action, or Thing. So, in Informations for Offences of this nature, we say, He did it falsely, maliciously, and seditiously, which are the formal Words; but, if the nature of the Thing be such as necessarily imports Malice, Reproach, and Scandal to the Government, there needs no Proof but of the Fact done, the Law supplies the rest. If the Fact were indifferent in itself, then to make a Crime of it, the accidental Circumstances must be proved, but it needs not where the Thing implies Malice in its own Nature. You would have the Jury find he had no ill Design in it; he did it with a good Intent, I warrant you.

Mr. Williams. All I would ask, my Lord, is but this—

L. C. J. Do you think he did it to serve the Crown? If the Jury will take it upon their Oaths, that Sir Samuel Barnardiston wrote these Letters to serve the Crown, you say something. Pray ask them that Question. Try if you can make them believe that, Mr. Williams.

Mr. Williams. There is no Evidence given about this Malice.

L. C. J. Yes, the very thing is Evidence of itself.

Mr. Williams. Pray, My Lord, let the Fact lie upon its own weight: There is no Proof given of any of these aggravating things.

L. C. J. How shall any Man prove another Man's Malice, which is a thing that lies only in a Man's Mind? How should any Man know that I am malicious against the Government, but by my Actions.

Mr. Williams. I lay it before your Lordship and the Jury.

L. C. J. No Proof can be expected, but what the Nature of every thing will bear.

Mr. Williams. Then I pray this, my Lord, that I may be at Liberty next Term, if we be convicted, to urge this, and observe in mitigation of the Punishment, that there was nothing of these things proved.

L. C. J. Urge what you can in its proper time, but offer nothing here but what is fit to be offered.

Mr. Williams. Here are mentioned in this Information, (tho' it be by way of Inducement, yet they must be proved) things that are Matters of Record, but they have proved none of them.

L. C. J. Have you any of those Records here, the Convictions of my Lord Russell and Colonel Sidney?

Mr. Recorder. Those things are so well known, I suppose they will not contest them.

Mr. Williams. Sir, I must lay hold on all Advantages for my Client. You have made them Part of your Case, pray prove them.

Mr. Recorder. Truly, my Lord, we did not think they would have made that any Question, and we have them not here. They know it well enough to be true.

L. C. J. If you have them not here, go and find them; if they insist upon it, you must prove them. I will stay till you fetch them.

Mr. Williams. My Lord, we would not hinder your Lordship's Business.

L. C. J. No, no, it will be no Hindrance, I will do something else in the mean time. This is a Cause of public Example and Consequence, and I will give it all the fair Hearing I can.

Mr. Williams. My Lord, if you please, there is, I suppose, no such haste of trying this Cause now, to hinder Business, and keep you here longer than needs. This Cause may as well be tried the beginning of next Term.

L. C. J. No, no, I will make an end of it now, if I stay never so long for it; indeed the Defendant says, I am down in the Mouth: 'Tis true, I have got a little Hoarseness, but I thank God my Heart is not down, nor I hope never will be to serve the Government.

Mr. Williams. If they will, they shall find the Letters without the Records.

Mr. Jones. No, no, We must have the Records, tho' it is true it is but Matter of Form, yet we must prove our whole Case.

L. C. J. Well, I will stay till they are fetched. Let the Jury stand by, and I will go on and try another Cause, and in the mean Time fetch these Records. Do not make two Journeys, but bring all that are mentioned in the Record.

Then the Jury were set by, and the Court went on in some other Causes, and about an Hour and an half after the Records were brought, and this Cause was resumed, and proceeded thus.

L. C. J. Well, come, have you those Records now?

Mr. Recorder. Yes, swear Mr. Tindal. [Which was done.] Is that a true Copy?

Mr. Tindal. Yes, it is a true Copy of the Indictment, Conviction, and Attainder of my Lord Russell. I examined it with Mr. Tanner.

L. C. J. Well, put it in. [And then a Word of it was read by the Clerk.]

Mr. Recorder. And here is the Record it self of the Attainder of Colonel Sidney. [Which was some part of it read also.]

L. C. J. What say you now to it, Gentlemen, for the Defendant? Mr. Thompson. My Lord, I have nothing more than to say than has been said.

L. C. J. All this was well enough known.

Mr. Jones. Ay, but they would give the Court all the Trouble they could by making them send for that which they could not deny.

L. C. J. Gentlemen of the Jury, Here is an Information exhibited against Sir Samuel Barnardiston, and the Information sets forth this Matter. It doth take notice of a horrid Conspiracy, a damnable Conspiracy, lately hatched and set on foot for the Destruction of the King, and for the Subversion of the Government, That there were divers Persons who were indicted, and stood convicted, and were afterwards executed for this horrid Conspiracy. Among the rest, there is notice taken of my Lord Russell for one, and Colonel Sidney (he went by that Name, Algernon Sidney I mean) for another, to be two of those Conspirators that were engaged in that damnable Conspiracy for the Destruction of the King, and Subversion of the Government.

Now, Gentlemen, That these Persons according to the Inducement of this Information, were so indicted, so attainted and executed (as far forth as is cited in the Information) is proved to you by the two Records, which the Counsel on the other side insisted to have shewn, and which have been now produced. The one is sworn to be a true Copy of the Conviction and Attainder of my Lord Russell, and the other which they produced, was the Record it self of the Conviction and Attainder of Sidney. So that, as to that part it is plain, they were convicted and attainted, both the one and the other, as Actors in that Hellish Plot.

The next thing, Gentlemen, and which was so much insisted upon by the Defendant's Counsel, is this: The Information takes notice, that the Defendant Sir Samuel Barnardiston, being a Man of a factious, seditious, disaffected Temper towards the Government, a Man of ill Principles, in order to disturb, disquiet, and discompose the Government, he did cause several Letters, Four in Number, to be writ and published, which Letters have been read unto you.

It hath been objected, That in as much as the Words, Falsely, Seditiously, Maliciously, Factiously, and the like Words are in the Information, they would have you believe, That there being no Evidence of any such Thing, as Faction, Malice, and Sedition, or that the Man did it Maliciously, and Advisedly, and Seditiously, (which are the Words in the Premises, as I may call them, or the Preamble of the Information) therefore they must be acquitted of that part. Now as to that, I told them then, and tell you now, Gentlemen, That no Man living can discover the malicious evil Designs and Intentions of any other Man, so as to give Evidence of them, but by their Words and Actions. No Man can prove what I intend, but by my Words and Actions. Therefore if one doth compass and imagine the Death of the King, that by our Law is High-Treason; but whether or no he be guilty of this Treason, so as to be convicted of it by another, is not proveable, or discoverable, but by some Words or Actions, whereby the Imagination may be manifested. And therefore my Imagining, my Compassing, which is private in my own Mind, must be submitted to the Judgment that Reason and the Law passeth upon my Words or Actions, and then the Action it self being proved, that discovers with what Mind the Thing was done; as in the Case I put before to the Counsel. Suppose any Man without Provocation kill another, the Words of the Indictment are, That he did it Maliciously, Feloniously, not having the Fear of God before his Eyes, but being moved and seduced by the Instigation of the Devil. Now all these things, whether he had the Fear of God before his Eyes, or not; or whether he were moved by the Instigation of the Devil, and of his Malice forethought, or no; these cannot be known, till they come to be proved by the Action that is done.

So that in case any Person doth write Libels, or publish any Expressions which in themselves carry Sedition and Faction, and Ill-Will towards the Government; I cannot tell well how to express it otherwise in his Accusation, than by such Words, that he did it Seditiously, Factiously, and Maliciously. And the Proof of the thing it self proves the evil Mind it was done with. If then, Gentlemen, you believe the Defendant, Sir Samuel Barnardiston, did write and publish these Letters, that is Proof enough of the Words, Maliciously, Seditiously, and Factiously, laid in the Information.

The Letters are Factious, Seditious, and Malicious Letters, and as base as the worst of Mankind (tho' he had had all the Provocation that ever could be given a Man to libel another) could ever have invented.

And let Sir Samuel Barnardiston put it under the Countenance, or under the Umbrage, or under the Enamel of his Zeal for the true Protestant Religion, if he will; or if he have a mind to it, to give himself any fine Name, by calling himself one of the Sober Party, or Godly Party, or the Upright Party; let him gild himself, and paint himself as he pleaseth, yet the Inside is rotten, and 'tis Factious and Seditious at the bottom to all Intents and Purposes whatsoever. And if he be guilty of it, as you Gentlemen are to try and consider; the greater the Man is, the greater the Crime; and the more Understanding he has, the more malicious he seems to be: For your little ordinary sort of People, that are of common mean Understanding, they may be wheedled and drawn in, and surprized into such things; but Men of a public Figure, and of some Value in the World, that have been taken to be Men of the greatest Interest and Reputation in a Party, it cannot be thought a sudden Surprize upon them; no, 'tis a Work of Time and Thought, 'tis a thing fixed in his very Nature, and it shews so much Venom, as would make one think the whole Mass of his Blood were corrupted. I had thought the Act of Oblivion might have put Sir Samuel Barnardiston in mind, That it was not fit any more to go down to Whitball, to make Uproars and Tumults, and Hubbubs.

But here is the Matter that he now is accused of, and here is in Malice against the King, Malice against the Government, Malice against both Church and State, Malice against any Man that bears any Share in the Government, indeed Malice against all Mankind that are not of the same Persuasion with those bloody Miscreants, (I cannot give them a milder Name) I mean the Conspirators in the late damnable Conspiracy, some of whom have been attainted and executed for it. Here is the Sanctifying of Traitors, that were justly sentenced to Execution according to the Law of the Land; and at the same time there is joined with it the most inveterate Inimosity against the Government that can be, as though the King was prevailed with, upon a Sham Protestant Plot, to do Things in order to destroy the Government itself, and every one of the Sober Party, as they call themselves. For these Persons could not have suffered, but as Condemned according to the Rules of Law, but these Letters carry an Inimosity as if they were cut off by a Sham Trick and Design. For after the good News of the Reprieve of Sidney was contradicted, the Warrant for his Execution is taken notice of, and you see the manner of Expression that is used, their Party has prevailed, as tho' the putting the Laws in Execution, and hanging of Traitors, were such a Thing that a Party must be set up to prevail to do it, and Mankind must be divided into Parties, their Party and our Party, and the contrary Party, they have prevailed; and truly now our Party, the Sober Party as he calls it, are in a very sad Condition.

Then here is, as I said, the Sainting of Two horrid Conspirators, here is the Lord Ruffel Sainted, that blessed Martyr, my Lord Ruffel, that good Man, that excellent Protestant, he is lamented, and what an extraordinary Man he was, who was fairly Tried, and justly Convicted and Attainted, for having a Hand in this horrid Conspiracy against the Life of the King, and his dearest Brother His Royal Highness, and for the Subversion of the Government. And here is Mr. Sidney Sainted, what an extraordinary Man he was? Yes surely, he was a very good Man, because you may some of you remember, or have read the History of those Times, and know what Share Mr. Sidney had in that black and horrid Villany, that cursed Treason and Murder, the Murder, I mean of King Charles I. of Blessed Memory, a Shame to Religion itself, a perpetual Reproach to the Island we live in, to think that a Prince should be brought by pretended Methods of Law and Justice to such an End at his own Palace. And 'tis a Shame to think, that such bloody Miscreants should be Sainted and Lamented, who had any Hand in that horrid Murder and Treason, and who to their dying Minutes, when they were upon the Brink of Eternity, and just stepping into another World, could confidently bless God for their being engaged in that Good Cause, (as they call it) which was the Rebellion which brought that Blessed Martyr to His Death. It is high time for all Mankind, that have any Christianity, or Sense of Heaven or Hell, to bestir themselves, to rid the Nation of such Caterpillars, such Monsters of Villany as these are.

Nay, In these very Letters is contained the very Language of that cursed Murderer and Traitor Walcot himself, That God Almighty in his own Time would raise up Instruments. I know, Gentlemen, you have heard and read what that bloody Traitor said to that effect; and you hear what Expressions like it are in these Letters, I am sorry for the Death of our Friend, honest Mr. John Wright, but God can easily raise up Instruments to do his own Work; the very Language of Walcot. And I would have you take notice of it, Mr. Blackerby, for I would have you take Warning by these Things. [Speaking to a Gentleman that was taking Notes.]

Mr. Blackerby. My Lord, I have neither said nor done any thing that should give you occasion to speak thus to me.

L. C. J. These Letters tell you, God will be sure to raise up Instruments, but what Instruments do they mean? Instruments of Rebellion, and Faction, and Sedition, which they most falsely call, his own Work. For it is that monstrous Sin Rebellion, that they mean by it, Instruments of Treason, under pretence of fighting for God Almighty they would fain be fighting against the Government. It was the Language of the former Times, wherewith they destroyed the best of Kings, and subverted the best of Governments for a Time, and were very near having totally destroyed Three Kingdoms, under pretence of doing God good Service. And when once a People pursue such Principles, and, under the pretence of Religion, endeavour to destroy Monarchy and Government itself, it is high time for all honest Men to look about them.

Nay, and you may observe, Gentlemen, another thing in these Letters, it is not only the Destruction of the Civil Government, the King, and those that are in Authority near Him that are aimed at; but all Persons that come with humble Representations of their Loyalty to Him, all that Address themselves to the King to shew their Duty and their Dislike to that damnable Design and Conspiracy against Him. For now (says Sir Samuel Barnardiston) all the Sham Plot is quite blown off, and we cannot find any here, 'tis lost except you can find it among the Addressers and Abhorers in the Country, or among a Parcel of Clergymen.—So that all Mankind, that ever thought themselves obliged to congratulate that blessed and happy Deliverance, either to own our Thankfulness to God for it, to whom we owe more than we are able to pay for His great Mercy to us therein, or to express our Joy to the King, in humble Addresses, Congratulating His Deliverance from the horrid Conspiracy lately designed against Him, His Brother and the Government; these Gentlemen, because they are Loyal Subjects, and desire to shew themselves so, must be branded with the Names of Abhorers, Tories, Addressers, Sham-Plotters, and all the Ignominy they can lay upon them. This shews it was not only aimed at the Civil Magistracy, but at all that dare be honest and oppose Faction and Rebellion.

As for any thing that he has said of me, Sir Samuel Barnardiston shall write and speak of me as long as he pleases. But though he says, I am drawn in the Mouth; it is true, I have a little lost my Tongue by my Cold, yet I hope I shall never lose my Heart nor Spirit to serve the Government, nor forbear to use my utmost Diligence to see that such Offenders as these Persons, that entertain Principles so destructive to the Government, be brought to condign Punishment. And be they who they will, were they my own Brothers, I should be of the same mind, and so in that mind I hope in God I shall live and die.

Gentlemen, the Question before you is, Whether the Defendant be guilty of writing these Malicious, Seditious Letters; for that they are Malicious and Factious, no honest Man can doubt in the least, and I do not find that the Counsel for the Defendant do offer to say any thing in Defence of the Letters, or can say, but that they are as venomous, malicious, seditious, factious, tumultuous Letters, as can be written, and I must tell you, tread very near upon the Borders of High-Treason itself. I am sure I may venture to call it Coxen-German to High-Treason.

Now that he did write and publish them, you have this Proof before you: Mr. Blatwaite tells you, That Sir Samuel did own Three of them, acknowledge them to be his own Writing, before His Sacred Majesty in Counsel. Atterbury the Messenger says, He was by too when he did before the King acknowledge the Writing of those Three Letters. As to the Superscription to one of those Three Letters, you have the Testimony of Osfand, the young Man that lived with Sir Samuel Barnardiston, he swears he writ it by his Direction, being his Servant. And as to the Fourth Letter, this young Man does directly swear, That the Original he copied it by (for it is his Writing) he had from Sir Samuel Barnardiston, and it was of Sir Samuel's own Writing (which he knows well, being acquainted with his Hand) and that Sir Samuel expressly directed him to Copy it out, which he did by his Command, and this is the same Letter; and so though it is not under his Hand, yet it is under his Man's, and written by his Direction. And he says, he does believe the other Three to be his Hand-Writing. So as to the Dictating and Writing of these Letters, you have as full and as plain a Proof as can be made.

And as to his Publishing of them, which is another Part of the Information, and of which Mr. Williams said there was no Proof, I would say but this to you. Is it not very preposterous, absurd, and senseless, to think that ever it should enter into any Man's Imagination, That Sir Samuel Barnardiston would take such a wonderful deal of Pains and Care to write these Letters to Sir Philp Skippon, and to the other two Men, to tell them of his Endeavours to take off Mr. Kedder's Scruples, and persuade him to go down to Ipswich, and to desire them to take care of the Sober Party, and endeavour to get Sober Men into play, and all will do well, and that the Duke of Monmouth had denied all the Plot, and so given the Lye to the King and the Courts of Justice, and now there was a Door opened for Sober Men to come in, and God would raise up Instruments, and the Sober Party will up again? Do you think, I say, he would write all this Fustian Stuff, (for I can call it no better than Stuff, though it be very malicious Stuff) and carry to his Man to Copy out, and Supercribe them and Seal them, only to put them in his Pocket? If you can believe this, upon my Word you have a Faith able to remove great Mountains; but I assure you my Faith cannot get to that Strength.

But for further Proof of the Publishing, you hear what the young Man that was the Defendant's Servant says. He tells you, the usual Way of dealing with Sir Samuel's Letters was this, There was a Window near Sir Samuel's Closet, and when the Letters were Sealed up, they were used to be put there, in order that the Boy, according to the usual Course, might carry them to the Post-House. And he doth believe these Letters (though he cannot particularly and positively speak to them) were so used.

Besides all this, you have it by Atterbury positively Sworn, that about the same time that Sir Samuel Barnardiston did acknowledge before the King, that he writ those Letters, being in his Custody, he did say they were sent to the Post-House, and he wondered how they came by them. That proves it was done by his Privy. And beyond all there is this Circumstance, that the Thing speaks it self, they are directed to Men at Ipswich, where Sir Samuel Barnardiston is known to have a Correspondence; they take notice of the Receipt of Letters from thence, and of the Death of Mr. Wright, mentioned in those Letters, which shews them to be Answers to Letters received; and must not these think you be sent, but kept still in his Pocket? There is notice also taken in them, of their Country Affairs: Though they seemed to have met with some Disappointment in such a Business about Mr. Kedder, yet they were resolved to go on, and desire them to communicate this Business of Mr. Kedder and Dr. Cleggitt, to such and such of our Friends, and desire them to bestir themselves, and get in Sober Men, such as Mr. Kedder, among them. For it is mightily for our Advantage, that there should be Sober Men brought into play at Ipswich, and pray be sure to keep the Sober Party up. These Things in their own nature speak, that these Letters were intended and written, in order to preserve a Correspondence between those of the Sober Party in Ipswich, and their Friends here, and therefore you may easily conclude what was to be done with them.

So that, Gentlemen, this Information surely (if ever any was) is fully proved, as it is laid in all the Parts of it.

I would not have given you so much Trouble at this Time, in an Affair of this Nature, that has been so evidently proved, because your Question that you are to Try, is only, Whether the Defendant be Guilty of this Offence, or not Guilty? (You are not to inflict the Penalty, that is the Province of the Court above;) but only because I see it is a Matter of great Expectation and Consequence. I would not we should be gulled twice in one Age, by the self-same Men, and the self-same Way, into the same Treason and Rebellion, and all those other Mischiefs, that dreadful Chaos and State of Confusion, Misery and Destruction, that we were brought into in the late Times. And that has made me take so much Notice now in this Place of the Tendency of Things of this Nature, that we may learn to beware of, and know these Men that carry Sheep's Clothing, pretend Zeal and Religion, but their Insides are Wolves. They are Traitors in their Minds, whatsoever they are in their outward Pretences.

Then the JURY laid their Heads together in the Place where they stood, and being presently after agreed upon their Verdict, the Foreman gave it in.

That the Defendant Sir Samuel Barnardiston was Guilty of the Offence and Misdemeanour, Charged on him by the Information.

Which Verdict was Recorded by the Clerk.

Afterwards Sir Samuel Barnardiston received Sentence, That he should pay 10,000 l. Fine, be imprisoned till paid, and find Sureties for his Good Behaviour for Life.

CXXVI. Proceedings against JAMES HOLLOWAY * in the King's-Bench, on an Outlawry for High-Treason, April 21, 1684. Pascha. 36 Car. II.

HIS Majesty's Attorney General having on Friday last, moved the Court of King's Bench for an Habeas Corpus Returnable this Day, directed to the Keeper of his Majesty's Gaol of Newgate, to bring thither the Body of James Holloway, then in his Custody, to shew Cause why Execution should not be awarded upon an Outlawry for High-Treason against him. The Keeper of Newgate, according to the Command of the Writ, brought him this Day to the Bar of the said Court, where he was proceeded against in this Manner.

The Return of the Writ of Habeas Corpus was first Read.

Cl. of Cr. James Holloway, Hold up thy Hand. [Which he did.] Thou hast been Indicted in London, by the Name of James Holloway, late of London, Merchant, for High-Treason by thee committed, touching the King's Majesty's Person, and the Government of this His Kingdom of England, and for not appearing and answering that Indictment, by due Process of Law, upon the Indictment thou standest Outlawed, and upon that Outlawry thou standest Attainted of the same High-Treason; What hast thou to say for thy self why Execution should not be awarded against thee upon that Attainder by this Court according to Law?

Holloway. My Lord, I have been a great while Absent, and know not what hath been done in this Matter, or proved against me.

Sir George Jeffries. L. C. J. Yes, you have been Absent so long it seems, that you now stand Outlawed, and thereby Attainted of High-Treason; there is nothing now remains with the Court, but only to make a Rule for your Execution.

Holloway. If an ingenuous Confession of the Truth will merit the King's Pardon, then sure I have done it.

L. C. J. For that Matter we are not to dispose of the King's Mercy, he will dispose of his own Mercy as he shall think fit. Is Mr. Attorney in the Hall?

Crier. Yes, my Lord, he is.

L. C. J. Then pray send for him.

Which was done, and in a little time after he came into Court.

L. C. J. Mr. Attorney, here is the Prisoner at the Bar, Holloway.

Sir Robert Sawyer. Mr. At. Gen. Yes, my Lord, I see he is. Sir Samuel Astry, have you the Record there?

Cl. of Cr. Yes, Sir.

L. C. J. It has been read to him, Mr. Attorney?

Mr. At. Gen. My Lord, I would know what he saith that Execution should not be Awarded.

L. C. J. He talks of Discoveries and Confessions which we, you know, cannot take any notice of; Ask him again.

Cl. of Cr. Hast thou any thing to say for thy self why Execution should not be awarded against thee, according to Law?

Holloway. My Lord, I know not what hath been proved against me, but I have made such an ingenuous Confession to His Majesty of what I know—

L. C. J. Proved against you? You are Outlawed upon an Indictment for High-Treason; what can you say against the Court's awarding Execution.

Mr. At. Gen. My Lord, has he heard the Indictment upon which the Outlawry was grounded?

Cl. of Cr. No, Sir, only the Substance was told him, That he was Indicted of High-Treason, and Outlawed for it, and stands Attainted by that Outlawry.

Mr. At. Gen. If your Lordship please, the Indictment may be read to him, that he may understand what it is, and may not go blind to Execution.

L. C. J. Ay, Mr. Attorney, if you please, let it be so.

Cl. of Cr. Reads. The Jurors being Sworn to enquire for our Sovereign Lord the King, and the Body of the County of the City of London, upon their Oaths present, That—[And so the whole Indictment was read.]

Cl. of Cr. That is the Indictment, Mr. Attorney, and upon this he is Outlawed.

Mr. At. Gen. And so stands Attainted. What hath he to say to it?

L. C. J. Ay, why should we not award Execution against him according to Law?

Cl. of Cr. Have you any Thing to say?

Holloway. I have said what I have to say.

Mr. At. Gen. Pray what is that, my Lord, that he has said, for I was not here?

Holloway. I beg his Majesty's Mercy.

Mr. At. Gen. If the King be so gracious as to admit you to your Trial, can you make a Defence against the Indictment? Have you any Thing to say that you can defend yourself by, if the King do admit you to be tried, and that is a Mercy and a Grace, for at Law you are gone.

L. C. J. It is so, indeed, Mr. Attorney; if you will on the King's Behalf indulge him so far, as I suppose you have authority from the King to Consent unto, that if he has a mind to try the Fact, and can defend himself, he shall have that Liberty, that is a great Mercy, I assure you.

Mr. At. Gen. My Lord, That is the only reason why I did cause the Indictment to be read that he might hear it; that supposing he were not Outlawed, but that were out of the Case, if he hath any Thing to say that could defend him from it, the King would not exclude him, but admit him to his Trial, and extend his Mercy so far to him.

L. C. J. Mr. Attorney, it is exceeding well. Now you understand what is said by the King's Attorney, you have heard the Indictment read, it is an Indictment of High-Treason, that you with other false Traitors, Hone, Rumball, the Goodenough's, and the rest, did Conspire the Death of the King. Now though you are in Law actually Attainted, as much as if you had been Tried and Convicted, and received Judgment of Death upon that Conviction, to all intents and purposes, and there is no more for the Court to do, but to award Execution upon this Attainder, and be dealt with as a false Traitor. Yet however in as much as you have heard the Indictment read, if you think you have any thing to say that would satisfy the World, or a Jury, that you are not Guilty of what you are Indicted and Accused of, it seems the King is pleased to signify His Gracious Intention towards you by Mr. Attorney-General, that he is contented to wave that other Part the Attainder by Outlawry, and you shall have the Liberty to try it, if you think you can defend your self.

Holloway. My Lord, I cannot undertake to defend my self, for I have confessed before His Majesty that I am Guilty of many Things in that Indictment, and I throw my self on the King's Mercy.

L. C. J. Then he Confesseth it, and will not undertake to defend himself; as for the King's Mercy, that we must leave to His Majesty, who is the Dispenser of his own Grace, we are to execute his Justice, and must give a Rule accordingly.

Mr. Just. Withins. But I hope every Body here takes notice of his open Confession, when he might try it if he would. Surely none but will believe this Conspiracy now, after what this Man hath owned.

L. C. J. We were well enough satisfied about it before, and so was every honest Man, I dare say.

Mr. Just. Withins. Yet, perhaps, though he saith it, and others have confessed it, and the Evidence hath been made Publick, there are many People that say they will not believe it.

L. C. J. We do not mightily concern our selves what the People say. I am sure not one of all that were concerned in this Conspiracy, have dared to deny it absolutely, though some have been prevailed upon by ill Advice, to prevaricate about it, and shuffle it off. But none of them have had the Confidence absolutely to deny the Truth of the Fact, notwithstanding all the Calumnies and Reproaches cast upon the Government, and all the Arts that have been made use of to stifle it.

Mr. Just. Withins. My Lord, I speak it the rather, because we see what work Sir Samuel Barnardiston has made of it in his Letters, where he calls it a Sham-Plot, and says it is lost, except it be found among the Abhorers and Addressers.

L. C. J. But now the Plot is found among the Conspirators and Traitors, he may write to his Correspondents in the Country the next time: It is found among the Reformers of Government and Religion, that can swallow all Things, that can kill Kings and levy War, and do the worst of Villainies to promote Religion and Reformation, as they call it.—Let us think of some convenient Day, and give such Order that the Sheriffs see Execution done according to Law.

Mr. At. Gen. You must first pronounce the Judgment, my Lord.

Mr. Just. Withins. It is never pronounced in such a Case, Mr. Attorney.

L. C. J. No, we only give a Rule for Execution, the Outlawry is the Judgment, and that is upon the Record already.

Cl. of Cr. Yes, my Lord, we always enter it so.

L. C. J. Captain Richardson, I think, Wednesdays and Fridays are your usual Execution Days in London, are they not?

Capt. Richardson. Yes, my Lord, either of them.

L. C. J. Then Wednesday seven-night.

Capt. Richardson. Does your Lordship appoint Wednesday next?

L. C. J. No, that will be too quick; Wednesday seven-night.

Capt. Richardson. What Day your Lordship pleaseth, I suppose I shall have a Rule.

Cl. of Cr. You shall have a Rule, and an Habeas Corpus to deliver him, as the Court is.

L. C. J. In the mean time take your Prisoner back again.

And accordingly he was carried back to Newgate.

After which he sent the following Petition to the King for Mercy.

Most great and gracious Sovereign,

Your Majesty's now close Prisoner in Newgate, and condemn'd for my Crimes, which I have confessed myself guilty of, in a Paper of my own writing, delivered to the Right Honourable the Lords of your Majesty's Privy Council, in which is a true and faithful Account of all that I know concerning the late Plot, with the manner how I was drawn into it, and the Reasons why I did not come in at the first Discovery, and cast myself at your Majesty's Feet for Mercy, which I hope your Majesty hath perused, and find no Cause to think I have reserved any thing undiscovered; for when I was first taken, I resolved to declare the whole Truth, and nothing but the Truth, which I have here done, and will own to be true, before any that shall offer to contradict it, or say there was no Plot; and if any thing more occurs to my Memory, will not fail to declare it. I have now nothing to say for myself why I should not be executed according to Condemnation, but do most humbly prostrate myself at your Majesty's Feet for Mercy, acknowledging my hearty Sorrow for all that I have been guilty of, and remain in hopes, that that Fountain of Mercy which hath so abundantly flowed from your Majesty's sacred Breast ever since your happy Restauration is not yet dry, but that there are some Drops left for me, which if I may be so happy as to obtain, I shall always whilst I live, endeavour to approve myself your Majesty's most true and faithful Subject; and, I hope, will answer the Ends of a Pardon. Which that I may so do, and for your Majesty's long Life, peaceable and happy Reign, shall ever Pray, &c.

JAMES HOLLOWAY.

His Petition being rejected, he was Executed April 30th, 1684.

* Burnet's History of his own Times, Vol. I. p. 376. He had fled to the West-Indies, where he was taken, and sent over to England.

Being

Being come to the Place of Execution, he spoke to the Sheriffs as follows:

Holloway. MAY I have Liberty, Sir, to speak what I desire to speak?

Sheriff Daniel. Yes, Sir, you may. What you have, I suppose, will be by way of Discovery to the World of what you are brought here to die for.

Holloway. You have my Paper, Captain.

Capt. Richardson. Yes.

Sheriff Daniel. Have it you about you?

Capt. Richardson. I have it in my Pocket.

Sheriff Daniel. Shew it him (which he did.) Is it your own Hand-writing?

Holloway. Yes, Sir.

Sheriff Daniel. Is it your own Hand-writing?

Holloway. That is my own Hand-writing—A Discovery of what I knew I made to his Majesty, but a great many People think that I have not discovered what I knew, but I have discovered what I knew of the Plot, and I am heartily sorry I was any way concerned in that way, as to the endeavouring any thing by arms. I do think several things have been ill-managed in England, there have been many things done against the King and the Kingdom's Interest, and I wish the King was well satisfied of it, and that a Course might be taken to prevent it. And, I think, one way to prevent plotting (according to my weak Capacity) is, that his Majesty would be pleased to call a Parliament, and pass an Act of Oblivion for all Plotters whatsoever. There was a damnable Popish Plot, and I look upon the stifling of that, to be the only Cause that any Man did any thing in this. Had all the Popish Plotters been—

Sheriff Daniel. By the way, Sir, how do you know it was stifled?

Holloway. Sir, we have known that the laws could not be suffered against them, and the Parliament could not be suffered in the Prosecution of them. I wish the King would consult his own Safety, and the Safety of the Nation, and that an Act of Oblivion might pass, for I believe there are many concerned; and that there might be an end put to all News-mongers, that write into the Country Letters of News; I look upon that to do the King and the Kingdom more Hurt than any thing else.

Capt. Richardson. Mr. Holloway, I beg one thing, have you discovered all? I desire you would declare those (you did not name their Names) that, if Occasion were, would be ready; but that you had not spoke to them. Wade and others were to maintain their Poits.

Holloway. No, Sir, I had not spoke to them.

Capt. Richardson. This you did say.

Holloway. Yes, Sir.

Sheriff Daniel. And that you promised a Number of Men in this Design.

Holloway. Promise it! I did propose I might do it.

Capt. Richardson. What do you know of the contriving the Business of the Rye, for lopping, or taking off the King and the Duke?

Holloway. I was not with them till after the Time a good while; till about a Month or six Weeks after the Time I was not acquainted with them. I looked upon it as a Business not likely to take any Effect at all, for I could never find above five that were concerned in it.

Sheriff Dashwood. But did they not tell you at some one time they were concerned in such a Thing?

Holloway. Yes, Sir, they did so. They told me more than once.

Sheriff Daniel. In Bristol, or in London?

Holloway. In London.

Sheriff Dashwood. Mr. Holloway, you have a Liberty to say any thing you have a mind to.

Holloway. I have little to say more upon that Account. I am sorry I was concerned in that way, to do such a thing as to take up arms. But as to the Design I had, and the Plot I was acquainted with, it was nothing against the King's Life.

Capt. Richardson. Sure it was the same Plot, while there was a Design to seize the King, and take him from evil Company.

Holloway. We had a Design to take them that were guilty of the Popish Plot, and were Enemies to the Privileges and Liberties of the Subject.

Sheriff Daniel. And as a thing that tended to that, the King was to be seized till he consented to these things.

Holloway. It was supposed by them that told me of it, that many things that have been acted of late, were done contrary to the King's Knowledge, and that the King knew nothing of it; and I am perfectly of that belief too, that many things are done contrary to the King's Knowledge. And I was farther informed, that if the King could be but once acquainted with these things, that the King would presently come into those that should stand for his Assistance, and give up all those Offenders to Justice.

Sheriff Daniel. And if you could not tell him otherwise, you would take him first, and tell him afterwards.

Holloway. You may interpret it how you please, Sir. It was that all such Differences amongst the King's Subjects might be prevented for the future; for I believe there were never greater Differences in the Spirits of Men, though some think the Times were never better than now, because all things go according to their own Humour; but I suppose many in the Nation are satisfied that many things have been done contrary to Law.

Sheriff Daniel. Was it fit you should set up for a Politician, or a Statesman?

Holloway. No, Sir, I did not take it upon me; that was for the Scribblers that write News. I do not reckon myself worthy to direct in such a Case.

Sheriff Daniel. Mr. Holloway, you don't remember to give the Names of those Persons you spake of.

Holloway. It would be a Folly for me, Sir, to go to abuse Men that I did not know whether they would be concerned or no.

Sheriff Dashwood. But that there were Persons that would be concerned, you say.

Holloway. That we did think so; and if we should name every one that we thought would be concerned, I believe we might name three Parts of London.

Capt. Richardson. I hope you are in a great Mistake there.

Holloway. For that Design, I believe above three Parts would be for. I never had any Design but for the King and the Kingdom's Interest; though I know that Design that was carried on by Rumsey and West was a very heinous Design, but I believe they would not have found many in England that would have been for it; I never heard of above five for it.

Sheriff Daniel. Were you acquainted with Walcot?

Holloway. I was in his Company once or twice, but I heard him speak against it.

Sheriff Daniel. Was you ever with my Lord Shaftsbury?

Holloway. No, Sir, I was never with my Lord Shaftsbury but once, and that was about a Design I was promoting in Parliament, about the Linen-Manufacture.

Sheriff Daniel. Was you ever with my Lord of Essex?

Holloway. Never but once, and that was about that Business.

Sheriff Daniel. Were you ever acquainted with my Lord Russel?

Holloway. Never with him at all.

Sheriff Dashwood. You were saying you knew the Names of Five; who were they that were to be concerned in that Matter?

Holloway. I have declared them to his Majesty.

Sheriff Daniel. Did you know Ferguson?

Holloway. I knew him, Sir, but I know Ferguson to be against any such Design, and, indeed, we did look upon it to be a Thing that would come to no Effect.

Sheriff Dashwood. Do you mean the seizing the King?

Holloway. I mean the Infurrection.

Sheriff Daniel. Did you know of any Money raised or promised to buy arms?

Holloway. No, Sir, never. I heard of Money that was to be raised, but I did not know who was to raise it.

Sheriff Daniel. It is not our Business to ask you many Questions, if you have any thing to say you may.

Sheriff Dashwood. If you have any thing to say for the Discharge of your Conscience, do it.

Holloway. I thank God, I never had any Design against his Majesty's Person; what I intended was only for the Good of the King and Kingdom, and I did take it that it would have been so; and I am very sorry that any things should have gone contrary to Law, as they have done; and I hope care will be taken to prevent any such things for the future.

Sheriff Dashwood. The King hath said he will govern according to Law; he hath done so, and will do so.

Holloway. That I leave to the Judgment of all; many know better than I.

Sheriff Daniel. Such glossy Pretences are very strange, to carry on such a Design, for the seizing a Sovereign Prince, that you have sworn Allegiance to, or ought to have done.

Holloway. I think those Pretences, the Grounds that we went upon, were no glossy Pretences at all.

Sheriff Daniel. I think it is, that when Things are not done as you would have them, you must immediately rebel.

Holloway. No, Sir, not that; we did not design a Rebellion.

Sheriff Daniel. The seizing the King is certainly a Rebellion, and one of the highest Steps of Rebellion.

Holloway. We say this, that all Ways were used against Protestants; several Sham-Plots; but no Justice could be had against Papists.

Sheriff Daniel. Several of them were executed here.

Holloway. There were some executed at first, Sir; but afterwards, when so many great Persons came to be concerned, there was nothing could be had against them.

Sheriff Daniel. There were mighty Searches made about London, for that great Number of Papists talked on.

Holloway. There were a great many seized, Sir; but what became of them?

Sheriff Daniel. Generally tried, and brought to condign Punishment. You would not have had every Irishman believed against honest Men. Some People were called Papists in Masquerade.

Holloway. Irishmen were believed against Protestants, after they had turned about, and had sworn against Papists, they were believed then. It was well observed, that while the Irish Evidences did continue in the first Discourse of the Popish Plot, and in the first Evidence, then, it is well known, they were slighted, and all cried out against; but when they came to swear against Protestants, then Things were altered presently.

Sheriff Dashwood. I pray God all Mens Eyes may be opened to see what is done.

Holloway. I would not advise any one to go that Way to work, to do any thing by Force of Arms; and I wish the King's Eyes may be opened, that he may see his Enemies from his Friends; and I think he hath Cause to look for them near his Home.

Sheriff Dashwood. Have you any Papers to deliver?

Holloway. I have no other Papers; what Paper I wrote the Council had. I did write a Paper, that it might be some Satisfaction to the Opinions of People of what I knew, that care might be taken to prevent other Opinions, if there were an Error. And that Paper the Council had; though they took it very heinously of me that I should presume to write such a Thing. I looked upon it that I could not do more for the King, than to acquaint him of what I knew, that if they were misinformed, there might be care taken to alter the Opinion.

Sheriff Dashwood. You have delivered no Paper to your Wife, or to any Friends?

Holloway. That, I suppose, is well known to the Goaler.

Sheriff Dashwood. You know better than any Body whether you have or not. You may say Ay, or No.

Holloway. I could not be admitted to write any, for I could not have Pen and Ink to write any thing but this.

Sheriff Dashwood. And you have not delivered any Paper?

Holloway. I have written to some Friends. I know it is supposed that I had delivered a Copy of that Paper that the Council had; and, I think if it had been known publicly, it would have done no great Hurt.

Sheriff Daniel. You speak of several Peoples Opinions; what do you mean?

Holloway. As concerning the Times, Sir, the Management of Affairs.

Sheriff Daniel. Pray, Sir, under what Denomination do you reckon yourself?

Holloway. I reckon myself a Protestant.

Sheriff Daniel. Of what Sort? Of the Church of England, or of the Dissenters from them?

Holloway. I am not a Dissenter from the Church of England.

Sheriff Daniel. Nor joined with them.

Holloway. Nor joined with them altogether. But I thought that if any good had been designed for England, that I had done enough to merit a Pardon; for I had wrote so much of truth, and was so fair and plain in it, that I thought it would have merited a Pardon, if any Good were designed. If I could have discovered more, that had been for the King and Kingdom's Interest, I would have done it; for I did not do it rashly, but considered of it some time before I gave it in. I hope it will be a satisfaction that there was such a Plot; what other Men's Opinions might be of it I cannot tell, but leave every one to their own judgment. It was feared that arbitrary Government and Popery was designed: and truly, I think, at this present time, by what I can understand, that there is little better designed.

Capt. Richardson. This is reflecting upon the Government.

Sheriff Dabwood. This is not fit.

Holloway. I say it is contrary to the King's Knowledge, Sir.

Sheriff Daniel, Sir, we have neither a Reprieve nor a Pardon for you.

Holloway. I do not expect it, Sir; if Truth and Plainness would have merited a Pardon, I might have had it.

Capt. Richardson. The King is the best Judge of his own Mercy.

Holloway. Had the law been executed against Popish Offenders, I had never been concerned in any Plot.

Capt. Richardson. You know the King was very earnest in that, to have the Laws put in execution against them; and that he moved it to the Parliament to have it done. Have you any thing else to say that more nearly concerns you?

Holloway. I wish I could have been any otherwise serviceable to the King and Kingdom, before I left them. I should have been very willing; and it was always my Design to promote the King and Kingdom's Interest more than my own.

Sheriff Daniel. Well, Sir, you lay some things very well; but others ill.

Holloway. What I say, Sir, I leave to People's Judgments; if I am mistaken, I hope they will be otherwise.

Sheriff Daniel. Well, Sir, have you any thing farther to say?

Holloway. No, Sir.

Sheriff Dabwood. I suppose you used to keep a Meeting, or Club, at Bristol, with several there.

Holloway. I know some have represented a Club very bad in Bristol. A Club we had about the choice of Parliament-men.

Sheriff Daniel. The Horse-shoe Club.

Sheriff Dabwood. Or the Mermaid Club.

Holloway. The Horse-shoe Club it was only for carrying on the Election of Parliament-men. If all such things should be called Clubs, there were greater Clubs kept by another party.

Sheriff Daniel. Well, Sir, you had best fit yourself for death, you have no long time to live.

Then he opened his Bible, and read Psalms 62, and part of two chapters in the Hebrews, and afterwards asked the Sheriffs if he might have Liberty to pray; which being granted, he prayed.

(Then being asked, Who was in Council at the delivery of the Letter? He answered,)

Holloway. There was the Duke of York, and the Lord-Keeper; I did not deliver it: It was intercepted in a Letter, or given in. I did not know how it was; for I have been kept, so that I had not the Liberty to see any Friend, till Yesterday in the Afternoon I had the Liberty of two or three Hours with my Wife.

Capt. Richardson. You had your Wife with you before, and your Sister, and some other Friends.

Holloway. But that was never without a Keeper, Sir.

Capt. Richardson. You are in the right.

Sheriff Daniel. They do not use to allow Men under your Circumstances such a Liberty as you talk of.

Holloway. I pray God that no other People may concern themselves with public Affairs, out of their own way; and that the Scriblers might be put down, for they do more Hurt to the Kingdom than any thing else.

Sheriff Daniel. Have you any thing more to say?

Holloway. No, Sir.

Sheriff Daniel. Then God have Mercy upon your Soul.

Soon after which he was turned off.

The PAPER delivered to the Sheriffs.

Apr. 26, 1684.

TO stop the Mouths, &c. of all Pamphleteers, and News-Scriblers, who have done more Prejudice to his Majesty and Kingdoms, by their impudent endeavours to sham all Plots, and to fill the Country with false News, than they will ever be able to retrieve; and to satisfy all I leave behind me, I thought good to draw up a short Account of what I knew of the late Protestant Plot, how I came to be concerned, what induced me to it, and how far I was concerned, also my now Opinion of it, &c.

It was my Unhappiness to have too public a Spirit for one of my Capacity, and as soon as I came to be a free Man, to prefer the King's and Kingdom's Interest before my own; for having some Knowledge in Linen-cloth, upon the Prohibitions of French Linens, &c. I thought the Linen-Manufacture might be brought to Perfection in England, to the very great Advantage of the Poor, and so made some Trial of it in Warwickshire, where I employed some Hundreds of Poor, and in about eighteen Months time brought it to such Perfection, that I could make as good Cloth as the French, and so well imitate it, that few could know it from French; but the Prohibition being not so strict as at first seemed to be, French Cloth was brought in cheaper than ever; so that I was forced to leave off with Loss; but considering, that by an Act of Parliament for its Encouragement, in a Method I had thought upon, it might be settled much to the King's and Kingdom's Interest, advancing the King's Revenue near two hundred thousand Pounds a Year, and would have employed about eighty thousand poor People, and about forty thousand Acres of Land; concerning which I was (about June 1680 brought acquainted with the Earl of Essex, to whom I related the Business, who immediately had me to the (now) Earl of Rocheester, then President of the Treasury, and he had me to Sir Edward Dering, who (when they understood my Proposals) gave me something to bear my Charges, and encouraged me to attend the next Parliament, to endeavour the Promotion thereof; which I did almost the whole Sessions, and brought to the Speaker's Chamber some of the Cloth, which was compared with French, &c. and the Design well approved of by all; which brought me into too large Acquaintance for one of my Capacity; from whom I heard too much (as hath proved, for my Interest) of things that were then in hand concerning the Popish Plot, which prevented the doing any thing as to my Design. So after that I was encouraged to attend the Oxford Parliament, which I did; and was desired there by the Earl of Clarendon, and others, to prepare a Bill; the Heads of which I drew up, though it proved to no purpose but my Ruin. I wish my King and Country might reap the Benefit of what I pay so dear for. The more I knew during my Attendance on those two Parliaments, the more I was desirous to know; and did by some Scriblers and News-mongers constantly know most public Affairs that were acted, which they undertook to represent according to their own Humour; many Actions being represented very illegal, much against the Protestant Interest, in favour of Papists, &c. shamming the Popish Plot, and laying Sham Plots upon Protestants; abusing the Rights and Privileges of the Subject, the Truth of which I leave to the Judgment of all; but hearing many such like things, was easily prevailed with to be concerned in the Plot, according as it was proposed to me, viz.

About July 1682, I met with a Person who then being come from London, gave me a relation at large concerning the Election of Sheriffs that had been in June, the manner of which is well known to all; he represented it to me as a very illegal Action, and that there was a devilish Design of the Papists in it, to cut off the King's Friends, the stirring Men in both the last Parliaments, as to the Prosecution of the Popish Plot, who I always took to be both the King's and the Nation's Friends. That there were Witnesses had been ready a long time to swear against them, but they could not get Jurors to believe them, but now they had, by force of Arms, &c. got Sheriffs who will find Juries to believe them, and so hang them up at their pleasure; that there was none but bad Council about the King, who kept all ill Actions from his Knowledge; and if they proceeded to swear North and Rich at Michaelmas, and to choose Lord-Mayor, as they had done Sheriffs, the Protestant Gentry were resolved (naming some) to remedy what was designed, by an insurrection in several parts of England; and, if possible, to get the King off from his evil Council, and bring all Popish Offenders to Justice, saying, That they were sure that, when the King knew the Occasion of their rising, he would presently give up all Offenders, and come in to them. That it should begin in November in London, Bristol, Exeter, Taunton, Chester, York, Newcastle; and that we should hear more of it in a Month's time; therefore desired we might consider how it might be managed in Bristol; which we did; and concluded, that Bristol, with about 350 Men, might be easily secured by a Surprise, without the Bloodshed of one Man. About a Month after that, came the Person he mentioned we should hear more by; but he could declare no more than the former did, only that the Design went on, and there would be timely notice given to all Parts; but we hear of nothing but Disappointments and Delays, putting it off from time to time. In April I heard of another Design against the King, and Duke of York, as they were to come from New-market, some time in March; but when I enquired into that, found it was carried on by three or four; and never could hear the Names of above five that were for it. When I heard it, I declared my Abhorrence of any such thing, and that I was confident none in our Parts would be for such a base Action. After that, I enquired further into it, and could find, that although it was intended to be done six weeks before, that they had only a parcel of Arms ready, and that they had neither Men nor Horses; but one said if they could have raised 6 or 800. to have bought Horses, and also something to encourage Men, they should have found Men enough; so that I looked upon that only to be the Design of five or six Persons, and no way likely to be acted; but the general Design for the Insurrection was carried on by others; who, though they had made a great Stir in the Nation, trying the Inclinations of People, and had treated with the Scots and Irish, as I heard, who were to be ready at the same Time, yet were never come to any Resolution, as to any Time or Method, before all was discovered; tho' they had been eleven Months contriving of it, from the Time I first heard of it. This, I hope, will be enough to satisfy all People that there was a Plot; I mention no Names here, having given his Majesty a more large Account of what I knew of it, mentioning the Names of all that I knew concerned. The Arguments before mentioned, with many others to the same effect, not only soon prevailed with me, but made me indeed think it my Duty to do what I could for my King and Country's safety; being then fully persuaded, that not only Popery, but Arbitrary Government was intended; not then considering, (as I have since considered) how much Bloodshed it might have caused in the Nation; for then I thought all would have been ended in little time, supposing things to be as to me was reported. But I do now declare my hearty Sorrow or my yielding thereto, and asking therein; (though I can safely say I was not for taking the King's Life, but wholly for his Preservation) yet am satisfied that it might have caused very much Bloodshed in the Nation, and am glad it did not take effect. Also I declare, that I am satisfied it was a very great Sin against God, not only in distrusting his Providence, but in offering to take the Work out of his Hand, who knows the Hearts, Thoughts and Actions of all, though never so secret; whose Mercy and Pardon I most humbly beg, and trust shall have; and in confidence thereof, (through the Merits of the Blood of our Lord and Saviour Christ Jesus) can willingly die. Nothing (next to this and all other my Sins) is more Trouble to me than the Thoughts how (dying) I shall leave all my Relations and Friends in Trouble concerning my worldly Affairs; being, by reason of this unhappy Concern, not in such a Posture as they should be: So that by my Death, my dearest Friends will not only be left in great Trouble, but I under the Censure of many, none understanding how Things are; my Wife and Children ruined, and my Creditors great Losers; whereas might I have been thought worthy to live, I should have taken the Trouble off them all, and hoped in time to have paid every Man to a Penny; for I can from my Heart say, that as I hope for Salvation, I never designed any Fraud to any Man, but to pay every Man his Due. I have heard that some should say, I took up Money at Interest to carry on the Plot; which I disown; for for I never was at any Charge therein more than common Expences, nor never heard of any Money raised upon that Account; though I heard of Ten thousand Pounds that were to be raised for the Scots, but suppose it was not done. I bless God I am pretty well satisfied, and hope shall be fully, as to my future State, and can willingly leave the World; but upon the Account of my Friends and Creditors, considering the Condition they will be left in, could gladly have lived some Time, that I might have taken off that Scandal that I fear will be laid upon me when I am gone; but God knows my Heart, I am free, and a ways was from any Thoughts of Fraud or Deceit.

I am satisfied that all Means that could be thought on have been used to get as much out of me as possible, but had it not been My Resolution to declare all that I knew concerning the Plot, and also to do what in me lay to prevent all plottings for the future, that there might be an End put to such Heats, Differences, and Heart-burnings, that is, one against another; that his Majesty and his Subjects might live in such Love and Union, as ought to be between a Prince and his People, I had not wrote what I did; for I was never a Man to be wrought upon by Severity, and what I wrote was not without due Consideration, being nothing but Truth. I do suppose, that making such a full and large Confession at first, and some Expressions that might be observ'd in my Letters which I perceive were intercepted, may cause some Thoughts that I still reserve some persons undiscover'd; but as to my Confession, it was not rashly done, I had had some Weeks at Sea to call Things to Mind, and as for Persons, I gave a true Account, and of all Passages I could remember, though others do and may come into Mind. What I suppose was observed in my Letters, might be some foolish Expressions concerning some of my Acquaintance, and that I would betray no Friend, meaning, that no Severity should cause me to accuse any Friends falsely to save myself, although (if I had thought the accusing of a Number of Persons would have saved my Life, and had been one that would do any such Thing to save Life) I had the most Cause of any Man; for when I first absconded, those in Bristol, and elsewhere, that were my most intimate Acquaintance, refused to do any Thing for me; nay, would not receive Letters when I wrote to them, fearing they should be found to hold Correspondence with me. When I gave in my Confession, I stood not upon Terms of a Pardon, being confident, if Truth would merit Mercy from the King, I should have his Pardon, and that it was the only Way to gain Mercy with God. I find it already that People are passing their Censures upon me, some one Way, and some another, for my not pleading, and accepting of another Trial when it was offered, saying, that I confessed the whole Indictment; which I disown; for I said thus, What I was guilty of I had confessed to his Majesty, and wholly depended upon his Mercy; besides, I had some other Reasons why I did not plead, which at present I conceal; and also why I did not speak what I intended. More I may say at the Place of Execution, before I leave the World, which will be according as I find Things; but as to a Discovery of any more Persons (I cannot) than has been already mentioned. Should I mention any whom I thought would have been concerned, I may much abuse them, though I believe many Thousand in the Nation would have appeared, for the Reasons afore-mentioned, which caused me to be concerned. I doubt not, but several that were concerned, who are or may be cleared, for want of sufficient Proof against 'em, or by his Majesty's Mercy, will blame me for confessing what I knew; and not much grieve that I failed of a Pardon, or at my Death. But I repent not my Confession; and could I discover more, would do it willingly, though I find no Mercy with Man.

JAMES HOLLOWAY.

CXXVII. The Trial of WILLIAM SACHEVERELL, and Nineteen others, at the King's Bench, for a Riot committed at Nottingham, May 2, 1684. Paschæ, 36 Car. II.

The Defendants having before pleaded Not Guilty, were now brought to their Trial.

Cl. of Crown. CALL the Defendants, William Sacheverell, Esq; and others.

Mr. Pollexfen. We appear.

Cl. of Cr. Gardez vestres Challenges. Swear Sir Humphry Miller.

Which was done, and the Twelve being sworn to try the Cause, being Gentlemen of the County of Kent, were these following:

Sir Humphry Miller,	Jury	Humphry Stiles,
Sir Henry Bosville,		Walter Hooper,
William Lambert,		James Masters,
Charles Wheeler,		Richard Britton,
Richard Marjth,		Ralph Petly, and
Edward King,		Edward Bathurst.

Cl. of Cr. Gentlemen of the Jury, hearken to the Record: 'Sir Robert Sawyer, Knt. his Majesty's Attorney-General, has exhibited an Information in this Court against William Sacheverell, Esq; George Gregory, Esq; Richard Mansfield, Esq; Henry Plumtree, Esq; Charles Hutchinson, Esq; John Greaves, Gent. William Greaves, Gent. Samuel Richards, Robert Green, Francis Salmon, Arthur Richards, Ralph Bennett, John Sherwin, William Wilson, Clerk, Samuel Smith, Thomas Trigg, Richard Smith, John Hoe, William Smith, Joseph Turpin, Nathaniel Charnell, Humphry Barker, and Joseph Astlin; For that whereas the Twenty-ninth Day of September, in the Thirty-fourth Year of the King, there was an Assembly at Nottingham, in the County of the said Town, duly summoned, and called, and met before Gervas Wild, then Mayor of the said Town, for the electing and swearing of a Mayor of that Town, for the Execution of the Office of Mayor of that Town for the Year then next following, according to the Effect and Tenour of certain Letters Patent in that Behalf before granted, by our Sovereign Lord the King that now is, unto the Mayor, Aldermen, and Burgesses of the Town of Nottingham, in the County of the said Town; and that in that Assembly the said Gervas, being then, as aforesaid, Mayor of the said Town, began to proceed to such Election; and that then and there the said Mayor made, and caused to be made, a public Proclamation for the Departure of all Persons from that Election that were unconcerned therein, and for keeping the King's Peace; and that nevertheless, they the said William Sacheverell, and the Rest of the Defendants, being Persons well knowing the Premises, and unconcerned in that Election, but being ill-disposed Persons, and to disquiet, molest, and trouble the Peace of our Lord the King that now is, and the common Tranquility of that Town, and the aforesaid Election wholly to hinder, did during the Time of the said Assembly, and after public Proclamation made as aforesaid, viz. the said Twenty-ninth Day of September, in the aforesaid Thirty-fourth Year of this King, at the aforesaid Town of Nottingham, in the County of the said Town, with Force, and Arms, &c. riotously, routously, unlawfully, and seditiously, together with many other ill-disposed Persons, and Disturbers of the Peace of our said Lord the King, to the Number of Five Hundred Persons, to the said Attorney-General as yet unknown, assemble, congregate, and unite themselves together, and themselves together continued, to disturb the Peace of our Lord the King that now is; and that then and there the said William Sacheverell, and the other Defendants, the aforesaid unlawful and ill disposed Persons so assembled, congregated and united then and there, with Force and Arms, &c. riotously, routously, unlawfully, tumultuously, and seditiously, by the Space of seven Hours, to disturb the Peace of our said Lord the King, and to continue the said Riot, did excite, move, persuade, and procure, and then and there, by the whole Time aforesaid, made, and caused, and excited to be made, great Rumours, Clamours, terrible Shouts, and unusual Noises; and then and there, with Force and Arms, &c. riotously, routously, unlawfully, and seditiously one Mace, being the Ensign of Office to the Sheriffs of the County aforesaid belonging, from one John Malin, the said John Malin being then one of the Sheriffs of the Town and County of the Town of Nottingham, against the Will of the aforesaid John Malin, took, had, carried away, and detained, to the inciting of great Danger, and moving of Tumults, and Effusion of much Blood, to the great Terror, Disquiet, and Fear of all the Liege Subjects of our said Lord the King, to the Evil Example of all others in like Case offending, and against the Peace of our said Lord the King, that now is, his Crown and Dignity. To this Information all the Defendants but Richard Mansfield and Henry Plumtree, have pleaded Not Guilty, and for Trial put themselves on the Country. But the Defendants have alledged that the Inhabitants of the Town and County of the Town of Nottingham ought not to be drawn out of the said County, and that the County of Kent is the next County to the County of the Town of Nottingham, and therefore have prayed that a Jury of the County of Kent might try the Issue; to which the King's Attorney has agreed: And you being Freeholders of the County of Kent, and returned, and sworn to try this Cause, your Charge is to enquire whether the Defendants, or any of them, are Guilty of the Offence in this Information, or Not Guilty, and if you find them, or any of them Guilty, you are to say so; and if you find them, or any of them Not Guilty, you are to say so; and hear your Evidence.

Then Proclamation was made for Evidence in the usual Manner.

Mr. Holloway. May it please your Lordship, and you Gentlemen of the Jury, This is an Information preferred by Mr. Attorney-General, against William Sacheverell and others, for a most notorious Riot: And it sets forth, that upon the Twenty-ninth of September, in the Thirty-fourth Year of this King, at the Town of Nottingham there was an Assembly duly summoned before Gervas Wild, then Mayor of the said Town, for the Election and Swearing of a new Mayor of the said Town for the Year ensuing: That the Mayor began to proceed to Election, and made Proclamation for all Persons to depart that were not concerned in the Election, That the Defendants being no way concerned in the Election, but being ill disposed Persons, to disturb the Peace of that Place, and set the Town together by the Ears, did in a riotous manner assemble themselves with many other ill-disposed Persons, to the number of five hundred, and continued in their Riot for the Space of Seven Hours, with a great deal of Noise and Tumult, and with Force and Arms did riotously carry away and detain a Mace from one John Malin, then one of the Sheriffs of the Town, against his Will, to the great Terror of his Majesty's Subjects, to the evil Example of all others in the like Case offending, and against the King's Peace. If we prove all or any of these Defendants who have pleaded Not Guilty, to be Guilty, you will find them so.

Mr. Recorder. May it please your Lordship, and you Gentlemen of the Jury, I am of Counsel in this Cause for the King, This is an Information against a matter of twenty-one Persons for being in a notorious Riot, and continuing in it for two Days together. If it please you, Mr.

Sacheverell

Sacheverell he is in the Front of them, and he and seven more of these Defendants, very considerable Persons, were not at all concerned either by any old Charter, or by the new Charter in this Election, but mere Strangers, and yet they must needs come on purpose to inflame and set on the others. I shall name them that were not concerned in the Election, William Sacheverell, George Gregory, Charles Hutchinson, William Wilson, Clerk, Joseph Turpin, Nathaniel Charnell, Humphry Barker, and Joseph Asplin. These Persons, Gentlemen, had no manner of pretence to be at this Place upon the account of an Election. The matter of it was thus: Michaelmas-Day, 1682, the Mayor that then was Gervas Wild, was at his own House, with some of his Brethren, in order to go to Church that Morning, according to the usual Custom of that Place, at the Day of Election; but having notice that there was a Charter coming down, and expected every moment, truly the other Side, Mr. Sacheverell, and the rest that were there, for he was present himself, were very zealous to go to Church very early, but I believe not so much out of zeal to go to Church, but more to come to a speedy Election, if possible, before the new Charter came down. The Mayor at the same time desired them to stay a little, but could not prevail, and thereupon they go to Church, and while they were there, the new Charter comes, and then the Mayor having got the new Charter, goes into the Council-Hall, and sends for the Books from the Clerk, who was then in the Church, and he came and brought them. When they came to the Council-Hall, the Mayor was proceeding in order to have himself sworn upon this new Charter, and they having some notice what was doing at the Council Hall, were willing to make all the haste they could out of the Church, and came down to the Council-Hall: And when they came there, the Mayor tells them his business, that he had a new Charter, and was going to be sworn according to the King's express Commission; and Sacheverell stands up in the front of them, and says, we will have no new Charter; we will have no such Mayor as you would have; but we will have a Greaves Mayor, and that was the Outcry; a Greaves Mayor, a Greaves Mayor; to that degree, that all the Mayor and Sheriffs could do, could not pacify them. But thus they made a Tumult and an Uproar, by the help of a Parson, Wilson, who I believe, will give you an account by and by, what he had to do there, and how he was concerned in the Election of a Mayor. At length the Mayor was forced to withdraw, and did go down out of the Council-Chamber into the Common-Hall, where he got himself sworn; and by that time he had got that done, they came out of the Council-Chamber into the Common-Hall, and acquaint the Mayor, that truly they had chosen Greaves Mayor in the Council-Chamber, and required him to swear him. Mr. Mayor said, they had nothing to do to choose a Mayor, it was no Election, and they would proceed to Election according to the Charter, he having now taken the oath. This raised the Tumult higher, and now there were got together about five hundred Persons, so that at last some of the Aldermen that attended the Mayor, were fain to withdraw for fear of Mischief, the tumult was so outrageous, some crying out the new Charter was not worth one Groat, others crying out, No new Charter, and all crying, A Greaves, a Greaves; and this they stood upon. The Mayor withdrew to his own House, with much ado he got out of the Hall, and when he was got thither, there he proceeds to an Election, and while he was doing that, truly they having gotten one of the Maces away by Force, they went to the Cross, and there they proclaimed their Mayor, with great Shoutings and Outcries, rejoicing for the new Mayor they had gotten, and the new Charter that they have defeated. While they were there, the Mayor having chosen another according to the new Charter, regularly came down, and proclaimed that Mayor at the Market-Place, as is usual in such cases, and made proclamation that the rest should depart; but instead of that they withstood him, and would not suffer the Crier to make Proclamation, that any body could hear him; but a great Riot they committed in an outrageous manner, resisting Authority, defying it, and despising it. After this, this would not satisfy them yet, but the next Day, being Market-Day, they must proclaim their Mayor again, which is a Practice never known upon any Election; but at the open Market there before all the People they proclaim him, with great Rejoicings for the new Mayor they had gotten, and wishing the People to stand by them: And for their parts, if they had not right done them now, they did not doubt but to meet with a Parliament that should do them right. In this great Disorder was this Town by this Tumult, which was thus headed by Persons of Eminency, and popular Persons, who helping to carry on such a Faction as this was, it was great Odds there had not been real Fighting, and Battle in good earnest; but it did happen to be better appeased, and they went Home, but ever since their whole business has been to uphold this Power, and attend him up and down constantly since as their Mayor, and opposing the Authority of the Mayor by the King's new Charter. We will call our Evidence, my Lord, and they will every one of them speak to the several Defendants, and the several Parts of this famous Riot; and when we have done this, we hope you will be satisfied, Gentlemen, to find them Guilty.

Mr. North. Will your Lordship please to spare me a word of the same Side for the King? My Lord, this is a Proceeding of an extraordinary Nature, and if not taken notice of, it will be thought there is no Law in England; for it is a Method to have Authorities questioned, not in Westminster-Hall by the Rules of Law and Justice, but decided by Noise and Rabble, and going together by the Ears. My Lord, this Surrender of the old Charter, and the sending down of a new one, was not secret, but well known, and that occasioned the great Congregation of these Gentlemen that had nothing to do in the Town, and so it was a premeditated Design to give a Disturbance in the Place, in Opposition and Affront to his Majesty's Charter. My Lord, I do suppose they very well knew that Matters of that nature were properly determinable in a way of Law; and if the Mayor had no Authority by the new Charter to do what he did, they knew very well how to question him, and them that joined with him, for it: But they did not think that so effectual for their Purpose; they did not think fit to take that Course, but rather chose to proceed in the Methods of Disturbance, and that occasioned all that Mr. Serjeant has opened. The first Step they made, my Lord, was to appear in the Town-Hall, there to make an Election of their own, and there to cry up a Mayor of their own choosing, without the Authority of the present Mayor; which was all irregular from the beginning to the end. When they had done that, then this Mayor must be proclaimed up and down the Town upon Market-days, when the Country came in, with great Noise and great Rabble. We shall call those that were present, who will give you an Account of the Proceedings of all this Matter, and shew it to be a thing so enormous, that there has not been the like, nor can be paralleled by any thing, unless by that not far off the Common-Hall at London.

Mr. Jones. My Lord, if the Persons that had been concerned in Election (for the Town of Nottingham consists of particular Persons that are to come and act in this Matter of the Election of the Mayor) had been the only Persons that were met in this Assembly, possibly it might have had some sort of Mitigation and Excuse; but, my Lord, here are mere Foreigners, People that have nothing to do in the matter nor in the Corporation, but Gentlemen that come out of the Country with an armed Multitude, and for them to come where they had nothing to do, and make such a Riot, in such an outrageous tumultuous manner, is the next Act I know to the highest Rebellion. For they knew very well what the Matter was, by the Cries of a Greaves, a Greaves, no Toplady, no Toplady, no new Charter, and you see who were the Abettors. In truth, the Insurrection spread so far, that if the Duke of Newcastle, who is Lord Lieutenant of the County, had not come with Force, they had gone downright to Blows, and been all in Blood. And if such Proceedings be not publicly punished, the King's Authority, and the Peace of Corporations can never be preserved. We shall call our Witnesses to prove it; Sacheverell was the Captain of them, and we shall begin with him.

Mr. Powis. My Lord, we shall make it short, for we shall shew without meddling with the old Charter or the new Charter, it was a Riot.

Mr. Recorder. Swear Mr. Wild, Mr. Edge, and Mr. Hall. Sir Thomas Jenner.

Mr. Pollexfen. There will be one thing necessary to be settled in this case, my Lord, concerning the Witnesses; they call Wild and other Persons, they are Members of the new Corporation, and we object against them as being Witnesses in this Case, and our Objection, my Lord, arises thus: It will appear in this Case, that there is a Controversy betwixt the old Charter and Corporation, and this, that the Information is brought upon the new Corporation, whether the old Corporation be still in being, or was at this time in being; and whether this new Charter be a good Charter in Law: The Matter depends both in this Court and in Chancery; a Scire Facias is there brought against the new Charter, and a Quo Warranto here against the old. Now, my Lord, it will so fall out, that if so be the new Charter, upon which this Information is founded, be not good in Law, we think it goes with the Defendants. So now they call the Members that claim under the new Corporation to be Witnesses, and thereby they would have a Privilege by their own Testimony, to maintain their Interest in the new Charter, which we think by Law they ought not to do.

L. C. J. Look you, Mr. Pollexfen, though it is not fit for us to interrupt Gentlemen when they are making Harangues, yet we must tell you, we do not take notice much one way or other of the difference between the old Charter and the new, for our Business is to mind that which is before us upon the Information, and we must set by all things that are not before us, and not take notice of them one way or other. Do you think we intend to try the new Charter or the old Charter upon an Information for a Riot? If in case there were a Doubt whether the old one be gone or still in being, take the proper way for the determining those things. You shall not think to be let in upon the Business of a Riot, to try the validity of your Charter; if you have a Scire Facias to repeal the new Charter, or if you have a Quo Warranto against the old Charter, in God's name go on in a regular way. But do you tell me that supposing the new Charter is an ill Charter, and the old one a good one, that right or wrong is to be tried by Rabble and Noise? No, the business we are to try whether here were a Riot Committed by these Defendants against the Public Peace or no.

Mr. Holt. My Lord, we are upon the point of Exception to the Witnesses; and they open it themselves that there is such a Controversy in the Town.

*L. C. J.** We will not try that Controversy here at this Time. Sir George Jeffries.

Mr. Holt. My Lord, the Information is Special, it is grounded upon the new Charter, and sets forth that this Wild being Mayor by virtue of this new Charter—

L. C. J. He was Mayor de facto, and I do not know but he was de jure. But suppose a man do take upon himself to be Mayor, and it may be according to the Rules of Law he is not Mayor, the way to know whether he be Mayor or no by Law, is to take the Methods and Proceedings that the Law has appointed; but not by Tumults and Riots, we must have none of those Things to decide Controversies, there must be nothing of plucking out one another's Throats.

Mr. Just. Wilm. Pray, Mr. Holt, If the King sends down a Charter to make a Corporation, shall all the People rise in a Body against it? No, satisfy yourself for that; if the King sends down his Charter, the People shan't fly in the Face of them that bring it. It is not come to that yet, nor I hope never shall.

L. C. J. No, no, for the Matter of Right, we are not upon this Information to determine whether the old Charter be in being, or the new one be in being; but for that you must go according to the Rules of Law, and take your regular Course; and I'll tell you by the way, it is not he that has the most Company, that has always the greatest Right: We all know very well, and I have been in a place that has been hinted at the Bar, and there indeed he that had most Noise, had always most Right, as they thought.

thought; but we will have none of these things, go on for your Right in a regular Way in God's Name; we must keep to the Business before us, this Riot.

Mr. Pollexfen. My Lord, we are in a Place now where we hope such things will not be, and we desire to have Right settled by Law.

Mr. Recorder. Swear Mr. Wild. [Which was done.] Pray give my Lord and the Jury an Account what happened at Nottingham upon Michaelmas-Day (82.) Tell the whole Matter of it.

Wild. My Lord, and you Gentlemen of the Jury, I was then Mayor when this Business happened: When the King's New Charter came down, as soon as it came to my hands, I went straight to the Town-Hall, thinking to be sworn by the New Charter, that so I might be capable of swearing others in their rooms that were turned out. When I came there, I desired Alderman Parker and Rippon to go for Alderman Edge, who was at the Church, that we might be sworn regularly, he being Town-Clerk, who sent me word that he would not come; but in some little time afterwards he came, with a great many Persons with him, as Mr. Sacheverell, and a great many others that had no business there.

Mr. Recorder. Pray name as many of them as you can.

Wild. Mr. Sacheverell, Mr. Hutchinson, Mr. Plumtree, Mr. George Gregory, Mr. Green, Mr. Sherwin, Sir Thomas Parkyns.

Mr. Pollexfen. He is not named here.

Mr. Recorder. Don't disturb him, pray let him go on.

Mr. Pollexfen. We only take notice he names some that are not down in the Information.

L. C. J. Can't you be contented, what if he does name others that are not there, What hurt is that to you?

Wild. There were several others, but these Gentlemen did not belong to the Town, nor had no Business there; some of them were no Burgesses, and they that were Burgesses had no Votes there. Sir, as soon as these Gentlemen came into Court, I was a little amazed to see so many Gentlemen; I took the King's New Charter out of the Box, and Alderman Rippon took it by one side and I by the other. Gentlemen, said I here is the King's New Charter, which he has been pleased to grant to the Town of Nottingham; and said I, Mr. Serjeant Bigland, will you be pleased to cast your Eye upon it, and satisfy these Gentlemen whether it be a New Charter, and what are the Contents of it? Sir, says he, do you ask my Opinion as Recorder, or as a Counsel? Says I, I ask your Opinion as a Friend. Then says he, I won't give you my Opinion. Then said I, Mr. Alderman Edge, will you look upon it, and give your Opinion, it is your Duty to read it as Town-Clerk. Sir, says he, I know what I was by the Old Charter, but I don't know what I am by the New. Says I, it is your Duty so to do. No, says he, I will not; so, my Lord, and Gentlemen of the Jury, the rest of the People that were in the Room, cried out, No New Charter, No New Charter. Then spoke Mr. Sacheverell, Sir, says he, this is not our Business here now, we come here for the Election of a Mayor by the Old Charter. Sir, said I, I know not any Business you have here, nor a great many Gentlemen that are here; it would better become you to be in another place. Sir, says he, Will you proceed to Election or no? Sir, says I, I have a great deal more to do before I can proceed to Election; I was to be sworn myself, and to swear half a dozen, before I could proceed to Election, in the room of those that were turned out, to make them capable of electing. And so they cried, No New Charter, No New Charter, a Greaves Mayor, a Greaves Mayor. Then they cried, Mr. Alderman Edge, take your Book, and proceed to Election. Who are you for, Mr. Mayor? Said I, you cannot proceed to any Election without my Consent, and I disclaim it; and so, Gentlemen, farewell. My Lord, that was in the Council-House next to the Guildhall.

L. C. J. What Day was that?

Wild. It was Friday, Michaelmas-Day, (82.)

L. C. J. Well, go on.

Wild. So, my Lord, I adjourn'd the Court into the Guildhall, which was a Room adjoining to that where this Matter happened, and we sat a while upon the Bench, and made a little Speech to the Burgesses of the Town, and told them the King had granted a New Charter, and if they pleased to be silent, they should hear it read. This was after I was sworn; for as soon as I came there, they gave me my Oath, and swore me Mayor by the New Charter. We commanded Silence there several times, but the Burgesses were very tumultuous, and it was occasioned, as I believe, my Lord, by the coming in of two Gentlemen, Mr. Gregory and Mr. Hutchinson, who came to tell me, the Gentlemen in the other Room had elected Mr. Greaves Mayor, and desired me to come and hear him sworn. Said I, they can't elect without my Consent, and I disclaim it, I will have nothing to do in the Business. With that the Burgesses began to be so extraordinary tumultuous and outrageous, and keep such a Noise and a Stir, that we were afraid they would have plucked us off the Bench; in-somuch, as one that was by, my Brother Parker, whispered me in the Ear, says he, Will you stay here to be knocked on the Head? I told him, I hoped there was no Danger of that. We commanded Silence again and again, for the reading of the New Charter; and there was an honest Gentleman in Court, one Mr. Bawd, a Barrister at Law, that took it and read it very distinctly to the Burgesses and the Company, as far as they would give him leave. I made Proclamation for Silence, and keeping the Peace divers times, and for all, that had no Business there, to depart; but they were so outrageous, that Alderman Parker went away: He was afraid of his Life, as he told me. I staid some little time after Alderman Parker went away; but finding there was nothing to be done for the Noise, I adjourned the Court to my own House, and did all the rest of the Business there, electing and swearing the Mayor and other Officers. My Lord, presently after I was come to my own House, comes Mr. Charles Hutchinson, Mr. George Gregory, Mr. Samuel Richards, and Mr. Arthur Riccards; and they came very impudently and saucily to demand the Mace. They said they were sent to demand the Mace: Said I, I think you have nothing to do with it.

L. C. J. Were they concerned in the Election by the Old Charter?

Wild. No, my Lord, they were not by the Old nor New, nor none at all. Said they, Will you please to give us your Answer, whether you will give us the Mace or no? Said I, I received it from a very good Authority; I received it by the King's Authority, and to the King's Authority I will give it again. Said they, Is that all the Answer you will give us? Yes, said I, that is my Answer: So they went away. After we had sworn all the Men that were in the New Charter, we went to the Election of a New Mayor, and we chose Mr. Toplady; and when we had chose him, we went to proclaim him, as the usual Manner was, and proclaim'd him at the Market-Cross, the Week-Day-Cross, as we call it; and as we were proclaiming our New Mayor, there comes Sherwin and Green, with a great many more, about forty I believe, or thereabouts; and as it grew towards Night, they shouted and threw up their Hats, and we thought they would have run in upon us, and they cried out, No New Charter; No New Charter, a Greaves Mayor, a Greaves Mayor.

VOL. III.

Mr. North. What became of the Mace?—Wild. I kept it.

L. C. J. What is this Gentleman's Name?

Mr. North. Mr. Wild: He was Mayor then. Have you no more to say, Sir?

Mr. Just. Withins. Pray who was at the Head of all this Rabble? Who was the Chief of them?

Wild. I believe if Mr. Sacheverell had not been there, and those other Gentlemen, we had had no Disturbance.

Mr. Pollexfen. Pray, Sir, let me ask you, had these Gentlemen their Swords on?—Wild. Yes.

Mr. Just. Withins. Did they abet and countenance the Tumult?

Wild. Yes, they did abet it.

Mr. North. Did any Body strike or threaten?—Wild. There are some in Court can tell you something of that, I know nothing of it.

L. C. J. I would know of you how many Persons were present at this time when this Tumult was. Pray name as many of them as you can. You have named Sacheverell, Gregory, and Hutchinson for the first Part: You have named about the Business of the Mace, Samuel Richards and Arthur Riccards.

Wild. And Mr. Green and Mr. Sherwin were there at the Market-Cross.

L. C. J. Who else?

Mr. Powis. Was Mr. John Greaves there?—Wild. Yes.

Mr. Powis. Was William Greaves there?—Wild. Yes.

Mr. Powis. Was Ralph Bennet there?—Wild. He was there.

Mr. Powis. Was William Wilson there?

Wild. I can say nothing to him.

L. C. J. Was Samuel Smith there?—Wild. Yes.

L. C. J. Was Thomas Trig there?—Wild. Yes.

L. C. J. Was Richard Smith there?—Wild. Yes, He was there too.

L. C. J. Was John Hoe there?—Wild. Yes.

L. C. J. Was William Smith there?—Wild. Yes.

L. C. J. Was Joseph Turpin there?

Wild. He was in the Hall throwing up his Hat, but I did not see him in the Council-House.

L. C. J. Did he abet the Tumult?

Wild. Yes, he cried out, No New Charter, No New Charter, a Greaves Mayor, a Greaves Mayor.

L. C. J. Was Nathaniel Charnell there?—Wild. Yes.

L. C. J. Was Humphry Barker there?

Wild. I can say nothing to him.

L. C. J. Was Joseph Astlin there?

Wild. I can say nothing to him neither.

L. C. J. Then these Three you say nothing to; William Wilson, Humphry Barker, and Joseph Astlin.

Mr. North. Pray, Sir, favour me with one Word; I would ask you this Question: Was there any Proclamation made by your Order to have those depart that had no Business?

Wild. My Lord, I did order it so; and I think the Serjeant is in Court; I sent him into the other Room, and did order him to make Proclamation; he will give you an Account of that.

Mr. Recorder. How came it about they were got to Church before you came from your own House? Pray tell us what you said to them before they went to Church. Were there any of them before that at your House that Morning, and what did you say to them?

Wild. May it please your Lordship, my Lord, and Gentlemen of the Jury, the New Charter was not come till something late in the Day; they had been at my House about Eight or Nine of the Clock, to have me go with them to Church, and they were impatient of staying, but I persuaded them to stay; for, said I, we shall have a New Charter by and by. Some of them were my Friends, and I spake to them to persuade the rest to stay. I did persuade them to stay a great while, and went out from them, and came to them again. At last News was brought me, that the New Charter was within the Limits of the Town, (for we had a Spy at the Top of the Houses) and that half a score were come with it; so I went to Alderman Edge, and told that now the New Charter was come within the Bounds of the Town. When they heard me say so, they cried, Away, away, let us go to Church, and they said Mr. Sacheverell was in the Street, and so they followed him to Church. Away they went from my House; but a little before they went, I said to them, Gentlemen, if you will give but a little time, the Charter will be here in a Quarter of an Hour or less, therefore pray be pleased to stay and see it before you go, for I tell you I must act by the New Charter, and not by the Old.

Mr. Just. Withins. When you ordered them to make Proclamation of Silence, how did they behave themselves?

Wild. They were as tumultuous as ever they were.

Mr. Just. Holloway. If you have any thing more, speak your full Knowledge of it.

Wild. My Lord, I did perceive a great deal of Danger there was; I knew not how it would be the next Day, we were afraid of being knock'd on the Head, so I dispatched a Messenger on Saturday to my Lord Duke of Newcastle, that he would please to come to us and assist us, for I believed we were in a great deal of Danger. My Lord came to us on Saturday Night, and staid there till we were pretty quiet again.

Mr. Recorder. What did they do on Saturday, the next Day?

Wild. It was the Day of proclaiming the Mayor at the other Cross, the the Malt-Cross, it being upon the Market-Day, when the Country People came in, that so they may be satisfied who is Mayor of the Town.

Mr. Recorder. Did they proclaim their Mayor that Day?—Wild. Yes.

Mr. Recorder. Pray speak out, and tell how that was?

Mr. Just. Holloway. Pray, Mr. Mayor, by the Custom and Usage of your Corporation, is the Mayor proclaimed any other Day than when he is elected?

Wild. Yes, the next Day after, to satisfy the Country who are Mayor and Sheriffs of the Town.

L. C. J. Were both the Mayors proclaim'd that Day?

Wild. Yes, after we had proclaim'd our Mayor, presently there came a great many Gentlemen, and proclaimed their Mayor.

L. C. J. Name them who they were?

Wild. My Lord, I was not so near them, as to tell particularly who they were; but they threw up their Hats, and made a great Noise: There are enough in Court can tell who they were.

Mr. Lovell. Pray, Mr. Mayor, will you tell us by whose Authority and Direction this Assembly was called?

Mr. Thompson. Sir, he ask'd you a plain Question, pray answer it; by whose Direction was the Assembly called?

Wild. Sir, I do not know; they had no Summons from me.

Mr. Holt. Is it not usual to meet of course, without Summons, on the Day of Election?

Wild. Never that I knew of without Summons; but our New Charter not being come, I durst not give any Summons.

Mr. Lovell. Is it not usual for the Burgesses to go and wait upon the Mayor to Church?

Wild. Yes, those that are summoned; but not without Summons.

Mr. Just. Withens. Is it usual that the Multitude should make the Mayor go to Church before he has a mind to it?

Mr. Lovell. Did you make any Summons at all for that Meeting?

Wild. I sent no Summons.

Mr. Pollexfen. 'Tis all laid in your Information, that the Assembly was summoned by you.

Wild. All that I ever sent for, as I know, was Mr. Serjeant Bigland. There were two or three Gentlemen at my House that ask'd me to send for him, he having been Recorder by the Old Charter. Said I, if Mr. Serjeant Bigland has a mind to come, he may come if he will; so I sent for him; but there were none of those Gentlemen that I nam'd before, that I sent for.

Mr. Pollexfen. I think you say that you went from the Council-House, and afterwards went into the Hall, and there you were sworn, and then you did proceed to read the Charter; pray, were any of the Defendants, or which of them, in the Hall?

Wild. Sir, I told you that Mr. Gregory and Mr. Hutchinson came into the Hall, and Mr. Charnell, and Mr. Turpin were there in particular.

Mr. Pollexfen. What did Mr. Gregory and Mr. Hutchinson do there?

Wild. They came, Sir, to desire me to go into the Council-House, for the Gentlemen had chosen Greaves Mayor, and desir'd me to hear him sworn.

Mr. Pollexfen. Was Mr. Sacheverell, or any there, but those that you say came to tell you what they had done in the Council-House?

Mr. Holt. Who staid behind in the Council-House?

Wild. All but those that came out with me.

Mr. Jones. Pray, to satisfy them, tell them how far the Council-House and the Hall stand at a distance: How far asunder are they?

Wild. But just over the Door-Threshold from one another.

Mr. Jones. Are they contiguous to one another?—Wild. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Jones. Can they come into the Council-House, but they must go thro' the Hall?

Wild. No, no, they must come from the Hall first, and so go into the Council-House.

Mr. Pollexfen. You were speaking of some of the Company that had Swords by their Sides.

Wild. Yes, the Gentleman had.

Mr. Stanhope. Did you observe Mr. Sacheverell and Mr. Gregory had their Swords by their Sides?

Wild. Yes, to the best of my knowledge they had.

Mr. Stanhope. To the best of your knowledge; do you swear they had or no?

Mr. Recorder. Would you have him swear beyond his knowledge?

Mr. Stanhope. Had Mr. Plumptre a Sword when he came from Church to the Hall?

Wild. I see his Face among the rest, but they were so many, I can't speak particularly who had their Swords on, and who not; I believe they might have all their Swords on.

L. C. J. Pray, Sir, what do you mean by that Question? Plumptre is not here before us.

Mr. Stanhope. He is in the Information.

L. C. J. You had as good ask if Mr. Peartree was there.

Mr. Stanhope. My Lord, he said he was there, and his Name is in the Information.

L. C. J. You had best ask us, whether every Man in the Town had his Sword on. Let us keep to the thing before us, and not ask such impertinent idle Questions of People we have nothing to do with.

Mr. Stanhope. Is Mr. Sacheverell a Burgess of the Town?

Wild. Yes, he was a Burgess by the Old Charter; but tho' he was a Burgess, he was not one of the Electors. He had nothing to do there, nor Mr. Gregory, nor Mr. Plumptre.

Mr. Fuller. Who are the Electors?

Wild. The Electors are the Mayor, Aldermen, Coroners, and the rest of the Council, by both Charters, and so he had nothing to do there.

Mr. Just. Withens. He was not concerned in the Corporation, but only a Gentleman-Burgess.

L. C. J. How long have you been of the Council of that Town?

Wild. I have been there a great while, a dozen or sixteen Years.

L. C. J. Have you been present at the Election of Mayors before that time?—Wild. Every Year.

L. C. J. Who were the Persons that used to come to elect Mayors before that time?

Wild. The Old Mayor, the Aldermen, the Council, the Coroners, and the Sheriffs, and those that have been Sheriffs.

L. C. J. Did the other Burgesses use to come?—Wild. No.

L. C. J. Did Mr. Sacheverell and Mr. Gregory use to appear for the Election of Mayors before that time?

Wild. No, my Lord, they had no business there.

Mr. Recorder. At this time they had, it seems.

Wild. They made themselves Business.

Mr. North. Pray swear John Malin. [Which was done.]

Mr. Stanhope. Mr. Wild, Pray be pleas'd to tell the Court how Mr. Hutchinson express'd his Sauciness, for you are pleas'd to say, he and Mr. Gregory came saucily to you?

Wild. So he did, Sir, he came saucily to demand the Mace, which he had nothing to do withal.

L. C. J. Is Mr. Hutchinson here?

Mr. Stanhope. Yes, he is: Did he demand it himself, pray, or did he tell you the other Mayor demanded it?

Wild. He came to demand it.

Mr. Stanhope. Did he tell you from whom he came?

Wild. He said he came from Mr. Greaves.

Mr. Stanhope. Then he did not demand it for himself?

L. C. J. And if Mr. Greaves had demanded it, he had talked saucily; for it was not in his Power to demand it. If he had any right to it, there was a proper Place for him to apply to, if it were detained from him.

Mr. Stanhope. My Lord, with Submission, I understand no such great Sauciness in it, to make a demand of an Ensign of Office.

L. C. J. But I say it was saucy, and I tell you you had been saucy if you had done it; for every Man that meddles out of his Province is saucy: You may carry that away with you among your other Observations. Every little prick'd Fellow, I will warrant you, must go to dispose of the Government. Let Mr. Hutchinson and Mr. Gregory be as good Men as they will, they had better have studied to have been quiet, and meddled with their own Business. And I will tell Mr. Gregory ad

Concilium ne accedas antequam voceris, is a Rule, and ought to be observed: But we are wonderfully afraid, forsooth, to tell our Minds: No, I tell you it was saucy, and if you had gone upon that Errand, you had been saucy.

Mr. Stanhope. It may be I should have known better than to have gone on such an Errand.

L. C. J. So you would done well to do, and you should know better than to ask such insignificant impertinent Questions as you do. It was very saucy, I tell you; and if the best Man of your Party had gone, it had been saucy. You shall know our Minds, if you put us upon it, because you are so big of it. We are come to a fine pass, that every little prick'd Fellow must come to demand Maces that are the Badges of Authority, and they must not be told, forsooth, that they are saucy.

Mr. North. Pray, Mr. Malin, will you give an Account what you know of this Matter?

L. C. J. We are trying People's Rights by Club-Law: but by Grace of God it shall not be so, so long as I sit here.

Malin. I was then Sheriff at that time.

L. C. J. What time?

Malin. The time of the Riot, on Michaelmas-Day. I then being Sheriff went out to meet the Charter that was coming at that time, and I went as far as Leicester, and came back with it about Eleven of the Clock, as near as I can guess. I came with the Charter on the one side of him that brought it, and another that is concerned with us that we left behind, on the other side: I met these Gentlemen that stand in this Cause, I'll name them, if you please.

L. C. J. Do so.

Malin. Mr. Sacheverell, Mr. Gregory, Mr. Hutchinson, Mr. John Greaves, Mr. William Greaves, Samuel Richards, Robert Green, Francis Salmon, Arthur Riccards, Ralph Bennet, John Sherwin, Samuel Smith, Thomas Trig, William Smith, Joseph Astlin, and Nathaniel Charnell, I met these Men.

L. C. J. Where did you meet these Men?

Malin. At the Gate called Rye-Smith-Gate. They were a-coming with a great many more, and I suppose they went before; for I went forward to Mr. Mayor by the New Charter and by the Old Charter too, and I met him, and delivered the Charter to him, and staid there, and the rest of the Gentlemen that were concerned of our Party by the King's New Charter, and we went from thence to the Guildhall, and from thence we went into the Council-House, and when we were in the Council-House, Mr. Mayor sent for Mr. Edge as Town-Clerk. They were gone then to Church, I was one that went. He was concerned in the New Charter both as Alderman and Town-Clerk. I went for him to come to see the Charter read, and that was all. I see them fit in Order, in that Manner and Form as they had used to do before in former times, ready to go to the Election in the Vestry after the way it used to be in, by the Old Charter, for I have been concern'd in Elections the former Way six or seven Years; but I never saw any Gentlemen in all that time appear there. There used to be none but the Mayor, the Aldermen, and the Clothing. There were none of these Gentlemen, as ever I saw, and I am of seven Years standing, six I am sure, I suppose seven, but only one Gentleman once, which was a Gentleman that Alderman Edge brought in to see the Formality, a Gentleman of the Six-Clerks Office, as I remember. This being done, I acquainted Mr. Alderman Edge with our Errand, but he did not come to us; but some time after we had sat there in the Council-House, these Gentlemen came with a great many, I know not how many Hundred came there, and when they saw the Mayor was going to read the New Charter, these Gentlemen began to stir; and when they came in, we wonder'd to see such a Buffle of those that had nothing to do there: And the first thing that was said, was spoke by Mr. Sacheverell, as I do remember, for I saw him there; We come here for to elect a Mayor by the Old Charter. Says Mr. Mayor then to them, I know no Business you have here Gentlemen, any of you; and upon that he made Proclamation clamation, and told them they had nothing to do there, and he would have nothing to do with them. So then they called out for a Poll, and did proceed on as far as their Party went, and one or two of those that were concerned in the new Charter, but not as to any of their Party. There was one of them, Mr. Hardy, that gave a Vote for Mr. Edge, and this was all. But they would not depart at all; but Mr. Mayor told them they had no business there, and he had nothing to say to them: And with that he took up the Mace, and went with some of the Aldermen into Guild-hall. And when they saw him going away, they began to cry out, and he had much-ado to escape, they were so busy to keep him in there. And as they laid their Hands upon the Mace to stop it, the Serjeant got away with it, and went out with the Mayor. Then says Mr. Sacheverell, Stop the Books, stop the Books, two or three several times. With that there was one of the Coroners, Mr. Woolhouse, laid hold on one of the Books; and whether there was any pulling or tugging, I cannot tell; but I suppose some of the Books were stopped.

Mr. Powis. Then what was done as to the Mace that belonged to you as Sheriff?

Malin. I was crowded out, and I could not lay hands on my Mace; but the Mace lay upon the Board, and was left there among them: And I was crowded out, and followed Mr. Mayor, for there was no Quietness there, unless you would stay to be knocked on the Head.

Mr. Powis. What became of the Mace?

Malin. I sent the Serjeant for it, and he told me he demanded it, and they would not let him have it.

L. C. J. But speak your own Knowledge, not what another told you.

Malin. I came in afterwards there; when he told me he had been there, and laid his Hand upon it, and they rescued it from him, and he could not have it, I went in myself, and demanded the Mace of the Gentlemen. There was Mr. Salmon, Mr. Richards, Mr. Arthur Riccards; there were four of them that told me they had as much right to the Mace as I had. Gentlemen, says I, that is strange, I am by your Charter Sheriff still, there is nobody elected in my room, and our usual Way is to deliver our Maces, you know, in another Place, and not to rescue them away, and detain them by Violence. Likewise the Mace was a thing that I paid for; I was so much Money out of Pocket upon it; for that is our usual Way, it being bought lately, every Sheriff lays down such a Sum, and loses Ten Shillings by it at the Year's end. I told them then too I was Sheriff by the King's new Grant, and therefore the Mace belonged to me.

Mr. Powis. What is that Arthur Riccards?

Malin. An Attorney at Law.

Mr. Powis. He is none of the Aldermen, is he?—Malin. No, no.

Mr. Powis. What is Salmon?

Malin. He is a Feltmonger, or a Glover; he makes Gloves.

Mr. Powis. What had he to do there? Was he one of the Aldermen?

Malin. He was one of the old Council. And there was one Bennet too.

Mr. Powis. What is Richards?

Malin. He is a Bookbinder. He was one of the old Council. He was Coroner.

Mr. Powis. What did you say of Bennet?

Malin. Ralph Bennet was one that told me he had as much Right to the Mace as I.

Mr. Recorder. Well, go on to what was done the next Day, the Market-Day, Saturday.

Malin. I can't say much to that; for I was with Mr. Mayor making Proclamation of those of that were by the new Charter, but I did not see them proclaim any thing.

Mr. Recorder. Was you by when Proclamation was made?

Malin. I was by when we were all proclaimed, but not when they were; but then—

L. C. J. Brother, let him go on to tell us what happened on the Friday.

Malin. Then Mr. Alderman Wild, who was the Mayor, when he came out thence, went into the Guildhall, where there were Abundance of Burgesses gathered together; and seeing them so unquiet, he was satisfying them as far as he could; says he, if you will hear, you shall have the Charter read, either into English, or as it is in Latin, and then you will see that none of your Privileges are diminished from you, but increased rather: And he was about to read it, and shewed the Broad Seal to them; when in comes Mr. Hutchinson and Mr. Gregory, to desire, or request, or command, or something, Mr. Mayor to come into the Council-House; they told him they had chosen Greaves Mayor, and he was to come to hear him sworn. With that the Burgesses that had been quieted before, and was so civil as to hearken, and were about to hear the new Charter read, flung up their Hats, and cried out, No new Charter, a Greaves Mayor, a Greaves Mayor. Then Alderman Parker durst not stay any longer; says he, I won't stay to be knocked on the head. Then every one was frightened, and the Mayor took up the Mace and ran away.

Mr. Recorder. How many might there be in the Hall?

Malin. I believe three or four hundred.

Mr. Recorder. Did they restore the Mace to you?

Malin. They came the next Day, and would have tender'd me Money for the Mace.

Mr. Recorder. What did you say to them?

Malin. I told them, I knew no right they had to the Mace, and I would take no Money for it. It was one Rayner that came and tender'd me Money for it.

Mr. Jutt. Holloway. Pray, Sir, let me ask you, in the electing of your Sheriffs, do the Sheriffs return the Mace; or can any body require the Mace before the Goal is turned over?

Malin. Yes, my Lord, the Goal may not be turned over in a Month; but the Ensigns of Authority are delivered to them presently after they are sworn.

Mr. Holt. Pray, Mr. Malin, do you know which of these Defendants were there at that time when there was tossing and throwing up of their Caps, as you say?

Malin. A great many of them were in the Council-House; they had taken that Room to themselves, and thrust us out, and none of them came into the Hall but Mr. Hutchinson and Mr. Gregory; and the Burgesses were very quiet till they came and demanded Mr. Wild to come and hear their Mayor sworn.

Mr. Holt. How long did Mr. Gregory and Mr. Hutchinson stay in the Hall?

Malin. I do not know; they staid so long as as to demand the Mayor to come.

Mr. Holt. Did they carry themselves peaceably and civilly while they were there?

L. C. J. What had they to do there? I ask you that, Mr. Holt; and in case you have a mind to have some Questions asked and answered, I'll put you in mind of a Cafe of a parcel of Apprentices in London, that were met together about pulling down some Houses in Moorfields: And in case you ask me another Question, I can tell you the Resolution and Opinion of all the Judges about that Cafe. There is Law for recovering every Man's Right, but Club-Law is not the way to determine Right.

Mr. Recorder. Swear Mr. Rippon.

[Which was done.]

L. C. J. You know what became of some of those Apprentices, Mr. Holt.

Mr. Jennings. Mr. Rippon, pray will you tell the Court what you know of this Riot at Nottingham?

Rippon. Upon Michaelmas-Day, (82,) about Eleven of the Clock, the Charter came to Town; I was then with Mr. Mayor, Mr. Wild, so we went straight away to the Hall forthwith, and we desired that he would be sworn by Mr. Beverley that was Steward. No, says he, I have no mind to it, till Mr. Edge, that was Town-Clerk, came to do it according to his Office; so he desired me and Alderman Parker to go to the Church to desire him to come and do his Office. We did so, and spake to Mr. Edge: Says he, if they will please to come hither, well and good, I shall not concern myself any further: Then, said we, will you give us the Books that concern us; they are there, said he, what would you have more? Nay, said I, I am satisfied; so we came away. As soon as we came back to the Hall, we told him the Message that Mr. Edge had sent; so Mr. Wymondsell that was Deputy-Recorder, was reading the Charter. Says Mr. Mayor, if you please, I will be sworn, and proceed to Election. Presently comes a great Company, Mr. Sacheverell, Mr. Hutchinson, and a great many; if you please to give me leave to look upon my Paper I can tell you; there was William Sacheverell, Esq; George Gregory, Esq; Charles Hutchinson, Esq; John Greaves, Gent. William Greaves, Gent. Samuel Richards, Gent. Robert Green, Gent. Francis Salmon, Gent. Arthur Riccards, Gent. Ralph Bennet, Gent. John Sherwin, Gent. William Wilson; I don't know, I must beg your Pardon, I cannot speak particularly to him; Samuel Smith, Thomas Trigg, Richard Smith, John Hoe, William Smith, Joseph Turpin, Gent. Nath. Charnell: I cannot say any thing of Humphry Barker, but there was Joseph Astlin, Taylor. These Gentlemen came in with Swords by their Sides, several of them really to the terrifying of those that were there; I was very much afraid myself. So Mr. Mayor looked upon Mr. Edge, and says he, Mr. Alderman Edge, will you take the Charter, and read it, for the satisfaction of yourself and these Gentlemen? Says Mr. Edge, I do not know what I am by that Charter, whether I am any thing or not; I know what I am by the old Charter. Says Mr. Sacheverell, that is not our Business at present, we come to elect a Mayor by the old Charter; and very hot they were, and called out to Election, to Election, Salmon and these Fellows; so that Mr. Mayor could not be heard, and to Election they went; and I asked Mr. Wild, who was then Mayor, who he was for? Says he, I do not understand by what Authority some of these Gentlemen come here: they are excluded by the old Charter, and I think it were better for you to be elsewhere: They then asked who he was for? Says he, I am for none: Then they asked Alderman Parker, and he said the same; and when we see they would have nothing done but that, we withdrew into the Hall, and fell upon swearing the Mayor. We swore him, and just finished the Oath, and the People were very silent, and he drew out the Charter, and shewed the Broad-Seal, and said, Here is the King's New Charter, I am very confident none of your Immunities and your Privileges you are deprived of: and there being some little stir, said I, Pray be quiet and silent, while you hear it read; at last they were very silent and quiet, and we thought it would have been a very fair Business; when in comes Mr. Hutchinson and Mr. Gregory, to tell Mr. Mayor that they desired his Company, as the Custom was, to be at the Swearing of Mr. Greaves Mayor, for so the old Mayor ought to be, or else he is no Mayor, unless he be sworn by the preceding Mayor. Says he, I have nothing to say to him, I know no Mayor that he is; we are about our own Business, obeying the King's Authority and his Charter. This was no sooner said, but they had animated the Multitude of People that were there, that they flung up their Hats in a very irreverent Posture, as I never saw the like, shouting and crying out, No New Charter, a Greaves Mayor. I was fain to secure the Charter; and a farrendine Waistcoat that I had on, was all rubbed to pieces to save the Charter, and I had much-ado to save it. My Brother Parker he was so afraid, he got off the Bench; Prithee, said I, stay; for certainly they dare not do these things; says he, I am afraid of my Life, and fare you well. Mr. Mayor and I sat a-while, for we knew not which way to take, but at last we got away thro' them: But if I touch'd Ground, I wish I might never see my Wife again.

L. C. J. Now whether that be a Curse that thou layest upon thyself or no, I can't tell.

Rippon. Had you been there, Sir, you would have been afraid too.

Mr. Recorder. Pray speak that again.

Rippon. I say again, when I went away down with Mr. Mayor, I did not touch the Ground for eight or nine Yards together; for they would not make way, and they pulled me by the Gown, several of them; and if any body else had been there, he would have been affrighted.

Mr. Powis. How long did they continue the Rabble up?

Rippon. So, Sir, we got straight away to Mr. Wild's House, that was then Mayor, and we did swear him accordingly as the usual way was: For the Charter impower'd us, as Mr. Wymondsell told us, that we might elect any where; so we fell to the Business of the Day, and by that time we had three parts done, they had done, and proclaimed their Mayor: But then they come and send Mr. Hutchinson, and Mr. Gregory, Samuel Richards, and Arthur Riccards, to demand the Great Mace for Mr. Greaves,

Greaves, as he was Mayor: Said Mr. Wild, what shall I do? Why, said I, go down and give them their Answer; tell them they are saucy Fellows to do any such thing: Says he, they are Gentlemen; why then, said I, tell them they might know better than to do so. So he went down and told them; said he, I receiv'd it by good Authority, and will never part with it, but to as good an Authority as I receiv'd it. So we staid, and went on and did the Business of the Day; and afterwards, between five and six of the Clock, we went to the Cross, and there proclaim'd the Mayor by the New Charter, according to the Custom, and return'd every one to our own Houses. The next Day we were afraid of making a Disturbance; but about Nine of the Clock we went and proclaim'd the Mayor, and about Eleven there came all these Gentlemen, and there they proclaim'd Mr. Greaves Mayor, which was upon the Saturday, accompanied by all these Persons, as near as I can say.

Mr. Powis. Was Mr. Sacheverell there then?—Rippon. Yes..

Mr. Powis. Were all the rest there?

Rippon. To the best of my Knowledge they were.

Mr. Holt. Can you say Mr. Sacheverell was there?

Rippon. Yes, he was.

Mr. Holt. Who was there?—Rippon. There was the two Greaves's, and Green, and Richards, and Bennet.

Mr. Holt. Did you see them there?—Rippon. Yes I did.

Mr. Recorder. Rippon, Pray will you recollect yourself, and tell the Court who was there on the Saturday?

Rippon. Mr. Sacheverell, William Greaves, John Greaves, Samuel Richards, Salmon, Arthur Richards, Ralph Bennet, John Sherwin, William Wilson.

Mr. Recorder. Was Wilson there?—Rippon. Yes, I see him myself.

Mr. Recorder. What, rejoicing?

Rippon. Yes, he was rejoicing as the rest did, to the terrifying of us all.

Mr. Recorder. Was he in the Croud?—Rippon. Yes.

Mr. North. Will you ask him any thing, Gentlemen?

Rippon. I know nothing, if it please your Lordship.

Mr. Holt. Pray, Sir, this; Can you say that Mr. Sacheverell had his Sword on, on Michaelmas-Day?—Rippon. Yes, certainly he had one on.

Mr. Holt. Can you take it upon your Oath he had?

Rippon. Nay, there will be several that will swear it, I will warrant you; and I am sure you would have been afraid if you had been there.

L. C. J. Were Mr. Hutchinson, or Mr. Gregory, Burgesses, either by the New or Old Charter?—Rippon. No, they were not.

L. C. J. Were Mr. Sacheverell, and any of these Gentlemen ever present at any other Election?

Rippon. It is possible, after the Election is over, they might invite Gentlemen to feast at their Houses, but never to have any Concern in the Election in the least.

L. C. J. How many Elections have you been present at?

Rippon. I came into the Council at the King's Coming-in, and I have been Alderman five or six Years.

Mr. Powis. He came in by the Regulation.

Mr. Pollexfen. Pray whereabouts was it the Mayor was sworn?

Rippon. At his own House.

Mr. Pollexfen. Whereabouts were the Sheriffs sworn?

Rippon. What Sheriffs?

Mr. Pollexfen. Malin, the Witness that was before.

L. C. J. He was the Old Sheriff.

Mr. Holt. And where were the New Sheriffs sworn?

Rippon. At the Mayor's House.

Mr. Pollexfen. Was Mr. Malin Sheriff by the New Charter?

Mr. Holt. Was it before the Election of Mr. Greaves Mayor, or after?

Rippon. After.

Mr. Pollexfen. Was Mr. Malin by the Old Charter, or by the New, Sheriff?—Rippon. By the Old.

Mr. Pollexfen. And not by the New?—Rippon. No.

Mr. Pollexfen. He says he was, and you say he was not.

Rippon. For that Day he was so, but then he went out.

Mr. Pollexfen. Did the Mayor return to the Hall after he was sworn, or after you left the Hall in the Fright?—Rippon. We went straight to Mr. Wild's before he was sworn, and then we swore him there.

Mr. Pollexfen. But the Question ask'd you is, Did Mr. Wild return back to the Hall after he had taken his Oath; and was sworn in his House?

Rippon. No, He staid in his House; it is not usual for the Mayor to go back to the Hall.

Mr. Pollexfen. Did he go to the Cross afterwards?—Rippon. Yes.

L. C. J. It was on Michaelmas-Day that he was sworn; and it was by their Proclamation made at the Cross, that he was sworn Mayor that Day?

Rippon. Yes, my Lord.

L. C. J. And was it the Day after that they proclaim'd Greaves to be Mayor?

Rippon. Yes, my Lord; 'tis true, to the Terror of us all: I will assure you it was a wonder there was no more Mischief done.

Mr. Pollexfen. These Gentlemen were not in Town that Day.

L. C. J. Take you your Liberty to make your Defence afterwards; but you must distinguish, there are two Days, and some People were one Day, and some the other; some People were at the Time of the Election, that were not at the Market-Place; and some were at the Market-Place, that were not at the Election.

Mr. Just. Holloway. That Day Greaves was thus chosen Mayor in that tumultuous Manner, did any of these Persons take upon 'em to swear Greaves, when they had thus chosen him?

Rippon. We went out into the Hall, and in that time they did swear him.

Mr. Recorder. Was Mr. Greaves sworn that Day by the pretended Election, Malin?—Malin. Yes, by the Coroner.

L. C. J. But I perceive by their Old Charter, there was no Mayor to be sworn, but by the Old Mayor that went out.

Mr. Stanhope. Did not the Coroner use to swear the Mayor by the Old Charter?

Rippon. Yes, but in the Presence of the New Mayor; he was by always.

L. C. J. What do you mean by swearing of him by the Coroner? Hark you, upon your Oath, was there ever any Mayor of Nottingham, in your Time, sworn but in the Presence of the Old Mayor?

Rippon. No, never, my Lord.

L. C. J. Do you call that Swearing, because he reads the Oath to him? Mr. Holt. The Coroner has Authority so to do, as we shall shew you by and by.

Mr. Powis. Then swear Reynolds.

Reynolds. I brought down the Charter, my Lord.

Mr. Recorder. I would ask Rippon a Question before he goes out: Let us know of you where the Old Mayor was sworn by virtue of the New Charter?

Rippon. I can't tell that; the New Mayor was sworn by the New Charter, at the Old Mayor's House.

Mr. Recorder. The other two Witnesses did swear, That the Old Mayor was sworn in the Hall; but he says he was by, when the New Mayor was sworn in the Old Mayor's House.

L. C. J. It is understood upon the Receipt of the Charter, Wild, who was the present Mayor, was sworn in the Hall; but afterwards, by reason of the Hurly-Burly, and Noise, they went away, and chose the New Mayor at Wild's House; that is the Fact that is sworn.

Mr. Recorder. It is right, my Lord.

Mr. Powis. Pray, Reynolds, will you tell my Lord the whole Story; for you it seems brought the Charter down.

Reynolds. My Lord, I brought the Charter from London; and when I brought the Charter, I was sent by Mr. Mayor, to acquaint Mr. Edge, that the Charter was come, and the Mayor desir'd him to come and hear it read; Mr. Edge ask'd if the Mayor would not come to Church; I told him he was at the Town-Hall. When we came to the Council-House, proceeding to have the Charter read, and all those things, Mr. Sacheverell, and a great many others, came to the Council-House; and there the Mayor offer'd to Mr. Bigland the New Charter, that if he would, he might read it. Mr. Sacheverell, after some little Discourse, told him that was not their Business, they were come to elect a Mayor by the Old Charter: Says Mr. Mayor, I do not know any Authority you have to elect a Mayor: Says he to me, make your Proclamation for all those to depart that have no Business; which accordingly I did; and then came along, and catch'd up the Mace; and Mr. Alderman Rippon, and Mr. Mayor, came into the Common-Hall; and there told the Burgesses that were met, that the King had granted them a New Charter, and there was none of their Privileges diminish'd; and if they would, they should have it read in English or in Latin. Then they went to swear Mr. Alderman Wild, according to the New Grant: Presently Mr. Hutchinson and Mr. Gregory came in, and told him they had elected Mr. Greaves Mayor, and if he would, he might come and hear him sworn: He said, he knew no Authority they had for it, and denied any such Election. Then there were such Shouts, as soon as ever the Mayor had given him that Answer, No New Charter, No New Charter, a Greaves Mayor, a Greaves Mayor; that tho' Silence was proclaim'd divers times, yet there was no hearing him speak: Whereupon he adjourn'd the Court, and we went to the Mayor's House, and there they chose the New Mayor, Mr. Toplady, and he was sworn; and then we came to the Cross, where they us'd to proclaim the New Mayor, and then came down Mr. Sherwin and Green, with a great many others, shouting, No New Charter, No New Charter, a Greaves Mayor, a Greaves Mayor. The next Saturday following, a great many of them went to proclaim him at the Cross again, among the rest Mr. Pierpont.

Mr. Recorder. Was Gregory there too?—Reynolds. Yes, I think so.

Mr. Jones. Did you make Proclamation at the Common-Hall, for all to depart that had no Business?

Reynolds. At the Council-House I did, before we came to the Common-Hall.

Mr. Jones. Do you remember who was there?

Reynolds. Mr. Sacheverell and Gregory, and others.

Mr. Jones. Did they continue there?—Reynolds. Yes.

Mr. Pollexfen. Did Mr. Sacheverell make any Noise there?

Reynolds. There was a great Noise in the Hall.

Mr. S. Ward. Did you hear any thing concerning the stopping of the Books?

Reynolds. I heard Mr. Sacheverell cry out, Stay the Books, stay the Books.

Mr. Fuller. What Books did he mean?

Mr. Reynolds. They were some of the Books that belonged to the Town.

Mr. Stanhope. Were they the Poll-Books?

L. C. J. What do you mean by Poll-Books? There was no need of a Poll that I can hear of.

Mr. Powis. What do you know about their coming to demand the Mace?

Reynolds. Yes, there was Mr. Gregory, and Mr. Hutchinson came to the Mayor's to demand the Mace, and he ask'd them who sent them; they said, Mr. Greaves, the Mayor that was chosen, had sent them.

Mr. Holt. You speak of a Proclamation, where was it?

Reynolds. Yes, I did make Proclamation in the Council-House, to bid all depart that had no Business.

Mr. Just. Withins. How came you to make that Proclamation?

Reynolds. The Mayor bid me, and I did it.

Mr. Holt. Was the Mayor sworn then?

Reynolds. It was before any thing was done.

Mr. Holt. Was it before he was sworn upon the New Charter, upon your Oath?—Reynolds. It was in the Council-House.

Mr. Recorder. It was when you were crying up your Greaves Mayor.

Mr. Powis. Afterwards, did you observe they headed the Rabble at any time afterwards?

Mr. Recorder. Swear Alderman Parker.

[Which was done.]

Mr. Jones. Are you sworn, Sir?—Parker. Yes.

Mr. Jones. Why then will you please to give my Lord and Jury an Account of what you know of this Matter?

Parker.

Parker. At Michaelmas-Day was Twelve-month, I came to Mr. Gerwas Wild's House who was then Mayor. It was about Eleven of the Clock that I was there. There were a great many met that used to meet that Day, in order to the choosing of a New Mayor, and there were a great many others that the Mayor did not know of their coming there; for he gave no order, he said, for several of them that came, to appear there. They did importune him very much to be gone, in order to the Election of a Mayor. Said I to the Mayor, We do expect a Charter, and if we should go on to the choosing of a Mayor, we should be all in Confusion. So after a while, the Dissenting Party withdrew out of the House. Some Gentlemen it seems met with them, and went forward towards St. Mary's Church. Immediately after came the Charter down by him that was last sworn. We were sent up to the Church to desire Alderman Edge, that was the Town-Clerk, to come and read the Charter, and to let us know how we were to proceed in relation to the Work of the Day. He said he would not come. Afterwards we went to the Town-Hall, into the Council-Chamber; and after some little time, says Mr. Mayor to me, Brother Parker, I would desire you, and Mr. Rippon, and Mr. Sheriff Malin, to go up to the Church, and desire and command my Brother Edge to come down, and assist us in this Business; so we did go up and spake to my Brother Edge; said I, Mr. Mayor desires you to come down, the Charter is come, and he would have you come and read it; and said I, if Mr. Serjeant Bigland, and Mr. Alderman Greaves will come down, they may be satisfied there is a Charter, and we cannot act otherwise than by that Charter. Alderman Edge said, He knew there was an Old Charter, and what he was by that Charter; he did not know of any New One, and would act by the Old Charter, and not by the New One. When we came down to Mr. Mayor, said I, my Brother Edge will not come down among you; here is a special Commission in the Charter directed to four of us, or any two of them, to swear you Mayor; we must do that the first thing we do, and go forward in that, for we can do nothing till you are sworn Mayor. By and by comes down a great many Persons, Mr. William Greaves, my Brother Edge, Mr. Sacheverell: If you please, I will look in my Paper, and read their Names, that I may be more certain.

L. C. J. Ay, look upon your Paper, to refresh your Memory.

Parker. There was Sacheverell, Gregory, Hutchinson, the two Greaves's, Samuel Richards, Robert Green, Salmon, Arthur Riccards, John Sherwin, Ralph Bennet, and Wilson the Rector of St. Peter's—

Mr. Recorder. Was he there?

Parker. Yes, Samuel Smith, Richard Smith, Trigg, Hoe, Barker, Charnell.

L. C. J. Was Barker there?

Parker. Yes, I have his Name down in this Note.

L. C. J. Well, go on.

Parker. First they forced into the Council-House, and forced us out: So I told Mr. Sacheverell, said I, you have nothing to do here.

Mr. Recorder. What said he?

Parker. Said he, I have to do here, I am concerned if I am a Burgefs. Said I, no Burgefs acts here but a Gown-Man; for it is only the Mayor, Aldermen, and Clothing that are concerned in the Election, and we never have any Gentlemen among us.

Mr. Powis. Did they behave themselves so, as that you were afraid of Mischief?

Parker. Said I to some of our Friends, Gentlemen, take the Mayor's Mace into your Hands, for they were for seizing the great Mace that belongs to the Mayor. And, said I, take care of the Books. Said Mr. Sacheverell, Stop the Books. There was Coroner Woolhouse taking them in his Hands. Said I, take notice who dares take the Books; and said I to Mr. Sacheverell, you have nothing to do with the Books, the Books belong to us. Says he, take notice, I will—in a menacing way, and then held his Tongue. Said I, I am sorry to see things here this Day: I have been a Member of the Corporation, and been present at these Elections for Eighteen Years, and I never see such a thing as this; and said I, I profess I could almost cry to see these Dissentions made among us. Said I, I must go, being one of those that was in Commission to swear the Mayor, my Brother Hall is not here, and my Brother Edge is with them; if they keep me here, the Mayor cannot be sworn; so I pulled off my Gown, and at last when they see I was resolved to go, with shoving and crouding I got through. But when the Mayor was sworn, said I, you must now act as Mayor, and give order for the People to depart: So he did. Says he, will you stay: No, said I, I dare stay no longer; the Rabble are buoyed up to that Height, that I am afraid we shall be knocked on the Head. So I went to my Brother Hall's, and I said to his wife, Sister, either give me a Glas of Wine or Sack, for I am e'en spent.

L. C. J. That was to recover his Heart again that was sinking; for an Alderman's Heart generally sinks in such a Fright.

Parker. We did proceed on then, and I went back again: Said I, if they must be knocked on the Head, I will go and be knocked on the Head with them.

L. C. J. Ay, his Courage came to him again, when he had a Glas of Wine.

Parker. I met them half way: Said I to the Mayor, let us go to your House now, and let us proceed on to choose a Mayor, and swear him, and all other Officers. But, said I, we have nobody to assist us, we must do as well as we can. And we went thither, and proceeded to choose a New Mayor, and then New Sheriffs, and Coroner, and Chamberlain, and we gave them their Oaths. And after all this, we went, according to the ancient Custom, to the Week-Day-Cross, and there we gave Orders for Proclamation to be made, to give notice to the Corporation who was then Mayor, who were then Aldermen, who were then Sheriffs, who were then Coroners, and who was then Chamberlain for the Year ensuing. Whilst this was doing, Mr. Sherwin, Mr. Green, and a great many of them came down hollowing and shouting, No New Charter, No New Charter; they car'd not for the New Charter, it was not worth a Groat.

L. C. J. Who said that?

Parker. Sherwin, a Man of a good Estate. They were going fast away: No, said I, pray go on the old rate, we are in a good Cause, and we don't fear them a Pin; if they do lay on, it will be to their cost.

VOL. III.

L. C. J. Well said, thou had'st drank a good Glas of Sack, I perceive, for thou wert in a horrid Fright before.

Parker. The next Day they could command all the Counsel in the Town to attend them with their New Mayor, Greaves. There was Ralph Edge, John Sherwin, and a great many Gentlemen, with Swords by their Sides, walked to the Market-Cross, and made Proclamation. And after that was done, they continued this on Sunday; for on Sunday Mr. Greaves, the Mayor, came with abundance of People at his Heels; not Gentlemen, but Gown-Men, those that were of that Party, and offered to come into the Seat were the Mayor was; and we were so fearful of Disturbance, that we were forced to have a Guard to preserve the Mace, and to secure it from being taken away by Violence; and we writ a Letter to London to my Brother Hall to acquaint him with it, and sent Post to my Lord Duke of Newcastle, to let him know how it was, that we were afraid of being knock'd on the Head; and his Grace was so kind, that he immediately came to us, and was there about four or five of the Clock, and then we begun to be a little in hope.

L. C. J. Then you began to be in heart again?

Mr. Recorder. How have they behaved themselves since?

Parker. They have had such Cabals, and Meetings, and Clubs, that we have often been afraid of them.

Mr. Holt. I suppose they can drink Sack as well as you.

Mr. Jennings. Pray, Sir, had the Burgeses at large any thing to do with the Election by the Old Charter?

Parker. No.

Mr. Powis. Mr. Alderman, you have been a long time in that Town.

Parker. My Grandfather was an Alderman of the Town.

Mr. Powis. Did you ever know in your Life, that these Gentlemen ever used to interpose themselves, or concern themselves in the Election?

Parker. No, we always went into the Council-House, and were called one by one, and the Gentlemen never came in among us, but only one Gentleman that my Brother Edge brought in out of Curiosity, to shew him the Formality; but never any Burges came, but those that were of the Council, or Clothings, as we call them. I never saw it otherwise, and I have known a great many.

Mr. Jennings. Did not Mr. Sacheverell, nor none of the Out-Burgeses, use to come in?

Parker. No, I told them, says I, this Charter cuts you off, you have nothing to do.

Mr. Jennings. Did Mr. Hutchinson and Mr. Gregory use to come?

Parker. No, they were no Burgeses. But now you talk of that if you please, I would speak to that: Mr. Hutchinson, Mr. Gregory, Arthur Riccards and Samuel Richards came up to my Brother Wild's, the Old Mayor, and demanded our Mace. Said I, what have you to do with the Mace? They said, Mr. Greaves the Mayor had sent for it. Said I, if the Mayor took a little Spirit upon him, he would do well to secure you, to ask such a thing, for this requires the good Behaviour; said I, and if I was Mayor, I would secure them, and let them take their Advantage against me; I would try it with these Gentlemen.

Mr. Lovell. You speak of something that was done at the Cross the next Day after the Election; was Mr. Sacheverell there?

Parker. I believe he was.

Mr. Lovell. Did you see him?

Parker. I was in my Chamber, but I cannot say positively he was there?

Mr. Lovell. What, at the Cross?

Parker. There were all those that I named, there: And I tell you, Sir, the Riot continued there on Sunday; for all that bore Office on their Side, came and attended Mr. Greaves to Church, and Mr. Greaves clapp'd his Hand on the Mayor's Seat: Said I, Mr. Mayor, keep your Seat, and do not stir out; and he did not.

Mr. Blencow. Pray, tell which of the Defendants were at the Cross on Saturday, or at Church on Sunday.

Parker. There was Mr. Gregory and Esquire Thynn, his Brother, and William Greaves, and John Greaves, and Samuel Richards, and Arthur Riccards, and the Smiths and Sherwin.

Lovell. Were all these at Church?—Parker. Yes.

Mr. Recorder. Did they use to come to Church before?

Parker. Sir, it is a Custom to wait upon the Mayor the next Sunday, and they waited upon him in their Formality.

Mr. Holt. Did not you give your Vote for electing a Mayor according to the Old Charter, upon your Oath?

Parker. I will tell you what I did; when they called to the Election, and to the Poll, and ask'd who I was for, I told them there was no Man capable of being voted for, unless it were Ralph Edge.

Mr. Holt. But did you give a Vote for such an Election, or no?

Parker. I tell you, I said there was no Man capable of a Vote but him, and I could give my Vote for none but Ralph Edge: And said I, if you will have it, I will give my Vote for Ralph Edge.

Mr. Lovell. Was there an Election for Mr. Greaves, and Poll taken, pray?

Parker. I cannot tell that, but I was by almost to the latter End; for I could not get out, the Croud was too great, till I had pulled off my Gown and crouded out.

Mr. Lovell. Who took the Poll?

Parker. Mr. Alderman Edge.

Mr. Lovell. Was Mr. Turpin in the Council-Chamber at that time, or not?

Parker. Yes, he was.

Lovell. Are you sure of that?—Parker. Yes, indeed am I.

Mr. Lovell. Was Barker there?

Parker. Yes, he was in the Hall, 'tis all under one Roof.

Mr. Recorder. The Books that you speak of, that Mr. Sacheverell would have secured, what Books were they?

Parker. My Brother Edge can give a better Account of that than I; for he kept them.

Mr. Recorder. You can tell what they were?

Parker. They were Books that belonged to the Mayor.

Mr. Stanhope. Mr. Parker, You say Mr. Wilson was there?

Parker. He was in the Hall.

cording to the Old Charter, to make an Election, to swear their Mayor, to go and demand the Old Mayor to swear him, and to demand the Mace must be regular, if so be that be true, that the Old Charter was still in force. To go afterwards to the Cross the other Day to proclaim him, was also lawful, if that be so. And if there were nothing but what is usual in Matters of this Nature, and according to Custom, then there is no Offence, no Violence nor Force, nor any thing offered by any of these Defendants: And that which they speak of the crying, A Greaves Mayor, a Greaves Mayor, is but a sort of an Applause which in Elections is very usual; why then if there are but orderly Proceedings, such as are usual in things of this Nature, I hope it will not be construed to be any Riot, or Breach of the Peace, or Offence in us. My Lord, the Questions that will arise upon this Information, are those that I have mentioned; for if so be this Mace was not Malin's Mace, then they having laid it in the Information that we did take away from Malin, then Sheriff, a Mace that belonged to him as the Ensign of his Office, if he were not then Sheriff, they are quite out in their Information. That he could not be Sheriff by the Old Charter, that will be pretty plain; for the Old Charter they say was surrendered. That he could not be Sheriff by the New, is as plain, for he was not named Sheriff in it. But if he were Sheriff by the New Charter, yet at this Time he had not the Authority of Sheriff, for he had not taken upon him the Office by the New Charter, nor was not sworn. And there is an express Clause in it, that neither the Sheriff, nor any other Officer, shall take upon him their Office, till they have taken their Oaths. Now all that was done in the Council-Chamber, of which this about the Mace is part, was before these Men had taken their Oaths, and the Oath was taken in the Hall by the Mayor, and where the rest took them, non constat: But they were not to act till then, nor could act by their New Charter, and so their Information falls short as to whatsoever was done in the Council-Chamber, and we proceeded right upon the Old Charter. For it is expressly said in the Information, that the Assembly was duly summoned by Gervas Wild, then Mayor of the Town, for the electing and swearing a Mayor of that Town, for the executing the Office of Mayor of the Town for the Year ensuing, according to the Effect and Tenor of certain Letters Patents, on that behalf granted, by our Sovereign Lord the King that now is. Then, if so be whatever was done, was before he was sworn as Mayor, then it could not be an Assembly duly summoned by him, he having till then no Authority to summon it; nor could what the Defendants did, be in Hindrance or Disturbance of him in the exercising of his Office; and so their Information is quite varying from the Fact. Then there is this further besides, my Lord, the assembling and meeting, and going on according to the Old Charter, was on the Twenty-Ninth of September, the New Charter bears Date the Twenty-Eighth of September, and comes down as you see the next Day, which was Michaelmas-Day, at Eleven of the Clock. And we have it in Proof, that the Surrender of the Old Charter, which they pretend, was not enrolled till the Seventh of October after; and under favour, my Lord, the Old Charter could not be determined, till the Surrender was enrolled, which was not till the Seventh Day of October; and till that Time the Old Charter continuing in Force, it was fit for them to act under it, as it did so continue; and if they had omitted their Election on that Day, they had been faulty, in not proceeding according to the Old Charter. My Lord, we will call our Evidence, and make out our Fact.

L. C. J. But, Mr. Pollexfen, as to that you talk of about Malin; Was he Sheriff, or was he not Sheriff?

Mr. Pollexfen. He was not Sheriff according to this Information.

L. C. J. But was he Sheriff, or not Sheriff?

Mr. Thompson. Not Sheriff by the New Charter, say we.

L. C. J. But I pray answer me, Was he Sheriff, or not Sheriff?

Mr. Pollexfen. I believe he was Sheriff by the Old Charter.

L. C. J. What had you then to do with the Mace?

Mr. Pollexfen. Yet say we, you are mistaken in your Information; for if so be you lay it to be an Offence, the taking away the Mace from Malin, that was Sheriff by such a Charter, and he is not so, then the Information is mistaken.

L. C. J. There is no such thing as his being Sheriff by such a Charter.

Mr. Lovell. My Lord, we do come here to justify----

L. C. J. Ay, but let him come here first, and answer the Objection.

Mr. Pollexfen. My Lord, it is expressly said in the beginning of the Information, that Wild was Mayor, and that he had summoned an Assembly to choose a Mayor, according to the Charter granted by this King; that the Defendants did disturb that Meeting, and that Election; and that they did take away the Mace, being the Ensign of Office, to the said Sheriffs of the County aforesaid belonging, from one John Malin, being then one of the Sheriffs of the County of the Town of Nottingham.

L. C. J. All that is true.

Mr. Pollexfen. Then they must make it to be by one or t'other Charter. We say he was not by the New; they deny the Old to be in being, and speak only of the New.

L. C. J. Ay, but I would fain know of you whether he was Sheriff, or not Sheriff?

Mr. Pollexfen. I think they that will charge us with an Offence, ought to make out that Charge.

L. C. J. They say he is Sheriff, and you say he is Sheriff yourselves.

Mr. Pollexfen. That cannot consist with this particular Question, as I conceive.

L. C. J. Why now then let us come yet a little further; it is said, that such a one being Mayor, and so he was, take it which way you will; for if the New Charter have no Effect till the Surrender of the Old be enrolled, then Wild was Mayor by the Old Charter; and if he was Mayor, it was enough: And then he was met to choose a New Mayor by virtue of the second Charter; it is true it is so said, though perhaps, according to Strictness, it could not take Effect till the Enrollment of the Surrender; yet what is that to this Offence? I would fain know of you, is it not true in Fact, that he was then Mayor, and met in an Assembly for the Election of a new Mayor?

Mr. Pollexfen. It is true; but that we conceive will not support this Information.

L. C. J. Then I desire to know, how comes Mr. Sacheverell, and these sort of People to meddle in it?

Mr. Pollexfen. If it be insisted upon that he was Mayor by the Old Charter, then we hope we have done nothing but what by the Old Charter we may justify.

L. C. J. What had Mr. Sacheverell, Mr. Hutchinson, and my Parson Wilson to do there?

Mr. Pollexfen. By the Old Charter Mr. Sacheverell was a Burgess.

L. C. J. If he were, was he capable of Electing?

Mr. Pollexfen. He might be present at an Election, and was concerned as a Burgess.

L. C. J. But could he meddle with the Election?

Mr. Pollexfen. Then, good my Lord, what have we done----

L. C. J. Wonderfully done! those things you can never answer: In London, for the purpose, it was not an Offence for any Freeman to be present at the Election of the Mayor; but if a Parcel of Freeman come that are not Livery-men, and run themselves into the Business to give Voices, and give Direction about that they have nothing to do with, and cry out, pray stop the Books, and pray, good Sir, deliver the Mace; then they had concerned themselves, and meddled with an Authority to which they had no Pretence, which is an Offence; and if Men will busy themselves in that which does not concern them, they must suffer for it. Mr. Sacheverell, and the rest, were as capable of giving them Advice about an Election, seven Years before as now; What Reason had they now to come and make this Hubbub? But some Men will shew themselves such wonderful Advisers before their Advice is asked or needed.

Mr. Lovell. Will your Lordship please to spare me one Word----

Mr. Pollexfen. Prithce give me leave: My Lord, when you see how the Fact does appear upon the Evidence, I suppose we shall not be thought guilty of any Disorder.

L. C. J. It doth appear very plain, Man, it has been very fully sworn; it has indeed.

Mr. Pollexfen. We hope to satisfy you otherwise by our Evidence, as to the Fact.

Mr. Lovell. Your Lordship is pleased to object that upon us, which doth lie upon us, and requires an Answer----

L. C. J. It does indeed.

Mr. Lovell. As to Malin's being Sheriff. But, my Lord, I conceive he was not Sheriff; for if the Old Charter was in force, then he was not Sheriff; for there was a New Sheriff chosen and sworn, before the Mace was requited of him: If the New Charter were in force then he was not Sheriff; for he was not named Sheriff in it.

L. C. J. Who chose the New Sheriff?

Mr. Lovell. He was not chosen by any body, he was named in the Charter.

L. C. J. Malin was Sheriff before that time, and was indeed Sheriff till a New One was chosen in his Place; and therefore the detaining the Mace was unlawful, that is our Opinion; and if your Opinion be otherwise, it is as idle as the Opinion of the New Charter.

Mr. Holt. Will your Lordship please to spare me a Word for the Defendants? My Lord, the Information doth consist of two Matters; the first is, the disturbing the Election that was appointed by the Mayor, by virtue of the New Charter; the next is, the taking away the Mace, being the Ensign of Office of Malin the Sheriff. Now, with Submission, my Lord, I think they have failed in the first Part of the Information; for they have laid it special, that Wild being Mayor, he had at that time, when these Defendants did thus assemble themselves, appointed an Election by virtue of the Letters Patents of this King; and after he had so appointed it, these Defendants did assemble themselves in disturbance of that Election, and after Proclamation made, continued their Disturbance. Now if this Gervas Wild had no Authority to make or appoint this Election by virtue of any Charter, then had he no Authority to make this Proclamation; and then these Defendants are not guilty of this Information, supposing what they did was not justifiable in the main, yet as here laid, they are not guilty; for it is not, nor can be to the Disturbance of the Election, or Contempt of his Authority.

L. C. J. Come, that has been said, and answered over and over again. Call your Witnesses.

Mr. Holt. As to this Business of Malin, and the Mace, we did say it did not belong to him; and it is an Usurpation upon the King, without Authority by any Charter or Grant, and a Novelty. No Man can have any Ensign of Authority, but by Grant from the King.

L. C. J. What is that to you? Why did you take it away? What Authority had you for that?

Mr. Holt. This is laid to be an Affront to the King's Authority, and it was not, for the very Mace was an Usurpation.

L. C. J. He was in Possession of it, and that is the same thing as to you, whether it be of right or not? You never pretended to keep it for the King.

Mr. Holt. If so be they among themselves----

L. C. J. Pray go on to your Witnesses, and don't spend our Time in such trivial Stuff; for this is all Stuff, meer Stuff.

Mr. Holt. My Lord, we would make out our Defence----

L. C. J. Do so if you can, call your Witnesses; we must not give Liberty to every one of the Counsel to make Speeches of the same thing, over and over again, and all to no purpose.

Mr. Holt. This Mace did not belong to Malin.

L. C. J. How do you know that? Can you tell whether the King had not given them such Power?

Mr. Holt. It was never given by the King.

L. C. J. Does the King question them for it?

Mr. Holt.

Mr. Holt. We will prove it an Usurpation, and shew the Time when it was first usurp'd.

L. C. J. This way of Behaviour by Riots, looks more like the Times of Usurpation, when Rabbles meet to meddle with Government.

Mr. —. My Lord, I desire to offer only one Word that has not been yet said.

L. C. J. No, I will hear no more Speeches; call your Witnesses, if you have any: Sure you take yourselves to be in your Common-Halls, and Council-Houses, making Speeches.

Mr. Holt. Call Edward Higley and Sir Thomas Parkyns.

Mr. Pollexfen. May we read the Old Charter, my Lord?

L. C. J. Ay, read what you will, and offer what you will in Evidence for yourselves; but let us not have such Doctrines preach'd among us, as settling Governments, and trying Rights, by Club-Law.

Mr. Pollexfen. God forbid, my Lord, I am sure nobody here desires any such thing.

Mr. Holt. Swear Edward Higley.

[Which was done.]

L. C. J. Well, what do you ask this Man?

Mr. Holt. [Shewing him a Paper-Book.] Is that a true Copy of the Old Charter?

Higley. Yes, it is.

Mr. Pollexfen. We desire it may be read.

L. C. J. What would you read it for?

Mr. Pollexfen. By that it will appear the Election was regular, according to the Old Charter, which we say is still in force, and so we in no fault.

L. C. J. Shall we enter into a Question of that Nature here, Which is in force? No, we will not. Why did you commit this Riot? answer that.

Mr. Pollexfen. By the Old Charter, my Lord, the Mayor and Burgesses are to elect.

L. C. J. Ay, Mr. Pollexfen, and you know the Old Charter of London, was to the Mayor, Commonalty, and Citizens of London, to choose a Mayor; and we know that the Mayor, Commonalty, and Citizens of London, have not chosen a Mayor this many hundred of Years. We know very well, that that Election is made by Livery-Men: Now you come and say, pray let us see how it is by the Charter; why as well may not all the Citizens of London claim to be at the Election of the Lord Mayor? If you can shew me that heretofore, before this time, that there were other Persons that us'd to be present at Elections, you say somewhat: But if you have only an antient Right to be present, and they have ravished this Right from you, you had done exceeding well to have asserted your Right in a legal Course. But do you think you are to regain your Right by Club-Law, and throwing up your Hats, and Noise, and Riots, and opposing the King's Authority?

Mr. Pollexfen. My Lord, we were never for opposing the King's Authority; we never were against the King?

Mr. Just. Withins. Who was that against, I pray, When you said, No New Charter, No New Charter? Was not that against the King?

Mr. Lovell. That was none of us who cried out so.

L. C. J. Who knows in a Crowd, what Person in particular makes a Noise, or does not? you were where you should not have been.

Mr. Pollexfen. My Lord, we pray the Charter made to this Town, in the Reign of Henry VI. which provides, that the Mayor shall be chosen by the Burgesses, and sworn by the preceeding Mayor; but if he was not present, he should be sworn by the Coroner. Your Lordship objects the Case of the Livery-Men by the City of London; that is by Virtue of a particular By-Law: But in our Case, the Old Charter having prescribed this Method, you will not take it out of that Method, without their producing some By-Law for it.

L. C. J. Yes, yes, we shall go according to the constant Usage within Memory, because we will not, upon this Information, try the Right one way or other. Shew us by the Usage that there was a Pretence for such Persons as Mr. Sacheverell, and the others here, to be present at the Elections.

Mr. Just. Withins. In this Case it shall be presum'd there was a By-Law.

Mr. Pollexfen. I hope you will presume nothing to make us guilty of a Crime; they ought to shew the By-Law if they have any.

L. C. J. I think we need not trouble ourselves about that, what By-Laws have been made; but we find these Persons in Possession of this Usage, and so they have been for these eighteen Years past.

Mr. Pollexfen. My Lord, that will not make them a Title.

L. C. J. We will not allow the Right to be try'd upon this Information.

Mr. Just. Withins. Mr. Pollexfen, What do you speak of Swearing by the Coroner? That could not be in this Case, for the Old Mayor was there.

Mr. Pollexfen. Not at the Swearing of Greaves.

Mr. Farwell. My Lord, I would only observe one thing; the Crime charg'd upon us, is for not departing after the Proclamation made; now I do not observe that they prove that Mr. Sacheverell was ever there after the Proclamation.

L. C. J. I thought indeed you were very full, you were so eager to speak; but your Observation is very much in the wrong, for the Proof is positive that Mr. Sacheverell and the rest of the Company staid after; but because you shall observe it better, call Reynolds again; you were so full, you could not let it alone till you were tapt. Reynolds, upon your Oath, did you make Proclamation that all Persons that were not summoned, or were unconcern'd in the Election, should depart?

Reynolds. Yes, my Lord, I did.

L. C. J. Did Mr. Sacheverell, and the rest, stay there afterwards?

Reynolds. Yes.

Mr. Stanhope. My Lord, the Mayor I think swears he did not summons any one: The Information is laid, that there was an Assembly duly summoned and called before him.

L. C. J. He told you he sent to Alderman Parker, and Edge, and two or three more, to come away and hear the Charter read; and he spoke to Serjeant Bigland, and he was huffish, and did not reckon himself concerned in the New Charter: for it seems he was not continued in his Place of Recorder by it. He tells you that the Charter was read to them, and with much ado, he that read it, did go through with it: But he was mightily interrupted by the Noise that was made by the Defendants and their Rabble; this prov'd that there was an Assembly summon'd before him, sure.

Mr. Just. Withins. Mr. Stanhope, don't you observe too, that he sent to Church to summon them to come to him, and they would not come when he sent for them?

Mr. Pollexfen. My Lord, they should produce their New Charter, I humbly conceive.

L. C. J. I tell you before-hand, we are not trying the Validity of the New Charter, or the Old, but whether you are guilty of a Riot, or no?

Mr. Holt. My Lord, if they were in Possession of Government by their New Charter, they should shew that New Charter: We shall shew you an Old Charter to the Mayor and Burgesses there----

L. C. J. Can you shew a Charter that the Defendants were Mayor, Aldermen, and Burgesses?

Mr. Holt. Swear Luke Oldham. [Which was done.] Look over that Book, Mr. Oldham, is that a true Copy?

Oldham. This is a true Copy of the Charter that I examined at the Tower.

Mr. Recorder. When did you examine it?

Oldham. I can't tell you the particular Day, Sir.

Mr. Recorder. How long ago is it that you examin'd it?

Oldham. 'Tis about a Twelve-month ago.

Mr. Holt. Upon your Oath, is it a true Copy?

Oldham. Yes, I read it over three Days ago.

Clerk reads. This is dated ---- of H. 6th.

Mr. Just. Withins. Where would you have it read?

Mr. Pollexfen. We desire he may read that part of the Incorporating the Town, and the Power of choosing the Mayor.

Clerk. Whereabouts is it, Sir?

Mr. Pollexfen. Folio 81.

[Which was read.]

Mr. Holt. Call Sir Thomas Parkyns. [Who appear'd, and was sworn.]

L. C. J. What do you ask this Gentleman?

Mr. Holt. Pray, Sir, were you by in the Council-Chamber at Nottingham on Michaelmas-Day was Twelve-month?

Mr. Recorder. Pray, Sir Thomas Parkyns, let me ask you one Question; Have not you laid out any Money in this Cause?

Sir Tho. Parkyns. No, Sir, not that I know of.

Mr. Stanhope. Pray, Sir, were you present in the Council-Chamber, when Mr. Wild, the Mayor, was there; and did you see Mr. Sacheverell, and Mr. Hutchinson come in?

Sir Tho. Parkyns. Yes, I was there.

Mr. Stanhope. Pray, how did they demean themselves there?

Sir Thomas Parkyns. Very civilly, for any thing I did perceive, without any disturbance to the Court, or any body else.

Mr. Stanhope. Did they use any Gestures, or Behaviours, to occasion the Mayor to go away?

Sir Tho. Parkyns. Not as I know of at all, Sir.

Mr. Stanhope. Pray, Sir, will you tell all your Knowledge how the thing pass'd?

Sir Thomas Parkyns. I understanding there was to be an Election of a Mayor for the Town of Nottingham, upon Michaelmas-Day, as has been accusum'd Time out of mind, a very long while, as I have been inform'd at the Church, I was there, and went to the usual Place in the Chancel, and there we staid some time till after Prayer; and after Prayer, there they thought to have gone to a new Election of a Mayor: There was Notice of a New Charter coming, but then I believe it was not come; but, as they were called, the Old Charter-Men, Alderman Greaves, and the Recorder, Serjeant Bigland, and Alderman Edge, and several others, forty, I believe I could name, did send to Mr. Wild, the Mayor that then was, and Mr. Rippon, and others, who were then at the Town-Hall, and desir'd them to come up to the Chancel, as I am inform'd, in order to an Election of a New Mayor; but they did not come: But, as I heard, they sent Word back again, to desire Alderman Greaves, and the rest, to come down to the Town-Hall, which accordingly was done.

Mr. Pollexfen. And what happen'd there?

Sir Thomas Parkyns. I was there along with them, and went into the Town-Hall, and so into a Room, which I conceive they call the Council-Chamber; and there upon several Discourses, there were some were for going to voting for a New Mayor, and there were some that did say, they had a New Charter, and they must have a Mayor according to that New Charter; whereupon they desir'd it might be read, but there was no Answer, I think, made to that: I did see the Thing they said was the New Charter in a Box: I think it was so, but I did not see it out.

Mr. Combs. Then it was not read while you were there?

Sir Thomas Parkyns. I did not hear a Word of it read; but I think there was Alderman Edge did say, I do not know how I am to act by the New Charter; but I understand what I have to do by the Old Charter very well, therefore we will proceed to the Election of a New Mayor; and then upon that Account they did go to voting, and several Votes there were for several Persons, as particularly for Mr. Edge himself, and some for Mr. Toplady, but the most for Alderman Greaves; and when they did understand, as I conceive, that Alderman Greaves had the Majority of Votes, then they did rise up, and went away.

Mr. Pollexfen. Who did?

Sir Tho. Parkyns. The Mayor Mr. Wild, and Alderman Rippon.

Mr. Stanhope. Pray, Sir, did the Mayor stay all the while the Poll was?

Sir Tho. Parkyns. He was there, I am sure while they voted; that I am certain he was; I cannot say he was there all the time.

Mr. Pollexfen. Did he oppose the Election?—Sir Tho. Parkyns. No.

Mr. Pollexfen. Was there any Proclamation made for any-body to depart?

Sir Tho. Parkyns. None that I heard of.

Mr. Holt. When the New Charter was produc'd, was it desir'd by any-body there, that it might be read?

Sir Tho. Parkyns. Yes, Sir, there was some that desir'd it might be read.
 Mr. Lovell. Why was it not read?
 Sir Tho. Parkyns. I can't tell that; but I did hear they should shew Mr. Edge his Name in the New Charter; and they did believe he was continued in his Place; and I think Mr. Edge replied, he had his Place by the Old Charter during Life; and by that Charter he knew how to act; he could not tell what he was in the New Charter.
 Mr. Farewell. Pray, Sir, did any of the Old Charter-Men oppose the reading of the New Charter?
 Sir Tho. Parkyns. No, indeed, Sir, not that I know of.
 L. C. J. Pray, Sir, let me ask you a Question or two, you are a Burges of this Town, are you not?
 Sir Tho. Parkyns. Yes, my Lord.
 L. C. J. How many Years have you been a Burges?
 Sir Tho. Parkyns. Several Years.
 L. C. J. Were you ever at an Election before?
 Sir Tho. Parkyns. No, but I have been at several of their Meetings.
 L. C. J. How came you to be there at this time?
 Sir Tho. Parkyns. Upon no Invitation by any body, but upon my own accord.
 L. C. J. How came you to accord upon that time more than upon another?
 Sir Tho. Parkyns. Truly, my Lord, I cannot answer you to that.
 L. C. J. No, I believe not; but let me ask you another Question: Who gave their Votes there?
 Sir Tho. Parkyns. Several gave their Votes.
 L. C. J. Did you give any Vote?
 Sir Tho. Parkyns. No, my Lord, I gave no Vote.
 L. C. J. What did you do there?
 Sir Tho. Parkyns. There were several other Gentlemen of the Country there besides me.
 L. C. J. Ay, there were several there that had nothing to do there, and which should not have been there: Did not you hear any Proclamation made at all?
 Sir Tho. Parkyns. No, my Lord, I did not.
 L. C. J. Did you hear no crying out in the Council-Chamber, A Greaves Mayor, A Greaves Mayor, No New Charter, No New Charter?
 Sir Tho. Parkyns. I did not hear any Outcry at all.
 L. C. J. Did you hear nothing said, Pray stay the Books, Pray stay the Books?
 Sir Tho. Parkyns. No, my Lord, I did not.
 L. C. J. Pray, did you observe anything in the World about the Mace there?
 Sir Tho. Parkyns. Yes, I did.
 L. C. J. Pray let us hear that, for I see you did not hear a great deal, nor any thing indeed that other People heard; now let us know what you did see?
 Sir Tho. Parkyns. The Old Mayor went away with two of the Maces, I think, and one was left behind; and presently after comes back Mr. Malin, and demanded the other Mace.
 L. C. J. Of whom?—Sir Tho. Parkyns. Indeed, I can't tell, my Lord.
 Mr. Just. Withens. What Answer was given?
 Sir Tho. Parkyns. There were several, I can't tell the particular Names, that said they had as much Interest in it, as Malin in the Mace; and the Reason was this, it was bought by several Contributors.
 L. C. J. Who was that said so?
 Sir Tho. Parkyns. Indeed, my Lord, I can't tell particularly.
 L. C. J. Alack-a-day! now we have forgot all again; pray did not you see the Thing call'd The New Charter, as you express'd it?
 Sir Tho. Parkyns. No, I did not see it out of the Box.
 L. C. J. Did you observe when Mr. Edge called to read the Charter?
 Sir Tho. Parkyns. No, my Lord, I did not.
 L. C. J. I mean, when he spoke to my Brother Bigland to read it.
 Sir Tho. Parkyns. My Lord, I was there from the beginning to the end. If you please to hear me, my Lord, I will answer you to what you ask me: I think the Mayor, Mr. Wild, did speak to Serjeant Bigland, and ask'd him something of Advice, but what it was I cannot tell; it was something concerning the New and the Old Charter; and Serjeant Bigland answered him, Do you ask me as Recorder, or as Counsel? Truly, I forgot what Reply was made.
 Mr. Pollexfen. This Gentleman, my Lord, was not in the Hall.
 Mr. Recorder. Did you see any Struggling about getting the Mace away?
 Sir Tho. Parkyns. No, I did not, Sir.
 Mr. Recorder. How came Somner to leave the Mace behind him?
 Sir Tho. Parkyns. I don't know, I can't tell.
 Mr. Recorder. Did you hear any thing said by Mr. Sacheverell?
 Sir Tho. Parkyns. No, I did not.
 Mr. Just. Withens. Did not he say, Hold the Books, Stop the Books?
 Sir Tho. Parkyns. No, I don't remember it.
 Mr. Holt. Pray did you stay as long as Mr. Sacheverell staid?
 Sir Tho. Parkyns. I staid as long as they all staid.
 Mr. Just. Holloway. Did you observe no Noise nor Uproar?
 Sir Tho. Parkyns. No, by my Soul, not I.
 Mr. Just. Holloway. That is strange.
 Mr. Holt. He was not in the Hall where the Noise was.
 L. C. J. But could he be in the next Room, and not hear the Hubbub?
 Sir Tho. Parkyns. My Lord, I said I was in the Place called the Council-House, and I did not stir till they all went out together.
 Mr. Recorder. Was not you at the Proclamation at the Market-Place? and was there no throwing up of Hats?
 Sir Tho. Parkyns. Yes, they did, when they said God save the King, the People said Amen, and threw up their Hats.
 Mr. Stanhope. Pray did you hear Mr. Sacheverell desire them to be quiet and peaceable?
 Sir Tho. Parkyns. Yes, I did so.
 L. C. J. Did you hear Mr. Sacheverell when he spoke to the Mayor in the Hall?
 Sir Tho. Parkyns. No, I was not in the Hall at all.
 L. C. J. Did you hear him when he spoke to the Mayor in the Council-Chamber?
 Sir Tho. Parkyns. No, not that I do remember.
 Mr. Just. Holloway. You say you heard Mr. Sacheverell speak to them to be quiet and peaceable?

Sir Tho. Parkyns. No, not there, but it was at Mr. Greaves's own House.
 Mr. Just. Holloway. was there any Uproar then there?
 Sir Tho. Parkyns. No, my Lord, but I'll tell you there was a Multitude of People there, and a great deal of Rabble like to be, and Mr. Sacheverell desir'd the People to do their Business with all Modesty; and I think there never was so great a Number of People that ever carried themselves more civilly than they did. I did not hear, by the Oath I have taken, one angry passionate Word, or any thing of that kind.
 Mr. Recorder. They were all of a side then.
 Mr. Stanhope. Were you by when Mr. Hutchinson was sent with Mr. Gregory? What was he sent for?
 Sir Tho. Parkyns. I can't tell that, but I did hear they did go.
 Mr. Stanhope. Was he sent to demand, or desire the Mace?
 Sir Tho. Parkyns. Indeed I can't tell how it was.
 L. C. J. He can tell nothing.
 Mr. Recorder. I believe he was worse frightened than Alderman Parker, he has forgot all.
 Mr. Pollexfen. Swear Mr. John Thinn. [Which was done.] Pray, Sir, were you present on Michaelmas-Day, at the Election of the Mayor of Nottingham?
 Thinn. My Lord, I hear there are several Gentlemen indicted for a Riot at that Time, I hope I shall receive no Prejudice for giving my Information here.
 L. C. J. What do you mean, Mr. Thinn?
 Thinn. My Lord, I understand by some Persons, that there is like to be an Information brought against me, if I give my Evidence here.
 L. C. J. Prithee, Man, we know nothing at all of the Evidence or Information; if you will evidence, you may.
 Mr. Pollexfen. Pray, Sir, were you present when this Matter was transacting on Michaelmas-Day?
 Thinn. I happen'd to be in the Country at that time, about a Business between Mr. Edge and myself; we are Copartners in an Estate, and we were then upon a Partition; and on Michaelmas-Day I went to Church, and being at Church, and seeing a great deal of Company in the Chancel, I went to see the usual Ceremony of choosing the Mayor, and so forth. I was there then, and while I was there in the Church, I staid there near an Hour, I believe, after Prayer was done, and there was an Expectation of the Old Mayor, and others, to meet together upon the Election, but nobody came; but at last there was some Messager came down, I know not by whom, nor from whom, but the general Vogue was, that it came from Mr. Wild, the Old Mayor, and that he had sent down to desire the Company to come down to the Hall, but I can't say who brought the Messager; and upon this, all the Company went from the Church, up to the Hall, and I went with Alderman Edge, who was the Person I had Business with; we went thro' a great Room, the Town-Hall, and then there is a little Room within, I think they call the Council-Chamber, and a great Table within a Rail, as this may be; and I remember I sat down behind the Alderman: I could observe nothing of Heat among them at all, nor the least Word that I observ'd, of Jangling. There was a Box upon the Table, which they said was the New Charter, but it was not read; but Mr. Edge was offer'd to read his own Name, to shew that he had Power to act in it; but he did not know how far he might act by that, and therefore he was proceeding to swear the Officer according to the Old one.
 Mr. Pollexfen. Was there any Cry, or any Noise there?
 Thinn. I don't know that I heard any one say any harsh or ill Word; there was not so much as a shout.
 L. C. J. Did you hear any Hubbub, or Tumult?
 Thinn. No, my Lord, not in the Room where we were.
 L. C. J. Did you in any other Room?
 Thinn. I can't tell that, there was a great many People about the Window.
 Mr. Holt. Did the Old Mayor, Wild, stay there while they elected Mr. Greaves?
 Thinn. He staid there some of the time.
 Mr. Stanhope. Was he there all the while?
 Thinn. I cannot say but that some of the Aldermen staid all the time, and some of them gave their Votes for Mr. Greaves.
 Mr. Lovell. What did Edge do?
 Thinn. He took the Poll, and to the best of my Remembrance, Alderman Parker, that is one of the Aldermen that has been here, gave his Vote for Mr. Edge.
 Mr. Lovell. Did the Mayor, Wild, stay till the Poll was cast up?
 L. C. J. Poll, we hear nothing of a Poll; Who gave you Authority to poll?
 Mr. Lovell. He that was in the New Charter appointed Mayor, yet staid to see the Election, and then went away.
 Mr. Pollexfen. Sir did you hear any Proclamation made in the Council-Chamber?
 Thinn. No, Sir; I came from Church with Mr. Edge, and the rest of the Gentlemen.
 L. C. J. Were you there when Greaves was sworn?
 Thinn. Truly, my Lord, I don't remember that I was.
 L. C. J. I desire to know by what Authority Mr. Edge swore him; let him look upon the Statute of Præmunire, and consider with himself about it a little.
 Mr. Just. Withens. As far as I find, this Gentleman was not much concern'd, and did not mind what was done.
 Thinn. No truly, Sir, not I, much.
 Mr. Holt. Did Mr. Sacheverell go with you, or stay behind?
 Thinn. We went all together.
 Mr. Blencow. Pray swear Mr. Pole. [Which was done.]
 Mr. Stanhope. Pray, Sir, were you in the Council-Chamber at Nottingham on Michaelmas-Day was Twelve-month? Pray tell us what happened there.
 Pole. I have lived in Nottingham about twelve Years. I used to go and see the Mayor and other Officers sworn: Upon this Day I was at Church, and they went to Prayers, and after Prayers were ended, I think there was Mr. Gregory and Mr. Hutchinson, as I take it, sent by some to desire the Mayor, that was Wild, to come to Church, that they might proceed to an Election according to the Old Charter; but what Answer was returned I cannot say: but after that, as I take it, there was Alderman Parker and Alderman Rippon did come and speak to the Company, and said, the Mayor desired them to come down, for they had the New Charter, and he was to have their Advice how to proceed upon it. While they sat there, I walked from the Church to the Town-Hall; and in a little while the Company from Church came to the Town-Hall: When they were there, the Mayor desired Serjeant Bigland's Advice how to proceed upon the New Charter; says he, do you desire my Advice as Recorder, or as Counsel? and I think as to that he gave no Answer. The like Question he put to Mr. Edge; and Mr. Edge referred it to Serjeant Bigland's Answer, and I think it was a very good one. After a while, some of the Company that used to be the Electors of Mayors and Sheriffs, being of the Clothing, cried, let us go to the Poll; and I think Mr. Edge began to take the Poll, and there was several that did vote, but that was the general Cry of those that were inclined to the New and to the Old Charters. Some that were in the New Charter, gave their Votes, but not for Greaves; I do not remember any one did when the Poll was taking.

L. C. J. Who directed the Poll, pray?

Pole. I think it was some that were for the Old Charter; but I think it was the general Desire to go to the Poll.

L. C. J. Who took the Poll?—Pole. Mr. Edge took it.

Mr. Holt. Did the Old Mayor propose the Election, or the New Mayor, or no?

Pole. No, I don't know he proposed it, but it was put to him.

Mr. Stanhope. Was he present at the Election?

Pole. Yes, he was.

Mr. Stanhope. Was he present when the Poll was taken?

Pole. Yes, he was.

Mr. Stanhope. Did he contradict it?

Pole. I cannot say he did contradict it.

L. C. J. How many of these Elections have you been at before?

Pole. I was not by at the Nomination; that I could not be, for they excluded all but those that had Votes.

L. C. J. How came you to be so busy as to be there at this time?

Pole. I went of my own accord, I was not desired by any body, any more now than other Years, but used as much as I could to endeavour to be at the swearing of them; for they excluded all People usually out of the Chancel, where the Election used to be, if they were not of the Clothing.

Mr. Stanhope. Who gave the Oath to the Person elected usually?

Pole. The Coroner used to give the Mayor his Oath.

Mr. Lovell. Who used to take the Poll at other Elections?

Pole. I can't say who took it, because we were excluded the Chancel; but it has been reputed that Mr. Edge used to take it.

Mr. Blencow. Who came to fetch you from Church?

Pole. I think Alderman Rippon and Alderman Parker did desire them to come to the Town-Hall, and I think Malin was there, but I cannot tell what he said.

Mr. Blencow. Who was at Church then?

L. C. J. Pray were you desired to come?—Pole. No, I was not.

L. C. J. Was Mr. Sacheverell?

Pole. No, I don't know that he was?

Mr. Stanhope. When these Gentlemen came, did they behave themselves civilly?

Pole. Yes; I saw nothing but civil Behaviour: There was a great Concour of People, I believe most of the Well-Wishers to the Old and New Charter were there that Day.

L. C. J. Can you say you did not hear a great deal of Noise and Hub-bub?—Pole. I cannot say so, nor truly can I say I did.

L. C. J. Do you believe you did or not?

Pole. But I believe I might hear some Noise; but I was in the Council-Chamber, not in the Hall.

Mr. Just. Holloway. Was Sir Thomas Parkyns there?—Pole. Yes, he was.

L. C. J. Was Mr. Thinn there?

Pole. Yes, I think I sat next him when they came from Church: I did desire to see the Proceedings of the Day, and I think I dined with the Company, and went in with the first.

L. C. J. Did you see any thing about a Mace?

Pole. Yes, I think I did see something about a Mace.

L. C. J. Why then prithee tell me, as near as thee can guess, what thee didst see about the Mace.

Pole. When they went out, Wild and his Company, the Room was full of Company; and, as I take it, Mr. Malin, or whoever it was that was to take it, did forget the Mace behind him; and somebody coming for the Mace, I think there was one of the Gentlemen of the Council did put it from him, and would not let him have it.

L. C. J. Ay, come, who was that one Gentleman of the Council?

Pole. I can't be positive, I believe it might be Mr. Salmon, or Mr. B—.

L. C. J. But, prithee, wilt thou tell me that there was no Shouting, nor Noise, nor Hubbub?

Pole. In the Council-Chamber, I am satisfy'd as to myself, I heard none and believe there was none; I won't say there was not in the Hall, for I was not there.

Mr. Just. Holloway. Did you hear any one cry, stop the Books?

Pole. I think there was at that time a Dispute about the Books.

L. C. J. Ay, tell me now who that Dispute was between?

Pole. I think it was among the Gownmen that were of the Council.

L. C. J. You say well, name me some of them now.

Pole. I cannot indeed, my Lord, name any particular Person.

Mr. Just. Holloway. Did you hear Mr. Sacheverell speak any thing about the Books?

Pole. I think I did not, I believe it was one of the Clothing.

L. C. J. Prithee, canst thee not guess who that Man of the Clothing was?

Pole. If I do guess, my Lord, I cannot speak positively.

L. C. J. Prithee don't say so, I know thee canst if thou wilt, come, recollect thy Memory.

Pole. My Lord, I would remember it, and fix the Person, if I could, but I cannot.

L. C. J. But as near as thee canst guess, I know thee hast a good Guess with thee.

Pole. Indeed, my Lord, I cannot.

Mr. Powis. Did you observe that he did any ways concern himself about the Election, Mr. Sacheverell I mean?

L. C. J. What did he do there, Mr. Powis? he was present there.

Mr. Recorder. Was not he the Head of the Old Charter Party?

Pole. The Old Charter People took it that the Surrender had been surreptitiously obtain'd, and I think he might say they had a good Right to insist upon the Old Charter.

L. C. J. Who said so? Mr. Sacheverell?

Pole. I believe I did hear him say something to that purpose, but I cannot positively say what; I dare not undertake to say what particular Persons spoke that Day.

Mr. Recorder. Was not he for reading of the New Charter, upon your Oath?

Pole. I cannot tell whether he was or no.

Mr. Recorder. Did he not bid the People be quiet?

Pole. I can't say I heard any such thing.

Mr. Ward. Did not you hear him say any thing to the Mayor when he came into the Council-House?

Pole. No, I did not.

Mr. Ward. Did not you hear the Serjeant make Proclamation for all People to depart that had no Business there?—Pole. I did not.

L. C. J. What say you, Reynolds, did you make Proclamation in the Council House by the Mayor's Direction?—Reynolds. Yes, I did.

L. C. J. And yet you said you staid there all the Time.

Mr. Blencow. When the Shout was in the Hall, pray, where was Mr. Sacheverell?

Pole. He was in the Council-Chamber: The Occasion of the Shout to be in the Hall was this, when the Poll was taken, and the Majority appeared to be for Greaves, Mr. Hutchinson was sent to acquaint the Mayor with it, and to desire him to come, and be present at the swearing of him.

L. C. J. Who sent him?

Pole. Mr. Hutchinson and they can tell themselves.

L. C. J. But who do you say sent him?

Pole. I can't tell particularly, they can best tell.

L. C. J. But who told you so? or did any body tell you so?

Pole. I was told so by several Persons that they were sent.

L. C. J. Prithee, who told thee?

Pole. I believe I may have heard it from himself, that he was sent.

L. C. J. Who did he tell you sent him?

Pole. He did not tell me who particularly.

Mr. Farewell. My Lord, I desire to ask Reynolds this Question; Who was there besides that heard you make the Proclamation?

Reynolds. The Mayor was there.

Mr. Just. Holloway. They made such a Noise, that perhaps every body could not hear it.

Mr. Pollexfen. Pray swear Mr. Slater.

[Which was done.]

Mr. Holt. Were you in the Council-Chamber on Michaelmas-Day was Twelve-month in Nottingham?—Slater. Yes, I was.

Mr. Holt. Pray, give me an Account of what passed there, and what you observed.

Slater. I was at St. Mary's Church with them, and came down from the Church with them to the Council-House; and when they came, they went into the Council-House to the Mayor that was then, Alderman Wild, and there they went and staid some small time; and then the Mayor and Aldermen came out, and came to the Common-Hall, and staid a pretty considerable time; and then came Mr. Hutchinson and Mr. Gregory to his Worship, and told him, And it please your Worship, the Council desires you to come and hear Mr. Greaves sworn Mayor; and at that Word, the Mayor replied to them, that he would come to them presently, if they should have done there: So presently after, some cry'd out, A Greaves Mayor, a Greaves Mayor; and Alderman Rippon and others bid them hold their Tongues, or it should be worse for them; but still they cry'd, A Greaves, a Greaves.

L. C. J. Where was that?—Slater. In the Common-Hall.

Mr. Pollexfen. What, the Burgesses cry'd out so, did they?

Slater. The People in the Hall.

Mr. Recorder. Was not you one of the Shouters?

Slater. No, I did not shout.

L. C. J. Were you one of the Clothing, one of the Council of the Town?—Slater. No, my Lord, I was not.

L. C. J. What Business had you there?

Slater. I went to see, as others did.

Mr. Just. Withins. What Trade are you?—Slater. I am a Taylor.

Mr. Just. Withins. Do you use to go to Church?—Slater. Yes, Sir.

L. C. J. You say the People did shout, A Greaves Mayor; did you hear them among that Shout, cry, No New Charter, No New Charter?

Slater. I can't say any thing of that.

L. C. J. Canst thee say thou didst not hear any such Shout?

Slater. For my part, I can safely say I heard nothing of it. Then I see Alderman Wild take a Book in his Hand, as to take an Oath, and then there was a Shout, A Greaves Mayor; and Alderman Parker went off from the Bench, and said, A Riot, a Riot.

Mr. Pollexfen. Swear Roger Ryley.

[Which was done.]

Mr. Holt. Pray, were you at the Election of a New Mayor at Michaelmas-Day was Twelve-Month?

Ryley. I was at the first Nomination, which was the 14th of August.

Mr. Holt. Who was named then?—Ryley. Mr. Greaves.

Mr. Holt. Is that the Custom of the Town to nominate him before?

Ryley. Yes, it is.

Mr. Holt. Were you there on Michaelmas-Day?

Ryley. Upon Michaelmas-Day I was summoned in upon the Clothing, and there the New Mayor went to the Old Mayor, and waited there a long time to go with him to Church; at last the Old Mayor would not go, but staid waiting for a New Charter; so we went to Church, and heard the Prayers, and from the Church we went to the Hall according to Custom; and there was the New Mayor there, Mr. Greaves, and he was sworn Mayor there.

L. C. J. Who swore him?-----Ryley. Alderman Edge.

L. C. J. Did you ever know him swear a Mayor before?

Mr. Just. Holloway. Did you ever know a Mayor sworn before in the absence of the Old Mayor?

Ryley. I have known many, I have been of the Council these Eighteen Years.

L. C. J. You say you have been of the Council these Eighteen Years?

Ryley. Yes, I have so, Sir.

L. C. J. And have you been present when the New Mayor has been sworn?-----Ryley. Yes, I have.

L. C. J. And do you know that the New Mayor was sworn when the Old Mayor was not there?

Ryley. I have known many sworn, I say, but I cannot tell whether I ever knew but that the New Mayor was sworn before the Old Mayor.

L. C. J. Then when Edge gave Greaves the Oath, was the Old Mayor there?

Ryley. He was in the Room when he was chosen.

L. C. J. Was he there when he was sworn, or when he was going to be sworn?

Ryley. They would not abide the Place, but went away.

L. C. J. But, prithee Friend, don't dally, thou art upon thy Oath; was Wild, the old Mayor there, when they gave Greaves the Oath?

Ryley. I don't know exactly the Moment when he went away, but he was there when they voted him.

L. C. J. Thou art a prevaricating shuffling Fellow.

Ryley. If it please you, my Lord, I won't forswear myself for all the Town and Country.

L. C. J. Speak the Truth, Man, and answer my Question.

Ryley. He was there all the while they were voting, and how he went away I don't know.

L. C. J. Was he there when Greaves was sworn?

Ryley. I can't tell that, if it please your Honour.

Mr. Farewell. My Lord, I desire to ask him one Question.

L. C. J. But the Man won't answer a Question fairly.

Mr. Just. Holloway. I swear, I think both Sides are very careful of answering Questions.

Mr. Farewell. My Lord, I desire to ask him what was the Behaviour of the Company all the time they were there in the Council-House; was there any Disturbance there?

Ryley. None, that I saw.

L. C. J. I ask you again, was there no Proclamation made?

Ryley. I heard none.

Mr. Farewell. Did you take notice of Reynolds to be there?

Ryley. He might be there, for ought I know.

Mr. Farewell. Do you believe he could make a Proclamation, and you not hear it?

Ryley. No, I don't know how he should.

Mr. Pollexfen. Call Thomas Muxlow and John Peak.

Mr. Just. Withins. Have you any more Witnesses, Mr. Pollexfen?

Mr. Pollexfen. We have more, my Lord, if we can get them but in. Swear Thomas Muxlow. [Which was done.]

Mr. Lovell. Were you at the Election of a Mayor at the Town of Nottingham Michaelmas-Day was Twelve-month?

Muxlow. I went to the Church, as the Custom was; after Prayer we expected to go to the Election.

L. C. J. Ay, prithee speak out as if thou wast at an Election; you would have shouted then, I warrant you.

Muxlow. When we were at the Church, we waited there, expecting to have Mr. Wild and the rest of the Company, to nominate the Mayor, according to the ancient Custom.

Mr. Holt. You say you were at the Election on Michaelmas-Day was Twelve-month; pray speak how Things were carried there?

Muxlow. Yes, I was there, and it came to an Election, and it came to a Poll.

Mr. Just. Holloway. Who proposed the Election?

Mr. Recorder. Were you an Elector?

Mr. Holt. Answer the Gentleman's Question, were you one of the Clothing?

Muxlow. I was one that had a Vote there.

Mr. Holt. Do you know any thing of this Matter?

Muxlow. I know there was a fair Election according to Custom.

Mr. Stanhope. Was it peaceable and quiet?

Muxlow. Yes, there was no Disturbance at all.

Mr. Stanhope. Was there no Shouting?

Muxlow. No Shouting that I heard.

Mr. Holt. You were in the Inner Room, were not you?

Muxlow. I was in the Council-House.

Mr. Holt. Were you not in the Hall?

Muxlow. I was in the Hall, as we went out.

L. C. J. Did you hear nothing of crying out, A Greaves, a Greaves?

Muxlow. No, I can't remember that.

L. C. J. Were you there when Greaves was sworn?

Muxlow. Yes, I was, when Alderman Greaves was sworn.

L. C. J. Was you there when the Mace was taken away?

Muxlow. No, my Lord, I was not.

L. C. J. Who swore the Mayor?

Muxlow. One of the Coroners.

L. C. J. Was the Old Mayor there when the New Mayor was sworn?

Muxlow. I can't tell that.

Mr. Just. Withins. None of them can tell that, or will tell it.

Mr. Pollexfen. Swear Burroughs and Parker. [Which was done.]

Mr. Lovell. What is your Name?

Burroughs. My Name is Burroughs.

Mr. Lovell. Were you present on Michaelmas-Day at the Election of a Mayor of Nottingham?

Burroughs. I was one of them that were at the Hall; when I was in the Hall, there came a Gentleman, one of the Council-House, and acquainted Mr. Wild, the present Mayor, that the Burgeses had elected Mr. Greaves Mayor, and the Coroners were proceeding to swear him, and asked him to come and hear him sworn; and he said he could not come presently, they must wait a-while: he was asked how long, he told them by and by; with that, some body cried out, A Greaves, A Greaves, and there was a great Shout.

L. C. J. Where was that Shout?

Burroughs. In the Hall; but then the Gentlemen were in the Council-House.

Mr. Blencow. Where was Mr. Sacheverell then?

Burroughs. He was in the Council-House.

L. C. J. Well said: now you have made this Fellow swear thro' a Wall, that your other Witnesses could not hear thro'. Prithee, Friend, wert thou one of the Clothing?

Burroughs. No, my Lord, but I was a Burges.

L. C. J. What did you do there?

Burroughs. There were other Burgeses not of the Clothing besides me.

Mr. Holt. Come then, our next Witness is John Parker.

L. C. J. Reynolds, did you see this Fellow there, was he one of the Shouters?

Reynolds. Yes, and he flung up his Hat thus.

L. C. J. Were you one of the Shouters?

Burroughs. I cannot say I did not shout.

L. C. J. Did you fling up your Hat?-----Burroughs. No, I did not.

L. C. J. Did you do it over your Head?

Burroughs. It may be I might.

Mr. Just. Holloway. Were you by, when Greaves was sworn Mayor?

Burroughs. No, I was not.

Mr. Holt. Well, what say you to this Matter Parker?

Parker. Going by the Street, I met the New Charter coming down, Reynolds brought it; so I turned back again to the Mayor, and after he had received it, pray, says he, go up and tell Mr. Sacheverell, and some of them, that they will come up to the Church, and if they will but stay there a-while, we will come to them: So I, and another, and two or three more, went up to the Church, and told them the Mayor would come and wait upon them, and bring the New Charter; upon that Mr. Sacheverell looked upon his Watch, and staid a considerable while, and look'd again upon his Watch, and I heard him say he had staid above an Hour, and presently a Message came from the Mayor, desiring them to come down to the Town-Hall to wait upon the Mayor.

Mr. Stanhope. Who did the Messenger direct his Speech to?

Parker. I suppose it might be to Alderman Edge and Serjeant Bigland. Says Mr. Sacheverell, we'll go down, and see what they say to us: So they went down, and we went with them; they got many of them into the Council-House, but I could not; so I stood in the Hall, and waited all the while the Gentlemen were in the Council-House; then there came out Alderman Rippon, the Mayor, and Mr. Malin, and by and by after them, Alderman Parker, out of the Council-House, and sat down upon the Bench; Mr. Malin had not his Mace, and he was asked where it was, and they said they had it in the Council-House: So, said they, you had best have a care of your Staff; no, said he, before they take my Staff, I'll break it over their Pates; and by and by they proceeded to swear Wild Mayor, and they were about to give him some of the Oaths, I suppose of Allegiance and Supremacy; but before he said any thing, there came two of the Council-House, and told him, they had elected Mr. Greaves Mayor, and desired the Mayor, and the rest, that they would please to come and hear them swear the Mayor; he said, he could not come; but come, come, says he, we'll go on, and upon this they proceeded to give Mr. Alderman Wild the Oath, and when they had gone half way in the Oath, some body came and cried out, they were swearing Mr. Greaves Mayor, and upon that both Parties gave a Shout, and one cry'd, A Greaves, A Greaves, and another cry'd, A Wild, A Wild. And upon this, Alderman Rippon had the New Charter by him, and he took it out; look you, said he, we do nothing but by Authority, We have his Majesty's Order, and the Broad-Seal, and thereupon sat down again; but some body told him it was commonly reported they were deprived of their Privileges; he said, it was not so, if 'twas, he would forfeit his Head and his Estate: Upon that, they proceeded to swear Mr. Wild; the Burgeses gave another Shout, but not so big as the other; with that Alderman Parker went out, and I think, cry'd, a Riot, a Riot. They sat a little longer, and it was desired to send for Alderman Parker again, no, said they, he won't come: and so they whisper'd a little upon the Bench, and went all down the Street, and I went down the Hall with them, and in Street-Gate, they met with Alderman Parker; and he was coming to the Hall again, and he turned back to the Mayor's, and I went to the Council-House; but I could hear nothing, only that afterwards at the Mayor's they called the Gentlemen, and swore them according to the New Charter.

L. C. J. Were you one of the Electors?

Parker. No, not I; I was not concerned on any side.

Mr. Pollexfen. Were any of the Defendants, Mr. Sacheverell or Mr. Gregory at the Shouting in the Hall?

Parker. Not that I know of.

Mr. Farewell. He says, my Lord, that the Mayor sent to Mr. Sacheverell and them to come from Church.

L. C. J. How do you know the Mayor sent to Mr. Sacheverell?

Parker. My Lord, they directed their Speech to the Persons that were there, I can't justly say to whom in particular.

L. C. J. It has been sworn they directed their Speech to Alderman Edge and Serjeant Bigland.

Parker. They told it when Mr. Sacheverell was present, and so he went down with them.

Mr. Pollexfen. But this appears by the Evidence, that the Old Corporation is by the Name of Mayor and Burgeses, but we know there there were Aldermen since, and so it is according to Truth, as it is laid in the Information; but let them put in their New Charter.

[Which was done and read.]

Mr. Pollexfen. Is there not a Proviso in it, that the Mayor should not act till he be sworn?

L. C. J. Admit it be so, what then?

Mr. Pollexfen. Then it follows that we must be not guilty.

L. C. J. How so?

Mr. Pollexfen. It is plain, my Lord, that this Man should not take upon him the Office of Mayor till he has taken the Oaths; then suppose they take it that the Old Charter is gone, by this there is no new Mayor till he be actually sworn; then all these things being done before he was sworn, it cannot be that this was such an Assembly as was laid in the Information.

L. C. J. You mistake yourselves sadly, the Proclamation was after the swearing.

Mr. Pollexfen. No, no, my Lord, I am not mistaken in that.

L. C. J. Reynolds, Was not the Proclamation made after he was sworn?

Reynolds. I can't tell, my Lord.

L. C. J. Where is the Mayor, Wild? Upon your Oath, were you sworn before you gave direction to make Proclamation to depart, or no?

Wild. I can't certainly tell, but I think the first Proclamation was made in the Council-House, that was before I was sworn; the Proclamation afterwards was after I was sworn.

Mr. Holt. Where was the Proclamation after you was sworn?

Wild. In the Hall.

L. C. J. Did Mr. Sacheverell continue there after you was sworn?

Mr. Pollexfen. Good, my Lord, this I think is the Fact upon the Evidence: In the Council-House Mr. Sacheverell, and the greatest part of these Defendants were, and then they went on to the Election of Greaves; and they sent out to tell Wild, the former Mayor, when he was in the Hall, that Greaves was elected, and did desire him to come in to swear him, but he refused; but when this was done, he was not sworn; but upon this, there was the Shout of the People, A Greaves, A Greaves: All this was, as I think, before he was sworn.

L. C. J. The Mayor himself says he was sworn.

Wild. My Lord, I was just come into the Hall before the Messenger came in; but I told them they could make no new Election without me, nor at all, because of the New Charter.

Mr. Pollexfen. Then as to the Business of the Mace, I hope the Information will not hold to charge us, because then he was not Mayor.

L. C. J. That does not affect the Mayor but the Sheriffs, the Mace does not.

Mr. Pollexfen. But, my Lord, as this Information is laid, he says he was Mayor, and called an Assembly, and it was held before him, and these things were done; but this cannot be true, for by this very New Charter he must be sworn before he can act, and this tumultuous Proceeding, as they call it, and seizing upon the Mace was before he was sworn, and this Information supposes all the Fact was done while he was Mayor.

Mr. Holt. I think it does appear by Wild's own Oath, that he was not sworn when Proclamation was made in the Council-Chamber; and I think there was but one Proclamation made there, the next was made after, and that was in the Hall: Now, with Submission, that does not affect those that were in the Council-Chamber, because they did not hear the Proclamation; now the Information is laid, that they continued after the Proclamation; therefore we must leave it to your Lordship and the Jury.

L. C. J. Well then, Gentlemen of the Jury, this Case has held long, but the Question is very short: Here is an Information exhibited by Mr. Attorney-General against the Defendants, which by particular Names are by some of the Witnesses sworn to be present when the Occasion of this Fact did arise.

Mr. Coombs. Pray, my Lord, give me your favour, here is one of the Defendants says, he has a Witness to prove he was not there; it's Mr. Turpin.

L. C. J. Reynolds, upon your Oath, did you see Turpin there?

Reynolds. Yes, I did.

Mr. Just. Withins. Mr. Mayor, did you see him there?

Wild. Yes, I saw him in the Hall.

Mr. Just. Withins. Was he busy in the Hall?

Reynolds. Yes, he was shaking his Hat, and shouting.

L. C. J. Well, now where is your Witness?

Mr. Pollexfen. Swear Mr. Flaits. [Which was done.] What say you, was Mr. Turpin there?

Flaits. He was in the Hall that Day, but not above a Quarter of an Hour.

L. C. J. You were there, it seems, pray had you a Vote there?

Flaits. I went to speak with Mr. Turpin.

Mr. Pollexfen. Was he in the Hall when the Mayor came into the Hall?

Flaits. I never saw him there while the Mayor was there.

Mr. Pollexfen. I pray swear Mr. Holt. [Which was done.] Pray was Mr. Barker either in the Hall, or in the Council-Chamber that Day.

Holt. No, I was at work with him that Day from six of the Clock in the Morning till eight at Night.

L. C. J. And he was not out all the time?—Holt. No, he was not.

L. C. J. Well, have you done, Gentlemen?

Mr. Sacheverell. My Lord here is Mr. Serjeant Bigland, I desire he may be examined.

L. C. J. Ay, with all my heart. Swear him. [Which was done.]

Mr. Pollexfen. Mr. Serj. Bigland, I think you were down at the Election of this Mayor upon Michaelmas was Twelve-month; will you be pleased to tell the Court and the Jury what was done then?

Serj. Bigland. I will give you as short an account as I can. I was in my House when the Mayor and Aldermen sent to me to desire me to give my Attendance: They sent the two Sheriffs to me, and I did attend, and staid an Hour or two, and went to Church, according to the usual Course; and when we had been there a-while, Aldermen Rippon came to me, and desired me that I would go down with them to the Hall; accordingly I did go down, and there was Mr. Wild and several Aldermen sat there; so then they proceeded to that that was done towards an Election.

Mr. Lovell. Pray, Sir, how was their Carriage during the time you was there?

Serj. Bigland. I sat then in the Council-Chamber, I think I sat next the Mayor, and Mr. Edge, I think, was next to me, and I saw nothing of Disorder at that time, that I took notice of.

Mr. Lovell. Was there any Proclamation made for People to depart?

Serj. Bigland. Upon the Oath that I have taken, I don't remember it.

L. C. J. Pray did the Mayor ask your Advice about any thing?

Serj. Bigland. Yes, my Lord, he did; and I said to him, In what capacity, Sir, do you desire my Counsel, as Recorder, or how? and so he said no more to that: But he said there was a New Charter, but whether, he desired me to read it or no, I can't tell.

L. C. J. Was it opened?—Serj. Bigland. Some part of it was opened.

L. C. J. Upon your Oath, did you hear Mr. Sacheverell speak to the Mayor?

Serj. Bigland. No, my Lord, I do not remember any such thing.

L. C. J. Pray let me ask you, you have been, before this, at Elections of Mayors of this Town?

Serj. Bigland. I was Deputy-Recorder in my Lord Marquis of Dorchester's time; as soon as he was dead, I was chosen Recorder, and then I was at one Election at another Day, when they do nominate, which is before Michaelmas.

Mr. Holt. Pray Sir, was there any Disturbance?

Serj. Bigland. None that I saw.

L. C. J. Was there any Shouting that you heard?

Serj. Bigland. I was not in the Hall, my Lord; in the Council-Chamber there was none.

Mr. Just. Holloway. Did you hear any body cry, A Greaves, A Greaves?

Serj. Bigland. I heard a Noise in the Hall, but what it was particularly, I can't say.

Mr. Holt. How long did you stay in the Council-Chamber?

Serj. Bigland. I believe I staid as long as most of the Company was there.

L. C. J. Did you stay while Greaves was sworn?

Serj. Bigland. My Lord, I believe I was there then.

L. C. J. Pray what Authority had you to swear Greaves?

Serj. Bigland. All that I know of it was, he was nominated at August according to Custom.

L. C. J. But what occasion had you to be present then, and what Authority had you to swear him? You are a Gentleman of the Long Robe, and should have known better.

Serj. Bigland. Truly, my Lord, he was chosen by those that had a Right to choose in August before.

L. C. J. But what Authority had you to swear him? Why did not you send for somebody out of the Street to swear him? I reckon it to be worse in those People that understand the Law, than in others, that they should be present at such things, and not advise People better. Here is Serjeant Bigland and Mr. Edge have mighty squeamish Stomachs as to the reading of the Charter, and nice Questions; Do you ask me as Recorder, or as Counsel? But they would have done well to advise People to meddle with their own Business; let my Brother take that along with him.

Mr. Pollexfen. Pray swear Mr. Edge. [Which was done.]

Mr. Edge. My Lord, I did not swear him.

Mr. Just. Holloway. Pray who took the Poll?

Mr. Edge. I took the Poll.

Mr. Just. Withins. Pray did you ever know a Mayor sworn when the Old Mayor was not by?

Mr. Edge. I did tell them so. Mr. Sacheverell and the other Gentlemen would have gotten me to poll in the Vestry in the Absence of the Mayor, but I told them I would not have any such thing done; and when the Old Mayor went out of the Council-Chamber, they would have had me read the Oath. Said I, Gentlemen, I will not swear him but in the Mayor's Presence.

Mr. Ward. Did not Mr. Sacheverell head them all the Day?

Mr. Edge. He was among us all the Day.

Mr. Ward. Did he peruse the Charter?—Mr. Edge. I can't tell that.

L. C. J. They that once begin first to trouble the Water, seldom catch the Fish.

Mr. Hutchinson. My Lord, I desire I may ask Mr. Edge one Question, Whether I was not sent to the Mayor, and did not go myself?

Mr. Edge. Upon the best of my knowledge I did not send you to the Mayor.

L. C. J. I thought, Mr. Hutchinson, you had been a Man of greater Quality than to go of his Errands. Have you done, Gentlemen?

Mr. Holt. Yes, my Lord.

L. C. J. Then, Gentlemen, as I said, this is an Information against several Persons, you shall have the Names of them deliver'd to you, and it is for a Riot, an unlawful Assembly in Nottingham; and tho' there are two times that have been spoken of, and two Places in the Evidence, yet I must tell you, That that Part that does affect these Persons is only that which does relate to Michaelmas-Day, and for the other part, about the Cross, is not compriz'd in this Information; and Persons that were put at the Cross, but that were not put at the Hall, are not concerned in this Information: But all, it appears, were concerned, except one, which is Humphry Barker; now tho' he was hopping and jumping upon the Cross, yet not being present upon Michaelmas-Day, he is not within this Information.

And now, Gentlemen, because the Cause has held something long, I shall be the shorter: Only, for Example sake, there are some things that ought to be taken notice of. The Right of the Charters, whether it be the New, or the Old Charter that is to prevail in point of Law, is not a Question; that is not to be determined in this Cause one way or another, for they have a methodical Way to have that Point determined, and should not have proceeded in the Way they went; and 'tis pretty well known they have proceeded in that Way too, for we know there are Scire Facias's and Quo Warranto's depending between them. They would have done well to have pursued the legal Course only; for I hope, we shall never live to see that Law prevail in England which is called Club-Law: Let the Right be never so much on their Side, they ought to take a rightful Way to observe it, and not by any unlawful Means.

Another

Another thing, Gentlemen, is this; they insist upon it, that they could not be guilty upon this Information, because the Mayor was not sworn. It is plain they are guilty of a very great Crime, because till another was chosen, he was Mayor. They say their Mayor was sworn regularly according to the Old Charter; but according as the Evidence has been given, they could not swear him by any Pretence whatsoever; and whosoever administer'd the Oath to him, were guilty of a very great Fault, as well as he that took it.

Now, Gentlemen, the Law is so direct in Point, that they needed not to have gathered themselves into an Assembly about this Matter; for if he that they pretend to be Mayor had been rightfully chosen Mayor, they had a regular Course to have brought him into this Office; for they might have come, and of right have demanded a Mandamus to admit and swear him into the Office, and so he must have been sworn Mayor, unless they had shew'd good Cause to the contrary.

Gentlemen, there is no Right but has a lawful Remedy, therefore it had been much better for these Gentlemen, if they have a Right, to have gone in a rightful way to obtain that Right.

Now this being premised, I must tell you, it is very unfortunate, concern it whom it will, and very strange to me, that Men in Matters of Government, where they have nothing to do, that are Country Gentlemen, that never came to interpose in any Election before, that they should come to busy themselves, and head People where they have nothing to do; nay, they have no pretence of Precedent, for it was never practised before.

If in case it was only to satisfy their Curiosity to see the manner of the Election, they had been only there, and patient and quiet, it had been something; but to be there, and to demand People to be sworn, and calling People to look to the Books, and heading the Mob, that does not become any Man, let him be as great as he pleases: The greater the Man, the greater his Name; and the greater his Influence, the greater is his Offence, and the greater ought to be his Punishment.

Then, Gentlemen, to have those other Persons to come there, Mr. Hutchinson and Mr. Gregory, and they must be demanding of the Mayor to come and swear; pray what have these People to do there?

Then, Gentlemen, you see the Consequences of it, it was come to that height in the midst of this great and populous Town of Nottingham, that nothing but flinging up Hats, and hollowing, and shouting, and making all the Disturbance and Interruption in the World; nay, inasmuch, that you may observe by one of the Witnesses for the King, the very Seal was broken off from the New Charter. Nay, to that Height they were grown, that whereas there was a Mace, that is an Ensign that doth belong to the Sheriff, they came and ravished it away, and force it from him, and take it away whether he would or no, and bid him go about his Business, he had nothing to do there: So that here are People without any Authority choose a Mayor, that Mayor must call and assemble together a Meeting of all sorts of People, and all sorts of Disorders must be committed under pretence of this Authority; which is setting up a kind of a Commonwealth, I can call it no better; and had it been such a general Assembly, not with an Intent for doing such one particular purpose, it had been High-Treason. For if People once think to obtain the Rights they pretend to in a mutinous manner, that in the general is High-Treason, or at least so near, I'll assure you it is pretty hard to distinguish between them.

Now, Gentlemen, as to the Evidence, I must tell you the Witnesses do swear, that all these Persons were present, Abettors, and Assistants in this Matter; the Man that headed the Party had no manner of Concern among them: And surely, after you have heard all this Matter; if ever there was a Riot prov'd in this World, this Riot is plainly prov'd upon every one of these Men except Barker.

But whereas they pretend on the other side, and they would have you to believe that the Sheriff was not Sheriff till he was sworn, surely he was Sheriff till another was sworn: and if you allow him to be Sheriff, then they ought not to take his Mace from him, if he was the Sheriff de facto, in Possession of the Ensign of this Office, that is enough; for the Right is not to be determin'd in such a way as this.

The next thing they pretend to is this, a-lack-a-day, there was no Proclamation made till after he was sworn Mayor by the New Charter, when before he came first into the Common-Council, the Hubbub was there begun, and the Mayor told them, Gentlemen, you have nothing here to do, pray go about your Business; and when Mr. Sacheverell press'd him, he ordered Proclamation for all Persons that had nothing to do, to be gone. Then afterwards he comes into the Hall, there is sworn in the Hall, and takes his Oath according to the New Charter, and still after Proclamation made; then the same Persons continue still in the same Place, so that there is no Obedience given either to the Old Authority or the New; and instead of going away upon the Proclamation, that made them the more violent; for you find by Mr. Edge, the last Witness, that even to the time of the swearing, Mr. Sacheverell continued very earnest to have him sworn, though Mr. Sacheverell was shewn the New Charter, and they could not even by the Old one proceed to swear him in the Absence of the Old Mayor; and the Old Mayor was absent.

There are indeed several Gentlemen that are Witnesses for the Defendants, that happened to be there at that time; there is Sir Thomas Parkyns, and he being ask'd whether he heard any Noise at all, why truly he forgot that there was ever a Word spoken; and though other Persons, even some of their own Witnesses, did hear a Noise, yet he heard none, but all was a wonderful regular Thing; so that the Witnesses that they themselves call'd, interfere among themselves, some of them say they did hear a Noise and Shouting, yet such is the Unhappiness of some People, that they can't hear if they have no mind to it. Then here is Mr. Thinn, a Gentleman that came by accident, and he can give no good Account of the Matter: Some Noise he did hear, but he came but as a Stranger, and was not concern'd one way or other, as he says.

You have heard several other Witnesses, that give an Account there was a Noise, but they cannot tell whether the Charter was produc'd, or not produc'd; and they cannot tell one Word that was said of a Greaves, or no New Charter: And one particular Man, I have forgot his Name, he could not by any means remember any thing of the matter; tho' he was there all the while, he could not tell what Mr. Sacheverell said, he did hear him, but not what he said.

This, Gentlemen, is the Substance of the Evidence: I can only say this to you, you must believe all the Witnesses for the King actually perjur'd, unless you believe their Evidence; and for what others say, that they did not hear such and such things, yet all these other People did hear; and tho' the Witnesses for the Defendants did not see, the others did see; and you must find these Men without any Evidence that does appear, to be guilty of wilful Perjury, or else every Person that you have had in charge, except Humphrey Barker, is guilty of the Riot whereof they have been informed against.

Then the Jury withdrew, and the Court broke up, and a private Verdict being deliver'd in the Night, the next Morning it was given in open Court, where they found Twenty of the Twenty One Defendants that were in the Issue, Guilty of the Offence and Misdemeanour in the Information; and the other Defendant, Humphrey Barker, Not Guilty.

In Trinity-Term following, the Defendants, who had been found Guilty, were Sentenced, as follows:

And that the several Defendants do give Security for their Good Behaviour for a Twelvemonth.

The CASE of the CORPORATION of Nottingham, as it was stated by the late William Sacheverell, of Barton, Esq.

THE Town of Nottingham hath always claimed to have been a Borough by Prescription: And it cannot well be doubted that it hath been so; for that it appears by Doomsday-Book, in the Time of King William the First, that the Burghesses of Nottingham then had divers Houses and Parcels of Land in Nottingham; and the Burghesses of that Town were One Hundred and Seventy-Three in Number in the Time of Edward the Confessor.

That Town hath also always claimed to have been a Corporation by Prescription: And it is hard to believe it otherwise; because no Charter of its first incorporating could yet be found; and the Charters granted to the Burghesses of that Town by King Henry the Second and King John, do imply them as a Body Corporate before those Times.

Yet it appears by the Charter of King Edward the First, that there was no Mayor of that Town before his Reign; for that he then was pleas'd to grant the Burghesses of that Town a Privilege, that they then after should choose a Mayor out of themselves annually; and some of their former Charters, as well as that, shew that for some time before they had only Bailiffs of that Town. From Edward the First's Time, under Mayor and Bailiffs the Town continued till Henry the Sixth's Time, who was pleas'd to make it a County, and grant them Sheriff instead of Bailiffs, and the Privilege of choosing out of themselves Seven Aldermen, and one of them annually to be Mayor; and that the Aldermen (as long as they so continued) should be Justices of the Peace within that Town; and moreover, that the Burghesses of the Town of Nottingham should for ever be a Body Corporate by the Name of Mayor and Burghesses. Nor hath any Charter since, nor any By-Law that can be heard of, given the Aldermen any more Power than they had by that Charter, which was then nothing more than every Burghess of that Town had, except being Justices of the Peace, and wearing Gowns and Hoods. So that the Aldermen, though of late they have taken upon them to sit as Members of the Council of that Town, can neither prescribe to that Power, because there were no Aldermen in that Town before King Henry the Sixth's Days; nor can they claim to be of the Council of that Town by force of any Charter, for no Charter either in Henry the Sixth's Time, or since, hath granted them any such Authority, nor did they pretend to sit in that Council by virtue of any By-Law of that Town, or ever shewed any such By-Law, tho' their Right of sitting and voting there hath been denied in the Council by Members thereof.

The Aldermen indeed in King James's Time began, tho' they had no Right so to do, to take upon them to be part of the Council, and to intermeddle in the Town's Concerns, and to encroach so far upon the Burgesses, without their Consent, as to pretend to have a Right in the setting and disposing of the Corporation-Lands, and of the Bridge-Lands, and School-Lands: But the Burgesses were so far from consenting to their having of any such Power or Authority, that they in the Year 1605, by their Petition to the Lords of the Council-Table, complained of the Encroachments of the Aldermen, and prayed Redress. Upon which the Lords of the Council referred the Examination of the Matters in Controversy to the Judges of Assize that went that Circuit, to the End they might be certified and better inform'd by the said Justices of such Course, as upon good Advice and Deliberation they should find in their Judgments agreeable to Law, and meet to be set down and ordered in that behalf. Who accordingly enter'd into Consideration of the Complaints on both sides, and advised with the rest of the Judges touching the Charter granted to that Corporation, and all other Matters meet to be considered of concerning the Matters in Controversy; and return'd Certificates of their Opinions of such Order of Agreement as they thought fit and convenient to be observed and established, according to Law and Justice, for the publick Good and Government of the said Town. Wherefore the Mayor and the Parties indifferently sent up to solicit a peaceful end of those Controversies, having taken knowledge, did consent thereto; and thereupon, by Consent of the said Parties, it was, amongst other things, order'd, That there should be a Council in that Town of Twenty Four Persons only, out of which the Aldermen for the Time being should always be excepted; and that the said Council, with the Mayor, or the greater part of them being at such Assembly, without any other of the said Corporation, should set and let the Town-Lands, Bridge-Lands, and School-Lands, taking unto them the Chamberlains, Bridge-Masters, and School-Wardens respectively, as their Places for the Lands within their several Offices should require, as by the said Order and Agreement, which the Burgesses have ready to produce when occasion shall require, will plainly appear. So that now all Pretence of the Aldermen being of the Council, or having any thing to do with the Corporation-Lands, the School-Lands, or the Bridge-Lands, was adjudged against both by the Judges and the Lords of the Privy-Council, and accordingly was wholly laid aside, till of late.

The Case standing thus, and the Mayor, Aldermen, and Burgesses of that Corporation being by their Burgess-Oath particularly obliged that the Franchises of the said Town they will maintain, sustain with their Bodies, their Goods, and their Chattels to their Power, and them not let neither for Love nor Dread, without Regard of any Man, but maintain the Laws, good Customs, and Franchises of that Town: and divers Burgesses of that Town being informed, about the beginning of Easter-Term last, that the Mayor and some of the Aldermen of that Town had a Design to surrender the Charters of that Corporation, it was scarce credited by any of the Burgesses, that the Mayor or almost any of the Aldermen would consent to do a thing so directly contrary to their Burgess-Oath. Yet divers Burgesses of the said Town considering they had taken the said Oath for preserving the Rights of the Town, thought it but convenient, for the Prevention of the ill Consequences which they well knew must befall that Town, if their Charters should be delivered up, and a New Charter taken without the Privy, Consent, or Hearing of the Burgesses of that Town, to order Four Caveats to be enter'd: And accordingly in Easter-Term ordered Two to be enter'd at the Lord Chancellor's, and Two at the Attorney-General's. One of which Caveats in each Place was against passing any New Charter to the Town of Nottingham without the Privy, Consent, or Hearing of the Burgesses of that Town; the other against the accepting of any Surrender of any Charter of that Town, without the like Privy, Consent, and Hearing. Which said Caveats were enter'd accordingly.

And so the Matter rested till the 25th of July last: But upon that Day the Mayor called a Council without giving Notice what the Business would be, unless it was to those of his own Party and Confederacy. But that he had Thoughts of surrendering when he came to the Hall, will be pretty manifest from what he did after the Question was put to the Vote, and the Poll taken: There appeared at the Hall the Mayor and Five Aldermen, and Two and Twenty of the Council, and Mr. William Toplady (who the last Year, by Order of Mr. Gervas Rippon, the then Mayor, was sworn in as an Alderman, though Mr. Sherwin, who stood in competition with Mr. Toplady, had near twice as many Votes; upon which Mr. Sherwin brought his Mandamus, and the Cause is yet undecided in the Court of King's-Bench). After some Business in the Hall was dispatch'd, the Mayor caused a Question to be put for surrendering of the Charters of that Town; and tho' it was declared by some of the Council, That the Aldermen had no Right to vote therein, yet the Mayor caused a Poll to be taken, and admitted them and Mr. Toplady as Voters, save only that Mr. Alderman Edge suspended his Vote, and gave it neither way. The rest voted as followeth, viz.

For Surrendering the Charter.

Gervas Willd, Mayor,
Christopher Hall, Alderman,
John Parker, Alderman,
Gervas Rippon, Alderman,
William Toplady, Alderman, de facto.

Against Surrendering the Charter.

So that if the Aldermen should be admitted to have a Right to vote in the Council, yet here was no Majority for the Surrender. But on the contrary, the Aldermen having no Colour of Right, either by Prescription, or Charter, or otherwise, for the Reasons aforesaid, to be of the Council; it is plain, there was only the Mayor and Nine of the Council for the Surrender, and Thirteen of the Council against it; and consequently that the greater part of the Council voted against the Surrender. Nor can it be imagined that the Council of that Corporation (being neither settled by Prescription, nor vested in by Charter, but only brought in by consent and choice of all the Burgesses, only for the better Management of the Revenues of the Corporation, and Dispatch of some other ordinary Affairs, and not intrusted with many Rights of that Town,) can pretend to any Power of surrendering the Charters and Liberties of that Town, more than any small Number of Burgesses. So that how this Surrender of Fourteen Men against the Vote of the greater Number of the Council, and Will of almost all the Burgesses, should be good in Law, is not yet well understood. And if the putting of the Town-Seal to an Instrument without the Consent of the Body Corporate, should be said to be sufficient in Law to give away the Lands and Rights of any Body Corporate, then any Thief that can but steal the Corporation-Seal, will have it in his Power, tho' he be no Member of the Corporation, to give up the Lands and Liberties thereof; which indeed would be a strange Piece of Law and Justice to be owned in any Nation that pretends to Sense and Honesty. Yet Mr. Mayor, all this notwithstanding, did, as soon as the said Vote was over, pull out of his Pocket an Instrument in Writing, purporting a Surrender of their Charters, and caused the Town-Seal to be affixed thereto without any further Vote. The Draught of the Instrument, as it is commonly said, was first made at London, and thence transmitted to an Honourable Person in Nottinghamshire, and by his Order conveyed to Mr. Mayor. But this Report, if it were not for one thing, which it's believed will be proved if there be occasion, might seem not well grounded, because, as it afterwards will appear, this Surrender was not thought sufficient, and so another was sealed; which yet one of the Aldermen would have to be the very same, Word for Word, with that which was first sent up sealed to London; as if twice sealing would make that effectual, which was not so by being once sealed. But it is likely he had not heard what is commonly reported, and perhaps will be proved when time serves, that the first Instrument for surrendering that was sealed, was drawn so as to make a Surrender, by the Right Honourable the Earl of Halifax and Sir Leoline Jenkins.

After the said Vote touching the intended Surrender was over, many of the Burgesses of Nottingham, considering their Oath, and that there were many Customs and Privileges in reference to Trade, which the Burgesses of the Corporation held only by Custom and Prescription; and that as some of the Lands which that Corporation held was by Grant from some of his Majesty's Royal Predecessors, so most of their Town-Lands, (which are of great annual Value) were given by private Persons; thought fit to ask Advice of Counsel in several Points.

The first Question proposed to Counsel was, Whether if the Charters were surrender'd, and a New one taken, that New Grant would not preserve the Lands to the Corporation. To which Counsel replied, That if the Charters of any Body Corporate were lawfully surrender'd, then the Corporation that held by such Charters was dissolved; and that if they had any Lands which had been given to that Corporation, the Heirs of those that gave those Lands would, as soon as such Surrender was completed, be entitled to the Lands, and recover the same. And they said, Those Lands which had been given to such Corporation by any of his Majesty's Predecessors, his Majesty might, if he so pleased, grant them again to the Corporation; but no New Charter of his could, as they conceived, give the Corporation any Title to those Lands which had been given by private Persons, or enable the Corporation to keep them from the Heirs of those that gave them, in case such Surrender should be. And so, they say, it was resolved by the Judges when the Monasteries were surrender'd, or dissolv'd; and that therefore a special Act of Parliament was advised to be made, and accordingly was made, to vest those Lands in the King, there being no other way to hinder them from going to the Heirs of those that gave them, when by Surrender they had dissolved those Corporations.

The Second Question proposed was, Whether if the Mayor and Burgesses of a Corporation claim any Right of Common by Custom or Prescription upon other Men's Lands, as is in the Case of Stafford, Derby, Coventry, and Many other Corporations, they can surrender their Charters, and yet, by any New Charter to be obtained from his Majesty, or by any Means, preserve their Right of Common. To which it was answered, That if the Mayors and Burgesses of any Corporation claim such Common, and afterwards make such Surrender, and so dissolve the Body Corporate, their Prescription for Common is destroyed; and tho' his Majesty should please to incorporate them anew, yet their Title to the Common will, as they conceive, be totally lost.

The third Question was, Whether the Town of Nottingham, being one of the ancientest Corporations of England, and free of Tolls in most most Places, should have the same Privilege if they surrender'd their Charters. To which it was answer'd, That if the Town of Nottingham surrender'd their Charters, and so dissolv'd their Corporation, then in all other Places that had formerly Tolls granted them, and kept their Old Charters, they should have Toll of Nottingham Men, and all such Corporations as shall so surrender, notwithstanding any New Charter that can be granted them.

The last Question propounded was, Whether if the Mayor, or any other Members of a Corporation do, without the Consent of the major Part of the Body Corporate, occasion the Surrender of the Charters of that Corporation, the particular Persons that received Damage by that Surrender, may not have an Action at Law for Recovery of their Damages? To which it was answered, That it was no question but that every particular Person that should be any ways damnified by such Surrender, might by Action at Common Law recover all his Damages of those Persons that occasioned the Surrender. Yet it was thought advisable, as the most proper Way for preventing the surrendering of the Charters, and of those Inconveniencies and Suits which might be occasioned thereby, or by taking of a New Charter, if obtained by the Mayor and a few of the Burgesses without the Privy, Consent, or Hearing of the rest, that the major part of the Burgesses should present Mr. Mayor with their Sense of his Proceedings, and declare their Dissent from any Surrender. And accordingly a Writing was drawn, and signed by betwixt Three and Four Hundred of the Burgesses; and then a fair Copy made and examined with the Original, and so with all the Burgesses Names to it that had subscribed, was by several of the Burgesses, and in Presence of several Gentlemen of Quality that were no Burgesses, presented to the Mayor upon the Fourth Day of August, as the Sense of most of the Burgesses of that Town. The Writing so presented was as followeth, viz.

To Mr. Gervas Wild, Mayor of Nottingham.

S I R,

WE whose Names are hereunto subscribed, being Burgesses of the Town of Nottingham, and knowing or understanding that you and Thirteen more of the Corporation have, without the Consent of the Burgesses of this Town, and against their Will, taken upon you to agree to the Surrender of the Charters, Liberties, and Franchises of this Corporation, and to cause the Corporation-Seal to be affixed to an Instrument for making of such Surrender; and being by our Burgesses-Oath obliged to preserve, as far as in us lies, all the Rights and Privileges of this Corporation; and considering what great Damage it must necessarily be to the Corporation in general, and to us and every other particular Burgesses of the Corporation, if the Charters, Liberties, and Franchises should be so surrender'd; have thought ourselves obliged, in order to prevent so great an Evil, to signify these our Thoughts of what you have done, and are about to do; and that many of your Liberties and Franchises, which are only held by Custom, and not by Charter, will certainly be lost, if you make such Surrender as you have agreed to. We do therefore hereby declare our Dissent from those your Proceedings; and that we neither do nor shall Consent, or have Consented, that any Surrender of any Charter, Liberty, Franchise, or Privilege of the Corporation of Nottingham should be made either by you, or any Members of this Corporation, or other Person or Persons whatsoever; and that we will by all lawful Ways and Means oppose and hinder the Surrendering or Vacating of any of the Charters, Rights, Liberties, or Privileges of this Corporation; and that in case you occasion the Surrender of any of the Charters, Rights, Liberties, or Privileges of this Corporation, we shall expect from you such Satisfaction as the Law will allow us.

The Burgesses were also advised to order, and accordingly did order Caveats in the Names of some particular Burgesses, on behalf of themselves and most of the Burgesses of the Town, to be entered at the Lord Chancellor's, the Lord Privy-Seal's and in the Signet-Office, against Surrendering of any of the Charters of that Town without the Privy, Consent, and Hearing of the said Burgesses, and against passing of any New Charter to that Town without like Privy, Consent, and Hearing. And the Burgesses have had an Account from their Agent at London, that he had entered such Caveats at the Lord Chancellor's, and in the Offices of the Lord Conway and Sir Leoline Jenkins, it being commonly reported that the Lord Privy-Seal had delivered up the Privy-Seal to the said Sir Leoline.

The Burgesses were further advised to petition the Lord Chancellor to be heard before any Surrender of their Charters should be accepted, or any New Charter to that Town should pass the Broad-Seal; and accordingly a Petition was drawn and Signed by above Three Hundred and Sixty Burgesses, and a Copy thereof fairly engrossed, with the Names of the Burgesses that had subscribed, was sent and presented to the Lord Chancellor at Bath on Thursday the Tenth of this Instant August. Which Petition was in these Words following, viz.

To the Right Honourable the Lord High Chancellor of England, the Humble Petition of the Burgesses of the Town of Nottingham, whose Names are hereunto subscribed, on behalf of themselves and most of the Burgesses of that Town,

Most humbly sheweth,

THAT the Town of Nottingham being a Borough by Prescription, and an ancient Corporation; and the Burgesses of that Town (who are a Body Corporate by the Name of Mayor and Burgesses) having many Liberties, Privileges, Rights, and Franchises, which they hold by Grant and Confirmation from his Majesty and his Royal Predecessors, and many other Rights, Liberties, and Privileges which they hold by Custom or Prescription; and divers Persons having given Lands to that Corporation of a very great annual Value: The present Mayor, with three or four of the Aldermen, and nine other Burgesses of that Corporation, have declared they design to take a New Charter, and have taken upon them, without the Consent of your Petitioners, and most of the Burgesses of that Town, to agree to the Surrender of the Charters of that Corporation; and have taken the Town-Seal, and affixed it to an Instrument, designing thereby to make an actual and absolute Surrender of all the said Charters; which if they have power to effect, it will (as your Petitioners are advised) not only dissolve the Corporation, deprive your Petitioners and other Burgesses of that Town of many Rights, Liberties, and Privileges which they held by Custom and Prescription, cause all the Lands given to that Corporation to revert to the Heirs of the Donors, and disinherit your Petitioners and other Burgesses of that Town of all the said Lands, Liberties, and Privileges, which both they and their Predecessors, as Burgesses of that Town, have inherited, and ought to enjoy, but also subject your Petitioners and their Freeholds against their Will to such Services, Damages, and great Inconveniencies, as may be brought upon them by the Contrivances of the said Mayor and Aldermen, in case they can obtain a New Charter to pass the Broad-seal without the Privy, Consent, or Hearing of your Petitioners.

Your Petitioners therefore humbly pray your Lordship to take into Consideration the aforeaid Mischiefs, Damages, and Inconveniencies that are like to befall your Petitioners and other Burgesses of that Town, in case such Surrender should be made and accepted, and a New Charter taken by the said Mayor and Aldermen: And that your Lordship would please, before such Surrender be accepted, or any New Charter for that Town be passed the Broad-Seal, to grant your Petitioners a Day of Hearing, and to order thereupon as shall be agreeable to Equity and Justice.

And your Petitioners shall ever pray, &c.

The Petition being delivered as aforeaid, and Mr. Mayor having been acquainted in manner aforeaid, by the Generality of the Burgesses, that they neither had consented, nor should consent to a Surrender of any of the Charters, Rights, or Liberties of the Town, and the Burgesses having been advised by Counsel that no Instrument for making a Surrender of the Charters to the Earl of Halifax and Sir Leoline Jenkins could be effectual in Law; it was hoped that there would not have been any further Progress in the Business, at least before the Burgesses were heard upon their Caveats or Petitions. And it was taken for granted, that no new Instrument in order to any Surrender could be made and sealed without calling together the Council of that Town; because, by Custom of that Town, the Town-Seal hath always used to be kept under the Custody of three Locks and Keys, and not taken out but in Council; and those three Keys kept by three several Persons, for better preventing of any indirect use of the Seal. But contrary to the Burgesses Expectation, and against all ancient Usage, Mr. Mayor (having, as he said, received Advice from London that the Instrument he had sent up for surrendering the Charters was not sufficient) did on Saturday the Twelfth of August require of the Senior Coroner to deliver him his Key; which the Coroner refusing to do, (unless, according to the Custom of the Town, a Council was called, and should order such Delivery) it seems Mr. Mayor found another way to come by the Seal, if that be true which was signified in the publick Prints that came down to Nottingham on the Nineteenth of August, viz. That upon the Fourteenth of August a Surrender of Nottingham Charters was made to his Majesty. And there is one thing which hath happened since, which gives a shrewd Light what Mr. Mayor did on that Twelfth of August, without so much as summoning a Council; for the Party who by Mr. Mayor's Command, as he saith, did that Day force open the Lock to which the Coroner's Key belonged, hath since confessed the Fact. So that now if it should hereafter appear to be true, as those Prints seem to intimate, that any Instrument for surrendering of Nottingham Charters to his Majesty, was presented to his Majesty on the Fourteenth of August, it will scarce be a Question, by what means, or how lawfully Mr. Mayor came by the Seal, or how valid such Surrender is like to be.

This is the true Case of the Burgesses of Nottingham, who are ready to make good every Matter of Fact, as herein stated, whenever there shall be occasion; and doubt not but to prove it, if they may either be heard upon their Petition or Caveats; and however question not but by the Assistance of the Courts of Justice they shall still preserve their Rights, notwithstanding all these Endeavours that have been used to give up their Charters and Liberties.

CXXVIII. Proceedings against Sir THOMAS ARMSTRONG * in the King's-Bench, upon an Outlawry for High-Treason, June 14, 1684. Trin. 36 Car. II.

ON the 14th of June Sir Thomas Armstrong was brought to the Bar of the Court of King's-Bench at Westminster, by Virtue of a Writ of a Habeas Corpus, directed to the Keeper of the Goal of Newgate; which Writ was on his Majesty's behalf moved for on Thursday last by Mr. Attorney-General.

The Return of the Writ was read by the Clerk of the Crown, by which it appeared he was in the Custody of the Keeper of Newgate, by a Warrant from the Honourable Sidney Godolphin, Esq; one of His Majesty's Principal Secretaries of State; which Warrant followeth in hæc verba.

Sidney Godolphin, Esq; of His Majesty's most Honourable Privy-Council, and Principal Secretary of State.

THESE are in His Majesty's Name to Authorize and Require you to receive into your Custody, from on board His Majesty's Yatch the Catharine, Captain Davies Commander, the Person of Sir Thomas Armstrong, Kt. Outlawed for High-Treason, and him safely to keep in His Majesty's Prison of Newgate, till His Majesty's Pleasure be farther known. And for so doing, this shall be your Warrant. Given under my Hand and Seal at Whitehall, this 10th Day of June 1684. In the 36th Year of His Majesty's Reign.

S. Godolphin.

To Captain Richardson, Keeper of His Majesty's Prison of Newgate.

Sir George Jefferies L. C. J. What would you have, Mr. Attorney?

Sir Robert Sawyer. Mr. Att. Gen. Have you the Outlawry there?

Cl. of Cr. Yes, Sir, here it is.

Mr. Att. Gen. That which I humbly pray, my Lord, is an Award of Execution for the King against Sir Thomas Armstrong upon the Outlawry.

L. C. J. First, we must file this Return.

Mr. Att. Gen. I pray it may be filed.

L. C. J. Let it be filed: Now, what do you desire, Mr. Attorney?

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, I pray an Award of Execution upon the Outlawry.

L. C. J. Arraign him upon the Outlawry.

Cl. of Cr. Thomas Armstrong, Hold up thy Hand. [Which he did.]

Thou hast been indicted in London, by the Name of Thomas Armstrong, of London, Knight, of High-Treason, for Conspiring against the King's Majesty's Life, and the Government: For not appearing to Plead and Try that Indictment by due Process of Law issued against thee, upon that Indictment thou standest Outlawed, and thereby attainted of the same High-Treason. What hast thou to say for thyself, why Execution should not be awarded against thee upon that Attainder according to Law?

Sir Thomas Armstrong. My Lord, I was beyond Sea † at the Time of the Outlawry; I beg I may be tried.

L. C. J. That is not material at all to us; we have here a Record of an Outlawry against you, Sir Thomas.

Sir Thomas Armstrong. I desire to be put upon my Trial, my Lord.

L. C. J. We cannot allow any such thing; we have nothing to do upon this Record before us, but to award Execution. Captain Richardson, Which are your usual Days of Execution?

Captain Richardson. Wednesdays and Fridays, my Lord.

Mrs. Matthews. Here is a Statute, my Lord.

L. C. J. What is the matter with that Gentlewoman?

Sir Thomas Armstrong. Hold your Tongue. My Lord, there is a Statute made in the 6th Year of Edward the 6th, which I desire may be read.

L. C. J. To what Purpose would you have it read, Sir Thomas?

Sir Thomas Armstrong. It giveth the Prisoner, or Person outlawed for High-Treason, a Year's time to reverse the Outlawry, if he were beyond Sea. I desire it may be read.

L. C. J. Ay, let it be read. Where is it, do you say?

Sir Thomas Armstrong. It is in the 6th Year of Edward VI.

Mrs. Matthews. Here is a Copy of it—

[Shewing a Paper.]

L. C. J. Why, how now? We do not use to have Women plead in the Court of King's-Bench; pray be at quiet, Mistress.

Sir Thomas Armstrong. Pray, hold your Tongue. My Lord, I could not come to alledge this before, because I have been a close Prisoner, and no body permitted to come at me. I desire Counsel to be assigned me at this Bar.

L. C. J. For what, Sir Thomas?

Sir Thomas Armstrong. To argue whether this Outlawry ought not to be reversed.

L. C. J. Read the Statute he desires.

Mr. Att. Gen. Ay, let it be read. Sir Thomas will not find it to his Purpose.

Cl. of Cr. What Chapter is it? ‡

L. C. J. You may easily find it about Outlawries for Treason.

Cl. of Cr. Reads. 'Provided always, and be it Enacted by the Authority aforesaid, That if the Party—'

Mr. Att. Gen. Read the Clause before that, Sir Samuel.

Cl. of Cr. Reads. 'And that all Process of Outlawry hereafter to be made and had within this Realm, against any Offenders in Treason, being Resiant or Inhabitant out of the Limits of this Realm, or in any the Parts beyond the Sea, at the time of the Outlawry pronounced against them, shall be as good and effectual in the Law, to all Intents and Purposes, as if any such Offenders had been Resident and Dwelling within this Realm, at the time of such Process awarded and Outlawry pronounced.'

L. C. J. Read on the next Paragraph.

Cl. of Cr. Reads. 'Provided always, and be it Enacted by the Authority aforesaid, That if the Party so hereafter to be Outlawed, shall within one Year next after the said Outlawry pronounced, or Judgment given upon the said Outlawry, yield himself unto the Chief Justice of England for the time being, and offer to Traverse the Indictment or Appeal, whereupon the said Outlawry shall be pronounced as is aforesaid: That then he shall be received to the said Traverse, and being thereupon found not Guilty by the Verdict of Twelve Men, he shall be clearly acquitted and discharged of the said Outlawry, and of all Penalties and Forfeitures by reason of the same, in as large and ample manner and form, as though no such Outlawry had been made, any thing herein contained to the contrary in any wise notwithstanding.'

Mr. Att. Gen. Sir Thomas, I suppose, now will shew he yielded himself to your Lordship.

L. C. J. This is the first time I have seen Sir Thomas.

Sir Thomas Armstrong. My Lord, I have been a Prisoner, and the Year is not yet out; I now render myself.

Mr. Att. Gen. Before he went out of England he might have rendered himself, and been Tried, if he pleased.

Sir Thomas Armstrong. I am within the Benefit of the Statute, I conceive, my Lord.

L. C. J. We think otherwise, Sir Thomas.

Sir Thomas Armstrong. I think, my Lord, the Statute is plain in the Case.

L. C. J. We are of another opinion than you are; it doth not reach your Case.

Sir Thomas Armstrong. The Year is not yet out, and therefore I come time enough now; and here I am, and desire the Benefit of this Act.

L. C. J. Sir Thomas, you should have rendered yourself to me.

Sir Thomas Armstrong. I do it now, my Lord, and the Year is not yet out.

L. C. J. We cannot take notice of that; we have nothing but the Outlawry, and you did not render yourself according to that Act, but are brought as a Prisoner before us now.

Sir Thomas Armstrong. My Lord, I beg I may have Counsel ¶ to plead for me in this Case.

L. C. J. For what reason? We are of opinion it is not a matter of any doubt. For you must not go under the Apprehension that we deny you any thing that is right; there is no Doubt nor Difficulty at all in the Thing §.

Sir Thomas Armstrong. Methinks, my Lord, the Statute is plain.

L. C. J. So it is very plain that you can have no Advantage by it. Captain Richardson, you shall have a Rule for Execution on Friday next.

Sir Thomas Armstrong. I would only take notice of one thing, my Lord, may I speak?

L. C. J. Ay, Sir Thomas, very freely what you please.

Sir Thomas Armstrong. A little while ago there was one in this Place had the Benefit of a Trial offered him, if he would accept of it; that is the thing I desire now, and I thank God, my Case is quite another thing than his, I know my own Innocence; and I desire to make it appear by a Trial.

L. C. J. Sir Thomas Armstrong, You may go away with what Opinion you please, of your own Innocency: But you are here Attainted by Outlawry. That which was done to him you speak of, was the Grace and Mercy of the King, and he may, if he please, extend the same Grace and Favour to you; but that is not our Business: We are satisfied that according to Law we must award Execution upon this Outlawry.

Mrs. Matthews. My Lord, I hope you will not murder my Father; this is murdering a Man.

L. C. J. Who is this Woman? Marshal, take her into Custody. Why, How now? Because your Relation is attainted for High-Treason, must you take upon you to tax the Courts of Justice for Murder, when we grant the Execution according to Law. Take her away.

Mrs. Matthews. God Almighty's Judgments light upon you.

L. C. J. God Almighty's Judgments will light upon those that are Guilty of High-Treason.

Mrs. Matthews. Amen, I pray God.

L. C. J. So say I. But Clamours never prevail upon me at all; I thank God, I am Clamour Proof, and will never fear to do my Duty.

[Then she was carried away.]

* Burnet's History of his own Times, Vol. I. p. 577. 3. Mod. Rep. 47.

† He was seized at Leiden in Holland by the Scout of that Place, who delivered him up to Chudleigh the King's Envoy for 5000 Guilders, which is something less than 500l.

‡ 5 and 6 Edw. 6. c. 11. Sect. 3. and 4.

§ Here the Prisoner was denied Counsel upon a Point of Law, in which case it was never pretended but he is intitled to it. King and Johnson, Mich. 2. Geo. II. B. R. the Prisoner was allowed to be within the Benefit of the Provision, and tho' he had escaped out of Prison, and was retaken in England, was admitted to prove himself beyond Sea at the time of the Outlawry; and upon proving that he was then at Middleburgh in Zealand, his Outlawry was reversed, and he was admitted to a Trial, and acquitted: Armstrong's Case was declared a Precedent not fit to be followed.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, I would only acquaint you with one Thing, in reference to what Sir Thomas Armstrong has said: The King did indulge Holloway, that he speaks of, it is true, so far as to offer him a Trial, and his Majesty, perhaps might have some reason for it, but the Prisoner truly deserves no sort of Indulgence or Mercy from the King. For it has appeared by the Evidence that has been given of this late horrid Conspiracy, that after the Disappointment that was given by the Providence of God, by the Fire at New-Market, to the Meeting at the Rye; this Gentleman was one of the Persons that actually engaged to go upon the King's hasty coming to Town, and to destroy him by the Way as he came to Town. And this appears upon a full and clear Evidence, as positively testified as any Thing can be.* And when he was taken beyond Seas, Letters of Communication with foreign Ministers and other People were taken about him, and will be —

L. C. J. We are not to meddle at all with the Evidence, Mr. Attorney; that is not our Business: here is an Outlawry; upon this Outlawry he is attainted; we have nothing more to do, but to do the Duty of the Court upon this Record before us, to award Execution upon that Attainder, and we must give a Rule for it. If the King will be pleased to do for Sir Thomas Armstrong what he did for Holloway, and indulge him a Trial, and wave the Outlawry, with all our Hearts. We are not Disposers of his Grace and Favour, but the Ministers of his Justice. If the King will pardon him, he may; that is not our Business; but all we have to do upon what is before us, is to consider the Record, and what the Prisoner says against our awarding of Execution. We have considered whether this be a yielding within the Proviso of this Statute, and we think it is not, nor can be, by any Means.

Sir Thomas Armstrong. My Lord, I am within the Statute. I was outlawed while I was beyond Sea, and I come now here within the Twelve-month. That is all I know, or have to say in this Matter.

L. C. J. We think quite the contrary, Sir Thomas.

Sir Thomas Armstrong. When I was before the Council, my Lord, they ordered that I should have Counsel allotted me, but I could have no Benefit by that Order; for when I was taken, I was robbed of all the Money I had, and have not had one Penny restored to me, nor any Money since; I know not whether the Law allows Persons in my Condition to be robbed and stripped.

L. C. J. I know nothing at all of that Matter, Sir Thomas.

Sir Thomas Armstrong. My Lord, I know Lawyers will not plead without Money, and being robbed, I could not have wherewithal to Fee them.

L. C. J. Sir Thomas Armstrong, You take the Liberty of saying what you please; you talk of being robbed, no-body has robbed you that I know of.

Sir Thomas Armstrong. No-body says you do know of it; but so it is.

L. C. J. Nay, be as angry as you will, Sir Thomas, we are not concerned at your Anger. We will undoubtedly do our Duty.

Sir Thomas Armstrong. I ought to have the Benefit of the Law, and I demand no more.

L. C. J. That you shall have by the Grace of God. See that Execution be done on Friday next, according to Law. You shall have the full Benefit of the Law.

Then the Prisoner was carried back to Newgate, and afterwards, upon a Petition, the COURT ordered Mrs. Matthews to be released out of Custody without Fees.

THE Sheriffs of London and Middlesex, about Nine o'Clock in the Morning, coming to Newgate, and demanding their Prisoner, he was forthwith delivered to them, and put into a Sledge, and drawn to the Place of Execution, attended by a numerous Guard, and as great a Number of Spectators, of all Degrees and Qualities, as have been seen on such Occasions.

He employed the Time he was drawing to Tyburn in reading The Whole Duty of Man, till he came within Sight of the Gallows, and then he laid it by, and with lifted up Hands and Eyes, addressed himself to Heaven, till he came beneath the Tree, where he remained about a quarter of an Hour in the Sledge; before he ascended the Cart that stood ready for him, he desired the Sheriff to admit Dr. Tenison to come to him: and having delivered a Paper to the Sheriff, the Doctor knelt down with the Prisoner, and prayed with him about a quarter of an Hour, during all which Time the Prisoner preserved a becoming and heroic Countenance, little daunted with the Terror of that Fate he was in View of; but rising from his Devotions, he pulled off his Cravat and Hat, which he gave to his Servant who attended him, and had follow'd him by the Sledge-side, when kneeling down himself, he pray'd for a short Time with Fervency and Devotion, begging Pardon of his God for those manifold and crying Sins he had been too often guilty of, and concluded with a Resignation of himself to the God of Heaven and Earth, before whose Judgment Seat he was forthwith to appear, desiring that the whole World would forgive him, with whom he hoped he died in Peace and Charity. Having thus ended these Devotions, he again stood up, and putting off his Periwig, he had a white Cap deliver'd to him, which he put on; and being soon after tied up, the chief of his Discourse was addressed to a Gentleman who stood by him; and after a short Space, holding up his Hands, he again renew'd his Prayers; his Visage little changing all the Time, till the very Moment the Cart drew away; the Executioner having pull'd the Cap over his Eyes, he continued his Prayers all the Time, and even whilst he hung, as long as Life was in him, and he had the Command of his Lips; after he had hung about half an Hour, and the Executioner had divested him of his Apparel, he was cut down according to his Sentence, his privy Members burnt, his Head cut off, and shew'd to the People as that of a Traitor, his Heart and Bowels taken out, and committed to the Flames, and his Body quarter'd into Four Parts, which with his Head, was convey'd back to Newgate, to be dispos'd of according to his Majesty's Pleasure; and were afterwards publicly expos'd:

The Substance of the Paper deliver'd to the Sheriff was, That he thanked Almighty God, he found himself prepared for Death, his Thoughts set upon another World, and weaned from this; yet he could not but give so much of his little Time as to answer some Calumnies, and particularly what Mr. Attorney accused him of at the Bar.

That he prayed to be allowed a Trial for his Life, according to the Laws of the Land, and urged the Statute of Edward VI. which was expressly for it; but it signified nothing, and he was with an extraordinary Roughness condemned and made a Precedent; tho' Holloway had it offered him, and he could not but think all the World would conclude his Case very different; else why was it refused to him?

That Mr. Attorney charged him for being one of those that were to kill the King, He took God to witness, that he never had a Thought to take away the King's Life, and that no Man ever had the Impudence to propose so barbarous and base a Thing to him; and that he never was in any Design to alter the Government.

That if he had been try'd, he could have proved the Lord Howard's base Reflections upon him, to be notoriously false——He concluded, That he had lived, and now died of the Reformed Religion, a Protestant in the Communion of the Church of England, and he heartily wish'd he had lived more strictly up to the Religion he believed: That he had found the great Comfort of the Love and Mercy of God, in and through his Blessed Redeemer, in whom he only trusted, and verily hoped that he was going to partake of that Fullness of Joy which is in his Presence, the Hopes whereof infinitely pleased him. He thanked God he had no repining, but cheerfully submitted to the Punishment of his Sins: He freely forgave all the World, even those concerned in taking away his Life, though he could not but think his Sentence very hard, he being denied the Laws of the Land.†

These Proceedings were afterwards enquir'd into, and censur'd as illegal by the House of Commons in 1689.

Martis, 12. November, 1689.

A Petition of the Lady Armstrong and her Daughters, was Read; Whereupon a Committee was appointed to examine the Matter, and make their Report to the House.

Resolved,

That it be an Instruction to the Committee, That they examine who were the Judges that gave the Sentence against Sir Thomas Armstrong, and who were the Prosecutors of him; and who had his Estate; and how the Petitioners may have Reparation: And also to examine what Proceedings were in order to a Writ of Error by him desired, and how it came to be denied, and by whom: And they are to make their Report with all convenient Speed.

Martis, 19 November, 1689.

Mr. Christy reported from the Committee to whom the Petition of the Lady Armstrong, and the Daughters of Sir Thomas Armstrong was referred; an Account of the whole Proceedings against him; and that thereupon they had come to these Resolves,

1. That Sir Thomas Armstrong's Plea ought to have been admitted, according to the Statute of Edward VI. and that the Execution of him upon the Attainder by Outlawry, was illegal, and a Murder, by Pretence of Justice.

2. That the Executors and Heirs of Sir Thomas Armstrong, ought to have a Reparation of their Losses out of the Estates of those that were his Judges and Prosecutors.

3. That a Writ of Error for the Reversal of a Judgment in Felony or Treason, is the Right of the Subject, and ought to be granted at his Desire, and is not an Act of Grace or Favour; which may be denied or granted at Pleasure.‡

To all which Resolves the House agreed.

Resolved,

That Leave be given to bring in a Bill to Reverse the Attainder of Sir Thomas Armstrong, and to make Reparation to his Widow and Children, out of the Estates of the Judges and Prosecutors: And the same to be without Fees.

Monday the 20th of January, 1689.

Mr. Christy reported from the Committee, to whom the Bill for the annulling the Attainder of Sir Thomas Armstrong was recommitted; some Amendments to the Bill; as also who were his Prosecutors; and also what Losses Sir Thomas Armstrong's Family had sustained, by Reason of the Attainder; and thereupon it was Resolved,

That Sir Richard Holloway, Sir Francis Wythins, the Executors of the late Lord Jefferies, and of the late Justice Walcot, Mr. Graham and Mr. Burton, do attend the House on Saturday Morning next, to answer to such Matters, as are charged against them touching the Proceedings against Sir Thomas Armstrong.

Then Mrs. Matthews, Sir Thomas Armstrong's Daughter, was called in, and examined what she knew of the Prosecution against her Father; And Sir Robert Sawyer (then Attorney-General) being named by her, as one of the Prosecutors; after she was withdrawn, he was heard in his Place to what was objected against him, and then he withdrew, and upon Debate of the Matter, it was Resolved, That Sir Robert Sawyer's Name be put into the Bill, as one of the Prosecutors of Sir Thomas Armstrong.

Resolved,

That Sir Robert Sawyer be expelled the House for the same.

Saturday the 25th of January, 1689.

The House being acquainted, That according to their Order, Sir Francis Wythins, Sir Richard Holloway, Mr. Graham, and Mr. Burton, attended at the Door, they were severally called in, and examined, touching the Prosecution and Proceedings against Sir Thomas Armstrong.

* If this had been so evidently clear, it can scarce be imagin'd they would have been so backward to have wav'd the Outlawry, and let him have his Trial; nothing but a Consciousness of the contrary could, probably, have prevailed to put so strained a Sense on the Statute, in order to deprive him of a Trial.

† See the Paper Lady Armstrong deliver'd to Lord Keeper North, Lord Chief Justice Jefferies, and the Attorney-General; also Sir Thomas's Paper he deliver'd to the Sheriffs: In State-Trials, Vol. VIII. p. 454, 455, 470, 471.

‡ See Salk. 504.

Vol. III.

And also the Executors of the late Lord Jefferies, that were attending at the Door were likewise called in, and asked what they had to say, why Reparation should not be made out of the Lord Jefferies's Estate, to the said Sir Thomas Armstrong's Family.

No Persons appearing as Executors to the late Justice Walcot; the House was acquainted that he died Intestate, and had not left an Estate sufficient to pay his Debts.

After the Persons before-mentioned were heard and withdrawn, Mr. Blaney was called in, who gave the House an Account of the Proceedings in the Court of King's-Bench, upon the awarding Execution against Sir Thomas Armstrong.

And then the House proceeded upon the Amendments made by the Committee to the Bill, for annulling the Attainder of Sir Thomas Armstrong:

And after having inserted the Name of Sir Robert Sawyer, as a Prosecutor, and Resolved, That the Sum of Five Thousand Pounds should be paid by the Judges and Prosecutors, to Sir Thomas Armstrong's Lady, and Children, as a Recompence of the Losses they had sustained by Reason of his Attainder, the Bill was recommitted (upon the Debate of the House) to the same Committee.

This Bill not passing, the Attainder stood in Force till 6 William and Mary, when it was reversed upon a Writ of Error in the King's-Bench; for that the Record did not mention where the Court of Hustings were held, the Words pro Civitate London being omitted. 4 Mod. Rep. 366.

CXXIX. Proceedings on a Writ of Inquiry of Damages between His Royal Highness JAMES Duke of YORK, in an Action upon the Statute de Scandalis Magnatum, and Titus Oates, in the King's-Bench, June 18, 1684. Trin. 36 Car. II.

HIS Royal Highness the Duke of York, having brought an Action against Titus Oates, grounded upon the Statute de Scandalis Magnatum, for very Slanderous and Opprobrious Words, the Defendant suffered Judgment to go against him by Default, and thereupon a Writ of Inquiry was taken out directed to the Sheriff of the County of Middlesex, to enquire by a Jury of that County, what Damages the Plaintiff had sustained thereby, and upon a Motion made at the Court of King's-Bench, a Day was given to the Defendant, to shew Cause why that Writ of Inquiry should not be Executed at the Bar of that Court, which he not doing, it was ordered, That it should be Executed at the Bar on this Day, and that the High Sheriff should appear and attend the Execution of the Writ in Person. Accordingly this Day Sir Peter Daniel, Kt. and Samuel Dashwood, Esq; the then Sheriffs of the County of Middlesex, came into this Court, and being placed at the Table at the Judges Feet, were, during the Execution of the Writ, covered. Mr. Thomas Rous the then Under-Sheriff managed it, and proceeded in this manner.

Mr. Under-Sheriff. Crier, Call Sir Charles Lee.
Crier. Vous avez Sir Charles Lee.

[Who was sworn thus.

Mr. Under-Sheriff. You shall well and truly enquire of Damages, between the most Illustrious Prince JAMES Duke of York and Albany Plaintiff, and Titus Oates Defendant, and therein a true Verdict give according to your Evidence. So help you God.

The rest were sworn thus.

Mr. Under-Sheriff. Sir William Hill, Sir Richard Downton, and Sir John Berry; the same Oath your Foreman hath for his Part taken, you and every of you for your Parts, shall well and truly keep. So help you God.

Mr. Under-Sheriff. Thomas Harriot, Thomas Row, and Walter Brydall; the same Oath, &c. Edward Guise, Thomas Done, and William Wood; the same Oath, &c. John Sharp, and Nehemiah Arnold; the same Oath, &c.

Will you please to have any more than Twelve sworn?

Sir George L. C. J. How many do you use to have? Pray swear an odd Jefferies. Number as you used to do.

Mr. Under-Sheriff. Then I will swear Three more, and that will be just Fifteen.

Francis Stevens, Nicholas Baxter, and John Kirk. The same OATH, &c.

The NAMES of them that were upon the INQUIRY.

Sir Charles Lee , Kt.	Thomas Done , Esq;
Sir William Hill , Kt.	William Wood , Esq;
Sir Richard Downton , Kt.	John Sharp , Esq;
Sir John Berry , Kt.	Nehemiah Arnold , Esq;

Edward Guise , Esq;

Mr. Under Sheriff. Gentlemen, You are sworn, hear the King's Writ.

L. C. J. Ay, read it to them.

Mr. Under-Sheriff. CHARLES II. by the Grace of God, of England, Scotland, France and Ireland King, Defender of the Faith, &c. to the Sheriff of Middlesex, Greeting; Whereas the most Illustrious Prince JAMES Duke of York and Albany, one of the Nobles and Peers of England, our most dear and only Brother, who as well, &c. lately in our Court before Us at Westminster, by Bill without our Writ impleaded Titus Oates, then in the Custody of the Marshal of our Marshalsea, before us being: For that whereas in a Statute made in the Parliament of Richard II. late King of England after the Conquest, held at Gloucester in the Second Year of his Reign, amongst other Things: It is Ordained and strictly Prohibited, That from thence none should be so hardy to devise, tell or relate of the Prelates, Dukes, Earls, Barons, and other Nobles and Great Men of England, nor of the Chancellor, Treasurer, or Clerk of the Privy Seal, Steward of the King's Household, Justices of the one or the other Bench, nor of other great Officers of the Kingdom aforesaid, any false News, Lies, or any such false Things, whereby Scandal or Discord within the said Kingdom might arise; and whosoever should do this, should incur and have the Penalty otherwise thereon ordained by the Statute of Westminster the First, as in the Statute aforesaid is more fully contained. And whereas the 4th Day of December in the Five and Thirtieth Year of our Reign, and long before the Yearly Rents, Issues and Profits arising, or due and payable for or by Reason of the General Post-Office within this Kingdom of England, for the Carriage of Letters, before were erected and yet are established upon the said most Illustrious Prince JAMES Duke of York and Albany. The aforesaid Titus Oates the Statute aforesaid not considering, but the good Name, State, Credit, Dignity, and Honour of the said JAMES Duke of York and Albany, our Brother, devising and maliciously intending to hurt and detract, and Him the said JAMES Duke of York and Albany, our Brother, into the great Displeasure and Hatred of Us, and of the Peers of this Kingdom of England, and also divers other venerable Persons our Subjects, to bring, out of his meer Malice and Envy had and forethought, the aforesaid 4th Day of December, in the Year of our Reign the Five and Thirtieth, at the Parish of St. Martin in the Fields in the County of Middlesex aforesaid, upon a certain Discourse then had and moved by and between the aforesaid Titus Oates and divers of our Liege People, of and concerning the aforesaid JAMES Duke of York and Albany, our Brother, and of and concerning a certain Letter in the Hand of the aforesaid Titus Oates at that Time being, divers false News and horrible Lies of the aforesaid JAMES Duke of York and Albany, our Brother at that Time, and yet being of the Peers and Nobles of this Kingdom, in the Presence and Hearing of divers venerable Persons, Publicly, Falsly, Maliciously, and Scandalously said and related; and with a loud Voice Published in these English Words following, viz. This Letter (the Letter aforesaid, so in the Hands of the aforesaid Titus Oates as is before said being, meaning) cost me (the said Titus Oates, meaning) Nine Pence, and might have been brought for a Penny, I (himself the aforesaid Titus Oates meaning) know nobody is the better for it, but that Traitor JAMES Duke of York (the aforesaid JAMES Duke of York and Albany our only Brother meaning.) And the aforesaid Titus further devising and maliciously intending the aforesaid JAMES Duke of York and Albany, our Brother, into the Hatred of Us, and the Peers of this Kingdom of England, and also of divers other venerable Persons, and our Subjects to bring; out of his meer Malice and Envy, had and forethought, the 4th Day of December, the Year above said, at the Parish of St. Martin in the Fields aforesaid, in the County of Middlesex aforesaid, upon a certain other Discourse then had and moved by and between the aforesaid Titus Oates and several of our Liege People of and concerning the aforesaid JAMES Duke of York and Albany, our Brother, and of and concerning a certain Letter in the Hands of the aforesaid Titus Oates, at that Time being, divers other false News and horrible Lies of the aforesaid JAMES Duke of York and Albany, our Brother at that Time, and yet being one of the Nobles and Peers of this Kingdom of England, and our only Brother, in the Presence and Hearing of several venerable Persons, Publicly, Falsly, Maliciously and Scandalously said, related, and with a loud Voice Published, viz. This Letter (the aforesaid Letter so in the Hands of the aforesaid Titus Oates, as is before said being, meaning) cost me (the aforesaid Titus Oates meaning) Nine Pence, and might have been afforded for a Penny, I (himself the aforesaid Titus Oates meaning) know no body is the better for it, but that Traitor JAMES Duke of York (the aforesaid JAMES Duke of York our only Brother meaning.) And afterwards, to Wit, the 5th Day of December in the Thirty Fifth Year above said; the aforesaid Titus Oates further devising and maliciously intending the said JAMES Duke of York and Albany our Brother to Scandalize, and into the further Displeasure and Hatred of Us, and of the Great Men of this Kingdom of England, out of his meer Malice and Envy, had and forethought, at the Parish of St. Martin, in the Fields aforesaid, in the County of Middlesex aforesaid, the said 5th Day of December, in the Year above said, upon certain other Discourse of the said JAMES Duke of York and Albany, divers false News and horrible Lies of the aforesaid JAMES Duke of York and Albany, Publicly, Falsly, and Maliciously said, related, and with a loud Voice published, to Wit, that the Letter in the Hands of the aforesaid Titus at that Time being, cost him the aforesaid Titus Nine Pence, but might have been brought for One Penny, and that he knew no body to be the better for it, but that Traitor JAMES Duke of York. And the aforesaid Titus Oates further contriving and maliciously intending the aforesaid JAMES Duke of York and Albany, our only Brother, into the further ‘further Displeasure and Hatred of us, and of the Great Men of this Kingdom of England, and also of divers other venerable Persons, and our Subjects, to bring, out of his meer Malice and Envy, had and forethought the 6th Day of December, in the Five and Thirtieth Year above said, at the Parish of St. Martin in the Fields afore said, in the County of Middlesex afore said, upon a certain Discourse at that Time had and moved by and between the afore said Titus Oates and several of our Liege People, of and concerning the afore said JAMES Duke of York and Albany, our Brother, divers other false News and horrible Lies of the afore said JAMES Duke our only Brother, at that Time, and yet being one of the Nobles and Peers of this Kingdom of England, in the Presence and Hearing of divers venerable Persons, Publickly, Falsly, Maliciously and Scandalously said, related, and with a loud Voice published in these English Words following, to Wit, The Duke of York (the afore said JAMES Duke of York and Albany, our only Brother, meaning) is a Traitor. And the afore said Titus Oates further contriving, and Maliciously intending the said JAMES Duke of York our Brother, into the Hatred of us, and of the Great Men of this Kingdom of England, and also of divers other venerable Persons, and our Subjects, to bring, out of his meer Malice and Envy, had and forethought the afore said 6th Day of December the Year above said, at the Parish of St. Martin in the Fields, in the County of Middlesex afore said, upon certain other Discourse at that Time had and moved by and between the afore said Titus Oates and divers of our Liege People, of and concerning the afore said JAMES Duke of York and Albany, our only Brother, divers other false News and horrible Lies of the afore said JAMES Duke of York and Albany, our only Brother, and at that Time and yet being one of the Nobles and Peers of this Kingdom of England, in the Presence and Hearing of divers venerable Persons, Publickly, Falsly and Maliciously said, related, and with a loud Voice published; to Wit, That the said Duke of York was a Traitor. By reason whereof the said JAMES Duke of York and Albany, our only Brother, in his Reputation, Honour and Dignity is very much hurt and scandaliz’d. And the said JAMES Duke of York and Albany, the Grace, good Opinion and Esteem which we and others the Great Men of this Kingdom of England before towards him JAMES Duke of York and Albany, did bear, utterly lost, and divers Rumours and Scandals between very many Nobles and Peers of this Kingdom of England, and other our Subjects, by the Occasions afore said, within this Kingdom of England, are arisen and divulged, and great Scandals and Discords by Occasion of the Premises between him the afore said JAMES Duke of York and Albany, and divers Nobles and Great Men, and other Subjects of this Kingdom of England, are arisen; and Daily more and more in the like may arise, to the great Disturbance of the Peace and publick Tranquillity of this Kingdom of England, and in Contempt of us and our Government of this Kingdom of England, and to the great Scandal and Grievance of him JAMES Duke of York and Albany, to the Damage of him the said JAMES Duke of York and Albany, our most dear Brother, a Hundred Thousand Pounds: As he then said, and thereupon in our Court before us it was so proceeded, That the afore said JAMES Duke of York and Albany, our only Brother, his Damages against the said Titus Oates by Occasion of the Premises ought to recover: But because it is not known to our Court before us, what Damages the afore said JAMES Duke of York and Albany, our Brother, hath sustained, as well by Occasion of the Premises, as for his Costs and Charges by him about his Suit in this Behalf expended. Therefore We command you, that by the Oaths of good and lawful Men of your Bailiwick, you diligently enquire what Damages the afore said JAMES Duke of York and Albany hath sustained, as well by Occasion of the Premises, as for his Costs and Charges by him about his Suit in this Behalf expended, and the Inquisition which thereupon you shall take, you shall have before Us at Westminster on Wednesday next after Three Weeks of the Holy Trinity, under your Seal, and the Seals of them by whose Oath you take that Inquisition, distinctly and openly you send, and this Writ. Teste Sir George Jefferies, Knight and Baronet, at Westminster, the Thirtieth Day of May, in the Year of our Reign the Six and Thirtieth.

Ri. Swift.

Henley.

You are to enquire what Damage his Royal Highness the Plaintiff has sustained, by means of the Premises; as also, what Costs he has been at in this Suit.

Mr. Hanfes. May it please your Lordship, you Mr. Sheriffs, and Gentlemen of the Jury, His Royal Highness the Duke of York is Plaintiff, and Titus Oates is the Defendant: And this is, in an Action of Trespas and Contempt, grounded upon the Statute of Scandalum Magnatum, wherein His Royal Highness sets forth, That whereas such a Statute was made, prohibiting the Slandering the Great Men and Peers of the Kingdom, and the Plaintiff being the King’s only Brother, and a Peer, the Defendant upon a Discourse between him the Defendant and some other Persons, about a Letter that the Defendant had then in his Hands, Publickly, Falsly, and with an Intent to Scandalize the Plaintiff, spoke these English Words:

This Letter (meaning the Letter then in the Defendant’s Hands) cost me (meaning the Defendant) Nine Pence, and might have been brought for a Penny; I (meaning the Defendant) know nobody is the better for it, but that Traitor JAMES Duke of YORK, meaning the Plaintiff.

Gentlemen, This is not all, the Declaration goes on further, and says, That the Defendant intending further to Scandalize the Plaintiff, the Sixth of December in the Thirty Fifth Year of this King upon a Discourse had and moved by and between him the Defendant and some other Persons, in the Presence of divers venerable Persons, said these Words of the Plaintiff:

The Duke of York (meaning the Plaintiff) is a Traitor: And this is laid to the Plaintiff’s Damage of One Hundred Thousand Pounds: The Defendant has not pleaded, and the Plaintiff has signed his Judgment; and now you, Gentlemen are to enquire of the Damages.

Mr. Att. Gen. You observe, Gentlemen, the Words are acknowledged by the Defendant’s Default, and not Pleading; so that they were spoken is owned by him, and you are to enquire only of the Damages: And, I think, there will need nothing to be said for the Aggravation of them, they are Words of the highest Nature, in Respect of Slander and Scandal, that can be spoken or thought of, accusing him of Treason. We shall only call you some Witnesses to prove this way of Discourse to be his constant Habit in all Places, and among all Persons and Company, inveighing against the Government, and particularly against His Royal Highness the Plaintiff; and then you will, I know, give such Damages as may be fit to repair the Plaintiff’s Honour.

Mr. Sol. Gen. We will call some Witnesses to give you an Account how he uses to treat the Plaintiff in all Companies, and we shall begin with Mr. Smith. And the Truth is, the proving of the Words, will demonstrate the Malice of them; and the Manner and Circumstances of speaking, will make them appear to be such, as need nothing to be said for their Aggravation at all. Swear Mr. James Smith.

Mr. Under-Sheriff. The Evidence that you shall give to the Sheriffs and the Jury, sworn about the Matter in Question, shall be the Truth, the whole Truth, and nothing but the Truth.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Mr. Smith, pray will you tell the Court and the Jury, what you have heard the Defendant Oates say of his Royal Highness.

Mr. Smith. At the last Westminster Parliament, as I was sitting in a Coffee-House, I saw Mr. Oates, he had a Letter in his Hand, and he said, This Letter cost me Nine Pence, it might have been brought for a Penny, I know nobody that is the better for it but a Traitor, to the best of my Remembrance he said, the Duke of York.

Mr. At. Gen. Swear Mr. Penniston Whaley. [Which was done.] What Words did you hear Mr. Oates say of His Royal Highness?

Mr. Whaley. The Time was either the Easter or Whitsuntide after Sir Thomas Gascoigne’s Trial.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What were the Words you then heard him say?

Mr. Whaley. It was at the Bishop of Ely’s Table at Ely House. I had received the Sacrament at the Chapel there that Day, and so had the Doctor too; it was upon Easter-day or Whitsunday, I suppose, because I never used to receive the Sacrament here in Town, but one of those two Times; and Dr. Oates and I were sitting there, and some Discourse happened about Sir Thomas Gascoigne’s Trial, and he fell very foul upon the Jury, and said, They were a Company of profligate Villains (or some such Expressions as he was wont to use) and said, He would have them Attainted. Then said I to him, Doctor, you are a good Man at a Matter of Fact, but, I doubt, you are not so at a Matter of Law. Upon that, we came to some high Words about that and other Things, and among the rest of the Discourse, he said, The Duke of YORK was a Traitor. Upon that I said to him, Doctor, you lie under a great Error in that, I suppose, by mistaking a Statute made against Popery; says he, No matter for that, I say he is a Traitor. Then there were some other Discourses happened afterwards, and I began to reply, and growing both of us pretty warm, the Doctor called to his two Men, his Myrmidons, that used to be always with him, and follow him up and down: Said I to him, Nay, Doctor, you need not call your Men to your Assistance, there is nobody here will hurt you: Do you think the Bishop of Ely’s Table is not a Protection good enough for any body that comes here?

L. C. J. Where was this, Sir, pray do you say?

Mr. Whaley. At the Bishop of Ely’s Table.

L. C. J. Was the Bishop there, then?

Mr. Whaley. He was at the Table, but at a great Distance from us, the Doctor and I sat at the lower End of the Table. Afterwards I begged the Bishop of Ely’s Pardon, for being so hot and loud at his Table; says the Bishop to me, I thank you kindly for it, none of us dare talk with him.

L. C. J. And this you say was at Dinner after the Sacrament was over?

Mr. Whaley. Yes, it was so.

Mr. North. Then swear Edward Johnson.

[Which was done.]

Mr. Att. Gen. Mr. Johnson, Pray will you give the Court and Jury an Account, what Discourse you have heard from the Defendant, Mr. Oates, against the Plaintiff.

Mr. Johnson. Upon the Three and Twentieth of August, 1680, I met Dr. Oates, and said, Good-morrow Doctor, all Things will go well now —

L. C. J. You mean him they call Dr. Oates, I suppose.

Mr. Johnson. Yes, they used to call him so; said I, Good-morrow Doctor, all Things will go well now, for there is a Parliament to meet in a little Time. No, said he, not till YORK is either Banished or Hanged; but of the two, Hanging is the fittest for him. Said I, Do not talk so, Doctor: Says he: I speak nothing but what is true; he has a good Brother, but he takes all the Courses in the World to undo him: And then the Doctor and my Lord Howard went away together.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Swear Randall Bowring.

[Which was done.]

What have you heard Mr. Oates say of the Duke of YORK?

Mr. Bowring. About the middle of October, 1679, there were several Persons at Dinner with the Doctor.

L. C. J. What Doctor, prithee?

Mr. Bowring. Mr. Oates.

L. C. J. Mr. Oates we know very well, but we do not so well know who this Doctor is.

Mr. Bowring. They used to call him Doctor, or I should not have taken upon me to give him the Title.

L. C. J. Well, go on: There were several Persons at Dinner with him, and what then?

Mr. Bowring. There happened some Discourse concerning His Royal Highness.

L. C. J.

L. C. J. Where was this?

Mr. Bowring. At his Lodgings at Whitehall: And a Gentleman that was there, said, In case His Royal Highness were a Papist, how should we be secured, that in Case he come to the Succession of the Crown, he would not bring in Popery among us? Then the Doctor replied, I would not have you trouble yourself about that, for he shall be hanged before that Time.

Mr. Att. Gen. What have you heard him say any where else; at Foster-Lane, or any other Place?

Mr. Bowring. After the Sermon he had preached there at Foster-Lane Church, the Church-Wardens, and some of the Parish, invited him into the Vestry to drink a Glass of Wine.

L. C. J. What? He made as if he would preach there?

Mr. Bowring. He did preach there, and then the Church-Wardens invited him to Dinner; but then he asked them, If ever any of them had dined with JAMES Duke of YORK, at any of the Feasts of the City, where the Duke used to come sometimes? To which none of them answering a Word, he replied, He would not dine with any Man that had eat with the Devil. And so would not go to dine with them, but went and dined at a private Brasier's by London-Wall.

L. C. J. An excellent Gospel-Preacher upon my Word.

Mr. Att. Gen. What Brasier was that?

Mr. Bowring. Truly I do not well know his Name.

Mr. Att. Gen. Where did he live?

Mr. Bowring. By London-Wall.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Then swear Mr. Fairfax.

[Which was done.]

Pray, Sir, tell my Lord and the Jury what Words you heard this Man speak of His Royal Highness.

Mr. Fairfax. May it please your Lordship, in August 1679, I happened to come into the Company of Oates the Defendant, upon the account of an Election that was to be of Parliament-Men for Grinstead in Suffex, by the means of one Aukland; Oates was to go down thither in my Lord Wharton's Coach, and then we came first to be acquainted, and afterwards we frequently did eat together, and became very well acquainted. And in my Lord Scroggs's Time, when he was Lord Chief Justice, there was some Presentment intended to be brought in by the Grand Jury here at the Term, against his Royal Highness for being a Papist, and not coming to Church, and this Oates was the main Prosecutor of it. He was used often to come up to me, and speak to me when he met me; and I was about that Time walking in the Court that was built up here for the Trial of the Lords in the Tower; it was after that Grand Jury were dismissed, which was done a Day or two before they used to be dismissed in the ordinary course, and walking there I met Oates, and said I to him, Doctor, Now you are Non-suited, what will you do now? Oh, says he, We will do well enough; there will be a Sessions after the Term, and there we will at him again; and we will have no more Regard for him, than if he were Scavenger of Kent-Street. And upon that he was called away from me, and he went away.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Swear Mr. Philips.

[Which was done.]

Mr. Att. Gen. Come, Mr. Philips, will you acquaint my Lord and the Jury, what you have heard Oates say of the Duke of YORK?

Mr. Philips. In or about January (78) may it please your Lordship, I was in the Company of one Deacon, at Oates's Lodgings at Whitehall, where Mr. Oates said, He hoped to see your or our Master JAMES (meaning the Duke of YORK, His Royal Highness I suppose) at the Bar of the House of Commons; and it would be no Disparagement to him to appear there, for there were better Men Members of that House than he was.

L. C. J. Pray what was the Occasion of this Discourse?

Mr. Philips. Truly it was a Discourse of his own; he ran it on, we talk'd but little to him.

L. C. J. Who did he apply himself to in that Discourse?

Mr. Philips. To us two, Mr. Deacon and I.

L. C. J. How came he to mention your Master JAMES, had you any Relation to the Service of his Royal Highness?

Mr. Philips. No, my Lord, we had not; but he said, either our Master, or your Master: He run on in such kind of Discourse as he used to do.

L. C. J. But do you think he intended his Royal Highness, when he named your Master JAMES?

Mr. Philips. I could not imagine he did mean any body else.

Mr. Att. Gen. Then swear William Aphlock.

[Which was done.]

Pray will you acquaint my Lord and the Jury, what Words you have heard him speak of his ROYAL HIGHNESS.

Mr. Aphlock. May it please your Lordship, in Easter-Term 1682, Dr. Oates —

Mr. Att. Gen. Mr. Oates, you mean.

Mr. Aphlock. Mr. Oates went out one Morning, with Dolben and Robin Nichols, two of his Men, from his Lodgings at Whitehall, and while he was dressing, he said he went out, in order to draw up a Bill of Indictment against the Duke of York; but he did not do it, because he was otherwise advised by some Persons, as I heard. Then at Michaelmas, 1682, when he was going to dress him, I held the Basin to him to wash, as he commonly had two or three every Day to wait upon him to dress him, there came in a Gentleman, that came newly out of Suffex, I cannot remember his Name: He asked him how all Friends did in Suffex, and then fell a talking about the Election of Sheriffs, and abusing them that were then chosen, and reflected very much upon Sir John Moor, and called him Rogue, and said he deserved to be hanged up as an Example. And afterwards, he said, the City of London was fired by the Duke of YORK's Order, and Sir Thomas Bloodworth had a Hand in it; and the Forces at Black-Heath were to have plundered the City, and killed all the honest Protestant Dissenters in London: And this he would prove, if ever they had a Parliament to their Mind that should sit. At another Time there was one Starkey, Henry Starkey, that was concerned in Colledge's Business at Oxford, and one Mr. Paschall, and, I think, Captain Clare, and some others that used to keep him Company, and Mr. Oates stepped up on a sudden, and said, The Duke of York was a Son of a Whore, and he should live to see him hanged; and if they could but get a Parliament to their Mind, they would soon send the Duke and all his Gang out of England, for he must never expect to succeed to the Crown.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray who did he say was to head the Forces at Black-Heath that you talk of were to plunder the City?

Mr. Aphlock. The Duke of YORK; and London was fired by his Order; and this he would prove, if they could but get a Parliament to their Mind, And he said, They should take away the Post-Office from the Duke of YORK, and give it to the Duke of Monmouth.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Then call Captain Cressett, and swear him.

[Which was done.]

Mr. Att. Gen. Capt. Cressett. Pray do you remember what Discourse you had with Oates, when the Duke went into Flanders, what he said of his Royal Highness?

Capt. Cressett. It was the last Time the Duke went into Scotland with her Royal Highness, I think it was in October 1680. I was commanded over Night to wait at the Duke's Lodgings, till a Paper should be delivered me by my Lord Rochester; I stay'd there till Twelve o'Clock at Night, and not seeing my Lord come out, I went away, and came early next Morning. And when the Duke and Dutches went to take Water at the Privy-Stairs, I came down through the Guard-Chamber, and Dr. Oates was in the Gallery that leads betwixt that and the Gate; when he saw me, I bid him, Good-morrow Doctor, or he bid me, Good-morrow; one of the two, I cannot exactly tell which: Says he to me, You will never leave till you have lost your Reputation. Why, what is the Matter now, Doctor, said I, I hope my Reputation is not hung upon so slender a Thread, as to be lost for my going any where? Says he, You have been with JAMES: Who do you mean by JAMES, said I? YORK, says he. Surely, said I, it might have been the Duke of YORK, or his Royal Highness: No, said he, he is a Rascal, a Papist, and a Traitor, and I hope to live to see him hanged. Truly Doctor, said I, now let me give you a little Advice to govern your Tongue and your Passions. I assure you, they will do neither you nor your Cause good; it may do you a great deal of Hurt in Time, if you do not take Care.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Call Sir William Jennings.

Mr. Att. Gen. Truly, my Lord, I think we need call no more, though we have Multitudes of them, it is his daily Discourse.

L. C. J. Call whom you will, Mr. Attorney; for though it be the last Day of the Term, and it is an unusual Thing to have a Jury at the Bar on that Day, and more unusual to have them to Execute a Writ of Enquiry here; yet in Regard of the Greatness of the Person that is concerned, and the extraordinary Nature of the Cause, We have ordered it thus, That all the World may see how His Royal Highness has been abused and scandalized by this Person.

Mr. Att. Gen. The Defendant, My Lord, has been a Person pretty much talked of too.

L. C. J. Yes, truly, it is done with Regard to him too; for he has been an eminent Man in his Way.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Then swear Sir William Jennings.

[Which was done.]

Mr. Att. Gen. Now, Sir William Jennings, speak out, you hear the Question, What have you heard Oates say of the Duke of YORK?

Sir William Jennings. My Lord, at the Time of the Sitting of the Parliament at Oxford, I was in a Tavern there with Mr. Cranfield, one of the King's Gentlemen-Ushers, who seeing Mr. Oates going along by the Room, invites him to drink a Glass of Wine, there were a matter of some Eight or Nine at the Table; there was a little Partition-Curtain, it being a long Room, and there was some Company beyond that Curtain, somebody in that Company named James Duke of YORK, and the KING's Health being drank at our Table, Mr. Cranfield began a Health to the DUKE: Says Mr. Oates, Do not you Drink YORK's Health. Why should we not, says Mr. Cranfield, and a Gentleman or Two more in the Company: Why, says he, he has ruined the Nation; and if the Devil has a Place in Hell more hot than others, I hope he will bestow it upon him. Several Words past between Mr. Cranfield and him upon it, and the KING was told of it presently.

Mr. Att. Gen. Swear Justice Warcup.

[Which was done.]

Pray tell what you know of this Man's Discoursing concerning the Duke.

Mr. Warcup. My Lord, I went into the Company where Sir William Jennings was that he spoke last of, and being desired to drink a Glass of Wine with them, I did so, and they told me what Dr. Oates had said there.

L. C. J. Mr. Oates, Titus Oates you mean?

Mr. Warcup. Yes, my Lord, the Room had a Partition by a Hanging or Curtain, and I was first in the other Company beyond the Partition, and there somebody began a Health to His Royal Highness the Duke of York; this Health went round, and Oates was, it seems, in the next Room, and heard this Health I suppose: When I came into Sir William Jennings's Company, Oates was gone; the Company there told me what Oates had said, as Sir William Jennings had declared, they all agreed those to be the Words, That he had ruined or betrayed the Nation; and if the Devil had a better place in Hell than other, he hoped he would bestow it upon him. I met Oates afterwards, and asked him why he would speak such irreverent Words of the DUKE? His Answer was, He was a Traitor, and was in the Plot; and he told me, I was a Yorkist, and he would remember me for it.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did not that affright you, Mr. Warcup, to have him threaten you so?

Mr. Warcup. I had then an Impeachment against me, and truly I think I might well be afraid.

L. C. J. You say, he owned the Words they told you of?

Mr. Warcup. They did all agree those to be the Words; and I met him afterwards, and asked him why he would speak so irreverently of the Duke, considering he was the King's Brother, and as Virtuous a Prince as trod upon the Earth? Says he, He is a Traitor, and in the Plot; and you are a Yorkist, and I will remember you for it.

Mr. Sol. Gen. We shall only call one more, to shew in what Mind he continues to be, ever since this Action was brought. Swear Mr. Charles Chapman.

[Which was done.]

Pray, Sir, Tell what you know.

Mr.

Mr. Chapman. My Lord, I met Mr. Swift, the Duke of York's Attorney, when he was going over, as he told me, to demand a Plea of the Defendant Mr. Oates, and he desired me to go along with him, I did so; and when we came to him, Mr. Swift told Oates the Rules were out, and desired to know what he intended to do, whether he would plead or no. Oates asked him, If he were the Duke's Attorney? He answered him, Yes; Says he, I do not value the Duke nor his Attorney neither, I will plead as I shall see Cause according to Law; I declare I neither Love the Duke, nor fear him: And so turned his back, and was going away, and comes up again, and says to him, It may be I may be in for One hundred thousand Pounds here, but if ever a Parliament sit, I do not question but to have somebody else in my place. Mr. Swift asked him to explain himself who he meant, says he, Do you come to Trepan me? And away he went.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, we have now done, if the Jury please to consider of it.

L. C. J. Is there any body here for Mr. Oates, to offer any thing to lessen the damages? [To which no body answered.]

Then, Gentlemen of the Jury, your Business now is to enquire what Damages you think fit to assess to His Royal Highness, by reason of the speaking of the Words mentioned in the Declaration, there being in this Action Judgment by Default obtained by His Royal Highness; and you have nothing now to do, but only to assess to the Plaintiff such Damages as you shall think fit.

Now, Gentlemen, tho' the Acknowledgment of this Judgment (for so it is in effect, it being by Default) be a sufficient Confession of the Words being spoken as they are laid in the Declaration, yet they have given you Proof of the very Words.

The Declaration is in an Action grounded upon the Statue De Scandalis Magnatum, taking notice that His Royal Highness is a great Peer of this Kingdom, and His Majesty's only Brother; and that Oates the Defendant knowing him to be so, to bring him under Reproach and Calumny, and to cause Discord to arise between the King and him, and between him and other Great Men, did speak the Words laid in the Declaration which you have heard read, and which are these.

The first are, This Letter (Oates having a Letter in his Hand) cost me nine Pence, and might have been brought for a Penny; I know no body is the better for it, but that Traitor JAMES Duke of York. This is laid over again with a very little Variation, This Letter cost me nine Pence, and might have been afforded for a Penny I know no body is the better for it but that Traitor JAMES Duke of York; which are Words of the same sound, and to the same purpose with the former; they differ only in some minute Circumstances, a Word or so, but import the same thing.

The next Words are these, The Duke of York is a Traitor; and these Words too are laid two several ways, differing but in very small Circumstances, (Is a Traitor, and was a Traitor,) the Substance of the Words is the same.

Now I say, Gentlemen, Tho' it is not your Business to enquire whether or no Oates spoke these Words, for by letting Judgment go against him by Default, he doth in Law confess the Words, but you are to enquire what Damages may be fit to be given to the Plaintiff by reason of these Words; yet in as much as this Cause is a Cause of an extraordinary Nature, Weight and Moment, having relation to so great a Prince, His Royal Highness the King's only Brother, requires this extraordinary Solemnity, it having not been usual heretofore, that is to have Writs of Enquiry executed at the Bar. But the Occasion is extraordinary, such as has not happened before this Age, this Corrupt Age, this Profligate Age, wherein we live, and wherein common ordinary Fellows, the meer Scum and Scoundrels of the Factious Party, have taken the Liberty to reproach and calumniate Magistracy and Government, and the greatest Personages concern'd in it, not sparing even Majesty itself, nor him, who is next in Degree to His Sacred Person, His only Dear and Royal Brother. And therefore as the Cause is extraordinary in its Nature, so ought the Example of it to be made as publick as can be, in order to satisfy all People what a sort of Fellow this Defendant is, who has been so much adored and looked upon with an Eye of Admiration, courted with so wonderful an Affection, and so, I had almost said, Hojanna'd among People that have been Factious and Tumultuous to the Government.

Such as he ought to be made publick Examples of; and therefore the King's Counsel have desired that this Cause might be canvassed here at the Bar, and the Defendant, as he has made himself eminent for some particular Qualifications, might be made a publick Example for this Offence.

Thus this Writ comes to be executed here. Now though the Words laid in this Declaration are Words that do import in themselves so much Scandal and Reproach, so much Malice and Venom, that they need no Aggravation besides themselves; and his suffering it to go by Default shews they are no way to be extenuated, but are thereby acknowledged: Yet, however, to satisfy all People that desire or have any Inclination to be satisfied, that this Prosecution is highly reasonable, nay absolutely necessary; they come here and give you an account that these in the Declaration are but a small Part of the scandalous and malicious Words that the Defendant useth concerning the Plaintiff. And indeed it doth plainly appear, that the Malice of the Defendant is attended with all the most unchristian and uncharitable, as well as disloyal and disobedient Circumstances that any thing can be, with design to traduce and disparage a Subject so Loyal, and a Person so Great and Illustrious as His Royal Highness.

As to the first Words, you have the first Witness Mr. Smith, and he gives you this Account, He was in a Coffee-House where he met the Defendant Oates; and the Defendant in a vain-glorious huffing sort of manner takes occasion, tho' none was offer'd him by any thing spoken to him by any body, but only on set purpose to express his Malice and Venom against the Plaintiff. He takes up a Letter that it seems came to him by the Post, and to gratify his own malicious Inclination, and to give it vent, he proclaims, This Letter cost me Nine Pence, it might have been brought or afforded for a Penny; and I know no body is the better for it but that Traitor JAMES Duke of York.

So you see, Gentlemen, he takes hold of every little Occasion, if he can but happen upon an Opportunity, such as this was in an open Coffee-house, to wreck his Malice upon his Royal Highness. And sure there can be no greater Imputation of Scandal brought upon any Man than this upon the Plaintiff. That the first and greatest Subject of the King of England's should be taxed with the greatest Crime in the Law, Disloyalty and Treason to his Sovereign. And so at once not only chargeth him with being perfidious to his only Brother, against that Affection which by Nature he is obliged to pay him, and which all that know any thing, cannot but observe to have always been extraordinary; but also touches that which is much dearer to him than his Life, his Honour, by charging him with the foulest of Crimes, Treason and Breach of his Allegiance, which as a Subject he owes to his Sovereign. And thus besides the Defendant's Confession by this Judgment you have the very Words proved that are in the Declaration.

The next Witness is one Mr. Whaley, and he gives you an Account of another Passage which I cannot but take notice of by the way, to shew you what a wonderful Christian Temper this Man is endued with. Mr. Whaley says, That being at the Bishop of Ely's House upon a Publick Festival either of Easter or Whitsuntide, (and he is sure it was one of those two, Because, says he, I never use to receive the Sacrament in London but upon one of those two Days; and therefore I take it upon me to say, it was one of those two Days that I heard these Words) Oates having, it seems, received the Holy Sacrament at the Bishop of Ely's Chapel with Mr. Whaley that Day. When a body would have thought, that if Mr. Oates would have been believed to be so hearty and pious a Protestant as he pretends to be, he should have remember'd that he ought, according to the Protestant Doctrine, to have left behind him, at his Approach to the Altar, all Malice and Rancour, and Ill-will and Hatred to every body: But you see what kind of Deportment his was.

For after such time as he had been at the Sacrament, he takes occasion without any Provocation to fall foul immediately upon His Royal Highness, giving him the Name of a Profligate Wretch, and then particularly he comes to say, The Duke of York was a Traitor. This Gentleman being concerned, as every honest and loyal Man ought to be, and I hope every good Subject is, and ever will be, to hear so great a Prince, the King's only Brother, so traduced and vilified, reproved him for it; but so far was he from taking the Correction due to his extravagant Tongue in a becoming manner, that he presently (as the Gentleman phraseth it) calls for his Myrmidons, two Fellows that he had along with him, to come to him; upon which the Gentleman was pleased to say to him, Nay, good Mr. Oates, you need not be in so very much Fear of yourself as to call for your Men, no body here intends you any harm. Nay certainly, Mr. Oates did apprehend himself to be secure from all manner of Correction, or he would never have been so impudent to speak such Words.

But you will no doubt take notice, as all Men cannot but do, of what an excellent Gospel-Spirit, what a delicate Christian Temper the Man is of, after the receiving the Sacrament, that very Morning to come and belch out such extravagant Words of Calumny and Reproach.

And it seems this Person had obtained to make such a wonderful Figure in the World, that every body was afraid to speak to him; for you hear what the Witness says when he came to beg the Bishop of Ely's Pardon for being so loud and hot at his Table; the Bishop gave him Thanks for it, and told him, None of us dared to speak to him. Such a considerable Man hath he been, that he might rail against the King, and the Duke, and the Government without Controul. He was got into such a Post that no body durst meddle with him, but he must have liberty to say any thing of any body. To what an height of Corruption were we grown, that we could suffer such a Fellow's Insolence, at which no Man living, that has any spark of Modesty or Loyalty left in him, but must blush and tremble.

Then they produce to you one Mr. Johnson, who gives you an Account, that after some Discourse between him and the Defendant Oates, about the Duke of York, he immediately told Johnson, That the Duke was either to be hanged or banished; it seems he was so ill a Man in his Eye, but of the two, hanging was the fitter for him. So the Doctor sheweth what a wonderful kindness and Affection he has for the Duke, and what Thoughts he has of his great Deserts.

Mr. Bowring is the next Witness, and he comes and tells you, That the Doctor could not be prevailed with to dine with the Gentlemen of the Parish of Foster-Lane, because some of them had dined with the Duke, which he calls Dining with the Devil. It seems he made as tho' he would preach there to them, he got up into the Pulpit and took a Text, and pretended to preach, and if he would have preached according to the Duty of a Church of England Divine, he was by that to have preached not only Obedience and Submission to Authority; but Respect to Superiors, and Charity among all Subjects towards one another; and if he did preach it, it was worse in him not to practise it. But you see after he had performed his painful laborious Preachment, after he had taken such a wonderful deal of pains, as no doubt he did in instructing his Auditors, what his Language is in Answer to a Civil Invitation to Dinner by the Church-Wardens: Have any of you dined with York at the City Feasts? And they not answering; but being silently amazed at the impertinent Impudence of the Question, why truly he would not dine with those that had dined with the Devil. It seems His Royal Highness had been pleased to honour some Societies of Loyal Men in the City of London with his Company at some Entertainments they made, and that is a great Offence to the Defendant; and as for those that had received that Royal Favour from His Highness, he takes notice of them as such whom he would neither eat nor drink with, for truly they had eaten and drank with the Devil; but immediately the Doctor, in his great Zeal and wonderful Concern for the Protestant Religion, broke up from the Company, would neither eat nor drink with them, but chose rather to dine at a private Brasier's by London-Wall; a properer Place in good Truth for him, than any such Conversation they offer'd him.

Then further to shew what mean Thoughts he had of the Plaintiff, Mr. Fairfax he comes and testifies, That there being some Talk of a Presentment or Indictment against the Duke of York by the Grand Jury here, but that meeting with a Disappointment, he met Oates, and asked him, What he would do, for, says he, now you are N.n-suited? That is, You have happened not to obtain the End that you designed: Oh, says Oates, No matter for that, that is all one, we will at him next Sessions; and for my part, I will have no more regard to him than I would to a Scavenger. Nay, and because they should see the very utmost of his Malice, and the low Thoughts he had of His Royal Highness, as if it had not been malicious enough to have compared him to a Scavenger of London or Westminster, no, that was a Station too honourable for him in his Thoughts, but he must necessarily be compared to a Scavenger of Kent-street; which we all know to be one of the meanest, filthiest, and most beggarly Parts of the Town.

The next piece of Evidence is, that which is given by one Mr. Philips; and when he came to him, he began to have some Reflections about the House of Commons and the Duke; and truly he did not doubt but he should see him at the Bar of the House of Commons; and it would be no Disparagement to him to come there, for there were a great many Members there that were as good Men or better than he. And even by this Fancy of his he would fain degrade His Royal Highness; for in case he had him in no other Consideration but as a Peer, he should know that no Peer of this Realm can be forced by any Vote or Order of the House of Commons to come to their Bar. But he had a mind to take off his very Privilege of Peerage, and it would be no lessening of his Greatness, since that House had in it many Members better Men than the Duke himself. I presume he meant some particular Friends of his own in that House.

The next Man is one Mr. Aphlock, and he tells you, That because he would engage all People into an Hatred of the Duke's Person, he must, as a thing of the greatest Consequence in order to it, make it be believed, that the Duke had a great Hand and Concern in the dismal Fire of London in Sixty-six, that thereby he might make him obnoxious to the Rancour and Malice of all that suffered in that dreadful Calamity. And with what handsome Expression he clothes it? He fired the City of London, he is the Son of a Whore, and we will have him hanged or sent out of England for it, whenever a Parliament meets.

So that here is not only a Personal Reflection, and Malicious Indignity done to His Royal Highness, but carries in it a great Reflection upon His Sacred Majesty himself in his Relations; and he is not contented only to belch out his Venom and Malice against those that are alive, but even against those that are dead too. For you see it is a most foul Imputation and Slander against Her late Majesty the Queen, Mother to our Sovereign and His Brother, by calling him the Son of a Whore; which is an Expression of that impudent and insolent Nature, as is not fit to be mentioned in a Civil Government.

These things I think myself obliged to take notice of for Example's sake, and to induce all People to consider to what a height of Corruption we were grown, when such Scoundrel Fellows as this dare to take such base Words into his Mouth, of the Royal Family.

Then comes Captain Cressett, and he gives you an Account, That when His Royal Highness and the Dutchess were going last to Scotland, as the Captain return'd from the Duke's Lodgings, he met with the Defendant, who fell upon him, What, you have been with JAMES? It seems he was one of his intimate Acquaintance, and very familiar he was with his Name. Indeed a Man would have thought, if in case he had spoke as one Man ought to speak of another, that he had been speaking of one of his Myrmidons, and it would have been a very hard matter to have known who else he meant by that familiar Appellation. Says the Captain, What James? Why York. And he was very kind that he gave him that Addition to let him know what JAMES he meant; but when the Captain chid him, and told him, Sure you might either say the Duke of York, or His Royal Highness; then immediately, instead of that, he flies out, He is a Papist, he is a Traitor, and I hope to live to see him hang'd, and you will go near to lose your Reputation if you go so often thither.

So that I perceive, if he will not be advised by this Gentleman, he should lose all his Credit; and yet I presume it is wonderfully for the Advantage of Mr. Cressett, to lose the Credit he could get by any Characters or Commendations such an one as he could give him.

Then Captain Cressett kindly advised him to take care of injuring his Party by his Passion and his indecent Behaviour, and told him, it would turn to his Prejudice at last. And truly now, I think, if all his Party were in his Condition, and made to smart for the Lavishness of their Tongues, I think it were a good Accomplishment of his Prophecy, and if we were rid of them, we should be more at Peace. And we may without offence hope to see that sooner, than what the Defendant says he hoped to see.

The next is Sir William Jennings, who tells you of a Passage at the Parliament at Oxford, which shews his wonderful Gospel and Christian Temper. When a Company of Gentlemen were met together to drink a Glass of Wine, and were wishing Health and Long Life to His Sacred Majesty, His Royal Highness, and the Royal Family, he would not be contented to refuse the Glass, but to shew how wonderful a Christian Spirit he was of, and to evidence his true Protestant Charity (and by his Carriage who was one of the Heads of the Faction, we may guess at the Temper of all the Party) he cries out, He has ruined the Nation, and if there be any better Place in Hell than other, I hope the Devil will preserve it for him.

I presume his great Conversation with him he spoke of, hath given him some Intelligence there is in Hell some hotter Places than others, and who they are reserved for. But, Gentlemen, I speak not this that I think any thing that is thus proved by the by doth in the least aggravate the Damages, for the Words in the Declaration are as bad as bad can be; but to let you see the Disposition of this Man that has been so much admired and courted.

After him comes Mr. Warcup, who tells you, he was not in the Room with Oates when the last Words were spoken; but coming in immediately after, they all told him the same Words, and he afterwards meeting with Oates, and reproving him for his indecent Behaviour and Expression, instead of any Remorse or Concern that he had upon him, by reason of his having spoken such Words, he doth still add to it, The Duke of York is a Traitor, he is in the Plot; and because you take his Part you are a Yorkist, and we will be even with you for it at one time or another. So he threatens him only for asking him why he behaved himself in such an indecent manner towards His Royal Highness.

The last Witness Mr. Chapman, is produced to shew what Mind he continues in. After all this is past, and a body would have thought he might by this time have been brought to some Consideration and Submission to Authority; yet you see how the Man is. The Witness tells you since the beginning of this Term, the Declaration being delivered, and by the Course of the Court he ought to Plead within such a Time, the Attorney goeth to him for a Plea, in order to make his Defence if he could in the Action now before you, but he lets Judgment go by Default; and so far is he from repenting of what he had formerly done, that he persists in it, and tells him, Are you the DUKE's Attorney? Yes. *Will, I care not a Farthing for the DUKE nor his Attorney neither; it may be I may be in here for 100,000*l.* (and that I believe is one of the truest Things he ever spoke in his Life) but suppose I be, I do not doubt but when a Parliament meets, a Time will come, when some other People may come in my Place.* But truly since he has declared his Hopes, I think it may not be amiss for us to declare our's too; and for my Part, to say I hope I shall never see such a Parliament.

Mr. Under-Sheriff. Lay your Heads together, Gentlemen, and consider of your Verdict.

They did so standing at the Bar.

Mr. Under-Sheriff. Are you all agreed of your Verdict?
Omnes. Yes.

Mr. Under-Sheriff. Who shall say for you?

Omnes. Foreman.

Mr. Under-Sheriff. What Damages do you find?

Sir Charles Lee. Full Damages, an Hundred Thousand Pounds.

Mr. Under-Sheriff. What Costs?

Sir Charles Lee. Twenty Shillings.

Which VERDICT being Recorded in an Inquisition intended, taken under the Hands of all the Jury, was afterwards annexed as the Return to the Writ of Inquiry.

CXXX. *The Trial of THOMAS ROSEWELL, * a Dissenting Teacher, at the King's-Bench, for High-Treason, November 18, 1684. Mich. 36 Car. II.*

Die Jovis, 23 Oct. An. Dom. 1684.

THIS Day, being the first of the Term, Mr. Attorney-General moved the Court of King's-Bench for an Habeas Corpus, directed to the Keeper of the Gatehouse, to bring up the Body of Thomas Rosewell, Clerk, to be arraigned upon an Indictment of High-Treason, found against him at a late Sessions of Oyer and Terminer, held at Kingston in the County of Surrey; and it was desired returnable to Morrow, but was not taken out till that Day, returnable immediatè, and upon Saturday it was returned.

Die Sabbati, 25 Oct. 1684. B. Regis.

Dominus Rex vers. Rosewell.

THIS Day Mr. Rosewell was brought upon the Writ of Habeas Corpus, to the Bar of the Court of King's-Bench, and was thus Arraigned:
Cl. of Cr. Thomas Rosewell, Hold up thy Hand. [Which he did.]
 Thou standest indicted by the Name of Thomas Rosewell, late of the Parish of Rotherhith, in the County of Surrey, Clerk; For that thou; as a false Traitor, against the most Serene and most excellent Prince our Sovereign Lord Charles the Second, by the Grace of God, King of England, Scotland, France, and Ireland, Defender of the Faith, &c. thy Supreme and natural Lord; not having the Fear of God in thy Heart, nor weighing the Duty of thy Allegiance; but being moved and seduced by the Instigation of the Devil; the cordial Love, and true, due and natural Obedience, which a true and faithful Subject of our said Sovereign Lord the King doth, and of right ought to bear towards him, altogether withdrawing; and contriving and intending to disturb the Peace and common Tranquillity of this his Kingdom of England, and to sow Sedition and Rebellion within the Kingdom, and to depose our said Sovereign Lord the King from the Stile, Honour and Regal Name of the Imperial Crown of this Realm, and to bring our said Sovereign Lord the King to Death and final Destruction, the 14th Day of September, in the 36th Year of the Reign of our said Sovereign Lord the King that now is, at the Parish of Rotherhith aforesaid, in the County of Surrey aforesaid; didst propose, compass and imagine to sow Sedition, and raise Rebellion against our said Sovereign Lord the King, within this Kingdom of England, and to make a miserable Slaughter among the Subjects of our said Sovereign Lord the King, and to cause our said Sovereign Lord the King to be deposed from the Regal State, Title, and Honour of the Imperial Crown of this Realm, and to put to Death, and final Destruction, our said Sovereign Lord the King; and the Government of this his Kingdom of England at thine own Will and Pleasure to change and alter; and the State of this Kingdom of England, in all its Parts well order'd and constituted, to overthrow and subvert; and to levy War against our said Sovereign Lord the King, within this Kingdom: And to complete thy said most wicked Treasons, and traitorous Purposes, and Imaginations; and to raise Discord between our said Sovereign Lord the King and his People, Thou the said Thomas Rosewell, the aforesaid 14th Day of September, in the 36th Year aforesaid, at the Parish aforesaid, in the County aforesaid; falsely, unlawfully, seditiously, maliciously and traitorously, in a certain unlawful Assembly, and in the Presence and Hearing of divers Subjects of our said Sovereign Lord the King, then and there unlawfully and seditiously, and against the Laws of this Land, assembled and gathered together; didst speak, assert and declare, That the People (meaning the Subjects of our said Sovereign Lord the King) made a flocking to our said Sovereign Lord the King, upon pretence of healing the King's-Evil, which he (meaning our said Sovereign Lord the King) could not do; but that we (meaning thyself, and other traitorous Persons, Subjects of our said Lord the King) are they to whom they (meaning the Subjects of our said Lord the King) ought to flock, because we (meaning thyself, and the said other traitorous Persons) are Priests and Prophets, that by our Prayers can heal the Delours and Grievs of the People. We (meaning the Subjects of our said Sovereign Lord the King) have had two wicked Kings (the most Serene Charles the First, late King of England, and our said Sovereign Lord the King that now is, meaning) together, who have permitted Popery to enter in under their Noses; whom (meaning the said Charles the First, late King of England, and our said Sovereign Lord the King that now is) we can resemble to no other Person but to most wicked Jeroboam: And that if they, (meaning the said evil-disposed Persons then and there, so as aforesaid with thee unlawfully assembled, and gathered together)

would stand to their Principles, thou (meaning thyself) didst not fear; but they (meaning thyself, and the said evil-disposed Persons) would overcome their Enemies, (meaning our said Sovereign Lord the King and his Subjects) as in former Times, with Rams-horns, broken Platters, and a Stone in a Sling; against the Duty of thy Allegiance, against the Peace of our Sovereign Lord the King, his Crown and Dignity, and against the Form of the Statute in that Case made and provided. How say'st thou, Thomas Rosewell; Art thou guilty of this High-Treason whereof thou standest indicted, and hast been now arraigned, or not Guilty?

Mr. Ros. My Lord, I humbly crave the Favour to speak a Word.

Mr. Just. Hol. What is it you would say, Sir? You must plead.

Mr. Ros. My Lord, my Charge is very high; and I bless my God, I am not conscious to myself of any Guilt as to those Things that you have heard read, and charged upon me—

Mr. Just. Hol. If you will Plead, Sir, to this Indictment, so; that is all you have to do now.

Mr. Ros. My Innocence is my great Comfort under the God of Heaven, who knows they have laid to my Charge Things that I know not. I do protest my Abhorrence of these Things alledged to be said by me against my Sovereign, whom I honour in my Heart, and daily pray for; I bless my God for it.

Mr. Just. Hol. I hope then your Innocence will clear you. But we have nothing to do now but to take your Answer to this Question, Whether you are Guilty, or not Guilty, of what you stand indicted for?

Mr. Ros. I humbly crave your Lordship's Patience a little. Pray, my Lord, give me Leave—

Mr. Just. Hol. Sir, you will be heard whatever you have to say, at the time of your Trial.

Mr. Ros. Pray hear me a few Words, my Lord; I would not trespass upon your Patience; I have but a few Words to say.

Mr. Just. Walcot. You must plead, Guilty, or not Guilty, first.

Mr. Ros. My Lord, I beseech you—

Mr. Just. Hol. Sir, We cannot hear you in a Case of so great weight and moment as this, till you have Plead: You will have time enough at your Trial to make your Defence; and all we can do now is to take your Plea of Guilty, or not Guilty.

Mr. Ros. May it please your Honours, You are sensible of my great Weakness and Ignorance in Matter of Law, and Things of this Nature; I therefore humbly beg I may have Counsel to assist me in this Business.

Mr. Just. Walcot. If there be any thing of Matter of Law doth arise upon your Trial, the Court will assign you Counsel.

Mr. Just. Hol. We cannot assign you Counsel at present, for we have nothing to assign it upon. If there do any Question of Law arise in your Case, then the Court will (as they are bound to do) take care of you, that you suffer no Prejudice for want of the Assistance of Counsel; and in Matters of Fact upon your Trial, the Court are of Counsel for you.

Mr. Ros. I humbly thank you, my Lord: I hope you will pardon my Weakness and Ignorance. I crave the Favour to have a Copy of my Indictment.

Mr. Just. Hol. We cannot allow it. You cannot be ignorant of that, it has been denied in many Cases of late.

Mr. Just. Walcot. We cannot grant it, except Mr. Attorney will consent to it.

Mr. Just. Hol. You must positively say Guilty, or not Guilty. Sir Samuel Astry, call him to his Plea.

Cl. of Cr. How say'st thou, Art thou Guilty, or not Guilty?

Mr. Just. Hol. Look you, Sir, you shall not be straitned, you shall have convenient Time to consider what Defence you have to make. In the mean time, we have nothing to say, but to know of you what you Plead; Guilty, or Not Guilty.

Mr. Att. Gen. If you desire to have the Words read again to you, you shall. Sir Robert Sawyer.

Mr. Just. Hol. Ay, with all our Hearts.

Mr. Ros. I thank you, Sir, and my good Lords. I desire, if you please, to have it read in Latin.

Mr. Just. Hol. Read it in Latin.

[Which was done.]

Cl. of Cr. How say'st thou, Art thou Guilty, or not Guilty?

Mr. Just. Hol. Now what do you say to it. Are you Guilty, or not Guilty? for indeed we cannot spend our Time impertinently, we have other Business. Here is a Question you ought to make a direct Answer to, one way or other.

Mr. Ros. My Lord, I humbly crave the Favour it may be read once more in English.

Mr. Att. Gen. Sir Samuel Astry, Read the Words without the Innuendo's.

[Cl. of Cr. reads.] 'That the People made a flocking to the King, upon pretence of healing the King's Evil, which he could not do; but we are they to whom they ought to flock, because we are Priests and Prophets, who can heal their Grievs. We have now had two wicked Kings together, who have permitted Popery to enter under their Noses, whom we can resemble to no other Person, but to the most wicked Jeroboam: And if you will stand to your Principles, I do not fear but we shall be able to overcome our Enemies, as in former Times, with Rams-Horns, broken Platters, and a Stone in a Sling.'

Mr. Just. Holloway. Now you hear your Charge, both in Latin and English; Pray, therefore, let the Court know what you do Plead; Guilty, or not Guilty to it.

Mr. Ros. Not Guilty, my Lord; and I blefs my God for it.

Cl. of Cr. Culprit, How wilt thou be Tried?

Mr. Ros. By God, and my Country.

Cl. of Cr. God fend thee a good Deliverance,

Mr. Ros. These are Things that my Soul abhors, I thank my God.

Mr. Att. Gen. Mr. Justice Holloway, will you please to appoint some time for his Trial?

Mr. Just. Holloway. What time would you have, Mr. Attorney? When can you be ready, Mr. Rosewell?

Mr. Rosewell. I desire, my Lord, it may be on the 19th of November.

Mr. Just. Holloway. What Day of the Week is that?

Mr. Clerk. Upon Wednesday.

Mr. Just. Holloway. Are there no Arguments appointed for that Day?

Mr. Clerk. There is a Jury of Northamptonshire for that Day.

Mr. Just. Holloway. Then it cannot be that Day.

Mr. Ros. Then, if it please your Honours, I desire it may be the next Day; upon Thursday.

Mr. Att. Gen. When it is most convenient for the Business of the Court.

Mr. Just. Holloway. Sir Samuel, you will see when it will be most convenient at the Return of the Venire.

Cl. of Cr. Must I return it?

Mr. Att. Gen. No; the Sheriff must: And the Course is to make it returnable the same Day the Cause is tried.

Mr. Ros. My Lord, I humbly desire I may have Counsel allowed to come to me.

Mr. Att. Gen. You can have no Counsel allowed you.

Mr. Ros. My Lord, I request that my Friends may be allowed to come to me in the mean time; I have been a Prisoner above this Month, and not permitted to see my Friends, nor they to see me.

Mr. Just. Holloway. What Friends would you have?

Mr. Ros. My Relations.

Mr. Just. Walcot. That Relations is a large Word.

Mr. Att. Gen. Truly, Sir, I think he may have liberty to discourse with any Person in the presence of the Keeper. I shall not oppose that.

Mr. Ros. Yes, my Lord, I desire no otherwise.

Mr. Just. Walcot. Who do you name to come to you?

Mr. Ros. I have poor Children, that desire and long to see me.

Mr. Just. Holloway. Who do you say, you would have come to you?

Mr. Ros. My Wife and Children, my Lord, that are my Bowels.

Mr. Att. Gen. In the presence of the Keeper I cannot oppose it.

Mr. Ros. Will your Lordship please to allow Counsel to come to me?

Mr. Just. Holloway. We cannot do it by Law. The Court is to be of Counsel for you when you come to your Trial. The Court will not suffer any thing to be done to your Prejudice against Law.

Mr. Ros. Is there any Statute, my Lord, that forbids the giving of Counsel?

Mr. Just. Holloway. The Law forbids the allowing of Counsel in Capital Causes; unless where Matter of Law doth arise.

Mr. Ros. My Lord, as I remember, Fitzharris had Counsel allowed him.

Mr. Just. Holloway. That was in a different Case, in a Matter where there were Special Pleadings; this is a General Issue.

Mr. Att. Gen. That was in a Matter of Law, that was insisted upon, but it is not so here: If this Gentleman had any Matter of Law to Plead, he should have Counsel assign'd him too. But, Sir, I think Tuesday the 18th of November will be the freest and most convenient Day.

Mr. Just. Holloway. Let it be that Day then.

Cl. of Cr. The Eighteenth of November is the Day of your Trial.

Mr. Ros. But, my Lord, was not Counsel allowed him before his Trial came on?

Mr. Just. Holloway. Yes; but that was upon a Special Plea, of a Matter in Law.

Mr. Ros. I hope you will consider my Case as of one that knows not the Law.

Cl. of Cr. Tuesday the Eighteenth of November is the Day.

Mr. Ros. My Lord, I humbly request the Favour that any Person that can speak of my Integrity, may come and testify for me.

Mr. Att. Gen. Ay, ay; you may have Subperna's out of the Office for any body who you will, that are to be Witnesses for you.

Mr. Just. Walcot. The Officers of the Court will do all things that are requisite and legal for you.

Mr. Just. Holloway. Then take back your Prisoner, Keeper.

Mr. Att. Gen. I do not know truly, whether the Practice of the Court is not to commit to the Marshalsea, being the Prison of the County of Surrey.

Cl. of Cr. Sir, it may be one or th' other way, as the Court thinks fit. As long as the King's-Bench sits in Middlesex, he may be Prisoner still in the Gate-house.

Keeper. Then the Rule of the Court is that he shall come agen then.

Cl. of Cr. Yes, he is, by Rule, to appear here the 18th of November next.

Whereupon he was carried back to the Gate-house.

Die Martis, Nov. 18, 1684.

THIS Day the Prisoner was brought, by Rule, from the Gate-house to the Bar of the King's-Bench Court to his Trial, at which all the Judges of the said Court were present.

Cl. of Cr. Thomas Rosewell, Hold up thy Hand. [Which he did.] Those Men that thou shalt hear called, and do personally appear, are to pass between our Sovereign Lord and thee, upon the Trial of thy Life and thy Death: If therefore thou wilt challenge them, or any of them, thou art to speak unto them as they come to the Book to be Sworn. Sir George Sheeres, Baronet.

Mr. Ros. My Lord, I would humbly crave the Favour of your Lordship, that I may have the Use of Pen, and Ink.

* Lord Chief Just. Ay, in God's Name, let him have Pen and Ink. * Sir George Jeffreys.

Cl. of Cr. Swear Sir George Sheeres, Baronet.

Mr. Ros. I beg I may have Pen, Ink and Paper, before he be Sworn.

L. C. J. Ay, let him.

Crier. Look upon the Prisoner. Sir, you shall well and truly try, and true deliverance make between our Sovereign Lord the King, and the Prisoner at the Bar, whom you shall have in Charge; and a true Verdict give according to your Evidence. So help you God.

[Jurat Sir George Sheeres.]

Mr. Ros. My Lord, I challenge him.

L. C. J. That you cannot do now he is Sworn.

Mr. Ros. I was surprized, my Lord; I did not know it.

L. C. J. I cannot help it, Mr. Rosewell, you must mind your Business. We cannot unswear him again. Go on.

Cl. of Cr. Sir St. John Broderick.

Crier. Look upon the Prisoner, Sir; You shall well, &c.

[Jurat Sir St. John Broderick.]

Mr. Ros. I challenge him.

L. C. J. You cannot, Sir; he is Sworn now.

Mr. Ros. I beg your Lordship's Pardon, I was surprized.

L. C. J. Let us not spend Time in such Talk as is to no Purpose; I tell you we cannot unswear him.

Mr. Ros. I desire, my Lord, my Challenge may be received, I was going to speak—

L. C. J. It cannot be after he is Sworn; we cannot make a New Law for you. Mind what was said to you; if you have a mind to challenge any body, you must challenge them before they come to be Sworn.

Cl. of Cr. Sir Robert Knightley.

L. C. J. Mind the thing you are about, Man: Speak now, if you have a mind to challenge him.

Mr. Ros. I do not challenge him.

Cl. of Cr. Then Swear him.

Crier. Look upon the Prisoner; &c.

[Jurat Sir Robert Knightley.]

L. C. J. Pray now mind the Thing you are about; you are looking about you for some private Mark, or Hint to be given you by some body, and so lose your Time of Challenging. You must challenge them as they come to the Book to be Sworn, and before they are Sworn.

Mr. Ros. I beg your Lordship's Pardon; I was minding to set down the Names in my Paper, because I am to take notice of those I challenge for their Number.

L. C. J. You shall have all the fair Advantages that the Law will allow; you shall have your full Number to challenge, which you may do peremptorily, and without Cause as to 35; and as many more as you can with Cause.

Mr. Ros. Is there any one to note the Number?

L. C. J. There shall be sure to be notice taken that you be not surprized that way. You shall have all fair Advantages, I tell you.

Mr. Ros. I humbly thank your Lordship.

Cl. of Cr. Sir William Elliot.

Crier. Look upon the Prisoner.

Mr. Ros. I challenge him.

Cl. of Cr. Sir George Woodroffe.

Mr. Ros. I challenge him.

Cl. of Cr. Sir Cornwall Bradshaw.

Mr. Ros. I challenge him.

Cl. of Cr. Sir Thomas Bludworth.

Mr. Ros. I challenge him.

Cl. of Cr. Anthony Thomas, Esq;

Crier. Look upon the Prisoner.

Mr. Ros. I do not challenge him.

Crier. You shall well and truly, &c.

[Jurat Anthony Thomas.]

Cl. of Cr. Francis Brend, Esq;

Mr. Ros. I challenge him.

Cl. of Cr. John Weston, Esq;

Mr. Ros. I challenge him.

Cl. of Cr. James Reading, Esq;

Mr. Ros. Is it Mr. Justice Reading of Southwark?

L. C. J. Do you challenge him or not? you may if you will.

Mr. Ros. My Lord, my Reason is, I have heard much of him, but never had an Opportunity to know him till now. I have no Exception against him.

L. C. J.

L. C. J. Then swear him.
 Cl. of Cr. Thomas Newton, Esq;
 Mr. Ros. I challenge him.
 Cl. of Cr. Thomas Vincent, Esq;
 Mr. Ros. I challenge him.
 Cl. of Cr. Ambrose Muschamp, Esq;
 Mr. Ros. I challenge him.
 Cl. of Cr. Ralph Freeman, Esq;
 Mr. Ros. I challenge him.
 Cl. of Cr. Joseph Reeves, Esq;
 Mr. Ros. I challenge him.
 Cl. of Cr. Anthony Rawlins, Esq;
 Mr. Ros. I do not challenge him. [He was sworn.]
 Cl. of Cr. Thomas Overman, Esq;
 Mr. Ros. I have no Exception against him. [He was sworn.]
 Cl. of Cr. George Meggot, Esq;
 Mr. Ros. I challenge him.
 L. C. J. Crier, Be sure you bid them look upon the Prisoner; and the Prisoner look upon them, that he may see what he does.
 Crier. I do so, my Lord.
 Cl. of Cr. Samuel Lewin, Esq;
 Mr. Ros. I have nothing to say against him. [He was sworn.]
 Cl. of Cr. Lawrence Marsh, Esq;
 Mr. Ros. My Lord, I desire to know how many I have challenged.
 L. C. J. He shall tell you. Count them.
 Cl. of Cr. Twelve. What say you to Mr. Marsh?
 Mr. Ros. I challenge him.
 Cl. of Cr. Ambrose Brown, Esq;
 Mr. Ros. I challenge him.
 Cl. of Cr. John Halsley, Esq;
 Mr. Ros. I challenge him.
 Cl. of Cr. John Auburn, Esq;
 Mr. Ros. I challenge him.
 Cl. of Cr. Henry Flood, Esq;
 Mr. Ros. I challenge him.
 Cl. of Cr. John Parsons, Esq;
 Mr. Ros. I challenge him.
 Cl. of Cr. John Pettyward, Esq;
 Mr. Ros. I do not challenge him. [He was sworn.]
 Cl. of Cr. Richard Coldham, Esq;
 Mr. Ros. I do not challenge him. [He was sworn.]
 Cl. of Cr. Robert Sanders, Esq;
 Mr. Ros. I challenge him.
 Cl. of Cr. John Heather, Esq;
 Mr. Ros. I do not challenge him. [He was sworn.]
 Cl. of Cr. John Austin, Esq;
 Mr. Ros. Pray, Sir, doth this make Twelve; if he be sworn?
 Cl. of Cr. Yes, Sir.
 Mr. Ros. Then I do not challenge him. [He was sworn.]
 Cl. of Cr. Crier, count these. Sir George Sheers:
 Crier. One, &c.
 Cl. of Cr. John Austin.
 Crier. Twelve. Good Men and true, stand together and hear your Evidence.

The Twelve Sworn were These:

J U R Y.

Sir George Sheers,	James Reading,	John Pettyward;
Sir St. John Broderick,	Anthony Rawlins,	Richard Coldham;
Sir Robert Knightley,	Thomas Overman,	John Heather, and
Anthony Thomas,	Samuel Lewin,	John Austin.

Cl. of Cr. Thomas Rosewell, Hold up thy Hand. [Which he did.] Gentlemen, you of the Jury, look upon the Prisoner, and hearken to his Cause. He stands indicted by the Name of Thomas Rosewell, &c. (Prout) in the Indictment, mutatis mutandis.---Upon this Indictment he hath been Arraigned, and thereunto hath pleaded not Guilty; and for his Trial hath put himself upon God and his Country, which Country you are. Your Charge is to enquire whether he be Guilty of this High Treason, in manner and form as he stands Indicted, or not Guilty. If you find him guilty, you are to enquire what Goods or Chattels, Lands or Tenements, he had at the Time of the High Treason committed, or at any Time since, to your Knowledge. If you find him not guilty, you are to enquire whether he fled for it; if you find that he fled for it, you are to enquire of his Goods and Chattels as if you had found him guilty. If you find him not Guilty, and that he did not fly for it, you are to say so, and no more, and hear your Evidence. Crier, make Proclamation.

Crier. O yes, O yes, O yes! If any one can inform my Lords the King's Justices, the King's Serjeant, the King's Attorney-General, or this Inquest now taken, of the High-Treason whereof the Prisoner at the Bar stands indicted, let them come forth, and they shall be heard: And all manner of Persons that are bound to give Evidence on the behalf of our Sovereign Lord the King against the Prisoner at the Bar, let them come forth and give their Evidence; for now the Prisoner stands at the Bar upon his Deliverance: Or they forfeit their Recognizance.

Mr. Phipps. May it please your Lordship, and you Gentlemen of the Jury---

Mr. Ros. Hold! Hold! I crave the Favour that the Indictment may be read in Latin.

L. C. J. Ay, with all my Heart, let it be read in Latin.

Mr. Ros. My Lord, I humbly crave leave to speak a Word or two. [Which was done.]

L. C. J. What would you have?

Mr. Ros. I beg your Patience for a Word or two. I find, my Lord, as I told my Lords upon the Day of my Arraignment, that my Charge is very black and high: And truly if I were guilty of those Things that are laid to my Charge---

VOL. III.

L. C. J. You are now going to be tried for them. I hope you are innocent.

Mr. Ros. I humbly thank your Lordship: I beg you would hear me but a Word or two.

L. C. J. You must keep up the Method of Proceedings, your time is not yet come. What is it you would have?

Mr. Ros. My Lord, my Soul abhors these Things; I thank my God for it. I was going to speak to your Lordship, to know whether the Words of a Natural or a Mad-man be Treason in Law.

L. C. J. No.

Mr. Ros. Then, my Lord, the Ground of the Question is this, I find by Recollection and Consideration of the Words laid to my Charge, that my malicious Enemies have accused me of what any Man in his Senses---

L. C. J. This is not proper; Mr. Rosewell, at this time; for this is but an Anticipation. You must hear what is first proved against you. We must keep up to the Forms of Law, you shall have your full time to be heard whatsoever you will say for yourself; but you must not anticipate the Cause with previous Discourses.

Mr. Ros. I would only assert my own Innocency.

L. C. J. Not yet; you must not do it, nor you shall not do it. When it comes to your turn to speak, you shall have liberty enough to make your Defence as long as you will. Go on, Sir.

Mr. Phipps. May it please your Lordship, and you Gentlemen that are sworn: The Prisoner at the Bar, Thomas Rosewell, stands indicted, That he, as a false Traitor, not having the Fear of God before his Eyes, but being moved and seduced by the Instigation of the Devil, and endeavouring to disturb the Peace and Tranquillity of the Kingdom, and to depose the King, the 14th of September in the 36th Year of this King, at the Parish of Rotherhith, in your County, did falsely, maliciously, and traitorously, purpose and imagine to raise a Rebellion within the Kingdom, and to deprive the King, and depose; and put him to Death and Destruction; and the Government to change and alter, and to levy War against the King within the Kingdom: And these wicked Purposes to bring to pass, he the said Thomas Rosewell, the said 14th of September in the Thirty-sixth Year aforesaid, at the Place aforesaid, falsely, unlawfully, maliciously, seditiously and traitorously, in a certain unlawful Assembly, then and there congregated, did say and declare; 'The People make a flocking to the King, upon Pretence of Healing the King's Evil, which he cannot do; but we are they to whom they ought to flock: For we are Priests, and Prophets, that can heal their Grievances. We have now had two wicked Kings together, who have permitted Poperie to come in under their Noses; and whom we can compare to none but the most wicked Jeroboam. But if they would stand to their Principles; he did not doubt, but they should overcome their Enemies, as in former Times, with Rams-horns, broken Platters, and a Stone in a Sling.' And this is laid to be against the Duty of his Allegiance, against the Peace of the King, his Crown and Dignity; and against the Form of the Statute in that Case made and provided. To this Indictment he has pleaded not guilty: If we prove him guilty of this Matter, you are to find him guilty.

Mr. Att. Gen. May it please your Lordship, and you Gentlemen of the Jury; these traitorous Words, that the Prisoner at the Bar is accused of, were spoken of in a Sermon, or Preachment at a Conventicle. And though the Gentleman does pretend to much Innocency; yet you will find, that in open Defiance of the Law, he takes upon him to preach against the Law, not only of the Land, but even against the Laws of Almighty God: For he takes upon him to be a Preacher against a Rule, than which nothing is more plain in all the Word of God, viz. 'That he should not speak Evil of Dignities, nor revile the Prince of his People.' He knows this to be the Rule of the Scripture; and yet in his constant Discourses, (as we shall prove) he makes it his Practice to revile the Government on all sides. And by these doings at this Day, Gentlemen, you will easily understand what the Designs of these Conventicles are; only to nurse up People in Sedition, and train them up to Rebellion; that they may be ready to break out into it when their Teachers advise them to it. We shall call our Witnesses, and prove to you, That this is, and has been the constant Terror of his Discourse, viz. Reviling of the Government; and there is almost no Text of Scripture, but, in his Way of perverting it, he has turned against the Government. We shall shew this to be the habitual Course and Practice of him who pretends to be so honest and so innocent a Man. Crier, Call Elizabeth Smith,---Hilton, and Farrar.

Then some of the Counsel at the Bar, being talking among themselves, the Lord Chief Justice reproved them for it.

L. C. J. Look you, Gentlemen, you must not have Interlocutions among yourselves. And you, Gentlemen of the Jury, I must tell you, If any one whisper any of you, you ought to acquaint the Court with it. It is your Duty to be directed by the Court, and the Evidence. Here is a Man's Life in Question, and that is a very weighty Thing: And you must not take any private Insinuations, but only hearken to your Evidence, and mind what is spoken publicly, that the Prisoner may be able to give Answer to it.

Mr. Ros. I humbly thank your Lordship.

Mr. Att. Gen. Where are Mrs. Hilton and Mrs. Smith?

[They were all sworn.]

Mr. Ros. I do humbly request one Favour of the Court.

L. C. J. What would you have?

Mr. Ros. I humbly beg they may be examined separatim.

L. C. J. They shall.

Mr. Ros. I humbly thank your Lordship.

L. C. J. Who do you begin withal, Mr. Attorney?

Mr. Jones. My Lord, we shall begin with Mrs. Smith.

6 M

L. C. J.

L. C. J. Then you must make way, that the other Witnesses may go out of hearing. You Crier, make way for them; and see that they be set where they may not hear.

[Which was done.]

Mr. Att. Gen. Come, Mrs. Smith, pray give my Lord and the Jury an Account whether you have been at any Meeting, where this Gentleman has been? Whether you know him? and what you heard of him?

Smith. I heard him say this—

L. C. J. Hold a little. What is this Woman's Name, Elizabeth Smith?

Mr. Att. Gen. Yes, my Lord. Were you by at any of his Conventicles?

Smith. Sir, I have been ever since the 20th of July, 'till that Day for which he was taken, but one Sunday.

Mr. Att. Gen. Give my Lord an Account of what you heard.

Smith. Yes, Sir.

L. C. J. Where was it that his Meeting-House was?

Smith. He had several Houses, private Houses and a publick House of his own.

L. C. J. Where? In what Place?

Smith. In Salisbury-street, near his own Dwelling.

L. C. J. Where is that?—Smith. In Rotherhith.

L. C. J. You were frequently there, you say?—Smith. Yes, my Lord.

L. C. J. What number of People might be there, as you guess?

Smith. I believe there might be Four Hundred People, or Three Hundred commonly.

L. C. J. What sort of People were they?

Smith. Men and Women, House-keepers.

L. C. J. Well, what did you hear him say?

Smith. I can give you an Account of his Sermons several Days.

L. C. J. Do so.

Smith. The first Notice that I took of any thing concerning the Government, was upon the 17th of August, and that was concerning His Majesty; and then in his Prayer after Sermon, he wished he might not offend God in not praying for the King; but that it might please God to open his Eyes, and the Times might turn.

Mr. Att. Gen. What other Things have you heard him say?

Smith. The next time that I heard him was the next Sunday again, and that was in Westlane, in a House there, and then he was speaking of Sodom and Gomorrhah, and he brought in this Proof, not doubting but if there had been ten righteous Persons, the City had not been destroy'd: But he did not mean Recorders, nor Lord-Mayors.

Mr. Ref. What Day was that, Mistress?

Smith. The 22d of August.

Mr. Att. Gen. Well, what did you hear him speak upon the Day in the Indictment, the 14th of September?

Smith. He said, The People made a flocking to the King, to cure the King's Evil, which he could not do; but, says he, we are they they should flock unto, for we are Priests and Prophets, that by our Prayers can cure their Grievances. He said, We have now had two wicked Kings together, which have permitted Popery to come in under their Noses, and could be compared to nothing but to most wicked Jeroboam. And then after he had preached a good while, again he said, If they would stand to their Principles, he did not fear but they should overcome their Enemies, as in former Times, with broken Platters, Rams-Horns, and a Stone in a Sling.

L. C. J. When was this?

Smith. This was upon the 14th of September.

L. C. J. Where was it?

Smith. At one Captain Daniel Weldy's House.

L. C. J. What is he, a Seaman?

Smith. Yes, and he pray'd for him, being then at Sea, and his Son both, who was ill.

L. C. J. How many do you think might be present there at that time?

Smith. There was a low Parlour full, and a little Room up six Steps; and where he preached was up one pair of Stairs, there was a large Room and a Garret.

L. C. J. Where did he stand?

Smith. In the Door-case of that Room, that the sound might go up and down.

L. C. J. How many People in number might there be, think you?

Smith. I cannot tell, my Lord; a great many.

L. C. J. How many, as nigh as you can guess, or think?

Smith. Several Hundreds of them.

L. C. J. Do you know any of them? Were they People of any Quality?

Smith. Yes, I know a great many of them; several of them are in the Court, and about the Hall now.

L. C. J. Who stood at the Door and let you in?

Smith. One Mr. Paul Shed; and he was angry at my coming with Patents, for they made an Impression in the Ground, and gave notice to others, that there was Company there: And I promised him I would come no more with them.

Mr. J. Walcot. Was he Door-keeper? What is he?

Smith. A Brasier, I think.

Mr. J. Holloway. Had you any notice of a Conventicle that was to be there?

L. C. J. Ay; Tell us how you came thither?

Mr. Recorder. How came you to find it out that there Sir Thomas Jenner was a Meeting at such a Place?

Smith. At first I found it by dogging of People as they went along; and afterwards, there were People set commonly at a Place called Cherry-garden Stairs to give notice; and sometimes I asked there, and sometimes I went to Mr. Shed's House to enquire.

L. C. J. Shed, you say, was present there then?

Smith. Yes, he let me in.

L. C. J. What, he was the Man that managed the Conventicle. He was Clerk, I suppose; was he not?

Smith. I never heard him say Amen; but I have heard him expound in the Conventicle sometimes.

L. C. J. Oh, he was a Journeyman Preacher, it seems.

Mr. Recorder. Pray was there any store of Watermen and Seamen there?

Smith. Yes, abundance from Rotherhith, or thereabouts.

L. C. J. Which way came all the People that were there?

Smith. From Deptford and Rotherhith, and all thereabouts.

L. C. J. Was it near the Water-side?

Smith. Yes, not far from it.

L. C. J. Well, Mr. Attorney, have you any more Questions to ask her?

Mr. Att. Gen. No, I think not. Mrs. Smith, you have heard him, you say, at other Days; how did he use to treat the Government in his preaching at other times?

Mr. Ref. My Lord, I beseech your Lordships to tell me whether these Questions are proper to be put, it not relating to the Matter that I am accused of?

L. C. J. Yes, yes, to give an Account of the Disposition of your Mind; very proper as can be.

Mr. Ref. Because it is not part of my Charge, and I cannot be prepared to answer it.

L. C. J. When the King's Counsel have done with her, you may ask her any Questions; but you must let them go on first.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, it is charged that he spoke these Words with a traitorous, malicious Mind; and what better Evidence of such a Mind than his usual Discourses?

Smith. The 31st of August, I heard him preach at Paul Shed's House; and there he preached that there was a certain great Man, that lived at the Upper-end of Grace-church-street, about this time Eighteen Years ago; I name no body, says he, you all know him whom I mean: And there came a certain poor Man to him; he was not a poor Man neither, but a Carpenter by Trade, one that wrought for his Living, a labouring Man; and told that great Man, if he would take his Advice, he would tell him how to quench the Fire; but he pish'd at it, and made light of it, and would not take his Advice. Which if it had not been for that great Man, and the Lord Mayors and Sheriffs that have been since, neither that Fire in London, nor the Fire at Wapping, nor the Fire at Southwark, had gone so far, or come to what they did.

L. C. J. There was a great Man that lived at the Upper-end of Grace-church-street!—Who did he mean by that?

Mr. Recorder. He meant, we suppose, Sir Thomas Bloodworth, that was Lord-Mayor at the Fire-Time.

L. C. J. He did not live there then.

Mr. Recorder. It seems he said so.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray Mrs. Smith, let me ask you one Question. How far were you off from him; and where did you sit this 14th Day of September, when you heard him say those Words you speak of?

Smith. I sat upon the Bed, and he was standing at the Door.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, we have done with this Witness at the present.

L. C. J. Now, Mr. Rosewell, if you will, you may ask her what Questions you please.

Mr. Ref. My Lord, I was before going to beg your Pardon for my Weakness, being altogether unacquainted with these Things; and that you would look upon me as one that is inops consilii, and pardon any thing that comes from me impertinently. I cannot speak to her as a Lawyer to sift her, and search out the Truth; will your Lordship give me leave to speak to her as a Divine?

L. C. J. Ask her what Questions you will, but we will not have any of your Preachments here. You must consider where you are, you are not now in your Pulpit, but at the Bar; I assure you we do not intend to make a Conventicle of the King's-Bench Court.

Mr. Ref. My Lord, I meant only to endeavour to convince her, by putting some Questions, like a Divine, to her. For I pity them, tho' they envy me; and I bless my God, have pray'd for them many times since my Imprisonment.

L. C. J. Well, well; do not stand to commend yourself now, this is not your time of making your Defence: Only, if you will ask this Witness any Questions, you may.

Mr. Ref. You are under an Oath, Mistress.

Smith. I am so, Mr. Rosewell.

Mr. Ref. Are you sensible what an Oath is, and the great Obligation you are under by it to testify nothing but the Truth? As you will answer it to the great God—

L. C. J. Look you, Mr. Rosewell, ask her any Questions to the Business that she has here testified; but do not preach to her. It is not your Work to Catechise the Witnesses, that is the Duty of the Court, and we shall, no doubt, take care to do our Duty. And I will tell her, to save your Preachment, she is in the Presence of the great God of Heaven and Earth, before whom we must appear at the Great Day of Judgment, to give an Account of every Word we speak. And you are under an Oath, and if in Case you tell one Tittle of a Lye in your Testimony against the Prisoner at the Bar, who stands now to be tried for his Life, it will be just with the Great God to sink you down into Hell-Fire immediately. Therefore, I require you, upon your Oath, not to speak one Word but what is Truth.

Smith. My Lord, I assure you, I will rather say less, than add any one Tittle.

L. C. J. Mr. Rosewell, ask her what you will, but do not give yourself, nor us, the trouble of a Preachment to teach her the Obligation of an Oath; for she very well knows, it seems, what it is, and says she will rather speak less than more than the Truth.

Mr. Ref. I humbly thank your Lordship for what you have said to her. Mrs. Smith, Pray was you at Rotherhith the 14th Day of September?

Smith.

Smith. Yes, that I was.

Mr. Ref. Did you come alone? or who came with you?

Smith. Mrs. Hilton came along with me, and another Gentlewoman, and Mr. Shed let us in all together.

Mr. Ref. Who is that Mrs. Hilton?

Mr. Att. Gen. You will see her by and by, Mr. Refswell.

Mr. Ref. Where did you meet together?

Smith. Mrs. Hilton lay with me all Night, and we were together the Day before.

Mr. Ref. What time did you come thither, pray, Mistress?

Smith. I came thither before Seven of the Clock, before you came, Sir.

Mr. Ref. And I pray whose House came you to at Rotherhithe?

Smith. We were informed it was Captain Weldy's House.

Mr. Ref. Are you sure it was his House?

Smith. As they did tell us, it was Captain Daniel Weldy's.

Mr. Ref. I pray, Mistress, what Room were you in there?

Smith. We were up one pair of Stairs. There is a little Room we come at sooner; but we were in the Room with the Bed; and there was one Mr. Atkinson there that was in Mourning, and there were two or three Boys of his with him that sat upon the Bed, and their Shoes were plucked off, that they might not dirt the Bed; and I gave him his Boy's Shoes from under the Bed.

Mr. Ref. Pray where did I stand, Mistress, do you say?

Smith. In the Door-Cafe.

L. C. J. What Boy is that you speak of?

Smith. Two Boys that came in with one Mr. Atkinson; his Relations, I suppose they were.

Mr. Ref. Pray how did the Service begin?

Smith. You took your Text out of the 21st of Genesis; that was the Chapter, to the best of my Remembrance.

Mr. Ref. But I ask you, Mrs. how did the Worship, the Service begin?

L. C. J. You mean your Prayer, you do not use to call it Service.

Smith. You made a Prayer.

Mr. Ref. Was it begun with a Chapter, or a Psalm, or how?

Smith. There was no Psalm; a long Prayer you made, as you used to do formerly.

Mr. Ref. How long was that?

Smith. It was always used to be about three quarters of an Hour long.

Mr. Ref. Was there any Chapter read?

Smith. There was no Chapter before you took your Text, as I heard, and I was there before you.

Mr. Ref. Upon what Occasion then were these Words spoke, if there was no Chapter read?

Smith. I say there was none till you took your Text, and then you spoke those Words.

Mr. Ref. But how came those Words in?

Smith. You always took a whole Chapter, and expounded all along.

Mr. Ref. A long Text for one Sermon, Mistress.

L. C. J. Yes, yes, We know you have a fine Way of Preaching.

Mr. Ref. Well, Mistress. Upon what Verse of the Chapter were these Words spoke, about flocking to the King to cure the King's Evil?

Smith. I cannot be punctual to the particular Verse.

L. C. J. Nay, I suppose you seldom keep to your Text. I am sure there was never a Verse in any Chapter that warranted the speaking of any such Words as those.

Smith. My Lord, I cannot be punctual to the particular Verse. It was within five or six Verses of the beginning, I believe.

Mr. Ref. Then upon what Occasion came in the Words about the two wicked Kings?

Smith. In Preaching you brought it in by other Proofs.

L. C. J. Why, Man, there can be no Occasion for speaking of those Words. You spoke them without any Occasion at all. No body can tell what Occasion you had to speak them.

Mr. Ref. But, my Lord, I suppose there may be some coherence in my Discourse. I would know how they were brought in?

L. C. J. Who can tell the Occasion? Do you ask me what Reason any Man has to speak Treason? I tell you there is none at all to be given for it.

Smith. One of your Proofs in your Preaching was concerning Dalilah and Sampson, and you brought in that Proof concerning the King's using of Women, it was out of the Judges. And he said he did not question, but that in the end the Whores would serve the King, as that Whore Dalilah did Sampson.

L. C. J. Was this at the same time, upon the same Day?

Smith. Yes, it was upon the 14th of September.

Mr. Ref. If it please you, my Lord, these are not Words that are charged in the Information—

L. C. J. You draw it upon yourself by your Questions.

Mr. Ref. If they were spoken, (upon that Hypothesis, I say, if they were spoken; but I deny the Thefis, I abhor the thoughts of them) I would know how they were brought in, under what Verse?

L. C. J. Ay, I take you right as to that, you do deny it; and they are not in the Indictment.

Smith. I cannot be punctual as to the Verse.

Mr. Ref. Pray upon what account did come in the two wicked Kings?

Smith. I cannot tell the Verse, truly.

Mr. Ref. How came in that about Jeroboam?

L. C. J. How can he tell how you bring in Treason?

Mr. Ref. My Lord—

L. C. J. Nay, pray, Sir, hear me a little. You shall have all the Liberty to defend yourself that the Law can allow of. We are accountable to the Law upon our Oaths to do Justice, and are as much accountable to Heaven for our Actions, as you or any Prisoner that comes to this Bar is to the Law for your Actions. But do you ask what Reason you spoke Treason for? I tell you no Reason can be given for it.

Mr. J. Hol. Do you think any of your Auditors can give an account of the Connection of your whole Sermon?

L. C. J. When you talk besides the Cushion, do you think any Man alive is able to give an account how you come to ramble and talk Treason?

Mr. Ref. Can you tell, Mistress, when that was spoken, of standing to their Principles, and their Rams'-horns, &c.

Smith. That was at the latter end of your Sermon.

L. C. J. When you had said there were two wicked Kings, then presently you were for standing to your Principles, and overcoming your Enemies.

Mr. J. Hol. It seems she was very intent upon your Sermon.

L. C. J. For my part, I wonder she can remember so much as she does. It is much she can remember such Stuff as this.

Mr. Ref. The God of Truth, my Lord, I hope will manifest the Truth. Pray, Mistress, were these Words spoken one just after another in my Discourse?

Smith. No, they were not; but they were all spoken at that time.

Mr. J. Hol. Have you done with her?

Mr. Ref. No, my Lord, I humbly beseech your Favour and Patience a little. Pray, Mistress Smith, did you write?

Smith. I did not write till I came home, and after I came home I did write it down. Several that were there did write down your Sermon.

Mr. Ref. Several of whom, do you mean?

Smith. Several of your Congregation, Sir.

Mr. Ref. Did your Companions write? And pray where did you first write down these Words?

Smith. After I came Home I set them down, Word for Word to a Title, as they were spoken, as near as I could remember what you spoke.

Mr. Ref. Was any body with you when you set them down?

Smith. Yes, my own Family saw me write them down; and the other Witness was with me; and afterwards we went to the Bull and Mouth, the Quaker's Meeting-House.

Mr. Ref. What other Witnesses were by when you set them down?

Smith. There was my Husband, my Apprentice, and my Child.

Mr. Ref. And did you set them down just exactly as you have sworn them upon this Indictment?

Smith. Yes, to the best of my Knowledge.

Mr. Ref. Upon your Oath, in the presence of the great God, did you set them down as they were spoken?

Smith. Yes, I tell you.

L. C. J. Ay, I would ask you that Question; Did you (I speak to you as in the Presence of the great God, and upon your Oath) set down his Words just as he spoke them in Substance?

Smith. Yes, I did to the same Substance as near as I could remember.

Mr. Ref. Pray what other Words were spoken between these Words in the Indictment, if they were not all spoken together?

Smith. One thing I do remember more that you said that Day. You said there was a Word they called Canting; but for your Part you did not understand what it meant, unless it were this; You said, you chanced to go by one of the great Churches; where peeping in, you saw a Man with a white Surplice, and the Organs were going, and they were canting, and singing the Litany, the Credo, and the Ten Commandments, with a Ha-ha-ha-ha-ha. For your part, you were ashamed to hear it; and this you said was all the Canting you knew.

Mr. Att. Gen. You will draw this upon yourself.

Mr. Ref. I am sorry to hear this indeed, my Lord.

L. C. J. So am I too, with all my Heart, I'll assure you.

Mr. Ref. You say you set down the Words the same Day, when you came Home?

Smith. Yes, I resolved so to do, when I came away from the Meeting, to write them down as soon as I came home.

Mr. Ref. Did you confer with any body about these Words?

Smith. Not till I came to a Justice of Peace, and discovered it.

Mr. Ref. What Justice of Peace was that whom you discovered it to?

Smith. The Recorder of London.

Mr. Ref. And you swear these were the Words that I spoke?

Smith. Yes, as near as I can remember.

L. C. J. If she swear the substantial part of them, it is enough, tho' the very exact Words she doth not swear: For the Words are laid in this Indictment in Latin, and by way of Assertion.

Mr. Ref. Your Lordship will pardon my Weakness, I am ignorant of the Law.

L. C. J. And we will take care you shall have nothing done to your Prejudice that is against Law.

Mr. Ref. I humbly thank your Lordship. Mistress Smith, upon your Oath, you say Mr. Shed was at that Conventicle?

Smith. Yes, he let me in at the Door, and was angry with me that I would come so near the Place with my Pattens; he said it might give occasion of Suspicion.

Mr. Ref. You were saying you heard him expound. Where was that, pray?

Smith. Yes, that I did, at Mr. Crookshanks's House; and I heard him another time—

Mr. Ref. What was the Day in August that you say you came first to hear me?

Smith. I do not say it was in August, but in July, that I came first to hear you, the 20th of July.

Mr. Ref. You say I preached in the Publick Meeting-Place; What Day was that, pray?

Smith. The 10th of August, to the best of my Remembrance; it was the fourth Sunday, as I remember, that I heard you there.

Mr. Ref. Have you not sworn against Conventicles in other Places?

Smith. Yes.

Mr. Ref. What Conventicles?

Smith. If my Lords please to ask me, I shall give an account.

Mr.

Mr. Ros. Have you, or have you not?
 Smith. Yes, several; tho' I never heard any thing spoken in any of them against the King, but at your's.
 Mr. Ros. Did you swear a Conventicle against one Mr. Hales?
 Smith. I swore it by Confession.
 Mr. Ros. Were you at that Conventicle?
 Smith. No, I was not, but I swore it by Confession.
 Mr. Ros. What day was that Conventicle?
 Smith. As they told us, it was the 13th of July.
 Mr. Ros. Was there any thing done upon that Conviction?
 Smith. Yes, he paid his Money that was set upon him, and never made any Appeal; his Wife confessed it.
 Mr. Ros. What other Conventicles have you been at?
 Smith. Concerning you, do you mean?
 Mr. Ros. No, any other Conventicles of the Fanatics that you have sworn against?
 Smith. I do not know whether that be a proper Question.
 Mr. Ros. What say you, Mistress Smith?
 L. C. J. No, no; that you must not ask her, that is to accuse herself.
 Mr. J. Hol. You must not ask her to any thing but that you stand here charged with.
 L. C. J. You must not ask her any thing that may make her obnoxious to any Penalty.
 Mr. J. Walcot. Do you ask her any other Questions?
 Mr. Ros. I will presently, my Lord, I beg your Patience.
 L. C. J. Ay, ay, take your own time.
 Mr. Ros. Pray, Mistress Smith, were you a Witness against a Conventicle at one Mistress Batho's?
 Smith. Yes, that I had by Confession of her own Mouth.
 Mr. Ros. Was there not some Money offer'd her—
 L. C. J. That is not to be asked, you must not ask her any Question that may make her accuse herself criminally.
 Smith. Never by me, Mr. Rosewell.
 Mr. Rosewell. I beg your Lordship's Pardon—
 L. C. J. I'll tell you the Reason for it, and it is that which ought to be satisfactory to you or any body. They are not bound to answer any Questions that you ask the Witnesses, whereby they charge themselves with any Crime, or by answering may subject themselves to any Penalty. Whether it be so, or no, you must not ask them, but prove it.
 Smith. I never did offer any, my Lord.
 Mr. Ros. I thought I might offer any thing against what she had sworn.
 L. C. J. Prove what you can in your Time; but do not ask her any such Questions. The Law is so, and the same for you as it is for every body else.
 Mr. Ros. Mistress Smith, you swear these Words were spoken in the Forenoon upon that place, the 21st of Genesis, one after another?
 Smith. Yes; those Words, as near as I can speak them, were spoken then.
 L. C. J. Are those the Words you heard at that time?
 Smith. In Substance they are, my Lord; as near as I can discover.
 Mr. Ros. I have no more Questions to ask her at present, my Lord.
 Mr. Att. Gen. Pray, Mistress Smith, since he has started such a Question; Have you been tamper'd with, and been offer'd any Money; and what, and for what?
 Smith. There came one Cartwright, and one Norton to me one Day, I cannot give an account exactly what Day it was; and first they spake to me about Mistress Batho's Business, and afterwards they fell into Discourse about Mr. Rosewell, and they told me, They wonder'd I would have my hand in any Man's Blood. Said I to them, Suppose you had heard what I did, what would you have done? Says Mr. Norton, you had better take 20 Guineas, and not appear against him, said he; not that any body that I know of that he is concerned with, will give you that Sum of Money, but you had better take it. Says I, What is the Truth no Money nor Gold shall buy me off from telling. What was Truth I would speak, and no more; and I had already given Evidence of it, and would not retract it. Said Mr. Cartwright then to me, But if you had not discovered it, no body else would. Said I, Yes, others heard it as well as I.
 Mr. Att. Gen. Has any body else tamper'd with you? Have you had any Letter sent to you?
 Smith. Nothing till Yesterday Morning: A Letter came then.
 Mr. Att. Gen. What was that?—Smith. I suppose my Lord saw it.
 Mr. Att. Gen. Ay, but you must tell the Jury what it was.
 Smith. One came to my Brother's, and brought a Letter thither, which I read over; and he said to my Brother, if I could be any ways Assistant to Mr. Rosewell in not coming in against him, I might have 200l. paid down To-morrow; not that Mr. Rosewell knew of it, or would give it me, but it was a wager that was laid. Some laid he would be hang'd, and some laid he would not; and so he said he would come and give me an account who it was that spoke to him.
 Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, we have done with her now. Call Mistress Hilton.
 Mr. Ros. Will your Lordship please to indulge me so far, that I may ask her another Question or two?
 L. C. J. What is it you would have, Sir?
 Mr. Ros. I desire her before she goes out to recollect one thing.
 L. C. J. Nay, nay, she shall not go away: If you have a mind to ask her any thing before she goes away, do so; or she shall come again, if you have any Questions to put to her.
 Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, she is big with Child, and cannot well crowd in and out.
 L. C. J. If she be with Child, then let her sit upon the Stool there.
 Mr. Ros. With your Lordship's Indulgence, I would ask Mistress Smith this Question; The Gentlewoman that was with you, Mistress Hilton I think you call'd her, did she agree with you as to the same Words, and as to Time and Place?

Smith. If you please to examine her, I suppose she will give you an account.

Mr. Ros. Then I would ask her this Question, with your Leave, my Lord; whether was that other Gentlewoman with you in the same Room?

Smith. Yes, she was, and sat upon the Bed with me, and I pulled her by the Sleeve when the Words were spoken, to take notice of them.

Mr. Att. Gen. Come, Mistress Hilton, give my Lord and the Jury an account; have you been at this Conventicle at any time, and what have you heard there?

Hilton. I came to Mistress Smith's on Saturday Night, and on Sunday Morning I went with her to this Place; I was never there before in my Life, they said it was one Daniel's house, one Captain Daniel's; it was near West-Lane in Rotherhith. And when we came there, there was one that Mistress Smith knew, that stood at the Door, they call him Paul Shed, a little Man: And when we came to the Door, he said to us, Pull off your Pattens, says he, for they will give too much Occasion of Distrust of People's coming: So we pulled off our Pattens, and said we would take care the next time. When we came in, we went through a kind of a Hall, and when we came there into the Hall, there were a little Parlour against it: We went up the Stairs, and when we came up Stairs, there were two more Rooms; that Room we came into was hung with sad-colour'd Paper, and upon the Left-hand there stood a Sweetwood kind of Chest, a little Cabinet, and a little Glass over that. Mr. Rosewell came, and stood at the Entrance in of the Door; so there was a little Child in bed when we came up, and we sat down on the other side of the Bed; and the Child was taken out of the Bed presently afterwards. Mr. Rosewell preached upon the 20th or 21st Chapter of Genesis, I cannot be positive which of them, but one of them it was—

Mr. Ros. But upon your Oath cannot you tell which it was?

L. C. J. You must not interrupt her, Sir; you shall have your time to ask her what you will.

Hilton. It was the 20th or 21st of Genesis, I will not be positive which of them it was. But the thing was as to Abraham and Sarah; that was the Contents of the Chapter that Mr. Rosewell was then pleased to preach upon. After he had took his Text, and preached a little while, he said, The People went flocking to the King to cure the King's Evil, which he could not do; for they ought to flock to them, that were Priests and Prophets, who by their Prayers could cure their Grievances. Then he preached a great while of the Chapter following again; and then says he, We have had two wicked Kings that have suffered Popery to come in under their Noses, which I can compare to nothing but the most wicked Jeroboam. There was another King named, and I think it was Rehoboam. I cannot be positive as to that, but Jeroboam I am sure was named. Then he said, If the People would stand to their Principles, he did not question but to overcome all their Enemies with broken Platters, Rams-Horns, and a Stone in a Sling. These were the Words Mr. Rosewell was pleased to say.

L. C. J. Can you remember what day of the Month this was?

Hilton. It was the 14th of September, my Lord.

L. C. J. Do you remember what number of People were there?

Hilton. I believe there were four or five hundred People; there was a Garret full, and two Rooms below, the Parlour full, and the Hall full; and one Paul Shed (as Mrs. Smith told me his Name was) let us in. I did not know any of them; nor ever had Convicted any of them; that was the first time I ever was at a Meeting in my Life, and I had enough of it then.

L. C. J. You say you came on Saturday Night to Mistress Smith's House?

Hilton. Yes, my Lord.

L. C. J. What time that Night?—Hilton. About eight or nine o'Clock.

L. C. J. What time in the Morning did you go along with her to this place?

Hilton. We went by seven o'Clock in the Morning.

L. C. J. Did Mr. Rosewell come before you, or after you?

Hilton. No, he came presently after we were there.

L. C. J. Do you remember any other Words he utter'd there that Day?

Hilton. He was pleased to talk of several things between whiles in his Sermon; among the rest, I heard him speak about Canting. He said there was a Word they called Canting, but he did not understand what that Word meant, except it were the Fellows in their white Gowns. For he was going by one of their Churches, where he heard them sing the Lord's Prayer, the Creed, and the Ten Commandments, with a Ha-ha-ha-ha; for my part, says he, I was ashamed to hear it.

L. C. J. Do you remember any other part of the Discourse?

Hilton. He had a great many other of those things, that I cannot now remember; it affrighted me to hear it out of my Wits.

L. C. J. Where did you go from thence?

Hilton. We went Home to Mrs. Smith's. It was two o'Clock, and we had not eat a bit of Bread all the while; and as soon as she came Home, Mistress Smith took her Pen and Ink presently, and writ down those Words; her Husband and I and she were together; and when we had done this, we went to the Quaker's Meeting.

L. C. J. What Quaker's Meeting is that?

Hilton. It is that by Cheap-side; I do not well remember the Name, I think it was called the Bull and Mouth.

Mr. Just. Hol. What time of the Day was it that the Meeting was done at Mr. Rosewell's?

Hilton. We came from Mr. Rosewell's a little after two o'Clock.

L. C. J. From Seven to Two did he hold? that is pretty long-winded.

Hilton. No, he went in to Dinner, and left us there, and abundance in the Congregation eat Sweet-Meats, or Biskets, or such things as they had. But I am sure we had nothing there. I was never among you before, nor ever Convicted any of you.

Mr. Ros. I humbly beseech your Lordship to make her sensible of the Obligation she is under by her Oath.

L. C. J. Ay, Ay; I will. Look you Mistress, you must take notice, here is the Life of a Man in question, which is a thing of great

Considera-

Consideration. And for you to have any Concern in taking away the Life of a Man, if it be upon false Grounds, is a very dismal thing; besides, that there is a thing which is yet of greater Weight and Moment to you yourself, it concerns your own immortal Soul. You must consider what Guilt you contract upon yourself if you tell a Lye; but there is a much greater Guilt contracted, if you offer to swear a Lye in a Court of Justice, upon a Cause of this Concernment. Consider, I tell you, you are in the Presence of Almighty God, that seeth into the Hearts of all Mankind; that is the Avenger of all Lying and Perjury; that may justly sink you into Hell, if you offer to swear a Falshood. Therefore, I charge you, in the Name and Presence of that great God, the Judge of Heaven and Earth, to answer me truly to this Question: Are these things that you have sworn here true?

Hilton. My Lord, they are every Word true. There is a Gentlewoman here, one Mrs. Collingwood, that shall witness I set them down that Day; and went away to the Recorder, and gave him an Account of them.

Mr. Att. Gen. Well, if you have done, go over.

L. C. J. No, hold, Sir, will the Prisoner ask her any Questions?

Mr. Ref. Yes, my Lord, with your Leave.

L. C. J. Av, in God's Name, what you will, that is fitting to ask.

Mr. Ref. Mistrers, what is your Name?

Hilton. My Name is Hilton.

Mr. Ref. Was your Name ever Shastoe?

Hilton. Yes, but my Name now is Hilton.

Mr. Ref. Or otherwise Smith, I suppose: for I have heard so.

Hilton. No, Sir.

Mr. Ref. Then, Mrs. Hilton, upon the Oath you have taken (for I hope you have observed what my Lord has said to you about the Sin and Danger of false swearing) —

Hilton. Mr. Roswell, God forbid I should stand here to tell such a Lye as this, if it were not all Truth to my Knowledge; I would rather speak less than more.

Mr. Ref. Were you at Rotherbith that 14th Day of September?

Hilton. Yes, I was. I was with Mrs. Smith at her House over Night, and went with her to Rotherbith at Seven o'Clock next Morning.

Mr. Ref. Whose House were you at there?

Hilton. I cannot say at whose House it was of my own Knowledge, for I was never there before in all my Life; but they said it was one Captain Daniel's House.

Mr. Ref. What Street was it in?

Hilton. I do not know what Street it was in, it was near West-Lane.

Mr. Ref. What kind of Buildings were there in the Street?

Hilton. Over-against it, a little way from the House, is a Bridge, that we went over; I believe it may be some ten or twelve Doors from the House.

Mr. Ref. In the Street, you say, over-against the House?

Hilton. A little way from it. Mr. Roswell, if you do remember (I can remember these things very well) there were Shutters in the Windows, and the Sun came in, and you were afraid lest the People that went by should hear you. First, There was not light enough, and you desired that one part of the Shutters might be opened; which was done: And then you desired that half might be shut again, for fear the People should over-hear you.

Mr. Ref. What kind of Entrance is there into the House?

Hilton. There is an Entry, and from the Entry we went into a little Hall, the Rooms were but of a low Height.

Mr. Ref. Was it in an upper Room, or a lower Room that I preached?

Hilton. It was in an upper Room, you were up two pair of Stairs, the Chamber was hung with sad-coloured Paper, and a sad-coloured Bed was in the Room; upon the Left-hand, as you stood, there was a Chest of Sweet Wood stood, and a little Cabinet upon it, and a Glass over that; and upon the Right-hand, on the side of the Chimney, was a Closet; I took very good Notice of all these things.

Mr. Ref. Two pair of Stairs, upon your Oath, you say it was?

Hilton. Yes, it was two pair of Stairs, upon my Oath, Sir.

Mr. Ref. How many Steps, Mrs. Hilton, were there?

Hilton. They were low Stairs, eight or nine to a Pair, I think; I did not number them, Mr. Roswell.

Mr. Ref. The other says, there was a little Room up six Steps; and that I was but one pair of Stairs high.

Hilton. And there was a Garret, my Lord; which I am sure there was above four Hundred People there at that Meeting.

Mr. Ref. Did you see that Number of People there?

Hilton. Yes, I did.

Mr. Ref. If you were within in the Room, how could you see them all there that were below, and in the Garret, as you say?

Hilton. When you went down to refresh yourself, to Dinner, as I suppose; said I to Mrs. Smith, for the Lord's sake, let me go out, for I am affrighted out of my Wits to hear such Stuff as this.

L. C. J. Frightful Stuff indeed.

Hilton. Says she, You cannot go out till they all go; there is no body to let you out; but I would fain have been got out thence.

Mr. Ref. What time did you come thither, say you?

Hilton. We came by Seven o'Clock in the Morning.

Mr. Ref. How did the Exercise begin?

Hilton. Between Seven and Eight.

Mr. Ref. I do not ask you what time, but how it began?

Hilton. You made a kind of a Prayer, I do not understand your way, for I never was used to your Meetings, I never was at any before in my Life. You took your Text (I cannot be positive which, but it was) either out of the 20th or 21st Chapter of Genesis.

Mr. Ref. But can you remember these Words, and not the Chapter?

Hilton. I can tell you more that you said, if you please.

Mr. Ref. Mrs. Hilton —

L. C. J. Let her go on; you ask her a Question, and will not stay for an Answer, but go to another thing. She is telling you what was done.

Hilton. This I am positive in, it was the 20th or 21st Chapter of Ge- nesis: the Story was about Abraham and Sarah, how he bid her call herself his Sister.
Vol. III.

Mr. Ref. That is the 20th Chapter.

L. C. J. Nay, I suppose you can remember the Text better than this; Woman.

Hilton. I believe it was the 20th, that you did most expound upon that Day; for you said at last Abimelech made Abraham a Present, which you did think might be about 20 Guineas.

Mr. Ref. I see you are thorough-paced.

L. C. J. Methinks she brought away much of your precious Stuff for one time, upon my word.

Mr. Ref. How long did you stay there, Mrs. Hilton?

Hilton. I staid there from the time you came in to the end of all: about eleven or twelve o'Clock you went down to Dinner; They that were there staid till you came up again, which was in the Afternoon; and then you began upon a Text which you took in the Psalms, I think; I cannot positively say where; but a new Text you did take, that you did.

Mr. Ref. In the Psalms did you say?

Hilton. And if it please you, Sir, I never saw you but then, and now, in my Life.

Mr. Ref. What Habit was I in?

Hilton. You had a Camblet Cloak on that had an Eye of blue in it, and a mourning Hatband about your Hat; and upon the Bedside by me sat Mr. Atkinson in a mourning Cloak, and his two Boys.

Mr. Ref. There was some stop or Pause you say; you call it a Dinner?

Hilton. You went to Dinner, I suppose; I know not where you were.

Mr. Ref. Pray how did the Exercise begin in the Afternoon?

Hilton. I cannot very well tell.

Mr. Ref. Was you there to the End of it?

Hilton. To the very end of all.

Mr. Ref. What Psalms was read, or what Chapter that I preached upon?

Hilton. Sir, I cannot remember what your Psalms is. These are the Words that you said, and that you preached. Sir, I cannot remember how all these came in, nor all the Stuff that was said.

L. C. J. She says she cannot remember all your Stuff.

Hilton. I was never used to a Conventicle in my Life: and I would I had not been there then.

Mr. Ref. What was the Text I preached upon?

Hilton. In the Morning it was, I tell you, the 20th or 21st Chapter of Genesis. But the Heads of your Sermon, and after you had talked about the King, and all those things, was about Abraham and Sarah----

Mr. Ref. But what was the Text in the Afternoon?

Hilton. I cannot tell that truly.

Mr. Ref. Then upon what Occasion were those Words in the Morning about flocking to the King to cure the Evil?

Hilton. Sir, you said----

L. C. J. How can any Body tell what occasion you could have. You had no occasion from that Text, nor any other Text that I know of, to talk of the King or the King's Evil.

Mr. Ref. But I speak of the Coherence of the Discourse, my Lord.

L. C. J. You preach without any Coherence, or you never had been brought here. When you give yourself the Liberty to talk of these things, you ramble from your Text.

Mr. Ref. I mean by it, my Lord, what Part of the Chapter it was that did lead to it?

L. C. J. No Man living can tell; it was the Devil led you to talk Treason: The Indictment tells you so, that you had not the Fear of God before your Eyes, but were moved and seduced by the Instigation of the Devil to do it. Who leads People to do all sorts of Wickedness but the Devil? You can give no Reason for it yourself, nor no one else.

Mr. Ref. Were these Words delivered in the Forenoon Discourse?

Hilton. I do not know what you call Forenoon, or Afternoon: I am sure we had no Dinner.

Mr. Ref. But was it all before, or after I broke off, and went down?

Hilton. Before, Sir.

L. C. J. She says it was before you went to Dinner; but for her part she had no Dinner at all, she says. If you have done with her, then go on, Mr. Attorney.

Mr. Att. Gen. Where is Mrs. Joan Farrar?

Far. Here I am, Sir.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray, will you tell my Lord and the Jury, were you present at this House when Mr. Roswell preached there?

Far. Yes, Sir, I was.

Mr. Att. Gen. What did you hear him say?

Far. Do you ask me of the 14th of September, first, Sir?

Mr. Att. Gen. Yes.

L. C. J. Why, were you there at any other time?

Far. Yes, several times.

Mr. Att. Gen. Well, take your own way of delivering your Evidence, and give an Account of what you know of the Prisoner.

L. C. J. But, hark you, be sure you tell nothing but what is Truth. You must consider, here is the Life of a Man at the stake, and your own immortal Soul is at stake too. You are in the Presence of the great God of Heaven and Earth, that seeth into all your Actions and Thoughts, and searcheth the Hearts of all Mankind, and therefore have a care of contracting any Guilt upon yourself by telling any Lye; be sure to say nothing but what is Truth.

Far. Sir, I was not in the Room with him; I was in a Parlour or Hall, what do you call it, a low Room; and he was up Stairs above it.

Mr. Att. Gen. But were you in the Congregation? Were there any other of the Hearers in that Room among whom you were?

Far. Yes, Sir; there were a great many of them there, Sir.

Mr. Att. Gen. Well, what did you hear him say?

Far. Sir, concerning the Evil was the first thing I heard him say; and and he made it so, that it was not the King that cured it, but it was they they should flock to. It is we they should flock to, says he; for we are they which are the Priests and the Prophets, that by our Prayers do cure the Grievances of the People.

Mr. Att. Gen. What did you hear him say more in that Discourse?

Far. The next that I observed was, he said, we had now two wicked Kings together; but I could not tell who he compared them two wicked Kings to; but he bid the People stand to their Principles, and in time they should overcome their Enemies.

Mr. Recorder. Pray, have you heard him at any other time?

Far. Yes, I have heard him at other times.

Mr. Recorder. Did you take notice of any thing he said against the Government?

Mr. Ros. I beseech your Lordship, may these leading Questions be asked?

L. C. J. Yes, I have told you already; to shew your Practice. It is not at all a leading Question. What did you hear him say at any other time about the Government?

Far. In a Mill, it was by Rotherhithe-Wall, at one Hudson's, he prayed that he might not offend the Lord in not praying for the King; but the Lord might please to open his Eyes, or turn the Times.

L. C. J. Can you remember when that was?

Far. It was the 17th Day of July,---no, of August, to my best Remembrance; and upon the 17th Chapter of Genesis.

L. C. J. That he preached upon there, did he?

Far. Yes, Sir.

L. C. J. Did you hear him say any thing at any other time?

Far. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Recorder. What do you remember about People in Scarlet?

L. C. J. Tell us what you heard him say else?

Far. At West-lane end, at one Paul Shed's, I heard him preach concerning the Fire of London about eighteen Years ago. That there was a certain great rich Man, that lived in Grace-church-street; he said, he needed not name him, he supposed they all knew who he was; and he said there went a poor Man to him, not a poor Man neither, but a Carpenter, an House-keeper, a labouring Man, and told him how to quench the Fire; and then he preached, that if it had not been for that great Man, that Fire had not been, nor the Fires in Southwark or Wapping, if it had not been for the Lord Mayors and Sheriffs since.

L. C. J. Have you any more to ask her?

Mr. Recorder. What have you heard him say else?

Mr. Att. Gen. No, my Lord, we have done, I think.

L. C. J. Answer my Brother Jenner's Question.

Mr. Recorder. What about People in Scarlet?

Far. Then after he had preached concerning the Fire, he said it was a fine Sight to see Fools in Scarlet Gowns; and he heard the Recorder was to be made a Judge.

L. C. J. He hears strange Stories it seems. What do you make of this, Brother Jenner?

Mr. Ros. God forbid, my Lord, this should be true.

L. C. J. You see she swears it.

Mr. Just. Withins. Mr. Rosewell, will you ask her any Questions?

Mr. Ros. Mistress, you say you were at the Meeting on the 14th of September; pray in whose House was it?

Far. It was at a House at the end of West-lane; there are a Row of Houses that face to the Fields.

Mr. Ros. But whose House was it?

Far. They said it was one Daniel's House.

Mr. Ros. In what Room of the House were you?

Far. In the lower Room.

Mr. Ros. Did you see me there?

Far. Sir, you were gone up Stairs before I came in.

Mr. Ros. You did not see me there upon your Oath?

Far. No, my Lord, I did not see him.

L. C. J. She said at first, you were gone up before she came, and she was in a lower Room.

Far. But I knew his Voice.

L. C. J. Did you know his Voice?

Far. Yes, Sir; I had heard him several times.

Mr. Ros. Did not you tell somebody that you heard none of these Words?

L. C. J. Were you asleep all the while?

Far. No, Sir, I was not asleep, I did not sleep while I was in the Room. I never slept in your Presence in my Life.

Mr. Ros. Were you there at the beginning? What time came you in?

Far. Sir, I believe you had read half your Prayer; I was at the beginning of the Sermon.

Mr. Ros. Who came along with you?

Far. I came alone; my Child was not well, and so I came late.

Mr. Ros. What was the Chapter I was upon?

Far. It was upon the 21st of Genesis, Sir.

Mr. Ros. Upon what Verse of the 21st of Genesis was it, that you heard these Words?

Far. I cannot tell what Verse it was.

Mr. Ros. I ask, my Lord, because I went distinctly upon Verses.

L. C. J. Prithce, Man, I care not how thou went'st on.

Mr. Ros. Cannot you tell how they came in?

Far. No, Sir.

L. C. J. Nor any one else, I dare say, how such Words can come in?

Mr. Ros. Were the Words spoken together in that Exercise that you have sworn?

Far. Yes, in that Exercise.

Mr. Ros. How long did you stay there?

Far. Till you had done, I believe it was Two o'Clock.

Mr. Ros. Was it in the Forenoon?

Far. We had no Dinner at all; I cannot tell what you call Forenoon, or Afternoon.

Mr. Ros. Was it all spoken upon that Chapter, upon your Oath?

Far. Truly, Sir, I think it was upon your first Text.

L. C. J. If you have done with her, let her go over.

Mr. Att. Gen. We shall call one or two more of his Auditors at other times, that will give some account of his Way. Where is your Man, Mr. Atterbury? What is his Name?

Mr. Atterbury. Peter. But here is one of the Witnesses.

Mr. Att. Gen. Swear him then. What is his Name?

[He was sworn.]

Mr. Atterbury. Robert Cook, he says.

Mr. Recorder. Were you an Officer in this Place?

Cook. Yes, in St. Mary Maudlin's I was; St. Mary Magdalen, Bermondsey Parish.

Mr. Recorder. Were you at the executing of any Process against Rosewell's Conventicle?

Cook. If it please you, my Lord, I had a Warrant from Sir Thomas Jenner, to serve at one Wildy's House, a Bricklayer in Rotherhithe; and when I came to the House to serve it, there was abundance of People, and a great Riot was made, but no Blows I confess; but a great Tumult of People, that had not I and the Beadle, one Samuel Bennet by Name, caused the People to stand clear, I do not know but there might have been Mischief done. Of which we upon that gave an account to Sir Thomas Jenner, and he hath bound some of the People over to the Sessions.

L. C. J. What do you mean by this, Gentlemen?

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, we have done; this is only about some Disturbances that the King's Officers meet with, in executing Process against these Conventicles.

L. C. J. But what is this to the Prisoner?

Mr. Att. Gen. Here is some would have him called; but I confess we cannot make any use of his Evidence against the Prisoner, only as to what is hinted in the Indictment, that he did it to disturb the Peace.

L. C. J. Pish, that is nothing, the Officer did his Duty; but what is that to this Business? Have you done, Gentlemen, for the King?

Mr. Att. Gen. Yes, my Lord, we have done.

L. C. J. Then, Mr. Rosewell, now is your time to make your Defence; and you shall have time to make it as full as you will.

Mr. Ros. My Lord, may I have the Favour to have the Indictment read again in Latin?

L. C. J. Yes, yes, if you will. Read it again.

Mr. Ros. I humbly thank your Lordship, only the Words, my Lord. Cl. of Crown [reads.] In quadam illicita assemblea, in presentia & auditu diversorum subdit' dicti Domini Regis, adtunc & ibidem illicite & seditiose assemblea' & congregat', asseruit & declaravit quod populus (subdit' dicti Domini Regis nunc, innuendo) coadunationem fecere (Anglice made a flocking) dicto Domino Regi nunc, sub pretextu sanandi morbum regni (Anglice the King's Evil) quod ipse (dictum Dominum regem nunc, iterum innuendo) facere non potest; sed nos sumus illi (seipsum Thomam Rosewell & al' seditiosos & proditor' person' innuendo) ad quos illi (ligeos subdit' dicti Domini regis nunc, innuendo) debent accedere (Anglice, flock to) quia nos (seipsum prædict' Thomam Rosewell & al' sedit' & proditor' person' iterum innuendo) sumus Sacerdotes & Prophetæ, qui precibus delectes ipsorum (ligeos subdit' dicti Domini regis nunc, iterum innuendo) sanaremus. Nos (subdit' & ligeos hujus regni Angliæ innuendo) habuimus nunc duos iniquos reges (Serenissimum Carolum primum nuper regem Angliæ, & dict' Dominum regem nunc, innuendo) insinuat, qui permiserunt Romanam superstitionem (Anglice Popery) ingredi (infra hoc regnum Angliæ, innuendo) in eorum conspectu (Anglice under their Noses) qui (prædictum Carolum primum nuper regem Angliæ, & dictum Dominum regem nunc, innuendo) assimulari possunt ad nullam personam nisi ad nequissimum Jeroboam. Et si ipsi (divers' maledisposit' & sedit' person' adtunc & ibidem cum prefat' Thomam Rosewell illicite & seditiose assemblea' & congregat' existen' innuendo) ad fundamenta' ipsorum permanerent (Anglice would stand to their Principles) ipse (seipsum Thomam Rosewell innuendo) non timebat quin ipsi (seipsum Thomam Rosewell & prædict' maledisposit' & sedit' person' sic ut prefertur assemblea' innuendo) inimicos suos (dictum Dominum regem nunc, & ligeos subdit' ipsius Domini regis nunc, innuendo) vincerent, sit ut in pristino tempore cum cornubus ariet', patinis fractis (Anglice broken Platters) & lapide in funda (Anglice Sling) &c.

Mr. Ros. If it please you, my Lord, that which I object against, and desire to be satisfied in by your Lordship, is this; I am charged with speaking Words about flocking to the King to cure the King's Evil; and it is in the Indictment called Morbus Regni Anglici, that is the Disease of the English Kingdom.

L. C. J. No, no; it is Morbus Regni, Anglice the King's Evil.

Mr. Ros. I do not understand how Morbus Regni can be the King's Evil.

L. C. J. Therefore because there is no apt Word in the Law for that Distemper, they help it up by the Word Anglice, to shew what they meant.

Mr. Ros. But, my Lord, I understand there are proper Words for the Disease; as Struma, and Scrofula, those are proper Words for it, not Morbus Regni.

L. C. J. Not at all in Law, those may be the Words used among Physicians; but in legal Proceedings we are to keep up exactly to the legal Names and Phrases; and where we have not an usual Word, then we help it up by Anglice's: and so we here express that very Distemper, which is called by the Name of the King's Evil, by a Word framed as near to a Law Phrase as we can; and to shew our meaning in it, we add, Anglice the King's Evil.

Mr. Ros. My Lord, is that the Phrase that is proper for it in Law?

L. C. J. Yes, yes, it is very well expressed to shew what is meant.

Mr. Ros. But, my Lord, Morbus Regni, is in English properly the Disease of the Kingdom.

L. C. J. It is so, the Disease of the Kingdom; if they had gone no further, but left it there, it might have had such an Interpretation put upon it. But because the Words are so ambiguous in Latin, they are reduced to a certainty, by putting an Anglice to them.

Mr. Ros. I thought it had been Anglici. My Lord, there is another Phrase that I object against, it says, Nos habuimus nunc duos iniquos Reges insinuat. My Lord, this cannot be understood of two Kings one after another; but insinuat makes it to be both at once.

L. C. J.

L. C. J. No, we have had now together two wicked Kings.

Mr. Ros. That we do not use to express so in Latin.

L. C. J. The Words do thus sound in English.

Mr. Ros. Here are two Words Insimul and Nunc that do signify the present time. My Lord, I am now only speaking all this while upon the Hypothesis that these Words were spoken by me; for I still do, and always must deny the Thesis.

L. C. J. We take it so.

Mr. Ros. It should have been Successive.

L. C. J. Then it had not agreed with your Words. For the Witnesses swear that you said, We have now had two wicked Kings together, and not successively.

Mr. Ros. If that be an Anglicism, this cannot be true Latin.

L. C. J. Nay, if it be a Blunder in the Latin, it was a Blunder of your making; for you spoke it so in English, and the Indictment in Latin must exactly pursue your English.

Mr. Ros. Then, my Lord, here is another Expression, that they suffered, Romanam superstitionem, Popery, to come in.

L. C. J. Ay, is not that well expressed?

Mr. Ros. My Lord, there may be Superstition in the Worship of the Church of Rome, and yet that not be the thing we call Popery.

L. C. J. There may so, you say right; but then this comes under the same reason, as the former Phrase you objected against about Morbus Regni. Because Romana Superstitio is such a general Word, and because there are several Superstitions in the Romish Church, abundance of them; and this may make it uncertain; and because we have no other Word to express what we call Popery by, therefore there is an Anglice put in, to shew what is meant.

Mr. Ros. Then, my Lord, it is said in eorum conspectu: is that right, my Lord?

L. C. J. Yes, Anglice under their Noses?—Mr. Ros. That is in their Sight.

L. C. J. Pray, how would you put that into Latin, under their Noses?

Mr. Ros. My Lord, if I should speak according to the other parts of the Latin of this Indictment, which your Lordship says must exactly pursue the English, I would render it sub naribus illorum.

L. C. J. Such People suffer Conventicles under their Noses, in eorum conspectu.

Mr. Just. Holloway. 'Tis not your Nose that sees.

L. C. J. Suffer Rebellion under your Noses; are these things Sub naribus, or in conspectu?

Mr. Ros. My Lord, this could not possibly be spoken of the late King, and this King; when the precedent King died a professed zealous Protestant; and his present Majesty has so often, and earnestly declared against it.

L. C. J. We know that very well; but yet withal we know, 'twas the Pretence of Popery and Arbitrary Power, and those things, that brought that blessed Martyr to the Scaffold; and the great Cry now at this Day, by all factious and seditious busy Fellows, is against Popery; as if it were just breaking in upon us, and the Government abetted it; when it is all false, nothing more untrue: the Indictment calls it so, says these Words are spoken falso & malitiose; and all Treasons are so.

Mr. Ros. Then, my Lord, there is another thing, Si ipsi starent ad Fundamentalium eorum, Anglice, If they would stand to their Principles, or Principals; for I know not how it is in the Indictment. Pray, my Lord, how comes Fundamentalium to signify Principles?

L. C. J. Their Principles, that is, their Foundations, or Fundamentals. If the Foundations be destroyed, what can the righteous do? says the Psalmist. The Latin Bible expresseth it by Fundamentalium.

Mr. Ros. Then it is si ipsi in the third Person; now, my Lord, in common Sense that must needs refer to the two wicked Kings that were spoken of just before, or to the King, and his Subjects spoken of afterwards; and then sure it cannot be Treason.

L. C. J. No, they; that is, I and you that are here. 'Twas spoken to your Congregation. If they would stand to their Principles, then come the broken Platters, &c.

Mr. Ros. If it were spoken to them, and of them, it must have been you or we. Then it is added in the end, my Lord, Fractis Patinis, broken Platters: Your Lordship has remembered me of that Word. My Lord, I did hear that Mrs. Smith did swear at Kingston Assizes, it was Pewter Platters.

L. C. J. I do not know what she swore there; now I am sure she swears as it is in the Indictment.

Mr. Ros. Mistress Smith, Pray did not you swear it was Pewter Platters at Kingston?

Smith. No, I never said otherwise than I do now, and that is, broken Platters.

Mr. Ros. I did hear she swore Pewter then. But, my Lord, I conceive, if it refers to me, and the People that were there, it should have been, as the former Sentence is, in the first Person? We have had, &c. but here it is changed into the third Person, and therefore cannot be so meant.

L. C. J. But it plainly speaks its own meaning, that it is meant of the People there.

Mr. Ros. My Lord, then as to the Innuendo's, I see there are Eight or Ten of them. Whether are these to make such a Construction of a man's meaning, which doth not otherwise sufficiently appear, as to bring a man under the guilt of Treason?

L. C. J. I tell you the meaning is plain; if you and we, such false Traitors as are said to be there assembled with you, will but stand to our Principles, we shall overthrow and destroy our Enemies with broken Platters and Ram's-horns.

Mr. Ros. It is said here ipse non timebat quin—Of whom should I speak that ipse?

L. C. J. You were speaking of yourself and your Congregation.

Mr. Ros. But that is in the third Person, and the singular Number.

Mr. Sol. Gen. No, the Jurors that find this Indictment

Mr. Finch. say, that he said so, and that must be in the third Person.

Mr. Ros. That is not according to the rest.

Mr. Just. Within. They, is the People with him; and he, is he himself; that is plain, and can have no other Construction.

Mr. Ros. Now, my Lord, will your Lordship please to accept a free Declaration of the Truth of this Matter?

L. C. J. Ay, ay, go now to the Fact; now we are got over the Exceptions to the Indictment. To answer the Fact is most proper at this time.

Mr. Ros. Then here in the Presence of the great God of Heaven, the righteous Judge of all the Earth; before whom you and I, and all that are here, must one Day appear, at that terrible Bar of impartial Justice (and a glorious Tribunal it will be), to give an account of all things that we have done in the body, whether they be good or Evil: and I am told by my blessed Redeemer (who shall also be my Judge that Day), that an account must be given of every idle Word that I shall utter, how much more for Lying and Perjury, and False-witness bearing? as your Lordship (I humbly thank you for it) did very seasonably suggest to those that have witnessed these things against me; I say in the Presence of that great God, and this Honourable Bench of Reverend Judges, and you Gentlemen of the Jury, and my dear Countrymen, that have been now sworn, as well as returned by the Process of Law for that end; I do here most solemnly declare the Truth unto you, as in the Presence of this God I shall answer it hereafter. And I shall begin with the latter part of these Words first, where this Indictment ends; for that seems to refer to some things of the late Times, and also to my Treasonable Intentions now. My Lord, and dear Countrymen, because I heard something mentioned as to the late unhappy Civil Wars in these Nations; I can declare, my Father was no ways concerned in those Wars, for he was dead before they began; and I was then but a Child, and did not understand the thing. But for the Death of the King, (Death did I say? that is too soft a Word; the Murder, the barbarous Murder of his Majesty King Charles the First, whom I had once the Happiness to see the Face of, or rather the Unhappiness to see in respect of his Condition at that time, being at Dinner under a Tree, with some few Persons about him, which very much affected my Heart, tho' then but young. So far was I from being one that would compare him to Jeroboam, &c. as your Lordship will hear, that) I always bewailed and abhorred that Act. For my present Sovereign, I declare in the Presence of God, I honour him with my Soul, and daily pray for him; and if I could do him any real good, I would sacrifice my Life most cheerfully to do it; I would die at his Foot to do him any real good. My Lord, I was once threatened with the loss of my Life for declaring for his Majesty in his Exile; when it is well known, few durst appear in those Days on the behalf of an injured Prince. It was objected against me, that I never prayed for Oliver Cromwell, that had usurped the Government. My Lord, I knew he stood upon a false Bottom; he was an Usurper. And for declaring, that the Kingdom would never be at Peace till the Right Heir, our Sovereign that now is, were restored to his Right, I was threatened that a Gibbet should be set at my Church-Porch, and I hanged upon it, or at my own Door. I preached upon that place of Scripture, Ezek. 21. and the 27th Verse, I will overturn, overturn; overturn; and it shall be no more until he come whose Right it is, and I will give it him. And I declared in my Sermon the several overturnings that God had given them then in Power. And tho' they threatened me, yet God preserved me then here at Home, as he did my dear Sovereign abroad; for whom I have prayed many hundreds and thousands of times. And it is well known, immediately after his Majesty's happy Restoration, I did upon one of His Majesty's Days preach upon that Subject: For the Transgressions of a Land many shall be the Princes thereof. I preached concerning the Excellency of Monarchy, which I shewed to be the chiefest and best of Governments, practised almost every where: And I proved it from the Example of the great God of Heaven, the Monarch of all the World, down to some of the meanest Species of Creatures. I shewed it was the Government God had set up in his Church, appointing the Lord Christ to be the King there: Among the Angels there was the Prince of them: Among the Celestial Bodies, the Sun in the Firmament—

L. C. J. Mr. Roswell, I am very unwilling to give you any Interruption, because of the Condition you stand in, being a Prisoner pleading for your Life, upon an Accusation of High-Treason. But I tell you, these things that you have now insisted upon are not at all to the purpose as to what you are brought here for. You are not here arraigned for your good Works, but for your evil Works. If you commend yourself for two Hours together it signifies not one Farthing; and the Gentlemen of the Jury must let it go for nothing. It only serves to please your Humour of talking, and captivate the Auditory; but it is not at all to the purpose. Keep close to the matter, that it is incumbent upon you to answer; to the Business you are upon here. It is our Duty, who are upon our Oaths, and who are accountable to the Government and the Law for what we do, to see that things be done according to Law. You are not here called in Question for your good Works or Actions, but for Treasonable and Seditious Words. I would to God, you had never done worse than what you have said of yourself. But here is an Indictment for Traiterous Preaching at one particular Place and one particular Time; answer to that. The Jury must go, not according to your way of speaking; but according to the Evidence relating to the Matters laid in this Indictment. Do not talk of your Preaching for Monarchy; and your Overturn, Overturn, Overturn, for if this be true, that the Witnesses have sworn against you, you have at once overturned all the good you ever did, or said in your Life before.

Mr. Ros. My Lord, I know very well, one such evil Action is enough to marr a Life of former good ones. But this that I have said, was to shew, how inconsistent those things that they have sworn, are with my constantly declared Judgment and former Practice.

L. C. J. There are abundance of People to whom the King has formerly extended Mercy, not only his Pardon, but even all the Promotions their ambitious fancies could make them pretend to: But 'tis well known, the Devil has not had more ready Instruments to carry on bloody designs for the Murdering this Gracious King, their Princely Princely Benefactor, than these very Men that were thus gratified and advanced by him. Therefore, we can say nothing to what is alledged of former Loyalty; the Devil surprizes Men into these things; they do them, as the Indictment says, by the Instigation of the Devil. Keep to the Matter before you.

Mr. Ros. Well then, my Lord, to cut short. As to the Business since his Majesty's Return: I have been a constant Observer of his Days, and particularly the 30th of January I have always observed as a Day of Humiliation: And I did upon one of those Days preach upon that Text—

L. C. J. And all this signifies just nothing, and upon that Day you went to a Conventicle against the Law, and preached there; which shews, what a conformable Man to the Government and the Law you are. You can have your Congregation of Hundreds of People, and I know not what; now I tell you all this makes nothing against you, nor doth all your Commendation make any thing for you.

Mr. Ros. My Lord, I do not know any Law of the Land that is against Preaching the Gospel.

L. C. J. Yes, in Conventicles to preach, is against the Law of the Land.

Mr. Ros. My Lord, I humbly conceive it is the Circumstance of Number that makes the Transgression.

L. C. J. It is not only a Circumstance, but the Substance to preach in a Conventicle, and all against Law.

Mr. Ros. If you call that a Transgression to preach the Gospel, I humbly acknowledge myself a Transgressor.

L. C. J. I tell you it is a Transgression; but it is not such a Transgression as that for which you are here indicted: But because you commend yourself so much; a Man, I must tell you, that every Day doth notoriously transgress the Laws of the Land, need not be so fond of giving himself Commendations for his Obedience to the Government and the Laws.

Mr. Ros. My Lord, I was only saying that upon the 30th of January I preached upon that Text; 1 Tim. ii. 1, 2. I exhort, therefore, that first of all, Supplications, Prayers, Intercessions, and giving of Thanks be made for all Men; for Kings and all that are in Authority; that under them we may lead quiet and peaceable Lives, in all Godliness and Honesty.

L. C. J. Amen! I say to that Petition.

Mr. Ros. Amen! I am sure I say to it, with all my Soul; and it is my daily Prayer to my God for my Sovereign. And here I shewed, that it was the Duty of Subjects to pray for their Prince—

L. C. J. I tell thee, I care not a Farthing what thy Text was, nor thy Doctrine; I wish you had been at Church tho', and been conformable to the Laws. But this is nothing to our Business.

Mr. Ros. I had therein a sharp Reproof and Invektive against those that instead of praying for their Civil Head, cut it off; and those that design and plot against the Government.

L. C. J. You did abundance of good by your Sermon, no doubt; I shall not now stand to examine that.

Mr. Ros. So far was I from harbouring any Traiterous Thought—

L. C. J. Come, Come; All this is besides the Cushion; come to the Matter that is here before us, Man. I would not restrain you of any part of your Defence, either in Time, or any thing else; but let us not have the time taken up with that which no way concerns our Question. Our Business relates to what was said at your Meeting, at that Time the Witnesses speak of.

Mr. Ros. Then, my Lord, as to the Truth of this particular Case, I shall now declare all that past then; as in the Presence of that God who searcheth the Heart, and trieth the Reins, and who shall judge us all. Upon the 14th Day of September last, I did preach to some People that were met at a Friend's House, one Capt. Daniel in Rotherhithe: and as my Course hath been to expound the Scriptures (to make them understand them), I was, my Lord, that Day upon the 20th Chapter of Genesis. The Chapter is about Abraham and Abimelech King of Gerar. Now, my Lord, will you please that I shall deliver to you what was said, by repeating it by Word of Mouth, or read it?

L. C. J. No, no; I do not desire any of your Expositions, or Preachments: Answer to the Indictment, and what is charged upon you there.

Mr. Ros. My Lord, I am about it, in telling you what was really said; and I ask the favour of delivering in Court what I then delivered to them. My Lord, it was thus: In the 2d Verse it is said, And Abraham said of Sarah his Wife, She is my Sister; from whence I observed, that he had been guilty of this once before, in the 12th Chapter, when he told the very same Lye to Pharaoh King of Egypt. And thence I raised this Note, That a Good Man, or a Friend of God, might fall into the same Sin once and agen. And in proof of it, I brought three or four Instances. That of Lot in the foregoing Chapter, his falling twice into the same Sins of Drunkenness and Incest with his own Daughters. That of Sampson, in the 16th of Judges (and there came in the mention of Dalilah, that she spoke of, which she only remembers the Name of, and not the Truth of the Quotation), That of Peter's denying his Master, Once, twice, and agen; first, with a Lye; secondly, with an Oath; and thirdly, with an Imprecation. But the Proof which they in this Point have most distorted, is that of Je-heshaphat, who sinfully joined with two wicked Kings: First, with a wicked Father Abah in his Expedition into the Land of the Syrians against Ramoth-Gilead, 2 Chron. 18th Chapter; for which he is reproved as a great Transgressor, and threatened by the Prophet in the 19th Chapter, and the beginning: And yet he afterwards joined with another wicked King, Ahaziah, Abah's wicked Son, to go to Tarshish; as we may see in the 20th Chapter, and the latter end. And here, my Lord, is the whole of the Business concerning the two wicked Kings. In the Presence of the Holy and Great God there was not one word spoken of the Kings of England, either King Charles the First, or his present Majesty. This was as to the two wicked Kings. And then, my Lord, I came to the 7th Verse, which has these Words, He is a Prophet, and he shall pray for thee, and thou shalt live. Upon this I observed, That the Prayers of God's Prophets have been very prevalent for the healing, and helping of others in a time of need. And three Proofs I brought of this: The last of which, was that of the Prophet Isaiah's praying for King Hezekiah in the time of his great and dangerous Sickness. But that which has reference to this Business, was that out of the 1 Kings 13. and the beginning; When the Prophet came to Bethel, and there rebuked Jeroboam, and prophesied against the Altar there; Jeroboam put forth his hands, and shook it at him, and said, Lay hold of him; upon which the King's hand was dried up. Thereupon the King intreated the Prophet, that he would pray unto the Lord his God for him, that his hand might be restored, which the Prophet did; and the King's hand was restored again, and became as it was before. And here is the Business of Jeroboam. In the Presence of God, I speak it, there was not any the least Comparison of my Dear Sovereign to that accursed wicked Prince Jeroboam, who made Israel to sin: No, my very Soul trembled at the Thoughts of it when I heard it. Upon this Head I had this Sentence, or Observation (which I will give you to a Word) If I were to die the next Moment, and appear before the glorious Tribunal of the Heavenly Majesty, I tell not the least Lye, or Equivocation, or Prevarication, That a Godly Man's Prayer is a sovereign Cure of the King's Evil; whereby the meanest, or the poorest Christian may gratify, and serve the greatest Monarch. And this is not my Saying neither, but the laying of an Expositor upon that very place of Scripture, out of whom I did quote it. Nor did I speak of it, or he write of it, with respect to that particular Disease that the Indictment calls Morbus Regni, but the King's Evil as the King's own Disease, in reference to Abimelech; who was King of Gerar. For it followeth in the Close of the Chapter, God heard Abraham's Prayer, and healed Abimelech and all his House. But as for that Word they speak of; of the People's flocking to his Majesty to cure the King's Evil, which he could not do; and that we were Priests and Prophets to whom they must come for Cure; in the Presence of the Eternal God there was not a Word of it. Then, my Lord, for that of the Rams-horns; I shall observe how that came in by and by; but first I will premise, That all this that has been now spoken of, was upon the Exposition of that Chapter in the Morning. In the Afternoon I preached upon a particular Text; I began with the reading of a Psalm and a Chapter; and so far I conceive it was after the manner and usage of the Church of England, which enjoins the reading of the Scriptures as Part of its Worship. I preached upon the 11th of the Epistle to the Hebrews, and the 12th Verse (though one of the Witnesses said it was a Psalm)—

L. C. J. She would not be positive, but she thought a Psalm, she could not tell.

Mr. Ros. My Lord, it was the 11th of Heb. ver. 12. the Words are these, Therefore sprang there of one, and him as good as Dead, so many as the Stars of the Sky in multitude, and as the Sand which is by the Sea-shore innumerable. Upon which I had this Note, That the great God can effect great Matters by very small and unlikely Means: As here (of one) what was less than one? None at all: And this one too as good as Dead; and yet from him to raise as many as the Stars in the Sky, and the Sands on the Sea-shore. What great things did God effect by the Rod of Moses? which was but a little Wand in his Hand, and yet a Sign and Symbol of Authority; as our Sheriffs' white Staves are. Never was there any great Plague to be sent upon the Enemy of God, and his Church, Pharaoh and his Egyptians, but upon the stretching forth that little Rod, it came. And so, at the Siege of Jericho: What dreadful Dilapidations in that great City did the Sound of the Rams-horns make? What a terrible Army of the Enemies of the Israelites did Gideon's small Host destroy with a few broken Pots or Pitchers? (much less did I mention Platters, or Pewter Dishes; as I have been informed they first swore). And what a tremendous Champion did David strike down with a Stone in a Sling? And what a glorious Work did our Lord Christ, the Son of David, do in his curing the Blind Man with a little Clay and Spittle; more likely to dam up the Eyes of one that could well see, than to open the Eyes of one that was born blind. Now here, my Lord, is the whole truth in the Presence of the Eternal God. Here your Lordship fees is mention made upon the second Verse of the Twentieth of Genesis of two wicked Kings; but how, not (as they have represented it) with any Reflection upon the Kings of England; nor were they spoken in that order as they have sworn them, but as I have now repeated them. Here is mention of healing the King's Evil, and of Jeroboam; but no way in that manner as they say. And here is likewise mention of Rams-horns, broken Pitchers, and a Stone in a Sling; but not with the least application to the Government, or reference to it, or Reflection upon it, or the King: and this is the Truth. I have made an ingenuous Confession of the whole as it passed, that your Lordship may see how much I am abused by these false Wretches. And if they have so good Memories as really and indeed to remember what was then said, their Memories and their Consciences cannot but go along with me, and confirm what I have said; that all that was spoken by me that Day, was as I have related it, without the least Reflection upon, or Application to his former Majesty and our present Sovereign, or either of them, or any thing relating to the Government. And if you be not convinced here, I am sure there will be a Day come wherein you will find and see, that these are none of the King's Friends, but his Enemies, that thus have falsely accused an innocent, faithful, loyal Subject of Treason; a Crime which my very Soul abhors the thoughts of. In Proof whereof, if your Lordship will give me leave, I will now call my Witnesses to testify the Truth of all this Matter. And after this free and ingenuous Confession of the Truth, and what the Witnesses I shall call will testify about it, I hope, and trust in my Good God, that he will let you, my Dear Countrymen, see the Truth and Sincerity of my Heart in whatever Words were spoken by me. Had I been guilty of those Things that are laid to my Charge, I were not worthy to live. Pray, Mr. Crier, call Mr. Thomas Hudson.

L. C. J. Ay; Come call your Witnesses.

Mr. Ros. My Lord, One thing I would desire to speak to your Lordship. Your Lordship was speaking, that what I declared of my former Loyalty was nothing to what the Witnesses have deposed; My Lord, I have read in a true History (I think the Scriptures will be owned by all Persons that are here to be such) of two false Witnesses, they

they were such; they are called Sons of Belial (I pray God these be not accounted Daughters of Belial) that swore Naboth did blaspheme God and the King. Doth your Lordship believe it?

L. C. J. What would you have of us, Man, by that Question?

Mr. Ros. I am confident, my Lord, your Lordship and the Court do not believe he did so.

L. C. J. The Scriptures tell us it was not true; Do you think we do not believe the Scriptures, because we do not hear you preach in your Conventicles? We do believe the Scriptures, Man; and we believe too they have been perverted by you, and other People, to very ill Purposes. Yes, I do remember the Story of Naboth; and to show you that I can remember some Holy History as well as you, I can tell you of another Story, and that is the Story of Susanna and the Elders, and there was Circumstance of Time and Place testified to; but it seems they were defective in their Proof, and thereby discovered. You would do well to detect the Witnesses, if you can, in some Contradiction, or Falshood; that will do you more Service, than all your Harangues and Speeches.

Mr. Ros. The God of Heaven will do it this Day, I trust; for to him I have opened my Cause.

L. C. J. Well, well, call your Witnesses, and prove what you can.

Mr. Ros. My dear Redeemer himself was served so; nay, condemned by the Testimony of false Witnesses. [Mr. Hudson came in.]

L. C. J. Come, here is your Witness; What say you to him?

Mr. Ros. Mr. Hudson, were you present at the Meeting at Rotherhithe on Lord's Day the 14th of September last?

Mr. Hudson. Yes, Sir, I was so.

Mr. Ros. Here is Mrs. Smith hath sworn, that since the beginning of August we had a Meeting in our Publick Meeting-House: Was there any, pray Sir?

Mr. Hudson. There was none such, that I know of.

Mr. Ros. She swears, that we were at the House of Captain Daniel Weldy's the 14th of September. Was it so?

Mr. Hudson. No, Sir.

Mr. Ros. What place was it then?

Mr. Hudson. It was one Captain Daniel's.

L. C. J. That is the same, as they say.

Mr. Ros. The first Witness, Mrs. Smith, said Capt. Weldy's; indeed, the other said, Captain Daniel's.

L. C. J. She said she was told so, but she could not tell; but she remembers you prayed for him, and his Child too, who was then ill.

Mr. Ros. Pray Sir, as to the truth of the Business; Did you hear me speak of two wicked Kings? That, my Lord, came in, I say upon the second Verse of the 20th of Genesis, which I then was expounding.

L. C. J. Nay ask him in general what he heard you say; and whether he heard you say any thing of two wicked Kings, and what it was.

Mr. Ros. Ay, about Abab, and Abaziah his Son—

L. C. J. Nay, nay, I must have none of those Things, we must have fair Questions put; for, as you see we will not admit the King's Counsel to put any Questions to the Witnesses, nor produce any Witnesses against you, that are leading, or not proper, so nor must you: But if you have a mind to ask him any Questions, what he heard concerning two wicked Kings generally, do so.

Mr. Hudson. Upon the 2d Verse he was then.

L. C. J. Of what Chapter?

Mr. Hudson. Of the 20th of Genesis. I was then in the Place, and writ. He was upon the second Verse, and concerning Abraham's denying of Sarah his Wife. Says Mr. Roswell, Doth Abraham here fall agen into Lying? I thought he had smarted enough in the 12th Chapter, for the same he told to Pharaoh: And doth he fall agen, and not take warning by it? From that you may take notice, that the best of God's Children may fall agen and agen into the same Sin. And there you quoted what Mischief good Jebeshaphat had like to have brought upon himself, by joining with two wicked Kings: First, with wicked Abab King of Israel; and after he was reproved for it by the Prophet, yet he fell into the same Sin agen, by joining with Abab's wicked Son King Abaziah. And so he quoted Sampson, who got Mischief by taking a Wife among the Daughters of the Philistines; and yet after he had felt some smart and hurt by it, yet like good Jebeshaphat, and good Abraham, he falls into the same Sin agen, by going to Timnah, and taking Dalilah.

Mr. Ros. What said I, pray, upon the Seventh Verse?

Mr. Hudson. The seventh Verse was concerning God's appearing to Abimelech in a Dream; where God says, He shall pray for thee, for he is a Prophet, and thou shalt be healed. And there Mr. Roswell spoke concerning the Worth and Value of the Prayers of God's Prophets; wherein he instanceth in one thing, that they were good to cure the King's Evil. And he quoted several Texts of Scripture of the Worth and Value of them; and among the rest was that in the First Book of Kings, the 13th Chapter, and the 6th Verse, wherein the Prophet came to reprove Jeroboam at the Altar at Bethel; and the King stretched forth his Arm, and bid lay hold on him, and the King's Hand was dried up: Upon which the King said to the Prophet, Intreat now the Face of thy God for me, and he did so; the Prophet prayed unto the Lord, and the King's Arm was restored whole as the other. And he did quote that of Hzekiah too.

Mr. Ros. My Lord, this Man did take Notes; and therefore may be the more exact.

Mr. Hudson. Yes, my Lord, I have my Notes, and can read them at large; and I did generally write, my Lord.

Mr. Ros. Then pray, Mr. Hudson, will you declare, whether you heard any thing in that Exposition or Discourse, concerning Rams-horns, broken Platters, and a Stone in a Sling?

Mr. Hudson. That was in the Sermon, Sir, in the Afternoon.

Mr. Ros. She swears it was all in the Morning Discourse.

Mr. Hudson. There was not such a Word in that, as I know of. The Sermon was not in the Morning; you did only expound, as you used to do in the Morning.

L. C. J. If you have done with him, I should ask him a Question or two. Hark you, Sir, Pray what time did this Exercise begin?

VOL. III.

Mr. Hudson. It begun about Eight o'Clock.

L. C. J. What number of People do you think there were there?

Mr. Hudson. I cannot judge how many they were.

L. C. J. How many do you think?

Mr. Hudson. I believe there were a matter of Forty or Fifty there.

L. C. J. No more than Forty or Fifty?

Mr. Hudson. Alas, we could see but in one Room.

L. C. J. What Room were you in?

Mr. Hudson. I was in one of the Chambers.

L. C. J. How many Pair of Stairs high?

Mr. Hudson. Two Pair of Stairs high.

L. C. J. Did you see Mr. Roswell?

Mr. Hudson. No, I could not see him at all.

L. C. J. Was there ever a Bed in the Room where you were?

Mr. Hudson. No, my Lord, there was not.

L. C. J. Was there a Dinner-time between?

Mr. Hudson. There was at Noon a Resting a little while.

L. C. J. Did Mr. Roswell go down?

Mr. Hudson. Yes, my Lord, he did, I believe, go down Stairs.

L. C. J. Do you remember any thing that was spoken of Sampson and Dalilah?

Mr. Hudson. Yes, as I said before, there was about Sampson's going down to Timnah to take Dalilah; shewing his failing, how he fell twice into the same Sin.

L. C. J. Did you hear any Discourse about Canting? Did you observe he used that Word Canting?

Mr. Hudson. No, not that Day, as I know of.

L. C. J. Did you ever hear him use that Word?

Mr. Hudson. Yes, I did one Day.

L. C. J. Ay; What did he say that Day about Canting?

Mr. Hudson. I am not able to tell you very exactly.

L. C. J. You must, you must indeed.

Mr. Hudson. I do assure your Lordship, I know not how to repeat his Expressions about it.

L. C. J. For look you, Sir; though you are not upon your Oath, because the Law doth not allow it; yet the same thing that I told those Witnesses before, the same I must tell you; you must consider, Friend, you come here to serve no Turn, nor Party; you are in the Presence of the great God of Heaven and Earth, who will call you to Account for every thing you testify here; and therefore without any Subterfuges tell us the Truth, and the whole plain Truth without Welt or Guard.

Mr. Hudson. My Lord, I will not deny one Tittle of the Truth, nor tell any thing that is untrue; I know I am in the Presence of a great Court of Justice, and in the presence of the God of Heaven.

L. C. J. Tell us then, what the Prisoner said about Canting.

Mr. Hudson. He was speaking of the wicked Men of the World, that when they spoke concerning serious Religion, called it Canting, and says he, What is Canting? Canting, says he, is a whining Tone.

L. C. J. Did you hear him speak any thing concerning Organs, and Surplices, and white Gowns?

Mr. Hudson. No, my Lord; nothing of Surplices nor white Gowns.

L. C. J. Nor any thing concerning Organs?

Mr. Hudson. No; but something he had concerning the Cathedrals, and their canting Tone there.

Mr. Roswell. Will your Lordship accept an ingenuous Confession from me myself about this Matter?

L. C. J. No, no, Mr. Roswell, that will not be Evidence; you can neither acquit, nor condemn yourself by these Things either confessed or denied. It is your Witnesses that I must ask, and that I expect an Account from. Therefore I ask you, Friend, and pray recollect yourself, How was it that he talked concerning the Canting in Cathedrals?

Mr. Hudson. Truly, my Lord, I cannot give a better Description of it than I have done. For I neither do particularly remember what time it was that I heard him use that Expression, nor can I tell you where it was; neither where, nor when.

Mr. Roswell. Shall I tell your Lordship the Occasion—

L. C. J. Why do you think I believe any Word you say, notwithstanding any Imprecations or Asseverations you make about yourself? It must neither weigh with the Court nor the Jury: we must go according to the Evidence. St. Peter himself, that you say you talked of, denied all with a great many Asseverations; but that Denial did not make him Innocent, no, it was his Sin. So all your Imprecations, and Asseverations, and Affirmations of your own Innocence, do not signify one Farthing to this Cause.

Mr. Att. Gen. Hark you, Mr. Hudson; Let me ask you one Question, Pray when Mr. Roswell had explained those Texts of Scripture, did he not use frequently to make Application of his Quotations?

Mr. Hudson. Yes, my Lord.

Mr. Att. Gen. Then, pray, Sir, after he had spoken of the two wicked Kings, how did he apply that?

Mr. Hudson. My Lord, I will tell you how he applied it. After he had made those Quotations, says he, Take notice, if Abraham fell, and good Jebeshaphat fell, and Sampson fell, and Peter fell, then what are we? Let him that standeth take heed lest he fall: and that was the Application he made of it.

Mr. Att. Gen. Do you speak to all that Mr. Roswell spoke in that Discourse at that time touching these Matters?

Mr. Hudson. No, Sir, not all; I cannot remember all: But the Substance of the distinct Heads I do remember.

Mr. Roswell. Then about the King's Evil; how did you apprehend it was meant?

Mr. Hudson. My Lord, I do not believe he spoke it with respect to that Disease which we call the King's Evil; because he spoke it with reference to the Disease that the King was under.

Mr. Roswell. Did you hear any thing about Twenty Guineas?

Mr. Hudson. No, I did not hear a Word of any Guineas that Day.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did you hear him say any thing about the People's flocking to the King?—Mr. Hudson. No indeed, Sir, not I.

Mr. Ros. Pray, Mr. Hudson, did I name the Word Priests?

Mr. Hudson. No, Sir, I did not hear you name Priests, but Ministers and Prophets; and what a Judgment it was to have the Prophets taken away.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray recollect yourself; Is that a Phrase they use, Ministers and Prophets; or do not they call themselves Priests?

Mr. Hudson. Ministers and Prophets, my Lord, are the usual Words.

Mr. Att. Gen. Priests is the Word I am told they have.

Mr. Ros. Then, Sir, pray will you give an Account how that about the Rams-horns came in?

Mr. Hudson. That, my Lord, was upon that Text, xi. Heb. 12.—

Mr. Ros. Do you remember what time it was; Forenoon, or Afternoon?

Mr. Hudson. I do remember it was in your Sermon in the Afternoon. The Words are these, Therefore sprang there even of one, and him as good as Dead, so many as the Stars in the Sky in multitude, and as the Sand by the Sea-shore innumerable. From whence he raised this Note, or Doctrine; That the great God could by very small Means bring great things to pass. And then he came to prove his Doctrine, by several Instances. Says he, What Works did God do by Moses's Rod? And by Gideon's broken Pitchers routing a whole Army? What great Works has God done by small Means? That by the founding of Rams-horns the Walls of Jericho should fall down! And what great Wonders he wrought when David slew the tremendous Giant Goliath with a Stone out of a Sling! And what great Works and Wonders did the Son of David, our Lord Jesus Christ do, in opening the Eyes of him that was born blind, with a little Clay and Spittle? The Application of that was, A little Grace—

L. C. J. We do not desire to hear your Applications.

Smith. My Lord, if your Lordship please, Mr. Hudson used to expound himself.

Mr. Hudson. My Lord, I used to repeat what I writ, in my own Family, that is all.

L. C. J. Yes, no doubt he is a most excellent Expounder; there are several People take upon them to expound, that can neither read, nor write. But pray, Friend, let me ask you one Question more; Was the Captain, at whose House you were the 14th of September, at Home or at Sea?

Mr. Hudson. My Lord, he was not at Home, but at Sea; and is still at Sea.

L. C. J. Do you remember that he prayed for him at that time?

Mr. Hudson. Yes, my Lord, 'twas his common Practice to pray for the Family wherever he came.

L. C. J. And did he pray for his Son that was sick?

Mr. Hudson. I cannot tell whether he were sick, or no, I do not remember that; but he prayed for the Father and all his Children, the whole Family.

Mr. Ros. Pray did you hear any one Word mentioned of the Kings of England, or of his present Majesty, but only in Praying for him, as I bless God I daily do, that God would give him Grace, and all good Things here, and his Glory hereafter?

Mr. Hudson. Not one Word did I hear named of the Kings of England; nor of any Kings, but those mentioned in the Scriptures, that were quoted, the Kings of Israel, and the like.

Mr. Ros. Was there any Word spoken about Popery being permitted to come in under their Noses?

Mr. Hudson. Not one Word of that was spoken, that I know of.

L. C. J. Did you hear the King of England mentioned at all that Day?

Mr. Hudson. Yes, in his Prayer. It was his constant course to pray for the King.

L. C. J. Ay; what did he pray for?

Mr. Hudson. He used to express himself very heartily in Prayer, that God would enable him to rule and govern the People under his Charge, and bless him. And he used to say, God forbid that he should sin against God in neglecting to pray for the King.

Mr. Ros. It was Samuel's Speech to Saul. Pray, Sir, did you hear that?

L. C. J. Nay, nay, ask him what he did hear you pray.

Mr. Ros. Did I pray about opening the Eyes—

L. C. J. But you must not open your Witnesses Eyes: Do not lead him.

Mr. Hudson. It was his Common Practice to pray for the King, that God would preserve him from all his Enemies.

L. C. J. And we say the same thing too.

Mr. Hudson. And that God would remove all Evil Counsellors from him.

L. C. J. Ay, no Question.

Mr. Hudson. And establish his Throne in Righteousness, and lengthen his Life, and prosper his Reign; and he used to pray as heartily and as favourably for the King, as ever I heard any Man in my Life.

L. C. J. So there was praying in this Hall, I remember, for his late Majesty; for the doing of him Justice: We all know what that meant, and where it ended.

Mr. Ros. Mr. Crier, pray call Mr. George Hall. [Who came in] Mr. Hall, Were you present this 14th Day of September at Rotherbith?

Mr. Hall. Yes, Sir, I was.

Mr. Ros. When I expounded upon the 20th of Genesis?

Mr. Hall. Yes, you did so, Sir.

Mr. Ros. Pray will you inform my Lords what you heard me say?

Mr. Hall. I will inform them to the best of my Memory.

L. C. J. What Trade are you, Friend?

Mr. Hall. I am a Mealman, my Lord.

L. C. J. Well, what say you?

Mr. Hall. The 14th of September last it was my Lot to hear Mr. Rosewell expound the 20th Chapter of Genesis; as it was his usual Course to expound a Chapter.

Mr. Ros. It was not of Choice, but taken in Course. And pray what do you remember was said by me about two wicked Kings?

Mr. Hall. Sir, I remember you brought a Scripture concerning Jehoshaphat joining with two; first of all with wicked Ahab, and afterwards with wicked Abaziah his son; and you proved it out of 2 Chron. xviii. Chap. and 19th and 20th Verses.

Mr. Ros. Do you remember there was any one Word spoken of the Kings of England?

Mr. Hall. There was not one Word of his present Majesty, nor his Father, nor any of the Kings of England; but of the Kings of Israel, Ahab and his son.

Mr. Ros. Well then, concerning Jeroboam, what do you remember of that?

Mr. Hall. As to Jeroboam—* You were expounding from the 7th Verse of the 20th Chapter of Genesis—And in the opening of that 7th Verse among several Texts of Scripture, Mr. Rosewell had this Note,—Hold—Jeroboam—

L. C. J. Ay, about Jeroboam.

Mr. Hall. My Memory fails me—

L. C. J. Ay, so I perceive it doth wonderfully.

Mr. Hall. As to Jeroboam, he brought a Text from the 2d Book of Kings, the 13th, and the former part of the Chapter. There was a Man of God that came to Bethel, and prophesied against Dan and Bethel, and there were these Words, that Jeroboam—

Mr. Ros. He had his Hand dried up—

L. C. J. What do you mean by that? If your Witnesses be out in his Story, must you prompt him? Go on, Friend.

Mr. Hall. He prophesied, that the bones of the Priests should be laid upon the Altar and burnt, as we read in that Text of Scripture, 2 Kings 13. and the beginning. And Jeroboam was there, and put forth his Hand—and bid some body take hold of him—whereat the Hand of Jeroboam dried up.

Mr. Ros. If it please your Lordship, I will call another.

L. C. J. Ay, ay, you may set him going, for he is out.

Mr. Hall. If it please you, I can go a little further. I have something to say as to that—

L. C. J. You had best go out, and recollect yourself; you have forgot your Cue at present.

Mr. Ros. Mr. Crier, pray call Mr. James Atkinson. [Who came in.]

L. C. J. You, Mrs. Smith, I will ask you, (I will not ask him himself, because he may accuse himself by it) Is this the Miller, at whose House one of the Meetings was?

Smith. No, my Lord, the former Witness Hudson is the Miller where he preached.

L. C. J. Well, what do you ask this Witness?

Mr. Ros. Mr. Atkinson, were you at our Meeting the 14th of September last?—Mr. Atkinson. Yes, I was there the 14th of September.

Mr. Ros. Were you there at the Beginning?

Mr. Atkinson. I was there from the Beginning to the End.

L. C. J. Pray, what Trade are you, Sir?

Mr. Atkinson. My Lord, I am a Mathematical Instrument-Maker.

Mr. Ros. What Chapter was I upon?

Mr. Atkinson. The 20th of Genesis in course, and not out of Choice. His usual Custom was to expound a Chapter before he preached.

Mr. Ros. Pray, what do you remember was said by me of two wicked Kings?

Mr. Atkinson. Of two wicked Kings! I remember that was upon the second Verse; how Abraham said of Sarah his Wife, She is my Sister: And upon that Mr. Rosewell had this Note, That a Child of God may fall into the Commission of the same Sin again and again, after he had been reprov'd and smarted for it. And he quoted several Instances: As that of Lot committing Incest over and over again; that of Peter denying his Lord three Times; that of Sampson out of Judges taking two Wives among the Philistines, one after another; and then quoted that of Jehoshaphat joining with two wicked Kings; Ahab, in the 2d of Chron. xviii. Chap. and afterwards, though reprov'd by the Prophet Jehu, he joined with Ahab's wicked Son Abaziah.

Mr. Ros. Pray, what did you hear of the King of England?

Mr. Atkinson. Not a Word, unless it were in his Prayer; in which he always used to pray earnestly for the King.

Mr. Ros. What do you remember was spoken about the King's Evil?

Mr. Atkinson. There was an Expression concerning the Evil, upon the 7th Verse; He is a Prophet, and he shall pray for thee, and thou shalt be healed. And he had this Expression, or to this same Effect, for I hope you cannot expect I should speak every Word exactly; but I shall endeavour to speak the Sense, and the Truth, as near as I can, and nothing else. He said, the Prayers of God's Prophets were very prevalent for the healing and helping others in time of need. And he quoted several Instances; as that out of the Prophet Jeremy, xxvii. Chap. and 18th Verse, to the best of my Remembrance. And he also quoted that of the 1 Kings 13. concerning Jeroboam. The Prophet came to reprove him, and Jeroboam stretched out his Hand against him, and it dried up; and then he desired of the Prophet to pray for him; which he did, and his Hand was healed.

L. C. J. Look you, what you say may be true, and so may what they say too; for he might say both. You used to say abundance of good things, as well as some bad ones; therefore I would ask him this Question, whether he heard any thing of the King's Evil, or that had any Reference to the King of England?

Mr. Atkinson. This is all that I heard that comes to my Memory concerning the King's Evil: That a godly Man by his Prayers may help to cure the King's Evil, and thereby the poorest Christian may gratify the greatest King, as says our English Annotator upon that 7th Verse; but I never understood him to mean it of the Disease of the King's Evil.

Mr. Ros. Do you remember that I preached in this Discourse about Rams-horns, or broken Platters?

Mr. Atkinson. I did not hear of any such thing upon all that Chapter.

L. C. J. But did you hear him speak of any such thing at all that Day?

Mr. Atkinson. Yes, my Lord, I did.

L. C. J. Come then, let us have it. What was it?—Mr. Atkinson. His Course was, after the Exposition, to preach a Sermon.

Mr. Ros.

Mr. Rof. Was it in the Forenoon, or in the Afternoon?

Mr. Atkinson. It was after the Exposition; he prayed, and then ceased for a quarter of an Hour.

Mr. Rof. Was it distinct in the Afternoon?

Mr. Atkinson. It was another distinct Discourse after the People had received some Refection in the Afternoon; I cannot tell exactly the time. But the Discourse was preached from Heb. xi. 12. I suppose that I need not repeat the Words.

L. C. J. No, no, I care not for that.

Mr. Atkinson. But he thence raised this Doctrine, That the great God can effect great Matters by very unlikely means; and he instanced in several Particulars to prove it. As the Miracles of God wrought by Moses's Rod; and the Walls of Jericho falling down at the sound of Rams-horns, in the 6th of Joshua; and then he quoted that of Gideon, a dreadful Rout of a great Army by a few Earthen Pots and Pitchers; and what a tremendous Champion did David smite down with a Sling and a Stone!

Mr. Rof. I have this one Question more to ask you; Did you hear me speak any thing of standing to their Principles?

Mr. Atkinson. Not one Word; and I was there all that live-long Day; from beginning to end.

L. C. J. Then, Sir, I would ask you a Question or two, if Mr. Rosewell have done with you?—Mr. Rof. I have, my Lord.

L. C. J. Pray, what Room were you in?

Mr. Atkinson. I was in the same Room that Mr. Rosewell was, he stood at the Door.

L. C. J. What, one Pair of Stairs?—Mr. Atkinson. Yes.

L. C. J. Is there not another Room between the Floor, or the ground Room, and that you were in?

Mr. Atkinson. Yes, Sir; there is another little Room, a little lower than that.

L. C. J. Was there a Bed in that Room you were in?

Mr. Atkinson. Yes, Sir.

L. C. J. Did you sit upon the Bed?

Mr. Atkinson. I did sit upon the Bed sometimes.

L. C. J. Had you a mourning Cloak on that Day?

Mr. Atkinson. Yes, I had.

L. C. J. Had you a mourning Hatband?—Mr. Atkinson. Yes, I had.

L. C. J. Do you remember who sat by you?

Mr. Atkinson. No, my Lord, I do not know.

L. C. J. Do you remember any Body gave you your Boys Shoes from under the Bed?

Mr. Atkinson. Yes, my Lord; but I cannot tell who.

L. C. J. Well then, I ask you, did you hear any mention made that Day about Dalilah and Sampson?—Mr. Atkinson. Yes, my Lord.

L. C. J. You did?—Mr. Atkinson. Yes, my Lord, as an Instance of a good Man's falling twice into the same Sin.

L. C. J. Did you hear any mention made at that time concerning any other matter that you remember?

Mr. Atkinson. My Lord, that of Sampson and Dalilah was one of the Instances that I repeated before.

L. C. J. Mrs. Smith, was it the same Day that he spoke about Canting?

Smith. Yes, it was;

L. C. J. Do you remember, Friend, any thing that was spoken by him that Day concerning Church-musick?

Mr. Atkinson. No, my Lord, not a Word that Day that I know of.

L. C. J. Did you hear any thing about Canting that Day?

Mr. Atkinson. No, not a Word.

L. C. J. Did you hear him talk any thing of Surplices or white Gowns?

Mr. Atkinson. No, my Lord, not one Word all that Day; but that of Sampson and Dalilah, my Lord——

L. C. J. You remember that?

Mr. Atkinson. Yes, it was one Instance of a good Man's committing the same Crime once and again.

Mr. Rof. Yes, I own it was so; but not as the other Witnesses swear.

Mr. Atkinson. Truly, my Lord, I would not tell one tittle of a Lye; to the best of my Remembrance——

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray, Sir, let me ask you one Question: I see you are very perfect in the Proofs of the Sermon; Did you take Notes that Day?

Mr. Atkinson. No, I did not, Sir.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Can you remember then any one Observation that he made upon any other Verse? Pray what Observation did he make upon the eighth Verse?—Mr. Atkinson. None at all.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What upon the 12th or 13th Verses?

Mr. Atkinson. I cannot tell; I can upon the 5th.

Mr. Rof. Will your Lordship give me leave to acquaint you with that?

Mr. Atkinson. He only explained that which was difficult; but when it was a little Historical, he only read it. But what he observed upon the second and the seventh Verses, was the substance of the whole Exposition almost.

Mr. Att. Gen. Has no body read the Notes of that Sermon to you since?

Mr. Atkinson. I endeavoured to recollect myself, after I heard Mr. Rosewell was accused; and writ, what I could remember, down.

Mr. Att. Gen. But did any body read their Notes to you since?

Mr. Atkinson. No, indeed, there has no body read any Notes to me.

Mr. Att. Gen. Upon your Oath how came you to remember the word Tremendous?—L. C. J. He is not upon his Oath, Mr. Attorney.

Mr. Atkinson. Because when he made such short Notes, I endeavoured to remember them; I thank God I have a pretty good Memory.

Mr. Att. Gen. Ay, upon my Word, a very strong one.

Mr. Atkinson. He did use the Word Tremendous Champion.

Mr. Recorder. Had you and Mr. Hudson any Discourse about this Matter since?

Mr. Atkinson. Yes, Sir, we might talk what we did remember to one another.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did he write down the Sermon?

Mr. Atkinson. Yes, I suppose he did; but I did not sit by him.

Mr. Rof. Mr. Crier, Pray call Mr. William Smith. [Who came in.]

Mr. Smith. Were you at this Meeting the 14th of September last?

Smith. Yes, I was, Sir.

Mr. Rof. Pray will you acquaint my Lords, what you heard me say there? What Chapter did I expound?

Mr. Smith. The 20th Chapter of Genesis.

Mr. Rof. What do you remember of it?

Smith. I remember the Chapter concerned Abraham and Abimelech.

Mr. Rof. What did you hear of the People's flocking to the King to cure the King's Evil?—Mr. Smith. I heard no such Word.

Mr. Rof. Or that his Majesty could not cure the King's Evil?

Mr. Smith. No, Sir, not a Word of it.

Mr. Rof. Did you hear any thing at all concerning the King's Evil?

Mr. Smith. Sir, you did quote something out of the Annotator about the King's Evil.

Mr. Rof. Do you remember what that was?

Mr. Smith. I cannot remember it fully at length, Sir.

Mr. Rof. Pray did you understand it as meant of the King's Evil; or of the Evil of Abimelech King of Gerar?

Mr. Smith. I did not understand it of the Disease so called; but of the Evil of Abimelech.

Mr. Rof. What did you hear concerning Priests and Prophets?

Mr. Smith. You said it was the Function of the Prophets to pray for the People.

Mr. Rof. What do you remember was said of two wicked Kings?

Mr. Smith. You did make mention of two wicked Kings, Abab and Abaziah; that Jehoshaphat sinned, in joining with them one after another.

Mr. Rof. Was there any thing of the Kings of England, or of my Sovereign?—Mr. Smith. No, not at all, Sir.

L. C. J. Did you hear any thing concerning Jeroboam?

Mr. Smith. Yes, that Jeroboam stretched forth his Hand, and his Hand withered; and the Prophet prayed for him, and his Hand was restored.

L. C. J. Did you hear any thing in the Exposition of broken Pitchers, I mean in the Forenoon?—Mr. Smith. No, I think not.

L. C. J. What did you hear of them? and when?

Mr. Smith. To the best of my Remembrance it was in the Afternoon; That God could do great matters by small means; and you quoted several things. I did not stand well, so that I could not hear all the Particulars.

L. C. J. But what did you hear?

Mr. Rof. Pray did you hear any Word of standing to their Principles, or of overcoming, that Day?

Mr. Smith. No, I did not.

Mr. Just. Hol. It seems you did not stand in a good Place to hear.

Mr. Rof. Mr. Crier, Pray call Mr. William Bates.

[Which he did, but he did not appear.]

Crier. He is not here, Sir.

Mr. Rof. Pray, Sir, call Mr. George Hales then. [Who came in.]

Were you this 14th Day of September at this Meeting, Sir?

Mr. Hales. Yes, I was, Sir.

Mr. Rof. Were you there from the Beginning to the End?

Mr. Hales. Yes, I was, Sir.

Mr. Rof. Pray then will you tell my Lord what you heard me say, with reference to flocking to the King, or curing the King's Evil.

Mr. Hales. I heard nothing that you should say of People's flocking to the King; but you were speaking of the King's Evil, and that was thus: My Lord, it was from the 7th Verse of the 20th Chapter of Genesis, He is a Prophet, and shall pray for thee, and thou shalt be healed. God is speaking to Abimelech in a Dream; and after a little Paraphrase upon the Words, Mr. Rosewell said, That a godly Man's Prayer was a Sovereign Cure for the King's Evil; and quoted some Scripture Instances, as in 1 Kings, where God having sent a Man of God to reprove Jeroboam for his Idolatry, he stretched out his Hand, and his Hand withered; and he desired the Prophet to pray to the Lord his God, that his Hand might be restored; and accordingly it was accomplished.

Mr. Rof. Did you hear any thing of the Kings of England?

Mr. Hales. No, not one Word all that Day; only you prayed for His Majesty, as you used to do.

Mr. Rof. What do you remember was said about Rams-horns?

Mr. Hales. I remember you were preaching out of the xi. Heb. 12. and the Words were these, Therefore sprang there of one, and him as good as dead, as many as the Stars in the Sky for Multitude, and as the Sand upon the Seashore innumerable. From whence he had this Observation, That God is able to bring great Matters to pass by small Means. And so accordingly Mr. Rosewell instanced how the Walls of Jericho were shook down by the sounding of Rams-horns; or something to that Purpose.

Mr. Rof. What do you remember of broken Platters?

Mr. Hales. I remember you brought in an Instance concerning Gideon; and I think it was thus, that by breaking a few earthen Pitchers he routed a great Army.

Mr. Rof. And so of a Stone and a Sling. But was there any thing of standing to Principles?

Mr. Hales. Not a Word.

L. C. J. As you heard?

Mr. Hales. That I heard.

L. C. J. Or that you remember?

Mr. Hales. Yes, my Lord. But you said, What a Tremendous Champion did David slay with a Sling and a Stone!

L. C. J. Did you take Notes?

Mr. Hales. No, my Lord.

L. C. J. Then pray how came you to remember that Word Tremendous?

Mr. Hales. I do remember he did use that Word.

L. C. J. Have you had any Discourse about this matter since?

Mr. Hales. Yes, I have.

L. C. J. With whom?

Mr. Hales.

Mr. Hales. With several Friends.
 L. C. J. Did you discourse with Atkinson about it?
 Mr. Hales. Yes, I did.
 L. C. J. Did you with William Smith?
 Mr. Hales. No; I do not remember I did.
 L. C. J. Did you discourse with Hudson?
 Mr. Hales. I cannot say I did.
 Mr. Att. Gen. Nor you cannot say you did not.
 L. C. J. Did you hear any Notes read?—Mr. Hales. I think I did.
 L. C. J. Whose Notes were they you heard?
 Mr. Hales. Thomas Hudson's Notes, I think; I am not sure of it.
 L. C. J. It is so hard and difficult to get out the Truth from this sort of People; they do so turn and wind. How long after the Sermon was preached was it that you heard the Notes read?
 Mr. Hales. I was in the Country when Mr. Rosewell was taken; and when I came home again, I heard of it.
 L. C. J. But you did not remember it till after he was taken?
 Mr. Hales. No, my Lord; and I read the Chapter myself, and remember'd these things.
 Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray is the Word Tremendous in Hudson's Notes, or no?
 Mr. Hales. I cannot tell whether it be, or no.
 Mr. Att. Gen. Pray, when was the next Day after this?
 Mr. Hales. I cannot tell, I was in the Country.
 L. C. J. Did he take Notes in Long-Hand, or Short?
 A Stranger that stood by. In Characters, my Lord.
 Mr. Att. Gen. Have you not heard him preach since that time?
 Mr. Hales. Sir, I went into the Country soon after.
 Mr. Att. Gen. Where was his Text at any other time, can you tell?
 Mr. Hales. No, I cannot readily.
 Mr. Att. Gen. Nor what he discoursed upon?
 Mr. Hales. As to any particular time I cannot.
 Mr. Att. Gen. Do not you remember his Text at any other Time?
 L. C. J. When was the time before this 14th of September, that you did hear him preach? You have heard him before?
 Mr. Hales. Yes, my Lord, I have.
 L. C. J. Was that upon a Sunday?—Mr. Hales. Yes, it was.
 L. C. J. Did you hear him the Sunday before?—Mr. Hales. Yes, I did.
 L. C. J. Well, what did he preach upon then?
 Mr. Hales. This I know, that in his Course of Reading and Exposition, he was upon the 19th of Genesis.
 L. C. J. What was his Discourse upon that Chapter?
 Mr. Hales. That I cannot tell.
 L. C. J. Nor the Day afterward?—Mr. Hales. No, my Lord.
 L. C. J. Upon my word, you have a lucky Memory for this Purpose; to serve a turn, it can just hit to this very Day. You are very punctually instructed.
 Mr. Sol. Gen. Do you remember any other part of the Sermon of this Day than what you have related?—Mr. Hales. Yes.
 L. C. J. Ay; tell us what you remember besides.
 Mr. Hales. I must consider a little; I am not so ready at it.
 L. C. J. Ay, come, let us hear it.
 Mr. Ros. These Things he might have more occasion to recollect by reason of my Charge.
 L. C. J. You say right, just occasion for this Purpose. But I thought these Men that have such stupendous Memories as to tell you they remember the Chapter, and the Verse, and particular Words, when it serves a Turn, might remember something before or after, at least in the same Sermon. Why do you think they were enlightened to understand and remember that one Day more than any other? They can remember particularly as to such things, and can clan it together to answer such particular Questions; but as to any thing before or after, they are not prepared.
 Mr. Just. Withins. Have you any more Witnesses, Mr. Rosewell?
 Mr. Ros. Mr. Crier, pray call Mr. John Wharton. [Who came in.]
 Mr. Just. Holloway. Where do you dwell, Wharton?
 Mr. Wharton. At Rotherhith.
 Mr. Just. Holloway. What Calling are you of?
 Mr. Wharton. A Gardener.
 Mr. Ros. Were you at the Meeting the 14th of September?
 Mr. Wharton. Yes, I was, Sir.
 Mr. Ros. What do you remember, pray, of the Exposition then concerning Flocking of the People to the King to be cured of the King's Evil?
 Mr. Wharton. Sir, I do remember upon your Exposition of the 20th of Genesis, you were speaking concerning Abimelech King of Gerar; and you took your Exposition thus, That Abimelech had taken away the Wife of Faithful Abraham, that I do remember very well; and that you did say in your Exposition, that the Prayers of the Prophet were prevalent for the curing of the King's Evil. And then you brought your Proof, to the best of my remembrance, concerning King Jeroboam; that Jeroboam stretched out his hand against the Prophet of the Lord, and that the King cried, Lay hold of him, when he came to cry against the Altar at Bethel, and his Hand dried up; whereupon the King desired the Prophet to pray to the Lord, that his Hand might be restored; and he did so. This was the Exposition that you made upon that Verse in Part.
 Mr. Ros. Do you remember any thing of comparing the King of England to Jeroboam?
 Mr. Wharton. I do not remember any such Passage.
 Mr. Ros. Do you remember any thing about two wicked Kings?
 Mr. Wharton. I do remember this Passage, concerning Jehoshaphat, that he had fallen twice into the same Sin, by taking part, first, with wicked Ahab, and then with his wicked son Ahaziah.
 Mr. Ros. Was there any thing of the Kings of England mentioned in this Discourse?
 Mr. Wharton. No, nothing, Sir. It was but an accidental thing that I heard you then. I heard nothing of the King of England in your Exposition or Sermon, but only in your Prayers; when you pray'd for his long Life and happy Reign.

L. C. J. Did you ever hear him before that time?
 Mr. Wharton. Yes, my Lord.
 L. C. J. Did you ever hear him since?
 Mr. Wharton. Yes, once since.
 L. C. J. Now let us know his Text, and the Subject Matter he was upon since.
 Mr. Wharton. Truly, as to the time since I did not take much Account; for I did not write.
 L. C. J. Canst thou tell us of what past at any time before?
 Mr. Wharton. Once before I heard him upon the xix. of Genesis, where he made his Exposition—Truly, I have not any Notes—
 L. C. J. Then hark you, Friend, have you spoken with any Body since that 14th of September that did take Notes?
 Mr. Wharton. I am not acquainted much with them that were his constant Hearers, that did take Notes.
 L. C. J. But answer my Question that I ask you; did you ever discourse at all about this Matter, and with whom?
 Mr. Wharton. I came thither by myself, I say; I had not much Acquaintance with them.
 L. C. J. Nay, do not prevaricate, Friend, with the Court, but speak the Truth out plainly. I ask you in the Presence of Almighty God, did you ever speak with any Body since the 14th of September about this Business?
 Mr. Wharton. Mr. Hudson did speak with me about it.
 L. C. J. Did he read his Notes to you?
 Mr. Wharton. Yes, he did.
 L. C. J. It is a strange thing, Truth will not come out without this Wire-drawing. You cannot help this Canting for your Life; this is Canting, if you would know what Canting is. Did you ever speak with Hales, or Atkinson, or Smith about it?
 Mr. Wharton. I do not know Atkinson, or Hales. I know Mr. Smith; but I never spoke with him about it; nor he with me.
 L. C. J. When was it that Hudson and you spoke together of this thing?
 Mr. Wharton. It was last Thursday.
 L. C. J. Did he come to you, or you to him?
 Mr. Wharton. I met him.
 L. C. J. Where did you meet him?—Mr. Wharton. At Rotherhith.
 L. C. J. Did he speak to you of it first, or you to him?
 Mr. Wharton. He spoke to me.
 L. C. J. Then I ask you (and remember, though you are not upon your Oath, yet you are to testify the Truth, as if you were upon your Oath) did he mention any thing of Jeroboam?
 Mr. Wharton. Yes, he did.
 L. C. J. Of Jehoshaphat? and of Abimelech?
 Mr. Wharton. Yes, he did.
 L. C. J. Did you mention any of these things to him?
 Mr. Wharton. Yes, Sir, I repeated more then, than I have done now.
 Mr. Att. Gen. Was your Meeting accidental, or appointed?
 Mr. Wharton. It was accidental in the Street; I dwell below him a great deal.
 Mr. Att. Gen. And where was it?
 Mr. Wharton. We were talking in the Street.
 Mr. Just. Withins. Did not you go into some House?
 Mr. Sol. Gen. Had you any Discourse at that time of being present at the Trial of Mr. Rosewell?
 Mr. Wharton. No, I did not know any thing of it till I saw the Subpœna.
 Mr. Sol. Gen. Before you discoursed with him, did you remember all these things?
 Mr. Wharton. Yes, I could remember them as well as he; and a great deal more then.
 Mr. Att. Gen. Then cannot you remember what was done the next Day?
 Mr. Wharton. No, I cannot.
 Mr. Att. Gen. How came you then to remember so well what was said that Day?
 Mr. Wharton. Because there was a remarkable Passage, that I had never heard before expounded, I had not staid at that time, but that he was expounding of a very remarkable thing, which I had never heard expounded before.
 L. C. J. Have you any more Witnesses, Mr. Rosewell?
 Mr. Ros. I have some Witnesses to call more, if your Lordship pleases, to testify concerning my Life; and that I always prayed for the King, that God would crown him with Grace here, and Glory hereafter; and that he would remove all his Enemies from him.
 L. C. J. Ay; Mr. Rosewell, first remove all his Friends from him; and then remove his Evil Counsellors.
 Mr. Ros. Pray, Crier, call Mr. Charles Arthur. [But he did not appear.]
 Mr. Just. Withins. Come, it seems, he is not here, call another.
 Mr. R. J. Call Mr. Thomas Jolliff. [Who appeared.]
 L. C. J. What do you call this Man to?
 Mr. Ros. My Lord, this Person I call to testify with respect to my Conversation and Carriage towards His Majesty and the Government.
 L. C. J. What is your Name, Sir?—Mr. Jolliff. Thomas Jolliff.
 Mr. Just. Hol. Where do you live, Sir?
 Mr. Jolliff. In Mary Magdalen's Parish.
 L. C. J. Why not St. Mary Magdalen's?
 Mr. Ros. He is my Neighbour, my Lord.
 L. C. J. But, I suppose, he thinks that would have made the Name so much the longer; or else, he thinks that there is Popery in calling it so.
 Mr. Jolliff. No, my Lord, I have called it a Hundred times, and a Hundred times, St. Mary Magdalen.
 L. C. J. Prithee then do it again, it will never be the worse for thee, I dare say. Well, Mr. Rosewell, what do you ask him?
 Mr. Ros. Pray, Sir, will you testify what you know of my Conversation towards the Government, and particularly towards His Majesty?
 Mr. Jolliff. My Lord, in the time of Indulgence I have heard Mr. Rosewell once, or twice, or more; and I heard him pray for the King, and the Peace and Welfare of the Nation, as heartily as ever I heard any Minister in England in my Life.

Mr. Ros.

Mr. Rof. Pray, Sir, for my Conversation; Did you ever hear any thing of my Disloyalty or Disaffection to his Majesty, or the Government?

Mr. Jelliff. No, Sir, I never heard any thing of any Disloyalty, or any such thing in my Life; but all the Parish will give you an Account, that you have behaved yourself as an honest Man; and I never knew that, either in Word or Deed, you were accused of any Disloyalty. And, my Lord, if you please to give me my Oath, I will swear it; for it is the same thing to me to testify here in such a Court under an Oath, or without it; for I ought, I know, to testify the Truth.

Mr. Rof. My Lord, I am confident that what he says he would swear; and he is a very honest Man.

L. C. J. Well, Mr. Roswell, if you have any more Witnesses, call them; and make what Remarks upon the Evidence you please afterwards, for this is not the time for making Remarks.

Mr. Rof. I humbly thank your Lordship for your great Favour.

L. C. J. I do not speak it to cramp you in your time; but call your Witnesses, and then make what Remarks you will: For God forbid we should hinder you from taking your full time; for you stand here for your Life.

Mr. Rof. Is Mr. Winnacott here?

[He did not appear.]

Then pray call Captain Richard Cotton.

[But he did not appear.]

Call Mr. Thomas Fipps.

[Then Capt. Cotton appear'd.]

Mr. Rof. This Gentleman, my Lord, hath known me for several Years. Captain Cotton, I pray, Sir, will you speak what you know of my Conversation, and Life, and Loyalty, with respect to the King and Government?

Capt. Cotton. My Lord, and Gentlemen of the Jury, of late I have not frequented Mr. Roswell's Company, or his Congregation; but when the Door stood open, without opposition, I have been there; and have heard him pray for the King and Government several times; and bless God, that we lived under so peaceable a Prince, when all our Neighbours were in Blood and War.

Mr. Rof. Pray, Sir, have you ever heard, that either in Word, or Deed, I should ever declare against his Majesty or the Government?

Capt. Cotton. No, I never heard any such thing in my Life; but what I heard now upon this Trial up and down the Hall, as I was walking below.

Mr. Just. Withins. How long ago is it, that you speak of, Mr. Cotton?

Capt. Cotton. I was abroad most of the time at Sea; but this was three, or four, or five Years ago.

Mr. Just. Withins. What time was that?

Capt. Cotton. It was in the time of the Indulgence.

Mr. Just. Withins. Ay, then, it may be, he could speak kindly enough of the Government.

Mr. Rof. He has known me these ten Years. Have you not, Sir?

Capt. Cotton. Yes, I believe I have, ever since you came thither.

[Then Mr. Fipps came in.]

Mr. Rof. This Gentleman hath known me several Years, have you not, Sir?

Mr. Fipps. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Rof. Pray, Sir, will you give my Lord and the Court an Account what you know of my Life and Conversation, and of my Loyalty or Disloyalty to the King or Government?

Mr. Fipps. My Lord, I have known this Gentleman divers Years. He lived in Wiltshire, and there he had the Reputation of a very honest Man, a good Scholar, and a pious Man. I never heard him preach in my Life, because I never go to Conventicles; but I have been in the House, where I have heard him pray in the Family; and there he prayed very earnestly for the King and Government, for the Prosperity of it. Since I came to London he came to London too, and has been here in London about ten Years; and has been often in my Company since, and in the late Times, the Bethelish Times, when every Body did take Liberty to say what they would of the King and Government; I have been often in his Company, and heard him speak with a great deal of Respect of the King, and of the Government, and thank God for the Liberty he did enjoy, and the Protection he had from the Government; but I never heard him speak an ill Word of the Government in my Life; and I have known him as much (I believe) as any other Man that was not his Hearer; he was always reputed a very ingenious Man; and that is all I can say. I never heard or knew any thing of ill of him in my Life.

Mr. Rof. Pray call Mr. Galeb Veering.

[Who came in.]

Sir, you have known me several Years. Pray be pleased to testify to my Lord, and the Court, what you have known of my Conversation with respect to his Majesty and the Government.

Mr. Veering. My Lord, I have known Mr. Roswell these several Years; and I have been in Company with him upon the Occasion of receiving Money on Account of Rent for a Friend of mine; and likewise have heard him formerly, when he preached publicly; and never heard any thing from him that reflected upon the Government, or shewed any Disrespect to the King. I have heard him pray often very heartily for the King, and he never meddled with any publick Business, nor spoke of any News while I was concern'd with him.

Mr. Rof. Pray, Sir, did you ever hear of any ill I should speak of my Sovereign?

Mr. Veering. I have heard him often pray for the King and Government; and I never heard any Man say that he did otherwise, or that ever he spoke an ill Word concerning any of them.

Mr. Roswell. Call Mr. John Hitchcock—

[Who came in.]

Sir, you are a Gentleman that have known me for several Years; pray, will you testify what you have known concerning me? And if you have heard or known any ill of my Conversation towards the King, pray speak it out, and let me be shamed before God, and this great Assembly.

Mr. Hitchcock. I have known him, my Lord, several Years, and have heard him formerly, though not of late; and when I heard him, he used constantly to pray for the King and Government; I never knew him to speak any thing against the King and Government in my Life, but always spoke very worthily of them.

Mr. Rof. Have you heard me often pray for the King?

Mr. Hitchcock. I have so, Sir, a great many times.

Mr. Rof. How long is that ago?

Mr. Hitchcock. About two or three Years ago, my Lord; and I never knew him to be but a very worthy Gentleman.

Mr. Rof. Pray call Mr. Michael Hinman—

[Who came in.]

My Lord, here is another Gentleman that hath known me several Years. Pray, Sir, will you speak what you know of my Conversation, with respect to His Majesty and the Government?

Mr. Hinman. My Lord, I have known him many Years, and been in his Company several times, and never heard him speak any thing of ill relating to the King or Government.

Mr. Rof. Pray, Sir, have you not been (upon some Occasions) present where I have prayed?

Mr. Hinman. Yes, Sir, I have heard you pray; and I have heard you pray for the King very heartily.

Mr. Rof. Have you heard of any Evil I should either say, or do? Or any thing by Word or Deed against the King or Government?

Mr. Hinman. No, never in all my Life, one way or other.

Mr. Rof. Pray call Mr. Nicholas Wanley.

[Who came in.]

Sir, you have known me for these many Years; pray will you be pleased to speak the Truth of what you know of my Conversation, with respect to the King and Government.

Mr. Wanley. My Lord, I have known the Prisoner at the Bar several Years; I have been frequently in his Company; and never heard him speak an ill Word against the King or Government in my Life; but have often heard him wish that the King might live, and have a long and prosperous Reign: I never heard him say one ill Word of the Government in my Life; but always, when he spoke of it, it was with all the respect that any Person could do.

Mr. Rof. Did you ever hear from any other Person, directly or indirectly, that I have spoken reflectively upon His Majesty?

Mr. Wanley. Never in my Life, my Lord.

Mr. Rof. One way or other?

Mr. Wanley. No, not any way at all.

Mr. Rof. Pray, call Mr. John Strong—

[Who appeared.]

Sir, you are a Gentleman that have known me many Years too, ten or twelve Years, I believe.—Mr. Strong. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Rof. Pray, will you tell my Lord, and the Jury, what you know of me with respect to my Behaviour in Word or Deed, in reference to his Majesty, or the Government?

Mr. Strong. Sir, I have heard you teach several times formerly; I was not at this time indeed (for which you now stand accused) at that Place: But I never heard you speak a Word against his Majesty, or the Government; but you always prayed very earnestly for his Majesty.

Mr. Rof. Did you ever hear that I should say any thing ill of the King or Government?—Mr. Strong. No, never.

Mr. Rof. Call Mr. John Cutloe—

[Who appeared.]

Sir, you have known me too very many Years: What do you know, pray, concerning my Behaviour towards his Majesty and the Government?

Mr. Cutloe. My Lord, I never knew him speak one Word disrespectfully of the Government, or the King, in my Life; tho' I have known him some Years.

Mr. Rof. Did you ever hear from any Body else, that I did speak ill of the King or Government, directly or indirectly?

Mr. Cutloe. No, never a Word, I assure you, Sir.

Mr. Rof. Have you been where you have heard me pray for his Majesty?

Mr. Cutloe. Yes, Sir; I remember at Bristol once occasionally I heard you in the time of Liberty; otherwise I cannot say I have heard you. But I never heard any thing against the Government; but you always behaved yourself Loyal and Peaceably that I know of.

Mr. Rof. Call Mr. Charles Melfum—

[Who appeared.]

My Lord, I call this Gentleman, who will acquaint you that he lived with me many Years in an honourable Family, a Person of Quality of this Nation, one of the Hungerfords, where, my Lord, I was Tutor to Sir Edward's Son for near seven Years; a Gentleman well known for his great Loyalty to the King and Government: So that if I had been such an Enemy to the King, or so disaffected as these People would make me to be, sure he would never have entertained me. Pray, Mr. Melfum, will you please to acquaint my Lord, and the Jury, how many Years I was in that Family?

Mr. Melfum. Seven Years; and I was above Fourteen myself.

Mr. Rof. Pray, what do you know of my Carriage in that honourable Family, with respect to the King and Government?

Mr. Melfum. As far as I know for my Life, I will declare. I do not remember he did trouble himself, or meddle with any Man's Business but his own. He was a Man that kept much to his Study: And when he came up to Prayer, he prayed heartily for the King; and had the good Word of all his Neighbours thereabout.

Mr. Rof. Have you often heard me pray for the King?

Mr. Melfum. I have heard him a Hundred times pray for the King; I never miss Prayers when I was at Home; and it was his constant Practice.

L. C. J. Did he pray in the Family then?

Mr. Melfum. Yes, he did.

L. C. J. Did he use to go to Church?

Mr. Melfum. Yes, he went to Church, to the beginning of the Prayers; he did frequently attend Divine Service.

L. C. J. Did he receive the Sacrament in all that time?

Mr. Melfum. Yes, I believe he did; I cannot say it directly.

Mr. Rof. I was a constant Attender upon the Publick Ministry. It is now above a Dozen Years ago; it was in the Year 1664, my Lord, and so downward. Sir, You know I was a constant Attendant upon the Ministry of the Church, and the Worship of God there.

L. C. J. Did you ever hear him make use of the Common-Prayer himself in the Family?

Mr. Melfum. I cannot say he did.

L. C. J. Well; have you any more Witnesses, Sir?

Mr. Ros. Yes, my Lord. Pray call Mr. Robert Medham.

[Who appeared.]

Here is another Gentleman, my Lord, that lived in that Family. Pray, Mr. Medham, how long did you live in that honourable Family?

Mr. Medham. About four Years.

Mr. Ros. Was that in the Time that I was there?

Mr. Medham. Yes, it was.

Mr. Ros. Pray then, Sir, will you declare what you know of my Conversation in that Family with respect to the Publick?

Mr. Medham. My Lord, it is a great while ago; but at that time Mr. Rosewell did always keep to the Parish-Church. He was Chaplain to my Lady Hungerford; and always pray'd for the King at every time of Prayer.

Mr. Ros. Did you ever hear that I should speak or declare any thing against the King or Government, in all my Life, all my time, or your time that I was there?

Mr. Medham. I must needs say, I never did hear any such thing in my Life.

Mr. Just. Hol. But it was not the Prayers of the Church that he used?

Mr. Medham. I cannot say that.

L. C. J. Did you ever hear him use the Prayers of the Church?

Mr. Medham. The Prayer that I heard, was that which was usually made in the Family.

L. C. J. But pray, speak plain; Did he use the Common-Prayer?

Mr. Medham. No, my Lord; I cannot say he used the Common-Prayer.

L. C. J. I tell you what I mean; Did he pray out of the Book of the Common-Prayer?

Mr. Medham. No, my Lord, I cannot say that.

L. C. J. Dost thou take his EXTEMPORE Prayer to be the Prayers of the Church?

Mr. Just. Withins. My Lord, he does not know the Difference, I believe; I believe he does not go to Church.

Mr. Medham. Yes, I used to attend upon the Public; and so did Mr. Rosewell.

Mr. Just. Withins. Well, Sir, have you any more Witnesses?

Mr. Ros. Yes, my Lord: Pray call Mrs. Anne Broadhurst.

[Then Mr. Winnacott appeared and offered himself.]

Mr. Winnacott. My Lord, I heard I was call'd; and am come as soon as I could get in.

Mr. Ros. Ay, Mr. Winnacott, you have known me many Years; I desire you would testify what you know concerning my Conversation and Behaviour.

Mr. Winnacott. Formerly, when I heard him, I never heard him speak a Word against the King or Government; and it is some three Years ago since I heard him.

Mr. Ros. Have you heard of any Evil that I have said or done against the King or the Government?

Mr. Winnacott. No; but I have heard him often pray for his Majesty.

Mr. Just. Withins. Well, there is your other Witness Anne Broadhurst; what ask you her?

Mr. Ros. My Lord, this was a Servant that lived several Years in my Family. Pray, Nan, how many Years did you live there?

Anne Broadhurst. Four Years, my Lord.

Mr. Ros. Pray declare what you know of me in my Family, with respect to the King and Government.

Anne Broadhurst. I have generally heard you twice a-day pray in your Family; and I never heard you pray in my Life, but I heard you pray as earnestly for the King as you did for your own Soul. This I can declare during the time that I lived there.

Mr. Ros. Did you ever hear me speak Evil of the King in my Family; or reflectively on the Government?

Anne Broadhurst. No: You always pray'd for the King (as I say) as earnestly as for your Self or your Family.

Mr. Ros. If you know any ill Carriage in Word or Deed towards my Sovereign, I desire you to speak it out, without favour or affection, or any respect to me in the World.

Anne Broadhurst. No, I never did; but have often heard you heartily pray for him.

Mr. Just. Withins. Pray, how long ago is this?

Anne Broadhurst. Two Years ago I lived with him.

Mr. Ros. Pray, tell my Lord again, how long it was, and when that you lived there.

Anne Broadhurst. I lived there four Years; and it is two Years ago since.

Mr. Just. Withins. Pray, how often were you at Church in that time?

Anne Broadhurst. When I had occasion to go, I did go; but I did usually hear my Master, when I dwelt with him.

Mr. Just. Withins. Well, who is your next Witness?

Mr. Ros. Call Anne Manning. [Who came in.] You lived with me in my Family several Years?

Anne Manning. Three Years, Sir.

Mr. Ros. Pray, will you declare what you know of my Carriage and Behaviour towards the King and Government, in my Family, while you were there?

Anne Manning. My Lord, he prayed for the King, for his long Life, in his Family Duties, Morning and Evening; and in private, when Nobody heard him but myself.

L. C. J. What! you and he were at Exercise together?

Anne Manning. My Lord, I have gone by his Study-door, and have heard him pray for the King's long Life, when he knew not that any Body heard him.

Mr. Ros. This, my Lord, is more than I expected; for I little thought that any Body could give a Testimony of my private Devotion; tho' I never then omitted to pray for the King, and never shall as long as I live.

Anne Manning. My Lord, he pray'd as heartily for the King's Life as for his own Soul; and I have heard him often praying, and desiring God to preserve him in his Kingdom, and give him long Life; and have heard him insist upon that Scripture, Speak not Evil of the King, no, not in thy Bed-Chamber; for the Birds of the Air shall declare it.

Mr. Ros. Pray speak the Truth. Did you ever hear me utter an ill Word or Reflection upon his Majesty or the Government?

Anne Manning. No, my Lord, he was always mightily for the King.

Mr. Ros. Speak the Truth of what you know; I hope you would speak the Truth, and nothing more than the Truth, as if you were upon your Oath.

Anne Manning. I do speak the Truth, and it is what I can declare, and would, if I were to die the next Moment; and I can safely swear it.

Mr. Ros. Then, pray, call Isabella Dickeson.

[Who appeared.]

My Lord, surely I would not speak Evil of his Majesty, or the Government, in publick in the Congregation, when I prayed for him in my Family and my Closet. But here is another Servant that liv'd in my Family: Pray will you speak what you know concerning my Behaviour in my Family, with respect to the King and Government?

Isabella Dickeson. He used to pray twice a-day in his Family, Morning and Evening, and he always pray'd earnestly for the King, for his good Health, long Life, and Prosperity.

Mr. Ros. Did you ever hear me speak any Evil of the King or Government in any Respect?

Isabella Dickeson. No, never, Sir, in my Life; nor do I believe you ever had an evil thought of the King.

Mr. Ros. Pray then will you call Mr. James Atkinson?

Mr. Just. Withins. We have had him already, and I suppose he is gone; he is not here.

Mr. Ros. I call him now to testify another Thing, if your Lordship pleases; and he is at hand, my Lord, I suppose.

L. C. J. You should examine your Witnesses together, but we will not surprize you; we will stay.

Mr. Just. Hol. Pray call any Body else, in the mean time, if you have any other.

L. C. J. Nay, Brother, it may be he hath observed a Method to himself; he is for his Life; let him take it.

[Then Mr. Atkinson came in.]

Mr. Ros. That which I call you now for, Sir, is to testify what you heard upon the 30th of January from me, about praying for the King, and all that are in Authority.

Mr. Atkinson. My Lord, he kept that Day, the 30th of January, as a Day of Fasting and Prayer; and he preached from that Text on the 1 Tim. ii. 1. Pray for Kings, and all in Authority: And then he did assert that Kingly Government was most agreeable to the Word of God, and the Constitution of the Government of England, which was the best in the whole World; and had been so approved by Writers, both Foreign and of our own Country: And he did urge it as a Duty incumbent upon all People to pray for the King and Magistrates, that they might live a peaceable and quiet life under them in all Godliness and Honesty.

[Then he seem'd a little faint and stopp'd.]

Mr. Ros. Pray, Sir, will you recollect yourself? My Lord will indulge you a little.

Mr. Atkinson. I have been acquainted with Mr. Rosewell these ten Years.

Mr. Ros. But pray, Sir, what do you remember of the Application of that Sermon upon the Text, about praying for Kings and all in Authority?

Mr. Atkinson. That Persons were to pray for them, and to obey them, and that it was their Duty. This is all that I can remember.

Mr. Ros. What do you remember of my Invectives against those that practis'd the contrary?

Mr. Atkinson. Why, truly, as to those Things, he did highly condemn those Persons that had any way acted against it. And I have heard him, both in publick and private, inveigh against those that had any hand in the Murder of the late King, and condemned the Fact as a diabolical Design.

Mr. Ros. Is Mr. Smith there?

Mr. Atkinson. I was very ill on Sabbath-day last, and I thought I should not have come out now; and I would not, to the best of my remembrance, speak a Lye, as I am in the presence of this honourable Court, and in the presence of God, to whom I must give an Account another Day.

Mr. Ros. God will reward you for what you come to do for an innocent Person this Day.

Mr. Atkinson. I never heard an ill Word against the King or Government drop from Mr. Rosewell in my Life. I am not upon my Oath, but know myself to be bound to declare and tell the Truth, and nothing but the Truth.

Mr. Ros. I am confident, my Lord, he would not speak what he would not swear.

L. C. J. The Jury are Judges of that, Mr. Rosewell, I must leave it to them.

Mr. Ros. Pray, Mr. Atkinson, was Mr. Smith with you?

Mr. Atkinson. Yes, and I have sent one to call him.

Mr. Ros. Pray, Sir, let me ask you as to what Mistress Smith says, that I should say of the Recorder being made a Judge?

Mr. Atkinson. I never heard you speak any such Words in my Life.

Mr. Ros. Upon the last Day of August last, at Mr. Shed's House, she says, that I did use that Expression.

Mr. Atkinson. As to Shed's House, I was then sick, and was not there. If my Lord will give me leave to look upon my Note-book, I can tell what Day I was there.

Smith. It was at one Daniel Weldy's House, as I think, that you spoke about the Mayors and the Sheriffs; but what you said about Fools in Scarlet Gowns was at Shed's House.

Mr. Ros. Was there any Meeting at the Meeting-House, since July last, upon the Sabbath Day?

Mr. Atkinson. Truly, I be not able to remember; but if my Lord please to give me leave to look upon my Note-Book, I can give an account; for I writ down every Day the Place where we met.

L. C. J. Prithee, look upon thy Note-Book; for I have a mind to know something out of that Note-Book. Prithee tell me what was insisted upon the 14th of September?

Mr. Atkinson. My Lord, I only have a Note of the Day, of the Place, and of the Text.

Mr.

Mr. Rof. Pray, Sir, did you hear me speak of a Great Man in Grace-church-street at the upper end; and that if it had not been for him, the Fire had been quenched?

Mr. Atkinson. I never heard that Expression from you in all my life.

[Then Mr. Smith came in.]

Mr. Rof. Pray, did you hear any such thing, Mr. Smith?

Mr. Smith. No, my Lord.

Mr. Rof. My Lord, I can bring all the rest to testify the same thing, if your Lordship will let me call them over again.

L. C. J. Do as you will, I would not restrain you from any thing of a legal Indulgence, that is fit to give to any Man in your Condition.

Mr. Atkinson. What Day of the Month do you say it was, Sir, that you spake of the Recorder?

Mr. Rof. The 31st of August, I think.

Mr. Atkinson. At that time I was sick, and was not there.

Mr. Rof. Pray, Mr. Smith, have you ever heard me preach upon the 30th of January?

Mr. Smith. Yes, Sir; I have heard you upon that Day, and upon that Text, that we should pray for Kings and all in Authority. You kept it as a Day of Humiliation, and you abhor'd the Action of that Day. It was kept very solemnly, for the bewailing the horrid Murder of our late King. And you were so far from giving any Countenance to the Action of that Day, that you detested it, and preached very much against it, and you have always preached up kingly Government.

Mr. Atkinson. Sir, you were asking me; if there were a Meeting since July, in the Meeting-house?

Mr. Rof. Yes, because she says there was one upon the 10th of September.

L. C. J. If you look upon your Notes again, Mr. Roswell, you'll find it was the 10th of August.

Mr. Roswell. Where were you upon the 10th of August?

Mr. Atkinson. I was at home sick then; it is written down, your Lordship may see it.

L. C. J. Do you take notice where you heard the Meeting was, when you were sick?

Mr. Atkinson. Yes, my Lord, I have a short Note of it.

L. C. J. Where was the Meeting then?

Mr. Atkinson. In the Meeting-house, as I heard.

L. C. J. Pray, recollect yourself, and look upon your Book, how is it enter'd there?

Mr. Atkinson. Myself at home the 10th of August.

L. C. J. When didst thou take that Note, upon your Word, now?

Mr. Atkinson. When my Family came home, some body did tell me that day, or the next day.

L. C. J. Well, where was it the time before?

Mr. Atkinson. The 3d of August, at Mr. Crookshank's; the Text was the Heb. xi. 7. The 10th at the Meeting-house, myself at home; and Canticles the 11th and 13th.

Mr. Rof. My Lord, these Gentlemen say, they were at several Meetings. I desire, my Lord, that these Witnesses may be called.

L. C. J. Call whom you will. Who do you call first?

Mr. Rof. Thomas How. My Lord, I could bring Hundreds of Witnesses as to this Point.

L. C. J. Well, there is Thomas How; to what purpose do you call him?

Mr. Rof. My Lord, to testify that she should swear before Sir George Treby, that Mr. How was at a Conventicle such a time, when he was not. And therefore I desire him, that he would please to testify the Truth of that matter.

Mr. How. My Lord, I will testify the Truth as far as I know it; she sent three Ten—

L. C. J. How do you know that?

Mr. How. So they said.

L. C. J. That is no Evidence; and I care not what they said: If you know any thing yourself of your own Knowledge, speak it.

Mr. How. They offered—

L. C. J. I tell you their offering signifies nothing.

Mr. How. My Lord, it is an Year and an half ago.

L. C. J. Let it be never so long ago, if it be only what they said, it signifies nothing, it is no sort of Evidence; but if you can say any thing of your own Knowledge, you say well; in God's Name we will hear it.

Mr. Rof. Then my Lord, some Questions I desire I may have leave to put to Mr. Recorder.

L. C. J. If Mr. Recorder be ready to answer your Questions, with all my heart.

Mr. Rof. Mr. Recorder, I desire you would please to do me the Justice to testify, whether you know any thing concerning Mistress Bathoe?

L. C. J. Who is she?

Mr. Rof. My Lord, it is whether there was not a Conventicle sworn before Mr. Recorder against one Mistress Bathoe?

Mr. Recorder. I can't well tell, Mr. Roswell. There was a Conviction before me (as I remember) of one Mrs. Bathoe for a Conventicle; and, as I take it (as the Witness told you just now) she had it from her own Confession.

Mr. Rof. Do you know any thing, pray, Sir, of a Composition that was made upon that Conviction?

Mr. Recorder. No, Sir; you don't think, sure, that I make Compositions, or know any thing of them.

Mr. Rof. Was not the Money, Sir, paid back again?

Mr. Recorder. Not a Penny that I know of, or any Agreement for it.

Mr. Rof. Pray, Sir, will you acquaint the Court, how that Matter was really?

Mr. Recorder. Mistress Bathoe came to me, and said, she was mistaken if any such Words did pass from her; for indeed there was never any such Conventicle as Mistress Smith swore she had confess'd. Upon that I sent for Mistress Smith, and bid her consider of it, whether there was really any such Conventicle; and Mistress Bathoe had brought her Appeal, and it is depending now, and will be heard the next Quarter-Sessions.

Mr. Rof. Pray, Sir, did you tell her, that she might have her Money again?

Mr. Recorder. I did tell her, Mistress Smith was mistaken, and did not insist upon it, and she would have her Money return'd again.

Mr. Rof. Pray, Sir, did you send your Warrant for one Cartwright under your hand?

Mr. Recorder. You ask me a hard Question; I might send a Summons for several Persons, I cannot remember all their Names.

Mr. Rof. By whom, I pray, Sir?

Mr. Recorder. I can't tell who I send all my Summons by.

Mr. Rof. Was it not by these two Women, Mistress Smith and Mistress Hilton?

Mr. Recorder. I can't tell; it may be it might be so.

Mr. Rof. Pray, Sir, what did you say to Mr. Cartwright when he came thither?

Mr. Recorder. I can't remember particularly.

Mr. Rof. Sir, did you not ask him what he had to say against these Witnesses that are produc'd against me?

Mr. Recorder. My Lord, I remember, when Mr. Cartwright came to me, I did ask him some such Question; for they had told me that he had, by a Person, been tampering with them, to take them off from prosecuting a great many Persons.

Mr. Rof. By whom were you told so, Sir?

Mr. Recorder. By themselves. I know nothing of it: But I tell you the reason why I sent for him; because they told me, they went in Danger of their Lives; that they could not walk the Streets in Safety, but they had Stones thrown at them; and they were reproach'd as common Informers, and were beset hard with Applications of Money, to take them off from prosecuting. And, among the rest, they complain'd of one Cartwright, that he had been dealing with them; and it was upon that account that I sent for him, to know what he had to say against them; and he satisfied me, that he had nought to say against them.

L. C. J. These Questions, Mr. Roswell, perhaps, may be better let alone.

Mr. Recorder. I have seen a Letter that does threaten them very much; but I cannot say whence it comes.

Mr. Rof. My Lord, I desire to ask Mr. Recorder, whether or no he did not send for some of my Witnesses?

Mr. Recorder. I don't know your Witnesses, Sir.

Mr. Rof. Did you send for one Richard Gibbs of Rotherhith?

Mr. Recorder. Yes, he was Constable at Rotherhith.

Mr. Rof. Pray, Sir, upon what account did you send for him?

Mr. Recorder. I did it, because I heard the Constables of your Side durst not execute their Warrants, for fear of the Rout of the People.

L. C. J. I tell you, these Questions were better let alone.

Mr. Rof. Mr. How, that which I call you for, is, whether Mrs. Smith has not offered to swear before a Justice, that you were at a Conventicle when you were not?

L. C. J. She says she does not know any thing of her own Knowledge.

Mr. Rof. She offered it a Year and a Quarter ago, before Sir George Treby.

L. C. J. Were you by when she offered any such thing?

Mr. How. I was by, when she was before Sir George Treby; and she went into a Yard, and offered to inform against one Mr. How for being at such a Conventicle; but I was not the Man, she said.

Mr. Rof. My Lord, she had sworn it.

L. C. J. No, no, she had not sworn it, she only offered it, and for aught I perceive, she is a very careful Witness, to see that she does not fix upon the wrong Person.

Mr. Rof. Then, if it please your Lordship, I desire John Townsend may be called.

[Who came in.]

Pray, will you testify what you know concerning Mrs. Smith's swearing that Mr. How was at a Conventicle?

Mr. Townsend. Sir, I will tell the Truth as near as I can; I cannot tell the Day, it was about a Year and an half since, that he was out of Town of the Lord's Day, and that Day was remarkable; for I met him coming to Town, and it was about Evening, about five of the Clock, and that Day they had brought him some notice of a Warrant for the seizing of his Goods, for that he had been at a Meeting: Now he, understanding when they were to make Affidavit of it before Sir George Treby, he desired me to go with him thither, and I went with him, and he asked her if she knew the Man. There he was, and I was, and one more, and there came one Stranger: And we went out to the Light, and she look'd upon all of us, and knew never an one of us.

L. C. J. You use to go to Conventicles, all of you, I warrant you?

Mr. Just. Withins. She was not rash out in her Conjecture, I dare say.

L. C. J. But she seems to be very careful, that she did not swear against the wrong Person. And (speaking to Mr. Townsend), If she had sworn that thou hadst been there that Day, I warrant you she had sworn true.

Mr. Rof. Is Sir George Treby here?

[He did not appear.]

Then I desire Mr. Thomas Harvey may be call'd.

L. C. J. There he is; what do you ask him?

Mr. Rof. My Lord, to prove that this Elizabeth Smith swore that several Persons were at several Conventicles, which she afterwards confess'd in truth they were not; and made Applications to compound for the Forfeitures, and they should have their Money again.

L. C. J. Prithee, ask him in general, what does he know of her?

Mr. Harvey. Elizabeth Smith came to a Friend of mine in April, or May last—

Mr. Att. Gen. Were you by?

Mr. Harvey. Yes, I was by. She came to a Friend of mine, I say, and she told him, that she could swear against him, and some others, for a considerable Value of Forfeitures upon Conventicles—

L. C. J. What Friend of thine was this?

Mr. Att. Gen. Where does that Friend live?

Mr. Harvey. In Southwark.

L. C. J. What's his Name?—Mr. Harvey. One Games.

L. C. J. What Trade is he?—Mr. Harvey. A Sail-maker.

L. C. J. Whereabouts does he live in Southwark?

Mr.

Mr. Harvey. By St. Mary Over's Dock. And he came to me, and desired me, that I would meet and speak with her; I met her, I think it was about the Exchange, at the Ros-buck; there was she, and another fellow with her. She told me she could swear against such and such; and desired me to give her a Cup of Drink, which I did; and then she told me her Story, and demanded either 10 or 20 Pounds; and that that should take her off from swearing against them. I told her, I could say nothing to it; but I would acquaint them, which I did, particularly Mr. Games. They thought not fit to give her any thing; which Answer I returned to her. She told me she was very Poor, and if she could have but something, she would declare who it was that would swear; but upon reasonable Composition (though she had offer'd to swear) she would not. But she had taken the Copy from a Sister of her's; and, I think, she said her Sister's Name was Mary Farrar, as I remember.

L. C. J. Did she offer to swear any thing against you?

Mr. Harvey. No, my Lord.

L. C. J. You know that Games very well, don't you?

Mr. Harvey. Yes, my Lord.

L. C. J. Does he use to frequent the Church constantly?

Mr. Harvey. I don't know that, my Lord; I have known him many Years.

L. C. J. Do you live near him?—Mr. Harvey. No, I do not.

Mr. Ros. Pray call Mr. John Cartwright, and Mr. George Norton.

[Mr. Cartwright appeared.]

Mr. Cart. I desire you would please to testify what you know here concerning Mrs. Smith, who hath testified against me.

Mr. Cart. My Lord, may it please your Honour; the 22d of July last, Mrs. Smith and I were together from Seven o'Clock in the Morning till half an Hour after Eleven; and that Morning we went to a Constable, one Alexander Venner in Aldersgate-street; and from thence we went to Moorfields to look for a Meeting in Petty-France; but there was none: And from that place we went into Moorfields again, and followed an ancient Man, whom we supposed was going to a Meeting; and this Man we followed the space of almost an Hour's time, that it was almost this time of Day that it now is that I am speaking. That Day she convicted Mrs. Bathoe for having a Meeting in her House; when she owned to me, and another Man, that she never was in the House of Mrs. Bathoe; and then for the same Morning there was one Rice Bowing, that was convicted of a Conventicle at Bermondsey, upon her Oath.

L. C. J. How do you know that?

Mr. Cart. As I was told.

L. C. J. But it may be you were told a Lye; you must only speak what you know yourself.

Mr. Cart. Then, my Lord, several times she has asked me to convict with her, when I never had been at a Meeting; and also, she has offered to convict with me, when I have been there, and she hath not been there; and she also asked my Wife to convict one Dod's Meeting at Shoreditch, and my Wife refused it, because she was not there.

L. C. J. Were you by when she asked your Wife to do it?

Mr. Cart. Yes, and please your Honour.

L. C. J. Who did you tell this first to? Because I see you hunted along with her, why did not you go and complain, when she had several times proposed such a thing to you?

Mr. Cart. My Lord, I did not so well understand it at that time.

L. C. J. Who did you first of all tell it to, I ask you?

Mr. Cart. I first of all told it to one Smith.

L. C. J. Was this before Mr. Rosewell was taken, or after?

Mr. Cart. It was afterwards.

L. C. J. Did you go to Smith, or did he come to you?

Mr. Cart. It was through another's means that I came to speak with Mr. Smith.

L. C. J. Who was that?

Mr. Cart. It was through a Goldsmith's means.

L. C. J. What is his Name?

Mr. Cart. His Name is Ferne; he lives in Newgate-street.

L. C. J. How came he to understand it, to bring you together?

Mr. Cart. Because he understood that I was with Mrs. Smith that time that she convicted Mrs. Bathoe, and was concerned with her. I did not know any thing of Mr. Rosewell at that time at all.

Mr. Ros. Did she not tell you, she would do as much for me?

Mr. Cart. She did offer me this; that if I would go and discover any Meeting, she would convict them, though she was not there.

L. C. J. Who didst thou tell a thing of this Nature to; only to Mr. Smith, and that Goldsmith?

Mr. Cart. I told it first to that Mr. Smith.

L. C. J. When these Witnesses and things drop out of the Clouds, I never put any great Value upon them. These come to serve a Turn, and never make any Discovery till you are taken.

Mr. Ros. My Lord, you may observe it was her common Practice to convict upon a Report, not having any Eye or Ear Witnesses.—

L. C. J. Well, I will observe what he has said; but I tell you what I think of it.

Mr. Cart. She has asked me to do it several times.

L. C. J. All that I can say to it, is, it seems she looked upon thee as so very a Knave, as that thou wouldst have done such a thing; and, it may be, she was not mistaken.

Mr. Ros. Then call Mr. George Norton.

[Who appeared.]

I call you as a Witness, to declare what you know of Mrs. Smith's importuning you or any one to swear against Meetings.

Mr. Norton. Yes, she has offered to swear, but I cannot say with him; for I was not present all the time. All that I can say, is, that she owned she was never at Mrs. Bathoe's House.

L. C. J. So she says still; and it agrees with all the rest of the Evidence: It was only Hear-say.

Mr. Ros. Then pray, will you please to call John Hobson?

L. C. J. There he is: What say you to him?

Mr. Ros. My Lord, I bring this Witness to testify, that Mrs. Smith swore there was a Conventicle at such a Place, when there was none.

Mr. Hobson. Sir, there was none since I came into the House, to my Knowledge.

L. C. J. What House?

Mr. Ros. At Mr. Hales's; she swore there was a Meeting upon the 13th of July.

Mr. Hobson. There was none, to the best of my Knowledge.

Mr. Just. Withins. We must not convict People of Perjury upon such Evidence. Indict her of Perjury, if you have a mind to it.

L. C. J. Where is the Instrument-Maker, Atkinson? Bid him find me his Book.

L. C. J. Were you at every Meeting always that he preached at?

Mr. Hobson. No, my Lord.

L. C. J. Then there might be many Meetings that you do not know of?

Mr. Hobson. I live next Door to this Mr. Hales.

L. C. J. You used to go frequently to hear Mr. Rosewell, did not you?

Mr. Hobson. No, Sir.

L. C. J. [Having looked upon the Book.]

Was there any Meeting that you know of, the 13th of July?

Mr. Hobson. None there: He lives the next Door to me.

L. C. J. Was there no Meeting no where there-away?

Mr. Hobson. Not that I know of.

L. C. J. She swears to that Day, at Mr. Hales's.

Mr. Ros. Ay, and to the very Place.

L. C. J. Do you know one Hodgeson?

Mr. Atkinson. It is Hudson, my Lord.

Mr. Hobson. No, my Lord; I do not know him.

L. C. J. Were you ever at his House at any Meeting?

Mr. Hobson. No, my Lord; I never was at any Meeting these two Years.

Mr. Ros. He lives next Door to the House.

L. C. J. There may be a Meeting next Door to my House twenty times over, and I not know it.

Mr. Ros. Then, pray, call John Crook.

[Who came in.]

Pray, Sir, do you know whether there was any Meeting at Mr. Hales's the 13th of July?

Mr. Crook. No; I never heard of any such thing, but what was according to his own use amongst his Family. I live under his Roof, and never yet did know that there was a Meeting there.

Mr. Ros. Pray, call Sarah Whibby.

[Who came in.]

I desire she may be asked, whether Mrs. Smith did not swear there was a Conventicle at Mr. Hales's the 13th of July; and whether there was any such thing?

Mrs. Whibby. There was none.

L. C. J. That you know of, you mean.

Mrs. Whibby. I am certain of it.

L. C. J. How came you to remember the Day particularly?

Mrs. Whibby. I can tell you by a very good Token; because the Chimney of my House was on Fire that Day.

L. C. J. How do you recollect it was the 13th of July?

Mrs. Whibby. Because there was a Neighbour of our's, that is a Waterman, that was sent for to wait upon His Majesty; and I went that Day to call him to quench the Fire; not finding him at home, I went further to call more Help.

L. C. J. How can you tell that it was the 13th? It might be the 20th, for aught you know.

Mrs. Whibby. No; it was the 13th.

L. C. J. How can you tell that?

Mrs. Whibby. Because there was another Meeting on the 20th Day, for which I paid 20 Shillings; and I can remember my Chimney was on Fire that Day.

L. C. J. What Day of the Week was it?

Mrs. Whibby. It was Sabbath-Day.

L. C. J. Why, if my Chimney was on Fire the 14th or 15th, it may be I can remember it a little while, but how came it that you do remember it so long?

Mrs. Whibby. It was the 13th of July.

L. C. J. How can you be sure of that?

Mrs. Whibby. Because it was the Sunday before the Meeting at Mr. Bowen's.

L. C. J. Where was the Meeting that Day your Chimney was on Fire?

Mrs. Whibby. I did not know then; but I knew since, it was at Mr. Hudson's.

L. C. J. Then you have been instructed about it. But pray don't think you come here to serve a Turn.

Mrs. Whibby. It was at Mr. Hudson's.

L. C. J. Was there a Meeting on the 13th of July?

Mrs. Whibby. By Relation there was; but I was not at it.

Mr. Ros. My Lord, I bring her to testify there was no Meeting at Mr. Hales's that Day.

L. C. J. We know well enough you snivelling Saints can lye.

Mrs. Whibby. I have answered the Truth, as far as I know.

Mr. Ros. I only ask her about Mr. Hales.

L. C. J. She shall answer such Questions as the Court shall think fit to ask her.

Mr. Ros. How far is your House from Mr. Hales's?

Mrs. Whibby. Next Door.

L. C. J. How far is your House from Mr. Hudson's?

Mrs. Whibby. A great Way.

L. C. J. Was it half so far as you went to fetch the Waterman?

Mrs. Whibby. That was but three Doors off; but Mr. Hudson's is half a Mile, I believe, or a Mile.

Mr. Ros. Then, pray, call Anne Collins.

[She appeared.]

Mr. Just. Withins. Well; what do you ask her?

Mr. Ros. Mrs. Smith hath sworn, that there was a Conventicle at Mr. Hales's the 13th of July; I desire to know of you, whether there was such an one, or no?

Mrs. Collins. The 13th of July there was none.

Mr. Ros. Upon your certain knowledge?

Mrs. Collins.

Mrs. Collins. Upon my knowledge there was none; I can justify it.
L. C. J. Not there you mean, at Mr. Hales's: But do you know there was any where else?

Mrs. Collins. No, not to my knowledge.

L. C. J. Do you know Mr. Hobson? Was there any there that Day?

Mrs. Collins. I know one Hudson.

L. C. J. I thought you had said Hobson.

Mrs. Collins. No, it was Hudson.

L. C. J. Was there any Conventicle there?

Mrs. Collins. I cannot tell any thing as to that.

Mr. Ref. Then, pray, call Sarah Bathoe, and Susan Bathoe.

[Sarah Bathoe appeared.]

L. C. J. Well, what say you to this Witness?

Mr. Ref. That which I call Mrs. Bathoe for, is to prove that Mrs. Smith was mistaken, when she swore that Mrs. Bathoe permitted a Conventicle at her House the 20th of July: Upon which Mrs. Bathoe was convicted, and brought her Appeal.

L. C. J. You do mistake, Mr. Roswell. She says, that Bathoe confess'd that there had been a Conventicle at her House, as she heard.

Mrs. Bathoe. She has convicted me.

L. C. J. Ay, but it was upon your own Confession.

Mrs. Bathoe. No, I never confess'd any such thing; for I had none there at that time, nor did confess any such Thing.

L. C. J. Had you ever any Conventicle at your House?

Mrs. Bathoe. That is not it that I am to answer to now. I desire to be excused from answering that Question.

L. C. J. Then I will not believe her, if she talked as long as you preach.

Mr. Ref. There was an Appeal brought, my Lord.

Mr. Att. Gen. She is not a Witness, it is in her own Case. It would be a fine thing if an old Woman's Story should prevail here against positive Testimony.

[Then Susan Bathoe came in.]

Mr. Ref. Mrs. Smith hath sworn, that Mrs. Bathoe had a Conventicle at her House the 20th of July.

L. C. J. No; she only swears that Mrs. Bathoe confess'd it; but herself was not there, she says.

Mr. Ref. Did you confess it?

L. C. J. No matter what she says; it all agrees with that Testimony that she has now given: This Matter, it seems, is depending upon an Appeal, and so she testifies for herself. And when I ask her whether she ever had any Conventicle at her House, she will not tell me; which induces a Suspicion, that she does not come for a fair Purpose, but only to serve a Turn.

Mr. Ref. Pray, Mrs. Susan Bathoe, was there any such Conventicles?

Mrs. Bathoe. There was none.

L. C. J. Why, I tell you, you mistake still. Mrs. Smith swears that Mrs. Bathoe confess'd to her, that she had a Conventicle, but she swears she was not there. And take all together, seeing she will not answer whether she ever had a Conventicle; and so it may be only a mistake just of the Day: Or she might tell her so, for any thing appears; and for ought I know Hales has had Conventicles: And what is all this to the purpose of which you are accused?

Mr. Ref. Call Mr. John Ferne.

[He did appear.]

My Lord, I desire Mrs. Bathoe may not go away.

L. C. J. Let her stay then. What do you call this Man for?

Mr. Ref. It is to prove she has compounded Convictions. Pray, Sir, do you know whether Mrs. Smith hath compounded with Mrs. Bathoe, since the Conviction, to set by the Prosecution; and Mrs. Bathoe was prevailed with so to do?

Mr. Ferne. Mrs. Bathoe came to me about 8 or 10 Days ago; says she, I must get you to go with me to the Recorder's. I am promised my Money again that was paid upon the Appeal I brought. I was glad to hear it, and went with her; the Time appointed was five or six o'Clock. I was there a little after five; and Mrs. Smith was not there, that was one of the Witnesses upon her Conviction, Elizabeth Smith, for I served her with a notice to attend the Recorder. We were there a second Time at the Recorder's Chamber about six o'Clock; she was not come. We waited hard by, and went a third Time; and then she was there, and desired my Sister to excuse her that she was not there earlier; but she did not doubt but she should have her Money; and waited to see the Recorder. Mr. Recorder had several above with him. We waited an Hour, or better. Mrs. Smith went up, and my Sister went up with her, or followed her: And, says the Recorder to her, Are not you the Woman that was with me such a Time, with Mrs. Williams? Yes, Sir, (says she) I was. Says he, What made you make such haste away? Upon that, Mr. Courtispe steps forward with the Book; Sir (says he) I have paid it in to the Clerk of the Peace. Then, says the Recorder, It is out of my Hands, I can go no further: but promised afterwards to speak with Sir William Smith, the Chairman of the Sessions, about it.

L. C. J. I can make nothing of all this. What a Business is here!

Mr. Ferne. She seems to be a rash Woman, ready to swear any thing.

L. C. J. Oh dear, Sir! and you seem to be a grave, prudential fort of a Man.

Mr. Ref. If she did not swear that this Meeting was at Mr. Hales's, why was he convicted for that Meeting?

L. C. J. I know nothing of the Conviction at all; it is the first time that I have heard of it.

Mr. Ref. Then if your Lordship please, we desire to have the Record of it read; here it is.

L. C. J. Make it appear that she swore, and that what she swore was false; and then you say something.

Mr. Ref. We desire to have these Copies of Records read. Here it is per Testimonium Elizabethæ Smith, or per Sacramentum.

L. C. J. Prove that she swore it.

Mr. Ref. My Lord, we had a very gracious Answer concerning the Petition that my poor Wife delivered to His Sacred Majesty in reference to her coming to me; which His Majesty granted with a great deal of Compassion. He remitted it to your Lordship, and your Lordship did second it, for the having the use of what Records should be necessary for my Defence. And upon what Application we made to the Attorney-General, it was readily granted: But for the searching of the Records, we have desired the Recorder, and cannot have it.

VOL. III.

L. C. J. You are much misinformed in that. I'll tell you how it was: Your Wife and a young Man came to me, a matter of a Fortnight ago, and did tell me, there were several Records, that were necessary for your Defence, and the Recorder refused to let you have Copies of them. I told her then, God forbid but that you should have all manner of Helps from Records, that were necessary for your Trial; and thereupon I did require my Brother Jenner, who is Recorder, to attend to shew Cause, why he did refuse to let you have any Records that you thought necessary for your Defence: And he gave me this for Answer, That they were Records of Convictions, and were returned to the Sessions of Peace; some to Surrey, and some into Middlesex, and some were in the Clerk of the Peace's Hands. Whereupon I told your Wife, if she would go to the Clerk of the Peace for Copies of the Records, if they did not readily give you Copies at your Charge, I would make them do it, if she came to complain to me; and if they would not, I would lay them by the Heels. When my Brother Jenner came to me, said I, I believe that which they have a mind to, is to know upon whose Testimony the Convictions are made. Now that is no part of the Conviction; and that we thought ought not to be granted. Nor is there any Law for it; for that is to open a Way to the tampering with the King's Witnesses. After this, there was Mr. Wallop, that came and moved the Court of King's-Bench about this matter; and we gave him the same Answer, that for any one to discover the King's Witnesses before they come to Trial was not to be allowed by Law. If Mr. Attorney had come here, and said, Pray, give us a List of all the Witnesses that Mr. Roswell will make use of at his Trial; we should have denied his Motion. God forbid but that the Witnesses you bring should be heard; and that the Witnesses they bring should be heard; but we must prevent tampering with the Witnesses on all sides.

Mr. Ref. If the Witnesses are suppress'd, it is impossible to encounter their Testimony.

L. C. J. What do you mean by suppressing the Witnesses? They are here produced.

Mr. Ref. Their Names, my Lord, upon the Records.

L. C. J. Their Names are never exposed, nor ought to be.

Mr. Ref. My Lord, it is that which must enable me to make my Defence. If we could have their Names, we could prove them perjured.

L. C. J. It cannot be by Law. You have the same Benefit that all the rest of the King's Subjects have. If any one be convicted of Treason by Witnesses (twenty in Number) we never enter them upon the Record; and if any be acquitted, the Testimony of the Evidence upon that Acquittal is never entered upon Record. It may be in your Matter, it was not upon the Testimony of Witnesses that the Conviction was; but upon the Notoriety of the Fact, or by Confession, as in the Case of Mrs. Bathoe; that was by Confession, and Witnesses. The Notoriety of the Fact, or the Confession of the Party, are all, and each of them sufficient to make a Conviction by Record. You have the same Liberty that every Subject has.

Mr. Ref. Mr. Courtispe is the Recorder's Clerk, that saw the Convictions in the Clerk of the Peace's Hands.

L. C. J. We cannot tell that, without the Clerk of the Peace was here.

Mr. Ref. Pray, where is Mr. Charles Walker?

[He appeared.]

I desire you, Sir, to testify what you know concerning the Conviction of Elizabeth Smith upon Mr. Hales, for a Conventicle at his House the 13th of July.

Mr. Walker. You had a Copy of it from the Clerk of the Peace; I made it out.

Mr. Ref. Of Mr. Hales and Mrs. Bathoe, do you mean?

Mr. Walker. No, only of Mrs. Bathoe.

Mr. Ref. Then I suppose we may have it; and the Clerk will testify it to be a true Copy.

Mr. Walker. This is a true Copy.

L. C. J. Then make what use you please of it. Will you have it read?

Mr. Ref. No, my Lord, not yet. If your Lordship please, I desire Richard Drew may be called; but however, if your Lordship will, let him read that Passage in it, that I cannot so well read, 'tis in Court Hand.

[Clerk of the Crown reads.]

Memorandum quod ad generalem Sessionem pacis pro Com' Midd' septimo die Octobris, tricesimo sexto, &c.

L. C. J. What do you make from this? Here is a Record of the Conviction, which says, that by two credible Witnesses, and the Notoriety of the Fact, she was convicted.

Mr. Ref. Pray call Richard Drew.

[Who came in.]

Pray, Sir, what do you know about Mrs. Smith's Practice in relation to Conventicles?

Mr. Drew. Upon the eleventh of July last there was an Acquaintance of mine, that she did pretend was at a Meeting—

L. C. J. Who was that that did pretend to?

Mr. Drew. Elizabeth Smith; and she would have had some Money of him. He came to me, and asked my Advice. Yes, said I, I think you had better give her Money, than to run the Hazard of swearing against you: So he did. He took me along with him to a Place where they were to meet, where she took ten Shillings, and promised he should come into no further trouble about it.

L. C. J. Had he been at a Conventicle, or not?

Mr. Drew. That I cannot say.

L. C. J. Do you believe he was, or was not?

Mr. Drew. My Lord, I cannot say that he was, or was not.

L. C. J. But that is not the Question I ask you: for you would not persuade him to give her Money, if he had not been at a Conventicle.

Mr. Drew. My Lord, I did not know whether he was, or was not.

L. C. J. I ask you again, did you believe he was, or was not?

Mr. Drew. I believe he might, by his being so willing to take my Advice; though he said it was a base thing to give her any Money in such a matter.

6 Q

Mr. Ref.

Mr. Ros. Pray, call James Howard.

L. C. J. There he is; what would you have with him?

Mr. Ros. My Lord, I crave leave first to ask Mistress Shaftoe; Are you Mr. Hilton's Wife?—Smith. Yes.

Mr. Ros. Then I desire Mr. Howard may testify what he knows concerning this Mistress Smith: But first, which Hilton's Wife are you?

Smith. George Hilton's.

Mr. Ros. What then do you know of her, Sir?

Mr. Howard. I was once drinking a Cup of Ale in Grub-street, where she did take a parcel of Money in the Concern of the King, my Lord.

L. C. J. Prithee, speak up: In what Concern?

Mr. Howard. She took a Bribe in the Concern of the King.

L. C. J. What dost thou mean?

Mr. Howard. Of a Person that had been at a Meeting.

L. C. J. Prithee, what Bribe was it?

Mr. Howard. About 11 or 12 Shillings.

L. C. J. Prithee, of whom was it?—Mr. Howard. The Man I never saw, nor the Woman before; I came in by chance.

L. C. J. How long ago is this?

Mr. Howard. About the middle of July last.

L. C. J. Who did you discover this matter unto?

Mr. Howard. My Lord, I was only drinking a Cup of Ale; and I discovered it to Mr. Drew, that was call'd last.

L. C. J. Was Mr. Drew one of them?

Mr. Howard. No: Mr. Drew I am acquainted with; he is my Neighbour.

L. C. J. When were you at Church last?

Mr. Howard. The last Lord's Day.

L. C. J. When did you receive the Sacrament there?

Mr. Howard. My Lord, I never did. We have no Parish-Church at present; it is now a-building.

L. C. J. Where do you live?—Mr. Howard. In Mugwell-street.

L. C. J. Have you no publick Preaching in the Parish?

Mr. Howard. I do hear Dr. Fowler, and Mr. Smythies too, sometimes.

L. C. J. That is, when there is no Conventicle (I suppose) in the way. That Mr. Smythies and Dr. Fowler are both very well known.

Mr. Ros. Is Mrs. Anne Farry here?

[She did not appear.]

Pray call Mrs. Anne Higgenfon.

[Who appeared.]

Do you know Mrs. Shaftoe, or Mrs. Hilton, as she is call'd?

Mrs. Higgenfon. My Lord, I have very little Knowledge of her; I have known her but a very little while.

Mr. Ros. What Testimony can you give of her Conversation?

Mrs. Higgenfon. Since I have known her, I have heard some ill things of her: But I cannot speak to any thing of mine own Knowledge.

L. C. J. Why, so People may say a great many ill things of you that you do not deserve, nor know any thing of.

Mr. Ros. Call Anne Carter.

[She did not appear.]

I desire Sir John Talbot would please to be examined.

L. C. J. Here is Sir John Talbot by me.

Mr. Ros. Sir, I desire you would please to testify to the Court and the Jury what you know concerning the Conversation of Mistress Shaftoe, otherwise called Mrs. Hilton.

Sir John Talbot. She was a Servant, that liv'd in my House a great many Years; but I did not use to converse with her.

Mr. Ros. No, Sir John; but what do you know of her Conversation while she lived in your House?

Sir John Talbot. All that I know of her, is, she had no very good Character in the Family.

L. C. J. Do you know any thing of your own Knowledge?

Sir John Talbot. As to any thing of my own Knowledge, I cannot speak; it is all no other than Hear-say from all the Family.

L. C. J. But I ask you what you know of your own Knowledge, Sir John. Tell us the Particulars you yourself know.

Sir John Talbot. It was the Complaint of all the Servants of the House, that she was guilty of telling Lies and Stories in the Family.

Mr. Ros. Was she reported in the Family a frequent Lyar?

Sir John Talbot. She had that Character in the Family; all the Servants complain'd of it. I only know of other things since she was gone out of the Family; and that she has been concern'd in an odd sort of Practice, about attempting to steal away a young Lady.

L. C. J. Do you know of it of your own Knowledge?

Sir John Talbot. I had it from herself, and upon her own Affirmation.

L. C. J. What was that?

Sir John Talbot. It was about the Practice that had been set on foot of cheating People of money for procuring Fortunes; particularly concerning the Daughter of one Sir Harry Jones. And there have a great many Gentlemen been abused about Town in that matter, and made believe that this Woman had an Interest in her, and would put this great Fortune into their Hands: I have not been privy myself to any of the Negotiations, but I have understood there were such Practices; there was one Salem and she that were engaged.

L. C. J. Look you, Sir John, Do you know this of your own Knowledge? For we must not hear Evidence to take away People's Reputation by Hear-say: If she hath confessed any thing to you, you may speak that, and let us know it.

Sir John Talbot. My Lord, if it be not too long to give you the Circumstances how I came to know it, I will tell you what I have been informed about it.

L. C. J. No, that is not Evidence, Sir John; unless you know it yourself, or had it by her Confession.

Sir John Talbot. My Lord, I do not come here as a voluntary Evidence, but I am here called upon. And, my Lord, I think I ought to give my Testimony, if a man's life be concerned.

L. C. J. And so ought we who are upon our Oaths, to insist upon it, that you give legal Evidence, what you know of your own Knowledge; and I ask you here again, whether what you relate be of your own Knowledge, or what was by Hear-say?

Sir John Talbot. My Lord, I had notice sent me by a Letter, That there was a Gentleman come to Thistleworth with a Coach and four Horses, with a Design to steal Mrs. Jones. I cannot remember whether there was any Name to the Letter, but such a Letter was sent, and I was to inquire about it of this Ellinor Shaftoe, who was engaged in the Design. I sent to her to come to me, and she did come; and told me that there had been such a Practice of one Salem, and she would bring a Gentleman to discover the whole Business, and she did so; and brought this Hilton (by whose Name, as her Husband, she owns herself), and he came to me, and gave me a Note of several Gentlemen's Names that were concern'd in it; and, I believe, I have a Book wherein their Names are. I then asked, Why she did let it so long run, and the Business go on so far? Mr. Hilton did confess, that one particular Gentleman had been kept in Treaty, who was a Country-man, and came to live in Town, and was in Town the greatest Part of the Winter upon this Design; and did walk that Way, expecting that this Nan Carter should bring down this Heiress, so that they might have an Opportunity to steal her. Mr. Hilton had no other way of Application to me but by this Shaftoe; and he confess'd himself, that he was a Party concern'd in the Design.

L. C. J. Ay; but what did Hilton's Wife say? For what he said is nothing to the Purpose in this Point.

Sir John Talbot. She is one that I had no Communication with, nor converse, while she was in my Family, otherwise than as an ordinary Servant; but this same Mrs. Jones was my Ward.

L. C. J. Did she confess she had any Design in this matter; or was to have a Reward for setting the matter on foot?

Sir John Talbot. No, my Lord; she did not particularly confess she had any hand in the Design; but it was that which several other Persons have come and inquired since of my Family about; who have told me, that there was one Shaftoe, otherwise Hilton, that was concern'd in it.

L. C. J. That is no Evidence, Sir John, I must tell you again.

Sir John Talbot. My Lord, I can't make the Evidence otherwise than as it is. I tell you what I know.

L. C. J. You understand yourself so well, Sir John, that you know it is not Evidence; and you are not to talk of what other People have told you.

Mr. J. Withins. How long did she live in your Family?

Sir John Talbot. I can't tell how long, my Lord, but I believe she was there ten Years.

Mr. J. Withins. That's a strange thing, that you should keep an ill Woman so long.

Sir John Talbot. My Lord, with your Permission, she was a Servant when that Child came to me, and when the Mother died; and my Wife did not think fit to put her away; so she came and staid with the Child as long as my Wife could keep her; but at last she did foment Differences in the Family, Lies, and Stories, and was found to be a Person not fit to live in the Family; and therefore my Wife was afraid to keep her any longer, and put her away.

L. C. J. Well, Mr. Rosewell, have you any other Witnesses?

Mr. Ros. Pray call Anne Dillingham.

L. C. J. Well, what do you ask her?

Mr. Ros. My Lord, I bring this Witness to prove concerning Mrs. Shaftoe, alias Hilton, that she offered to swear against People, as being at Conventicles, whom she had never seen.

Mrs. Dillingham. She lodged in my House, and is a very ill Woman; and asked me to swear of Meetings that I never knew any thing of at all in my Life. I never was at Meetings but about Thirteen Years ago. I asked her why I should swear, or what I could swear to? She told me, I should have a share of the Money, if I would swear to what she said, whether it were right or wrong, I should have a share, if I would but swear.

L. C. J. How long ago is this?—Mrs. Dillingham. Two Years ago.

L. C. J. Who did you tell this to first?

Mrs. Dillingham. My Lord, I am subpoena'd here to give my Testimony.

L. C. J. That's true; but who did you tell this, that you talk of, first to?

Mrs. Dillingham. My Lord, I never told it to any body but her, except it was to my own Husband.

L. C. J. But why would you keep this as a Secret, and not tell it to any body?

Mrs. Dillingham. Why, my Lord, I don't speak it for any Malice to her at all, I assure you.

L. C. J. Where do you live?

Mrs. Dillingham. In Long-Acre, at the Golden Ball.

L. C. J. If you live in Long-Acre, how came you to discover any thing of a matter that was transacted at Rotherhithe?

Mrs. Dillingham. My Lord, I know nothing of it, of my own Knowledge; but what she would have persuaded me to.

L. C. J. But how came she to talk to you about a matter at Rotherhithe? Or, you to know any thing about her? That I desire to know; and how you came here?

Mrs. Dillingham. One Mrs. Peirce, that is a Neighbour, ask'd me what I knew of her; and so would subpoena me, because she lodged at my House.

L. C. J. How long did she lie at your House?

Mrs. Dillingham. I can't tell; I believe about half a Year.

L. C. J. Well, what became of her? How did she behave herself?

Mrs. Dillingham. My Husband turn'd her out of the House, and would not entertain her; because she kept Company with a Man that was none of her Husband.

L. C. J. Why, can you tell when they were married?

Mrs. Dillingham. She went as the Wife of Mr. George Hilton, when she was not married.

L. C. J. How! Was she not married then?

Mrs. Dillingham. No, they were not married then. He was not her Husband then. There are a great many of our Neighbours that can say more more than I. She is a naughty, filthy Woman; a very ill Woman; if I should call her Whore, I believe she might trouble me for it; but I believe it to be true.

L. C. J. Have you any more Witnesses, Mr. Roswell?

Mr. Ros. No, my Lord; but I hope your Lordship will give me leave to say something to the Court and Jury.

L. C. J. Mr. Attorney, have you any more Witnesses to call for the King?

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, we have some Witnesses to support the Credit of these Witnesses that we have produced: But we don't think there is any need; nor that it is any way diminished by the Defence of the Prisoner at the Bar.

L. C. J. Do as you please, Mr. Attorney; go on your own way.

Mr. Att. Gen. No, my Lord; we shall trouble your Lordship no further with any Evidence.

L. C. J. Then, Mr. Roswell, let's hear what you have to say further for yourself; for all the Witnesses have been heard, of one side and t'other.

Mr. Ros. My Lord, and dear Countrymen, who are to be my Judges in this Cause this Day, what I now speak, is with respect as much to their precious Souls, who are concern'd either in Prosecution, or trying of me, as my own Safety. There is not a Man of you of the Jury, tho' you are Strangers to me, but I would lay down my life to-morrow to save one of your Souls, if I might be an Instrument therein: How much more then all of them, if the Consideration be taken of the Worth of an immortal Soul? Your Lordship knows, and I am sensible, how unfit I am now to do such a thing as this is, in the Company of so many learned Gentlemen of the Long Robe. I have betrayed already too much of my ignorance in such Affairs, and I beg your Pardon for it; and I humbly thank your Lordship, and the Court, for the Indulgence that you have shewed towards me in my Infirmities. You are, my Lord, as in the Presence, so in the Place of the great God, the Judge and Lord of all, at this Day: You are Elohim, I have said ye are gods; whose Property it is to help the weak, and compassionate the innocent; therefore I make this Apology in reference to my own Innocency, and my great inability to sum up the Proofs that have been in this Cause. If you will put my Weakness in competition with their vast Abilities, who are of Counsel for the King against me, and my ignorance in the Laws of the Land against their great Knowledge; I cannot but expect to be overthrown, notwithstanding my Case is very innocent, and I have declared in the Presence of God the Truth of my Heart this Day. And if I were to be called to the Bar of the great God, the Judge of all the Earth, before I sleep, I should speak the same thing, and must, and no other. I am sensible a Lye is both a base, and a very wicked thing; and that the Lake that burneth with fire is prepared for all Liars. And I pray God convince these Gentlemen wherein they have wronged and abused me, that they may repent of their Sin; which (I bless God) I have prayed for them most Days ever since I was confined, and begged it of God with Tears, in Charity to their poor Souls. And I believe I have prayed more for His Majesty in one Week, than they have done in all their Lives. They are not the King's Friends, but his Enemies, in bringing such Allegations against those that are his true, faithful, and innocent Subjects, as I am, my God knoweth.

And here, my Lord, I would first observe the Variations that are in their Evidence. In the first place, Mrs. Smith swears, That the Text I preached upon was the 21st Chapter of Genesis. And here is Mrs. Hilton comes, and she swears afterwards, that it was the 20th: herein they vary. Then I suppose, my Lord, if they vary and differ, in Law they are not two Witnesses, but differing so are both of them incredible: And I think the Statute Law of this Land is, that a Man must be convicted upon the Oath of two Credible Witnesses.

Next, my Lord, here's Mistress Smith swears, that these Things were delivered, which are charged in the Indictment, all together in the Morning-Exercise, in the Forenoon: Whereas your Lordship has heard from several Witnesses (and I do not know one Man of them but fears a Lye; and would have sworn to the Truth of what they have spoken. They tell you) how every Passage that these People would pervert, must come in, and how it was divided. I hope your Lordship will pardon the Infirmary of two or three, a few illiterate Men, that are weak, and could not so well instruct themselves to speak in a Court of Justice upon such an Occasion: But upon the whole matter, they give such an account, all, that it cannot be presumed, or thought, that they should agree to speak any thing that was not true. And I am confident, there is not a Man of them, but would take his Oath (as I said) of the Truth of what he has here declared. And they have declared that there were two distinct Exercises, as I have protested in the Presence of the great God. That in the Morning was upon the 20th of Genesis: And the other in the Afternoon (there being an Hour that past between) was upon one particular Verse of a Chapter in the Epistle to the Hebrews, quite distinct from the other Discourse that was in the Morning. She not only varies from the Truth, but also from her Fellow-witness, that it was all in one Exercise. This I submit to your Lordship's and the Jury's Consideration (these worthy Gentlemen that are to judge of my Life and Death) whether they are two Credible Witnesses, thus varying.

There be several other Things, my Lord, that because of my present Infirmary, I may not so readily call to mind; but which ought to be recalled and recollected, as in reference to the Person, whose House we met at. One says it was one Capt. Daniel Weldy's: Another that it was one Mr. Daniel's. Therein again they vary in reference to the Person; and if they are out in one Thing, they may be out in another.

Smith. I can say nothing about his Name: I never was there in my Life before.

L. C. J. Mrs! Mrs! You must not interrupt him; he is upon his Defence for his Life.

Mr. Ros. Then, my Lord, she says that my Text in the Afternoon was upon a Psalms; and there was no such thing, as your Lordship has had it particularly made appear to you. I have ingenuously told you the Text, and the Truth; I have spoken it from my heart in the Presence of the Great God; and upon what occasion every Passage that they have wrested was spoken: And your Lordship may thereby perceive how most abominably they have perverted my Words. Now, they having wrested my Words, that are innocent in themselves (so far from being Treason, that I do not know there was any Fault or Crime in them; being only plain Scriptural Proofs of Doctrinal Propositions in Divinity, without those Applications that they have pretended to), certainly your Lordship and the Gentlemen of the Jury will consider what is most probable or likely; what they have declared, or what you have heard from the several Witnesses that have come in to testify concerning me.

My Lord, I was going to speak something to your Lordship of the great Wickedness of their making the Application of what was innocently spoken and meant, to the late King of England, and his present Majesty, whom I daily pray for, and always did, whatsoever these Witnesses have declared concerning me. And your Lordship has heard my Maid testify (which I little expected) that I used to pray for the King every Morning and Evening in my own House; and God knows that to him I have addressed myself for him daily: And more than that, she heard me (when I thought none but the God of Heaven himself had heard me) pray for him in my Closet. I would desire your Lordship and the Jury to consider, whether these are not the Criminals (and not I), that have made application of innocent Passages, and wrested the Words, that were plain and innocent in themselves, to a wrong meaning, to make me Guilty of High Treason; applying them to His Majesty, when I never intended, or thought the least of any such thing.

My Lord, I doubt not but there have been several that have joined in it, that have helped to frame and forge this Accusation against me. And there is that, which I suggested to your Lordship in the Morning, in the beginning of this Cause: These Persons have not only, or so much sworn me a Knave, but a perfect Fool and a Madman, to speak such absurd, incoherent, inconsistent, solecistical, and nonsensical Things. I believe there is no Man of common Sense and Reason, no Gentleman that's here this Day, that can imagine that a Person, that had the use of Common Sense and Reason, should speak such absurd Things as these are. Besides, my Lord, I have brought Witnesses, several of them, to testify there never was any such Thing spoken by me, as they have testified against me, and misapplied. I have likewise produced several Persons to give Evidence of my usual and constant Practice with relation to the King and Government all along; my contending for Monarchy, and against Anarchy, which did too much reign in these late Days of Confusion, which I remember by very sad Experience, tho' I was then indeed but a Child. And when I came to be a Man, I used always to observe the 30th of January, and the 29th of May; preaching upon those Days, and pressing People to Obedience; and inveighing against those that had acted against their Principles, and were Rebels either against his present Majesty, or had been concerned in that barbarous Act against his Royal Father; which I did utterly abhor.

And, my Lord, methinks it should have been very unlikely that a Man, that should make it his common Practice so to do, as I have testified concerning myself, should fall under such a Suspicion and Accusation, as I now am; or, that such an one should fall into such a Solecism, as the Words that are testified against me must import; it is very unlikely. I leave it to the great God of Heaven to vindicate my Innocency in the Matter; which I do not question but he will do.

Then, my Lord, here are several Gentlemen of the Church of England, that have testified concerning my Conversation. They have had Acquaintance with me many Years, some of them near 20 Years; the least 8, 10, or 12. They never heard an indecent Word, with respect to His Majesty, or the Government, fall from me; any unworthy Reflection upon either of them: But my constant Practice was to pray for His Majesty with all earnestness and solicitude. There are several of them Gentlemen of repute in the City. There are particularly two Persons, that belonged to an honourable Family in which I lived so many Years, who give a Testimony what my Conversation there was, and my constant Practice of praying for the King, while I was there. This your Lordship, and the Gentlemen of the Jury, have heard and observed, I doubt not.

But, besides that; your Lordship and the Jury, I hope, observe as to these People, who swear against me, what my Witnesses have testified, that they would swear any thing, and forswear it: And what a Character is given concerning one of them particularly, your Lordship has heard from that worthy Gentleman, Sir John Talbot, whose Face I never saw before it was in this place. And by the last Witness, you have a Testimony concerning her lewd Conversation. And several other Witnesses prove she would swear any thing for them, if they would swear for her. So that it appears she would, and does swear at a venture such and such Conventicles; only upon Hear-say, and mere report: And that she has taken Money, and made some Compositions too. These things I must refer to your Lordship, and these worthy Gentlemen who are of the Jury.

If then, my Carriage and Conversation (so well known in the World) be compared with that Character that is given of these Persons, I must humbly submit it to your Lordship, and the Jury, how far they are to be believed against me; and might argue from the Incredibility of their Testimony: but your Lordship cannot but remark it.

My Lord, it is very strange, that these two Women should exactly remember these Words. They agree in every particular Circumstance. I durst appeal to your Lordship, and the Jury, particularly to the Jury, if now they would undertake to repeat upon their Notes, the Words that have so often been repeated here; and whether there is any of them would be able to agree in all the particular Words? They have an incredible Memory, that could so exactly agree together, that these were the Words. I do humbly submit this to your Lordship. For, my Lord, I lay the stress of my Defence very much, not only upon the incredibility and improbability, but even the impossibility of the Evidence

Evidence that they have given. I humbly submit it, I say, to your Lordship, and these Gentlemen; and leave it with them, and the great God of Heaven, whom I pray to direct them. I hope they will consider the Life of a Man, and the worth of Blood. My Lord, however I am represented this Day, I know myself to be a faithful Subject to His Majesty; and to the great God of Heaven, whose I am, and whom I desire to serve.

My Lord, I will now, if you please, ingenuously confess my Crime, if it were any. I have been frequently preaching in my Congregation, out of the Scriptures, and it is true, as your Lordship sees, the Chapter came then in course to be expounded: Which I used to do, to let the People understand the Scripture, as well as I could; for the People perish for lack of Knowledge; and it is by the knowledge of Jesus Christ, that they must come to Life and Salvation; for him to know is Life Eternal. It has been my way to Expound the Scriptures to them.

In the Presence of the great God, before whom I speak, to whom I can appeal for the truth and integrity of what I say, that God before whom we must all stand (all, whose Faces I see here shall meet, and see one another at the great Tribunal), it is to this God that I appeal as to the Truth of my Heart in these Things. And, my Lord, I shall continue, as I have done, however God disposeth of me, to pray for the Life and Happiness of His Majesty; my usual Prayer, Morning and Evening, being, that God would crown him with Grace here, and Glory and Honour hereafter. And this I shall do, by the Grace of God unto my Dying-day; for my Soul does abhor such Things as have been testified against me this Day.

Thus, my Lord, I have dealt as plainly with your Lordship, and the Jury, as I can. My Infirmities are great. I desire to leave my whole Cause with the Lord, and with these worthy Gentlemen my Countrymen, who, I do not question, will have a just compassion and consideration of my Case, under these Circumstances wherein I stand, and to all the Circumstances that have been made out in this Cause this Day.

L. C. J. Mr. Attorney, will you please, or any of the King's Counsel, to say any thing in this Matter?

Mr. At. Gen. No, my Lord, we leave it entirely to your Lordship.

L. C. J. Gentlemen of the Jury, this Case has held a long time; and, Gentlemen, I must tell you, no body ought to think Time too long in a Case of this Nature, wherein the Government is so much concerned on the one side, and the Life of the Prisoner at the Bar on the other. Et de vita hominis nulla est cunctatio longa. I think no Man ought to apprehend his patience too much tired in finding out the truth in the case of a Person that is tried for his Life. However, Gentlemen, by the way, because the Case has been long, it is fit that there should be some recollection made of it; and in order, as near as I can, that I might help your Memories in the Evidence that hath been given, both for and against the Prisoner at the Bar; I would endeavour, as well as I can, to repeat at least the substantial Part of it to you; and in case any thing that is material be omitted, God forbid but it should be supplied by any one that is able for to give any Assistance of that kind; for I cannot pretend to be so exact, as to give an account of the whole Evidence myself. But, Gentlemen, I must tell you it is a Duty incumbent upon the Court, to give you all the Assistance that can be in a Matter of this Nature, and I will do it with as much Integrity, and with all the Care and Caution of doing no Injury, either to the Prisoner, or to the King, between whom we are to be indifferent, both you, and the Court, as possible can be, that there may be no wrong done on the one side, or on the other; and, according as the Prisoner himself hath said, what I shall speak, I know I speak in the Presence of the great God of Heaven and Earth, who is to be the Judge of all Men. We are upon our Oaths, and you are upon your Oaths; and we are all of us bound by our Oaths that we have taken, to be guided in this weighty Affair (for so I must call it) by the Evidence that has been given to us at this time, both against the Prisoner, and for him. For certainly there cannot be a thing of greater concern, nay, even in point of Compassion, than to see any Man come to be accused of so high a Crime as the Prisoner at the Bar is now tried for. And he must have a strange obdurate Heart and Conscience, that cannot so far participate of the common sympathy of human Nature, and his Fellow-Creatures, as to compassionate any one that stands in such Circumstances as the Prisoner does. But then, on the other hand, the Denials of the Prisoner at the Bar, with all the Imprecations that he has made, and all the Affirmations that he has offered of what he has formerly done; and all these things of his appealing to the great God of Heaven about his Innocency, that I must tell you, of themselves, they are not to weigh with you; for your business is to know, according to the Oath that you have taken, whether you have Evidence given to you (since you are sworn upon this Trial) to satisfy you that he is guilty according to that Evidence. So that if the Affirmation of the Person accused, tho' attended with never so many Imprecations one way or other, be offered to Persons that are in your case, as Jurymen, it is not to weigh with you at all one way or other, if it be only the Affirmation of the Party accused; for if so, then there would never be any guilty Person brought before any Jury whatsoever; or any Criminal could come to suffer any Judgment, or be convicted of any Crime, if his own Affirmations concerning himself, and his own Commendations of himself, would be sufficient to acquit him, and set aside his Accusation. So that now you are to go according to the Evidence offer'd, and so are we, against this Person that is here before you.

Gentlemen, I must say that it is very untoward, and, I hope, by this Cause there will be a Warning given, at least, to other Persons, that there have been too many notorious Transgressors of the Law in this Matter of Conventicles. I speak that, not to affect this case at all; but I speak of what the Nation hath had but too woful Experience of, as to these seditious Meetings, that are, and have been continually kept up in opposition to the Laws; and I speak nothing as to the Meeting that was at this time; but I speak it, that others may be warned for future Times; for always Mischief attends the open and publick Transgression of the Law. God forbid, but that People should worship God, and serve him, according to their own consciences; therefore the Law has been so indulgent to them, as to give them leave to exercise their Religion in other manner than as is done in the Church of England; provided there be not any occasion of Tumult; but that there be not above Five, except those of the same Family, meeting together; which you know the Act of Parliament hath provided for. And the truth of it is, the Reason of the Law is very plain: For you all know, who are Gentlemen of Quality, that this Law, as well as another Law, that has so great a relation to the Case before you, does declare, that from these Seminaries of Sedition and Faction Conventicles, and the Clubs and Cabals of discontented, irregular People, disaffected to the Laws both of Church and State, was the great Mischief and Confusion that was brought upon us, and which at length brought us into the Diffractions of the late Times.

Gentlemen, I must say likewise this to you, that whatsoever the Prisoner at the Bar thinks now, that blessed Martyr King Charles the Ist, was by such means brought to that horrid, accursed, murderous Death and End; I cannot call it less than so, in relation to the Persons that brought him to it, under the Pretence of Religion. It was the Cry of Popery and Arbitrary Power, of which he was no way Guilty, tho' that was insinuated into the Minds of silly People, those ignorant Souls, that were easily captivated with a base Lye; but that was the Occasion. Many of you, Gentlemen, that are yet in being, remember it yourselves; and many of you have, and cannot but have seen and read the History of those Times, and have been so conversant with the Practices of these People since, that you are able to make a Judgment in the Matter. All these sorts of Things are but pretences, and fair shews of dangerous and seditious People; that which was most dangerous to us at that Time, and I am apt to believe will be so to the World's end. For when People come to gild over their bitter Pill of Sedition, it is always under pretence of Religion. For, a lack-a-day! perhaps there were as many Rebels against the late King raised by the beating of the Cushion in the Pulpit, as by the beating any Drum in the Street; for it is well known these are the Bell-weather of the Faction, that under pretence of Religion, come there to incense the People to commit all these Villanies that sometimes they are incited to do, as we know; and to prepare the way to bring us into that condition that we were in in the late Times: And, particularly, were used as Instruments to bring that blessed Martyr, King Charles the First, to the Block. These Pulpiters took occasional Texts of binding their Kings in Chains, and their Nobles in Fetters of Iron; and raised up such Doctrines from Texts of Scripture, that were certainly intended for quite far other Purposes, to countenance their Practices, to make People kill and slay God's Anointed, under pretence of saving and protecting the Anointed of God. But who did they mean by it? Pray, how did these People come to take upon them to preach against Popery, when indeed they were preaching down all manner of Religion, under the Pretence of that? So that you grew to have as many Religions, as there were Sects or Dissenters in the Nation; and never any could be tolerated that were not grown into the Party, but they came all into Office, and the more extravagant the more prefer'd; so that without the Blessing and immediate Providence of God, by a second Resurrection, reducing us into some sort of Order, in restoring his Sacred Majesty (whom I pray God grant long to reign over us; and so ought all Loyal Subjects to pray); what a miserable condition had we been in! And I may call it a second Resurrection, it being the Resurrection of our Religion: we were turned all into Confusion; we had no other Religion, at least apparently predominant, but that that had the strongest Army to support it, and that had force enough to contribute to what the luxurious, debauch'd Professors of it would make to be Religion; for they were the Professors at that time of all things.

Gentlemen, I speak this, because even the Laws, that have been made since the Restoration of the King, have taken notice, that the beginning of all the Mischief hath been this; and that the great Incendiaries of all sorts of Rebellion were these, who took upon them in their Pulpits, under colour of Religion, to countenance Rebellion and Treason, Confusion and Anarchy. Now how far these things have been known to you all, that I must leave to you; and must betake myself a little nearer to the Case, having premised these things; to which I would add this as a Warning to all People, that they would not abet or assist in any Meeting against Law, or that is known to be against Law, whatsoever they think; for there will Mischief come upon it one time or another, let them pretend what they will. As that Gentleman says, he undertook to expound, and teach his People the Knowledge of the Lord: the Knowledge of the Lord is a very good Lesson to be learnt, and to be taught all People; but blessed be God, we thank him for it, we have Churchmen of as great Learning (without any reflection upon the Gentleman at the Bar) as he can pretend unto, and men as pious and virtuous; and perhaps we may say at this time, with a little more Confidence than ordinary, that we have as learned a Clergy as ever was since Religion was known within this Kingdom. And, God be thanked, these Men are not only learned for themselves, but they exert themselves for the good of others, for the Satisfaction of that Duty in which they are employed, by their due and constant attendance upon the Worship of God, in their places of Worship, the Churches, which are by Law appointed for it; and we need not run into Holes, and Corners, and Conventicles, and Clans, to understand the Word of God, and the Practice of our Duty towards him, or towards Men; because we have Churches to apply ourselves to, where we may learn to know God, to obey him, and them that are put in Authority under him; which I am sure is a Duty incumbent upon every Preacher of the Word of God to insist upon, and press, and urge. And I am sure, whosoever preaches at a Conventicle, cannot with a safe Conscience preach Obedience to the Civil Magistrate; because, while they are in that very Preaching, they are acting Disobedience against his Laws, in regard what they do, is against the Authority of those Laws under which they live; and no Man can preach well against that, which he knows in his own Conscience, at the same time, he is practising himself.

So that, Gentlemen, I must tell you this is a wonderful dangerous thing; and therefore I give it as a Caution to all People to beware how they break the Laws, by going to such Meetings and Conventicles as these are; for it will have at the long-run, one time or other, a very dangerous Issue. And there is another thing, which is wonderful dangerous too, to see what Shoals and and Crouds of People come to these Sorts of Meetings; People of all Sorts of mean Trades and Professions. And how easy is it, if a Man has a Mind to insinuate into some silly, ignorant People, common, illiterate Fellows, that can neither write nor read some of them, yet thereby to feel their Pulse, to see whether they will swallow down such a Thing, or such a Pretence at first? For they did not in the late Times begin with open Rebellion, and preaching the Doctrine of deposing of Princes, or bringing them to the Block; but they tried with several previous Ways, and as the Bait funk, and was sucked in; they attempted to try further. They applied themselves perpetually to pursue the Temper of their Auditor; and therefore we must have a great deal of Care to prevent all such Mischiefs as these are for the future, that they may give no Countenance to such, who pretend to be Expositors, but are very ill ones of the Scripture; and thereby infill into the Minds of Men such dangerous and pernicious Doctrines; that the Scripture may not be perverted, to give an Authority to such desperate Things as these are; for we have known over and over how easily People are drawn into Mischief in this Age, even by the very same Train that they were in the Time of the late Rebellion.

Now, Gentlemen, these Things being premised, I would take Notice to you, that the Thing now before you, is a Question of a different Nature from what I have now spoken of. It is not the Question that you are to try, Whether he preached at a Conventicle or not? or whether the doing of that which he did in so preaching, is against the Law or not? but whether he did at any Meeting (especially as to the Time that is particularly specified) speak Words of the same Substance, to the same Effect and Intent that are comprised in the Indictment? For though he did preach at a Conventicle, and thereby did transgress the Law; yet in Case he did not preach to the Substance of what is contained in this Indictment that hath been read unto you, and that he is accused of, he must be acquitted. That I must declare to you for Law, as no doubt it must be acknowledged by me to be; therefore you are to take Care, upon your Consciences, to try and consider whether or no you believe these three Witnesses, that have been produced against him, swear true, or are guilty of wilful Perjury. For, in downright plain English, they are guilty of Perjury, if he be not guilty of the Words laid in the Indictment. One of the two is certainly true; either they are guilty of Perjury, or the Prisoner at the Bar is guilty of the Treason laid to his Charge: I pray God direct you in your Enquiry; for it is a Question, I must needs say, of very great Difficulty.

Gentlemen, for the Intention of a Man's Heart, I must tell you this for Law, as to the compassing and imagining of the Death of the King, it is not to be discovered but by some Action; some Word, or Overt-Act, there might be to interpret the secret Imagination of the Heart. It is impossible to discover or disclose the Imagination of any Man's-Heart, except we be directed to that Discovery by Words or Actions.

Now, Gentlemen, Words that in themselves may bear a good Construction, and are good Words, yet coupled with Actions that are Evil, or other Words that are Evil, these very Words may be a Discovery of the evil Imagination that is in a Man's Heart. As to express myself in a very familiar Example, for the Purpose, that I may make Things as plain as I can, for that is my Design, and ought to be every one's that is concerned in such a Matter as this. Because we have had some Discourse concerning the late blessed Martyr King Charles the First, he was here brought to a Shambles of Justice; for I cannot call it a Court of Justice, however they called it a High Court; and there was a kind of Mockery or Pageantry of a Trial. He was arraigned and tried for Treason, and a new national Treason, never yet invented nor known of before amongst us, Treason against his People; I say, now and never thought of till these Butcherly Fellows that sprung out of the Shambles, came to put it in Practice; erecting what they called a High Court of Justice, but which was truly to be called a High Court of Injustice; and there they were to have some come and cry Justice, Justice upon the King. Gentlemen, Justice is a good Word; but if that Word be used and spoken as it was in that Case, in order to bring the King to his Death, that which was a good Word, and if otherwise used, had been a proper Word even at that Time; that is, if applied to good Purpose, to set the King and the Nation free; yet being applied to the bringing that Sacred Martyr to so horrid and barbarous a Death, that was plain downright Treason; and I make no Difficulty in the World (nor can any Man that understands any Thing) that it was so by Law; and it was an Overt-Act sufficiently indicating the Intention of all Persons that were therein concerned to put and bring the King to utter Death and Destruction; and all these Fellows that made Use of that good Word, Justice, Justice, Justice, were all undoubted Traytors; making Use of it for that ill Purpose.

Gentlemen, again; suppose if Mr. Cook was a Man of Law, that was Solicitor of what they called the Commonwealth at that Time, Solicitor to the State (I only speak this to explain my Mind,) if he comes (when the King had just Ground to dispute the Authority of that Court of Injustice, that he was dragged to, and refused to plead) and does pray Judgment against the King, as he did, and it was proved at his Trial, Judgment alone might be there meant as tending to excuse the King, as well as to sentence him to Death; yet he being there praying Judgment against the King, and which was afterwards at his Prayer so pronounced; that shewed what his Opinion of the Word he used was at that Time; and that made him a Traitor, and was an Overt-Act to discover his Guilt.

Why so, Gentlemen, I am to tell you, though these are Words that may be used in a Scriptural Way very well, and to very good Purpose; yet if they be applied to an ill Purpose, they may be a sufficient Indication of a Man's compassing and imagining the Death and Destruction of the King. Therefore, Gentlemen, you are the Judges, whether if in this Case, he speaking these Words, of destroying our Enemies, and standing to our Principles, they have not an Allusion to the former Words; and whether they are not Expositors of the Mind of this Person, the Prisoner at the Bar, of compassing and imagining the Death and Destruction of the King; and I do this on Purpose to remind you of what is necessary to let you into the Question.

Now for the Testimony against the Prisoner at the Bar you have three Witnesses. First, you have Mrs. Smith, she does directly swear that she did frequently, several Times, go between the 13th of July and the 14th of September, to hear the Prisoner at the Bar preach at several Conventicles or Places of Meeting. She tells you the particular Days: She tells you as to one, that she heard him the 20th of July: She heard him another Time the 10th of August, according to the best of her Remembrance. She heard him again the 17th of August, the 24th of August, the 31st of August; and she heard him the 14th of September; that is according to the best of her Remembrance. She both tells you the Time and the Place, and she heard him preach at these Conventicles. All that she says as to this, is introductory to what she speaks of the 14th of September, which is the Day to which the Indictment does refer; and this she does say positively, that upon the 17th of August, he prayed that he might be forgiven for not praying for the King; and by that she would have you to understand, as she would insinuate, that he did not use to pray for the King.

Mr. Roswell. [Turning to the Jury.] I made Use of the Words of Samuel, God forbid that I should cease to pray for him.

L. C. J. Sir, you must not talk to the Jury now; I am directing of them.

Mr. Roswell. My Lord, I beg your Pardon; it was to set the Matter right. It was misapprehended.

L. C. J. All this is antecedent to the Matter for which he is accused; and you see his Answer to it, from a Text of Scripture that he offers to you, which he did not repeat with Dislike to pray for the King; but that he thought it his Duty always so to do.

Then she tells you particularly at another Time, which, I think, was at the House of one Paul Shed, I cannot particularly tell directly the Name, there was a talk of the Recorder, and of the Lord Mayor of the City of London; but that was before this Time. And afterwards, the first and the second Witness, two of them more, give you an Account tho' they were never there but then: That he began to talk about the Fire, and that he should say there was a great Man at the corner of Grace-church-street, I need not name his Name, for you all know him very well; that he met with a poor Man, though indeed he was not a poor Man, he was a labouring Man, a Carpenter; and they began to talk much concerning the Fire, and he did say, that in Case it had not been for that great Man, there had been no such Thing as the Fire in London; nor if it had not been for the Lord Mayors and Sheriffs afterwards, there had been no such Thing as the Fire in Southwark and Wapping. And I take Notice too, that at the same Place, which was Shed's House, that they spoke of, there is Mrs. Farrar, against whom there is not the least Objection that I can hear of; She agrees both in the Circumstance of Place and Time, and of the Words, and to the Dialogue about Grace-church-street, and the Carpenter, and to the previous Words, that he was not a poor Man, and the like, and about the Discourse relating to the Fires of London, Southwark, and Wapping, and likewise relating to the Lord Mayors, and Aldermen, and Sheriffs; these Discourses were at that Time.

Gentlemen, the next Testimony you have, is of these Witnesses that speak of the Time that is in the Record; which all the three Witnesses that you have heard, speak to; tho' the most of what I mentioned before, was another Time: And this is at the House of one Captain Daniel; one says, Captain Daniel Weldy. But that it was a Captain that was then at Sea, is plain; for this Gentleman himself, Mr. Roswell, does not deny that this was at Capt. Daniel's House; and that he did pray for him, as being then at Sea, and for all his Family; and all the Witnesses speak to the same Time. Tho' indeed the first Witness did say, that she did not know but it might be Capt. Daniel Weldy; but she likewise said, she did not directly know his Name. But she directly swears to the very Words that are mentioned in the Indictment. She does directly swear that Mr. Roswell preach'd upon the 21st of Genesis. Says she, as I remember; though Mr. Roswell did think, there was a Difference between the Evidence of the one and the other Woman about the 20th or 21st, yet it was only upon her Remembrance, as well as she could, and she did not positively swear it was in that Place, but according to the best of her Remembrance. And the second Witness, Mrs. Hilton, when she came to swear, she said it was either the 20th or 21st; but in so many Words she did directly swear, that he should preach, that the People made a Flocking to the King on Purpose for the curing of the King's Evil; but the King could not do it; but we are they that the People should flock to for the Curing of all their Evils. Which are the very same Words in Substance that are in the Indictment.

The very same Words in Substance, says that other, the second Witness; the same Day, in the same Place, did I hear Mr. Roswell then speak these Words; and they go further, and the same Witnesses both swear, Hilton and Smith, that Mr. Roswell should say, We have had two wicked Kings together, who have suffered Popery to come under their Noses, who can be compared to no other Persons but wicked Jeroboam. Mrs. Smith swears these Words directly, and Mrs. Hilton says, she thinks there was the Name of Rehoboam mentioned; but she is sure there was mention of two wicked Kings in the same Words as Mrs. Smith speaks. They go yet further, and say, both the one and the other of them, that he said, If the People would stand to their Principles, he did not doubt but they should overcome their Enemies as in ancient Times with Rams-horns, broken Platters, and a Stone in a Sling. The two Witnesses, both Mrs. Smith and Mrs. Hilton, swear to the very Words, and at least to the Substance of them; and if there should be some little Variance in some few of the Words, that will signify nothing, if the Substance be the same.

But now, Gentlemen, besides these two Witnesses, there is a third Witness, Mrs. Farrar, against whom (that I can see) there is not the least Exception in the World, if you remember any, you would do well to consider of it; you may be better able to recollect what has been spoken or offered, than I can in so long a Time; and you ought to endeavour (being Men of Understanding, and good Quality) to refresh one another's Memories, and make what Observations you can; which I perceive you have taken Notes about, some of you at least.

She does directly swear as to the Business of the King's Evil, the same Words that the other two have sworn, about flocking to the King to cure the King's Evil, which he could not do: But they were the Priests and Prophets that could cure the Maladies of the People. And as to the second Words, she swears that he said, there had been two wicked Kings that had suffered Popery to come in under their Noses. And she swears in the Third Place, That there was likewise an Exhortation to stand to their Principles, and that they should overcome their Enemies. She does not indeed particularly tell you about Rams-borns, and the Platters, and the Stone in the Sling, but only of standing to their Principles, and overcoming their Enemies: Which I would have you particularly to take Notice of, it being the material Part of the Indictment, to make these Words Treason.

Now, Gentlemen, give me leave to tell you, there is great Regard, and very great, to be had to the Circumstances in this Case, to see how far these Things are to be tack'd together. First, you remember the Witnesses were examined apart; and it does not appear that they have talked together; and there was all the Care taken that possibly could be, they should be out of the Court, and out of one another's Hearing; so that there was as much Endeavour to detect the Falshood of their Testimony (if it could be) as possible in any Case, even in the very most minute Circumstance. Mrs. Smith swears, That Mrs. Hilton came to her House on Saturday Night; that they went together to the House of this Capt. Daniel upon the 14th, about Seven of the Clock; that they were there before Mr. Roswell came in; that there was a Lower Room in the House; and a little higher there was a little Room; and then there was a Room up Two Pair of Stairs, where there was a Bed; that Mr. Roswell stood upon the Stairs, but they both sat upon the Bed, together with one of Mr. Roswell's own Witnesses, which was the Mathematical Instrument-maker, and that he was in a Mourning-Cloke; and that there was particular Notice taken of a Pair of Shoes given by Mrs. Smith from under the Bed to the Child of that Mathematical Instrument-Maker; and that there was Prayer made for Capt. Daniel, the Master of the House, who was then at Sea, and for his Child and Family. There were these Circumstances, every one particularly asked of the Witnesses, and sworn to by them in the very same Words, the same Manner of Posture, the same Things done both as to the Room, the Bed, who sat upon the Bed, the Mourning-Cloke, the plucking off and delivering of the Shoes; that I may appeal to your Memories, if they did not agree to a Tittle exactly.

Then they began to enquire further concerning other Expressions of Mr. Roswell at other Times: Something about People in Scarlet, and something about Canting: And Mrs. Smith tells you, that he did speak something about Canting; that he was talking concerning that Word; says he, I will tell you what that Canting means: I went not long ago thro' a Cathedral, where the Organs are, and there the People were gathered together; and they were singing the Lord's Prayer, and I don't know what; I heard them sing, and I could not but laugh out; and he broke out in his Sermon into a He! he! he! that is Canting. This, they say, was his Expression at that Time.

When Mrs. Hilton came in, she tells you the very same Words, even to a very particular Phrase, which I had forgot before, that he saw the Men in White Gowns that were singing, and which he counted Canting. It is very true, there is no such Thing mentioned in this Indictment; but only it is offer'd by the King's Counsel to shew the Temper of the Man, and how he usually used to preach.

As concerning the Story of Sampson and Dalilah, that's sworn by both Witnesses, that there was such a Discourse; for he began to talk of our King's keeping of Women, and he hoped they would bring the same Destruction upon him, that they brought upon Sampson; he hoped it would so fall out with our King. How far it is true (they both having sworn it) you are the Judges; they have directly sworn it, and to all the Circumstances both of Time and Place.

Gentlemen, There is yet another Thing that is material too, tho' a small minute Circumstance, and that is about this same Paul Shed, that they have spoken of. When the first Witness came in, he chid her for coming in her Pattins, and bid her pull off her Pattins, for they would leave such an Impression there, that People would be apt to discover that there was, or would be a Meeting; and therefore she promised, when she came any more, that she would be sure to leave off her Pattins. And it is proved; that Mrs. Hilton and Mrs. Smith were in the Room above, and Mrs. Farrar was in the Room below, and it does not appear that she was acquainted with the rest. She had heard him several Times, and tho' she did not see him that Day, he being up Two Pair of Stairs higher, yet she swears directly to the same Words, the substantial Part of them that the other two Witnesses spoke of. So that I must say, if in Case they have contrived this Story to take away the Life of the Prisoner at the Bar, they have contrived it with all the devilish Subtilty that ever any could do, or that could enter into the Minds of any People. You are the Judges of the Fact, I pray God to direct you, that you may detect the Truth; far be it from the Court, or any Body, to desire that any thing but Truth should prevail; for it were far better a thousand Times that a Hundred guilty Men should escape, than one innocent Man should suffer. But on the other Side, far be it from any Man, that is upon his Oath to do his Duty between the King and the Subject, to be moved by Compassion, or any Thing of that Nature, to do against the Evidence that is given in open Court; unless he be satisfy'd that the Evidence is false. For in this Case, I say again, either you must find the Prisoner guilty of what he stands charged with in the Indictment; or else you must find these three Witnesses guilty of wilful Perjury: And I pray God again to direct you what you are to do in it.

Gentlemen, as to the Testimony that has been offered on the Behalf of the Prisoner (I would follow the same Method that has been taken, both in the Evidence given by the King and the Prisoner, as near as we can): First, you have had brought by him Half a Dozen (for I would not injure him as near as I could one Tittle) that have given you an Account of what he said at that Time. There was Hudson, Hall, Atkinson, Smith, Hales, and Wharton; I took their Names, as near as I could; and all these People do directly say, they were present at that Time, and they heard nothing spoken of the late blessed Martyr King Charles the First, or of Reflection upon the Government; but all that was said of the King's Majesty, that now is, was in his Prayer, wherein he did pray for him; that they heard nothing come from Mr. Roswell concerning the King's Evil in the Manner that the Witnesses speak of; but what was spoken, was spoken of another King, in relation to Abimelech King of Egypt, and not relating any way to the Disease they call commonly amongst us the King's Evil. It is true, one of them does say (which is a Word that has obtained very much amongst some Sort of People), that when he prayed for the King, he pray'd for his Deliverance from evil Counsellors: And under these Words, evil Counsellors, and Deliverance from them, we know what became of that so often mentioned Prince now, King Charles the First. Under that Pretence they would remove all his Friends from him; and when he was left alone, they could easily do what they pleased with him. Many, with Pretence of great Pity and Zeal for the King, cry out; that all that they complain of, is not of what the King does; him they think to be a wonderful good Man; it is not he, but his evil Counsellors, that they reflect upon; and so we must fight against these evil Counsellors; and when we have laid them aside, and he stands alone, then it will be easy to serve him as they did his Father. Whatsoever the Pretensions of such Words are, we know what the Designs of the People, that made the same Pretence heretofore, came to; and I pray God, that there are not the same Designs on Foot still; nay, that that was not the Design of this Prayer of the Prisoner at the Bar.

Gentlemen, they give you a particular Account how he Preached upon the 20th of Genesis; and they speak as to the 2d and 7th Verses of that Chapter, and what Discourse he had upon them. But truly, it is pretty strange (as Mr. Roswell himself objected even to you of the Jury very well), can any one of you remember so exactly the Words that were spoken as these Witnesses have sworn? And truly he puts a very material Question: But then the Question turns t'other Way; how come all your Witnesses to give such an exact Account; all except the second Man, who indeed did commit a Blunder or two, your Six Witnesses, even to the Texts of Scripture, to the very Phrases that were used, particularly to the Word Tremendous? They are all as exact as can be. It is strange that Five People should agree in all the Circumstances; but why should it not be as much believable that Three should have as exact a Memory as the other Five? Nay, and I will tell you, what is pretty strange too, that these People must hear, and remember just what was said upon the 14th of September; but that which was said upon the Text the Time before or after, that they cannot so well remember. It is plain, they have been dialogueing with one another; and it is plain, that some People can neither write or read, nor remember, but how they shall be sure to serve the present Purpose. That seems to carry an Objection in it on the other Side, as the King's Counsel say; and it seems the more reasonable on our Side, why they should remember so exactly, as they have sworn; because (say they) that Day, when we came home, we called for Pen, Ink, and Paper, and set down these Words, the Substance of which we have now here sworn: So that that does shew you we had Reason to remember, what we have testified against this Person. But what is yet greater than all this, it cannot be imagined (say the King's Counsel) that the Prisoner's Witnesses are so much to be believed, since they give no Account of what was spoken at any Time before, nor any Time since.

Then, Gentlemen, there is another Reason, says Mrs. Smith, I came on Purpose to see who was at the Conventicle; tho' I had been at several Conventicles before, yet I never heard such Words spoken. Says Mrs. Hilton, I was glad to be gone; and tells you of her Unwillingness to stay there, having never heard such Words spoken against the Government before; and therefore she set them down immediately as soon as they came home; and they went together to the Bull and Mouth, the Quakers Meeting near Aldersgate afterwards; and that that Day, or the Day following, they went to Mr. Recorder, and gave him an Account of what had past in their Knowledge. This is the Answer that is given by them to what the Prisoner's Witnesses say: But you are to weigh this Testimony of both Sides. For I must tell you, Gentlemen, tho' these Witnesses, that are for the Prisoner, are not upon their Oaths, yet they are as much under the Obligation of giving true Testimony, as they can be by Law; and you ought to have Regard to their Testimony, how far it is consistent with Reason and with Truth. Some Things they differed in; some Things they heard in another Manner; whether you may believe such Things may slip out of their Memories, or how that is, you are to consider of it. This, Gentlemen, is the First part of the Evidence that the Prisoner hath given for himself.

Next, Gentlemen, there is another Part of the Evidence, and that is from the Fifteen Witnesses, one Mr. Jolliff, Captain Cotton, Mr. Fippi, Mr. Veering, Mr. Hitchcock, Mr. Hinman, Mr. Wanly, Mr. Strong, Mr. Cutloe, Mr. Melfum, Mr. Medham, Mr. Winnacott, Anne Broadhurst, Anne Manning, Isabella Dickeson; all these were called to his Reputation as to his Behaviour and Conversation towards the Government. They tell you they have known him a long Time. It seems they frequented the Hearing of him sometimes, when there was an Indulgence and a Dispensation for such Meetings, then they went to hear him, and then he used to pray for the King; and it has been observed, that, it may be, meeting with Favour and Kindness from the King and Government, he might be very well pleased with the King at that Time; tho' that turned to the Prejudice of the Government (as we all know). But whether his Complexion altered towards the Government, when it was thought fit to restrain that Indulgence, that you have to consider. They say, they know nothing of Harm by him, and that may be true; no more do I; and I presume you do not; if you do you will tell us. You and I, pray God we had never heard of any thing of Harm come from him, with Relation to the King and Government; but you have heard what has been testified by these Witnesses.

Then there came two Witnesses, that lived at Sir Edward Hungerford's when the Prisoner at the Bar lived there; one of them lived Ten Years there, the other Four. And they give you an Account, how he was used to pray (not according to the Common-Prayer) but he used to go to Church, and he did pray for the King very earnestly, and heartily, as they say; he came there in the Year 1664, and he continued there Seven Years, and they always looked upon him to be well-inclined to the Government.

Then you have an Account of Three Servants that lived in the House; one lived Four Years with him, and that she frequently heard him pray for for the King (for I would not willingly forget a Word that should make for the Prisoner's Advantage), she said he prayed as earnestly for the King as for his own Soul, with as much Zeal and Earnestness as he could do; this is what she says. And the second lived with him three Years, and she does remark particularly, that one Time being in private in his own Closet, at Prayer by himself, she heard him very earnest in praying for the King: So that he would urge it as improbable, and unreasonable, to believe, that if he, in his private Family, and by himself, should so earnestly pray for the King (which was never intended to be heard by any Body, and came to be thus heard by Accident), he should in publick, before a great Congregation, utter such Words against the King and Government as are pretended against him. This is the Use he makes of that.

Then, Gentlemen, you have likewise afterwards, the Testimony of those two Witnesses that have been examined before, that is, Mr. Atkinson, and Mr. Smith; that whereas you seem to say, says he, I made a great Reflection upon the late King, and his present Majesty; it was so far from that, that I used to teach upon the 30th of January, and then to preach Obedience to the King, and to pray for the King, and make sharp Invektives and Reflections upon those that had been concerned in that horrid, barbarous Murder of the late King, of blessed Memory; so that I cannot be thought to encourage such Things as these, when I used to preach to my Auditory such Doctrine, as I now tell you of. This is the Substance of that part of the Evidence, as near as I can remember, and recollect; you have taken Notes, Gentlemen, yourselves; you will be able for to make Observations, according to what Notes you have taken.

Then, Gentlemen, here are eighteen Witnesses; that he has called, to endeavour to persuade you to a Disbelief, and gain a Discredit as to the Witnesses that are produced against him. Now as to that, which was offered by the first Witness, How; that was but by Hear-say, he knows nothing of his own Knowledge; for my Brother, Sir Thomas Jenner, he gives you an Account of all the Questions that he was asked about; that she never did say that she was present at the Conventicle, but that Mrs. Bathoe had confessed it to her; and upon that Confession she was convicted. Now, Gentlemen, it is a very untoward Thing in this Matter, that Mrs. Bathoe, it is plain, used to have Conventicles, and she is the Widow of a Non-conformist Preacher, and this Woman was so far from saying, that she was there, that she only insinuated upon it; that Mrs. Bathoe had confessed it to her. So likewise you have been told concerning that Business of Mr. Hales, the Conventicle at his House, on the 13th of July; it was so far from her swearing that Mr. How was there, that tho' he was mentioned, yet she refused before Sir George Treby to swear that there was any such Conventicle, or that he was the Man; she did not know the Man, and could not say any Thing to him. And my Brother Jenner being convinced that there might be a Mistake, that there might be no such Conventicle at Mrs. Bathoe's; went as far as he could to retrieve it; but it seems it was past from him into the Clerk of the Peace's Hands; I cannot say any Thing to it: But if you are satisfied that there was no such Conventicle at all, all that can be said, is, that the Old Woman belied herself, and my Brother Jenner, as to an Accommodation between them, did resolve to do what he could, and promised to speak to the Clerk of the Peace: Not but that, for any Thing yet appears, this Woman; that is here brought as a Witness against Mr. Rosewell, did swear true, That that other Woman did confess to her, that there was such a Conventicle; they indeed have endeavoured to evince there was no such Conventicle. I must leave it to you; for nothing appears clear of the one Side, or the other.

Then, Gentlemen, as concerning her talking with, and about one Games; wherein you had an Account given you by one Harvey, and he advised to give Money, rather than to be troubled; but they would not give Money. Now, for that the whole Answer (that it may be given together) is, that you know the Prosecutor, in these Cases, has a Share out of the Penalties that are incurred by Conventicles; and tho' it may be that it was not so well done by such Informations to compound Penalties, yet it is no evil Thing: For if I will choose to inform, or not inform, there is a Right in me to a Part of the Penalty arising from the Offence: And tho' it be not a commendable Thing, yet it is not a criminal Thing for me to compound it; for I do not observe that they are proved to be People that do use to go to Conventicles.

Then, Gentlemen, there is something to be observed concerning the Evidence of Cartwright: He comes and tells you, that he was by, and one of the Persons that went along with Mrs. Smith to several Places, in order to make Convictions of Persons for Conventicles; and she would have him swear such and such Conventicles, that she would dictate to him; and she promised, and offered to swear for the Conviction of Conventicles, when she was not there: And this was a great while ago; but nobody heard a Word of it till now, and that when Mrs. Smith was engaged in this Prosecution against Mr. Rosewell. Now when we meet with this Sort of People, we ought to consider of the Nature of their Evidence. It is certainly a very improbable Thing, that any Person should come and tell him, I will be guilty of Perjury, I will be forsworn for you, if you will be forsworn for me. It can hardly be believed that any body should say so to a Fellow, that you see is likely enough to detect any such Thing if it should be for his Advantage: And it had been his Duty (if he had been an honest Man) to have discovered this to a Magistrate immediately, and detected it, so as that the Villainy should have been punished; not to come and serve a Turn upon such a Trial, just as this is. And therefore, Gentlemen, I do not like such accidental Witnesses, that seem to drop (as it were) out of the Clouds, and we can have no Account of them before. You have no satisfactory Reason how he comes in now to make this Discovery. Here you have several other Witnesses, that were before, that give some Account of her Behaviour in these Matters.

As to the Conviction that they talk'd of, upon the 13th of July, several Witnesses give you an Account of the Matter. First of all, it is very apparent by that Book that is produced, that there was a Conventicle the 13th of July, and it was at Mr. Hudson's; but indeed it was not at Mr. Hudson's; and it is not alledged here by her that it was so. And for that other, my Brother Jenner gives you an Account, that upon the Confession of Mrs. Bathoe there was a Conviction; but there was no such Conviction of Hales in the Cafe, but only of Bathoe; as appears by the Record which hath been produced.

Then, Gentlemen, the next Question is concerning the Clerk of the Peace, and the Writing that they talk of; which makes nothing one Way nor t'other. Then there are two Witnesses, Drew, and the other Man, that met with this Woman, Mrs. Smith, in Grub-street, in order to make a Composition for Penalties for going to Conventicles; and they find out a Fellow that used to go to Conventicles, and they frighten him into a Composition, and so much as they say, were paid perhaps, and he ought to have paid more: But it's plain, he used to go to Conventicles; and it's pretty odd that he should be picked up on a sudden there, on this Side the Water, to discover these Practices, at the Instigation of the Prisoner at the Bar; who lives at such a Distance on t'other Side of the Water.

Then, Gentlemen, as for Mrs. Higgenfon, I can only say this, she says nothing to the Purpose, that is either material for, or against the Prisoner; for she said, she knew nothing of her own Knowledge; and all that she did say, was but Hear-says and Reports, not by Way of downright Accusation against the Person she was produced against. And, Gentlemen, you are to consider, that Hear-say and Report is no Evidence at all; but it must be what the Witnesses know, and say of their own Knowledge.

The next is a worthy Gentleman, Sir John Talbot, and as to whatsoever he said, or any of his Family told him, except he knows it of his own Knowledge, that's no Manner of Evidence at all to take off the Credit of Mrs. Hilton. But what she herself did say (if it can be testified) is Evidence against her. If she confessed that she had any Design, or was engaged in any Practice to betray the young Lady Sir John Talbot talks of, that indeed is a very evil Thing. But whatsoever were the Apprehensions of others concerning her Share in that Matter, or any of the little Things that they talked of concerning Mistress Hilton, before she intermarried, it can signify but very little in this Matter. And when we ask Sir John Talbot the Question, he cannot give any satisfactory Account of it; for he says plainly, he had no Conversation with her. It seems it was not a Contrivance while she lived there for Ten Years together; and it is pretty hard to imagine in such a Cafe, if she had been such an evil Person, as they would represent her, in that Time, that it had not appeared, so far at least, as that she had been discharged the Service long before: For Sir John Talbot is a Person that cannot be thought to permit any Thing of ill in his Family. But yet withal, he can't know all that passed, any more than any of you, of Irregularity in the Family. If indeed they had questioned any of the Servants, that were more conversant with her, and taxed her of any Thing that was evil, then it had been a much more probable Exception; but to have People's Reputations blasted barely by Tittle-tattle, and Stories, after Persons are gone out of a Family, where they have lived for many Years, is a Matter of very dangerous Consequence; and any Man in the World may be injured in his Credit, if such a Thing be permitted. What Sir John Talbot speaks of his own Knowledge, that is Evidence, and we would hear it, and give all due Regard to it: But what was spoken of concerning Hilton, before she was married; what the rest of the Servants said concerning her; or the general Reputation that she had in the Family; that's no Evidence at all.

Gentlemen, in the last Place there is a Witness produced, one Dillingham; and she pretends that she is a Woman of a very ill Reputation; and that she would have hired her (as she would have it believed) to have sworn against several People. Now as to that, she would have done exceeding well to have made a Discovery of this before this Question; and it had been her Duty so to do; and not now to come, and drop in, just when this Question comes to be debated before you: That, Gentlemen, draws a Suspicion along with it, and a very great one: But I must leave the whole Matter to you, which I do not question but you will examine, and look into, as well as you can. Thus I have offered the Evidence that has been given on the one Side, and on the other, in Point of Fact.

Now, Gentlemen, there are some Remarks made by the Prisoner at the Bar (as God forbid, but he should have the Advantage of whatsoever can be observed upon the Evidence given against him), that is, he makes a Difference between the Testimony of the one and the other of these Witnesses, about the 20th or 21st of Genesis; that the one said the 21st, the other the 20th. Now, it is to be observed, as has been said, that she that said the 20th, which was the second Witness, said it was either the 20th or the 21st; and Mrs. Smith said it was so to the best of her Remembrance; but it appears to be, and so I perceive, by all the Witnesses, upon the 20th; so that as to her it cannot be very material, because she does not swear positively either the one or the other.

Then, Gentlemen, there is another Thing, that is, that she should talk of one Weldy, Captain Weldy, or Captain Daniel Weldy, when it seems his Name was not Weldy, but his Name was Captain Daniel; which I think can go no great Way in the Cafe. She is not acquainted with the Man himself; she tells you one Part of his Name right; describes the House in all the Parts of it; and speaks of the Circumstance of his being at Sea, and being prayed for by Mr. Rosewell; therein they do both agree: So that, tho' she apprehended that his Name might be Daniel Weldy, yet it is so far right enough that it was one Captain Daniel; and that there is a very small minute Difference, that will make little one Way or other.

Then, Gentlemen, he insists upon the Difference between their Evidence about that Circumstance, whether it was all upon one entire Subject; or Part one Part of the Day, and Part the other. One of them says, it was not an entire Discourse; for that about the Rams-horns, and the broken Platters, and the Stone in a Sling, was after Two o'Clock, after the Interval that had been, and the Space of Time between the Discourse of the King's Evil, and those other Things; and therefore, says Mr. Rosewell, whereas she pretends that it was all spoken at the same Time, just as it is laid in the Indictment, that cannot be; and so it appears upon his own Evidence. Now, says that Woman, I can't tell, whether it was Forenoon or Afternoon, and truly they might call it Forenoon, because they had neither eat nor drank; and and says the Woman, we reckon that it's Forenoon till after we have dined; and she cannot tell whether it was in the Psalms, or whether it was upon the Chapter; but it was in that Discourse that he held that Day. She does generally apply it to the whole; and that in that Day's Discourse (all which Time she stayed, till all was over) such Words did pass. You have heard the Difference that is between the two Witnesses, and you will do well to consider of it, if you think there is any thing material in it.

Gentlemen, I must confess it carries a notable Sort of Testimony in it, of which you are Judges, and will weigh it according as it ought to be weighed: First, That these People should luckily hit together concerning the King's Evil, and that there was such a Discourse as is laid in the Indictment about it, and of the Prophet's praying for the People for the Cure of the King's Evil, and then they should be immediately heal'd. And on the other Side it is pretty strange (as he urges for himself) that that should be perverted, which he spoke concerning the Prophet's praying for the King, and thereupon his Hand being healed, whereby the Prophets have the Honour (as he says) sometime by Prayer, of curing the King's Evil: So that something or other there is in the Matter, that gives a mighty Countenance to what the Witnesses speak. There is a certain Sort of Occasion given (as one would say) for such Expressions, as they have testified, in his Discourses.

Then, when they come to talk concerning the Rams-horns, and the Platters, the Witnesses say, we heard nothing concerning Platters, much less of Pewter-Platters; no, it was broken Pitchers, and that was occasioned by, and had Relation to a Text (says Mr. Rosewell) about Gideon, how easily he discomfited the Philistines Army, and there was no such Thing as any Discourse concerning the King, or the Government, or any Relation thereunto; it was only a Phrase used by me in the Pulpit, to shew how great a Matter might be done by little Means. And so likewise concerning the Stone in the Sling, that being an occasional Instance too what great Miracles have been brought about by little Means and Circumstances: I have instanced in that (says he) how David killed Goliath with a Stone out of a Sling, and that our Saviour Jesus Christ cured the blind Man by a little Spittle mingled with Clay. So that he would insinuate, that those Words that were spoken were not with any such Intention as the King's Counsel would make it, and as the Indictment insinuates; but only in a common, ordinary Preachment, as Inferences from such and such Scriptures. And whether this that he talks of, was the Discourse he held at that Time; or what the Witnesses speak, must be left to you; they having sworn it. And this, as I take it, is the Substance of the Evidence given by the one and the other Side.

Then, Gentlemen, Mr. Rosewell put the Question in the Morning, and he seemed to insist very much upon it in Point of Law, that the Discourses of a Madman cannot be Treason. It is true, that such Discourses cannot be Treason, if you take Madmen in the true Sense that the Law commonly takes it. All Traitors, all Knaves, and Villains, are some Way, and in some Sense, Madmen; for no Person can act with any Reason in any such Affairs. Treason is not to be committed upon the Foundation of Reason. Therefore upon his asking of the Question of the Witnesses, what Reason there was for him to use such Expressions; I told him, you did it, according as the Indictment says, which is drawn according to the Prescripts of the Law, by the Instigation of the Devil; you did it, not only without Reason, but against Reason. But if the bare saying that it was against Reason, and that therefore a Man was a Madman, would serve the Turn, there would be no Traitor according to that Rule; because every Traitor would be a Madman. Every Traitor is a Madman; but every Madman is not a Traitor. A Madman, in our common Acceptation, is one that is captivated in his Senses, not one that is corrupt in his Will and Affections, which must be the Definition of a Traitor: So that the Argument, I must tell you, is fallacious. Every Man, that is depraved in his Mind and Affections, is a Madman, so as to be an Enemy to the Government, or to Mankind; but he is not such a Madman, as is commonly meant by that Word; one whose Words may be mistaken, because of some Disorder in his Understanding, so as to be excused from the Accusation of Treason. Therefore whatsoever Consequence there may be of the Thing, I must tell you, all Men that talk after this Rate, that this Person is accused to talk in his Pulpit, they are every one Traitors, and so Madmen; for every Traitor is a Madman: And if in Case Mr. Rosewell be Guilty, he is in that Sense a Madman. It is true, in other Things you find him a Man of very notable Understanding, a Man of a very great Insinuation, one that has a great deal of Knowledge in the Tongues, looked upon to be a very learned and ingenious Man, who was thought fit to be a Tutor to Sir Edward Hungerford's Children; and has had very many learned Discourses, and shewn himself to be a Man of very great Parts. Tho', if he be a Traitor upon this Evidence that is given, he is, eo nomine, a Traitor, and consequently a Madman, for Preaching and Publishing such Doctrine as this, that will not serve to excuse him from his Treason: But the rather, because he is a Man of so much Learning, it aggravates the Treason, as it must needs do to any Body in the World that considers it. For he under that Pretence offering to preach his Doctrine as Gospel-Truth to ignorant People, it seems, 300 or more, of all Trades and Persuasions, whose Duty it was, according to Law, to have been then at Church; Men of Strength and Ability of Body, as they appear to be, for the Service of the Government; for these People to be debauched into such Doctrines as these, of standing to their Principles against the Government; the more Learned the Man is, the greater and blacker is the Crime of that Man that is Guilty of it. God knows whether that be Mr. Rosewell's Case, and you that are of the Jury are to try it: To do it under Pretence of Preaching the Gospel is the worst Way of doing it that could be taken; to quote Scripture for Rebellion adds to the Crime; as it did to that of those Black Villains that were concerned in the Murder of our late dread Sovereign, who has been so often mentioned; they were generally the Preachers of the late Times that contributed to that horrid Villainy.

Gentlemen, it is notoriously known to you in this accursed late hellish Conspiracy against his Sacred and most Merciful Majesty, our Sovereign that now is (whom I pray God long to reign over us) those that had an Hand in the Intention to destroy him, and his Royal Brother, were a great many of them Black-Coat Dissenters to the Church of England; and I cannot say I know any one Member of the Church of England that had any Hand in it at all. How many of them stand now convicted by Outlawry for that Bloody Treason, I won't say all Parsons, but generally all of them Dissenters; and we know these are those base, profligate Villains, always made Use of in these base Sinks of Rebellion. And they are the common Sewers of Faction, these Conventicles are, and of Treason and Conspiracy against the Government in Church and State. God be praised, we have a Religion that teaches us much better, a Religion established by the Laws of the Land, and with that Decency of Worship, and Care of the Souls of Men, that may bring us all to Heaven, by the Grace of God, if we please to hearken to the Dictates of it, and to mind what is injoin'd us, our Duty by the Law; but when People are once deluded by the Insinuation of such false Teachers, and run into Faction and Discontent, then they'll soon run into Rebellion too. And I speak this, the rather to deter and give Warning to other People, to have a Care how they come near such Places, and such Practices, than to affect you.

Gentlemen, here you have had three Witnesses examined against the Prisoner, who stands accused for a Crime of High-Treason. I must confess, I have taken up a great deal of the Time; and a great deal of the Time was taken up before; but there's no Time too long, wherein a Question of so mighty Moment as this is, is to be decided: The Government, the Preservation of our King, the Preservation of our Religion, the Preservation of our Laws, are all concerned: For by the Destruction of our King, and of our Government, our Religion, and all that is near and dear to us in the World, will run a great Hazard, if not come to a total Destruction; and I am sure it did come near to it in a former Time, by this very Sort of way. Therefore I injoin you, in the Presence of the Almighty God, let neither Displeasure, nor any Sort of personal Animosity, in any Thing, that has been contracted by Hearsay from abroad, nor any Imaginations that have been suggested here without Proof, any Way direct you in the Consideration of this Cause against the Prisoner at the Bar: But go according to the Evidence that has been here before you, on the one Side and on the other Side. For as on the one Side you are not to be corrupted by common Talk, or any Prejudice against a Party or a Faction; so are you not to be misled by any Affirmation, or Reflection, or Comment that the Prisoner has made or said for himself, other than what is supported by the Testimony of these Witnesses that he has produced, and whose Evidence is left to you to consider: For you must not be led by any Circumstances, or by Discourses, but what's sworn on the one Side for the King, or testified on the other for the Prisoner. And therefore I can with all Freedom and Zeal for the Government, and all due Compassion to the Prisoner at the Bar (whom with all my Soul I am sorry to see accused, or indeed any Man, of such a Crime) leave this Matter entirely upon the Evidence that has been given. And tho', I say, I am sorry to see him accus'd; yet such Transgressions are aggravated now, when we live in an Age, wherein we have all Peace and Plenty, while the rest of our Neighbours are wallowing in their Blood round about us; some we have heard of, are brought to the Necessity of eating the most filthy and basest Animals, that never was designed for the Food of Man; I say, when all our Neighbours are groaning under the Miseries of War (blessed be God), we live and sleep quietly under our own Vines; we enjoy the Benefit of being Subjects to a gracious King; we enjoy the full Extent of our Laws, which are sufficient to secure our Liberties and Properties; and no Man can be brought (no, not one of the meanest Subjects the King has) to such an untimely End, but by the true Methods of Justice.

He is to be tried by you, Gentlemen, who are Gentlemen of Quality of the County where the Fact is alleged to be committed; against whom he might have made his Challenges and Exceptions, if he had any Reason; as he did against the others (according to the Liberty the Law allows him) without any Reason. So that you stand indifferent between the King and the Prisoner at the Bar, to try this Cause, whether he be guilty, or not guilty of the Treason of which he stands accused. In Case the late intended Rebellions and Insurrections had taken the designed Effect, according to the Doctrine preached in these Sermons, of standing to Principles, and overcoming Enemies; and what several of his Brethren, who stand now accused of, and are upon Prosecution (and for ought I know every one of them might be actually engaged), I say, in Case such a Thing had been, there had been nothing but cutting of Throats; there had been no Justice for any Subject to have expected; no Methods, or Proceedings of Law; but Destruction would have come upon us like an armed Man.

Therefore, Gentlemen, as the Evidence has been long, so I hope you will give me your Pardon, that I have been the longer in insisting upon it; and, according to my best Understanding and Memory, I have given you the best Account I can, both of the Evidence for and against the Prisoner. You are Judges of the Fact; and I pray God direct you, and guide you and your Consciences, that the Truth may be discovered by your Verdict.

Mr. Rosewell. May a loyal Subject speak, my Lord?

L. C. J. No, Mr. Rosewell; after the Jury are charged by the Court, you are not to say any Thing. Swear an Officer to keep the Jury.

[Which was done.]

Then the Jury withdrew into the usual Room for such Purposes, to consider of their Verdict; and afterwards they returned into Court.

Clerk of the Crown. Crier, take the Appearance of the Jury.

Crier. Sir George Sheers.

Sir George Sheers. Here.

Crier. Vous avez Sir George Sheers, &c. — [And so of the rest.]

Cl. of the Crown. Gentlemen, are you agreed in your Verdict?

Jury. Yes.

Cl. of the Crown. Who shall say for you?

Jury. Our Foreman.

Clerk of the Crown. Thomas Rosewell, Hold up thine Hand. [Which he did.] You of the Jury, look look upon the Prisoner. How say you? Is he Guilty of the High-Treason whereof he stands indicted, or Not Guilty?

Foreman. Guilty.

Cl. of Cr. What Goods or Chattels, Lands or Tenements, had he at the time of the High-Treason committed, or at any time since, to your Knowledge?

Foreman. None, that we know of.

Mr. Ros. Then the Lord have mercy upon the Jury! My Lord, I humbly request this Favour, that they may be asked separatim, whether they be all of the same Opinion.

L. C. J. That's never done, Mr. Rosewell, unless there be any Difference suggested from amongst themselves.

Mr. Ros. I ask it in regard to them themselves; for I have heard many times the Jury go by the major part; and I would know whether they be all of that Opinion. Therefore I beg they may be asked that Question.

L. C. J. You must be contented, Mr. Rosewell; in case there were any difference, we should hear of it from amongst themselves.

Cl. of Cr. Then hearken to your Verdict, as the Court has recorded it. You say that Thomas Rosewell is guilty of the High-Treason whereof he stands indicted; but that he had no Goods, Chattels, Lands or Tenements, at the time of the High-Treason committed, or any time since, to your Knowledge, and so you say all?

Omnēs. Yes.

Cl. of Cr. Gentlemen, the Court dismisseth you.

L. C. J. Marshall, you must take him into your Custody, being now convicted.

Mr. Ros. My Lord, I would heartily beg, for the Jury's sake themselves, that that Question may be asked of them.

L. C. J. We must not indulge any Innovations. It is not usual: You may ask them, if you please; see whether they will answer you. We must go according to the Forms of Law.

Mr. Ros. Then, my Lord, if all these Gentlemen's Estates were joined in one, I would not change Conditions with that Man of them, who should possess the Whole.

L. C. J. Mr. Rosewell, we must have no Reflections upon the Jury.

Then the Prisoner was taken away, and the Court broke up:

Die Lunæ 24 Nov. An. Dom. 1684. B. Regis.

Dominus Rex versus Rosewell.

THIS Day Mr. Rosewell being brought up to the Court, to receive Sentence, the Court proceeded as follows.

L. C. J. Brother Jenner, have you any thing to move?

Mr. Serj. Jenner. My Lord, we wait upon the Prisoner at the Bar, to desire Judgment upon the Conviction that was here the other Day for High-Treason.

L. C. J. Against the Prisoner at the Bar, do you mean?

Mr. Serj. Jenner. Yes, Sir.

L. C. J. Then call him to his Judgment.

Cl. of Cr. Thomas Rosewell, hold up thy Hand. [Which he did.] Thou hast been indicted for High-Treason, in compassing and imagining the Death of the King, and the Subversion of the Government: Upon that Indictment thou hast been arraigned: Upon that Arraignment thou hast pleaded Not Guilty: And for thy Trial thou hast put thyself upon God and thy Country; which Country has found thee Guilty. What hast thou to say for thyself, wherefore Judgment should not be given against thee, to die according to the Law?

[Then he was made to kneel and rise again.]

Mr. Rosewell. My Lord, I humbly hope that your Lordship will not give Sentence against me upon this Indictment, considering the Circumstances of it. I have, my Lord, protested to this honourable Court, in the Presence of the great God, the Searcher of Hearts, my Innocency in this Case; but I have been found Guilty by the Jury, on whom the Lord have Mercy. I do still protest my Detestation and Abhorrence of the Fact, even in my very Soul; and I do humbly beg your Lordship and the Court to compassionate my present Condition; and, with humble Submission to your Lordship, I would enter into my Discourse upon that Hypothesis; for I would be still taken thus, even in this Conviction to deny the Thesis, That I ever was guilty of speaking such Words as are laid in the Indictment. But upon the Hypothesis, supposing that I were Guilty, I do humbly conceive that these Words, as they are laid, are not Treason. They are very foolish and ugly Words; and may be a very great Misdemeanour in Law (if true, which still I must over and over again insist upon), but they are not Treason. And I beg your Lordship will do me the Favour to let the Indictment be read once more.

L. C. J. Ay, with all my Heart.

Mr. Ros. I humbly thank your Lordship; I desire it may be read in Latin.

L. C. J. Read it to him in Latin.

Surrey ff. Juratores pro Domino Rege super Sacramentum suum præsentant, &c.

[The whole Indictment was read.]

Mr. Ros. I humbly thank your Lordship. There are some things that I shall offer to your Lordship in Arrest of Judgment out of this Indictment; and I request your Lordship to hear me with Patience, being here for my Life. I pray Judgment may be arrested for these Causes: That there is not any Crime sufficiently set forth for your Lordship to give Judgment upon. My Lord, I humbly take it for granted, that in all Indictments of Treason there must be some particular Matter of Treason assigned; and that it is not a sufficient Indictment in general, that a Man did intend to depose the King, or to raise Rebellion, without some Overt-Act positively asserted to be done by that Person; the general Intention being only an Inducement to the Charge. The special Matters that set forth the particular Acts of Treason, are those that make the real Charge, upon which the Court and the Jury are to proceed. Now, my Lord, if that special Matter, that is alledged, be insufficient, with an humble submission, tho' there be never so many such Sorts of Facts proved, and found by the Jury, the Party cannot be convicted of High-Treason: For, in this Case the Party has the same Advantage to except against the Particulars alledged, to prove the general suggested Treason, as against the general Treason itself. Now, with humble Submission, my Lord, again I say, that the Matter here suggested is insufficient, as will evidently appear by what I am going to offer to your Lordship.

The first and principal Objection that I have, is against the Innuendo's, which are so many, and so strange, in these Words that are alledged against me. These Innuendo's, my Lord, I say, are nought and void; and I presume that it will be allowed to me, upon reading of the Words by themselves, as bad and as foolish as they are. Without these Innuendo's there could nothing be made out of such Words as these are, neither Treason, nor any thing else.

Then, my Lord, in the second Place, laying aside the Innuendo's, I must insist upon the repugnancy and insensibility of the Words laid in the Indictment, being in Latin, and such Latin, as I believe your Lordship never saw; and upon these two Points, I desire that Judgment may be arrested, and I humbly pray Counsel may be assigned me to make them out in better Form.

VOL. III.

L. C. J. What say you to it, Brother Jenner, and the King's Counsel?

Mr. Serj. Jenner. I cannot see that he has alledged any Objection, which here requires an Answer from any of us, that are of Counsel for the King.

L. C. J. Yes, Brother; methinks he does.

Mr. Att. Gen. If he does pretend to object against any of the Overt-Acts alledged in the Indictment; your Lordship observes, this Indictment is upon the Statute of the 12th of this King, wherein Words are made Treason, if they intend any Hurt or Imprisonment to the King's Person. For his Objection as to the Innuendo's, he does not assign wherein they are repugnant, or insufficient. He does assign in particular, indeed, that it is insufficient, being a general Crime; which yet he does not say is not sufficiently laid; for it is said, that he did compass and imagine the Death and Destruction of the King: And, to effect that compassing and imagination, he did speak such and such Words, which by the Statute are made Treason, if they tend to attempt, by Preaching or Writing, any Imprisonment or Harm to the King's Person. Then for him to come to talk of Standing to their Principles, after he had spoken of two wicked Kings together, meaning the late King, and the present, and that then we should overcome our Enemies; what is that but Preaching in order to raise a Rebellion and Insurrection, tending to the Destruction of the King, and his Government? All this is laid in the Indictment; the Jury find it spoken maliciously, and with such an Intention as we have laid; and therefore we think that it is sufficient.

L. C. J. But, if I take the Gentleman right (for I tell you beforehand Justice must be done to all People impartially. The Crime is a very great Crime that he stands accused of; and the Jury have found him guilty of the Crime laid in the Indictment: But, if I take him aright) he does not say that Words are not sufficient to create a Treason, but the Words here, as they are laid in this Indictment, are not sufficient: And as I take it, there is no great difficulty in the Matter; but the Words would have been sufficient to have supported the Accusation, if they be well laid. But the Question is, Whether the Words, that you have laid here, be so positively affirmed to have been spoken by the Prisoner, and to relate to the Government, as they ought to be in an Indictment of High-Treason?

Mr. Att. Gen. That the Indictment must make out; and the Jury have found him Guilty, according to the Indictment.

L. C. J. But that is his Objection, they are not so in the Indictment.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, they are laid as the Witnesses swore them; as your Lordship can't but remember.

L. C. J. That they are not positively affirmed, but only alledged under an Innuendo; that is, he spoke such and such Words, whereby he compared the King to Jeroboam, and the like; and we had two wicked Kings together, but if we would stand to our Principles, we should overcome our Enemies, Innuendo the King. The alledging of the Words spoken in the Indictment is positive, if there be sufficient Matter in the Words to make them applicable to the Government, so as to make it Treason. But if you only say, he spoke them, Innuendo so and so, that is not positive enough to make the Indictment good. I take it the Objection runs that way.

Mr. Ros. My Lord, I humbly thank your Lordship for explaining my meaning: It is so.

L. C. J. In an Action on the Case, if you say the Defendant spake such and such Words, if you do not lay it that he spoke them of the Plaintiff; Innuendo, The Plaintiff, in repeating the Words won't do. So here, if you had brought it in the Indictment, that having discourse of the late King and this King, he had spoken these Words, We have now had two wicked Kings, &c. you then had brought it home to him: But you do not lay it that it was spoken of them at all, but only in the Innuendo; whereas you ought to say, first, That he spoke of the late King, and this King; and then said, We have had two wicked Kings together, Innuendo the late King, and this King.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, I do not know how we could have done it better than we have done.

L. C. J. Look ye, we give no Opinion; but the Objection has Weight in it, upon my Word. As I told you before, in common Cases an Action of the Case for Words, or the like, you must lay a Communication concerning the Plaintiff, or an Innuendo will not be a sufficient Averment of its being spoken of him. In an Action of the Case for Words, till within these Seven or Eight Years, they were obliged to lay a Colloquium of the Plaintiff, and of his Trade; and that to defame him, were spoken of him at such a time such Words, as that he was a Cheating Knave; where the Word Knave would bear an Action, a bare Innuendo would not do, that was not enough. But, now I confess, since Declarations are made a little more concise, you need only say dixit de Quarente, such and such Words without a Colloquium, but you must aver it to be spoken of the Plaintiff. I never thought it good in such a Case, to say of a Merchant, he is a Bankrupt Knave (Innuendo the Plaintiff), unless he say he spoke of his Trade and Merchandise. So that the Objection does seem to carry very much Weight in it.

* Mr. Finch. * Mr. Solicitor. My Lord, if your Lordship would give me leave, I would endeavour to answer the Case as your Lordship has put it; for, my Lord, no doubt in all common Actions of the Case for Words, it must be averred that the Words were spoken de Persona of the Plaintiff; but the first Part of the Indictment, in this Case, shews that the Words must be spoken of the Person of the King, and of the late King; for it says, he did conspire the Death and Destruction of the King, and to depose him from his Government, and to manifest that traitorous, wicked Intention of his; Ea intentione he did speak these Words of the Government, We have had two wicked Kings together, meaning this King and the late King.

L. C. J. If you had said so, that he spoke these Words of the King, you had answered my Objection; but the Conspiracy of the Death of the King being only a general Form for Treason, will not make good an Indictment of High-Treason; but you must shew some Acts or Words to evince and prove that that was his Intention; that he did either speak such and such Words, or did such and such Actions. It is not a good Indictment to prove that he did conspire, for he spoke such and such Words; but that to carry on his Conspiracy he did speak such and such Words of the Government, that must be positively alledged.

Mr. Solicitor. We do so, my Lord; for we say, Et ad easdem nefandas proditones, &c. perimplendas, he spoke such and such Words. We have had two wicked Kings together, Innuendo this King and the late.

L. C. J. You have Innuendo it too much, I do doubt; for all the Facts are laid under an Innuendo, without a positive Averment.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, I think it is as fully laid, as it possibly could be.

L. C. J. Come, Mr. Attorney, if in Cases of common Actions for Words there be such Strictness required, ten times more ought there to be in an Indictment of Treason, where a Man's Life, and All, is so much concerned. I am not satisfied, I assure you, that this Indictment is well laid, though I give no Opinion; but in all Justice we ought to assign him Counsel to make out his Objection.

Mr. Att. Gen. All this, my Lord, is only in delay.

L. C. J. Mr. Attorney, De vita Hominis nulla est cautatio longa. I think we ought to assign him Counsel, and the rest of my Brothers are of that Opinion too.

Mr. Att. Gen. Let them read Colonel Sidney's Trial, and the Indictment there, and they'll find it the same thing.

L. C. J. I cannot tell whether there are any such Innuendo's there, I believe not; but I know not if there were, if in case it had been moved in Arrest of Judgment, what the Court would have done then. But I think we ought to assign him Counsel to make out his Objection.

Mr. Solicitor. The very Fact that makes this Treason, is his stirring up Sedition and Rebellion within the Kingdom; and we say, to effect it, he had these Expressions in his Pulpit, We have now had two wicked Kings together, meaning this King and the late, who have suffered Popery to come under their Noses; but, if you will stand to your Principles, meaning the People, we shall overcome our Enemies, meaning the King and Government.

L. C. J. Ay, but you do not say that he spoke these Words of the King: This you should have said at first, because the speaking of these Words is the very Overt-Act; and if he did not speak them of the King, which you ought to affirm, but only by way of Innuendo, that cannot, we think, be so good, nor sufficient.

Mr. Just. Withins. I take it that these are the main Words that are to maintain this Indictment of Treason; and the Question is, Whether they ought not to have been averred that they were spoken of the two Kings?

L. C. J. We do not give any Opinion, Mr. Attorney, but because there seems to be some reasonable doubt and weight in the Objection, we desire to have it argued, and therefore will assign him Counsel.

Mr. Ros. I humbly thank your Lordship.

L. C. J. We do think it fit to look into it, before we proceed any farther in a Case where a Man's Life is concerned.

Mr. Ros. I pray God to bless your Lordship.

L. C. J. Nay, you have no need to thank me; for I desire to do Justice to all Men.

Mr. Ros. But I desire to return my hearty Thanks to your Lordship, for explaining and making out what my unskilfulness in the Law would not permit me to do. God be your rewarder for it.

L. C. J. Well, who would you have to be your Counsel?

Mr. Ros. If your Lordship pleases, Mr. Wallp., Mr. Pollexfen, and Mr. Thomas Bamfield.

L. C. J. Let them be assigned of Counsel for him. But, Mr. Rosewell, I think it is not improper for me, upon this Occasion, to take notice of this that is in my Mind, relating to your Affair, because I observe it is a Matter of great expectation, and so was at your Trial, and here is a great Croud of People now; that as this Fact is found, if the Indictment falls out to be a good Indictment, which is the Question that now depends before the Court, so that you come to have Judgment of High-Treason passed upon you, and to suffer according to that Judgment, what will become of these 400 People that were your Auditors at the time that these Words, that are thus found and adjudged to be Treason, were spoken? And I speak it for the sake of all Conventiclers, and Frequenters of such Meetings, as these are. If you, that are the Preachers, and Teachers, the Mouths of such Congregations, do utter Treason, and so they conceal that Treason, what a Condition are they in? What are they guilty of? Therefore, if People will consider, they would do well to think, that when they go to such Places, they go at a great Peril; being to answer for Themselves, their Lives and Estates, upon the Prudence of the Expressions, to say no more, that come from the Teachers. I only put you in mind of this, because I would have all Standers-by, and the Auditory, which I see is very great, in mind, what Danger and Risque they run in thus offending the Law.

Mr. Ros. My Lord, I do believe, that no one in the World, besides these Witnesses, that here were produced against me, can ever testify the least disrespectful Word spoken by me of the late King, or of his present Majesty.

L. C. J. Well; when will you be ready, Gentlemen?

Mr. Pollexfen. My Lord, we desire to have as much time to prepare ourselves as we can.

L. C. J. Two or three Days time will serve.

Mr. Att. Gen. It is fit we should know what Points they intend to insist upon, that we may prepare to answer them.

L. C. J. Yes, yes, that must be, but I perceive his main Objection is, what I tell; let him be brought by Rule hither, upon Thursday, because the Court may have time to consider of what shall be said on both Sides.

Mr. Ros. My Lord, these Gentlemen are Strangers to me; but I dare rely upon them, from the Character I have heard of them, that they will do me all the Justice that they can.

L. C. J. Well, they are assigned of Counsel for you. But I could not forbear giving that hint that I did, that this might be a Warning to People, how they transgress the Law in going to such Meetings.

Die Mercurii, 26 Novembris, 1684.

Rex versus Rosewell.

L. C. J. MR. Pollexfen, have you any thing to move?

Mr. Pollexfen. My Lord, I have one Word to move for myself, and the others that are appointed to be of Counsel for Mr. Rosewell. We think it our Duty to apply ourselves to your Lordship for this Favour; that, to enable us the better to do our Duty for the Person for whom we are assigned, your Lordship and the Court would please to order that we may have a Copy of the Indictment. We do acknowledge, that it is not an usual thing to have Copies granted (tho' there be no express Law that we know against it) in capital Matters, but where any Doubt does arise upon the Penning the Indictment, and Counsel is assigned to enable them to do what is fitting for them to do for their Client, Copies of the Indictment have been granted; as particularly in the Case of Fitzharris, in order to the Plea that he was to put in; and I myself was one of the Counsel at that time.

L. C. J. Mr. Pollexfen, I make no doubt in the World, it is in the Power of the Court to order a Copy of the Indictment, if they see Cause; but, if you remember (for you were of Counsel in that Cause too), it is not to be granted, because it is asked. For my Lord Ruffel had no Copy of the Indictment, tho' he insisted very much upon it: And it was in the Case of Fitzharris granted, that he might particularly apply his Plea (if he had a mind to it) to the Indictment itself.

Mr. Pollexfen. My Lord, I do not desire a Copy of all the whole Indictment; but of so much thereof, as may be enough for us to know the Foundation upon which we are to go. I do remember we were called in, in my Lord Ruffel's Case, upon the Point of Challenge, for want of Freeholders; but that was not in the Point of the Indictment, and there I cannot see what we had to do with the Indictment; but here we must understand how it is laid really in the Indictment, that we may apply our Arguments to the Case; and that I believe was never denied.

L. C. J. Look ye, if you speak to me privately, as to my own particular Opinion, it is hard for me to say, that there is any express Resolution of the Law in the Matter; but the Practice has been always to deny a Copy of the Indictment. And, therefore, if you ask me as a Judge, to have a Copy of the Indictment delivered to you in a Case of High-Treason, I must answer you, Shew me any Precedents where it was done: For, there are abundance of Cases in the Law, which seem hard in themselves; but the Law is so, because the Practice has been so, and we can't alter the Practice of the Law without an Act of Parliament. I think it's a hard Case, that a Man should have Counsel to defend himself for a Two-penny-trespass, and his Witnesses examined upon Oath; but if he Steal, commit Murder or Felony, nay, High-Treason, where Life, Estate, Honour, and all are concerned, he shall neither have Counsel, nor his Witnesses examined upon Oath: But yet you know as well as I, that the Practice of the Law is so; and the Practice is the Law.

Mr. Pollexfen. My Lord, we heard the other Day the Indictment read, and so may have some little Account of the Indictment; but we desire such a Copy as may enable us to argue as we ought to do, and as the Court will expect from us, being assigned by the Court.

Mr. Wallp. My Lord, if we should offer any thing that is not in the Indictment, it's all one as if we held our Tongues; and if we have only a loose Account of the Indictment, that may be as bad as if we had a false one: And therefore we desire, to the End that we argue ad idem, that your Lordship will please to favour us, that we may have a Copy of so much of the Indictment, as upon which our Objections may be grounded.

L. C. J. Mr. Pollexfen, you may remember a particular Case, I have forgot the Name, but I believe you may remember it; where a Prisoner at this Bar desired to have the Indictment delivered to him to read, but it was denied him: It is hard, I confess, and so are many other things in the Law; but I am wonderfully tender of making Precedents: And therefore, if it has not been practised, I do not see how we can do it.

Mr. Just. Withins. That is the usual Practice, my Lord; but it is in the Power of the Court sure to grant a Copy; or, at least, of so much as is necessary for them to apply themselves to. There have been many Cases of Murders, where they have had Copies of the Indictment in order to move in Arrest of Judgment, as this Case is.

Mr. Just. Walcot. But have there been any in High-Treason?

Mr. Just.

Mr. Just. Withins. I do not take it that there is any difference between the one Case and the other, they being both capital Crimes; and Counsel being assigned, they must know what they are to speak to.

L. C. J. I would know when ever a Copy was granted to enable the Party to move in Arrest of Judgment.

Mr. Just. Withins. My Lord, when there is a Motion in Arrest of Judgment, and Counsel assign'd, that is a Thing they ought to know, how to demean themselves in their Arguments.

Mr. Pollexfen. My Lord, we submit it to you. We desire the Favour that we may acquit ourselves as we ought to do, and as the Court (we know) expects from us.

L. C. J. As far forth as I could do, being in the Case of Life, I would indulge you: But I tell you, I am loth to be the Author of Precedents in Cases of this Nature, one way or other; especially in this Case, where I know you cannot but understand, by what was spoken here t'other Day, what the Objection is, and where the stress of it lies: Every man at the Bar must needs understand it.

Mr. Pollexfen. My Lord, we know People have various Understandings; and the case is many times variously stated, not only in our Minds, but in our Books.

L. C. J. Well, we know you understand yourseives well enough: And what we could grant, we would.

Mr. Just. Withins. It may be Mr. Pollexfen does it only to make way for an excuse, when he comes to argue, that he is not so well prepared as he should have been; but we know him well enough.

Mr. Pollexfen. But, my Lord, if we miss the Words of the Indictment, we hope your Lordship will not think us impertinent, in having made this Motion, which is for Ourselves, not for our Client: And therefore, we hope you will pardon us, if in case we mistake; which we could have had no colour to have desired, if what we had to say, were guided by a true Copy of the Record.

No Copy was granted, nor Rule made.

Die Jovis, 27 Novembris, 1684. B. Regis.

Dominus Rex versus Rosewell.

THIS Day Mr. Roswell was brought to the Bar, and the Court asked the Counsel assign'd for him, what they had to say?

Mr. Wallop. May it please your Lordship, I am of Counsel for Mr. Roswell, by your Lordship's Appointment, he being here a Prisoner now at the Bar. My Lord, I am informed (for I have not seen the Proceedings, nor heard the Indictment read), that it is an Indictment for treasonable Words; and many treasonable Words; and likewise, as I take it by Information, these Words are applied by divers Innuendo's; so that, for aught I can apprehend by what I am informed (which I must still keep to) it is so uncertain, insensible, involved, and intricate, that no safe Judgment, as I humbly conceive, can be given upon it.

My Lord, to consider these Words; First, if you please, I shall state them as discharged of the Innuendo's, and put them to your Lordship barely and nakedly, as they are in the Indictment, and as they were sworn, and are to be supposed by the Conviction to have been spoken. The Words are these, as they stand discharged of their Innuendo's: That 'the People make a flocking to the King, under pretence of healing the King's Evil, which he could not do; but we are they to whom they ought to flock, because we are Priests and Prophets, that by our Prayers can heal the Dolors and Grievs of the People. We have had now two wicked Kings together, who have suffered Popery to enter under their Noses; who can be likened to no other Person but the most wicked Jeroboam: And if they would stand to their Principles, he did not fear but they should overcome their Enemies, as in former times, with Rams-horns, broken Platters, and a Stone in a Sling.'

These, my Lord, are the Words nakedly in themselves; and these are said to be spoken in a Publick Assembly, where they were likely to do hurt to the Government. Thus, I say, they stand without any of the Innuendo's. Now, tho' your Lordship will have, and justly ought to have, a good Account given you of such Words as these, how they came to be spoken, even taking them as they stand discharged of the Innuendo's; yet I humbly conceive, with Submission, they do not contain any intention of deposing or destroying the King, and so can have no treasonable intention in them: And then your Lordship, I suppose, will likewise expect to have a good account of these Words, in another respect, how Words, which in the hearing of them barely and nakedly spoken, could not carry a treasonable Intention; I say, how it comes to pass that in the writing of them down in an Indictment, they become High-Treason.

My Lord, these Words, as they stand discharged of the Innuendo's, are loose, extravagant, insensible Words, sounding rather towards Phrenzy, than Treason. So that as they stand without further Explanation by an Innuendo, they are perfectly insensible, and one cannot tell what they refer to, or whom; and if the Words, Ex vi termini, without further Averment, contain no treasonable intention and meaning, and so consequently have no Treason; it may seem very difficult and hard to maintain, how, out of the Assembly in which they were spoken, being put into Latin in an Indictment, they should become Treason: They not being Treason at Rotherhithe, where they were spoken; how they should be made Treason at Kingston, or here, where they are dressed up in another Form. Indeed, I know no way that it can be done, but by adding some other Words, by some other Hand. And, my Lord, I suppose it was so done by those who framed this Indictment that is before your Lordship, by inserting and adding this Multitude of Innuendo's.

But I suppose, then, they that would insert these Innuendo's, must have a good Warrant to insert them: For if they are inserted without Warrant in Law, then it must be acknowledged to me that the Indictment is not good; and I humbly conceive it to be a Rule in Law, that no Innuendo can warrantably be inserted in an Indictment, Information, or Declaration, upon an Action of the Case for Words, unless the Defendant first himself be averred, and that directly, to have mentioned a Person in certain, to whom those Words may be referred; and it must not slide in by Supposition, but it must appear in the Body of the Discourse of the Defendant. And the Reason is evident in all Cases of Slander, and particularly in these of treasonable Words; for how could the Hearer understand whom the Preacher meant, or he that discoursed so and so, and so be influenced to Rebellion, unless he had named the Person of whom he spoke, as here, unless the Defendant had named the King, to whom the Words he spoke should be referred?

My Lord, the Treason of the Words is in stirring up Sedition and Rebellion; and if then the Words cannot terminate upon the King, and the Hearers could not collect that to be the Intention of the Speaker, these Words could not influence a People to Rebellion and Sedition. And according to this Rule, I conceive that most of the Innuendo's in this Indictment are not warrantable.

For, my Lord, as to the first Words, to take them in order, tho' I take it, that that is the most remote Matter from the Crime charged; yet let us strike off these Innuendo's as we go along, if we can. There it is, Quod Populus, &c. The People (meaning the Subjects of our Lord the King) keep a flocking to the King to cure the King's Evil, which he cannot do, &c. Here the first Innuendo is the People (meaning the Subjects of our Lord the King). Now he had never before named the People of England; but the Innuendo fastens that meaning upon the Word (People). Which, with Submission, my Lord, is always a Sign of a naughty Innuendo; and it is without Warrant of Law; an endeavouring to give an original certainty to uncertain Words; which is more than the Office of an Innuendo will allow or warrant. I say, my Lord, it always bears a bad face, where Words first appear with an Innuendo; and have no certainty even in the Beginning of them, but by the Innuendo; that with Submission is to be rejected, the Innuendo not doing its proper Office for which it ought to be used in Law: For Populus may intend any People, it may intend the French People flocking to the French King (and he does heal the King's Evil in the same manner: nay, pretends to it, as a sole Gift to him, his Predecessors, and Successors: But I only put that for an instance); and all the Innuendo's, if you observe them, are of this Nature. The Words first appear without any light, but what these Suppositions give them, and therefore, I say, they are to be rejected.

But now, my Lord, I come to that which is more particular, Nos habuimus nunc duos iniquos Reges insimul; We (meaning the Subjects of the King) have had two wicked Kings (meaning King Charles the First, and this King) together. Now that we say is altogether void, for there was no mention of any Kings, wicked Kings or good Kings, pious or bad, before in the Discourse, to which, according to the Office of an Innuendo, these Words are to be applied. My Lord Coke in his 4 Rep. fol. 17. B. has this Case:

John James brings his Action against Alexander Rutledge, for speaking the following words concerning him, to one John Bonner. "Hang him (prædictum Johannem James innuendo) he is full of the Pocks (innuendo the French Pocks) I marvel that you (prædictum Johannem Bonner innuendo) will eat or drink with him (prædictum Johannem James innuendo) I will prove that he is full of the Pocks (innuendo the French Pocks). Upon a Motion in Arrest of Judgment, it was resolved by the Court, that in every Action of the Case for Slander, two things are requisite. First, That the Person who is scandalized be certain. Secondly, That the Words spoken be apparent Slander. The Office of an Innuendo is to design the same Person that has been named before: And is in Effect, instead of a Prædict. But it cannot make the Person certain, that was uncertain before. In the present Case, it was evident that the Plaintiff did speak the Words of the Defendant. But as to the second Thing, it did not appear that the Words spoken did mean the French Pocks; and Words are to be taken in mitiori sensu."

Et de quæz meisme le person que fuit noime en certaine devant: Et en effect estoit en lieu de un (prædict) mes un (innuendo) ne poit faire person certain que fuit incertain devant: Car serra inconvenient que actions serra maintaine per imagination d'un entent que n'appiert per les parols sur que l'action est fondue, mes est tout incertain & subiect al deceivable conjecture: Mes si un dit a J. S. Thou art a Traitor, &c. la comit de Personne, Et action gisi: Iffint icy en le case al barre, quant le defendant & Bonner ad parlanee del pl' dorques quant le defendant dit hang him: La (innuendo) voyle denote meisme le person noime devant: Mes si le defendant sours aucun parlanee del plaintiffe ad dit, hang him, &c. la nul innuendo voyle aver fait le person certain. ¶ Quant al 2. si come (innuendo) ne poit faire le person certain que fuit incertain devant, iffint un (innuendo) ne poit alter le matter ou sence des parols meismes: Et pur ceo quant le defendant en le case al barre dit al plaintiffe: That he was full of the Pocks (innuendo the French Pocks) cest innuendo ne fait son propre office, car ceo contende a extender les general parols, the Pocks, ale French Pocks, per imagination d'un entent que n'est apparent per aucun precedent parols, a que le innuendo referer; Et les parols meismes serra prise in mitiori sensu.

And I humbly conceive this Book is a most pregnant Authority, that states the Matter truly, with a Judgment of Law, and the Reason of it; and all the Books that come after this, borrow their Light from what is laid down as the Rule of Law is in this Case: as there are an infinite Number of them, which I shall not trouble your Lordship with particularizing; only just to name some of them. 5 Co. 20 Hob. 45. and 2 Cro. 126. wherein they say, That altho' the Plaintiff be particularly named by a special Name; yet if the Declaration comes to name him in an Action of the Case for Words, at the first appearance with an Innuendo, then that Innuendo is void; tho' his Name be expressly alledged in the very Words, yet they will reject that Innuendo, as not doing the proper Office of an Innuendo; and that Judgment shall be arrested, tho' the Jury found that the Party spoke such Words: And this is upon the Rule in 4 Co. before-mentioned.

Now, my Lord, to apply this Rule in the 4th Report, to the Case before your Lordship, we say there was no mention at all before of any two Kings; nay, not of any King, in his Discourse, to which the Innuendo should refer; and the Innuendo being joined to the Words first spoken, without any Discourse laid concerning such a Person, or Averment to be spoken of such an one before, the Innuendo cannot give any certainty to that, which had no such original certainty; that being against the Office of an Innuendo, and so is to be rejected. And the meaning of the Books, and of that great Rule, which I first cited, is this, That the Defendant must himself, in his Discourse, first set up such a Light about the Words of the Person concerning whom they are spoken, that the Intention of the Speaker may with ease be collected; then comes the Innuendo with a Beck or a Nod, as it were; and that Collection is to be the nutus, to shew who was meant; but it is not sufficient to give an original certainty, where such a certainty is not fixed before the Innuendo comes. The Defendant himself must set up such a Light as will carry the Intention to the End of the Discourse.

Then it is said, Duos iniquos Reges, in the Plural Number; meaning the late King Charles and his present Majesty; now King Charles the First was never pretended to be mentioned before; why then, according to that Rule, as to him the Innuendo signifies nothing at all; and then it must be taken in common understanding, We have now had two wicked Kings together, Innuendo, our Sovereign Lord the King that now is, against whom the Treason must be said to be committed: But this is very harsh, and insensible, and impossible; it is harsh, in all respects, both of Grammar, and Reason, and Law; it is insensible, because it is impossible; and it is impossible, because you must else make two Kings to be one, or one King to be two, and the Innuendo must serve both ways; which, I believe, your Lordship will hardly undertake to do.

And besides, my Lord, there is another Inconsistency in these Words, habuimus nunc, that's contradictory; habuimus refers to the Time past, and draws one Way; nunc to the Time present, and draws another Way: and when there are such Inconsistencies and Incoherences, how can any Man make a Judgment in this Case, where the Life of a Man especially is concerned?

But, my Lord, if habuimus be that which being first shall take place, then these Words refer to any two Kings that we have had, under whom Popery hath been let in; and so we must run back from Harry the 8th, up to the Conquest, nay, beyond the Conquest, to the Saxons and other former Kings, to the first that established the Christian Religion, which was then subject to the Papacy. And it will be hard to construe them wicked Kings for so doing at that Time; as any Man's reading, that knows any thing of the History of England, will easily tell him. So that it is unintelligible and insensible, even that way; and, to be sure, if it be so, that we have had two wicked Kings together, referring so far back, it cannot at all concern the present King.

My Lord, I shall be short: I only state these things before you, and recommend them to your Lordship's Consideration. Then come these Words, which it seems are most relied upon, If they would stand to their Principles, he did not question, but they should be able Inimicos suos vincere, Innuendo the King and the Government. This is the most insensible, as I apprehend, of all; and it is in the fatallest part, it being there that the Treason must lie, if there be any. Now, my Lord, we first say, there is no mention at all of any Enemies throughout all the Words precedent; there is no Averment that the King was Enemy to any body, or any body to him; and therefore the Innuendo, for this reason, is to be rejected; and the rather, in that it makes the King and his Subjects to be Enemies one to another; which is an Imputation that ought not to be admitted; and I dare say, will not be by your Lordship. Therefore, in this Case, to put such a Sense in such a Weighty Matter, being a Matter of Fact, upon such Uncertainties, without any further Averment of the Intention and Meaning of the Speaker to be so and so, and without any thing but such Innuendo's, is very hard: For now perhaps the Jury only from this Innuendo were persuaded that all these things pointed upon the King and the Government; and did take it that the Law was so; that the Words intended as much: Then do they give their Verdict of a Matter that was never averred, and for want of an Averment could never be put in issue, so that the Party could have a Trial, whether he were guilty as the Indictment says.

My Lord, I shall cite no Books more than I have done. I humbly conceive, that putting that great Rule in the Book I first mentioned, and the Reason of the thing together, and the subsequent Authorities that I have cited; and they stand so fair and clear to avoid this Indictment, that to trouble your Lordship further were to embroil the Case; therefore I shall say no more out of the Books. But the Rule is a firm, reasonable, undeniable Rule, which must rule all Cases that come under the Reason of it. And I never heard that Book was ever contradicted; but all subsequent Judgments were agreeable thereunto.

Mr. Just. Withins. What Folio is it, Mr. Wallop, in the 4th Rep.?

Mr. Wallop. Folio 17. B.

Mr. Just. Holloway. It is ----'s Case, is it not?

Mr. Wallop. Yes, Sir. My Lord, I have stripp'd the Words of the Innuendo's. You will not, I am sure, put, nor can an Innuendo put such a Violence or Force upon Words, as to make them Treason, when in themselves they have no such Meaning. Innuendo's are to follow the Meaning of the Words as they lie in the Record, and not to draw the Meaning of the Words after the Innuendo; for you will never (especially in a Case of Life) press Words, or strain them to speak more than willingly they mean or intend. It is not the practice of the Law so to do, to make any such Stretches. Qui nimis emungit, elicit sanguinem, he that wrings the Nose too hard, will draw forth Blood; that is the Rule of that great Lawyer, my Lord Coke, who applies that Saying to the forced Straining of Words beyond what in themselves they naturally and easily will bear. And it is plain that God is not well pleased with such Emunciations: Nor does the Law of the Land at all allow it, but absolutely forbids it, for the Law of England speaks thus, In dubiis & generalibus, benignior sensus est praefendus, in all dubious, uncertain, and general Cases, the most benign and candid Interpretation is to be taken: So that if there should be a doubt about these Words, what Sense they be taken in, the Law of England does injoin your Lordship to take the Way that lies on the right hand, and make the most favourable construction, that can be of them. We say then, the Words, as I conceive, standing quite otherwise, and without the Innuendo's, are insensible, at least uncertain, to what they should be applied, or to whom; and then if there should be a Doubt, though indeed in one respect I think there is none, yet if there should remain a Doubt, I say, your Lordship and the Court are to take that which is the most mild and gentle way of construing these Words.

My Lord, I shall not trouble your Lordship further in the matter, for I think it is seen by its own Light, and these few Touches, that I have given of that general Rule, as applied to the particular Case before your Lordship: And I do not question, but they will be applied by your Lordship and the Court in their Consideration of the Case: Therefore I lay it at your Lordship's Feet, and humbly pray, that the Judgment may be arrested.

Mr. Pollexfen. My Lord, I am assigned by the Court to be of Counsel for Mr. Rosewell, the Prisoner at the Bar, and therefore humbly desire your Lordship would please to spare me a Word of the same Side with Mr. Wallop. The Case, that is, this Part of the Indictment, hath been put, according to what our Information is, right by Mr. Wallop; but because there may be many Words in the Indictment, and there are so, some of a higher Nature than others, therefore I beg leave to put the Words distinctly as they lie, and I shall endeavour, with Submission to your Lordship, to shew what Words are in themselves Treason, and what are not Treason, tho' they may be a great Misdemeanour, and highly punishable by the Law, and by the Court.

My Lord, though the Statute of the 25 Edw. 3. does provide, that for the Convicting of any for Treason, there shall be an Overt-Act, yet I do not hold, nor do I think, but that there may be Words that are an Overt-Act, and consequently Treason, within that Statute; but then what sort of Words these are, is that which I would humbly offer to your Lordship to discourse of: For, my Lord, it plainly appears that Words in themselves, that are very evil and wicked, yet are not Treason, nor are to be punished by virtue of that Statute of the 25 Edw. 3. As in one Cro. 117. & 125. Hugh Pine's Case. The Words there spoken by Pine are most evil and wicked Words, yet by all the Judges of England they are agreed not to be Treason.

But, my Lord, for a further Determination of this Point, what Words are Treason, and what not, give me leave to mention the Statute of 13 Car. 2. which I understand to be the Statute upon which the Prisoner is indicted, and the two Branches of that Statute: for the first tells what is Treason, and the second what is not Treason, but only Misdemeanour; and that second Branch of the Statute says, that if any person shall maliciously and advisedly publish or affirm the King to be an Heretick or a Papist; or that he endeavours to introduce Popery, or, maliciously and advisedly by Writing, Printing, Preaching, or expressly Speaking, publish, utter, or declare any Words, Sentences, or other Things, to stir up the People to hatred or dislike of the King's Person, or the established Government; then he is disabled to have or exercise any Place or Office, civil or military, and be liable to such further Punishment, as by the common Laws or Statutes may be inflicted in such Cases; by which, I take it, the meaning to be fine and Imprisonment, or bodily Punishment; but not the Punishment that is appointed to the Judgment of High-Treason, or loss of Life or Member.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, I humbly crave your Lordship's Judgment whether this shall be permitted, that the Counsel should enter into such a Discourse as this. The Question, I take it, that your Lordship appointed to be spoke to, is, Whether this Indictment as to Form be sufficient for your Lordship to give Judgment upon? But Mr. Pollexfen is going into that which is a far greater Point; Whether these Words abstracted from all their Innuendo's are Treason, or no? My Lord, the Prisoner did not move that in Arrest of Judgment; and whether your Lordship expects any such thing should be spoken unto, that was not moved or stirred by him, I must submit it to you. The Jury found that these Words were spoken with an Intent to depose the King. Whether that your Lordship will permit it to be argued, whether such Words are Treason in their own Nature, is of quite another Consideration.

Mr. Pollexfen. Good Mr. Attorney, Pray, spare us. We come to shew that if in their Nature they import not Matter of Treason, then the Innuendo's cannot help them, so as to make Treason of them.

Mr. Att. Gen. Truly, my Lord, I did not understand that it was your Lordship's Pleasure the Counsel should have liberty to argue any such thing, as whether the Words be Treason, being found to be spoken with such an Intention; but whether these Innuendo's have sufficiently been laid to maintain the Indictment in point of Form.

Mr. Pollexfen. If you leave out the Words Innuendo'd, then sure we may speak to the Words themselves.

L. C. J. Look you, Mr. Attorney, either you mistake Mr. Pollexfen, or I do: For I take it, that he is entering into the Consideration of these Words as they are laid in the Indictment; that are uncertainly laid, so as that they will not support an Indictment of Treason.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, he is arguing, that if they were spoken of the King, yet they would not be Treason.

L. C. J. Will he say so? I dare say, he will not.

Mr. Att. Gen. He is arguing upon the Statute, what Words are Treason, tho' spoken of the King, and what not; which I take it, is not the Question now.

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lord, We humbly offer it to your Lordship, whether it be according to your Lordship's Rule and Intention, that he was to argue whether the Words were Treason; or only whether the Form of the Indictment, as to the Innuendo's, was good and sufficient.

L. C. J. Taking the Words to be sufficiently set forth in the Indictment, and found by the Jury to be spoken of the King, especially the last Words: Do you think we would suffer that Question to be debated, whether they were Treason or not? God forbid. I will not sit here to hear that Question at all so much as made or put, I'll assure you. I took him not to argue at all any thing that way.

Mr. Pollexfen. Pray, my Lord, hear me; I am going only to this; for I would not offer any thing beyond what is fit for me to offer, and for the Court to hear: But this we say, that the Words, the effective Words, are not so sufficiently laid in this Indictment, as to make them amount to Treason, I am only going to that.

L. C. J. Ay; that's the stinging Part of the Question, and so I understood him before.

Mr. Pollexfen. My Lord, I only mentioned that of the Statute, that there were two Sorts of Words there taken notice of; to shew that I thought these Words were not within that Branch that is said to be Treason.

L. C. J. Well, go on.

Mr. Pollexfen. I will keep myself to the first Clause of the Statute; for what I mean, is this, That if these Words come not within that first Branch, which makes the Treason, then your Lordship cannot give Judgment upon this Indictment. For tho', my Lord, it may be these Words are extraordinary ill, and being spoken or preached, may have an ill Sense or Meaning with them; yet I would observe to your Lordship, there are other Penalties and Punishments provided for some sort of Words, than there are for others.

But then, my Lord, let us consider the Words of the first Branch of this Statute. If so be any Person does compass the Death, or bodily Restraint, or other harm to the King's Person, or to deprive the King, or levy War against the King, &c. and this compassing and imagination does express by Printing, Writing, Preaching, or malicious and advised Speaking, they shall suffer Judgment of High Treason. Now then, all that I would come to, is this, that this same treasonable Printing, Writing, Preaching, or Speaking, must be of such Words as shall intend the Death, bodily Hurt, Restraint, or Imprisonment of the King's Person, or levying of War.

My Lord, having said this, the next thing is to come to the Words themselves, and to take them as they are in themselves, without the Innuendo's, and see what the natural Sense of them will be: And we'll take them in the natural Order as they are laid in the very Indictment, and found by the Jury.

The first Passage of them is, quod Populus, &c. (meaning the People of England, the Subjects of our Lord the King) made a flocking to the King (meaning our said Lord the King that now is) to cure the King's Evil, which he could not do; but we are they to whom they should come, being Priests and Prophets, that by our Prayers can heal the Grievs of the People. Now, my Lord, with humble Submission, it is plain that as to these Words, they have not in themselves any tendency to Treason at all, whatsoever Reflection they may make upon the King; they are the Words of a Priest magnifying his own Office, and his Power with God Almighty; but they do not come up (I think) to this Crime, for which the Prisoner at the Bar stands accused.

Then the next Words that follow, are these, Nos habuimus nunc duos iniquos Reges insimul, qui permiserunt Romanam superstitionem intrare in eorum conspectu, &c. and who can be liken'd to none but wicked Jeroboam. My Lord, these, I do acknowledge, are very wicked and bad Words, especially if they must be applied, as the Indictment has set them forth, to the late King, and his present Majesty: Yet these very Words (under favour) will not amount to the Charge of High Treason. They deserve very severe Punishment; but they seem not to come up to any thing of an Intention, or compassing, or designing the Death, bodily Hurt, or Imprisonment of the King; or the levying War against him. This I speak, my Lord, with Submission, and I believe your Lordship may be of the same Mind.

But then, my Lord, the next Words that follow, are the Words (I suppose) that are rely'd upon, to make out this Accusation; Quod si ipsi starent ad fundamentalia, ipse non timebat, &c. That they should overcome their Enemies, as in former Times, with Rams-horns, broken Platters, and a Stone in a Sling. These, my Lord, seem to be the Words in which the Crime consists. Now, my Lord, if these Words in themselves are so uncertain, or such as do not tend or relate to the present King, or the present Government, to stir up Sedition or Rebellion against them, then they will not be Treason, because they do not so relate.

Now, my Lord, these Words, if you take them alone without the former Clause, Nos habuimus nunc duos iniquos Reges insimul, &c. closed with the Innuendo, that he meant the late King, and this, I see not possibly how they can be said to relate to the present King and Government, to make them Treason within this Act. Which way can it be? If they would stand to their Principles, they should overcome their Enemies: How can they be intended to be meant of the King, and his loyal Subjects? Then let us consider the Words that go afore, whether they will help any thing or no; habuimus nunc duos iniquos Reges insimul. These Words of themselves, stript of the Innuendo, do not express what two Kings are meant by them. If you take the Words strictly, that We have had two Kings now together, insimul, as the Word signifies, it must be two Kings at one and the same time: But take it in the English Phrase (as perhaps they would have it turned into English) We have had now two wicked Kings together, (meaning the late blessed Martyr, and his now Majesty), then it must be, We have had now two Kings successively; but it is a strange thing to render such Latin into such English, which seems to be, in the Nature of the Words themselves, such as will bear no such Sense or Construction as that. And then, the qui permiserunt Romanam superstitionem intrare in eorum conspectu; if the first Words do not in themselves express what Kings were meant, these Words that follow can give no manner of certainty to them at all: For here's not so much as any Innuendo; nor can the Words that follow them (qui assilari possunt, &c. which can be liken'd to none but wicked Jeroboam) in any sort, shew any certainty to whom the Words are to be applied, or illustrate whom the Speaker meant.

But now that which is the next Clause, is the worst Clause of all, Sed

VOL. III.

si ipsi starent ad fundamentalia, &c. Ipsi in all ordinary Construction of Speech in all Language, being coupled to the former Words (and so I think the Rule in the Grammar is, and will be read by any reasonable Person that reads) must refer to the next Antecedent. And then, who are they that are last spoken of? It must be the two wicked Kings, let them be who they will, that were meant by those wicked Kings; for there is no other Person that does intervene, as spoken of, to whom they should be referred. The former Words are spoken in the first Person, and plural Number; We have had, speaking in the Name of himself, and they that were his Auditors, and then to come with Ipsi, after he had mentioned two Kings, who had suffered Popery to come in, and were to be likened to Jeroboam, changes the Form of the whole Speech. It should seem, according as it is laid in the Indictment, to run thus, and then I desire your Lordship to consider the Sense and Grammar of them; We had now two wicked Kings together, who have suffered Popery to come under their Noses, we cannot compare them to any but wicked Jeroboam: And if they would stand to their Principles, then he did not doubt but they should overcome their Enemies, as in former times, &c. Why then, if Ipsi, according to Grammar, and ordinary reading, being a Relative; must refer to that which went last before, there is nothing in all the Sentence before, but, We, that is, he and the People that heard him, and the two Kings that he spoke of; and the two Kings being last spoke of, it must in all Grammar, I say, and Sense, be understood of the Kings. Then let us see, what Sense we can make of it; We have had two wicked Kings, that have permitted Popery under their Noses, that they can be compared to none but wicked Jeroboam: and if they stand to their Principles, he did not fear but they (the Kings) should overcome their Enemies. In all ordinary and fair reckoning, I cannot see how they can mend it, but the Ipsi must refer to the Reges; and the Eorum fundamentalia, ipsorum Regum, if you take these Words, as they do lie; and if they have any Sense or Meaning at all in them, this is the proper and natural Sense and Meaning of them.

For it is pretty hard to apply the Nos habuimus nunc duos iniquos Reges, to the ipsi qui starent ad fundamentalia. In all Probability he spoke it thus, if it continued on in a Discourse, which I can say nothing to, being only to speak to the Words as they are laid in the Indictment, And if we do but stand to our Principles, I do not doubt but we shall overcome our Enemies as formerly, &c. But Ipsi is a Variation of the Person, and, according to all Grammatical Construction, we know how it must be expounded. The other seems to be the natural reading of the Words; but the Indictment has not pursued them; but has made them instead of that, to be quite Nonsense, supposing them to have been spoken as the Jury have found them.

But, my Lord, if they do not well bear that Sense, which I think they should properly and naturally bear; if they had been right laid, the Question then is, Whether we can make these Words, as they are laid, to bear any such Sense, as the King's Counsel, by their Innuendo's, have placed upon them? that is, if they, meaning his Auditors, should stand to their Principles, then they should overcome their Enemies, meaning the King and his loyal Subjects. Truly, my Lord, I cannot see how that can be, how Ipsi should be me; I and mine Auditors should stand to their Principles.

But setting that aside, come we then to the main Words: He did not fear but they should overcome their Enemies. The great force of these Words lies in the word Enemies. What is meant by Enemies? For all the rest without that, would not signify any great Matter, with Submission to your Lordship, as I think: And therefore here comes the great Burden, and that which is the sharp Sting of all this Indictment. And to make Enemies to signify the King and his Subjects, my Lord, is a very wonderful Innuendo, as I believe ever was attempted to be made. So it seems to me, with Submission to your Lordship; the word Enemies itself is a Word of so large Comprehension, that it reaches to a great Part of the World. God knows, Mankind is so very unhappy, as that every one hath very many, and too many Enemies. Who is not an Enemy? A Man scarce knows; 'tis well if he does. And this is a thing that's mighty hard, that so general a Word should have so heinous a particular Application.

There then rests the Burden of the Case, whether Inimicos should signify the King and his loyal Subjects. If in the natural Grammar, the former Words of Ipsi starent ad fundamentalia, be, as I have shewn, to be referred to the duos Reges as the last Antecedent, then it must mean, that the duo Reges would overcome their Enemies, and then there is no hurt in all these Words, but whatsoever was spoken is very commendable, and very allowable: But if you would take it otherwise, I see not how it can be done without the greatest Strain in the World of so general a Word; to make Inimicos mean the King and his Subjects.

Now, my Lord, let us see how they intend to help it out, and that is, by these Innuendo's. The Nature of an Innuendo hath been already opened to your Lordship by Mr. Wallop. I shall not repeat any thing of that which was said before, for that I cannot take to be any Service to the Prisoner at the Bar, to take up your Lordship's time in Repetitions. The Books have been cited, and Reason itself will direct to that; for must not a Man be convicted by his own Words, as well as punished for them? It is not, sure, the skill of the Clerk to put in an Innuendo, or of any one else, that shall be construed to make my Words to have any other Sense, than I that spake them intended them in. If the Words are not clear, why then they cannot affect the Auditory, so as to have any evil Influence upon them, to incite them to Sedition or Rebellion: for sensible Words must influence sensible Men: But Words that are insensible, can have no Influence at all upon rational Creatures. Then shall an Innuendo make that an Offence, which without it was not an Offence; especially so great an Offence as that of High-Treason? Surely not.

Besides, my Lord, all our Books are against making any such Construction. Ro's Abr. 1. Part 84. There is a whole Bead-Roll of them to prove, that Innuendo's will not help, where the Words in themselves have any Incertainty in them. The bare setting down the Words with Innuendo's are not an Averment sufficient to maintain an Action, or an Indictment. The Cases there are indeed upon Actions of the Case for Words, which in reason are under the same Rule.

For, my Lord, there are two Ways to apply Words that are uncertain, to bring out the true Intent and Meaning of them, to whom they are to be applied; the one is by a Colloquium precedent, and where there is a Colloquium precedent of such Matter as will lead in the Sense of the Words, which without it were not to be understood, there the laying that Colloquium makes the Words come to be sensible, and there is this Reason for it, whenever that's done, the Colloquium must come in Evidence, and must be proved: But I never yet knew an Innuendo offered to be proved. Another Way is this, where Words are laid in a Declaration with an Averment precedent to be spoken of such a person, then the words, with an Innuendo after that Averment, shew sufficiently what is meant by them. If so be scandalous Words are spoken, as to say, Thy Landlord, your Brother, your Master, your Servant, your Son, is a Thief, or the like: In these Cases the Words in themselves do not express the Man of whom the Scandal is raised, but they give such a Denomination of the Man, that may by the Hearers be sufficiently known. Why then, in that Case, if in the Declaration it is averred that the Plaintiff was his Landlord, was his Brother, was his Master, was his Servant, was his Son, and that these Words were spoken of him, and thereby it comes to be made apparent to the Court what is meant, and who is meant, that is well, and all that must be proved to the Court upon Evidence, or the Action cannot be maintained. By such means as this it is made plain and demonstrable, that there can no doubt remain, either with the Court or the Jury, to whom the Injury is done, and of whom the Scandal is uttered. And these are the only two Ways that ever I could observe were allowed to be sufficient to maintain any such Action: And there the Innuendo comes very properly in to assist the Averment, or the Colloquium.

But now, my Lord, here in this Case, here's nothing of that kind but only a bare Innuendo, that such and such were meant, without either a Colloquium that there was a Discourse concerning such and such Persons, or an Averment that the Words were spoken of the Persons.

My Lord, I cannot tell what Precedents they will offer to your Lordship of former or latter times. We have had but a very little time to look into it, and have not that recourse to the Precedents on the Crown's side that the King's Counsel have. But, my Lord, for Precedents that may have past sub silentio, without having the question stirred, I suppose, will not be allowed by your Lordship, and the Court, as Precedents against us. But I think there will be no Instance given, where-ever any such thing came in question, that ever Judgment was given against the Defendant.

My Lord, this seems to be the Sense and Nature of the Words as they are laid in this Indictment, stript of the Innuendo's, and your Lordship knows what a Case we have now before you. We are in the Case of the Life of a Man, which is much favoured in Law, and if there be any doubt or uncertainty, your Lordship will lean rather towards the favourable side; and if, according to the Rules of Law, Words to make Men criminal shall not be strained, or forced beyond their plain, natural meaning, sure they shall not to make a Man capitally so: For the greater the Crime is, the greater Consideration the Court will have to see that there be no strained, forced Constructions to bring the Life of a Man in danger: And therefore I humbly pray that Judgment may be arrested.

Mr. Att. Gen. May it please your Lordship, I am of Counsel in this Case for the King: and notwithstanding any thing that has been said, I do conceive, that there is High-Treason well alledged in this Indictment, of which the Prisoner is found guilty, against whom I must demand your Judgment. My Lord, there is a great difference in this Matter; that is, whether the Words are Treason, as they were spoken by him, and whether or no this Treason, admitting it to be Treason, be well disclosed by this Indictment: For, my Lord, I think to preach in a Publick Assembly, that we have had two wicked Kings together, who have permitted Popery to come under their Noses, and then to go on with it to Stand to their Principles (for so the Words are laid in this Indictment) and they should overcome their Enemies, as in former Times, with Rams-horns, broken Platters, and a Stone in a Sling, is a very high Aggravation of such Words. And, my Lord, if you remember the Evidence, as I doubt not you do, it was all spoken in a publick Assembly, before 4 or 500 People, and they were spoken without any Words intervening whatsoever. These were the only Words that were spoken relating to this Matter: So that these must carry their own pregnant Sense with them, of exciting the People to stand to their Arms against the wicked Kings, or else they are of no signification. And thus they are laid in the Indictment, and found by the Jury to be spoken positively to stir up the People against the King, to depose him, and to raise Rebellion within the Kingdom. This, I say, is positively affirmed, and laid down in the Indictment. But now, whether or no these Words are in point of Form so laid, that the Court must understand them with relation to the King and Government, and as an Argument to stir up the People, is the Question: For if they be so, then they are well laid to support this Conviction of Treason.

Now for that, my Lord, I would only first say, they must either import Treason in themselves, or they do not. If they do import Treason in themselves, no Addition of the Person concerning whom they were spoken, as that they were spoken of the King, will mend the Case, or make it better. Tho' it be laid never so much to be spoken of the King, and that be never so much averred, yet if it be not spoken to disturb the Government, or to raise Rebellion and Insurrection, the adding a thousand times that it was spoken de Domino Rege, would not avail. They confess they have no Precedents to produce, and I believe truly they have not: And so they only go by way of Argument, taken from Actions upon the Case for Words: Whereas there is a great Disparity in the Case between Actions of the Case for Words, and Informations or Indictments for Words that are Criminal or Capital; and I know if they will look into the Precedents that are in Print, in the Entries, and in the Reports of Informations or Indictments, they will find it is never, or very seldom, or rarely done, it being looked upon as to no Purpose, or as perfect Surplusage, to lay that such or such a thing was spoken, de Domino Rege de Gubernatione. But in Criminal Cases, and not Capital, it is commonly thus, of which there are multitudes of Instances: That such a one being of an ill Mind, to raise Commotion in the Kingdom, and stir up Sedition, spoke these and these Words. This was the constant Form in your Lordship's time, as your Lordship can remember, in the Informations that were, or the Indictments of Persons that had spoken Words relating to the Duke of York. I can remember when your Lordship used to say, Never consult me, but follow the ancient Precedents, which I dare undertake to say are all thus, and so I shall shew by and by, it has been in Indictments of Treason: And though, perhaps, one or two might at any Time be otherwise drawn (of which yet we can find none), yet, this hath been the constant Form for any thing that I can find, and it is of very great Consequence to say at this time of Day, That what has for 100's of Years together been the constant Practice, and way of Indictments and Informations, is not good, it were to turn all things topsy-turvy, and to make great confusion in Prosecutions, and the Practice of the Law, in Criminal Matters. I shall therefore shew your Lordship that here is such a Certainty as the Law does require, and as is usually practised, and that the Words in themselves are such, that they must have Relation to what we have laid down in the Indictment, and to nothing else.

But then they do lay down this for a Ground, which I think I may grant them very easily, and yet it will signify nothing to what they mean; I would wipe off all these Innuendo's, leave them out of the Case, for I never expect any help from them at all; and then I do agree that an Innuendo, without a strong, urgent Averment that the People which hear the Words spoke, and the Court that are to pass Judgment upon them, shall say forcibly appears from the Words themselves, who was meant, and what was meant, will not support the Indictment, nor has the Verdict fortified it at all.

But they tell you in Actions of the Case, if John-a-Stiles be called a Bankrupt, if he will bring an Action against the Party that spoke these Words, he must aver and affirm, that they were spoken de Querente, of that particular Person that doth bring the Action; and so it is, the Law is so, and the Reason's plain, because there are many John-a-Stiles's perhaps, and the Plaintiff that brings the Action is but one; and therefore, if he does not shew that the Discourse was of that John-a-Stiles, who brings the Action, it is uncertain who was meant, and cannot be supported by a bare Innuendo. But I take it in these Cases, wherever the precedent Averment is necessary, there must be a distinct Proof of that Averment, as if John-a-Stiles be called Bankrupt (in the Case I mentioned), and he brings his Action, and avers the Discourse to be de Querente; and he calls Witnesses, who prove the Words to be spoken, that the Defendant did say John-a-Stiles was a Bankrupt; and the Court demands this Question of the Witnesses, But do you know what John-a-Stiles the Defendant meant? and he shall answer, No, we only heard the Party say, John-a-Stiles is a Bankrupt: It is apparent that Evidence will not support the Action; for that Averment must be proved, that he that brings the Action was intended, and that there was a Discourse concerning him. There must be, I say, the Proof of the Averment to make up that certainty of the Application of the Words, which the Law requires. And therefore in what Case soever it be, if the Words be the only Proof, or if the Words carry sufficient in themselves to shew of whom they were spoken, it is ridiculous to say there must be an Averment that they were of such a one; because Words cannot prove themselves.

For, my Lord, where-ever Words by strong and pregnant Intendment do carry Slander, and of such a particular Person, there the Books are express that there needs no Averment, that they were spoken of such a one; as in the Case of Fleetwood and Curle, Hob. 267. which is a Rule for all Cases upon Actions of the Case for Words. Sir Miles Fleetwood being Receiver of the Court of Wards, brought an Action of the Case against Curle, for that he (having Speech with one Whorewood) did speak of the Plaintiff these Words, Mr. Deceiver (Innuendo the Plaintiff) had deceived and cozened the King, &c. He did there alledge the Words to be spoken of the Plaintiff. In that Case, upon Not Guilty pleaded, it was found for the Plaintiff, and it was moved in Arrest of Judgment, that it did not appear by the Words spoken, that they were spoken of the Plaintiff: For, Mr. Deceiver had no Propriety to that Purpose; and the Innuendo would not make it certain, when it appeared to the Court, that the Words would bear no certainty, tho' he did alledge the Words to be spoken of the Plaintiff in that Case; because there may be many Deceivers, or Receivers, and he must prove it particularly spoken of himself. But then the Book is express, that after a Verdict, tho' he did not aver it was spoken of him in his Office, yet Judgment should be given for the Plaintiff, because there is a pregnant, violent, certain Sense, that may lead the Court and Hearers to take it so to be meant, and cannot be otherwise imagined; and therefore the Court will not imagine it. As if a Man spoke of an Attorney, that he is a Knave, and spoke not of his Practice; why then the Action won't lie: But if he be named an Attorney in the Declaration, and the Hearers knew him to be an Attorney; in that Case, it was ruled not necessary to have any such Averment; for the Words themselves did import it in the Original Case, that it was spoken of him in his Office, by the Word Deceiver; that having an Allusion and ironical Resemblance to the Name of his Office; and in the other Case, because the Hearers knew him to be an Attorney.

So, my Lord, upon these Grounds, Judgments have gone in those Cases, which they themselves do so much rely upon; Actions for the Case for Words; wherever the Words import pregnantly such a Sense, there does not need such an Averment. But I shall shew that in Informations and Indictments this cannot be necessary, and the Reason seems plain: For here, as we have laid it, and as the Truth is, we all know it, there is but one King and one Government; and when Words are laid to be spoken to excite Commotions, or Rebellions, or Insurrections, they are but external Declarations of the Mind; the Treason that he is charged with, that is inward, it is the Thoughts that are Treason. But it is true, the laying that alone, that he did so compass and imagine, without some outward Declaration, would not be good in an Indictment, any more than the outward Declaration without the inward Intention. But the Treason is, that he did imagine to raise Rebellion and War within the Kingdom, to stir up the People against the King, and to depose the King, and bring him to Death, and deprive him of his Crown and Dignity; and then goes the Indictment on, and says, to the End that he might effect this Treason, he spoke such and such Words, which by that new Law (that Mr. Pollexfen mentioned) will amount to Treason in Speaking, as well as Writing. I say, it is positively charged in the Indictment, that he did thus and thus speak to stir up the People to Rebellion and War against the King; and then come the Words. If indeed any collateral Words be spoken, which in their own Nature import not a Tendency to incite and stir up the People against the King, it would be naught with Innuendo's; and so it would be, if there were were twenty Averments. But I think that this is as strong an Averment as can be (what we all know to be true), that there is but one King, and one Government. And then he spoke the Words in a Publick Assembly, We have had so and so, and if they would do so and so; which carries forcibly and pregnantly this Sense, that it cannot be intended to be spoken against any one else, but against the King and the Government; especially now after the Verdict, when the Jury find that he did all this to raise up the People against the King. All the Discourse is in itself pregnantly and forcibly tending that way.

My Lord, we are now upon the Form of the Indictment. Put the case there are many idle Expressions in it, as I may grant there are; yet, if the greatest part import Treason, Sedition and Rebellion, and are laid to be done to incite the People to Rebellion, and so found by the Jury; then the Indictment is well laid, and Judgment must be given for the King. The first Words are highly derogatory to the King, and must be understood to be spoke of him. If the Prisoner had thought these Words would not have been Treason, if he had demurr'd in the Case, by that, as the Jury find it now here, he would have confess'd it to have been spoken of the King; for it is said, He spoke it to the People, and he spoke it of the People of England; and to say that Populus may mean the King of France's People, as Mr. Wallop would have it, certainly no Man can think that: For when he speaks in English, to an English Auditory in a Publick Assembly, That the People make a flocking to the King, how can that King mean the King of France? And how can the Word People, by any Intendment, but a very foreign and strange one, be interpreted to mean that the French People should come over hither, for to be cured of the King's Evil, when (as he himself says) the French King claims such a Power? No, That does fix it particularly upon our own King.

Pray, let's consider then, what possibly can the Intendment of these Words be, that follow, We have had now two wicked Kings together? As for that Objection of the Word insinuat, that it means together at one Time, that sure can have very little in it; it being to be taken according to common understanding in our Dialect; and in English, to say we have had now two wicked Kings together, every one will understand it, we had them one after another, because we have but one King at a Time.

And then, my Lord, if the latter Words were left out, with submission, I conceive upon the Authorities that are in our Books, these Words would have been Treason upon the Statute of 25 Edw. 3. For, my Lord, in a Publick Assembly of People, which is an unlawful Assembly, as this was, to speak such Words of the King, would be Treason. For put the case, he had collected a number of armed Men at Hounslow Heath, and there exhorted them to stand together; that the King was a wicked Prince, and had misgovern'd himself in the Administration of the Government; I think that would be Treason within the Law. By the new Statute, to say the King is a Papist, plainly is a Præmunire; but to say the King is a wicked King, and has misgovern'd himself in introducing Popery; that's a step further than what the Act makes a Præmunire; for these are Words to stir up the People against the King, especially preached in a Publick Assembly.

Then, My Lord, you'll take all these Words together; first, after he had drawn away that great Authority, and great Power that the God of Heaven hath given to the King, in curing the King's Evil, and declared him to be a wicked Prince, by suffering Popery to come under his Nose, and that he was to be compared to none but wicked Jeroboam; and then, to exhort the People to stand to their Principles, and he did not doubt, but they should overcome their Enemies, what can be plainer Treason? For it is plain, that he did speak to the People, to the Congregation; and that can never be understood otherwise by the Court, nor by the Hearers. For that Interpretation, that the King should overcome his Enemies, it is foreign and ridiculous, and not to be imagined by any body, that has either Sense or Reason about them.

But, my Lord, I shall leave all this (the Jury having now found it), to shew what Precedents we could prepare for your Lordship; how things of this Nature have been used to be drawn: For we have made, for the little time we had, as good a Search as we can; and I have found several: And indeed, I cannot find one otherwise, than as this is. And for late Informations and Indictments, if you examine the Clerks that now are, they'll tell you, that there is not one otherwise: But that if it be said to be done with an intent to raise Rebellion or War against the King, or Sedition, or the like; and then say, he spoke such and such Words, that is sufficient. But I will shew your Lordship some ancienter Precedents, some few which will shew how the Practice was heretofore.

The first is 3 H. 8. Rot. 17. in the Indictment against my Lord Grey of High Treason; after the general Charge of machinating the Destruction and Death of the King, and Subversion of the Government; it is said there, that Proditorie he did speak these Words, 'That the King's Grace should be driven out of the Realm, and the Prince's Grace should never succeed.' And it is not averr'd that these Words were spoken of the King, and of the Prince; nor was there any need it should be averr'd; for the Words plainly import they were spoken of them; and the laying it, that it was to raise Sedition within the Realm, was sufficient to make them High-Treason.

Then the next is my Lord Cobham's Case, 2 Jac. Sessione 1ma; for it is one of the great Records that lie in the Chest, amongst the Arcana. But by the Book in the Office, we have a Copy of it; but there is the Record in the Chest, and there it is, 'Posteaque 12 die Junii, ultimo præterit. ac diversis aliis diebus & vicibus, tam postea quam antea, dixerunt, &c.' (for there are other Defendants) Proditorie 'there will be no good till the King' (meaning our Sovereign Lord the King) 'and all his Cubbs, (meaning the Children of our said Lord the King) were quite taken away, &c.' I leave out the General Charge of the Machination and contriving of the Death of the King; but to the intent to effect that Treason, such Words were spoken without any averment, that they were spoken de Rege. There was no mention of the Progeny of the King before; or that the Cubbs that were spoken of were the King's Children; neither would the Words Regalis Progenies answer the English Word Cubbs; which was a Word abusively mentioned by him. But in that Case it was held to be a good Indictment; and Sir Walter Raleigh was condemned upon it.

Another is Williams's Case; and that's very like our Case in the first Part; that is, the first Words insisted upon are laid positively to be spoken of King James, by an Innuendo. Pafch. 17. Jac. Rot. 40. there, after the Machinans & intendens, &c. it is laid, that he, such a Day of September, Proditorie devisavit a treasonable Book called Balaam's Ass; wherein there are such and such Passages applied to the King by the Innuendo. There is nothing said of that, to be spoken of the King, de Rege; but the Words of the Book carrying their own plain Sense and Meaning in them, that they must be intended of the King, and the Government, that was sufficient to maintain the Indictment; and he was Executed. The Innuendo's are not material. If it can have no other Sense, that is enough to maintain the Indictment.

My Lord, in Fitzbarris's Case, which your Lordship and all the Court remember; part of the Libel related to the Duke of York, by the Letters D. of Y. and sometimes only called by the Letter Y, and the King himself by the Letters Ch. And the Innuendo is, meaning our Sovereign Lord the King; and there is nothing averred in that Case, and indeed there can be nothing averred; for by the Import of the Thing it must have that Sense.

Colonel Sidney's Case, my Lord, you'll find to be the same: There's no Averment; but the Words of the Libel are brought in with an Innuendo.

And you have another Indictment at Salop, 31 Car. 2. One Pitt was indicted of High-Treason, and convicted for these Words, 'If the King should hang or banish any of the Papists, his Throat shall be cut.' This is laid in the same Form in the Indictment, as we have it here in our Case. If you please it may be read that he did advise, proditorie, speak such and such Words, if the King, meaning our Sovereign Lord the King, without any previous Discourse of the King, or saying it was spoken de Rege, should hang or banish any of the Papists (quasdam personas male dispositas, &c. Innuendo) his Throat shall be cut. He was Convicted, I say, and I think was Executed, tho' I cannot directly tell that: But this is the Record of his Conviction.

So I take it, it is, with Submission, that the Precedents go all along, both in Criminals that are not Capitals, in Indictments and Informations; and also in Indictments for High-Treason. The charging the Words to be spoken to stir up Sedition and Rebellion within the Kingdom, without the help of any Averment whatsoever, is sufficient; that is a strong Implication that they are spoken of the King and Government.

And, my Lord, as to these Words they could not be laid otherwise, than they are in this Indictment; for this is all that the Persons that are the Witnesses swore was spoken. Your Lordship remembers it, it was so, when they were here; they could swear no more. So that to have averred that he spoke to them de Rege & Gubernatione, would have put a Proof upon us, that our Witnesses would not have come up to. We must have proved a Discourse of the King and Government, and a swearing of the Words would not have been a Proof of that. The Jury has found that this was done to stir up Sedition, and to levy War; therefore, I conceive, according to the constant course of the Precedents, there is no need of any Averment; but the Words are well laid, and well proved, and he well convicted.

To say, that Enemies is a very general word, and that we have Enemies of all sorts; and that therefore a bare Innuendo cannot make it mean one more than another, is odd in this Case: For I would fain have any Man assign me what sort of Enemies he could be thought to mean. In such a Discourse he could not mean spiritual Enemies; because the Instruments that they were to be destroyed with, were carnal Weapons, broken Pitchers, and a Stone in a Sling. These are not fit for overcoming spiritual Enemies; but they must be such Enemies as can be destroyed by such Instruments, Carnal Enemies that are to be vanquished by outward Force. And then what Enemies can such a publick, unlawful Assembly have, but the Government? All that are of their own Side and Party are none of their Enemies. And it cannot be taken distributively, that every particular Man has his Enemy, that's a foreign Understanding: But when he spoke to the Congregation in a Conventicle, that they should overcome their Enemies, being so unlawfully assembled, that must be the Government: And had he not told you before, who were the Enemies that he plainly meant? He had said, that the King was a wicked Man; and according as he represented him, an Enemy to God and Man by introducing Popery into the Kingdom. And you are to consider the Time when, and the Place where these Words were spoken. We know that in these Conventicles it has been the constant Cry, that we should be all over-run with Popery, and the like: And therefore, that is considerable in the Case.

My Lord, I make a great Difference between Words spoken in private, and Words spoken in a great and large Assembly. It is the same Thing as if it had been spoken at the Head of an Army; especially when People meet contrary to the Laws of the Land in Defiance of the Government, and gather together in such great Multitudes; and have such Discourses and Opinions broached amongst them. I cannot see truly, how it is possible to have been better laid, being sworn directly as it is laid; and especially being found to be all spoken to disturb the Government, and to raise Sedition and Rebellion. Therefore I must submit it to your Lordship; and pray your Judgment against the Prisoner for the King.

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lord, I beg leave to add one Word on the same Side. That which I shall apply myself to, is to shew that this is a very good Indictment, in the Form of the Indictment, and that upon this Matter which the Prisoner is proceeded against; for it could not be better.

My Lord, the Fact charged upon the Prisoner is as Mr. Attorney has opened. These Words were spoken in a Conventicle, The People make a flocking to the King to cure the King's Evil, which he cannot do, &c. These are the Words upon which the Prisoner was committed: These are the Words upon which he is proceeded against; and these are the Words which have been found against him. And, my Lord, more Words than these are not alledged to be spoken by the Prisoner, nor proved to be spoken by him at his Trial upon this Indictment. Therefore, if these Words

Words are High-Treason, this is a good Indictment in Substance, if it proves so too in Form. And whether these Words are not themselves Treason, I shall not now speak, but shall only go to shew, as I said, that it is a good Indictment in Point of Form. For these Words are his Crime, as spoken in that Conventicle; and the only Crime of which he was accused, and of which he is found guilty.

Now, my Lord, let us see how the Indictment is. He is charged with compassing, imagining, and intending to raise Rebellion, and levy War in the Kingdom, and to depose the King; and to bring the King to Destruction: That is the Charge of High-Treason, in the Kind of it. Now, as that is the Charge, it is of absolute Necessity to alledge an Overt-Act, which must be proved too; and if there be not an Overt-Act, the Indictment is naught. Well, then, the Treason is compassing the Death of the King, and intending to raise Sedition, and levy War. What is the Overt-Act charged upon him? Why, to bring such his wicked Purposes to pass, he did traiterously speak, publish, and utter [the Words of the Act of Parliament, in 13 Car. II.] in an unlawful Assembly, in the Presence of divers of the King's Subjects, these Words that I repeated before to your Lordship.

Now, my Lord, I ask; Are these Words Treason in themselves, or are they not? If they are Treason of themselves, then the Indictment is certainly good in Form, without saying, that he spoke the Words of the King, or of the People of England, Subjects of the King. For either they do import that of themselves, or they do not. If they do import it of themselves, the saying that he did speak them of the King, and of the People, would have been impertinent and idle, because it is a thing manifestly plain of itself. If they do not import this of themselves; then had it been charged, that they were spoken of the King and of the People, this must have been proved.

To go on then, my Lord: If it must have been proved, it must have been proved either by the Words themselves, or by something else. If it were to be proved by the Words themselves; why then it returns to the old Question, and we need not alledge it. If it were to be proved by something else, then the Fault is not in the Indictment; but it must be want of other Matter than what our Witnesses would prove; which, I am sure, would have been a very great Fault in us to have drawn upon ourselves. But if the Words import of themselves the Meaning to be of the King, and of the People of England; then it is plain they make the Treason of themselves, and there requires no Averment.

As now, for Instance, my Lord, to change the Words a little, to illustrate the Case; as suppose it had been charged in the Indictment, that to bring his wicked Purposes forth to effect, he did speak these Words in such an Assembly, Procure to yourselves Arms, and make yourselves ready by such a Day, and go to Whitehall, and kill the King; would any Man have said here, that it was necessary that we should say in the Indictment that he dixit de Populo, vel de Rege, so and so? No certainly, it is not necessary, because the Words plainly import their own Meaning.

So here in this Case; if the Words themselves necessarily import to be spoken of the King, it is as impertinent here to say, dixit de Rege, dixit de Populo, as in that Case; because it is no more than what they necessarily and naturally import of themselves: Which shews that this Averment, that they would have, is absolutely immaterial; and, if it had been charged, would have required some other Proof than the Words themselves. And so the Fault cannot be, as they would alledge, in the Form of the Indictment; but in the Substance of the Words, that they do not import in themselves such a Meaning. And therefore, I think, with Submission, I have maintained the Form of this Indictment beyond all Contradiction; and, notwithstanding all their Objections, it is a very good Form without the Words dixit de Rege, vel de Populo.

As Mr. Attorney said, it is necessary, my Lord, in Actions on the Case for Slander, to aver, dixit de querente, because he must ascertain the Person of whom the Words are spoken, to be the very Plaintiff; for there may be divers of the same Name: And you must always, upon a Record, ascertain the Person, to entitle the Plaintiff to the Action: But where Words are pregnant, and full of themselves, there needs no Averment in such a Case; which without such Pregnancy would be necessary, and, if not done, the Action would fail. As in that Case that was cited by Mr. Attorney of Sir Miles Fleetwood; if it had been that the Words were, Sir Miles Fleetwood has deceived the King, it would not have borne an Action, unless it had been averred to have been spoken of him as of cozening the King in his Office: Because generally to say a Man has cozened the King, will not bear an Action, it is too loose. But when he says, Mr. Deceiver; the Ironicalness of that shall not excuse him, but rather demonstrate both who, and what he meant; that it shall be applied to him, as doing it in his Office. And, being so, it must necessarily be understood to be a very great Slander; and then it needs no Averment. So says the Book.

So that where Words are plain and full, even in an Action on the Case, there requires no Averment: But in Indictments, they being for Offences against the Government, the very ancient Forms used will govern the Case, as well as the Reason and Nature of the thing; that no one can be meant, by such sort of Words, but the King and the Government: And for that I rely upon the Precedents that have been cited, that the Forms were always thus. The Precedents, with humble submission, where the Overt-Act laid in the Indictment, is by Words spoken, that it is said, dixit de Domino Rege, &c. There is not one that does ever carry it so, but the Forms are constantly in the same Manner with this that is now before your Lordship, without such Averment, as carrying plain Surplusage, to aver that which the Words necessarily import.

To say, my Lord, in this Case, as we hear it objected on the other Side, That these Forms passed sub Silentio, and no such Objection was ever made, I say, that is no Objection to our Indictment; for the Argument sure turns the other way; because the Forms have been constantly in this Manner that ours is, therefore it is assigned, that what they offer, is no Objection at all; for, doubtless, in so long a tract of Time, when so many learned Men sat on the Bench, and so many learned of the King's Counsel attended the King's Courts, and so many Persons have been indicted, tried, and suffered upon such Indictments, who would have saved their Lives, no doubt, if they could, by making such Advantage of such an Exception; that is a strong Argument, that it was never thought an Exception. So that, besides the Reason of the thing, the Precedents are all with us, which hath always been accounted a good Argument.

My Lord, a great many of us remember the Indictments of latter Times; particularly that of Colonel Sidney: Tho' there is another Overt-Act laid in that Indictment too, yet that is nothing to this Case. If there be but one Overt-Act laid in the Indictment, it must be proved by two Witnesses; but if there be several Overt-Acts laid in the Indictment, and one is proved by one Witness, and the other by another Witness, that is sufficient to maintain the Indictment. In Mr. Sidney's Case there was to one Fact but one Witness; and therefore it was necessary to lay another Overt-Act, which was proved by other Witnesses. And one Overt-Act comes to this point that's now in Question before your Lordship. It is in this Form directly, without any Averment that the Words were spoke or written de Rege or de Regimine, but that the Book contained so and so: And the Thing itself speaks itself of whom it was meant. If therefore the Words in that Case, being proved, were necessarily to be applied to the Government of England, there need no Averment: No more does there here.

My Lord, not to trouble your Lordship further in so plain a Case, the Precedents being thus, and it being known to be the constant Practice in point of Form, I would fain know what they would have had us done. The Witnesses swear these are the Words, and there are no more; how then can we frame a better Indictment, than upon the Words that they swear were spoken? My Lord, we pray your Judgment for the King.

L. C. J. Well, have you done on both Sides?

Mr. Attorney. Yes, my Lord.

L. C. J. Truly for my part, I think this is a Case of great Consequence on the one side, and on the other. I hear it's said there are abundance of Precedents in the Case, some have been mentioned, and it is necessary we should look upon these Precedents, before we deliver any absolute Opinion. But, truly I must say, Mr. Attorney's Precedents have with me very little weight. And I must differ from Mr. Attorney in another Thing: For if in case the last Words were out of the Case, of standing to their Principles, and overcoming their Enemies, do you think, that because it is said in the fore part of the Indictment that he intended the Death of the King, and to raise Rebellion, and therefore said, there were two wicked Kings who suffered Popery under their Noses, and were to be likened to Jeroboam; that that would be a good Indictment for High-Treason? Then it were plain the Act of Parliament, 13 Car. II. was made to no Purpose. For tho' I doubt not in the least, words may be an Overt-Act of High-Treason, in compassing the Death of the King, upon the Stat. of 25 Edw. III. I make no Difficulty in the World of that: So was my Lord Cobham's Case, and so were the Cases in Harry the Eighth's Time, “We will drive the King out of England,” or any thing of that Nature: I say, that would be an Overt-Act sufficient to bring a Man within the Compass of the Statute of 25 Edw. III. because those are express words tending to the Death and Destruction of the King, the deposing him and depriving him; and they call him the King. But if a Man comes and says, That such a one; with a Purpose and Intent to destroy the King, said these Words, That the King could not cure the King's Evil; that's not such an Overt-Act as to make good an Indictment of High-Treason. And to say, that the King introduces Popery under his Nose into the Kingdom; why it's a very high Crime, but it is prescribed by the Act of Parliament to be prosecuted only as a Misdemeanour, and punished by Premunire. If you look into that Statute, you will find which way the Words shall have a Tendency, that are to convict a Man of Treason; that is, that tend to the Imprisonment, bodily Harm, Death, or Destruction of the King, or raising Insurrection, and Rebellion; or levying War within the Kingdom, that is High-Treason. But Words that do not necessarily tend to any such thing; as to say the King is a Papist, introduces Popery, is Popishly affected, Phrases that some People delight in; that has a peculiar Punishment appointed to it by this Act. And this is all taken care of, to shew the Judges how they should proceed, being careful of leaving it loose, in so great a Case as High-Treason. And the Parliament seems to be the more careful in it, because they make the treasonable words such an offence, during the King's Life only. Now, as Mr. Solicitor puts the Case, by way of Illustration, in other words; I make no difficulty, but to bid Men prepare Arms, and go to Whitehall, and kill the King, would be rank downright Treason. Would any Man in the World doubt to aver, that that were an Overt-Act? No man living would. But if I will say, that to compass and imagine the King's Death, he bid them rise up and go to Whitehall, and they should overcome their Enemies, does that import the King? There's no necessity of that. The King cannot be said to be an Enemy, unless it be plainly declared by the Party himself who he meant. And then to say, How could it be made better? No doubt of it, it might easily be made better, if it had been considered of. For if you had come and averred, that these Words were spoken concerning the King, and the People of England, certainly it would have made it more certain. I don't bind myself now in my Opinion, by what I now tell you; but I am only breaking the Matter. If you had said, that he said, If we will stand to our Principles, we shall destroy them, I think it had made the Case stronger ten times; but you have not so done. Indeed, I am not so fond in my Imagination, as the Counsel for the Prisoner seem to be; That we have had two wicked Kings together, who have suffered Popery to come under their Noses; that therefore we must run it up to King Ethelbert, and I don't know who; no, that plainly in common English speaking, means two Kings successively; and it must be made a strange, forced Construction, if we should interpret it, that he did not speak these Words of the late blessed Martyr, and his present Majesty. And because Enemies is in the Plural Number, therefore to make it Nonsense, because one is destroyed, if the words had been well laid, as they might, therefore it could have no relation to him that was left, I say, would make a strange forced Construction. That might be well enough, if the words had been properly laid. But when you

you come to speak of Enemies, innuendo, the King and his Subjects? how can that possibly be? For you had talked of no body before that they are said to have a Displeasure to; and therefore, without saying that the King is an Enemy, to say, Stand to your Principles, and you shall destroy your Enemies, innuendo, The King, is, I doubt, to stretch it a little too far. But whereas I have put the words, how I think they should have been laid; says Mr. Solicitor, The Truth is, they were not so spoken as you would have them laid, but they are laid as they were spoken, and as they were sworn; and that's a Point of Fact to be left to the Jury, whether they aimed at the King and Government, or not. Do you think that an Answer? For it would be the same Argument in an Action of the Case for Words: Where it's plain it must be dixit de querente, you do so and so. My Declaration must aver it, and I must prove it too. If I do not say it, tho' I prove it, that won't maintain the Action: if I do say it, and not prove it, it will not maintain the Declaration; all's naught: and what is there more in this Case? If you had said it, that would have directed the Jury plainly, upon finding the words as laid in the Indictment, to have found what was the Intention of the Party by these words. These are things (I must confess) that wonderfully weigh with me. It is in a Case of a capital Offence, where the Life of a Man is concerned. If the Precedents have all gone so, there is some Weight in that: But if the Precedents be only such as you have spoken of, Words directly telling who is meant, they have no manner of likeness to the Words in this Indictment, because there they could never import any thing else.

In the next place, I am stumbled at another thing, Mr. Attorney, and that is, the difference of the Persons in one part of the Words, and another. You have begun in the first Person Plural, We have had two wicked Kings together, and as the Latin Words are, Nos habuimus nunc duos iniquos Reges infimus, but afterwards you say, and if they, Ipsi, will stand to their Principles, he did not doubt but they should overcome their Enemies. It had been best to have laid them, as (certainly in common understanding) they must be believed to be spoken, If you or we will stand to our Principles; and then the very Innuendo would have been more sensible and applicable.

Mr. Sol. Gen. But, my Lord, it was sworn so by the Witnesses, that he said, If they.

L. C. J. The words say he preached, We have had, that is, he and the Congregation assembled, and then it is afterwards turned to they. I make no difficulty in the World, but that we have had two wicked Kings together, was intended of the late King and this; and if it had been alledged, that afterwards he had said, We shall overcome them, and a Jury had found that these words were spoken with such an Intention, as is laid in the Indictment, it would have been Treason. But both in Grammar and Reason, when you come to say, and si ipsi, &c. pray, to whom should that relate? What's the English of ipsi? Is it we or they? If it be they, in the third Person, there are no third Persons spoken of, but the two Kings, and they are the last Antecedent. For my part, it does stumble me, it is a thing of great Consideration. I speak not, as I said, to bind myself in Opinion; but I think, if ye had put the word Nos instead of Ipsi, it had come nearer to the understanding of Men, both in Grammar and Sense. For I exclude myself, and them I speak to, if I put it in the third Person, and your Innuendo (I said) can no way help it.

Mr. Att. Gen. Truly, my Lord, I did not think that that did rest upon your Lordship at all, as any Objection.

L. C. J. It does rest, I assure you, Mr. Attorney.

Mr. Sol. Gen. If we had done otherwise, we should not have laid it as the Truth is, and the Latin does not alter the Case, for the word spoken was They.

L. C. J. Ay, but certainly he said (no doubt) You or We, if you will stand to your Principles, it's Nonsense else.

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lord, I take that to be well enough, for here are three Sentences. The first is, That the people make a flocking to the King, &c. Quod Populus, &c. The next is, Quod nos habuimus, &c. And then the third is, Quod si ipsi. Now Quod governs the particular Sentence, and it being a particular Sentence by itself, with humble Submission, it is good in Grammar, and in Sense too.

L. C. J. Suppose you were to speak it in English. Mr. Solicitor, suppose you were to speak it, Now we have had two wicked Kings together, who have suffered Popery to come in under their Noses (meaning the late King and this), there perhaps the Innuendo is sensible, and, no doubt of it, then he must mean them: But to say, If they will stand to their Principles, they shall overcome their Enemies, pray to whom does that they relate?

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lord, with humble Submission, you put the Case of an entire Speech, made in the Person of the Preacher, and the Congregation, and as the Words were spoken all at one time. I would make it an entire Speech too; but it seems to be several Sentences, and therefore that differs the Case. For taking it that these are three distinct Sentences, they might be spoken in a several manner by varying the Person, and so they were sworn. And suppose he had only spoke the last Words, an Indictment for this in the third Person had been a good Indictment: And if it had been charged in that Case, Quod dixit & asseruit, quod si ipsi, &c. and then in Evidence, come and prove these Words, would not that have been good?

L. C. J. Truly, I think, Mr. Solicitor, if the Indictment for these last Words alone had been in the third Person, it is a Question whether that might have been a good Indictment, if you had come in Evidence, and proved, that he had said of the King and Government, If you will stand to your Principles, you shall overcome your Enemies. Tho' I deliver no absolute Opinion of that, because there ought (I think) to have been an Averment, that they were spoken of the King, and the People.

Mr. Sol. Gen. In an entire Speech (my Lord) there the Relative must be applied to the last Antecedent, according to Grammar.

L. C. J. And I think it must be taken to be an entire Speech, and you lay it in the Indictment to be so, and then the Relative must go to the last Antecedent, or else Dr. Busby (that so long ruled in Westminster School) taught me quite wrong, and who had tried most of the Grammars extant, and used to lay down that as a positive Rule in Grammar, that the Relative must refer to the next Antecedent.

Mr. Just. Withins. Mr. Solicitor, if you make it several Speeches, then it's ten times worse, for then the latter Part is so uncertain, without an Aver-ment of whom the Words were spoken, that sure it can never be made good.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Suppose it had been Uterius dixit, would that have made it a distinct Sentence? If it would, our Proof it may be was, that it was an entire Speech, but yet consisting of several Sentences, and must have the common understanding, as to their relation one to another.

Mr. Att. Gen. This Objection of quod ipsi, &c. was not moved by the Prisoner at the Bar, and therefore we did not expect to speak to it.

L. C. J. It is started here now by the Counsel. And it is a Question truly with me, whether this can be any way sensibly applied, as you would have it. Surely the Innuendo can never make it good.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, I say sling all the Innuendo's out of Doors, the Words in themselves will do it.

L. C. J. Why then we must see whether it be a good Indictment in point of Form, or rather in point of Substance, as you have laid these Words, without saying they were spoken de Rege. It is a Question of great Weight and Concernment both to the King and to the Prisoner, and therefore we must take good time to consider of it, before we deliver a settled Opinion. But Mr. Solicitor, you very well remember that Stalley's Case was otherwise. For, tho' the Words were, the King of England is a Tyrant, &c. yet there it is said, and expressly averred, that he spoke the Words de Rege.

Mr. Att. Gen. Could Colonel Sidney have moved in Arrest of Judgment this that the Prisoner now starts? No, he could not sure. He might have moved for a new Trial-----

L. C. J. Certainly (Mr. Attorney General), that Case comes not up to this. Where the Words import in themselves that the King is meant, or any way circumstantially, it does necessarily imply they could be meant of no one else, and that would be good without the Averment. Which was the Case of Colonel Sidney, where the Matter declared in the Libel was plainly down-right relating to the Government, that if he did so and so he must renounce his Crown, and the like. How can that be applied to any but the King? The People of England have committed the Kingdom to his Power, &c. Why, how can it be interpreted that any Body else is meant?

Mr. Att. Gen. When will your Lordship please to give Judgment?

L. C. J. Mr. Attorney, we will consider of it. It is usual, in Cases of less Difficulty than this, to take time of Consideration. I do not say, but that looking upon the Precedents, perhaps I may alter my Opinion, and therefore do not speak this to bind myself: But we will consider of it.

Mr. Att. Gen. I look upon it that the Government is greatly concerned in this Matter, more than ten such as the Prisoner at the Bar.

L. C. J. It is true, Mr. Attorney, the Government is greatly concerned, and the Prisoner is greatly concerned, for his All is at Stake. I do say a good Indictment might have been made, I am sure.

Mr. Sol. Gen. This is the best we could make, for we had no Proof to make out any Averment, because these were all the Words he said.

Mr. Att. Gen. After the Jury have found the Words as laid in the Indictment, was it ever asked of a Jury, These Words were spoken of the King, or they were not, but you have not said that they are spoken of the King, for it is not laid in the Indictment? Would that ever vitiate the Verdict?

L. C. J. Mr. Solicitor, pray, would you have us give Judgment, that the Jury could not find that the Words were spoken of the King?

Mr. Pollexfen. The Jury have not found that they were spoken of the King, for there is no such thing averred.

Mr. Att. Gen. Nor they have not found them to be not spoken of the King; but they have found them to be spoken to stir up Sedition.

Mr. Solicitor. We are never bound by Law to aver that that we cannot prove. And therefore I put all upon that Dilemma; Either the Words import of themselves to be spoken of the King, or they do not. If they do not, if we had said, dixit de Domino Rege, it must have been proved, and that would have been to have left it to the Jury whom he did mean. And if they be not self-evident, God forbid the Jury shall be charged to find out such a Meaning; but if they are self-evident, they need no Averment.

Mr. Just. Hol. Truly, we think it may be good Evidence to a Jury and it is every Day done in Cases of Actions for Words. It is left to the Jury to consider, whether he meant the Plaintiff, John-a-Stiles, or any other: And the Evidence is helped by this, or that circumstance, where the Words do not naturally import it.

Mr. Just. Walcot. I do think that the Averment that these Words were spoken of the King, is a point of Fact that ought to be averred and proved. Might not the Jury in this Case have found that they were not spoken of the King? If they had found that, why they would have acquitted him; if they had found they were, and you had not alledged it, why then they had found more than the Indictment would lead them to.

L. C. J. Well, this is only by way of Discourse, not that we bind ourselves by our present Opinion. We must look upon it. We will not give our Judgment suddenly in a Case of this Nature.

Mr. North. Will your Lordship please to spare me one Word?

L. C. J. Ay, Sir, let every Man be heard, in God's Name.

Mr. North. My Lord, as to this Objection, quod ipsi relates to the two wicked Kings spoken of just before, that cannot be: For you take notice that these Words of the two wicked Kings relate to the late King, and to the present, as the Indictment says. One of the Kings is dead, so that you cannot understand it to be of the two Kings, that should overcome their Enemies, and therefore it must be the People. This Populus being a Noun of Multitude, and taken in the Plural Number, Ipsi will very well relate to it.

L. C. J. Mr. North, the Argument turns both Ways upon that, and certainly he did not express himself after that rate. It is so loose a hung-together Indictment, as truly I have scarce seen. For my Part, I would know how it come to pass; that we should not have as much Certainty in Indictments, as we have in Actions upon the Case?

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, there must be Certainty in all Cases, and we think there is Certainty enough in this for your Lordship to give Judgment upon.

L. C. J. Mr. Attorney, I believe if you sat in our Places you would not think so. All our Books require greater Certainties in Indictments, than in Actions on the Case: Nay, in Causes of this Nature, we are bound by our Law Books to be of Counsel for the Prisoner, which we are not in civil Causes, where the Prisoner may choose his own Counsel. And we have not one Act of Parliament to help the defect of forming Indictments, as we have in Civil Actions, but still in all the Statutes made in Jeofails, there is an Exception of capital Offences, to shew that our Ancestors would not help Uncertainties or Insufficiencies in Form, where the Life of a Man was concerned. This seems to carry a great Consideration with it.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, I was very willing and desirous your Lordship should assign the Prisoner this learned Counsel, because we did suppose they would have produced some Precedents of a better Form than this: But they have cited none.

L. C. J. And you have cited never such a Case as this, Mr. Attorney. And if we can find no other like Case, we must be governed by the Reason of the thing.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, we hope you will expedite it, for the sake of the Government.

L. C. J. Certainly, I think it is very uncertain who are meant by Enemies; it may be Mr. Solicitor, Mr. Attorney, it may be the Court, no body knows who it is: For every body knows, that to Preachers in Conventicles, and to those that meet there, the Judges, and all that are for the Support of the Laws, may be reckoned to them as Enemies. But when it is so uncertain who are meant, how can we supply it by such an Innuendo? That there might have been a good Indictment framed upon such Words as these, as he in all Probability spoke them, and he justly found guilty, is no Question with me at all. And (as I said the other Day, for the Sake of the Auditory) if he be guilty of speaking such Words, and of Treason in speaking them; what will they be guilty of that were present, and heard the Words spoken? They may thank God, that we have a gracious King, that does not take all the Advantages the Law gives him against those that break his Laws.

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lord, your Lordship was pleased to mention Staley's Case to me. As I do remember it, it is not as your Lordship says: But it is, That he, to perfect his wicked Treason (speaking of the King) said so and so. Now, if an Averment be necessary, this is a naughty Averment; for it is not positively averred that he did speak of the King.

L. C. J. Well, we will look upon it. And I would ask you, Mr. Solicitor, whether if he said (as it is most likely he did) If you will stand to your Principles; and you put in si ipsi, whether that would be good?

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lord, we put it in as the Witnesses swore it.

L. C. J. They did swear the Words according to their Apprehension; but, no doubt of it, in common Form he must speak them as I say.

Mr. Att. Gen. They swore the Words so; and we could lay them no otherwise.

L. C. J. Well, Mr. Attorney, will you move any thing?

Mr. Att. Gen. No, my Lord.

L. C. J. Then we will consider of it. And take you back the Prisoner; and you shall have a Rule of Court to bring him, when the Court is ready for Judgment.

*Then the Prisoner was carried back to the King's Bench; and no Judgment was given that Term; But the next Term Mr. Roswell pleaded the King's Pardon * at the Bar of the Court of King's Bench; and was discharged.*

* See the Pardon in the Appendix.

CXXXI. The Trial of JOSEPH HAYES * at the King's Bench for High-Treason, in corresponding with Sir Thomas Armstrong, an Outlaw for High-Treason. Nov. 21, 1684. Mich. 36. Car. II.

MR. Hayes was brought by Habeas Corpus, upon the 3d of November, 1684, from the Gate-house, and was arraigned upon an Indictment, to this Effect, viz.

That he being a false Traitor against the King, &c. the 31st of August, in the 35th Year of the King, knowing Sir Thomas Armstrong to have conspired the death of the King, and to have fled for the same, did traiterously relieve, comfort, and maintain him; and for his Relief and Maintenance, did pay the Sum of 150l. against the Duty of his Allegiance, &c. To this he pleaded Not Guilty.

Upon the 21st of November, 1684, He was brought to Trial, before the Lord Chief Justice Jeffreys, Judge Holloway, Judge Withins, and Judge Walcot; and the Jury being called, he challenged the following Persons.

Sir Thomas Griffith,	William Fownes,	Robert Townsend,
Richard Ellis,	Charles Gregory,	James Bush,
Thomas Langham,	William Peele,	Walter Masters,
Henry Whistler,	Richard Weedon,	Thomas Larkham,
Nicholas Smith,	Thomas Pory,	Edward Cooke,
Thomas Soper,	Thomas Piercehouse,	William Fashion,
Thomas Passenger,	Richard Burden,	John Flowerdew,
Henry Minchard,	John George,	John Greene,
Peter Jones,	John Steventon,	John Grice,
William Crouch,	Robert Watkins,	Charles Fowler, and
Peter Devet,	George Twine,	James Smith.
Henry Lodes,	Thomas Short,

In all 35.

The Jury sworn were,
Samuel Sheppard, Daniel Templeman, Edward Cheeke,
Daniel Allen, William Dewart, Edward Underwood,
Rowland Platt, Edward Piggot, Robert Masters, and Adam Bellamy, Thomas Brailsford, William Warren.

Then the Indictment being read, Mr. Dolben, as Counsel for the King, opened it to the Jury.

Mr. Attorney General *. After Sir Thomas Armstrong had fled, the Prisoner relieved and aided him with Money, and that, after he was indicted, and sued to the Exigent; besides, a Proclamation followed upon his Flight, which was a sufficient Notice to all the King's Subjects. Sir Thomas went by the Name of Henry Lawrence beyond Sea; by that Name the Prisoner held a Correspondence with him, and sent him a Letter, dated the 21st of August, and tells him, he had sent him a Bill of Exchange for 165 l. drawn upon his Brother, Israel Hayes, who was acquainted with Sir Thomas.

If it were not for these receiving and nourishing of Traitors, they would not lurk at Amsterdam, as they do. The Letter was taken about Sir Thomas, and we shall prove it is the Prisoner's Hand-writing, and that Sir Thomas received the Money.

I hope, you will take care, by convicting this Gentleman, to stop the Fountain, which issues so much Supply to these Traitors who lurk abroad.

Mr. Hayes then affirmed, that he never knew Sir Thomas in his life.

Then the Indictment against Sir Thomas was read, which was found the 12th of July, and Mr. Glover proved a Copy of the King's Proclamation against Sir Thomas, dated the 28th of June, 1683.

Then Ezekiel Everis was sworn, and testified, that in August, 1683, he was at Cleve in Germany, with the Lord Grey, who went by the Name of Thomas Holt, and Sir T. A. came thither by the Name of Mr. Henry Lawrence, and shewed him a Bill of Exchange, from England, upon Mr. Israel Hayes in Amsterdam, for 160l. odd Money; and that it was for 150 Guineas, paid in England; and he told him, it was drawn by Joseph Hayes, and it was signed Joseph Hayes; and the Bill was accepted, and he saw

Israel Hayes his Letter to Sir Thomas, by the Name of Lawrence, which mentioned the sending the said Sum to Cleve.

The Common Serjeant (Crispe) then delivered a Parcel of Letters into the Court, and swore that he received them of the Lord Godolphin, and they had been ever since in his hands.

The Lord Godolphin then testified, that he received three Letters produced in Court, from Mr. Constable, Mr. Chudley's Secretary, who told him they were taken about Sir Thomas, that one of them, without any Name, mentioned 150 Guineas returned to Henry Lawrence.

Constable testified, that he was present, when the Scout of Leyden apprehended Sir T. A. and that the Letters were taken out of his Pocket, and he himself delivered them to Mr. Chudley, who sealed them up, and sent them by him, to the Lord Godolphin.

Charles Davis testified, that taking Boat from Amsterdam to Rotterdam, he met Israel Hayes and Sir Tho. A. coming to take Boat, and Sir Thomas went with him in the Boat, and he told him his Name was Henry Lawrence.

Davis added, that he lodged a Month in one Briscoe's House at Amsterdam, where there was a Club every Thursday: There were Mr. Israel Hayes, Mr. Henry Ireton, one Wilmore, Emerton, Dare, and some other English Merchants; and he heard them several Times abuse the King at Table.

The Attorney-General then shewed Mr. Hayes a Letter, saying, It may be he will save us the labour of proving it; but Mr. Hayes disowning it, Mr. Walpole was called, and Mr. Hayes said, He was my Servant, and went away after a rate that possibly would not be allowed.

Walpole testified, that he served Mr. Hayes almost four Years and three Quarters, and did believe the Letter to be Mr. Hayes's Hand.

Mr. Hayes. My Lord, in Matters of Treason, I hope you will not admit of Comparison of Hands and belief, for Evidence.

L. C. J. Yes, no doubt of it.

Mr. Hayes. It has not been so in other Cases, that have not been capital; as particularly in the Lady Carr's Case.

L. C. J. This is a Mistake, you take it from Algernon Sidney; but without all doubt it is good Evidence.

Judge Withins. Comparison of Hands was allowed for good Evidence in Coleman's Case.

Mr. Hayes. That, with Submission, vastly differs: Those Letters were found in his own Custody; this was not found in my Possession, but in another Man's, and in another Nation.

Sir John Trevor, Counsel for the King. This Gentleman was a Trader with the East-India Company, and made Contracts with them, which are entered in their Books: We will compare them with the Writing in this Letter.

The Common Serjeant then called Harman and Brittle, and demanded of them where the Books were; and they produced them.

Harman testified, that he knew Mr. Hayes, and that he made several Contracts in 1683, and that he saw him in September, 1683, subscribe his Hand to a Book of the Company's, shewn to him.

Brittle testified, that he is Porter in the Street to the East-India Company, and that he saw Mr. Hayes write his Hand to a Book shewn to him.

Capt. Piercehouse produced a Note, which he said was Mr. Hayes's, and that he supposed it to be his Hand, and compared it with the Hand in the Book, and said, that he delivered the Goods upon it: and Walpole then said, he believed it to be Mr. Hayes's Hand.

Then Mr. Sturdivant was called, and they shewed him the Letter, and he said, Here is Joseph Hayes writ, but I do not know it to be his Hand.

The Common Serjeant said, that Mr. Sturdivant swore he did know Mr. Hayes's Hand, before the Grand Jury; but Mr. Sturdivant affirmed, the Common Serjeant was under a Mistake.

Then Sir John Trevor called for Mr. Hardress; but the Common Serjeant answered, That he was out of Town before he could be served with a Subpoena.

Then the Letter was read, it was subscribed Joseph Hayes, and dated the 31st of August, 1683, directed to Mr. Henry Laurence, senior, at Amsterdam, and began thus, Sir, at your desire I have sent you a Bill, &c. The Letter and the East-India Books were then shewn to the Jury, and to the Prisoner.

Mr. Hayes denied the Letter to be his Writing, and said, 'Tis very strange I should not know my own Hand; may not Counsel be admitted to plead, Whether comparison of Hands and belief are any Evidence in criminal Causes? I have been informed, it hath been denied to be Evidence.

Chief Justice. You are under a Mistake; some body has put it into your Head, and puffed you up with a vain Story; there's no such thing, 'tis a Fiction, a meer Whim, only said by Mr. Sidney, and no ground in the World for it.

Mr. Hayes. Was it not so in the Case of my Lady Carr? There is a Record of that I suppose.

Chief Justice. It was not so. Don't talk of it*, there was no such Thing at all — Comparison of Hands was allowed for good Proof in Sidney's Case. We must not alter the Law for any body.

Mr. Attorney-General. Besides this Comparison of Hands, we shall give an Account of the Correspondence of the Prisoner's Brother, and that he received the Money of him. Mr. Common Serjeant, Where had you this Paper?

Com. Serj. I had them from my Lord Godolphin. This is an Account of the Receipt and Disbursement of the Money; shew it Mr. Constable.

Constable. This is one of the Papers, which was taken out of Sir T. A's Pocket.

It being shewn to the Jury, one of them demanded, whether any one proved the Hand that was in that Note?

Mr. Attorney. No; but Everis swears, that Sir T. A. shewed him a Bill, subscribed Joseph Hayes, for so many Hundred Guilders.

Common Serjeant. He says, it was 160 odd Pounds; now, the Sum of this Note is 161 l. 5s. which is the change of 150 Guineas.

Mr. Hayes. Here is nobody proves this Letter to be my Hand, positively: They only prove it by Similitude, and Comparison, and Belief. I conceive there is but one Witness, that that Letter was found in Sir T. A's Hands: Everis says, he saw a Bill had my Name to it. Sir, you did not know me, nor ever saw my Hand?

Everis. No, never in my Life.

Mr. Hayes. 'Tis only an evidence of Reputation, he heard it was my Bill; you saw no Money paid upon it, did you?

Everis. No; but I saw a Letter from Mr. Israel Hayes, that gave some Account of it.

Mr. Hayes. All this is but Similitude and Circumstance; and I thought in case of Treason there ought to be two Witnesses, and hope you will let it be so here — here is no Evidence but the Letter, and that is not two Witnesses; there is no body has proved the knowingly in the Indictment, that runs, that I knew Sir T. A. and his Treason; that ought to be proved, but I am sure 'tis not. Your Lordship says, that the Indictment and the Proclamation are sufficient Notice that he was a Traitor; that may admit of Counsel to debate it; there ought to be Witnesses that could shew me to be concerned with him; which nobody in the World can prove, or that I ever saw him; and that Witness, who says, he saw the Bill, or this Letter, does not know that I wrote it; there are them that say, they heard of Money paid upon this Bill, but there is not one of them says, he saw any Money paid; and these are several Witnesses, every one to a several thing.

Here is no Proof, but by the East-India Porters, and those who say, they believe this Letter to be my Hand; no body says, he saw me write this Letter, or had any Correspondence with Sir T. A.

If they pretend there was Money paid beyond Sea; is this Indictment well laid, for it is laid to be paid in London? The Payment of Money beyond Sea can be no Evidence of Fact upon this Indictment; for the Jury of London are to enquire of Matters arising in London only. If I am to be tried for Payment of Money beyond the Sea, the Fact should have been laid there, and the Trial ought to proceed upon the Statute of 35 H. 8. cap. 2. The Indictment should be taken by Special Commission from the King, and the Trial be in the County that the King should choose. I desire Counsel upon this point.

L. C. J. No, 'tis an idle Whim, and I would fain know the Counsel that put that foolish Notion into your Head.

Mr. Hayes. If you will allow me Counsel, you shall hear who they are; I have been informed the Law is so.

L. C. J. We are of another Opinion: If any whimsical Notions are put into you, by some Enthusiastick Counsel, the Court is not to take notice of their Crotchets.

Mr. Hayes. The Witnesses are Strangers to me; there is one that has been sworn, to whom I have paid several Thousands of Pounds, who says, he does not believe it to be my Hand.

Then he called Mr. Sturdivant, who looking upon the Letter, said, I do not believe it to be his Hand, I have had dealings with him, and he hath given me many Receipts.

Mr. Hayes. There have been a great many Forgeries; and this Letter is forged: there have been Forgeries so like, that the Persons themselves have not known their own Hands.

Every body knows that a Hand may be counterfeited very like: in Mr. Sidney's Case, Mr. Wharton, a young Gentleman, not above one or Two and Twenty, said, He could undertake to counterfeit any Man's hand whatsoever.

I am not a Man of that Quality, to give Sir T. A. 150 Guineas.

L. C. J. We all know you have been a very active Man, a busy Fellow about the City; as forward a Spark as any I know of a great while. I don't know what you talk of your Quality, but we know your Qualifications; you have always been factious and turbulent against the King and Government.

Mr. Hayes then affirmed, that he neither gave, nor lent, nor returned any Sum of Money to this Person; and then called Mr. Langley, who testified, that a Letter was counterfeited, and a Bill of Exchange for 450 l. and so exactly like, that if he had not known of it before he saw it, he must have owned it for his Hand; and the Party that paid the Money, paid it in his own wrong; for he never drew any such Bill. Mr. Common Serjeant had my Books several Days in his Hands, where there is an Account of 20,000 l. between my Brother and me; and if I would set my Hand to such a Letter and Bill, and write my Name at length, is it not as reasonable that I should put the Name of Laurence in my Books? And if it were there, it would appear.

Indeed here is an Account produced of divers Parcels of Money disbursed in little Sums; but I appeal to the Merchants, whether any Bill of Exchange was ever paid in such Parcels? No foreign Bill was ever paid by 3 l. or 5 l. or 20 l. at a time: it must be paid at the day, or it will be protested. — Here is a Computation of a Sum like to the Sum in the Bill; but these are Suppositions, and not Proof.

Then Mr. Hayes called Alderman Jeffreys, to speak to his Reputation and Conversation; who said, That he had known him many Years, and never knew any hurt of him.

L. C. J. Have you been at any of the Elections at Guild-Hall for Mayors or Sheriffs, when Mr. Bethel, and Mr. Cornish, and them People were chosen; and have you seen Mr. Hayes there, and how he behaved himself? A very forward active Man, I will warrant you.

Alderman Jeffreys. I suppose I may have seen him there, but I cannot say any thing to his Behaviour.

Then Mr. Hayes, called Mr. Pellet, Mr. Lloyd, Mr. Withers senior, Mr. Withers junior, and Mr. Hugh White, who gave a fair Account of his Dealing and Conversation. He then said, that he would trouble the Court with no more Witnesses.

Mr. Attorney-General then said, that he would call one Witness more against him; and ordered Atterbury the Messenger to be sworn, and the Letter was shewed to him.

Atterbury. I apprehended Mr. Hayes, and brought him before the King, and was present when the Letter was shewed to him; and the King and Lord Keeper North pressed him to own whether it was his hand, or no; and he said, he should say nothing to it, if they could prove it upon him, well and good.

Mr. Hayes. His Majesty was not there.

Atterbury. As I remember, the King was there; I imagine the King was there.

L. C. J. I was there, what he says is true; you said, I am not bound to accuse myself; 'tis true, you did deny that you knew Laurence or Armstrong; and 'tis as true, you would not absolutely deny the Letter, but said, you were not bound to accuse yourself.

Mr. Hayes. My Lord, I did hope, that in point of Law, my Counsel should have been heard to those things I mentioned, and I wish you would favour me in it; but that being denied him, he addressed himself to the Jury: Nothing has more troubled me, since my Confinement, than the Imputation of High-Treason, a Thing I always detested; I never knew any, the least thing of the Conspiracy, but by the Trials, or other printed Papers; not one of the Conspirators, who have come in, or been taken, have charged me in the least; nor did he himself accuse me, with whom I am charged to have this Correspondence. Gentlemen, I desire you to consider, that 'tis my Life is concerned, and I beg you would consider what these Witnesses have testified; they are not positive in any respect, nay, there are not two to any one thing that is charged: Constable says, the Letter was found among Sir T. A's Papers; he says no more; and here are not two Witnesses to that: Everis tells you, he saw this Bill, but did not know my Hand; there is no body tells you I wrote this Letter, but it is found in another Man's custody, in another Nation.

Gentlemen, 'tis very hard, that by comparison of hands a Man's Life should be in danger; when, in lesser Crimes, it has been denied to be good Evidence; and none of you can escape the same danger if this be allowed to be Evidence; for your hands may be counterfeited as well as mine.

If there had been any Probability of my knowing him, it had been something; but there is not one that testifies that ever I knew him, nor indeed did I: There is a great deal of Circumstance made use of, upon the account of his Acquaintance with my Brother in Holland; but 'tis strange, there should not be some Evidence of a further Correspondence between him and me, if there were that Intimacy that such a Letter as this doth import.

I must, with Reverence to the Divine Majesty, say, and I call God, Angels, and Men to witness the truth of it, as I shall answer it to him, before whom, for ought I know, I am quickly to appear, that I never in my Life spoke with Sir T. Armstrong, nor was ever in his Company, nor ever wrote to him, by the Name of Laurence, or any other Name; and I do solemnly say in the presence of God, that I never gave, sent, lent, paid, or ordered to be paid, any Money, directly or indirectly to Sir T. A. or H. Laurence, or to him by any other Name, or to his Use; I speak it without any counterfeiting or equivocation.

Gentlemen, there have been Overtures, if I would say some things, that my Life might be saved; and 'tis not to be believed, that I would run the Risque of my Life, if by speaking the Truth I could save it.

The Chief Justice did here appear enraged, and interrupted him, saying, What do you mean by this? — Mr. Hayes. I say —

L. C. J. Ay, but you must say those things that are decent and fit for us to hear; you must not insinuate, as if the Government would make any such Compacts as you talk of.

Mr. Hayes. I say, that Mr. Foster told me —

L. C. J. If you offer that, I can tell you a Story, that perhaps you will be very unwilling to hear; on my word, 'twill be very unpleasant to hear it; you had better let those things alone, for you will but draw a load upon you.

Mr. Hayes. I beseech your Lordship to hear me. —

L. C. J. Yes, I will hear you, provided you keep within due bounds; but we must not suffer these things.

Mr. Hayes. I say nothing but this, it has been told me, that the way to save my Life is to confess.

L. C. J. As you represent it, 'tis a reflection upon the Government — you talk of Overtures having been made you; don't make me say what I have no mind to say.

Mr.

Mr. Hayes. I say, Mr. Forster by Name told me, there was no way for me to escape, but by Confession.

Lord Chief Justice. You had best call Mr. Forster, to know how he came to tell you so; if you do, I will tell you of another thing of * 4 or 5000 l. that was offered for your escape; you had better forbear, or else I shall put you in mind of a Brother of some Body that is at the Bar.

* The Story of the 4 or 5000 l. was this: An eminent Papist, very acceptable to King Charles the second, undertook to some of the Friends of Mr. Hayes, that a Pardon should be had for 4000 Guineas to the King, and 1000 to himself; but he afterwards declared, that the King had refused him therein, and told him, that he was advised, that he had better give that Popish Friend 4000 l. out of the Exchequer, than pardon Hayes; but that he gave his Royal Word, that the Overture should not hurt Mr. Hayes.

Mr. Hayes. My Lord, I was told, that was the way: Gentlemen of the Jury, I have declared to you the whole truth, with all the Solemnity that becomes an innocent Man, and not an ill Man.—Besides, what you have heard, in all this Evidence, is nothing but Circumstance and Hear-say; and shall a Man's Life be taken away, for I believe, and I think, or I have heard?

Gentlemen, I know you are my Fellow-Citizens and Fellow-Christians, and of the same reformed Religion that I am; and I hope you are sworn into this Service without any Prejudice against me, but with an impartial Resolution to do Justice: and therefore I cheerfully leave the matter with you; I am sure, that if God help me, and deliver me in this Exigency, that it is he, and you under him, that preserve my Life.—

Gentlemen, The great Incertainties, Improbabilities, and Consequences in this Case, I hope will be weighed by you, and make you the better to consider the Proof, which is made by none but such as are Strangers to me; since, then, they know me not, I hope you will weigh it; before you give it against me: We must all die, and I am sure it will be no grief to you to acquit a Man that is innocent. I leave it with you; the Lord direct you.

Sir Thomas Jenner, the Recorder. The Treason charged on the Prisoner is of that sort, that if he be guilty, he will be a just example to terrify others from doing the like; for if Traitors had not Persons to supply them with Money abroad, it may be, they would not have so much Courage to run away. We have satisfied you that Sir Thomas Armstrong was indicted; that an Exigent was gone against him upon that Account; here was a Proclamation, and Sir Thomas Armstrong named in it; and so the Recorder repeated the Evidence of the Witnesses, and concluded: Gentlemen, We think that his Defence has been so little, and our Proof so strong, that you have good ground to find him guilty.

The Chief Justice then summed up the matter to the Jury.

Gentlemen of the Jury, This is an Indictment of High-Treason against the Prisoner at the Bar; and you are to try it according to your Evidence. The Prisoner's Affirmation of his Innocence is not to weigh with you. Nay, I must tell you, I cannot but, upon this Occasion, make a little Reflection upon several of the horrid Conspirators, that did not only, with as much Solemnity, imprecate Vengeance upon themselves if they were guilty of any Treason; but thought they did God Almighty good Service in that hellish Conspiracy: It is not unknown, one of the Persons proscribed in this Proclamation did declare, they should be so far from being esteemed Traitors; that they should have Trophies set up for them; and all this under the pretence and enamel of Religion: Nay, I can cite to you an Instance of another of the Conspirators, [Lord Russell] that after a full and evident Proof, and plain Conviction, of having an Hand in it, when he comes upon the Brink of Death, and was to answer for that horrid Fact, before the great God, he blessed Almighty God, that he died by the Hand of the Executioner, with the Ax, and did not die by the Fiery Trial: He blessed God, at the Place of Execution, that he died a Traitor against the King and Government, rather than died a Martyr for his Religion. I think it necessary to make some Reflection upon it; when Men, under the Pretence of Religion, are wound up to that height, to foment Differences, to disturb and distract the Government, to destroy the Foundation of it, to murder his sacred Majesty, and his Royal Brother, and to subvert our Religion, and Liberty, and Property; and all this carried on upon pretence of doing God good Service. You are to go according to Evidence; as the Blood of a Man is precious, so the Government also is a precious thing; the Life of the King is a precious thing, the preservation of our Religion is a precious thing, and therefore due Regard must be had to all of them. I must tell you, in this horrid Conspiracy there were several Persons that bore several Parts; some that were to head and to consult; there was a Council to consider; others were designed to have a hand in the penetrating of that horrid Villainy, that was intended upon the Persons of his Sacred Majesty and his Royal Brother, and with them, upon the Persons of all his Majesty's Loyal Subjects that acted with Duty, as they ought to do; there were others, that were to be aiding and assisting (as in the Case of the Prisoner, if you find him guilty) aiding, abetting, assisting by Money, or otherwise, or harbouring any of those Persons that were concerned therein. Then he recounted the Evidence given against the Prisoner, and made such Remarks upon the same, as he thought fit.

The Jury withdrew, and spent two hours in consideration of the Matter; and then returning, gave their Verdict, that the Prisoner was not guilty.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, tho' they have acquitted him, yet the Evidence is so strong, that I hope your Lordship and the Court will think fit to bind him to his good Behaviour during his Life.

L. C. J. Mr. Attorney, that is not a proper Motion at this time.

So the Prisoner was discharged, after he had been imprisoned five Months.

CXXXII. The Trial between Sir WILLIAM PRITCHARD Plaintiff, and THOMAS PAPILLON, Esq; Defendant, at Nifi Prius at the Guild-hall of London, in an Action upon the Case for a false Arrest, Nov. 6, 1684. Mich. 36 Car. II.

London, ff. SIR William Pritchard, late Lord Mayor of the City of London, having in Easter Term last, brought an Action upon the Case, for falsely, maliciously, and without probable Cause, procuring him to be arrested and imprisoned in his Mayoralty, against Thomas Papillon, Esq; the Defendant pleaded, Not Guilty, and thereupon Issue being joined, it came this Day to be tried before the Lord Chief Justice Jeffereys; and the Jury sworn to try this Cause, were these:

Bartholomew Ferryman,	} Jur.	Joseph Baggs,
Thomas Blackmore,		Daniel Chandler,
Thomas Symonds,		John Reynolds,
William Whatton,		John Allen,
John Green,		Joseph Caine, and
Thomas Amy,		William Withers, jun.

Mr. Munday. May it please your Lordship, and you Gentlemen of this Jury, Sir William Pritchard Knight, late Lord Mayor of the City of London, is Plaintiff, and Thomas Papillon Esq; is the Defendant: And this, Gentlemen, is in a special Action upon the Case, wherein the Plaintiff does declare, That whereas the 12th of February, in the 35th Year of this King, and before and after for several Months then next ensuing, he was Mayor of the City of London, being duly elected and sworn into the Office of Mayoralty of the said City; and according to the Custom of the said City, time out of Mind, he ought daily to attend the said Office, in the diligent Government of the said City, according to the Duty of his said Office, which he was to execute to the Honour and Dignity belonging thereunto: That the Defendant, Thomas Papillon, being one of the Commonalty of the said City, and under the Government of the Plaintiff, by Virtue of his Office aforesaid, not being ignorant of the Premises, but contriving, and falsely and maliciously envying the happy Estate of the Plaintiff in his said Office, as also unjustly to disturb the Plaintiff in the Execution of his said Office, the said 12th Day of February, in the 35th Year aforesaid, the Defendant for Vexation to the Plaintiff, not having any lawful or probable Cause of Action against the Plaintiff, falsely and maliciously did prosecute the King's Writ of Alias Copias out of the Court of King's Bench, against the Plaintiff, by the Name of Sir William Pritchard, Knight, directed to the then Coroner of the City of London; by which Writ it was commanded the said Coroner to take the Plaintiff, if found within the said City, and safely keep him, so as to have his Body before that Court at Westminster, upon Wednesday next after 15 Days of Easter, then next following, to answer the now Defendant in a Plea of Trespas: And that the Defendant of his further Malice against the Plaintiff, afterwards, and before the Return of the Writ, to wit, upon the 24th Day of April, in the 35th Year aforesaid, at London, to wit, in the Parish of St Mildred the Virgin, in the Poultry, in the Ward of Cheap, London, delivered the said Writ of Alias Copias to one John Brome, Gent. then being Coroner of the said City, to be executed; and then and there the Plaintiff, then being Mayor of the said City, by Virtue of that Writ, maliciously and unjustly did procure to be taken, and arrested, and detained in Prison, under the Custody of the said Coroner, for the space of six Hours, to the Disgrace and Scandal of the Plaintiff and his said Office, as also to the manifest Damage, Prejudice, and Grievance of the Plaintiff: Whereas, in Truth and in Fact, the Defendant, at the Time of the taking, arresting, and detaining of the Plaintiff in Prison, as aforesaid, had not any just or probable Cause of Action against the Plaintiff in the Premises, whereby the Plaintiff says he is injured, and for which he lays to his Damage, 10,000 l. To this the Defendant has pleaded, Not Guilty. If we that are of Counsel for the Plaintiff, shall prove this Matter unto you, Gentlemen, that we have laid in the Declaration that has been opened unto you, you are to find for the Plaintiff, and I hope will repair him in Damages for this Affront and Injury.

Mr. Att. Gen. * May it please your Lordship, and * Sir Robert Sawyer. you Gentlemen of the Jury, I am of Counsel in this Case for the Plaintiff; and this Action is brought, Gentlemen, to vindicate the Honour of the Chair from such Affronts as these; which in no Age, till of late Days, our Times of Faction and Confusion, it ever met with: That by a Person that is a Citizen of London, and one of the Commonalty, that ought to have paid Submission to the Lord Mayor as his chief Magistrate, and was bound so to do by his Oath, as a Freeman, should, without cause of Suit, arrest the Lord Mayor of the City. That there was no probable Cause, is evident by his not proceeding in the Action, that he had thus brought. But, Gentlemen, we shall shew you in the Course of our Evidence, that there lay a further Malice in this Case, and that there was a Design in it against against the Government. For we shall give you Evidence, that this Design was laid to carry on the great Plot against the Lives of the King and his Brother, and for the Subversion of the Government. For they contrived it so, that they would imprison the Mayor, and then, thought they, the loyal Citizens will interpose to rescue him, and then the Party should rise to assist the Officer, he having the Countenance of Authority, and being in the Execution of the King's Writ, (especially if it be considered then who was Coroner) and so a public Commotion would be made a general Mutiny, and that would be a fit Opportunity, in the Confusion of the City wanting its Chief Governor, of doing what they designed. Gentlemen, we shall prove all that is laid in the Declaration; and likewise that the End of this Business was to have had a Commotion for the accomplishing their great Conspiracy, as has been opened. That Sir William Pritchard was arrested in his Mayoralty, I suppose will be agreed, or else we shall prove it.

Mr. Ward. Yes, yes, we agree it.

* Mr. Sol. Gen. Then we will go on and prove the Manner of it. Swear Mr. Gorges, and Mr. Keeling. [Which was done.] Mr. Keeling, pray, will you tell my Lord, and the Jury, were you made a special Bailiff to arrest Sir William Pritchard, when he was Lord Mayor, and what did you do upon it? Tell all you know of it, and what was designed by it.

Keeling. My Lord, all that I know of, it is this: It was upon the 24th Day of April, I have the Warrant here to shew, I met with Mr. Goodenough, at Mr. Russel's the Cook, in Ironmonger-lane, and several others were there; and I went away a little while, and came again: While I was gone from them, they put my Name into the Warrant, and upon that Warrant, I did arrest Sir William Pritchard, who was then Lord Mayor, at the Suit of Mr. Thomas Papillon, I suppose this is the Gentleman [Pointing to the Defendant.] I had no Order for it from Mr. Papillon, nor ever spoke with him about it; but I had order from the Coroner, who, upon the arresting him, took my Lord Mayor into his Custody.

Mr. Att. Gen. Where was my Lord Mayor then?

Keeling. At Grocer's-Hall.

Mr. Att. Gen. Was that the Place he kept his Mayoralty in?

Keeling. Yes, it was so.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What was he doing when you arrested him?

Keeling. There was some Disturbance upon it, among the Officers and People there. The Coroner came up to him and said, Sir, I have a Writ against you, I pray you would please to give an Appearance at the Suit of Mr. Thomas Papillon, and another at the Suit of Mr. John Dubois, and some Words there passed between him and the Coroner; and my Lord Mayor refusing to give any Appearance, the Coroner, Mr. Brome, bid us execute our Warrants; upon which I came up to my Lord Mayor, and touched him upon the Shoulder, and said, I arrest you at the Suit of Thomas Papillon, Esq; and one Ferdinando Burley arrested him again, at the Suit of Mr. John Dubois.

Mr. Att. Gen. What did you do with him, when you had arrested him?

Keeling. The Coroner dismissed us, and, as I take it, carried him home to his House.

Mr. Att. Gen. What Instructions had you what to do, in case he made any Resistance, and did not submit to the Arrest?

Keeling. I know of no Instructions about any such thing.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Who was by, pray, when Orders were given you to arrest my Lord Mayor?—Keeling. Both the Goodenoughs.

Mr. Att. Gen. He in the Proclamation, you mean, and his Brother?

Keeling. Yes, Richard and Francis Goodenough.

Mr. Sol. Gen. And who else, pray?

Keeling. Several that I did not know.

Mr. Att. Gen. Can you remember any body besides the Goodenoughs in particular?

Keeling. There was one a Tallow-chandler, and a great many that I did not know.

Mr. Sol. Gen. How many do you think there were? And where was it?

Keeling. I believe there were about thirty or forty, and it was at Russel's the Cook, in Ironmonger-lane.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did they all come along with you to Grocer's-Hall, to arrest my Lord Mayor?—Keeling. No, my Lord, they did not.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did any of them, and which, pray?

Keeling. Sir, I will tell you who did come to my Lord Mayor's. There was the Coroner, Francis Goodenough, Ferdinando Burley, and my self: And after my Lord was arrested, the Coroner bid us be gone, and he would look after my Lord Mayor.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Whither did you go after that?

Keeling. I went to Sir Harry Tulse's directly.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did not you expect an Opposition? And had you not some Discourse what you should do in case there was an Opposition?

Keeling. No, I cannot tell any thing of that.

Mr. Att. Gen. You say, there was a Meeting, or Consult, at Russel's, of forty People; had you not there some Consultation what was to be done, if my Lord Mayor did not obey the Arrest?

Keeling. I do not remember any thing about that, at that time.

Mr. Att. Gen. Was there at any other time before? Or did you hear any of those People discourse the Goodenoughs, or any of them, what they would have done in case they were resisted?

Keeling. I do not remember any Discourse of such thing, before or after.

† L. C. J. Pray, Mr. Keeling, let me ask you a Question or two. Were you ever employed by the Coroner to be a special Bailiff to arrest any Body, before this time you speak of, that you arrested Sir William Pritchard?

Keeling. No, my Lord, I never was.

L. C. J. Then pray recollect yourself, who were at that Meeting, when, as you say, your Name was put into the Warrant for this Arrest?

Keeling. My Lord, when I went away for a little while, I left these Persons particularly that I did name, the two Goodenoughs, and one Burton, I think, and one Crompton, and that Tallow-chandler; there were to the Number of thirty or forty, that I did not know their Names.

VOL. III.

L. C. J. But pray, how came you to be employed in this Service then? Were you a Tradesman in Town then?

Keeling. Yes, at Wapping.

L. C. J. Good now, how came you to be employed in arresting my Lord Mayor, more than any other of those thirty or forty that you say were there then?

Keeling. I went there among them, but did not know then that I should be concerned in this Business; and I went away a little while, and when I came back they told me, that my Name was put into the Warrant.

L. C. J. Pray, tell us the whole Story, how you that were a Tradesman at Wapping, should come to be employed as a Bailiff to the Coroner of London, to arrest my Lord Mayor? There must be some particular End in it.

Mr. Att. Gen. Mr. Keeling, tell the Court and the Jury the whole Story, and what it was that brought you into this.

Keeling. My Lord, Mr. Goodenough told me I must be concerned.

L. C. J. Ay, prithee tell us what Goodenough desired you to be concerned in.

Keeling. Upon my coming back to the Company that was at Russel's, Mr. Richard Goodenough told me I must be concerned in the Business of arresting my then Lord Mayor, Sir William Pritchard: Said I to him, Mr. Goodenough, this is foreign and remote to my Business, to be concerned in such a Matter as this, it will seem very strange for me to do it. He pressed it upon me to do it, and says he, If you will not do it, you will be a Man looked ill upon, and it will be taken strangely from that Party; he meant, I suppose, the discontented Party, the Faction, or what you please to call it, that were not contented with the Administration of the Government in the City at that time; and he urged it upon me with a great many Arguments. I opposed it with much Vigour a good while, but at last he prevailed upon me to go along with the Coroner; and Frank Goodenough, his Brother, said he would go with me, and he did so; and we came and arrested my Lord Mayor, as I told you before.

L. C. J. Where did Mr. Goodenough press you to be concerned in this Business, as you say?

Keeling. At Mr. Russel's a Cook, in Ironmonger-lane.

L. C. J. How came you thither?

Keeling. He sent me a Letter to meet him there. He was at me before to be concerned in it, but I did not comply with him in it. Mr. Richard Goodenough it was, and Mr. Althurst, I think it was Alderman Cornish's Son-in-law, was by.

L. C. J. Was Nelthorp there?

Keeling. No, my Lord, he was not there; but they did not proceed then, because my Lord and his Brethren were gone out of Town, to wait upon the King, I think; and this was six Weeks or two Months before this Meeting at Russel's.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray, Mr. Keeling, recollect yourself. Had you any Discourse with Goodenough, or any body else, what the Consequence of such an Arrest would be?

Keeling. They told me, my Lord Mayor, and Court of Aldermen, had made an ill Return to the Mandamus that were served upon them, for the swearing of Mr. Papillon and Mr. Dubois Sheriffs, and therefore Mr. Papillon and Mr. Dubois had good Cause of Action against them; and Goodenough said, he had order from them to arrest my Lord Mayor upon an Action, and desired me to be concerned.

Mr. Sol. Gen. But pray, remember what you said before, Mr. Keeling, why should the discontented Party, as you call them, be concerned, and be angry with you, if you did not arrest my Lord Mayor?

Keeling. The particular Argument that he used with me to persuade me to it, was this, That I having a Trade and Dealing among that Sort of People, they would think ill of me if I did not do it.

Mr. Sol. Gen. But why should the Party be angry with you, if you were not a Bailiff to arrest my Lord Mayor, at the Suit of Mr. Papillon?

Keeling. I did not know the Reason of their Anger, he might have something in his Head that he did not reveal to me. But that was the Argument he used, The Party would think ill of me.

Mr. Serj. Maynard. If you have done with this Witness, I would ask him a Question. You say, Sir, that Goodenough told you, the discontented Party would be angry with you if you did not do it. Upon your Oath, was the discontented Party named?

Keeling. No, Sir, but that Party of which Mr. Goodenough and I then was; and they were the discontented Party, I think; for they were so discontented, that they would have killed the King and the Duke.

Mr. Att. Gen. That is an Answer, I hope, to your Question, Mr. Serjeant.

L. C. J. I think, when he names the Goodenoughs to be of the Party, no body questions but they were discontented.

Mr. Sol. Gen. He has explained well enough, sure, what he meant by the discontented Party, those that were so discontented, that they would have killed the King and the Duke. Those were the Promoters of this Action, and Mr. Keeling must engage in it, or they would be displeased. Now, my Lord, we shall call Sir Harry Tulse and Sir Robert Jefferies, to shew what the Coroner did.

Keeling. I arrested Sir Harry Tulse afterwards.

Then Sir Harry Tulse was called.

Mr. Ward. My Lord, we desire Sir Harry Tulse may not be sworn, we have an Exception to his Testimony.

L. C. J. What is your Objection?

Mr. Ward. We are informed, he and the rest of the Court of Aldermen have joined their Purposes to carry on this Suit, and then, with Submission, he is not a good Witness.

L. C. J. Ask him that Question upon a Voyer dire.

Then he was sworn upon a Voyer dire.

Mr. Williams. Pray, Sir, is there any Order of the Court of Aldermen to lay out Money for this Cause, out of their Joint Purposes, or the Publick City Stock?

Sir Harry Tulse. Not that we know of.

Mr. Williams. Pray, Sir, do you know whether Sir William Pritchard laid out Money in it, or who else doth?

Sir Harry Tulse. I cannot give a positive Answer to that, who layeth out money upon it, nor do I know of any such order as you speak of.

Mr. Ward. Sir Harry Tulse, though you know of no such formal Order of the Court of Aldermen, yet is there not some Direction by the Court of Aldermen about expending Monies in a joint way?

Sir Harry Tulse. I assure you, Sir, I know nothing of it.

L. C. J. Come, he has given a full answer to your Question, swear him.

[Which was done.]

Mr. Holt. Sir Harry Tulse, now you are sworn, pray, will you give an Account of what happened about this Matter, within your knowledge? Pray, tell the whole Story.

Sir Harry Tulse. My Lord, about four of the Clock in the Afternoon, this Gentleman, and two more, came to me to my own House, and he did arrest me (I mean, Mr. Keeling, that was sworn here before me) at the Suit of Mr. Papillon; and another of them did arrest me at the Suit of Mr. Dubois: Said I to them, I do not know that I owe them, or either of them, a Farthing. But what must I do? He told me, it was only to give an Appearance. Said I, Gentlemen, I shall consider of that. Then, says he, you must go to my Lord Mayor. Why, where is he, said I? Said he, He is in the Custody of the Coroner, at his House. Where, said I? He is gone to Skinner's-Hall, said he. This is well, said I. So I called for my Man to bring my Cloke. Then they told me, if I pleased, they would take my Word 'till to-morrow Morning, if I would promise to appear. I told them, they might do as they pleased. So they left me; and I went first to my Lord Mayor's House, but found him not there; so I went down to Skinner's-Hall, and there I found my Lord Mayor all alone, and no Alderman, only the Officers. I asked his Lordship how he came there? He told me, he was arrested by the Coroner. I asked him how long he had been detained? And he said, But a little time: And indeed I think it could not be long, for I met his Coach coming back from Skinner's-Hall when I went. After that, he was detained there 'till about Eleven of the Clock or thereabouts. This is all that I know of it.

L. C. J. What became of the Government of the City all that time?

Sir Harry Tulse. There was presently a great Noise all about the City concerning my Lord Mayor's being arrested, and abundance of People were gathered together about the Door, but there came a Company of Soldiers of the Trained Bands, and they kept all quiet. There were great apprehensions of an Uproar. I saw nothing of hurt done, though. And I asked Mr. Brome, the Coroner, who was by, Am I a Prisoner too? For I was arrested to-day, by a Warrant pretended to be from you. Says he, I have a Writ against you, and now you are here, I cannot let you go, 'till you have given an Appearance. So I took myself to be detained there with my Lord Mayor in Custody, and staid as long as he staid, and went away with him.

† Sir Thomas Jenner. † Mr. Recorder. Swear Mr. Wells, the Common Crier, and Sir John Peak.

Mr. Wells was sworn.

Mr. Recorder. Mr. Common Crier, were you at my Lord Mayor's House when this Hubbub was made? Pray tell my Lord and the Jury what you know of it.

Mr. Wells. Yes, I was there.

Mr. Holt. Then tell what past.

Mr. Wells. I was not in the Hall where my Lord Mayor was, but in another Room by: And the Officers came running in to me, and told me, I must come to my Lord Mayor quickly, for he was arrested by some People. When I came, I found there were none of the Sheriffs Officers that used to arrest People, but the Room was full of other Persons. My Lord Mayor bid me take the Sword, and go along with him, for the Sword-bearer was not then just at hand. I asked his Lordship whither he was going? The Coroner said, he was his Prisoner, and must go along with him to his House. My Lord Mayor bid me presently send out the Officers to summon a Lieutenantcy, which I did. I desired the Coroner and his Men to be gone; said I, Cannot you let my Lord alone, and go about your Business? No, he said, except my Lord would give an Appearance, he must go along with him. I then asked him whither my Lord must go? He said, he had no Place but his own House to carry him to, and thither we went; where when we came, my Lord was put into a little Room by himself, where were none but myself and the Coroner, as I remember. My Lord Mayor bid me go and see for Sir James Edwards and Sir Harry Tulse, and my Lord Mayor that now is, and so I went; but I found they were arrested too before I came.

L. C. J. How did my Lord go away from thence?

Mr. Wells. In his Coach.

Mr. Att. Gen. Were you by when he went away? And who was there?

Mr. Wells. Mr. Brome, the Coroner, was not there when my Lord Mayor went away, but there was Goodenough.

L. C. J. Ay, he was in trusty Hands, upon my Word.

Mr. Att. Gen. The Soldiers prevented the Design, and so they let him go again.

Mr. Recorder. Swear Sir John Peak.

[Which was done.]

Sir John Peak. My Lord, I had order from the Lieutenantcy, to raise my Regiment upon the News of my Lord Mayor's being arrested, which I did in a very little time, and came with my Soldiers to Skinner's-Hall, where I heard my Lord Mayor was, and prevented any Stir, as it was feared there would have been. But Mr. Keeling, I believe, can tell something more of the Design than he has spoken, for I remember at the Trial of the Traitors at the Old Baily, he did say, That after my Lord Mayor was arrested, they did intend something, but their Hearts misgave them when the Regiment was up.

L. C. J. That is nothing to this Cause what he said there; now he remembers nothing of it. Have you done, Gentlemen, or will you call any more Witnesses?

Mr. Att. Gen. We rest it here, my Lord, 'till we hear what they say to it.

L. C. J. Come then, what have you to say that are for the Defendant?

Mr. Serj. Maynard. May it please your Lordship, and you Gentlemen of the Jury, I am of Counsel in this Case with the Defendant, Mr.

Papillon. I see, Gentlemen, it is a Cause of great Expectation, and by that means they would make it greater by far, than indeed it is in itself. But I suppose, you who are upon your Oaths to try this Issue, will duly weigh and consider what it really is. Gentlemen, the record tells you what it is, an Action upon the Case, wherein the Plaintiff declares, that the Defendant did arrest him, being then Lord Mayor, without any probable Cause, and out of Malice. Now as to that, Gentlemen, I conceive and think, I may appeal to my Lord Chief Justice in it, for Direction in Point of Law, that my Lord Mayor, if he do mistake in his Office, and do not do that which belongs to him to do, he is as much subject to the Process of Law and Actions, as any private Person in the City of London. If he does any Man an Injury, or does that which is not right in his Office, by which another Person is grieved, he is liable to the Prosecution of any particular Subject the King has, that is so grieved by him. Then they alledge, that this particular Action and Arrest thereupon was prosecuted and done out of Malice, and without probable Cause. Now what have they proved of that? They prove the Thing done, that he was arrested at the Defendant's Suit, and that he was kept in Custody six Hours. But if we can give you any Account of a probable Cause for it, that is sufficient to justify us from this Action. Gentlemen, the Question that you are to try is not, Whether this Man or that Man were duly chosen into such an Office; but whether there were any probable Cause for the Defendant to contest about the Choice? And herein the Case will fall out to be thus: There was a difference in the City of London, as is very well known to every body, about the Choice of Sheriffs for the City, wherein the Defendant was one of the Competitors; there were, upon the Nomination and Election in the Hall, a great many more voices or suffrages for one than for the other, which was certified to the Court of Aldermen and Lord Mayor, as is usual; but some Contest being, a Poll was demanded and granted, and upon that Poll, my Lord Mayor was pleased to declare the Election on one Side against Mr. Papillon, who yet was apprehended, by the first Choice, to be one that had most suffrages. But several meetings there were, and several Common Halls assembled, so that it was a contested Matter, and, as I said, there had been a Report made on the Defendant's behalf. We insist not upon the Right of Election; that has been otherwise determined. But when he is put in Nomination by the Electors in the City, and has many suffrages, and he conceives himself rightly chosen, and they that are the Managers of the Election give such an Account that in their Judgment he was chosen, that surely was a probable Cause for him to proceed upon it. And if there be but a probable Cause to bring this to a question, no doubt he might very well take the course the Defendant took. Here is no Arrest without legal Process; nay their own Witnesses say, there was an Offer to take an Appearance without putting it on so far as an Arrest: If my Lord Mayor would have but given an Appearance, there had been an end, but he did not think fit to do that, and so the Process of Law was executed upon him. Then here is the Case in short: A Man thinks himself rightly and duly chosen into an Office, and has probable reason so to think, for the Judges of the Election think so too, and deliver that as their Opinion; so that though he is mistaken, as the Event proves, yet he is not alone in his Mistake, nor without ground of his Apprehension: then if it be (under favour) such a Man has no other Proceedings to take in the World for settling this Matter, but to appeal to your Lordship, and that great Court where your Lordship sits, to have a Writ to command the Mayor, or other proper Officer to swear such a Man into the Office, or shew good Cause why he doth not. If the Mayor, upon the Receipt of the Writ, thinks fit to obey it, and swears the Man, all is well: If not, he must make a Return of the Writ, with the Cause why the Command of the Writ is not obeyed. Now the Suggestion of the Writ is, that he was duly chosen into such an Office, and therefore he had a fair way to put this Matter to an end; if he would have returned he was chosen, or not chosen, there had been an end of the business, which he ought (under favour) to have done in Obedience to the King's Writ. What then follows upon his not doing so? The Party that is grieved hereby, has no other Course to take, but to bring his Action against the Mayor for it. This Course the Defendant took, by taking out a Writ against the Plaintiff: And what was the Effect of that Writ? It is indeed charged here by the Counsel on the other Side, That there was a Design of a discontented Party in it, and I know not what, and a great deal of Stir made, that a Coroner of the City of London should arrest my Lord Mayor. It may be it was not so reverently done, but yet if he thought he had good Cause of Action against him, he might do it lawfully. Doth this prove to you, that this was maliciously and unreasonably done? Malice must be to the Person; Zeal and Earnestness to have Right done to a Man's self or another, in a legal Course of Justice, is not Malice, nor will make the Prosecution of the Action unreasonable and groundless. Have they proved to you, Gentlemen, any particular Discontent and Malice that is between the Plaintiff and Defendant? No truly, I think, by all the Proof that has been offered, the quite contrary does appear. The Defendant took out a Mandamus, directed to the Plaintiff, which was not duly returned: What then doth he do next? Doth he most violently arrest him? That, with Submission, he might do, and no Offence in Law: No, but he doth not do it, but only desired from time to time, as we shall prove anon, that he would but give an Appearance, that would have put a Conclusion to this Dispute. There is no Appearance given: Whereupon he is arrested, and detained in Custody six Hours. If a Man be once in the Officer's Hands taken upon legal Process, how long soever the Officer keeps him, is not at all to be laid upon the Person that brings the Suit; that is to be looked after by the Officer himself. Whatsoever was the Usage in that Matter, we are not to answer for (though it is plain an Appearance would have done all presently), we shall prove we gave order to use all Deference and Respect in the World. And besides (though I would not speak it to invalidate any of the Evidence given about the Right of Election one way or other, yet) there being a Return of the Defendant's Election by the Sheriffs to the Court of Aldermen; but they being of another Opinion, gave Order, that those that thought themselves aggrieved should take their Remedy at Law: Which Order we have pursued in that regular Course that the Law has prescribed. And I hope it will never come to that, that a Man (though mistaken) conceiving himself to have a Right of Action, and suing out the King's Writ, shall suffer for so doing, unless particular Malice Malice be made to appear. Here is a great Noise of Damage, and Disrepute, and Disgrace to the Plaintiff and his Office, and he has been pleased to reckon his own Damages at 10,000*l*. We say he has sustained no Damage by any thing we have done, but we are quite not guilty of this unreasonable and malicious Prosecution laid to our Charge. And that we are not guilty, the Matter that has been opened, we think, will sufficiently declare. For if there was a Contest about the Election, and the Sheriffs returned it as their Opinion that the Defendant was chosen, though they and he too were mistaken, yet that might give a probable Ground for his pursuing the Course he did take, and the very Court of Aldermen, and the Lord Mayor, bidding them take their Course at Law, we sure shall not be punished for it. We did not prosecute our Question in any malicious way, but in that Course that the Law allows, by taking out the King's Writ, and we hope the Law will protect us for it.

Mr. Williams. Will your Lordship be pleased to spare me a Word on the same side with Mr. Serjeant Maynard. I am of Counsel, Gentlemen, with Mr. Papillon, the Defendant, in this Action. We do not insist upon it, nor now offer any thing to assert our Election: We did apprehend we were elected, but that is ruled against us, and we rested satisfied with it. But we come here now before you upon this Question: Whether we had any probable Cause of Action, upon which we might take out this Process mentioned in the Declaration, which is a Capias upon a Latitat? And we do insist upon it, that this Action of the Plaintiff's must fall upon the Issue joined, if we can satisfy you, and shew that it was not malicious, and without probable Cause. And tho' our Cause of Action against the Plaintiff falls out in the Event not to be a good and sufficient Cause, yet if it were probable, it will evade this Action, and that is all we labour for. They do not attempt to prove, at least-wise I have not heard any thing of it, that there was any express Malice, any thing either said or done by the Defendant, more than the causing him to be arrested upon this Writ. It is very well known, it was in the City of London a very much controverted Question, Whether Mr. Papillon and Mr. Dubois, or Sir Dudley North and Mr. Rich, were chosen Sheriffs of London? I would not run over the History of it, it is but too well known and remembered, the Divisions that were in the City about it. Some were so much dissatisfied with the swearing Sir Dudley North and Mr. Rich, Sheriffs, as thinking them not duly elected, that they would have the Court of King's-Bench moved, for the Writ of Mandamus to swear Mr. Papillon and Mr. Dubois. This Mandamus was moved for, and granted; and to this Writ the Mayor and Aldermen, to whom it was directed, made a Return that we were not elected Sheriffs of London, which Return was apprehended to be false; and really to try the truth of this Return, was the Action brought against the Plaintiff. A Man that is injured by a False Return, hath indeed no other way to right himself, but by bringing an Action against them that made it. Upon this Action brought, I hope you are satisfied, Gentlemen, from the Evidence that has been already given, the Defendant proceeded regularly and orderly, in a decent manner applying himself to get an Appearance to his Action. And we shall prove he did so: For, first, he took out a Latitat against my Lord Mayor, and by the Attorney gave him notice of it, and desired an Appearance; so that the Question in dispute might come to some Determination. But he was not pleased to give us an Appearance to that Writ, so we took out a Capias, gave him notice of it, and desired an Appearance, but could have no Appearance; whereupon we took out an Alias Capias, which is the Writ mentioned in the Declaration: And the Coroner, who has been named, was then told, he should be called upon to make some Return to his Writ; which he acquainted my Lord Mayor with, and desired him to give an Appearance, which he refused to do; the Officer was constrained to arrest him, to execute the King's Writ, and you hear how he treated him with all due respect, and carried him to his own House, where he staid some Hours, and then went away. All this time were we satisfied with what was done, we expected no more than an Appearance, which at last was given. Upon that Appearance we did declare, in the Beginning of Hilary or Easter Term (83): But it fell out, that in Easter Term (83) there was an Information for a Riot upon Midsummer-day before, about this contested Election, came to be tried. And that coming to trial, 10 Maii, and being found to be a Riot, and the Sheriffs sworn to be duly elected, thereupon we were abundantly satisfied that we were mistaken, and under misapprehensions, and that our Cause of Action would not hold, and we did discontinue it. Indeed, if we had prosecuted our Action after that, it would have been more like an angry and a silly Prosecution, and the whole have had a worse Construction, than the thing in itself would bear. But when we found the Opinion of the Court to be against us about our Election, we immediately discontinued our Action. Gentlemen, we shall prove these to have been our Proceedings, and that, I hope, will satisfy you, we are not guilty, according as we have pleaded.

Mr. Ward. May it please your Lordship, and you, Gentlemen of the Jury, I am of Counsel on the same side, for the Defendant, and desire to be heard one Word, as to some Things that have been said on the other side on this Cause. There have been some Questions asked, that do very much reflect upon the Defendant, and which I would take out of this Cause. I shall take notice, first, what the Questions were, and then give them that Regard and Answer which they deserve. That which is urged, Gentlemen, by way of Crimination, in this Case, against the Defendant, and an unjust as well as foreign Reflection, not at all concerning the Cause, is, as if the Defendant were acquainted with the Insurrection and Conspiracy that was intended against the King's Life, and for subversion of the Government, and procured the Plaintiff, then Lord Mayor, to be arrested, to further and promote that Insurrection. But as that was insinuated only for Reflection's sake, so I hope you, Gentlemen, will be pleased to take notice, that not one Word of any such thing is proved at all, that the Defendant ever knew of any intended Insurrection, nor that this was done with any such Design: For even their first Witnesses, Keeling, from whose being employed by the Coroner in the Execution of the Writ upon Sir William Pritchard, the Plaintiff, they would argue that somewhat else was designed in it, doth give a positive Denial of any such thing now upon his Testimony here. And Mr. Papillon the Defendant never knew him in his Life, nor employed him in this Business, nor ordered that he should be employed in it, nor ever saw him; but the Coroner gave him his Warrant to execute. If, therefore, Keeling and Good-enough were concerned in any ill Business, and have taken upon them to do that which they ought not to have done, that doth not signify any thing in this Case, nor ought to turn to the Defendant's Prejudice. Nor, if any thing were done by the Officers, that were to execute this Process, that were a Misfeasance, or a Male-execution of their Office, that ought not to be imputed as a Fault in the Defendant. But for this Matter now before you, the Case will depend upon this Point chiefly, Whether the now Defendant had a reasonable Cause, or probable Ground, to bring an Action against the Plaintiff at the time when it was brought, and this Arrest made? For there is many a Man, that at the Commencement of his Action, doth conceive in himself, he had a good probable Cause of Action against another Man, that in the Event of Things finds he was mistaken, and hath no such Cause; and thereupon desists the Prosecution of it. Therefore the Probability of the Cause, at the time when this Fact was done, is the Question you now are to try. For we are not now considering, whether that probable Cause did continue and prove a good Cause; the event of this Matter has proved it quite otherwise. Indeed the original Question of this whole Cause was, Who were only elected Sheriffs? And that at the time of such Election made, a great Number of Votes passed for the Defendant, is, I think, very notorious, both upon the lifting up of Hands, and upon the Poll. These things we shall offer to you, and shall make it out that these gave occasion to the Defendant to contest the Election, and consequently to the bringing of the Action that the Plaintiff was thus arrested upon. If then there were such things as these that we have opened, which gave a colour to controvert the Right, and the Defendant pursued the Method prescribed by the Law to bring it to a Determination, and there was no particular Disrespect or Incivility offered to my Lord Mayor, then sure there was no reason to bring this Action against us. And that there was no indecent Behaviour used towards the Plaintiff, doth appear from the Evidence that hath been given of the whole Transaction. All that was desired of my Lord Mayor was but an Appearance. For this was indeed an Action that did not require Bail, but an Appearance; tho', I must needs say, I never knew any one so averse to give an Appearance to an Action as the Plaintiff was; for after a Latitat and Capias taken out, and being frequently acquainted with it, and at length, upon application after the taking out of the Alias Capias, and many Attendances, with all the Deference and Respect imaginable, both to his Person and Office, not so much as a bare Appearance could be obtained. Upon the opening of the Declaration and the Cause, you have been told of the great Dangers that were in the Case, as to the Infringement of Publick Peace, and the Government, which has been very much aggravated on the other Side. But had the reasonable Request of the Defendant by his Attorney, or the Officer, so often repeated, been but complied with, it had been but sending to any Attorney, and ordering an Appearance, and then, I hope, the Peace of the Kingdom had been in no Peril from such a Design as this Arrest. Which I would not have mentioned, nor should have taken to be at all concerned in the Issue now before you to be tried, but that I find them to be taken into the question, when I hope you will consider they are no way material to the Point in Controversy. Now, Gentlemen, in our Defence against this Suit of the Plaintiff's, we shall call our Witnesses to prove what we have opened. And our Defence will be in these Steps: First, To shew the Inducement to our Action against the Plaintiff: which will shew there was a probable Cause. Secondly, Give an account of the reverent Carriage and Behaviour towards the Plaintiff in the Prosecution; how with reiterated Applications it was only desired that the Plaintiff would give an Appearance, which he was not pleased to do; and that thereupon, with great Civility, the King's Writ was executed, as indeed I see no Proof to the contrary. For neither the Coroner, nor those other People that gave their Assistance to him, were at all rude in their Carriage to my Lord Mayor; but as soon as the Arrest was made, they were all turned off, and the Coroner staid alone with my Lord, and went with him in his Lordship's own Coach to the Skinner's-Hall, which was the Coroner's House. Neither was there any thing ill done, after all this was past: For, upon the Plaintiff's Appearance, the now Defendant declared in his Action, and intended to pursue it; but it happened that afterwards, in a short time, these things suffered some Debate, in a Trial that was here about a Riot at this Election, where the Question of the Right and Election was determined on the other side, which gave the Plaintiff in that Action, the Defendant in this, satisfaction that he was in a Mistake; and so he thought fit to discontinue that Action, and proceeded no further—

L. C. J. No, Mr. Ward, that was not the Question determined then.

Mr. Ward. My Lord, I humbly conceive the Issue of that Cause did determine that Question-----

L. C. J. No, no, I tell you it was not the Question.

Mr. Ward. I must submit it to your Lordship-----

L. C. J. I perceive you do not understand the Question that was then, nor the Question that is now. You have made a long Speech here, and nothing at all to the purpose: you do not understand what you are about, I tell you it was no such Question.

Mr. Ward. My Lord, I was only giving an account of what we should prove as to the Fairness of our Proceedings-----

L. C. J. But I must interrupt you, and tell you, all you have said signifies nothing. And as to what you mention of the Trial for the Riot, I say, if there be any Election to an Office at any time, that is controverted or doubtful, you have Forms and Methods of Law to determine the Controversy-----

Mr. Ward. And we say, with Submission, my Lord, we have only pursued such Form and Method.

L. C. J. You are not to try Rights by Club-Law, by Riots, by Noise, and by Tumults. Therefore, you are mistaken, to say, that was the Question upon the Trial of the Riot. No, it was not the Question, but the Defendants there were tried for a notorious Offence, and disorderly tumultuous Assembly, an Assembly that had like to have set us together by the Ears. Therefore you must not talk after that rate. If you will speak, apply to the Business in hand. Do not make such Excursions, ad captandum Populum, with your Flourishes; for that is all that is designed by your long Harangues. But I must not suffer it. I will none of your Enamel, nor your Garniture. The Business

Business of the Court, is, and by the Grace of God, it shall always be my Business, and so it should be the Counsel's too, Servare jus illisum. But I see you do not understand the Question, and that makes you ramble so much in your Discourse.

Mr. Ward. My Lord, I desire always to do my Duty; and do it as well as I can. I know very well, and hope to apply it to this Case, that in a Question of Right there are Forms and Methods of Law to be pursued, and I would defend my Client from this Action, by proving he did pursue that Method; and when he apprehended he had been before mistaken, he desisted from what he had begun---

L. C. J. I tell you, I perceive you do not understand the Question.

Mr. Ward. If your Lordship will give me leave to explain myself, I hope I shall satisfy your Lordship.

L. C. J. Indeed, Mr. Ward, you do not understand the Question at all, but launch out into an Ocean of Discourse, that is wholly wide from the Mark. I see you do not understand it.

Mr. Ward. Will your Lordship please to hear me---

L. C. J. Ay, if you would speak to the purpose; but I cannot sit here all Night to hear you make florid Speeches about Matters that are foreign to the Point before us. Come to the Question, Man; I see you do not understand what you are about.

Mr. Ward. My Lord----

L. C. J. Nay, be as angry as you will, Mr. Ward, I do tell you again, All you have said is nothing to the purpose, and you do not understand the Business.

Then there was a little Hiss begun.

L. C. J. Who is that? What in the Name of God! I hope we are now past that time of day, that Humming and Hissing shall be used in Courts of Justice; but I would fain know that Fellow that dare to hum or hiss while I sit here; I'll assure him, be he who he will, I'll lay him by the Heels, and make an Example of him. Indeed, I knew the time when Causes were to be carried according as the Mobile hiss'd or humm'd; and I do not question but they have as good a Will to it now. Come, Mr. Ward, pray, let us have none of your Frangancies, and fine Rhetorical Flowers, to take the People with.

Mr. Ward. My Lord, I do not do any such thing; but if your Lordship would please to hear me, I would explain myself, I hope to your Lordship's Satisfaction, and the Satisfaction of the Gentlemen of the Jury.

L. C. J. Hear you? Why, I did not interrupt you, Man, till you came to launch out into extravagant things that did not at all concern the Cause. Keep close to the Question we come here to try, and I will hear you as long as you will. The single Question is here, Whether there were a probable Cause for your arresting the Plaintiff, or not?

Mr. Ward. My Lord, we did apprehend, I say, that we had a probable Cause; but when we found our Mistake, we discontinued our Action, paid Costs, and have a Receipt for them. This was it I was saying---

L. C. J. Say what you can, in God's Name, that will conduce to the Point in hand; but do not make the People believe as tho' the Right of Sheriffs, or not Sheriffs, were determined upon the Trial of a Riot.

Mr. Serj. Maynard. There are these things that are proper to be considered in this Question: Whether the Cause were probable, or not probable? And if not probable, whether malicious, or not?

L. C. J. True, Brother: If People will but understand their Business, it is reduced to a narrow Compass; but if they will not understand what it is they come about, they will ramble from the Point, and who can help it? But we must keep to what is before us.

Mr. Williams. We shall make it out, that nothing was done but very civilly.

L. C. J. You must make it out, that nothing was done but what you had probable Cause at least for.

Mr. Williams. We will, my Lord, apply ourselves to that which your Lordship directs. Call Mr. Brome, Mr. Courthope, and Mr. Cornish.

Mr. Brome sworn.

Mr. Ward. Mr. Brome, are you sworn?—Mr. Brome. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Ward. Have you the Writs here? The Latitat and the Capias?

Mr. Brome. Truly, Sir, I have not; I did not bring them with me, they are at home at my House; if you please, I will fetch them.

Mr. Ward. Pray, can you tell, Sir, when the first Writ was returnable?

Mr. Brome. In Hilary Term.

Mr. Ward. When you had that Writ brought to you, Sir, what did you say to my Lord Mayor about it?

Mr. Brome. I went to my Lord Mayor with Mr. Goodenough, and desired my Lord that he would appear to it, as Mr. Goodenough told me he had desired of him himself before. But he said he would give no Appearance. If I would take him upon the Writ, I might do as I pleased, and he would consider, and do as he should think fit; but he would not give any Appearance. I told him, I had Writs against several of the Aldermen upon the same account, and that I would wait upon them also; and I did so, and desired them to appear, and offered to take an Appearance from them, and gave my Lord Mayor and them time to consider of it, and came again; but they told me, they had considered of it, and would give no Appearance.

Mr. Williams. When was this, Sir?

Mr. Brome. In the beginning of Hilary Term, to the best of my remembrance.

Mr. Brome. What time did you give my Lord Mayor to consider of it?

Mr. Williams. About a Week, or some nine or ten Days time, as I remember.

Mr. Ward. Where was it that you had that Answer, that he had considered of it, and would give no Appearance?

Mr. Brome. It was at the Court of Aldermen.

Mr. Williams. Were the Writs brought again to you?

Mr. Brome. There was not time to make a Return then, and so they let all alone till a little before the beginning of Easter Term, and then one Day Mr. Goodenough, the Attorney, brought me the Writs again, and threatened to complain to the Court of me, and acquaint them, that I had neglected the Execution of the King's Writs, two of them.

Mr. Ward. Upon your Oath, Sir, did he threaten you, that if you did not make a Return of the Writ, he would complain?

Mr. Brome. He said I had exposed him to the Complaint of his Client; and if I did not do it, he would complain to the Court of me: If I would make a Return, as I ought to do, well and good, if not---

Mr. Williams. If not, what then? Did he use any other threatenings, pray, Sir, but that he would complain to the Court?

Mr. Brome. He did threaten to complain of me.

Mr. Att. Gen. You say, Sir, he threatened you; what Answer did you make to him?

Mr. Brome. I did not use to execute Writs myself, I told him: Thereupon he did propose two Persons to me, Mr. Keeling, and one Mr. Burleigh, for he told me the Sheriffs Officers would not do it.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray, Sir, did you endeavour to get any of the Sheriffs Officers to do it?

Mr. Brome. He told me he could not get any of them to do it.

Mr. Ward. Mr. Brome, what did you do after he had proposed those two Persons to you?

Mr. Brome. After I had given those Warrants to the Officers he had named, I told him, I was willing to go once more to my Lord Mayor, to see if I could get an Appearance of him without arresting him; so I waited on him at his House at Grocer's-Hall, but found him then at Dinner; so I went away, and came again about four o'Clock, and I first spoke to Mr. Gibson, and intreated him to let my Lord Mayor know, that I desired to speak with his Lordship at his leisure: Afterwards, when I came up to my Lord Mayor, he asked me, what was my Business? I told him the Writs were renewed, at the Suit of Mr. Papillon and Mr. Dubois, and I was pressed to make a Return; and I desired his Lordship that he would be pleased to give an Appearance. He told me he was ready to submit to the KING's Writ, but would not give an Appearance; thereupon the Officers named in the Warrant by my Command did arrest him.

Mr. Ward. How often did you wait upon my Lord Mayor for an Appearance upon both the Writs, before he was arrested?

Mr. Brome. Several times; I cannot exactly tell how often.

Mr. Williams. Had you Directions, if he would please to give an Appearance, to take an Appearance, and not to arrest him?

Mr. Brome. I had Directions to take an Appearance, if he would give it.

Mr. Att. Gen. From whom had you that Direction, Mr. Brome?

Mr. Brome. From the Attorney Goodenough.

L. C. J. Now, Mr. Brome, let me ask you a Question or two: How long had you been Coroner before?

Mr. Brome. About two Years before, or thereabouts.

L. C. J. Had you ever made any Warrants upon Writs of Capias before?

Mr. Brome. Yes, my Lord, several.

L. C. J. Who did you use to make your Warrants to, to be executed?

Mr. Brome. I never keep my Warrants; they that execute them have them.

L. C. J. But answer me, To whom did you make them?

Mr. Brome. To one of the Sheriffs Officers commonly.

L. C. J. Then I ask you, upon your Oath, did you before this Time ever make any Warrants to any other Person, till such time as you made these Warrants to arrest Sir William Pritchard?

Mr. Brome. I have made several to the Sheriffs Officers, that I cannot remember now particularly.

L. C. J. But mind my Question, Man, and answer me directly; for I expect you should answer me positively to it. Have you ever at any time made any Warrants to any other but the Sheriffs Officers till this time?

Mr. Brome. I cannot remember that I have.

L. C. J. How then came you at Russell's House to discourse with Mr. Goodenough about who would be fit to execute the Writ, when you used to employ the Sheriffs Officers, and there were so many of them?

Mr. Brome. He told me he could get no one of them to execute it.

L. C. J. But there must be something more in it than ordinary, that you and Goodenough, and all those other People, should come to meet about such a thing as this, to discourse and consider who should be fit to be put into a Warrant to make an Arrest upon a Capias, when before that time you used to make it to those that are versed in those Matters.

Mr. Brome. When the Attorney came with a Writ, and desired a Warrant upon it, it is usual to take whom he nominates, and make him the Officer to execute it.

L. C. J. Then give me, if you can, any one special Instance, wherein you have taken the Direction of the Attorney, whose Name to put into the Warrant.

Mr. Brome. Yes, my Lord, I can.

L. C. J. Do then, let's hear it, when was that?

Mr. Brome. I did it in the Case of His Royal Highness against Mr. Pilkington: Mr. Swift came for a Warrant, and directed me whom to put into it.

L. C. J. What Directions did he give you?

Mr. Brome. He gave me the Names in writing.

L. C. J. Where is Keeling?

Keeling. Here, my Lord.

L. C. J. What was the meaning of that Word that was used by you, that the Party would be angry, if you did not arrest my Lord Mayor; for that is it, which makes me so inquisitive into this Matter, how these People came to be employed?

Mr. Sol. Gen. Ay, pray consider with yourself, and recollect, Mr. Keeling; when you were first mentioned to be a special Bailiff to arrest my Lord Mayor, you say you opposed it: How then came you to be drawn in, and engaged to do it?

Keeling. I will tell you, my Lord.

L. C. J. Ay, and tell us what Number of People were there.

Keeling. There were about thirty or forty.

L. C. J. Was Brome among them?

Keeling.

Keeling. He was there some part of the time.

L. C. J. Well, what was the Reason that you should be engaged about this Thing?

Keeling. I went away a while, and came again: Mr. Brome came in, and I was away an Hour and half, as I remember, or some considerable time. Mr. Brome cannot forget, that, when I came again, I found my Name inserted in the Warrant, as a Bailiff to the Coroner, to arrest Sir William Pritchard, then Lord Mayor. I disputed it, as being never concerned in any such thing before, and was very unwilling to be employed in the Affair. Says Mr. Goodenough to me thereupon, You will disoblige the Party in case you do not do it.

L. C. J. Was Mr. Brome in the Company when Goodenough said so to you?

Keeling. I know not that truly, but he was before in the Company.

L. C. J. How many were then in the Room?

Keeling. About twenty, or more, as near as I can remember.

L. C. J. You, Brome, did you ever, when you received a Writ to arrest a Man, and were to give a Warrant upon it, call a Consult of Twenty or Thirty, how to do it, before this Time?

Mr. Brome. I did not do it now.

L. C. J. No, no, a-lack-a-day, thou wert as innocent in all this Matter as a sucking Child.

Mr. Williams. Was Mr. Papillon in the Company, Mr. Keeling?

Keeling. No, he was not.

Mr. Att. Gen. Mr. Brome, pray answer me; When you had my Lord Mayor in your Custody, how came you to discharge him out of Custody?

Mr. Brome. I was taken into Custody myself.

Mr. Ward. Did my Lord Mayor give an Appearance?

Mr. Brome. I was committed to the Compter myself.

Mr. Williams. Were you by when it was agreed that my Lord would give an Appearance?

Mr. Brome. I believe not; it was afterwards as I have heard.

L. C. J. A-lack-a-day, it went strangely against Mr. Brome's Stomach, all this did. I know it very well, he had no mind to it at all.

Mr. Att. Gen. Mr. Keeling, did you hear any Discourse between the Twenty or Thirty that were in that Company about this Business?

Keeling. I cannot say who in particular discoursed of it, or what was said.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Was it discoursed of in the whole Company?

Keeling. There was some Discourse about it in the Company.

L. C. J. You, Brome, were you ever acquainted with Keeling before?

Mr. Brome. I had the Misfortune, my Lord, to be concerned with him about some Coal-Works.

L. C. J. Did you know that Mr. Burleigh before, that was the other Bailiff?

Mr. Brome. I knew him by sight; I had no great Acquaintance with him.

L. C. J. Pray where lived Keeling?

Mr. Brome. At East-Smithfield.

L. C. J. And where lived Burleigh?

Mr. Brome. Truly, my Lord, I know not; I think at the other End of the Town.

L. C. J. But, prithee, how came you to join these two People together in this Business; the one from Wapping, the other from Westminster?

Mr. Brome. Where the Sheriffs were concerned, as they were in this Matter, and therefore it came to me, I thought it not so proper to pitch upon the Sheriffs Officers, nor would they do it, as he told me; and especially it being to arrest my Lord Mayor, I did not think proper to employ any one that lived in the City.

L. C. J. But there were abundance of People that were not Citizens, that were nearer at Hand, and nearer together, and fitter for such a Purpose than a Tradesman fetched out of the East, and I know not who out of the West, to arrest a Man: There must be some other meaning in it.

Mr. Brome. I gave them the Nomination, as I used to do in like Cases.

L. C. J. Upon your Oath, Sir, was it you or the Attorney that named these Persons?

Mr. Brome. He told me he could get none of the Sheriffs Officers to do it; and I did not think it indeed proper for any of them.

L. C. J. And why, good Sir?

Mr. Brome. I did think so, truly, my Lord.

L. C. J. Why? Why? What Reason had you for it?

Mr. Brome. It was reasonable, as I apprehend, my Lord, for me to think so, it being in a Matter wherein the Sheriffs were so much concerned.

Mr. Sol. Gen. But did you propose it, or any one else in the Company, upon your oath? and who was it?

Mr. Brome. The Attorney named them.

Mr. Com. Serj. It seems here were a great many Persons met at Russell's about this Business. I desire, my Lord, that Mr. Brome may name as many of them, as he can, that were there.

L. C. J. Ay, as near as you can, name the twenty or thirty Persons that were there; for you living in the City, and having an Acquaintance among that Sort of People, must needs know most of them.

Mr. Brome. Why, my Lord, there were both the Goodenoughs, and Mr. Nelthorpe, and who in particular else, I cannot well remember.

L. C. J. Yes, yes, I am sure you can tell more of them.

Mr. Brome. My Lord, I cannot swear that I remember any other in particular.

Mr. Com. Serj. It seems he has named some of those that are in the Proclamation; pray, Sir, do you remember any others were there, that were in the Proclamation?

Mr. Brome. I do not remember any other of those in the Proclamation were there.

Mr. Att. Gen. Can you remember any that were not in the Proclamation?

Mr. Brome. There were several People that I knew by sight; but I cannot remember their Names.

L. C. J. Nay, nay, pray open your Eyes a little, and recollect your Memory, and tell us who were there; I know you can do it.

Mr. Brome. My Lord, there were many Citizens that I knew by sight; but had no particular Acquaintance with them.

Vol. III.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did you know any of the Company besides the Goodenoughs, and Keeling, and Nelthorpe?

Mr. Brome. I had little Acquaintance with him.

Mr. Sol. Gen. How come you to remember him so particularly?

Mr. Brome. I verily believe he was there.

Mr. Recorder. Was Mr. West there?

Mr. Brome. I cannot positively say whether he was or not.

Mr. Williams. Swear Mr. Cornish then. [Which was done.]

L. C. J. You, Brome, was Mr. Cornish there?

Mr. Brome. Not that I know of.

Mr. Att. Gen. It is strange we cannot learn who those Persons were that met there.

L. C. J. Oh these Fellows have strange Memories for their Purposes! Well, what do you call him for?

Mr. Ward. My Lord, we call Mr. Cornish to give an Account what he knows of this Matter; what Directions were given by the Plaintiff to his Attorney, how he should carry on this Matter.

Mr. Cornish. My Lord, That which I particularly remember, I shall fully and very faithfully declare. I was with Mr. Papillon, and Mr. Dubois, at my House. The Occasion of their coming thither I knew not, nor did expect either of them there; I myself came from Guild-Hall, either from a Court of Aldermen, or from a Committee; and when I came Home, I found them there. We had not been many Minutes together; but in comes Mr. Goodenough the Attorney; and he applied himself particularly to Mr. Papillon and Mr. Dubois, to receive their orders what he should do; for he said the Time was almost spent, and he had addressed himself from time to time to my Lord Mayor, and some of the Aldermen, to get them to appear, but they would not. They told him then, they had given him what orders they had to give him already; that it was fit the Matter should be brought to some Trial or Issue, that there might be an end of it. He pressed them then earnestly to know what he should do? Said they, You are to desire an Appearance to the Action, and if he will give it, take it, and remember my Lord Mayor is the chief Magistrate of the City; and pray, carry it with all respect and regard imaginable to him.

Mr. Williams. You say, Sir, they bid him to take an Appearance, if he could get it?

Mr. Cornish. Yes, and they declared, that their Design was only to bring it to an Issue to be tried, and they would not insist upon any thing but an Appearance, if it might be had.

L. C. J. Wonderful careful and civil they were, no doubt of it.

Mr. Cornish. This is the Truth, and the whole of the Truth, that I know of, relating to this Matter.

L. C. J. Mr. Cornish, you speak of some of the Aldermen, that he said he had been with: What Aldermen were those?

Mr. Cornish. There were several of them, that he said he had Writs against.

L. C. J. You were an Alderman then; pray, had he any Writ against you?

Mr. Cornish. I know not whether he had or no.

L. C. J. But he did not require an Appearance of you, I suppose?

Mr. Cornish. If he had, I must have taken Notice of it to defend myself as well as I could.

L. C. J. Ay, no question but you would; but were you asked for an Appearance, or no?

Mr. Cornish. I was told I should be sued among the rest.

L. C. J. But was there any Writ shewn to you?

Mr. Cornish. No, my Lord.

L. C. J. Then pray let me ask you a Question or two. Did you ever know any Man before bring an Action, or sue to be Sheriff of London? You have been Sheriff yourself we know.

Mr. Cornish. This was a Matter that had been much disputed in the City; and a Question had been depending upon it, whether the Right was to my Lord Mayor, or in the Sheriffs.

L. C. J. But the Question of Right between my Lord Mayor and Sheriffs, what was that to Mr. Papillon? Did you ever know a Man bring an Action, or sue to be Sheriff?

Mr. Cornish. Truly, he that experienceth the Trouble of it, will, I believe, never be desirous of it.

L. C. J. But that is no Answer to my Question, answer me directly: Did you ever know any such thing before?

Mr. Cornish. I never did hear of any such that I know of.

L. C. J. How then came Mr. Papillon so officiously to desire it?

Mr. Cornish. I cannot answer; what his Reasons were, I know not.

Mr. Williams. It was an Action to determine the Question that was at that time so much litigated in the City of London.

Mr. Att. Gen. Mr. Cornish, Pray, will you answer me one thing; Were you never in no Company, wherein it was agreed this Suit should be brought and carried on in their Names?

Mr. Cornish. Mr. Attorney-General, I never meddled nor managed it.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did you never hear it was so agreed?

Mr. Cornish. It is known to Thousands, as much as I know of it; the Matter was disputed of in all Companies in the City.

Mr. Att. Gen. But you do not answer to my Question; Were you ever in any Company when it was agreed that so it should be?

Mr. Cornish. Sir, I tell you as well as I can, the Matter that was to be disputed by that Action, was the general Discourse of all Societies of Men whatever in the City at that time.

L. C. J. It is a strange thing, that one cannot get a direct Answer from these People, to any thing one asks them; I desire to know one thing of you, Mr. Cornish: you have known Mr. Papillon, the Defendant, before this time?

Mr. Cornish. Yes, my Lord, I have known him several Years.

L. C. J. Was he ever chosen Sheriff of London before?

Mr. Cornish. Yes, my Lord, I suppose he was.

L. C. J. How chance he did not hold then?

Mr. Cornish. I have heard he fined, as was common and usual, when Persons' Occasions would not permit them to attend the Service of the Place.

6 Y

L. C. J.

L. C. J. He did so, it is known to Thousands, as you say, that he did. Now, pray, let me ask you another Question: Was Mr. Bethel ever chosen Sheriff before that time you and he were Sheriffs together?

Mr. Cornish. I do not know that he was chosen before.

L. C. J. How is that?

Mr. Cornish. My Lord, I do not understand what the Question is, or else I know nothing of it.

L. C. J. How, did you never hear of that before? For, Mr. Cornish, I do not speak of a thing that no body knows; alas, thousands, and ten thousands of People know that too.

Mr. Cornish. My Lord, upon my Oath, I do not know that ever he was.

L. C. J. Did you ever hear it?

Mr. Cornish. I do not know that ever I did.

L. C. J. Did you never hear that Mr. Bethel swore himself off, as they call it? You know what I mean.

Mr. Cornish. I do not remember any thing of it.

L. C. J. Nay, nay, it is to the Matter, I assure you, Mr. Cornish, whatever you think of it. I ask you then another Question, that lies something nearer your Memory: Upon your Oath, when you two were elected upon Midsummer-day, was not that Election vacated, and you chosen again within a Week, or some little time after? And was it not because you had not taken the Sacrament, and the Corporation-Oath?

Mr. Cornish. My Lord, I do remember there was a second Election.

L. C. J. And we remember it too well enough.

Mr. Cornish. That was so lately, that any Citizen of London, or any one that lived here, may remember the Passages of those Times.

L. C. J. And you have as much Cause to remember it as any Man, I assure you, for several Reasons that I know.

Mr. Cornish. My Lord, I think I have Reason to remember it.

L. C. J. Left you should forget it, I will enlighten you, and refresh your Memory a little: I ask you again, upon your Oath, was not your first Election set aside, because you had not taken the Oaths and the Sacrament?

Mr. Cornish. There were two Elections, my Lord, I say, I do remember.

L. C. J. Sir, do not prevaricate with me; I expect a positive Answer: Was not that the Reason, upon your Oath?

Mr. Cornish. I cannot say that was the positive Reason.

L. C. J. Then I ask you upon your Oath, had you taken the Oaths and the Sacrament, as the Law requires?

Mr. Cornish. My Lord, Mr. Bethel was a Stranger to me, I did not know him before that time.

L. C. J. Gentlemen, Men must not think to dance in a Net, and blind all the World. As to my own self, I know these things very well, without any of their assistance, and I only ask these things by the by, to let the World be satisfied what sort of Men these are, that pretend to Saintship; and yet, you see, one can hardly get one Word of Truth out of them: Let the Law, in God's Name, take place, and let every Man prosecute his legal Actions; but when, under the Umbrage and Countenance of Law, Men shall desire to put themselves into Offices, and Places of Trust, on purpose to disturb the Government; Do you think the Government will ever suffer itself to be snivelled at, and overthrown by a Company of such whining Fellows? Let them hiss and hum, and make a Noise and ado as they will; thanks be to God, 'tis not that time of Day now: Such things have pass'd too much uncontroul'd in the body of this City heretofore. What, Gentlemen, are you baffling the Law with such Pretences as these, now-a-days, and do you think to sham People into Offices? No, I tell you, Villany was the Foundation of it, and Knavery the Superstructure; and it is high time it should be told out, since I hear People begin to doubt of it as a question.

Mr. Ward. Where is Mr. Serjeant? Swear him.

[Which was done.]

L. C. J. Do not I know, as sure as I sit in this Place, that Bethel did once before swear himself off? and that there were two Elections of these two very Men that Year? and that one of the Reasons was, because they had not taken the Oaths and the Sacrament according to Law? Nor would they ever have done it, we know them, neither Bethel, nor that very Fellow that stands there, Cornish, neither, till they found it would contribute to the design of subverting the Government; then these Rascals could qualify themselves for an Office, only to put the Kingdom into a Flame.

Mr. Cornish. When the City chose me, I had good Reason for what I did.

L. C. J. Reason! I tell you, the City was in great Happiness and Quiet, ever since the late Times of Rebellion and Confusion; every one knew his Duty to his Superiors, and did it cheerfully and conscientiously, till such time as a couple of busy Fellows came to get into the publick Offices. Let the whole Party go away with that in their Teeth, and chew upon it, if they will.

Mr. Williams. Mr. Serjeant, will you please to tell my Lord and the Jury, what Directions you heard the Defendant, Mr. Papillon, give about the Plaintiff, how they should treat him?

Mr. Serjeant. My Lord, I was in the Counting-house at Mr. Alderman Cornish's House, when Mr. Papillon and Mr. Dubois were there; I went into the Parlour to them, and Goodenough coming in, they fell into a Discourse about this Action, that was brought by them against Sir William Pritchard, then Lord Mayor, and some of the Aldermen; and Goodenough gave them an account how far he had proceeded in it; he said, he could not get any of them to give an Appearance, and the Time was near spent, and he desired to know of them what he should do. Mr. Papillon and Mr. Dubois both did declare to him, over and over again, that it was their mind only to have the Matter brought to a fair Trial; and they charged him to look to it, to do nothing but what was legal, and carry it with all respect imaginable to my Lord Mayor, as the Chief Magistrate of the City; that he should by all means get an Appearance from him, if he could, and get the Coroner, who was an Officer of the City, to go with him, and carry all Things fairly and decently.

Mr. At. Gen. Who gave these Directions, Sir, do you say?

Mr. Serjeant. Mr. Papillon and Mr. Dubois, both of them did.

Mr. Ward. Now, my Lord, we shall shew that we proceeded so far in the Action as to declare; but afterwards apprehending ourselves to be under a mistake, we discontinued our Action.

Mr. Williams. And the Costs upon the discontinuance were received by my Lord Mayor's Attorney. Here is the Declaration as it was filed.

L. C. J. Ay, it may be there was a Declaration filed; but not regularly.

Mr. Williams. My Lord Mayor after appeared.

L. C. J. How doth that appear in Evidence? For the Coroner says he himself was in Custody, and knows no more of the Matter afterwards.

Mr. Williams. I believe your Lordship doth remember there were many Motions made in Court about this Matter, on the one side and the other, and at length in Court it was compromised, and my Lord Mayor promised to give an Appearance.

L. C. J. Prove what you can; prove the Appearance enter'd, and Declaration received.

Mr. Williams. My Lord, I only offer this as an Evidence of an Appearance.

L. C. J. A Record, I know, is a good and fair Evidence; shew that if you can.

Mr. Ward. It is not usual to declare till the Defendant appears.

L. C. J. A Declaration may well be upon an Appearance; but because it cannot be good without an Appearance, therefore it cannot be a sufficient Evidence of it.

Mr. Ward. We will prove the Costs of the Discontinuance paid and accepted. Swear Mr. Baker. [Which was done.] What do you know, Sir, of any Costs that were taxed and paid for a Discontinuance in this Case?

Mr. Baker. My Lord, Mr. Aston told me he appeared for Sir William Pritchard, then Lord Mayor, and had a Declaration from the now Defendant's Attorney: So I entered up a Discontinuance, and paid the Costs, and have Mr. Aston's Receipt for them.

L. C. J. He says well. Go on then.

Mr. Williams. My Lord, it is a thing that hath frequently happened, that after a Man has brought an Action against another, he finds he was mistaken, and hath no Cause of Action, and thereupon relinquisheth his Suit: But sure that will not make him liable to a Suit.

L. C. J. Well, pray go on with your Evidence.

Mr. Ward. My Lord, we are not now offering to try the Right of Election, tho' that really was the Foundation of the Action that we brought, but we apprehended that Question to be determined, and we acquiesced in it, when that Trial was over. Now, my Lord, we shall shew, that apprehending ourselves really chosen, we did in a due Course of Law sue forth our Mandamus, directed to the Plaintiff and the Aldermen; and there is a Return made. I pray these may be read.

The Mandamus and Return were read.

Mr. Williams. Then that which we shall next shew, is the Grounds and Reasons why we thought this Return was false, and thereupon brought our Action. We shall shew, that at a Common Hall, held for the Election of Sheriffs, the Defendant was in Nomination, and had a great Number of Hands and Voices for him. Pray, call Mr. Gilbert Nelson, Mr. William Wightman, and Mr. Leonard Robinson.

[Who all appeared, and were sworn.]

Mr. Ward. Mr. Nelson, Pray were you at the Common Hall for Election of Sheriffs, in the Year 1682?

Mr. Nelson. I was at the Common Hall in June, 1682, on Midsummer-day.

Mr. Williams. Pray, Sir, will you tell us who were then in Nomination, and how they did proceed?

Mr. Nelson. There were in Nomination for Sheriffs, he that is now Sir Dudley North, then Mr. North, Mr. Box, Mr. Papillon, and Mr. Dubois.

Mr. Ward. Pray, Sir, who had the Majority of Hands?

Mr. Nelson. I did see the Poll Books after they were cast up.

Mr. Williams. But did you observe the holding up of the Hands?

Mr. Nelson. Upon the holding up of the Hands, the Election was by the Sheriffs given to Mr. Papillon and Mr. Dubois.

Mr. Williams. But pray, Sir, upon your View, and in your Judgment, were there many Hands for Mr. Papillon?

Mr. Nelson. I guess there were the most Hands for him and Mr. Dubois.

Mr. Ward. What say you then to the summing up of the Poll-Books, that you spoke of?

Mr. Nelson. I did see the Books after they were cast up.

Mr. Ward. Was there a great Number for Mr. Papillon?

Mr. Nelson. Yes, there was the greatest.

Mr. Com. Serj. What Books do you mean, Mr. Nelson?

Mr. Nelson. The Books in the Sheriffs Custody, Sir.

Mr. Com. Serj. But did you see any Books?

Mr. Nelson. That was upon the second Poll.

Mr. Ward. Then which is Mr. Wightman?

Mr. Wightman. Here I am, Sir.

Mr. Ward. Were you present at this Common-Hall? Did you see this Election?

Mr. Wightman. I can say nothing to the Election.

Mr. Williams. Were you at the Common Hall on Midsummer-day, 1682?

Mr. Wightman. I cannot say that, Sir.

Mr. Ward. Then what is it you can say to this Matter in question? Did you take any Poll?

Mr. Wightman. I did take the Poll in one of the Books.

Mr. Williams. Was there any Number for Mr. Papillon?

Mr. Wightman. There were 2400 and odd for Papillon and Dubois.

Mr. Thompson. Who were in Nomination, Sir? Who were the Persons polled for?

Mr. Wightman. Sir Dudley North, Mr. Papillon, Mr. Dubois, and Mr. Box.

Mr. Ward. What say you, Mr. Robinson? Were you at this Common-Hall in 1682?

Mr. Robinson. Yes, I was.

Mr. Williams. Who were named to be Sheriffs then?

Mr. Robinson. Mr. North, now Sir Dudley North, Mr. Ralph Box, Mr. Thomas Papillon, and Mr. John Dubois, they four.

Mr. Williams. What Number had Mr. Papillon for him?

Mr. Robinson.

Mr. Robinson. I never saw the Poll.

Mr. Ward. But upon the View in the Hall, in your Opinion, did you look upon it as a doubtful Case which was elected?

Mr. Robinson. By the Hands, I judged the majority was much more for Mr. Papillon and Mr. Dubois, than for the other two.

Mr. Williams. So you think in your Judgment?

Mr. Robinson. Upon my Oath, that was my Opinion.

Mr. Williams. Well, my Lord, we must rest it here, unless they give us further Occasion.

Mr. Att. Gen. You say the majority was for Papillon and Dubois: Pray was the Election declared at that time by the Mayor and Aldermen, or was there a Poll demanded?

Mr. Robinson. Mr. Attorney, First the Question was put for the Persons, then the Sheriffs declared their Opinion, and a Poll was demanded, and a Poll was granted, and the Sheriffs went with the Common Serjeant up to the Court of Aldermen, and acquainted them with it; and then they all came down again, and declared that there should be a Poll.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Who were Sheriffs then, pray, Sir?

Mr. Robinson. Mr. Alderman Pilkington, and Mr. Samuel Shute; and in the Evening, after the Poll was closed, the Books were numbered up, the Sheriffs came down upon the Hustings, and declared the Numbers; and then, as I remember, the Number declared for Mr. Papillon and Dubois was above 2000, and the Number declared for the other two, was some Hundreds under 2000.

Mr. Ward. My Lord, we leave it here.

L. C. J. Will you, that are for the Plaintiff, say any thing more to it?

Mr. Att. Gen. Yes, my Lord, We have more Evidence to bring in answer to what they have brought here. My Lord, that which they would excuse themselves by, is, that there was a probable Cause; but that will fail them, if it be but observed what doth appear upon their own Evidence. It is true, where a Man hath a probable right, he may sue. But this matter here contended for, was never such a right as a Man may sue for. No Man can ever shew, that for the Shrievalty, an Office of Burden, an Office of Hazard, and an Office of Charge and Expence, any Man did ever sue, so little ground of Reason had they to bring this Action for this Office. And then for their Title to the Office, that will appear but very weak. They pretend that my Lord Mayor and Aldermen could not try the right who was elected truly and rightfully, and they bring this Action to try it, and then they produce some of the Men that held up their Hands, and in their Opinions, Gentlemen, they say, the Election fell upon Papillon and Dubois. But, Gentlemen, that my Lord will tell you is nothing at all of Title, but a Poll was demanded, and by that it must be decided. Then one of their Witnesses tells you a Story of what the Sheriffs did upon the Poll: But all that is nothing too. For we tell you, and shall prove it, That those Sheriffs did, in a riotous manner, assume, and take upon themselves the Supreme Government of the City, and would have excluded my Lord Mayor from it. But all their Proceedings, and all that they call a Poll, was void, and can make no Title to any thing at all. It was a bare Dispute of a factious Party, to subvert the orderly Government of the City. There was no probability of Title or Right could be gained by it. For the Chief Magistrate of the City, for the time being, ever did direct the Poll, and all the Proceedings upon Election of Officers. And when he did so in this Case, we shall prove to you there was not any considerable Number (that is, not twenty Men) to give any pretence of Title to this Gentleman, that thus sued for this Office. But indeed in that most riotous Assembly one of them that ever was, they do pretend to be elected: But we shall shew that for that riotous Assembly they were convicted here as Rioters upon an Information, and fined to the King for it. And I could tell them of a like Case of an illegal Title; a Man goeth by a false Oath to get a Possession of Goods, takes out a Capias, and with others, getting into a House to arrest the Party, he then carries away all the Goods, and upon this Possession would set up a pretence of Title. But upon an Information for a Riot, he was severely punished for it. Mr. Papillon, if he had thought he had had a good Title, or Cause to bring this Action, he would have employed better Instruments to have proceeded in it. The Attorney he makes use of, who is it but Mr. Goodenough? One who did not live within the City, nor had any thing to do in it, till brought into Office as the great Instrument of Mr. Bethel in his Actions, and a great Plotter in the late horrid and dreadful Conspiracy. And this Cause, how is it managed? Not by any Counsel of worthy Men of the Robe, or grave Citizens, but by a Cabal of thirty or forty Rioters, most of them in the Proclamation proscribed as Traitors, and run away from Justice upon the Discovery of the Plot. All this speaks Malice, and the worst of Malice, the thing itself speaks it, to pretend a Title with so little or no ground. For you plainly observe, there is no Title but this riotous Assembly to ground their pretences upon. In the Prosecution of this Action there was no Order, whatsoever they pretend, for to take an Appearance, I mean by those that really were at the bottom of the Design. For the forty Men at the Consult at Russell's did not meet, to be sure, to give Order for an Appearance. No, they had other Work to do. An Appearance would not do their Work: For, as Mr. Keeling at large could explain it, they took all Opportunities to rise and make a Mutiny, and take Advantage of the Mob and Disturbances to bring about their main Plot. They did not care five-pence for the Appearance: But when the Soldiers were up, then the Plot was spoiled, and then my Lord Mayor may go home, if he will. Gentlemen, we shall prove what I have opened to you, tho' I am persuaded not one of you but know it as well as I.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Shew the Records of the Conviction of the Riot.

L. C. J. Hold, Mr. Solicitor, I tell you before hand, that as I stopped them from urging the Trial for the Riot as any Determination of the Right of Election, or as any ways tending to the Question now before us; so I must not let you neither enter into that matter. The Business of the Indictment, Conviction, and Sentence upon the Rioters, makes nothing, either to the Right of Election, or this Right of Action. And therefore, and I said to Mr. Ward, it was nothing to the Purpose to mention it on that side: So it is to no Purpose, I must tell you, to mention it on the other side. For it was no Determination of the Point of Right one way or other. And he could not give it in Evidence, that that was a Litigation of the Matter in Dispute, and upon the Decision of that Indictment (till which he apprehended he had a Right) he found it was against him, and so decided. No, the Right, I say, was not at all affected by that Trial, one way or other. For admitting they had a Right, or you had a Right, yet the gaining your Right must not be attempted in a wrongful manner, but they had a lawful Way to come by their Right, and if they pursued that, well and good; if not, then they must take what comes of it.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, that right was insisted on by them as the probable ground of their Action; and that, we say, was no Right.

L. C. J. Therefore it is to no Purpose to urge it.

Mr. Sol. Gen. But, my Lord, with Submission, our Answer to their Title is, That there was no Colour of Pretence; and this Conviction proves it.

L. C. J. No, Mr. Solicitor, that is not any Evidence one way or other.

Mr. Sol. Gen. If your Lordship please, it destroys their very Title, which is the Number of the Poll.

L. C. J. Lord! the thing is as plain, Gentlemen, as any thing can be. You or they may have a good Title, and yet do a thing that is unlawful to bring the Title into Possession. But then the punishing you for that unlawful Act is not an Evidence, either against or for the Title, nor doth determine it for you, or against you.

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lord, we submit to your Lordship's Directions in it. But then this we say to it, the Question now is reduced to this Point: Whether there were any probable Cause for the Defendant's Suit against the Plaintiff? They have insisted upon it that there was, from two grounds. They call Witnesses, who declare they were of Opinion, that the Defendant had the Right of Election by the holding up of the Hands. That is one of the probable Causes of their Suit. Now that is clearly gone by this single Point, whether the Election was determined upon that holding up of the Hands, or they went to a Poll to decide it? If they went to a Poll, then it is clear the Right of Election was not determined; and he could have no Right to be Sheriff upon the holding up of the Hands. Then they went a little further, and offered in Evidence the Sheriffs Poll books, or the Numbers taken out of them, wherein they say, the Majority was for Mr. Papillon, and so thereupon, say they, we brought our Action. Now, to that Objection it is proper for us, with Submission, my Lord, to answer it, that that can be no manner of Cause of Action in the World; because, say we, that was no Part of the Election at all, nor was it at all to govern the Question of Right one way nor other, 'twas a Number of Names taken out of the regular Course upon Elections by Persons that had no legal Authority; nor was it such a Method, as was a Foundation to ground any Opinion upon one way or other, much less, such a one, as would be a Cause of Action. These are all the grounds they went upon. The first, by their own shewing, was no ground at all; for there was no Determination of the Right upon the View, but a Poll was agreed upon: The other, we shall call Witnesses to prove was irregular, and so not legal. Swear Mr. Town-Clerk.

[Which was done.]

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray, Sir, will you give my Lord and the Jury an account who is to govern the Poll upon the Election of Sheriffs, or other Officers, at the Common-Hall?

Mr. Town-Clerk. My Lord, I never knew a Poll about Sheriffs till about five or six Years ago; and that was the first Poll that ever I knew, and it was between Mr. Jenks and Sir Simon Lewis, and indeed it was the first that ever I did read of in any time within the City of London. I think, I have seen the Entry of all the Elections of Sheriffs, that are extant in our Books in all times; and I think, I did never see in any of those Entries one Poll that was ever taken for Sheriffs; it is only mentioned, Such an one elected by the Mayor, by Prerogative, and such an one by the Commonalty. Among other Books of the City's, there is an old Book, that is called by the Name of Liber Albus, which, speaking of the Constitution of the Common-Hall for Election of Sheriffs, says, First of all the Mayor shall choose one of the Sheriffs for London and Middlesex, for whom he will answer; and then the Commonalty shall choose another to join with him, for whom they will answer. And if there arise any Difference between them, who is elected, or not elected, it shall be determined in the same manner as it is in Common-Council. This is all the Notice, that I find in any of the City-Books, that looks like a deciding the Election, when disputed, by a Poll. Now in another Chapter of that Book, where the Common-Council is mentioned, it is said, If there be any Division of Opinions in the Common-Council, the Common-Serjeant and the Town-Clerk shall examine every Man severally, what their Opinion is, which is by way of Poll at this Day when we had a Common-Council. But till that time that the Poll was between Mr. Jenks and Sir Simon Lewis, I never knew any Poll for Sheriffs, and that Poll was taken immediately by telling one and the other. For my Lord Mayor and Aldermen, as soon as ever they come upon the Hustings, make Proclamation to have the Liveries attend for such Elections, and then withdraw, and leave the Sheriffs and the Common Serjeant.

Mr. Att. Gen. Sir, the Course is very well known, I suppose, to the Gentlemen of the Jury. But pray, did any Persons poll at my Lord Mayor's Books for Dubois and Papillon?

Mr. Town-Clerk. Not that I know. As to this Poll, my Lord Mayor caused the Common-Hall to be adjourned to such a Time, and after that sent for the Common-Serjeant, and myself, and required us to go get Books, to take the Poll for Mr. Box, Mr. Papillon, and Mr. Dubois; as for Sir Dudley North, he was not to be polled for, he being chosen before, by the Prerogative of the Lord Mayor, and my Lord Mayor and Aldermen declared him fully elected; and upon that he was called out by public Proclamation upon the Hustings, to come and take the Office upon him, as is usual in such Cases. But we had Directions to provide Books to take the Poll for Mr. Box, Mr. Papillon, and Mr. Dubois; and we did so, and took the Poll for these three Gentlemen, and upon closing of the Poll, we all of us sealed up our Books, and delivered them to my Lord Mayor, and at a Common-Hall afterwards he did declare Mr. Box to be chosen the other Sheriff, to be joined with Sir Dudley North: The Poll was, as it always ought to be, by the Direction of my Lord Mayor, and the Sheriffs are but Officers, and not the Judges and Managers of the Poll, without my Lord Mayor's Direction.

L. C. J. What say you to it, Gentlemen? Have you any more Evidence?

Mr.

Mr. Serj. Maynard. My Lord, and Gentlemen, Here has been much said in this Cause that is nothing to the Purpose. As particularly, that which the Plaintiff's Counsel did last insist upon, who took the Poll, and who had right to take the Poll or not, is not any thing to this Question: This Action is not at all concerned in that matter. For whatsoever the Dispute was, and whichsoever had the right, and because it was a Dispute, some it may be, could not poll at the one, and others would not poll at the other, yet the lifting up of two Thousand Hands might make him think that he was chosen Sheriff; and there lies the Cause of his Action, his Apprehension of a Right: Your Lordship did object this to us, Whoever before brought such an Action as ours, and did sue to be Sheriff of London, a Place of Charge and Trouble?—

L. C. J. No, I did not make it as any Objection. I asked your Witness, Cornish, that Question indeed, for some Reasons that I know.

Mr. Serj. Maynard. That may be objected indeed to the Prudence of my Client, Mr. Papillon, to desire such an Office: But that proves nothing of Malice in him against the Plaintiff; for if he were never so unwise as to desire it, if he had a Right to it, or thought he had, it is not a malicious thing in the Eye of the Law, for him to take his legal Course for it. And then the Objection that is made of the Instruments that were used: Our Attorney Goodenough is in a Plot: What is that to us? There is not the least Suspicion upon us. He is a bad man: But that doth not make all his Clients bad. But the Question now before you is, First, Whether there were any probability of a Cause of Action? Secondly, If there were not a probable Cause; yet whether that Action was grounded upon Malice? What Malice, I pray, is there in this against my Lord Mayor, to desire an Appearance of him, when it is conceived, though upon mistake, that there is Cause of Action against him? We did not press him to give us Bail to our Action, or threaten else to arrest him: No, it was a decent rather than an irreverent Application to him. If, then, there be not both concurring, want of Title, or probable Cause, and Malice too, this Action of the Plaintiff's is without ground. No man, that has any Sense, if he knows he has a clear Title against him, will bring an Action; but though it should be clear against him, yet if he do bring an Action, but not vexatiously and maliciously, that cannot subject him to an Action; that would frighten men from bringing Actions upon doubtful Matters, which certainly is lawful for any Man to do. Now, what Malice is proved in the Defendant against the Plaintiff, the Jury here are Judges of. If we were Criminal in the Manner of our Proceedings, they might come before your Lordship in another way; but sure this is not the way; and if it should be actionable, and we likewise subject to be punished as a Criminal, then we should suffer twice for the same Fault. Now, Gentlemen, upon this Action we are not to be fined; but they, if they can, are to shew what Damages the Plaintiff sustained by our Action; and if what we have said do not satisfy you, that we had probable Reason for what we did, then you, upon your Oaths, are to give him what Damages you, in your Consciences, think he has received by it.

Mr. Williams. My Lord, if your Lordship please, I would ask one Question of Mr. Town-Clerk, as to the Right of managing the Election. Sir, You have observed many Common-Halls for Elections?

Mr. Townclerk. Yes, Sir, I have for this twelve Years.

Mr. Williams. Did the Common-Hall ever go to a Poll upon an Election, before this time, that you know of?

Mr. Townclerk. Never but once for the Election of Sheriffs, I say.

Mr. Williams. I speak, Sir, of any sort of Poll; for I suppose you do not call the holding up of hands a Poll.

Mr. Townclerk. Mr. Jenks's Poll was the first that ever I knew for Sheriffs.

Mr. Williams. Well, Sir, was that managed by the Sheriffs, or by my Lord Mayor, or by you, and the Common Serjeant; or who was it by?

Mr. Townclerk. Sir, The Mayor and Aldermen withdrew, and leave the Sheriffs to view the Election by the Hands; and the Common Serjeant propounds the Question, So many of you as will have, &c.

Mr. Williams. By whose Direction doth he propound the Question, pray?

Mr. Townclerk. By the Direction of the Common-Hall, I take it.

Mr. Williams. But if a Question do arise upon an Election, so that it cannot be decided by the view, but they go to a Poll, who is to manage that Poll?

Mr. Townclerk. The Officers of the City, by Direction of the Lord Mayor.

Mr. Williams. That Poll you speak of, for Lewis and Jenks, was that managed by any body but by the Sheriffs?

Mr. Townclerk. It was managed by the Sheriffs and the Common Serjeant, in the accustomed manner.

Mr. Williams. How! in the accustomed manner, when you say that was the first that ever you knew?

Mr. Townclerk. It was so for Sheriffs; but there have been Polls for other Officers.

L. C. J. Why, Mr. Williams, every body knows that well enough, that the Sheriffs are concerned in the management of the Election, or the Poll, as all the rest of the Officers of the City are, under my Lord Mayor; and the Common Serjeant consults with the Sheriffs Officers and People about him, upon the view.

Mr. Williams. Pray, Sir, do you remember the Election of Mr. Bethel and Mr. Cornish?

Mr. Townclerk. Yes, Sir, there was a Poll there too, that was the Year after.

Mr. Williams. Who managed that Poll?

Mr. Townclerk. The Sheriffs, and the Common Serjeant, and I, did agree to take it thus in two Books, whereof one was with the one Sheriff, and the other with the other Sheriff, at the two ends of the Hall.

Mr. Williams. That was taken in Writing, Sir, was it not?

Mr. Townclerk. Yes, Sir, that other of Jenks was only by telling.

Mr. Williams. Were you concerned in taking that Poll?

Mr. Townclerk. I did assist at it one Day.

Mr. Williams. Who ordered you to take the Poll that Day?

Mr. Townclerk. Truly, I did concern myself as little as I could in those things: What Report was made to the Court of Aldermen, I cannot tell; but one Day, coming into the Hall, I had no mind to concern myself in it; but some Gentlemen did pray me to go up to the Poll; and I did go up.

Mr. Williams. Sir, upon your Oath, Did the Sheriffs direct you to take it?—Mr. Townclerk. I really think they did not.

Mr. Williams. Did my Lord Mayor direct you?

Mr. Townclerk. No, Sir.

Mr. Williams. Did the Sheriffs manage it?

Mr. Common Serj. I did it by Sir Robert Clayton's Order, who was then Lord Mayor.

Mr. Williams. My Lord, all that we say to it is this, We are not now proving our Right upon which we brought our Action; that we submit unto, it is against us, we must agree it: But be the Right one way, or other; yet we might, from a supposed Right, have a probable Cause of Action. It seems to be a doubtful Business, by all that Mr. Townclerk has said, who has the Right; for all he knows of the Constitution is from Liber Abus, and that is somewhat dark. You, Gentlemen, hear what is said; the Thing was a Question of five or six Days, and a puzzling one it seems; and therefore we might be misled into an Apprehension, that what the Sheriffs did was right, and so not at all concern ourselves with what my Lord Mayor did—

L. C. J. Mr. Williams, you talk of that you do not understand; for my Lord Mayor was not there at that time of Jenks's Poll: I was Common Serjeant myself, and I know the Sheriffs have nothing to do with it.

Mr. Williams. It should seem by Mr. Townclerk to be doubtful, sometimes one, and sometimes another did direct the taking of the Poll.

L. C. J. But you are out still. But for all that, this is nothing to your Right of Action, one way or other.

Mr. Williams. My Lord, I must lay it here, it was a doubtful Thing, and we brought our Action to try the Right; but afterwards conceiving we were out, and had no Right, we discontinued and desisted.

L. C. J. It was so far from being their Right, that I desire you to call me any one Witness, that can say, before Jenks's time, there was ever a Poll for Sheriffs, or such a Thing thought of.

Mr. Williams. We were under an Apprehension of a Right in them.

L. C. J. There could be no Colour for any such Apprehension in the World.

Mr. Williams. We must submit to your Lordship's Directions.

Mr. Att. Gen. So do we.

Mr. Serj. Maynard. Whether this Action brought by us, was malicious?

Mr. Ward. My Lord, Mr. Attorney doth challenge the Defendant to shew that his Action was brought by advice of Counsel; we shall shew it was with good Authority of Counsel. Mr. Baker, can you tell whether it was by any Advice, and whose?

Mr. Baker. It was by the Advice of Mr. Thompson, Mr. Pollexfen, and Mr. Wallop, as I have heard.

Mr. Att. Gen. But you hear what Keeling says, there was a Party, that were at a Consult about it, and that were concerned in it.

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lord, we have done on both Sides, I think, and submit to your Lordship's Direction in it.

L. C. J. Will any of you say any thing more?

Mr. Williams. No, my Lord, we have done, we leave it upon this Evidence to your Lordship and the Jury.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, we have no more to say for the Plaintiff.

L. C. J. Then, Gentlemen of the Jury, as my Brother Maynard said in the Beginning of his Defence in this Cause; so I say now to you, to set all Things straight and right: God forbid, that any heat, or transport of the Times, should bring us into that Condition, but that every Subject of the King's, that hath a right of bringing an Action at Law against another, should have free Liberty so to do. And the Courts of Justice are now, and I hope, always will be so open, that every one that would take a Remedy prescribed by the Law for a Wrong done him, may be received to bring his Action, which is a legal Remedy.

And I am to tell you, Gentlemen, that much has been said in this Case (which I perceive is by the Concourse of People a Cause of great Expectation, as my Brother likewise said) which is not at all to the Case. I am sorry truly at this time of Day, that we should stand in need of such Causes as these, to settle and keep People in their due Bounds and Limits. But though many Things have been said in the Case, that are quite besides the natural Question; yet they having been made Dependencies upon that Question, and because it seems to be a Case of such Expectation, I think it will become me, in the Place wherein I am, to say something to you, and, according to the best of my Understanding, tell you what I apprehend to be the legal Part of it, stripped of what hath no Relation at all to it. And if I shall omit any thing that is material on the one Side or the other, here are Gentlemen that are learned in the Law, who are of Counsel both for the Plaintiff and the Defendant; and I shall not think myself under any sort of Prejudice in the World, if they take the liberty, as they may freely do, to interrupt me, and remind me of what I forget, or wherein I may mistake.

For, Gentlemen, I assure you, for my own part, I would not have the Law made subservient to any Purpose but the exact Rule of Justice. I would, to the best of my Understanding, in all Cases servare jus illæsum, preserve the Law and the Right of every man inviolable. I would have the Law of the Land to be the Measure of my own and all other men's Actions. And I hope no man can justly (I am sure I do not know they can) complain of any Breach or Invasion that is made in the Courts of Justice, either upon Law or Right. But all those that have the Administration of Justice committed to them by the Government, do behave themselves with all Equity and Impartiality towards all the King's Subjects; and the Law has as full and free a Course, and Justice doth every where take place as much as can be desired by any honest and good Man.

Gentlemen,

Gentlemen, In this Case, that you now are to try, I must first of all tell you, that this Business of the Right of Election, one way and the other, hath been too much insisted on on both sides. And I speak it, because tho' I myself in my own mind know what of it is true, and what not; yet I conceive it not so proper to be mentioned in this Case, it being no legal Evidence to the Point in question. Now it is a Duty incumbent upon you to observe, and upon the Court to suffer nothing to be urged so as to have any Weight with you, but what is legal Evidence. That you are only to mind, Gentlemen. So that if I mention to you any Point of Fact, that hath not been given in Evidence, as having a true Relation to this Issue, you are not to mind what I say to you about it. On the other side, I must likewise acquaint you, if there be any Difficulty in Point of Law in the Case; you are to observe the Directions of the Court, who will be always ready to assist and direct you in it. Or the Gentlemen, that are of Counsel on the one side, or the other, may have the Matter found specially, if they think there is Fact enough to be found to ground a Question upon.

Therefore, Gentlemen, for the Customs of the City of London, as to the manner of Elections, or who hath the Right to manage them, they are not at all material to this Business; and if they were, there is never a one of you, but know it as well as we, or any body doth. I myself had the Honour to serve the City of London in the Places of Common-Serjeant and Recorder several Years: So long ago, that not above one or two, that sit upon the Bench in the Court of Aldermen, have been longer conversant in Guild-hall, or know the Customs of London in those Matters better than I do.

It is notoriously known to all that have had any Dealing in London, or been acquainted with any thing there, that till within these six or seven Years last past, the Lord Mayor and Court of Aldermen, and the Common-Hall used to go a-birding for Sheriffs (you very well know what the Phrase means), and perhaps it was not once in ten times, that those that were chosen Sheriffs, held; but generally every Year, there were I know not how many Elections upon fining off, or swearing, or some Reason or other; so that now and then there was but one Sheriff chosen for a great while together; and now and then never a one from Midsummer-day till near Michaelmas. And the way was to consider, such a one hath most Money in his Pocket; Oh, then put him up for Sheriff: And then, if he went off, then another would be found out. And there was one old Deputy Savage, that used to keep a black Book, that would furnish Names for I know not how many Elections. And who should be Sheriff, so as to divide into Parties, and Poll, was never a Question before such time as Mr. Jenks, that they speak of, came to be put up, and there the Dispute began; then the Faction began to appear.

Now, if any Man offers to tell me, I apprehended always it was the Sheriffs Right to manage the Poll; I would ask him how that can be a Right that never was done before? Let them shew me any one Instance of a Poll for Sheriffs before that time. No, it was notoriously known when the Polls began, Persons did not think the Shrievalty such an Office, that it was so earnestly to be coveted and desired. Polls, indeed, used to be heretofore for the Bridgemasters Places, that are Places of Profit and Advantage; and so for Aleconners, and the like, those have been often in your Time and mine, Gentlemen, we may very well remember them. But this Office of Sheriff, People were not heretofore so ambitious of, as to poll for it; but the City was glad if they could get any worthy and fit Person to accept of it.

And for the Management of the Election, we all can tell the manner of it, as well as any thing in the World. After my Lord Mayor and the Court of Aldermen were gone off the Hustings, and retired to this Place, the Common-Serjeant staying there with the Sheriffs, used to make a Speech to the Common-Hall, a Rehearsal of what had been before said by the Recorder; and then received the Nomination of such Persons as were to be put to the Question for Election from the Common Hall. And upon the putting of the Question, every Man held up his Hand for those that he desired should be chosen; and if it could be decided by View of the Hands, well and good; and the Common-Serjeant, consulting with the Sheriffs and those about him, declared their Opinion, that the Election fell so and so, on the one side or on the other; but if doubtful, or a Poll demanded by any one, then they used to acquaint my Lord Mayor what was done in the Common Hall; and thereupon they gave Order for declaring the Election, or granting the Poll, and used to come down to the Hustings for that Purpose; and no one ever thought that either the Common-Serjeant or the Sheriffs, or any body else, but my Lord Mayor, had the Power of those Courts. For the Common Hall was always summoned by Precept from the Lord Mayor; and when the Business was done, or was to be put off to another Day, the Common Crier by Command from the Lord Mayor makes Proclamation, You good Men of the Livery, &c. may depart for this time, and give your Attendance here again such a Day, or upon further Summons. No body ever talked of summoning a Common Hall by any body but my Lord Mayor. He did it by Virtue of his Office, and he dissolved it, or adjourned it by Virtue of his Office. All this is as notoriously known to all Men, that know any thing of London, as the Faces of you of the Jury are to the People here, or to one another. And this never came to be a Question, till the Business of the Poll between Sir Simon Lewis and Jenks came about, which you have heard of. Mr. Papillon himself, when he was chosen Sheriff before, and fined for it, was chosen in this manner, and no other.

Mr. Cornish, he comes and gives Evidence that the Common-Serjeant was reckoned to be the Man that managed the Choice by Command and Direction of the Sheriffs. And some of those Gentlemen, that have been produced on the Defendant's side, they say, they have looked upon it as the Sheriffs Business. But alas-a-day, it belongs to neither of them, they are but Officers to the Lord Mayor. The Common-Serjeant's Business is but to put the Question into the Mouth of the Common Crier. In so much, that when I myself was Common-Serjeant, as I used to pass by the Shops in London, they used to cry, There goes So many of you as would have. It was as plain a Road of things, that every body knew it before these things untowardly have come to be imbrangled by our Factions and Divisions, and the heat of some busy Fellows. Here are a great many ancient Citizens, that I see, that know, and so you do all, Gentlemen, that this is true. So that all the Discourse of this Matter is but Flourish and Garniture, and doth not affect this Case at all, one way or other.

Another thing, Gentlemen, hath been mightily talked of, and urged, and insisted upon both by Plaintiff and Defendant: and that is, the Defendant's Right, or not Right of Election to the Office of Sheriff, and that the Majority was on his side, say his Counsel: On the other side say the Plaintiff's Counsel. And for the settling that Right, he brought his Action against the Plaintiff; but it being determined upon the Conviction for the Riot, There is no such thing, Gentlemen, as that it was therein determined: That cannot be a Determination of any Right at all. For tho' I may have a Right to an Office, or any such thing; yet I must pursue a legal Method to attain to that Right, and not go irregular Ways to work.

As if I have a Right to come into your House, because you have not paid me your Rent (to make my thoughts and meaning intelligible to you by a familiar Instance, which will shew what I intend) I must not make a Riot, and turn you by Violence out of Possession. For I have a legal Course to come by my Right, to wit, by bringing an Action, and evicting you. But if any Man attempt to get a Right in an unjust Manner, and he be punished for it by an Indictment or Information, that, I say, doth not determine the Question of Right, one way or other.

To come then to the Issue, that here you are to try, The Point of this Action before us resolves itself into a narrow Compass, and is only this in short, which you are to enquire of, Whether or no the Plaintiff was arrested by the Defendant without probable Cause, and maliciously?

Now Matters of Malice are things that remain in a Man's Heart; and it is impossible for me to discover, whether another Man hath a Malice against me, if I do not see it in his Actions. Malice being a thing that is internal, is not else discernible.

Therefore you must consider the Circumstances that do attend this Action of the Defendant, and if so be they are malicious, then you are to find for the Plaintiff: But if they for the Defendant have offered to you any Circumstances, that can prove, or convince you, that he had any Probability of a Cause of Action, and that not attended with a malicious Prosecution of that probable Cause, then the Issue is with the Defendant.

This is the right Question, and the Law of this Action; and the Fact to make it out one way or other is now in Judgment before you, upon the Evidence that hath been given on both sides.

Now, in point of Law, I am to tell you, and that you must observe, That tho' I have a probable conjectural Cause of Action against another Man; yet if, to obtain my End in that, I prosecute him maliciously, with a Design to ruin him, or to put an Indignity upon him, or the Character he bears in the Publick, or put a Hardship or Difficulty upon him (I mean an Hardship and Difficulty in point of Time), when it is probable the Remedy may be had at another time, and the same thing done with less injury and less trouble; then an Action will lie against me, for bringing my Action in such a manner; tho' it be true, that I had a conjectural Cause of Action against him.

As in the Case that was here in this Court the other Day, of Mr. Swincock against the Serjeant, that came to him, and told him in his Ear, that he had an Action against him; and this was upon the Exchange: Thereupon Mr. Swincock brings his Action for this, against this Man, for whispering this in his Ear: If he had proved any malicious Intention to disgrace him, no doubt the Action would have lien. For tho' there might be a Cause of Action against Swincock, yet if that be maliciously pursued to get him arrested, and held to Bail, where no Bail is required by Law; or with an Intent to disgrace him upon the Exchange, when it might have been done elsewhere, or at another time, this irregular malicious Proceeding will bear an Action. The pursuing malicious Ways to obtain a Right, makes a Man obnoxious to the Action of the Party so prosecuted. I desire to express myself by Words, that may declare my Meaning as plainly as can be: And I hope I do so.

Then, Gentlemen, taking it thus as the Counsel for the Plaintiff say, to shew that the Defendant had no probable Cause of Action against the Plaintiff; they endeavour to answer what is alledged on the other side as their probable Cause. And therefore, that we must consider first, what is said by the Defendant:

They tell you, here was an Election for Sheriffs of London, at Guildhall, where those Persons that they have nominated, were Candidates, and put in Nomination for that Office. And upon that Nomination, as say those three Witnesses, we were the Persons that had the Majority of Voices; and thereupon we apprehended ourselves chosen, which gave us the Right of Action: So the Defendant, say they, sheweth some Probability of a Cause of Action; and if he have not pursued it with Malice, but in a regular Way, the Probability of the Cause doth take off from the Malice, that else the very bringing of an Action without Cause, would imply in itself. And they say true, for I must repeat it again; if I have, prima facie, a probable Cause, and pursue it legally, no Action will lie against me for it.

But then, say they on the other side for the Plaintiff, That is no probable Cause; for you could from those Transactions have no such Apprehensions of a Right; for that is not the Measure of a Right of Election, or a Rule to guess who is elected by: For there being no Decision of the Election upon the holding up of the Hands, and a Poll being demanded; whereas the usual Method is to have, by the Lord Mayor's Order and Direction, the Poll taken by such as he shall appoint; you went another Way to work, you go your ways, and take Books to yourselves, and come not to the fair Determination of the Question: And they bring Mr. Town-Clerk to prove. You have heard what the Evidence is, and you are Judges of it.

Now take it, that this were in the Case of an Office of Profit; as suppose it were a Question between me and John-a-Stiles, for the Place of Bridgmaster, for the Purpose, and a Poll is demanded, and granted; if they, that have no Authority, shall go after the Court is adjourned by him that has Power, and take a Number of Names in the Way of a Poll by themselves, and upon that come and say, J. S. has four and twenty hundred, and I have but so many, that sure is not any probable Cause, nor a Right; for you have gone here out of the known and usual method of such Matters, and depend upon that which can give no Foundation of Right at all. This is the Answer that is given to that by the Counsel for the Plaintiff.

You may have fifty thousand Names for you after that rate, and yet not be elected, nor have probable Cause of any such Apprehension. We all remember Sir Samuel Sterling's Case, which was upon the Denial of a Poll for a Place of Profit, that is to say, the Bridgemaister's Place: But this is upon a wrong Poll.

Suppose there had been a Poll granted (as there was) in this Case, and upon that Poll thus managed, Sir Dudley North and Mr. Box had had the majority but by a very few, and there had been an Action brought in such a Case, here was a probable Cause as good as in this Case, as it now stands, because some of them might happen not to have legal Suffrages, yet the taking the Poll by Persons of their own Heads, after the Court was adjourned, avoids all: so that that would have signified nothing. You are to consider of this Answer of theirs.

Then the great thing, Gentlemen, that you are to observe, is this: To bring an Action alone will scarce amount to a Proof of Malice; therefore Malice being in this Issue a great Point of Fact, you must weigh the Evidence whether the Circumstances do shew it, that there was Malice in Mr. Papillon. If the Circumstances are enough to amount to a Proof of Malice, you then are to find for the Plaintiff, and you are the Judges what Damages it is fit to give him for that Injury: He has laid Ten Thousand Pounds; but you must do what you, that are Judges of it, think fit in it.

Come, Gentlemen, it is best to be plain, and no Man needs to be thought wanting of an Apprehension, what is the meaning of all these things. It is commonly and universally known to all Mankind:

First, That no Man ever did pursue such an Action as this is, to be Sheriff, till these unhappy Times, wherein we are, and wherein we have lost that Quiet and Felicity, which I pray God we may be restored unto. And tho' it is true, a Man may lawfully sue for such an Office, and it is no Offence, yet it looks somewhat extraordinary, and that a Man has a mind to do something unusual in the Place, 'tis for some strange purpose or other, especially when a Man has fined for the Office once before, as we all know Mr. Papillon did.

Again, It is notoriously known, That for several Years last past the Government hath been beset: And that which is a baser Thing than ever was thought of, or acted in the highest times of Villany in these Kingdoms (I mean those of the late Rebellion), the very Methods of Justice have been corrupted, and all to serve the main Design of subverting the Government.

Gentlemen, this is so black a Wickedness, that no honest Man, that has any Sense of Loyalty, Religion, or common Justice, but must tremble at the very thoughts of it. When we see such Fellows as are obnoxious to the Government, known Dissenters from the Established Worship, and that never thought of conforming to the Government, or the Laws, Civil or Ecclesiastical, or complying with the Church, but only to capacitate them to destroy it; nay, when Men, that are taken notice of to be common Reproaches to the Government under which they live, shall get into Office to make Ignoramus Juries, and to enable People to commit and be guilty of all the Falsities and Basenesses that Human Nature is capable of, no Man living, that has any Ingenuity or Goodness in him, but must cry out against it.

When Men begin to take Oaths to sanctify Villany, and enter into Clans, and Clubs, and Cabals, to destroy the most Merciful of Kings, and to disturb, distract, and overthrow the best of Governments, What shall we say? And all this you, all of you, Gentlemen, know to be true. Was it not more safe to commit Treason in the City, than to sit upon a Bench of Justice to bring the Traitors to Judgment? Was it not more safe to conspire the Death of the King and his Brother, than to give the least Frown, or look of Displeasure against one of these snivelling Saints? Did not we know that Men were sanctified to be Jurymen, to enquire of Conspiracies against the King's Life and Government, that before that time were never thought fit to be trusted with the common Discourses or Society of honest Men?

When Men were thought fittest for Offices of such high Trust, according to their being thought capable of, and well-intended, to the overthrow of the Government: Do not we all know this to be as true as that the Sun shines at Noon-day? When Traitors at the Bars were in less danger of being convicted of their Treasons, than the Judges were of their Lives?

Mr. Papillon knows all this to be true eminently. When packed Juries were grown to that height, and though seven or eight Witnesses came and swore positive downright Treason, the Traitor could not be by these Men so much as thought fit to be accused by an Indictment; to that Stupidity in Villany were things brought by these Fellows: Nay, so far were the Proceedings in Courts of Justice tainted, that in no common Action whatsoever, that came here to be tried, but cropped Hair, and a demure Look, were the best Signs of a good Evidence, and the Business of an Oath signified nothing, provided the Party were to be propped up, and the Faction to receive an Advantage by it.

For God's sake, Gentlemen, let any Man but seriously consider and believe that there is a God in Heaven, and a dreadful Day of Judgment, when every one of us must answer for every Thought of our Hearts, every Word of our Mouths, and every Action of our Lives; and then tell me, what horrid Impieties there are; such as any ordinary ingenuous Person would blush and tremble at.

And I would have Mr. Cornish to consider, whether ever, till that time of famous, or rather infamous Memory, that he and his Fellow-Sheriff Mr. Bethel came into that Office, there were ever in London such Things as Tavern>Returns of Juries, or Clans and Cabals how to pack Fellows together for such wicked Purposes as these?

Do not most of you here know this? And doth not every one of your Hearts and Consciences agree with me in it? How far unlike the Proceedings of those Times, in reference to Juries, were from what they anciently were? I have had the Honour to practise in this Place among you in my Profession, when without any disturbance, or mixture of Faction and Sedition, we were all quiet, and every one knew his Duty, and Justice was done in this Place so regularly, that it was grown to a common Proverb: if there were any Cause of any Difficulty, they would use to say to one another, Come, we will be so fair with you as to try it by a London Jury. So far was it then from being thought, that in the City of London Justice should be corrupted, that the Ordinary Juries of London were thought the best Judges, and most impartial of any in the Kingdom. I appeal to all the Practisers of those Times that hear me, if what I say be not true.

But when once they had begun to pick and cull the Men that should be returned for a Purpose, and got this Factional Fellow out of one Corner, and that pragmatical, pricked-eared, snivelling, winking Rascal out of another Corner, to prop up the Cause, and serve a Turn, then truly People's Causes were tried according to the Demureness of the Looks on the one Side or the other, not the Justice of the Cause.

Gentlemen, I take myself bound to tell you of these Things, and I wish I had no reason for it; and especially in this Case I should not do it, it being a private Action between Man and Man, were it not for the Ingredients that are in the Case, and that any Man, that has any Sense, may perceive.

Now, then, for this Case before you, Gentlemen, I desire, if possible, to be satisfied in one Thing or two: My Lord Mayor of London, it is true, is not, nor no Person whatsoever, be he of never so great Quality, is exempt from the Law: If he owe any Man any thing, he is bound to answer it to him, as much as any the meanest Citizen of London, or poorest Subject the King has. But is he to be arrested just at such a Time, because he is Chief Governor of the City, and the Action will found the greater? And the Court of Aldermen, are they to be arrested, because they are his Ministers, and necessary subservient Assistants to him in his Government, in such a Time as this was, when the Government, both in the City and elsewhere, was surrounded with Difficulties, and in great Danger on all Sides? What occasion was there for such haste and speed in this Action to be done just then? Would Mr. Papillon and Mr. Dubois have starved, if this Action had been suspended for a while? Sir William Pritchard would have been as answerable to this, or any Man's Action, when the Year of his Office had been out: But it carrieth Vengeance and Malice in the very face of it; it speaks, that therefore they would do it, because he was then Lord Mayor, the chief Person in the City for the Time, and thereby they should affront the Government, in arresting and imprisoning the King's Lieutenant, in one of the highest Places both of Trust and Honour. And this would be sure to make a great noise, and the Triumph of the Action would make their Party then to be uppermost, having got the chief Governor of the City in their own Clutches.

Nay, and because they would be sure their Malice and Revenge should take place, they take the very Scoundrels of the Party to be employed in this great Work. For before that time, the Coroner (as he tells you himself) used to make his Warrants to the Officers that usually are versed in that Business; but here he must have the Direction of the Attorney, and who is that but Goodenough, a Man we have all heard enough of; and then Burleigh and Keeling must be employed, and by whose Advice, but by Goodenough's and Nelthorpe's? And all these Rascals, who now stand attainted of Treason, must be fetched in to consult about a fit Man to make an Arrest: And there they pitch upon this Man Keeling for one, who was one of the principal Conspirators in that damnable, hellish Plot against the King's Life, and that of his Royal Brother; but, by the Blessing and Providence of Almighty God, was made use of as a great Instrument of preserving those precious Lives, and with them our Government and Religion, and all that is dear to us, which by that Conspiracy was undermined, and I wish we had not Reason to say, and think, the Conspiracy still to be going on. But I hope in God the Government, as established both in Church and State, will always be able to prevail, maugre all Designs, and those that are engaged in them, for its Destruction.

Now Keeling tells you he scrupled the Employment: No, said he, I desired not to have my Name put in, because I was never concerned in any such Thing before, and my Business was of another Sort. But then Mr. Goodenough (and Mr. Brome the Coroner no doubt had a Hand in it, though now he has a very treacherous Memory, and has forgot all that was done) comes and tells him, You must concern yourself, and do this thing; for you have a Trade with the Party, and it will be ill taken if you do not do it. And being asked, whom he meant by the Party? He tells you, the discontented Party; and he explains their Discontent to be such, that they would have killed the King and the Duke. Now how far he was engaged with that Party is pretty well known, and therefore if he boggled at such a thing as this, which that Party it seems was engaged in, they would suspect him, and so, for the Party's sake, he was drawn in.

But then, when this Thing is done, pray, Gentlemen, do but consider what the Consequences might have been, and which, perhaps, (nay upon what has happened to be discovered since, doubtless) they did design it. But, God be thanked, those Consequences were prevented, and they themselves have Cause to be thankful to God Almighty for it. For here all the Magistrates of the City, that had any Care for the good Government of it, were to be taken up, and then here was a Body without a Head, a Town full of Faction without any Government, and if the heady Rabble had been once up, without those that had Authority to restrain them, where then had been your Liberties or Properties, Gentlemen, or any Man's; nay, theirs that were engaged in this Design, if they had any? For those were Things much talked of by them. In what Danger had you, and all you had, for Life, Estate, Relations, and every thing been? But it pleased God in his infinite Mercy to shower down upon us, and upon this City, and the Government, in a mighty Preservation, putting it into the Hearts of some in Power, to bring the City-Militia some of them them together, and prevent this Mischief, or else, God knows, this whole City might have been by this time once more in Ashes, and most of the King's Subjects wallowing in their own and one another's Blood; and their Party too would have felt the sad Effects of it, no doubt, as well as others. So that the Consequence of it was to destroy the Government, and that appears by the Party's being engaged in it; it could not be to gain a Right, to make this Hubbub and Add to arrest the Magistrates of the City, and then take Advantage for some other wicked Purpose.

Another Point of Circumstance that is considerable in this Case, is the particular Persons that were to be sued. The Mandamus, that was directed to the Lord Mayor and Aldermen; and there is a Return made, not by this, or that, or the other Man, but in the Name of them all, the whole Court. How comes it then to pass, that my Lord Mayor, Sir Henry Tulse, and those other Gentlemen, must be sued and arrested? But I warrant you Mr. Cornish, or his Party, were not to be meddled with. No, he had so much Zeal for Justice, and to do the Defendant Right, that if he should have been called upon to appear, he would not have stood out an Arrest; so just a Man he is, and such a Lover of Right without all doubt: but he was in no danger, I dare say; they loved one another too well to sue one another. That, I say, Gentlemen, is another Circumstance, that carrieth Malice in it. For I must tell you, these Things cannot be smothered, they are as apparent as the light: And though it falls to my Turn in this Cause, to remind you of them; yet they are as well known to you all, as the Passages in your own Families.

No, Gentlemen, there was not a Pursuit of Right in the Case; it was a designed Piece of Villany on purpose to affront the Government; nay, to destroy it, and set us all together by the Ears. And if he were ten thousand times Mr. Papillon, I would, and must tell him so; and if it were not for some such devilish End and Purpose, he would never have been so greedy of an Office he had before declined and fined for; and which he was only called to by a turbulent, seditious, factious Party, that had further Aims in it. Otherwise, I know Mr. Papillon's Humour so well, that I am confident, he would much rather have been contented to sit in his Counting-house, than in Guildhall in a Scarlet Gown. Alack-a-day! I know Mr. Papillon knows how to spend his Time to better Advantage to himself.

Ay, but say the Counsel for the Defendant, We did go on very tenderly, and civilly, and respectfully; for there met at Mr. Cornish's House—Who, I pray? Mr. Papillon, and Mr. Dubois, and Goodenough, the prime Attorney in this Cause: And there, forsooth, they tell Goodenough, Be sure you do nothing but what is exactly according to Law; and be sure you carry it very civilly and respectfully to my Lord Mayor, good Mr. Goodenough. Alack-a-day! how wonderful pious and considerate these People are! If Mr. Cornish had gone to my Lord Mayor, as it was his Duty to do, being then an Alderman (we know it full well) and said to my Lord Mayor, There were such Persons at my House talking of such a Matter, and I come to advertise you of it, and desire you would consider of it, he had shewn his Piety and Zeal, and Love for Justice, much more in that, than in admitting such Cabals in his House. But we know very well, as well as if we were in them, that they must go hand in hand in all these seditious and factious Businesses.

It is plain, Gentlemen, what the Design was from the Beginning to the End; nothing but to cause a Tumult and Confusion in the City, in order to put that damned hellish Conspiracy, for the Destruction of the King and his Brother, and every Man that was honest and loyal, in Execution. This is certainly known to you all; and that there should be such a Parcel of People untowardly linked together in this Matter, not one Man of which that they can pretend to be in any wise a Well-wisher to the Government, or to any that have any share in it: No, they are all Persons that are obnoxious to the Government, that had any Hand in it; but none of them Church of England-men, or Friends to her established Worship; notorious Dissenters, or profligate Atheistical Villains that herd together.

This, Gentlemen, is plain English, and necessary to be used upon all these Occasions: So that it remains now upon your Consciences, whether upon all these Circumstances that have been mentioned, you think the bare obtaining of a Right in a Legal Course, or some worse Thing was designed.

We all know Mr. Papillon to be a wealthy Man, an able Merchant; one that had rather have minded his Affairs Abroad, or at the Exchange, than the expensive, troublesome Office of Sheriff of London, but that something was to be done to wreak a damned Malice and Revenge upon the Government. And sure, he must think, as his Party it seems did, that they would not be sufficient to subvert the Government, unless he could get into that Office.

This I tell him openly; and let him or his Party make their Remarks upon it as they please. But you are to judge whether these Things be a sufficient Evidence of Malice to support the Plaintiff's Action.

There was questionless a devilish Malice fixed in his heart and mind, and he wanted an Opportunity to effect it; and he thought it for his own Security to be best to take this Course, and nothing else was in it. For abundance of People have a mind to do Mischief, but want Opportunity and safe Ways to do it in: And, Oh! they rejoice, if they hit upon a Project, that shall carry a specious Pretence and Colour of Law; for then they think they are safe enough.

As in case I have a mind to do any particular Man an Injury in his Reputation and Business; the Business must not be done downright, by going to every body, and saying, Such an one is Poor, or a Beggar, and do not trust him; but I must cunningly and slyly insinuate it, I am sorry for such a Man, I believe he is an honest Man, but however he oweth Money; and under this Sort of Snivelling, Canting, Whining, sly Rate, do a Man any Injury whatsoever: And yet, forsooth, he shall have no Advantage against me for it: I shall strike a Dart into the very Heart of that Man's Credit, and yet he have no Remedy.

So, if I have a mind to talk against the Government, I will not do it aloud, and speak what I mean openly; but I will whine, and snivel, and cant, and make People believe I have dreadful Apprehensions of what is designing, and yet not bring myself in any Danger; for I will keep within Bounds all the while, though I do more Mischief than if I dealt fairly and above-board. Alack-a-day! (as Mr. Pilkington said) I am for the Preservation of the Liberty and Properties of the Subject, and I am for the Law; but I find the City is strangely run down in their Rights and Privileges, and there are very Arbitrary Proceedings. And I am a Citizen, and have taken my Oath to preserve the Privileges of the City; and I will rather submit to the Inconvenience of a troublesome Office, than let all run thus: And immediately he sets himself Cock-a-hoop, as if there were no one that took care of the City besides himself, and he were such a Patriot, that there were none like him: And he, and Mr. Bethel, and Mr. Cornish, forsooth, are the only Men of the times; the only good Men; Men that are for the Liberties and Properties of the Subject, and the Rights of the City: Whereas these are the only Men that have made an Invasion upon them, and done what they could to destroy them; and God knows we might all of us have enjoyed very quietly every Man his own, if these contesting Rioters, and busy factious Fellows, had not come among us. Every honest Man, I tell you, knows this to be true.

Gentlemen, As to the Business concerning the Damages, that, if you find for the Plaintiff, is left to your Judgments to consider of, and give what you shall think fit upon such an Occasion. It is very true, it is not so easy a matter to ascertain particular Damages in such a Case; nor is it in an ordinary way so easy to prove, that because Sir William Pritchard was in Prison but five or six Hours there, he could suffer so much Damage as comes to ten thousand Pounds. As in the Case of a Person of great Quality and Honour, it is not easy to prove his particular Damage; nor in the Case of any of you, that are wealthy, able, sufficient Citizens, to say you are a Bankrupt, when we all know it is impossible to be true; and so no particular Damage doth ensue that can be proved; yet, however, if the thing for which the Action is brought were designed with Malice, tho' the ill Design be not effected, that is no thanks to the Party, nor is to weigh with you, but the malicious Design must govern you.

Now, here I have taken notice to you, that the Malice of this Design here was not against Sir William Pritchard as such a particular Man, but against my Lord Mayor, that this Clan that met at Russell's was an Overflowing of that Gail or Malice that was in his Heart.

If Mr. Papillon had brought an Action upon a Bond only, certainly it had been nothing but what he might very well do; or if he had pretended to sue for a bad Debt, that if he had staid would have been lost, it had been something: But you see what it was, and it is as apparent why it was, in that Mr. Goodenough said to Keeling, threatening him with the displeasure of the Party if he did not do it; and Mr. Goodenough and Mr. Brome were such Strangers to one another, that he must threaten Brome to complain of him, if he did not execute his Writs presently. Do they think all Mankind are so dull or blind, as not to see through such thin artificial Stuff as this?

Gentlemen, this is the Matter: The Government is a Thing that is infinitely concerned in the Case, that makes it so popular a Cause: The Government of the City, the Honour of your Chief Magistrate, and indeed the Honour of the King, whose Substitute he was, is concerned, and that puts a Weight upon your Inquiry into the Damages of this Case. You are to consider you give Damages to the Plaintiff, not as Sir William Pritchard, but as Lord Mayor: And your Severity in this Case will deter all People from entering into Clans and Cabals to make Disturbances, and affront the Government.

It is a thousand times better to keep within their own Bounds, mind their Callings and Employments, and concern themselves with their own Affairs, and leave the Administration of the Publick to them to whom it belongs, and is intrusted with. And according as we say in the Law Maxim, so say I to Mr. Papillon and all the Party, Ad Concilium ne accedas, antequam voceris. And do not be scared with imaginary Dangers, and groundless Jealousies, into tumultuous and disorderly Courses. You had much better keep in your Counting-House, I tell you again, and mind your Merchandize, Nay, and I do not doubt but you would much rather have done so, if there had not been some further fetch in it. It was not, I dare say, out of a frank, generous Humour to oblige the City, that Mr. Papillon would have spent his Time and Money in the Office of Sheriff; no, I know he had better ways to employ both.

It was not the generous Mind of Mr. Bethel, that called him on to be Sheriff of London, to entitle him to spend his Money; but on purpose to be one of the first, that should turn all things upside down in the City, and disturb the Government: And they that succeeded him, carried on the Project; and they that would have been in, but could not, had a mind, no doubt, to follow so worshipful an Example as he laid before them.

Then the Jury withdrew to consider of their Verdict, and after half an Hour's Stay, returned, and found for the Plaintiff, and assessed Damages to Ten Thousand Pounds, and Costs to Four Marks.

L. C. J. Gentlemen, You seem to be Persons that have some Sense upon you, and Consideration for the Government, and I think have given a good Verdict, and are to be greatly commended for it.

CXXXIII. The Trial of ROBERT BAILLIE in Scotland, for High-Treason, December 3, 1684.

D. N. Regis.

Curia legitime affirmata.

Intrat.

Mr. Robert Baillie of Jerviswood, Prisoner,

INDITED and accused, that where notwithstanding by the Common Law of this, and all other well-governed Nations, the Conspiring to overturn the Government of the Monarchy, or of the Established Government of this Kingdom, or the concealing, and not revealing of any Treasonable Design, Project, or Discourse tending thereto; or the assisting, aiding, or abetting such as have any such Designs, does infer the Pains and Punishment of Treason. And by the third Act of the first Parliament of King James I. The Rebelling openly against the King's Person; and by the threety-seventh Act of His second Parliament, The Resetting, Maintaining, or doing Favours to open or notour Rebels against the King's Majesty, is declared Treason, and punishable by Forfeiture. And by the hundred fourth and fourth Act of the twelfth Parliament of King James VI. It is declared Treason to Resist, Supply, or Intercommune with Traitors. And by the first Act of the first Session of His Majesty's first Parliament, It is declared, That it shall be High-Treason for the Subjects of this Realm, or any number of them, less or more, upon any ground or pretext whatsoever, to rise, or continue in Arms, to make Peace or War, without His Majesty's special Approbation. And by the second Act of the second Session of His Majesty's said first Parliament, To Plot, Contrive, or Intend Death, or Destruction, or to put any Restraint upon his Majesty's Royal Person, or to Deprive, Depose, or Suspend him from the Exercise of His Royal Government, or to levy War, or take up Arms against his Majesty, or any Commissioned by Him, or to incite any Strangers or others to invade any of his Majesty's Dominions, or to Write, Print, or Speak anything that may express or declare such their Treasonable Intentions, is declared Treason, and punishable as such. Likeas, by the second Act of His Majesty's third Parliament, It is declared High-Treason in any of the Subjects of this Realm, by Writing, Speaking, or any other manner of way, to endeavour the Alteration, Suspension, or Diversion of the Right of Succession, or debarring the next lawful Successor. Nevertheless, it is of verity, that the said Mr. Robert Baillie of Jerviswood, shaking off all Fear of God, Respect and Regard to His Majesty's Authority and Laws, and having conceived most unjustly, a great and extraordinary Malice and Hatred against His Majesty's Person and Government, and having designed most Traiterously to debar His Royal Highness, His Majesty's only Brother, from his due Right of Succession, did, amongst many other Traiterous Acts, tending to promote that wicked Design, endeavour to get himself Elected one of the Commissioners for negotiating the Settlement of a Colony of this Nation in Carolina, in one or other of the Days of the Moneths of January, February, March, April, or May, One thousand six hundred and eighty three Years; and that he might thereby have the freer and better Access to treat with the Earls of Shaftesbury and Essex, the Lord Russell and others, who had entered into a Conspiracy in England against His Majesty's Person and Government, and with Colonel Rumsey, Walcot,

West, and Ferguson, and others, who had likewise conspired the Murder of his Majesty's sacred Person, and of the Person of His Royal Highness; and finding that he could not get himself Elected one of the said Commissioners, he resolved to go to London upon his own Expences, and declared to severals (whom he took great pains to draw in to be his Accomplices) that his Design was to push forward the People of England, who did nothing but talk, that they might go on effectually; and after he had settled a Correspondency here, he did go up to London in one or other of the said Moneths, with Sir John Cockran and Commissar Monro, and did then, and there, transact with the said Conspirators, or one or other of them, to get a Sum of Money to the late Earl of Argyle, a Declared Traitor, for bringing home of Men and Arms, for raising a Rebellion against his Majesty, and invading this his Native Country; and so earnest was he in the said Design, that he did chide those English Conspirators, for not sending the same timeously, and lamented the Delays used in it; and persuaded the late Earl of Argyle, and others in his Name, to accept of any Sum, rather than not to engage; and amongst the many Meetings that he had at London, for carrying on the said Traiterous Design, there was one at his own Chamber, where he did meet with the Lord Melvil, Sir John Cockran, and the Cessnocks Elder and Younger, and amongst others, with Mr. William Veitch, a Declared Traitor, and there he did treat of the carrying on of the said Rebellion, and of the Money to be furnished by the English for Argyle, for buying of Arms; and that if the Scots would attempt any thing for their own Relief, they would get Assistance of Horse from England; and from that Meeting, he or one or other of them did send down Mr. Robert Martin to prevent any rising, till it should be seasonable for carrying on of their Designs; which Mr. Robert, after he came to Scotland, did treat with Polwart, and others, for carrying on of the said Rebellion, by securing his Majesty's Officers of State, his Castles and Forces, and by putting his Correspondents here, and their Associates, in readiness to assist the late Earl of Argyle; and after the said Mr. Baillie had engaged many of his Countrymen in England, and had assured his Correspondents here, that the English were resolved to seclude His Royal Highness from his due Right of Succession, thereby to encourage them to concur in the said Rebellion, and Exclusion, he flew to that hight, that he did particularly and closely correspond with Mr. Robert Ferguson, Sir Thomas Armstrong, Colonel Rumsey, and Walcot, who were accessory to that horrid Part of the Conspiracy, which was designed against the sacred Life of His Majesty, and the Life of His Royal Highness, and did fit up several Nights with them, concerting that bloody Massacre; at least the said Mr. Robert Baillie of Jerviswood was, and is guilty of having Correspondence with the late Earl of Argyle, and Mr. William Veitch, declared Traitors, and of being art and part of an Conspiracy, for assisting of these, who were to rise in Arms against His sacred Majesty, and for Exclusion of His Royal Brother, and of concealing and not revealing the Accession and Proposals of others for that effect. Wherethrow he has committed, and is guilty of the Crimes of High-Treason, Rebellion, and others above specified, and is art and part of the same, which being found by an Assize, he ought to be punished with Forfeiture of Life, Land, and Goods, to the Terror of others to commit the like hereafter.

His Majesty's Advocat produced an Act and Warrant from the Lords of his Majesty's most Honourable Privy Council, for pursuing and insisting against the said Mr. Robert Baillie of Jerviswood, whereof the Tenor follows. Edinburgh, the twenty two Day of December, one thousand six hundred and eighty four Years: The Lords of his Majesty's Privy Council do hereby give Order and Warrant to His Majesty's Advocat to pursue a Process of Treason and Forfeiture, before the Lords of his Majesty's Justiciary, against Mr. Robert Baillie of Jerviswood, to morrow at two o'Clock in the Afternoon precisely, and the said Lords do hereby Require and Command Sir George Lockhart of Carnwath, and Sir John Lauder Advocats, to concur, and assist in the said Process with His Majesty's Advocat, from the intending, until the End thereof, as they will be answerable upon their Allidgiance. Extract by me, sic subscribitur,

The Pannals Procurators produced an Act of His Majesty's Privy Council, in their favours, whereof the Tenor follows. Edinburgh, the twenty-third of December, one thousand six hundred eighty four Years: The Lords of his Majesty's Privy Council having considered an Address made to them, by Mr. Robert Baillie of Jerviswood, now indited at the Instance of his Majesty's Advocat, before the Lords Commissioners of Justiciary, of Treason, do hereby require and command Sir Patrick Hume, Mr. Walter Pringle, Mr. James Graham, Mr. William Fletcher, Mr. James Falconer, Mr. William Baillie, Advocats, to Consult, Compare, and Debate for the Petitioner, in the Process of Treason, mentioned in his Address, without any hazard, as they will be answerable at their Peril. Extract by me, sic subscribitur, William Paterson, Cls. Sti. Concilii.

After reading of the Inditement, The Lord Justice General required the Pannal to make answer thereto.

The said Mr. Robert Baillie, Pannal, pleaded Not Guilty.

Mr. Walter Pringle Advocate, as Procurator for the said Mr. Robert Baillie of Jerviswood, Pannal, alleadges that he ought not to pass to the knowledge of an assize; because he had not got a Citation upon fifteen Days, or at least on a competent time, which is usual, and absolutely necessary in all Actions, and much more in Criminal Pursuits, especially, seeing, if a competent time be not allowed to the Pannal, he is precluded of the Benefit of an Exculpation, without which he cannot prove his Objections against Witnesses, or Assyzers, or any other legal or competent Defences; and by the late Act of Parliament concerning the Justice Court, all Pannals are allowed to raise Precepts of Exculpation, and thereupon to cite Witnesses for proving the Objections against Witnesses, and Assyzers, which necessarily presupposeth, that a competent time must be allowed to the Pannal to execute his Diligence, or otherwise, how is it possible he can prove a Defence of alibi, or any other just Defence? And as this is most consonant to that clear Act of Parliament, and to material Justice, and to the Rules of Humanity; so this Point has been already fully and often decided, and lately in the Case of one Robertson, in July 1673, the Instance whereof is given by His Majesty's Advocate in his Book of Criminals, and Title of Libels, where the Lords found, that albeit Robertson got his Inditement in Prison, yet he behaved to get it upon fifteen Days.

His Majesty's Advocat oppons the constant Tract of Decisions, whereby it is found, that a Person incarcerated may be tried upon twenty four Hours; and the late Act of Parliament is only in the Case where a Summons or Libel is to be raised; but here there is no Libel or Summons, but only an Inditement; nor was any Exculpation sought in this Case, before the Trial, which is the Case provided for by Act of Parliament.

The Lords, Justice General, Justice Clerk, and Commissioners of Justiciary, repel the Defence, in respect the Pannal is a Prisoner, and that it has been the constant Custom of the Court, and that the Pannal made no former application for an Exculpation.

Sir Patrick Hume for the Pannal alleadges (always denying the Libel, and whole Members, and Qualifications thereof), that in so far as the Libel is founded upon harbouring, maintaining, and intercommuning with the Persons mentioned in the Dittay, the Pannal ought to be assylzied, because it is res bacenus judicata, he having been formerly pursued before the Lords of his Majesty's Privy Council for the same Crimes, and fined in a considerable Sum; and therefore that Crime cannot now be made use of as a ground of Treason against the Pannal.

His Majesty's Advocat answers, That he restricts his Libel to the Pannal's entering in a Conspiracy for raising Rebellion, and for procuring Money to be sent to the late Earl of Argyle, for carrying on the said Rebellion; and for concealing, and not revealing; neither of which is referred to his Oath; and consequently was not res judicata, there being nothing referred to his Oath; but his Converse and Correspondence with some Ministers, and others within the Kingdom, and his own Gardiner, and his writing Letters to my Lord Argyle; and oppons the Decreet of Council itself, and restricts the Libel to all the Crimes not insisted on in the Decreet.

Sir Patrick Hume replies, That as to the Corresponding with the late Earl of Argyle at any time since his Forfaulture, was expressly proposed as an Interrogator to the Pannal in that Pursuit, at His Majesty's Advocat's Instance against him, before the Lords of His Majesty's Privy Council, and that not only his own Correspondence by himself, but also by Major Holms, Mr. Carstairs, Robert West, Thomas Shepherd, Richard Rumbold, and Colonel Rumsay, as the Interrogator bears, as appears by a double of the Act of Council, written by the Clerk of Council's Servant, and is offered to be proven by my Lord Advocat's Oath: And as to any Correspondency with Mr. Veitch, it is not relevant, since he was not declared Rebel.

Sir John Lauder for His Majesty's Interest, answers, That he oppons the Decreet of Privy Council, where no such Interrogator was put to the Pannal, and the Decreet must make more Faith than any pretended Scroll, and cannot be taken away by His Majesty's Advocat's Oath, to His Majesty's Prejudice; and for Mr. William Veitch, he stands expressly Forfault in Anno 1667, and the Doom of Forfaulture is ratified in the Parliament 1669.

Sir Patrick Hume oppons the Reply, That as to the Corresponding with Mr. Veitch, it does not appear that he is the Person mentioned in the Act of Parliament; and albeit he were, as he is not, he having thereafter come home to Scotland, all the Punishment inflicted upon him was Banishment, not to return under the Pain of Death, which did take off any former Punishment; and it was no Crime in any Person to intercommune with him, especially in another Kingdom; and by the late Act of Council in Anno 1683, even the Converse and Intercommuning with declared Traitors, is restricted to an Arbitrary Punishment.

His Majesty's Advocat oppons the standing Doom of Forfaulture against Veitch, and the Proclamation, or Act of Council itself.

The Lords, Justice General, Justice Clerk, and Commissioners of Justiciary, having considered the Libel pursued by his Majesty's Advocat, against Mr. Robert Baillie of Jerviswood, with my Lord Advocat's Declaration, whereby he restricts the same to the Crimes not insisted on in the Decreet of Council formerly pronounced against the Pannal: They find the same Relevant as it is restricted, to infer the Pain of Treason, and remits the same to the knowledge of the Assize, and repels the remnant Defences proposed for the Pannal, in respect of the Decreet of Council produced, bearing no such thing as is alledged, and of the Answers made by his Majesty's Advocat thereto.

THE Assize lawfully sworn, no Objection of the Law in the contrary.

His Majesty's Advocat for Probation adduced the Witnesses and Writs aforementioned; and first,

Walter Earl of Tarras.

Sir Patrick Hume Procurator for the Pannal, objects against the Earl of Tarras, that he cannot be a Witness, because he is socius & particeps criminis; and it is clear by the 34 Chap. Stat. 2. Rob. 1. concerning these that are excluded from bearing of Testimony, that Socii & Participes ejusdem criminis, vel incarcerati & vinculati, cannot bear Testimony: As also, the Earl of Tarras being presently under an Inditement of High Treason, and under the Impressions of Fear, and Death, no Person in his Circumstances can be admitted a Witness, as is not only clear from the foresaid Statute, but from the Common Law.

VOL. III.

His Majesty's Advocat answers, That it is an Exception from that Rule, both by the Common Law, and ours, that in the Crime of lese Majestie, and especially that Branch thereof which we call a Conspiracy, socius Criminis may be a Witness, and which is introduced very reasonably by Lawyers to secure the Common Interest of Mankind, which is the Chief of all Interests; and because Conspiracies cannot be otherways proved, and not to allow this manner of Probation, were to allow Treason, since no Man can prove a Plot, but he that is upon it; and how can a Man object against him as a Witness, whom himself trusted with his Life, his Fortune, and their common Plot? Nor is the intenting of the Libel any stronger Qualification, since every Man that is socius criminis, is under the same Impression, and it would rather seem the greater and nearer apprehensions a Man has of Death, he will be the more sincere and faithful; nor has the Earl of Tarras, nor did he ever seek any Security, in order to his deponing. And this has been constantly, and latlie, conform to the Common Law, as may be seen in the hundreds of Citations set down by Mascard, de Probationibus, Vol. 4. conclus. 1318. Num. 21. and the contrary Citations prove only, that regularly socius criminis cannot be a Witness.

Sir Patrick Hume replies, That the Statutes of Robert the first is opposed, and non est distinguendum, ubi lex non distinguit; and not only was he socius criminis, which is acknowledged, but he is incarceratus, and lying under an Inditement of High Treason, and has thrown himself on the King's Mercy; and it is not proper he should be a Witness, seeing he is in the King's Mercy, who may give him his Life, or not; and there was never a Person in these Circumstances that ever was admitted a Witness.

Mr. Walter Pringle adds, That the Earl of Tarras is not only in the Case of a Person who stands indited for High Treason; but must be looked upon as a Person condemned for the said Crime, seeing he fully and amply confessed the Crime; & confessus habetur pro convicto, and never any Lawyer asserted, That damnatus criminis lese Majestatis could be admitted as a Witness; and there is nothing more clear, than that by the common Law, and the Law of all Nations, this Objection ought to be sustained; for the civil Law is clear, leg. 11. cod. de testibus, and Mathews in his Title, de Probationibus, cap. de Testibus, doth assert positivlie, that the Cryme of lese Majestie, Heresie, and generally all these Crymes, quae sine sociis non possunt facile admitti, are not excepted. And he asserts, that the Lawyers, viz. Gomefius and Decianus, who are of another Opinion, do acknowledge, nominatum a reo damnandum non esse, and that they contravert only, An nominatio rei sit indicium sufficiens ad torquendum nominatum?

Sir George Lockhart repeats, and oppons the Answer, and the Cryme libelled, being a Conspiracy of Treason, which of its own Nature is managed and carried on by Secrecie and Contrivance; and which is only known to the Complices of the Treason, and which cannot be committed sine sociis. The Laws of this Kingdom, and of all Nations, do allow socius criminis to be testes habiles; and not only are they admitted in the case of such Conjurations, but generally in omnibus criminibus exceptis, amongst which the Crime of Perduellion, and lese Majestie in the chief; and it is absolutely impossible, that Plots and Conspirations of Treason can be otherways proven, than per socios, and such as are participes criminis, and which is the common Opinion of all Lawyers, as may appear by Farin. Quast. 45. and the Authorities cited by him, and which is the inviolable Practique of this Kingdom: And as to that Pretence, That the Earl of Tarras is under a Process of Treason, and has submitted to His Majesty's Mercy, and that confessus habetur pro convicto, it imports nothing, and infers no more than that he is socius criminis, and is still a habilis Witness: As to Conjuraton of Treason, socius criminis hoc ipso, that it is acknowledged, or proven, being still under the hazard of Process, or Condemnation, which Law regards not in regard of the Secrecie involved in the nature of the Crime, that either Witnesses neque actu, neque habitu, can be present; so that the Objection amounts to no less than that Conjurations of Treason cannot at all be proven: And as to the Law cited from the Majestie, it imports no more than that the Objection regulariter procedit, in Crimes, which of their own nature are not perdifficilis probationis, and are not inter crimina excepta, such as the Cryme of Conspiracy and Treason is.

Mr. William Fletcher oppons the Objection, and Reply, and further adds, that albeit crimen lese Majestatis be reckoned inter crimina excepta, and so have some Privilege, as to the Qualification of Witnesses; yet it cannot be denied, but there are some Objections competent against Witnesses adduced for proving Conspiracies, and Treason; verbi causa, that a Witness is a capital Enemy, or that he is sub potestate accusatoris; and the Objection now pleaded, being taken complexlie, viz. That the Earl of Tarras is not only socius criminis, but also, that he is publico judicio reus, upon the same Crime, and that as means to procure his Majesty's Favour, he has submitted himself, and come in his Majesty's Mercy, by an acknowledgment of the Cryme, before the Diet of Citation, he is obnoxious to a most just Objection, viz. That he is sub potestate, and by the Submission and Confession, his Life and Estate is now in His Majesty's Hand, so that he is not only in the Case of a reus confessus, but in the Case of a Witness, who does absolutely depend upon His Majesty's Advocat, the Pursuer; and as a private Accuser could not adduce his own Servants to be Witnesses, because they are testes domestici, and depend upon him; so far less ought a Witness to be adduced, who not only depends, as to his Estate, but as to his Life; and the Law gives a very good Reason, and which is mentioned by Paulus, Lib. 1. receptarum sententiarum, cap. 12. parag. ult. in these Words, De se confessus non est audiendus ut testis, ne alienam salutem in dubium deducat, qui de sua desperavit. And as to the Pretence that a Conjuraton is a Crime so occult, that it must either be proven by such Witnesses, or otherways the guilty Person will escape: It is answered, That in this Case, His Majesty's Advocat had an easie Remedy, for he might have pursued the Pannal, before he pursued the Witness; and the Terror and Apprehension of the event of a Process for Treason cannot be constructed otherways, than to have influence upon the Deposition of the Witnesses: And as to the Citation out of Farinacius, it is only in the Case of socius criminis; but when he comes to treat de teste accusato vel carcerato,

Quest. 56. articulo quarto, he says Regula fit in accusato, quod is pendente accusatione a testimonio repellitur. And by the second Rule of the same Article, he says, it is a Principle quod carceratus testimonium ferre prohibetur; and he gives this Reason, quia præsumitur, quod falsum testimonium diceret pro aliquo, qui ei promiserit se liberare a vinculo, and limits this Rule, that he must be carceratus propter crimen.

Sir Patrick Hume adds, That it is a certain Principle, that any Person that is guilty infamia juris, cannot be a Witness, no more than a Person that is convicted, and condemned of Treason; and if he were convicted, and condemned of Treason, he could not be a Witness, even in the Case of Treason: So neither can the Earl of Tarras in this Case be received a Witness, for he being adduced a Witness after he received his Indictment, and confessed the Crime, is equivalent, as if he had been actually convicted; and whatever may be pretended, that testes infames may be admitted; yet it was never asserted by any Lawyer, that a Person convicted of Treason can be admitted a Witness.

Nota, That the Earl of Tarras deposed nothing against Jerviswood, but what the other two Witnesses deposed against himself before the Trial, and upon which thereafter they being renewed, the Earl was forefaulted, so that there could be no ground of Suspicion from his Circumstances.

The Lords repelled the Objection against the Earl of Tarras, and ordain him to be received a Witness.

Walter Earl of Tarras, aged forty Years, married, purged, and sworn; being interrogat, if about the Time that Sir John Cochran, and Commissar Monro got their Commission from the Carolina Company for London, the Pannal, Mr. Robert Baillie of Jerviswood, did not desire the Deponent to speak to Commissar Monro, to try if he could get him, the said Pannal, added to that Commission, depones affirmative. Being interrogat, If the said Jerviswood, the Pannal, did not tell the Deponent that he was resolved to go to London however, upon his own Expences, and that his and their going about the Carolina business was but a Pretence, and a Blind; but that the true Design was to push forward the People of England, who could do nothing but talk, to go more effectually about their Business, depones affirmative. Depones, That the Pannal did settle a Correspondence with the Deponent, whereby he was to give an Account to the Deponent, of what should pass betwixt the Country Party in England, and the Scotsmen there: And on the other Hand, the Deponent was to write to him what occurred here. Depones, That the Pannal did say to the Deponent, if the King would suffer the Parliament of England to sit, and pass the Bill of Seclusion, that that was the only way to secure the Protestant Religion. Depones, That the Pannal said to him, that the King might be induced to do so, if the Parliament would take sharp or brisk Measures with him, or the like. Depones, These Words were spoke to him by the Pannal since the holding of the last Session of this current Parliament; and before the Pannal and Commissar Monro went for London. Depones, That after the Pannal went to London, he did give the Deponent an Account by Letters, that Things were in great disorder there, and that he hoped there would be effectual courses taken to remedy them. Depones, That Mr. Robert Martin did come to Mr. Pringle of Torwoodlie's House in May, 1683, or thereby, and brought a Letter to the Deponent's Lady unsubsribed; but the Deponent knows it was Jerviswood's Hand-writing, who was then at London, and that Mr. Martin told the Deponent, that things in England were in great Disorder, and like to come to an Height, and that the Country Party were considering on Methods for securing the Protestant Religion. And that Archibald, sometime Earle of Argyle, was to get Ten thousand Pounds Sterling, whereas Thirty thousand Pounds Sterling was sought by the Scotsmen at London, which was to be sent over to Holland to provide Arms; and that the late Earl of Argyle was to land with these Arms in the West-Highlands of Scotland, and that the Deponent's Friend, Jerviswood the Pannal, was to be sent over with the Money. Depones, That Philiphaugh and he went to Gallowshiels House, where they met with Polwart and Gallowshiels, and that it was talked amongst them there, that in Case those in England should rise in Arms, that it was necessary in that Case, that so many as could be got on the Borders, should be in a readiness to deal with Stragglers, and seize upon Houses, and that thereafter they should join with those that were in Arms on the Borders of England. Depones, That in the Case foresaid, it was said, it was convenient the Castle of Stirling, Berwick, and some other Strengths should be seized upon; and it was likewise spoke amongst them, that some Persons should be employed, to inquire what Arms was in that Country. Depones, That it was spoke then, that the best time for Argyle was to land in the West, when there was a Stur in England or Scotland, or Words to that Purpose. Depones, That every one desired another to speak to such particular Persons as they could trust, by letting a Word fall indirectly upon supposition, in case of the Rising in England, concerning the Affair for preparing of them: And that he was told by Philiphaugh thereafter, that there was a Word and Sign to be used amongst them, viz. the Sign was by loosing a Button on the Breast, and that the Word was, Harmony. Depones, The Pannal spoke to the Deponent, to advertise Torwoodlie, that he might acquaint Mr. William Veitch, a forfault Traytor, who was in Northumberland, that he might keep himself close, and be on his Guard, lest he should be caught; which was since the Pannal was Prisoner in the Tolbooth of Edinburgh. And this is the Truth, as he shall answer to G O D.

Tarras.

Linlithgow. I. P. D.

Alexander Monro of Bear-croftis, aged forty-five Years or thereby, solutus, solemnly sworn and purged. Depones, That the Earl of Tarras proposed to the Deponent, that Jerviswood might be made one of the Commissioners for the Affair of Carolina, for that he could not safely stay at Home; and that the Deponent's Answer was, That he had no Interest in the Affair, and so could not be a Commissioner. Depones, That the Pannal did wait for the Deponent at Wooler; and did go along with him to London, and that by the way he heard him regrave his own hazard and others, because of Blackwood's Sentence; and that he heard him regrave the hazard our Laws, and Liberties, and the Protestant Religion were in. Depones, That the Pannal spoke to the Deponent and others, more than once at London, for getting of Money from the English, to be sent to the late Earl of Argyle, for bringing home Arms for the said Earl's Use, as he understood, for carrying on an Infurrection and Rebellion in Scotland. Depones, That at the Time libelled, in Jerviswood's Chamber in London, Mr. William Veitch, a forfault Traytor, was present; and that Sir John Cockran did at that Meeting expressly speak of Money to be sent to Argyle, for bringing Home Arms for invading the Kingdom of Scotland; and that at another Occasion he heard some of them say, That there would be twenty thousand Men in Scotland who would assist the Rebellion, and that he heard Sir John Cockran and Jerviswood speaking of it, but cannot be positive which of the two said it. Depones, That at the Meeting he heard Jerviswood speak, but did not hear him oppose that Treasonable Proposal, or contradict the Overture proposed by Sir John Cockran. Depones, That Mr. Robert Martin was sent down from that Meeting which was at Jerviswood's Chamber, to Scotland, to try what the People of Scotland would do for their own Safety: And that it was understood that the People of Scotland should not rise 'till there should be a rising in England, and that the Commission was granted to Mr. Robert Martin, by all the Persons present, whereof Jerviswood was one, and that there were present, the Lord Melvil, Sir John Cockran, Cessnocks elder and younger, Mr. William Carstairs, Mr. William Veitch, Jerviswood, and the Deponent; and depones, they did contribute Money for Mr. Martin's Journey. Depones, That at his Return, he meeting with the Deponent, told him, that Matters were in that Condition in Scotland, and that the Country was in such a Condition, as little would kindle the Fire in order to the Rebellion. And this is the Truth as he shall answer to G O D.

James Murray of Philiphaugh, aged 30 Years, married, purged, and sworn, produces four Leaves of Depositions, emitted by him before the Lords of the Secret Committee, and all written and subscribed with his own Hand, which being publicly read, in presence of the Justices and Assize, he adheres thereto, in all Points, whereof the Tenor follows.

Upon the Day of May, 1683, upon a Letter from Mr. Pringle of Torwoodlie, I came to his House in the Morning, and he presently led me to a Chamber, where I found Mr. Robert Martin, who was lately come from London, with whom we stayed a little, and discoursed of the News, and about the present Condition and Temper of England, and in particular of London, which Mr. Martin said, was much irritated through some Attempts upon their Privileges, either as to the Concern of the Sheriffs, or their Charter, but that all honest Men were of good Heart and very brisk; and after some general Discourses to this Purpose, Torwoodlie and I left him and walked out a little, and he told me, he was expecting the Earl of Tarras presently, for he had sent to him; and Mr. Martin had a Letter to him from Jerviswood; then he told me that there were great Matters in agitation at London, and that Mr. Martin had come down with a Commission from our Friends there (I do not remember he named any, but that I behoved not to expect he would impart his Instructions to me, for he was to communicate them only to Polwart and himself, at least for these Shires) and they were to pitch on such as they thought fit to intrust with the Affair; whereupon he assured me, that he had great Confidence in me, and his Kindness to me obliged him to lend for me, to acquaint me that Matters were now come to a Crisis, and that he had Reason to think England would shortly draw to Arms, and stand by them, 'till they were satisfied anent the Bill of Exclusion, and what other Security they could propose for the Protestant Religion, and their Liberties; and that it was no Project of any inconsiderable Party, but a Design through the Kingdom, and that many of the finest Men, and of the greatest Interest and Credit there, had adjusted almost every thing necessary for the Purpose, and had concerted Matters with our Friends there, in order to Concurrens from this, and had agreed to advance Money for furnishing Arms here (I do not remember he told me more Particulars at this time); but said, Polwart would be at Gallowshiels that Night, and it would be necessary that the Earl of Tarras and I should confer with him fully on the Business. About this time the Earl of Tarras lighted, and Torwoodlie having left us for a little time, being gone to bring Mr. Martin, the Earl of Tarras asked me, what News? I told him of Mr. Martin's being there, but that he had given me no Account of the Design of his down-coming, which perhaps he would acquaint him with, but by what I had heard from Torwoodlie, I understood it to be, to engage us to rise in Arms shortly; whereas the Earl of Tarras hummed, and said he would look ere he leapt such a leap, or some such Expressions. Presently Mr. Martin came, and the Earl of Tarras, and he retired a little after the reading a Letter he gave him, the Contents whereof was (as the Earl of Tarras informed me) only an Order from Jerviswood to deliver some Money to the Bearer, which he had left with him, and the Earl of Tarras called for his Servant, and bad him bring up the Money. In the mean time, Torwoodlie asked me, if I had acquainted the Earl of Tarras with what he spoke to me, and I told him, I had let something of it fall to him, but it was not to be thought, that Persons of Sense and Quality would engage in such Designs at random; so Torwoodlie said, that (tho' Mr. Martin would not commune with us upon his Commission directly) yet he thought it would be fit we conferred, and without taking Notice of his Commission, discoursed of things upon Suppositions, and as our own private notions, abstract from any Prospect of a present Design. So after Dinner we four went to a Chamber, and after some general Discourses of the Discontents of both Kingdoms, these Suppositions following were discoursed (and as I remember Mr. Martin started them all, or the most part), viz. What if if the Country-Party in England should have Thoughts of going to Arms (whereof he knew nothing; but only supposed such a thing, for discoursing a little freely, and to know our Sentiments, what we thought could be expected here in such a Case), would it not be expedient to have a settled Correspondence betwixt that Party there and here? and might not Matters be so adjusted, that both Kingdoms should draw out in one day? and might not as many be expected to undertake in these Shires, and about Edinburgh, as would serve to surprize, and seize our Rulers (I do not remember any named, but the then Chancellor and Treasurer), and some to join with these on the English Borders, to assist them to surprize Berwick? and if for that effect, any Horse or Dragoons, that should be in the Bounds, might not be surprized, that their Horse and Arms might be gotten to furnish the Country People, and Stirling Castle? And if Argyle should at the same time land in the West, and raise that Country, would not these Measures contribute much to the Advancement and Security of the Interest of that Party here, since thereby the Government would be disordered, and such Steps would encourage all that had an Inclination to the Country-Party, to draw to them frankly, and scar many of the other side to act against them, and so they might have leisure to join from all Places? And might it not be expected, there would be as many in this Kingdom, as would be able to deal with the Forces here, at least divert them from troubling England? This is the Sum, as I remember, of what was proposed and discoursed of, tho' I cannot distinctly say, it was in this Method and Expression, nor was all moved at once, but dropped now and then, as the Discourse seemed to give Rise to it; and tho' I cannot fully recount all that was spoke on these Heads, and tell distinctly what this and that Man said, yet I remember these following Answers were given, and (as I judged) acquiesced to by the whole Company; and they were certainly the Earl of Tarras his Sentiments and mine; and every one that spoke, used this or some such Precaution, That if they were concerned, or to give Counsel in any such Cause (as they were not, &c.) 1. As to the settling a Correspondence, it was confessed to be very convenient for those of a common Interest; but the present Circumstances of Affairs were such (as we thought) that none could be found here, who was fit to manage it, and would undertake it. 2. As to the Tryfing, at the same time it could not be done without the divulging the Design to all Ranks of People, which none would undertake, except these already in desperate Circumstances; and they could not have generally much Influence. 3. The thing was not at all advisable for this Kingdom, since, if any of England's own Measures miscarried, they would not stir for any such Trust; and the spring of their Motions being always at London, there might happen an Interruption near the Appointment, whereof these here could have no timely Notice, and so might keep Tryf, whereby they would be exposed a Prey, and if they should subsist any time, or prevail (which was hardly possible) the multitude that must be employed, are tainted with such wild and unruly Principles, that if once they got the Sword in their Hands, they would never be brought to Order, without a greater Force to over-awe them; neither would any Expectation of Argyle's landing be a just ground for such a Tryf, considering the Uncertainty of Sea-Voyages; and if Argyle were to be the Head, undoubtedly many People would conclude that he were to be suspected of private Designs, and that restoring him might lay him aside: As also, that Despair might blind his usual Prudence, and prompt him to unsolid and undigested Methods, and so it was to be expected, that few of the Gentry (except such as he had special Influence on, or such as were under hard Circumstances) could embark with him. 4. As to the surprizing Rulers, &c. it was inveighed against, as an Action not to be thought of amongst Protestants (especially when the very Design of it was pretended to secure that Religion, which taught its Professors to abhor and detest such Principles as Popish, yea Unchristian), since it could not be effectuated without Bloodshed of people, secure in Peace, which being by all approved Divines and Casuists condemned as unlawful, and meer Assassination, it was not to be doubted, that as such a Practice would cast a blot upon the whole Affair, and quite take off any pretence of Defensive Arms, so it would scar many from joining. These things were reasoned again and again; but I do not remember there was any formal Conclusion made, but the Discourse was let fall; and Mr. Martin told us, if any of us had a mind for a Suit of Armour, he could provide as many as we pleased, from one who had made a great many lately to honest Men at London, of a new fashion, very light, and at an easy rate; so Torwoodlie and I gave him our Measures; Earl of Tarras told he had a Suit already, then Torwoodlie said to the Earl of Tarras and me, We would meet Polwart at Gallowshells, and desired we might commun with him, anent what we had been discoursing; so we hasted away, that if possible we might both get home that Night, it being Saturday, and we unfurnished for staying abroad, and Torwoodlie whispered me just as I was mounting (as I think), that he was not clear we should commun before Gallowshells, for he was sometimes too much Good-fellow, or the like; so the Earl of Tarras and I rode away together, and upon the way we were both of Opinion, that the Suppositions we had discoursed of, were in effect Propositions; and resolved, if they were insisted on by Polwart, as we suspected, we would adhere to the former Answer, and would undertake nothing in these Methods. When we came to Gallowshells, the Laird was abroad, and Polwart was not come; so we had Thoughts to go away, being both damped with what had passed, and inclining to be free of farther meddling; but the Lady would by no means hear of our going till her Husband came, who, she assured us, was about the Doors, and she having sent to call him, he would be in presently; yet it was so late ere he came, that the Earl of Tarras could hardly have day enough to go home with; so Gallowshells would not let him go, and he would not stay, unless I stayed, so we both stayed: and not being resolved to discourse with Gallowshells on what passed, we went to the Tavern, on pretence I might call the Baillie, and seek Horses or Lime, and stayed there till Polwart came, which seemed unknown to Gallowshells; then we returned to Gallowshells's House, and after Supper Polwart whispered the Earl of Tarras and me, and enquired if we had seen Mr. Martin; and we having told him we had, he enquired if we were free to commun on the Affair before Gallowshells; we told, as he thought fit, for we could trust him: Then he whispered Gallowshells, and (as I understood afterwards) asked if he was free to commun on Matters of great Secresy and Importance with that Company, to which he assented; then we sat down clois together, and, as I remember, Polwart began the Discourse; but since I am not able to follow exactly the Method of our Conference, or keep the very expressions used, or repeat all that was spoke, or to tell distinctly what was every Man's part of the Discourse, I shall set down the Heads, and most remarkable Passages thereof, that I remember, in some Articles following: 1. Polwart signified that he was credibly informed (but I do not remember he named his Informer), that the Country Party in England would draw to the Fields shortly, as he heard before Lambais; wherewith Gallowshells seemed visibly surprized; and being asked, if his Heart failed him already, he said he did love it better truly to be walking in his own Parks in Peace and Quiet, than to be meddling in such Matters; however, he assured the Company, that if there came any troublesome World, he would join with them firmly: and the Earl of Tarras said, he wondered to hear of any such Resolution in England; for he took it for a Principle amongst that Party there, that they should make no Stir in the King's Life (which the whole Company owned to be their Opinion and Desire), because that might strengthen the Duke's Interest, and he suspected it was the Project of the Commonwealth's Men, with whom he believed few Scots Gentlemen would join; and he was almost persuaded the Duke of Monmouth would not concur in any rising during the King's Life. To which it was answered by Polwart, that he had indeed heard that Principle had been generally agreed to, but it seemed they found they behoved either to do their Business now, or lay aside Hopes of doing it hereafter, which might be: That if the Charter of London were let fall, they would not only lose all safe opportunity of digesting Matters, but a great part of their Strength, and he heard all things were concerted mutually betwixt Monmouth's Friends, and the Heads of the Commonwealth Party; and tho' he heard Monmouth was shy on that Account, yet it was hoped he would engage, for otherwise he would be deserted by that Party. 2. Polwart told us the Suppositions above-written as Overtures concerted betwixt our Friends at London, and the principal Men of that Party there: so the Earl of Tarras and I renewed our former Answers also above-written, and maintained them with all our Vigour, wherewith Gallowshells joined forwardly with us, and Polwart asserted, we went on very good grounds, and he was fully of our Opinion, if things were entire; but referred it to be considered, whether it were better to comply with some of these Methods, tho' not so proper and justifiable as were to be wished, than to disappoint the Business totally, which might be of the best consequence to all the Party; yet we did not condescend, as I remember, to undertake any of these Methods. And there was a further Argument adduced against the tryfing above-written, viz. That it was talked there was a Day appointed in England, lately in Shaftesbury's Time, which did not hold, so they were not to be relied upon. 3. It was proposed to be considered, what Methods were most proper in the Company's Opinion for Scotland to follow in case of England's Rising? Whereant it was said, That all that could be expected or desired from Scotland, was, that upon the certain News of England's being in the Fields, those in the Southern Shyres, who would own that Party, should presently rise, and (how soon they could get as many convened as would be able to deal with straggling Parties, or any sudden Rising in the Country) march to join them, and that it would be fit these in the Northern Shyres of England waited near the Borders for such; and that they had Officers tryfled there to command; and that then it would be seasonable for Argyle to land in the West, and these Parties on the Borders might divert the Forces, till he had time to put himself in a Posture. These things seemed to be the Sentiments of the whole Company, but were not finally determined till the Opinion of others, who were to be communed with by Polwart, were known: And it was represented, there behoved not to be any wilful and obstinate adhering to our own Thoughts of things, but a mutual Condescendance to others concerned, otherwise it were not possible to bring a publick Design to any good Issue. 4. All the Company seemed to agree, that they should undertake nothing, or move in that Affair, till they had a full and certain account what England proposed; what Methods they resolved to follow there, who were to be their Heads; and that if they designed any Attempt on the King's Person, or overturning Monarchy, they would not be forward or clear to joyn. And it being here insinuated, that the most they could do, at least for which there could be any plausible Pretence to justify, was to draw together, and without any act of Hostility, send Addresses to His Majesty for Redress of the present Abuses of the Government, and for obtaining sufficient Security against the Hazard they apprehended to their Religion and Liberties: It was said by Polwart, That he was apt to think, that was their very Design; for he had heard it was generally believed by that Party in England, that if once they were in a Body, the King would be prevailed with to quite the Duke, to be tried for Popery, Correspondence with France, and Accession to the Popish Plot; and then, if the King were once free from the Influence of the Duke's Counsels, they were confident he might be moved to reform their Abuses, and secure their Religions and Liberties for the future to their Contentment. 5. It was resolved, That till we got the aforesaid Account from England, and were satisfied thereant, and knew others here, who were to be communed with, their Sentiments of what Methods were most proper for us, in case we should undertake, we should not meddle further; only it was left to the Earl of Tarras and me, if we thought fit to acquaint Sir William Scot younger, with some of the Matter of this Conference overly, without taking notice of our Informers, or such an Conference; and it was recommended to all to be enquiring, at such as they had some Trust in, indirectly about the Affection of our Neighbours, and what Arms there was amongst them, that if we should get an satisfying account, and resolve to join, we might know where to seek Men and Arms suddenly. Here it was said by Polwart, as I think, that if the Earl of Tarras, Torwoodlie, Gallowshells, and I, once took Horse, he thought the most part of the West end of Tweeddale and Selkirkshire would soon come to us, especially, when they heard England was risen; then we tryfled to meet there against Midsummer Fair, betwixt which the aforesaid Account was expected; but in case it came to any of our Hands sooner, we promised to advertise the rest, that we might meet presently if the Case required. This is the Substance and Sum of what passed at the aforesaid Conference, ference, that I can now remember; but I remember, I was likewise told these following Particulars in privat, by Polwart or Torwoodlie (which of them I cannot distinctly tell) the Day of the aforesaid Conference, or within a short time after. 1. That Polwart kept the Correspondent with our Friends at London; I remember not positively of any of them that was named to be on the Intrigue there, except my Lord Melvil, Sir John Cochran, Jerviswood, and Commissar Monro (for I hardly knew any of the rest) and, as I think, Commissar Monro was called his Correspondent there. 2. That the Money to be advanced by the English Partie to Scotland, was ready when Mr. Martin came from London; and it was expected, that within few Days after it would be dispatched with some Confident to Holland (whether by Bills, or in Cash, I cannot say); it was called ten Thousand Pound Sterling, and was to be employed (as I was told) by that Confident, at Argyle's Sight, for buying Arms, providing Ships to transport them with Argyle, to the West here, and such other Charges. 3. That how soon our Friends at London got notice of the safe Arrival of the Confident for said, and all other things were finally concluded there (which was expected would be about the middle of June, as I remember), they would come home, and, as they passed, would give them, or one of them, an particular Account of all Resolutions taken, to be communicat to the rest, that it was not to be expected by Letters, that behoved to be under Figures and dark Expressions; and, as I remember, they were written as it were about the Carolina-Business, or some Household Furniture, as I was told; for I never remember I saw any Letter, either direct to London, or sent from it on that Head. 4. I was told there was a Sign and a Word agreed on by that Party, so that Men might know with whom they might use Freedom; the Word, as I remember, was Harmony; and the Sign, the opening two Buttons in the Breast-coat, and shutting them presently; this I communicat to the Earl of Tarras, but does not mind I ever saw it used, except when I visited Park-Hay here in Town, about the End of June: We discoursing a little freely, he asked if I had the Word and Sign of the Carolina Men; and I having given them, he said something to this purpose, That he was afraid that the Carolina Business did not go well, for there had been some of the Managers expected here (as I think he named Jerviswood or Commissar Monro) these eight Days past, but there was none come, nor could he learn that any of their Friends had heard from them for several Posts. Polwart, Torwoodlie, and I, met at Gallowshells, on Midsummer Fair; but I mind nothing passed but private Whisperings. Dated September 15, 1684, and subscribed thus,

The said James Murray further depons, That at their meeting at Gallowshells, it was resolved, That they should keep up their Cefs unpaid till their next meeting at Midsummer, which was to be at Gallowshells, and should deal with all these they had influence upon to do the like; and that upon the Supposition mentioned in his Oath given in, it was spoke amongst them, that the Troopers Horses should be seized upon when they were grazing. And this is the Truth, as he shall answer to God.

Hugh Scot of Gallowshells, aged 36 Years, married, purged, &c. and sworn; Depons, That the Earl of Tarras, and Philiphaugh, did come to the Deponent's House, in May, 1683, and Polwart came likewise there, where there were Discourses and Proposals, that if the English would rise in Arms, their Friends in the South Shires should rise with them; and that they should seize the Horses belonging to the King's Troops, where they grazed; and the Town of Berwick, and the Castle of Stirling: And likewise it was there discoursed anent the late Earl of Argyle's coming to invade Scotland; but because of the uncertainty of Sea Voyages, there was not much stress laid upon it. Depons, It was also proposed, that some of the South Country, whom they trusted in, should be acquainted with it, and that Endeavours should be used to learn what Arms was in the Country. Depons, There was some Discourse there, as that the Earl of Tarras, Philiphaugh, Torwoodlie, Polwart, and some others should draw to Horse with the first, when the rising should be in readiness, that it might be expected that the South Parts of Teviotdale and Selkirk Shire would join with them. And this is the Truth, as he shall answer to GOD.

His Majesty's Advocat produced other Depositions, emitted by Gallowshells, before the Lords of the Secret Committee, whereof the Tenor follows.

Edinburgh, the 14th of September, 1684.

Gallowshells Depons, That the Earl of Tarras and Philiphaugh, being in his House in May, 1683, discoursed of an intended rising in England, and of Proposals made to Scotsmen to rise with them, and of London in particular, and that Polwart was present at that Meeting; and told he was sure the Englishmen intended so, and that it was discoursed at that Meeting amongst them, that it were fit to seize Berwick and Stirling; and that it was talked amongst them of bringing the Duke of York to Trial, and that the King would abandon him.

The Laird of Gallowshells, Prisoner in the Tolbooth of Edinburgh, being called and examined upon Oath, Depons, that in the Moneth of May, 1683, the Earl of Tarras, Hume of Polwart Elder, and Laird of Philiphaugh, came to the Deponent's House, himself being absent; at his coming Home, they were speaking of the Security of the Protestant Religion; and of a Party in England, who would secure or seize the King or Duke; and that if any should rise in Arms to defend them, or to rescue the King and Duke, here was another Party who would rise in Arms against them; it was proposed, that some Country-men should be spoken to to try their Resolutions, and that the Resolutions of England should be told them, to see if they would concur. But the Deponent does not remember that this Proposition was approved, or undertaken to be done by any present; nor does he remember who managed the Discourse. It was likewise proposed to seize the Officers of State, especially the Chancellor and Thesaurer; and the said Sir John Cochran was to come to the West from England, for advancement of the Design; and that the Earl of Argyle was to land in the West-Highlands, and to raise that Country. Of these Matters all these who were present, discoursed as of an Affair that they were agitating, and wherein themselves were particularly concerned, though at that time they did not conclude what their Carriage should be. The reason why the Deponent cannot be more particular is, because he was sometimes going out, and sometimes walking up and down the Room; and though the Deponent cannot be positive of the very Words, yet he is positive they were either these Words, or Words to that purpose.

The Deposition of Mr. William Carstares, when he was examined before the Lords of Secret Committee, given in by him, and renewed upon Oath, upon the 22d of December, 1684, in presence of the Lords of His Majesty's Privy Council.

Edinburgh-Castle, September 8, 1684.

Mr. William Carstares being examined upon Oath, conform to the Confession given in by him, and on the Terms therein mentioned; Depons, That about November, or December, 1682, James Stuart, Brother to the Laird of Cultnesh, wrote a Letter to him from Holland, importing, That if any considerable Sum of Money could be procured from England, that something of Importance might be done in Scotland: The which Letter the Deponent had an inclination to inform Shepherd in Abchurch-Lane, Merchant in London, of; but before he could do it, he wrote to Mr. Stuart above-named, to know from him, if he might do it; and Mr. Stuart having consented, he communicat the said Letter to Mr. Shepherd, who told the Deponent that he would communicat the Contents of it to some Persons in England; but did at that time name no body, as the Deponent thinks: Sometime thereafter Mr. Shepherd told the Deponent, that he had communicat the Contents of the Letter above-named to Colonel Sidney, and that Colonel Danvers was present; and told the Deponent, that Colonel Sidney was averfe from employing the late Earl of Argyle, or meddling with him, judging him a Man too much affected to the Royal Family, and inclined to the present Church Government; yet Mr. Shepherd being put upon it

it by the Deponent, still urged, that one might be sent to the Earl of Argyle; but, as Mr. Shephard told him, he was suspected upon the Account of his urging so much; yet afterwards he pressed, without the Deponent's knowledge, that the Deponent being to go to Holland, however might have some Commission to the Earl of Argyle; which he having informed the Deponent of, the Deponent told him, that he himself would not be concerned; but if they would send another, he would introduce him; but nothing of this was done: Upon which the Deponent went over, without any Commission from any body, to Holland, never meeting with James Stewart above-named: He was introduced to the Earl of Argyle, with whom he had never before conversed, and did there discourse what had past betwixt Mr. Shephard and him; and particularly about remitting of Money to the said Earl from England; of which the said Mr. Stewart had written to the Deponent, namely, of 30,000 Pounds Sterling; and of the raising of 1000 Horse and Dragoons; and the securing the Castle of Edinburgh, as a Matter of the greatest Importance. The Method of doing this was proposed by the Deponent, to be one Hour, or thereby, after the relieving of the Guards: But the Earl did not relish this Proposition, as dangerous; and that the Castles would fall of Consequence, after the Work Abroad was done. James Stewart was of the Deponent's Opinion for seizing the Castle, because it would secure Edinburgh, the Magazines and Arms; as to the 1000 Horse and Dragoons, my Lord Argyle was of Opinion, that without them nothing was to be done; and if that Number were raised in England to the said Earl, he would come into Scotland with them; and that there being so few Horse and Dragoons to meet them, he judged he might get the Country without trouble, having such a standing Body for their Friends to rendezvous to; and the said Earl said he could shew the Deponent the convenient Places for landing, if he understood, and, as the Deponent remembers, where the Ships could attend. The Deponent remembers not the Names of the Places. The Deponent spoke to the Lord Stairs; but cannot be positive that he named the Affair to him, but found him shy: But the Earl of Argyle told him, he thought Stairs might be gained to them; and that the Earl of Leven being a Man of good Reason, and disobliged, would have great Influence upon the Country, and recommended the Deponent to Major Holms, with whom the Deponent had some Acquaintance before, and had brought over a Letter from him to the Earl of Argyle; but the Deponent had not then communicated any thing to the said Holms. James Stewart laid down a way of Correspondence by Cyphers and false Names, and sent them over to Holms and the Deponent, for their Use (which Cyphers and Names are now in the Hands of His Majesty's Officers, as the Deponent supposes), and did desire the Deponent earnestly to propose the 30,000 Pound Sterling above-named to the Party in England, and did not propose any less; for, as the Earl told the Deponent, he had particularly calculated the Expence for Arms, Ammunition, &c. But James Stewart said, that if some less could be had, the Earl would content himself, if better might not be; but the Earl always said, that there was nothing to be done without the Body of Horse and Dragoons above-mentioned. During the time of the Deponent his Abode in Holland, though he had several Letters from Shephard, yet there was no satisfactory Account, till some time after the Deponent parted from the Earl of Argyle, and was making for a Ship at Rotterdam, to transport himself to England, James Stewart wrote to him that there was hopes of the Money. The next Day after the Deponent came to England, he met with Sir John Cochran, who, with Commissar Monroe, and Jerviswood, was at London before he came over; and deposes, that he knows not the Account of their coming, more than for the perfecting the Transaction about Carolina: And having acquainted Sir John Cochran with the Earl's Demands of the 30,000 Pounds Sterling, and the 1000 Horse and Dragoons, Sir John carried him to the Lord Russell, to whom the Deponent proposed the Affair; but being an absolute Stranger to the Deponent, had no Return from him at that Time; but afterwards having met him accidentally at Mr. Shephard's House, where the Lord Russell had come to speak to Shephard about the Money above-named, as Mr. Shephard told the Deponent: The Deponent (when they were done speaking) desired to speak to the Lord Russell, which the Lord Russell did, and having reiterated the former Proposition for 30,000 Pounds Sterling, and the 1000 Horse and Dragoons, he the Lord Russell told the Deponent, they could not get so much raised at the time; but if they had 10,000 Pounds to begin, that would draw People in; and when they were once in, they would soon be brought to more; but as for the 1000 Horse and Dragoons he could say nothing at the present; for that behoved to be concerted upon the Borders. The Deponent made the same Proposal to Mr. Ferguson, who was much concerned in the Affair, and zealous for the promoting of it. This Mr. Ferguson had in October, or November before, as the Deponent remembers, in a Conversation with the Deponent in Cheapside, or the Street somewhere thereabout, said, That for the saving of innocent Blood, it would be necessary to cut off a few, insinuating the King and the Duke: but cannot be positive whether he named them or not. To which the Deponent said, That's Work for our wild People in Scotland, my Conscience does not serve me for such things; after which the Deponent had never any particular Discourse with Ferguson as to that Matter; but as to the other Affair, Ferguson told the Deponent that he was doing what he could to get it effectuate, as particularly that he spoke to one Major Wildman, who is not of the Deponent his Acquaintance. Ferguson blamed always Sidney, as driving Designs of his own. The Deponent met twice or thrice with the Lord Melvil, Sir John Cochran, Jerviswood, Commissar Monroe, the two Cessnocks, Montgomery of Landshaw, and one Mr. Veitch, where they discoursed of Money to be sent to Argyle, in order to the carrying on the Affair; and though he cannot be positive the Affair was named, yet it was understood by himself, and, as he conceives, by all present, to be for rising in Arms for rectifying the Government. Commissar Monroe, Lord Melvil, and the two Cessnocks, were against meddling with the English, because they judged them Men that would talk, and would not do, but were more inclined to do something by themselves, if it could be done. The Lord Melvil thought every thing hazardous, and therefore the Deponent cannot say he was positive in any thing; but was most inclined to have the Duke of Monmouth to head them in Scotland, of which no particular Method was laid down. Jerviswood, the Deponent, and Mr. Veitch, were for taking Money at one of these Meetings. It was resolved, that Mr. Martin, late Clerk to the Justice-Court, should be sent to Scotland, to desire their Friends to hinder the Country from rising, or taking rash Resolutions upon the Account of the Council, till they should see how Matters went in England. The said Martin did go at the charges of the Gentlemen of the Meeting, and was directed to the Laird of Polwart and Torwoodlie, who sent back Word that it would not be found so easy a Matter to get the Gentry of Scotland to concur: But afterwards in a Letter to Commissar Monroe, Polwart wrote that the Country was readier to concur than they had imagined, or something to that Purpose. The Deponent, as above-said, having brought over a Key from Holland, to serve himself and Major Holms: He remembers not that ever he had an exact Copy of it, but that sometimes the one, sometimes the other kept it, and so it chanced to be in his Custody, when a Letter from the Earl of Argyle came to Major Holms, intimating, that he would join with the Duke of Monmouth, and follow his Measures, or obey his Directions. This Mr. Veitch thought fit to communicate to the Duke of Monmouth, and for the understanding of it was brought to the Deponent, and he gave the Key to Mr. Veitch, who, as the Deponent was informed, was to give it and the Letter to Mr. Ferguson, and he to shew it to the Duke of Monmouth; but what was done in it the Deponent knows not. The Deponent heard the Design of killing the King and Duke, from Mr. Shephard, who told the Deponent some were full upon it. The Deponent heard that Aaron Smith was sent by those in England, to call Sir John Cochran, on the Account of Carolina; but that he does not know Aaron Smith, nor any more of that Matter, not being concerned in it. Shephard named young Hamden frequently as concerned in these Matters.

PERTH Cancell. I. P. D.

Edinburgh Castle, 18th September, 1684.

Mr. William Carstares being again examined, adheres to his former Deposition, in all the Parts of it, and deposes he knows of no Correspondence between Scotland and England, except by Martin before-named; for those Gentlemen, to whom he was sent, were left to follow their own Methods. Veitch sometimes, as the Deponent remembers, stayed sometimes at Nicolson, Stabler's House at London-Wall; sometimes with one Widow Hardcastle in Moor-fields. The Deponent did communicate the Design on foot to Doctor Owen, Mr. Griffil, and Mr. Mede, at Stepney, who all concurred in the promoting of it, and were desirous it should take effect; and to one Mr. Frith in the Temple, Counsellor at Law, who said that he would see what he could do in reference to the Money; but there having gone a Report, that there was no Money to be raised, he did nothing in it; nor does the Deponent think him any more concerned in the Affair. Netherthorpe frequently spoke to the Deponent of the Money to be sent to Argyle, whether it was got or not; but the Deponent used no Freedom with him in the Affair. Goodenough did insinuate once, that the Lords were not inclined to the Thing, and that before, they would see what they could do in the City. The Deponent saw Mr. Ferguson and Mr. Rumsey lurking, after the Plot broke out, before the Proclamation, having gone to Ferguson, in the back of Bishopsgate-street, at some new Building, whither he was directed by Jerviswood, who was desirous to know how Things went. Rumsey was not of the Deponent his Acquaintance before, but they knew as little of the Matter as the Deponent. This is what the Deponent remembers; and if any Thing come to his Memory, he is to deliver it in betwixt the first of October. And this is the Truth, as he shall answer to G O D.

His Majesty's Advocat for farther Probation adduces the Examinations of Mr. Shephard, taken before Sir Leolin Jenkins, Secretary of State for England, with the Information or Deposition of Mr. Zachary Bourn, relating to the Plot, signed by him and Secretary Jenkins, of which Depositions the Tenors follow.

The Examination of Thomas Shephard of London, Merchant, taken upon Oath before the Right Honourable Sir Leolin Jenkins Knight, His Majesty's Principal Secretary of State, the 23d Day of December, 1683.

The Deponent saith, That Ferguson told him, on or about the Month of April last, that an Insurrection was intended both in England and in Scotland; and that for the settling that Affair betwixt the two Nations, Mr. Baillie, Mr. Monroe, Sir John Cochran, Sir Hugh and Sir George Campbells, with some others (whose Names this Deponent heard not) were come to London.

That the Deponent had some Acquaintance with Mr. Baillie, Mr. Monroe, and Sir John Cochran, and none at all with Sir Hugh and Sir George Campbells; that Mr. Baillie told the Deponent, that the Earl of Argyle demanded thirty Thousand Pounds of the English to capacitate him to begin the Business ness effectually in Scotland, and that he the said Baillie likewise told the Deponent, that having concerted Things with the Lord Ruffel, and others, he the said Baillie found an impossibility of raising that Sum; after which the said Baillie had acquainted the Deponent, that they were certainly promised ten Thousand Pounds, which Sum was agreed to be payed into the Deponent's Hands, in order to be remitted into Holland, for the providing of Arms; and that the said Baillie told the Deponent at divers times, that the said Sum, or at least one half of it, would be payed such a Day, and such a Day; and sometimes asked the Deponent, if he had received any Part of the said Money; to which the Deponent replied that he had not, and that he the Deponent scarce thought any would be payed.

And the Deponent also saith, that having had some little Conversation with Sir John Cochran, he remembers well, that both of them did sometimes lament the Delays in not paying in the Money; and said, that altho' the said ten Thousand Pounds were payed in, they, the said Sir John Cochran and Mr. Monro, feared it would be too little; and this Deponent further sayeth not as to any new Matter. But the Deponent being asked to explain what he thought was meant by the Words above-written, viz. to capacitate him, the Earl of Argyle, to begin the Business, he this Deponent sayeth, that he did understand by the Word Business, an Insurrection in Scotland.

The Information of Zachary Bourn, of London, Brewer, taken upon Oath, the 10th Day of December, 1683, before the Right Honourable Mr. Secretary Jenkins.

The Informant deposeth, and sayeth, That Mr. Baillie sat up one Night, if not two, with Mr. Ferguson, and went several times in the Evening with him to the Duke of Monmouth, and the chief Managers of the Conspiracy: That Ferguson told the Deponent, that he the said Baillie was the chief Man for the Scots, next to the Lord Argyle; that the said Baillie did sit up the greatest part of one Night with the said Ferguson, at which time this Deponent believeth they were busy in preparing the intended Declaration, which the Deponent has the more reason to believe, in as much as the said Ferguson did go about to shew him the Deponent such a Paper, wherein the said Ferguson was hindered by the coming up Stairs of some Person, to speak with the said Ferguson; that the said Ferguson told the Deponent, that the main Business of the said Baillie in meeting the said Conspirators, was in order to get from them the ten Thousand Pounds, promised for the buying of Arms, for the Insurrection intended in Scotland.

That the Deponent saw Mr. William Carstairs come often to the Lodgings of the said Ferguson; but that the said Ferguson never told the Deponent of any Discourse held by him with the said Carstairs; and further this Deponent saith not.

His Majesty's Advocat likewise produced several Warrants, and Papers, to prove that those Depositions are signed by Sir Leolin Jenkins.

His Majesty's Advocat also produced the Books of Adjournal, bearing Mr. William Veitch to be a forfault Traitor, and the Act of Parliament whereby the Forfaulture is ratified.

His Majesty's Advocat's Speech to the Inquest.

My Lords and Gentlemen,

YOU have now a Conspiracy against his Majesty's Sacred Person and Royal Government, so fully discovered, that they must want Reason as well as Loyalty, who do not believe the Discovery; and they must be Enemies to Sincerity, as well as to the King, who do not acknowledge it. Beside that the Councils of all the three Nations thought the Proof sufficient for Indicting a General Thanksgiving through all these Nations, and that the Judges of England thought the same strong enough to infer Forfaulture of Life and Estate against some of all Ranks there; you have a Discovery made here from the late Earl of Argyle's own Letters, and the Confession of his own Emisaries, the two surest Proofs that Law ever invented, or the Nature of humane Affairs can allow; and I am this Day to add to all this, a new set of Proofs in the Process that I now lead against this Pannal, from the Confessions of Noblemen and Gentlemen, who have been engaged in this wicked Conspiracy; and who, from a Sense of their Guilt, are content freely to depose against their nearest Relation, and their most intimate Friend; in which having thus cleared to you, that there was really such a Conspiracy, I shall, in the next place, proceed to prove this Pannal's Accession to it.

It cannot be imagined, that we would willingly involve our Countrymen in it, without a Conviction stronger than our Kindness to Scotland, nor did his Majesty's Servants accuse this Pannal, without the Opinion of the ablest Lawyers of the Kingdom, who did with them concur to think, that there was not the least Occasion of doubting left to the most indifferent Inquest of his Guilt, after they had seriously and with Reflection read over and pondered the Probation now laid before you.

The Person accused of Accession to this Cryme, is the Ringleader of all those who in this Kingdom concurred with the English Conspirators, as you may see by the Testimonies of all who have deposed; and it was indeed fit and just to begin with the most guilty; so that if he be not convicted, there should no Man be punished for this Conspiracy; all the Noise we have heard of it, is but a Cheat, the King's Judges have been Murderers, all the Witnesses have been Knaves, and such as died for it have been Martyrs.

The Accession charged on the Pannal is not an accidental Escape, nor is it proved by Witnesses, who can be suspected of Unkindness to his Person, or his Cause; for it is a long Tract of a continued Design, gone about with the greatest Deliberation and Concern imaginable, and proved by his nearest Relations, and Persons so deeply engaged in that Cause, for which he suffers, that they were content with him to venture their Lives and Fortunes in that Quarrel. He is not accused of a Cryme that can amount only to a single Murder, tho' that be a dreadful Cryme, but a Rebellion, which was to draw upon us a civil War, that Murder of Murders, in which hundreds of thousands were to fall; and to crown all, he was to begin, and to be the Chief Promoter of a Rebellion, in which one of the first Steps was to kill His Sacred Majesty, and his Royal Brother: and one of the chief Witnesses, which I have led against him, is Bourn, which Bourn confessed that he was to kill the King, and who confesses the Pannal sat up several Nights with Ferguson, the other Contriver of the King's Murder: and so familiar was he with him, that Bourn deposes, that the said Pannal had been with Ferguson at the drawing of the Manifesto, whereby he was not only to be an Actor, but to be the Justifier of that horrid Villany; and therefore Bourn deposes, that Ferguson (the best Judge in that Case) looked upon him as the chief Man, next to Argyle. But because no Man is presumed to go to such a height, without previous Inclination and Motives, I shall, to convince you that this Gentleman was very capable of all that was libelled against him, remember you, that he is Nephew and Son-in-Law to the late Waristoun, bred up in his Family, and under his Tutor. About the time of his Plot it was undeniably known, and is now sufficiently proved by two present Witnesses, the Earl of Tarras and Commissar Monro, that he thought himself desperate, knowing himself to be guilty of Treason by Blackwood's Case; and as it is presumable, that a Man that is guilty of one Point of Treason, will commit another, so when a Man is desperate as to his Life and Fortune, he is capable of any thing. He was likewise animated to commit this Cryme by the Intelligence he had that there was a Plot in England, carried on by Men of so great Parts, Fortune, and Influence, and by the too probable Hopes, that they would get all the Western Shyres to join with them here, because of the common Guilt in which they had engaged themselves, by their late Extravagances, they made an Account of an Assistance of twenty thousand Men; and by Philiphaugh's Deposition, that these Gentlemen expected the Concourse of the Southern Shyres; and thus I am to prove to you a Cryme, which is in itself so probable and likely, that it should need little Probation, tho' I have adduced for your Conviction sufficient Evidences, albeit the Cryme were in itself very unlikely.

The Crymes, which I hope I have proved, are, 1. That Jerviswood the Pannal transacted for Money to the late Earl of Argyle, a declared Traitor. 2. That he designed to raise a Rebellion. 3. That he intercommuned with the Earl of Argyle and Mr. Veitch, declared Traitors. 4. That he was present where it was treated, either that Argyle should have Money from the English, and Assistance from Scotland, or that a Rebellion should be raised, and that he did not reveal the same; and all these being found relevant separatim, it is sufficient for me to have proved any one of them. And if a Gentleman was lately found guilty of High-Treason, by the Opinion of all the Lords of Session, for not revealing, that Sir John Cochran sought fifty Pounds Sterling from him, tho' he refused the same, and tho' he believed it was sought for a charitable Subsistence to preserve him from starving, what deserves this Pannal, who sought thirty thousand Pounds Sterling, to buy him Arms, to invade his native Country?

That Jerviswood was designing to carry on a Rebellion, or at least was accessory, or (as our Law terms it) was Art and Part thereof, is clearly proved; but that in this occult and hidden Crime, which uses not to be proved by clear Witnesses, I may lead you thorow all the Steps of the Probation, which, like the Links of a Chain, hang upon one another: You will be pleased to consider, that, 1. It is proved that he desired a blind Commission to go to England, not to manage the Affairs of the Carolina Company, as he confessed, but to push the People of England to do something for themselves, because they did only talk, and not do. And what he would have them to do, appears too clearly, because he tells the Earl of Tarras, it was probable, that if the King were brskly put to it by the Parliament of England, he would consent to exclude the Duke from the Succession: Here is not only a treasonable Design (tho' a Design be sufficient in Treason) but here are express Acts of Treason proved, viz. The treating with the Earl of Tarras upon this Design, the settling a Correspondence with him for the Prosecution of it, and the writing Letters from London to him concerning it, and the sending down Mr. Martin to complete it by a general Rising. As he designed to push on the English, so he prosecuted closely this Design upon all Occasions. On the Road he complains cunningly and bitterly, that our Lives, Laws, and Liberties, and the Protestant Religion, were in Danger, the Style and Method of all such as design to rebel; after he arrives at London, he engages the Conspirators there to assist the late Earl of Argyle, a declared Traitor, with Money to buy Arms; this was indeed to push the English to do the most dangerous Things by the most dangerous Man, and in the most dangerous Methods. He enters also in a strict Correspondence with Ferguson the Contriver, with Shephard the Thesaurer, and Carstairs the Chaplain of the Conspiracy.

Alexander Monro, another present Witness, proves that he argued with him that it was necessary to give Argyle Money expressly for carrying on the Rebellion; and that they did meet at Jerviswood's Chamber where this was spoke of, and from which Mr. Robert Martin was sent to their Friends in Scotland, to know what they would do; and tho' the silly Caution was, that they sent him to prevent their Rising, yet a Man must renounce Common Sense, not to see that the Design was to incite them to Rebellion, and to prevent only their doing any thing in this rebellious Design, by which they might lose themselves in a too early and abortive Insurrection here, till things were ready in England. For, 1. This Commission was given him in a Place, and by a Company who had been themselves treating immediately before of sending Money to the late Earl of Argyle to buy Arms, and certainly those Arms were to be bought for Men, and not for a Magazine. 2. They were treating how many Men could be raised in Scotland. 3. Carstairs' Deposition bears, that Martin was sent to hinder rash Resolutions, till they saw how Matters went in England; and the Return to their Ambassy bore, that it would not be an easy Matter to get the Gentry of Scotland land to concur, but afterwards better Hopes of their Rising was given, which could not have been, if the true Commission had not been, to raise Scotland. 4. That Sir John Cochran made a speech to that purpose, is expressly proved, and that Jerviswood spoke to the same purpose, is proved by a necessary consequence; for since it's proved, that he spoke, and that he did not speak against it, it must necessarily follow that he spoke for it, tho' the Witness is so cautious, that he cannot condescend upon the Words after so long a time, and it is against Sense to think, that Jerviswood, who in private pressed the same so much upon Commissar Monro, and who was the Deacon-Conveener here, and who, as Mr. Martin their Envoy declared, was the Person who was to be sent for the Arms, should not himself have been the most forward Man in that Design. But above all exitus acta probat, this Commissioner (who being a meer Servant, durst not have proposed any thing from himself, being a mean Person, and being one, who, as the Earl of Tarras deposes, would say nothing, but what was in his Paper) does expressly declare, that he came from Jerviswood and others; and in the meeting with him, a Rebellion is actually formed, and it is resolved, they should seize the King's Officers of State, Garrisons, and Forces, and that they should join with the late Earl of Argyle, and put their own Forces in a Condition to join with these Forces, that were to come from England, and they gave a Sign, and a Word, which uses only to be done in actual War; so here is Treason clearly proved, by two present Witnesses, from the first Design to its last Perfection.

Nor can it be objected, that they are not concurring Witnesses, but testes singulares upon separate Acts; for in reiteable Crimes, Witnesses deposing upon different Acts, do prove, if the Deeds tend to the same end; as for instance, if one Witness should depose, that they saw a Traitor sit in a Council of War in one place, and in another place they saw him in Arms; or that one saw him assist at a Proclamation in one place; and saw him in Arms in another; or that one saw him write a Treasonable Paper, and another saw him use it: These Witnesses are still considered as Constitutes, or concurring Witnesses; and ten or twelve Inquests have so found, and upon their Verdict, Rebels have been lately hang'd. The learned Judges of England being all met together did expressly find, that one Witness proving, that A. B. said, that he was going to buy a Knife to kill the King, and another deposing, that he saw him buy a Knife, without telling for what, that these two Witnesses were Constitutes, and proved sufficiently the Crime of Treason; yet there the one Witness proved only a remote Design, and the other an Act which was indifferent of its own nature, and became only Treasonable by the Connection; but no Witnesses ever deposed upon things so coherent, and so connected together, as these do; for they depose still upon the same Person carrying on the same Design of a Rebellion, as to which, in one place, he is exciting his own Nephew, and telling him his Resolutions, and settling a Correspondence with him; at another time he presses Commissar Monro to the same Rebellion; at a third, he holds a Meeting at his own Chamber, and speaks concerning it, and from that Meeting he sends a Trusty, who forms the Rebellion. Besides all this, tho' two Witnesses be sufficient, I have adduced Mr. William Carstairs Chief Conspirator, and who choosed rather to suffer violent Torture, than to disclose it; he likewise deposes upon all these Steps, and connects them together, and this his Deposition is twice reiterated, upon Oath, after much Premeditation. And I likewise adduce two Depositions taken upon Oath, by Sir Leolin Jenkins, who was impowered by the Law of England, and at the Command of the King, and the Council of England, upon a Letter from His Majesty's Officers of State here, in which Deposition, Shephard, one of the Witnesses, deposes, that Baillie came frequently to him, and desired him to advance the Money, and lamented the Delays; and that there was so little to be advanced: and who should be better believed than one who was his own Trusty, and a Person who was able to advance so great a Sum? Bourn, another of the Witnesses, deposes, that Ferguson told him, that the Pannal spoke frequently to him concerning the same Money, and that he sat up several Nights with Ferguson upon the said Conspiracy; and who should be better believed than Ferguson's Confident, and one who was so far trusted in the whole Affair, that he was to take away that Sacred Life, which Heaven has preserved by so many Miracles?

Against these three Depositions you have heard it objected, that non testimonia, sed testes probant, especially by our Law; in which by an express Act of Parliament, no Probation is to be led, but in presence of the Assize and Pannal. To which it is answered, That these Depositions are not meer Testimonies; for I call a Testimony a voluntar Declaration, emitted without an Oath, and a Judge; but these Depositions are taken under the awe of an Oath, and by the Direction of a Judge. 2. Shephard was confronted with the Pannal himself, and he had nothing to say against him; whereas the great thing that can be objected against Testimonies (and by our Statute especially) is, that if the Party who emits the Testimony had been confronted with the Pannal, the Impression of seeing a Person that was to die by his Deposition, would have made him afraid to depose laxly; and the Pannal likewise might by proposing Interrogators and Questions, have cleared himself, and satisfied the Judges in many things deposed against him: But so it is that Mr. Shephard having been confronted with the Pannal, before the King Himself, who is as far above other Judges, in His Reason and Justice, as He is in His Power and Authority: He deposes that the Pannal was the chief Manager of this Conspiracy, next to Argyle, and that he was so passionate to have this Money to buy Arms, that he lamented the Delays. And can it be imagined that Mr. Shephard, whom he trusted with his Life, and his Fortune, and whom all their Party trusted with their Cash, would have deposed any thing against him that was not true, especially when he knew that what he was to depose, was to take away his Life and his Fortune? or that if the Pannal had been innocent he would not, when he was confronted with Mr. Shephard before the King Himself, have roared against Mr. Shephard, if he had not been conscious to his own Guilt? There is a Surprise in Innocence, which makes the Innocent exclaim; and it inspires Men with a Courage, which enables them to confound those who depose falsely against them. And in what occasion could either of these have appeared, more than in this, wherein this Gentleman was charged to have conspired with the greatest of Rascals, against the best of Princes; and that too in Presence of the Prince himself, against whom he had conspired? But Guilt stupifies indeed, and it did never more than in this Gentleman's Case, whose Silence was a more convincing Witness than Mr. Shephard could be. Mr. Carstairs likewise knew when he was to depone, that his Deposition was to be used against Jerviswood; and he stood more in awe of his Love to his Friend, than of the Fear of the Torture; and hazarded rather to die for Jerviswood, than that Jerviswood should die by him: How can it then be imagined, that if this Man had seen Jerviswood in his Trial, it would have altered his Deposition; or that this Kindness, which we all admired in him, would have suffered him to forget any thing in his Deposition, which might have been advantageous in the least to his Friend! And they understand ill this height of Friendship, who think that it would not have been more nice and careful, than any Advocate could have been. And if Carstairs had forgot at one time, would he not have supplied it another; but especially at this last time, when he knew his Friend was already brought upon his Trial; and that this renewed Testimony was yet a further Confirmation of what was said against him? And albeit the King's Servants were forced to engage, that Carstairs himself should not be made use of as a Witness against Jerviswood; yet I think this kind scrupulosity in Carstairs for Jerviswood should convince you more than twenty suspect, nay than even indifferent Witnesses; nor can it be imagined, that the one of these Witnesses would not have been as much afraid of GOD, and his Oath at London, as at Edinburgh; and the other in the Council-Chamber in the Forenoon, as in the Justice-Court in the Afternoon.

3. The Statute founded on does not discharge the producing of Testimonies, otherways than after the Jury is inclosed; for then indeed they might be dangerous; because the Party could not object against them: But since the Statute only discharges to produce Writ, or Witnesses, after the Jury is inclosed, it seems clearly to insinuate, that they ought to prove, when they are produced in Presence of the Party himself, as now they are. And though the Civil Law did not allow their Judges to believe Testimonies, because they were confined to observe strict Law, yet it does not from that follow, that our Juries, whom the Law allows to be a Law to themselves, and to be confined by no Rule, but their Conscience, may not trust intirely to the Deposition of Witnesses, though not taken before themselves, when they know that the Witnesses by whom, and the Judges before whom these Depositions were emitted, are Persons beyond all Suspicion, as in our Case. But yet for all this, I produce these Testimonies, as Adminicles here only to connect the Depositions of the present Witnesses, and not to be equivalent to Witnesses in this legal Process; albeit, as to the Conviction of Mankind, they are stronger than any ordinary Witnesses.

When you, my Lords, and Gentlemen, remember, that it is not the revenge of a private Party, that accuses in this Case; and that even in private Crimes, such as Forgery, or the Murder of Children, &c. many Juries here have proceeded upon meer Presumptions, and that even Solomon himself found his illustrious Decisions approved by God Almighty, upon the presumed Assertion of a Mother; I hope ye will think two Friends deposing, as present Witnesses, adminiculated and connected by the Depositions of others, though absent, should beget in you an intire belief; especially against a Pannal, who has been always known to incline this way, and who, though he was desired in the Tolbooth to vindicate himself from those Crimes, would not say any thing in his own Defence: and though he offers to clear himself of his accession to the King's Murder, yet says nothing to clear himself from the conspiracy entered into with the late Earl of Argyle, for invading his Native Country; which is all that I here charge upon him, and which he inclines to justify, as a necessary mean for redressing Grievances. I must therefore remember you, that an Inquest of very worthy Gentlemen did find Rathbillet guilty, though there was but one Witness led against him; because when he was put to it, he did not deny his Accession: And two Rogues were found guilty in the late Circuit at Glasgow, for having murdered a Gentleman of the Guard, though no Man saw them kill him; but the Murderers having been pursued, they run to the Place, out of which the Pannals then accused were taken, none having seen the Face of the Runaways; and the Pannals being accused, and pressed to deny the Accession, shunned to disown the Guilt, but desired it might be proved against them. This may convince you that there are Proofs which are stronger than Witnesses; and I am sure that there were never more proving Witnesses than in this Case; nor were the Depositions of Witnesses ever more strongly adminiculated. Remember the Danger likewise of emboldening Conspiracies against the King's Sacred Life, and of encouraging a Civil War, wherein your selves and your Posterity may bleed, by making the least Difficulty to find a Man Guilty, by the strongest Proofs that ever were adduced in so latent a Crime as a Conspiracy is. And I do justly conclude, that whoever denies that a Conspiracy can be thus proved, does let all the World see, that he inclines that Conspiracies should be encouraged and allowed. Our Age is so far from needing such Encouragements, that on the other hand in this, as in all other Crimes, because the Guilt grows frequent and dangerous, the Probation should therefore be made the more easy, though in this Case, the King needs as little desire your Favour, as fear your Justice. And I have insisted so much upon this Probation, rather to convince the World of the Conspiracy, than you that this Conspirator is Guilty.

Thereafter the Lords ordained the Assize to inclose, and return their Verdict To-morrow, by Nine a'Clock in the Morning.

Edinburgh, December 24, 1684.

The said Day the Persons, who past upon the Assize of Mr. Robert Baillie of Jerviswood, returned their Verdict in Presence of the said Lords; whereof the Tenor follows: The Assize, all in one Voice, finds the Crimes of Art and Part in the Conspiracy, and Plot libelled, and of concealing, and not revealing the same, clearly proven against Mr. Robert Baillie the Pannal, in respect of the Depositions of Witnesses and Adminicles adduced.

He was executed accordingly the same Day; and at the place of Execution persisted in denying his Knowledge of any design against the King's Life, or the Duke's, or of any Plot against the Government: He owned, he thought it lawful for Subjects, being under such Pressurings, to try how they might be relieved from them, and his design went no farther, but he refused to enter into particulars.

Afterwards, in pursuance of the Sentence, His Majesty's Heralds, and Pursevants, with their Coats displayed (after sound of Trumpets) did publicly, in face of the Court, conform to the Custom in the Sentences of Treason, in his Majesty's Name and Authority, cancel, tear and destroy the said Mr. Robert Baillie his Arms, threw them in his Face, trampled them under foot; and ordained his Arms to be expunged out of the Book of Heraldry, his Posterity to be ignoble, and never to enjoy Honour or Dignity in time coming: And thereafter went to the Mercat-Cross of Edinburgh, and solemnly tore and cancelled the said Mr. Robert Baillie his Arms, and affixed the same on the said Mercat-Cross reversed, with the Inscription; The Arms of Mr. Robert Baillie, late of Jerviswood, Traytor
